Lukerya says (oh, I won't let Lukerya go now for anything, she knows everything, she was here all winter, she'll tell me everything), she says that after I left the house and only some twenty minutes before my return-she suddenly went into our room to see the mistress to ask her something, I don't remember what, and she saw that her icon (the same icon of the Mother of God) had been taken down and was on the table before her, and that her mistress seemed to have been praying before it. 'What's wrong, mistress?' 'Nothing, Luk-erya, you may go ... Wait, Lukerya,' she walked up to her and kissed her. 'Are you happy, mistress?' I ask. 'Yes, Luk-erya.' 'The master should have come to ask your forgiveness long ago ... Thank God, you've made up.' 'All right, Luk-erya,' she says, 'leave me, Lukerya.' And she smiled, but so strangely. So strangely that ten minutes later Lukerya suddenly went back to look in on her: 'She was standing by the wall, right by the window, she had placed her hand on the wall, and laid her head on her hand, she was standing like that and thinking. And she was so lost in thought standing there that she didn't hear me standing there and watching her from the other room. I saw that she was smiling, as it were, standing, thinking and smiling. I looked at her, turned around ever so quietly and walked out, thinking to myself, only suddenly I hear the window being opened. I at once went to say that "it's fresh, mistress, you'll catch cold" - and suddenly I see that she's climbed up on to the window and is already standing there upright, in the open window, with her back towards me and holding the icon. My heart just sank then and I cried out: "Mistress, mistress!" She heard, made a move as if to turn around towards me, but didn't, instead she took a step, clutched the icon to her breast-and threw herself out the window!

I only remember that when I entered the gates she was still warm. The main thing is that they're all looking at me. at first they were shouting, but then they suddenly fell silent and they all make way for me an ... and she's lying there with the icon. I remember, though darkly, that I walked over in silence and looked for a long time, and they all gathered round and are saying something to me. Lukerya was there, but I didn't see her. She says that she spoke with me. I remember only that tradesman : he kept shouting at me 'only a handful of blood came out of her mouth, a handful, a handful!' and pointing to the blood on a stone. I think I touched the blood with my finger, smeared some on my finger, looked at my finger (I remember that) , and he kept saying to me : 'A handful, a handful!'

'And what do you mean "a handful"?' I wailed, they say, with all my might, I raised my arms and threw myself at hi ...

Oh, it's absurd, absurd! Incomprehensibility! Improbabil-ity! Impossibility!

IV. ONLY FIVE MINUTES TOO LATE

But is it really? Is it really probable? Can one really say that it was possible? Wy, for what reason did this woman die?

Oh, believe me, I understand; but why she died is still a question. She was frightened of my love, she asked herself seriously whether she should accept it or not, and she couldn't bear the question and it was better to die. I know, I know, there's no use in racking my brains over it : she had made too many promises, got frightened that she couldn't keep them-that's clear. There are a number of circum-stances here that are quite terrible.

Because why did she die? The question persists, all the same. The question hammers, hammers away in my brain. I would even have left her like that if she had wished to be left like that . She didn't believe it, that's what! No, no, I'm lying, that's not it at all. It was simply because with me it had to be honest : to love meant to love completely, and not like she would have loved the merchant. And since she was too chaste, too pure to agree to a love like a merchant needs, she didn't want to deceive me. She didn't want to deceive me with half a love or a quarter of a love under the guise of love. She was much too honest, that's what it is, gentlemen! I wanted to cultivate breadth of heart then, do you remember? A strange thought.

I'm terribly curious : did she respect me? I don't know. Did she despise me or not? I don't think she did. It's terribly strange : why didn't it occur to me all winter long that she despised me? I was utterly convinced of the contrary right until the moment when she looked at me then with stern surprise . Precisely, stern . It was then that I understood at once that she despised me. I understood irrevocably and forever! Ah, let her, let her despise me, for her whole life even, but let her live, live! Just now she was still walking, talking. I don't at all understand how she could throw herself out the window! And how could I have supposed that even five minutes earlier? I summoned Lukerya. I won't let Lukerya go now for anything, not for anything!

Oh, we could still have come to an understanding. It's just that we had grown so terribly unused to each other during the winter, but couldn't we have become accustomed to one another again? Wy, why couldn't we have come together and begun a new life again? I'm magnanimous, and so is she-that's the point of connection! Just a few words more, two days, no more, and she would have understood everything.

The main thing, it's a pity that it all comes down to chance - simple, barbaric inertia, chance. That's the pity of it! All of five minutes, I was only five minutes late! If I had arrived five minutes earlier - the moment would have passed by, like a cloud, and it would never have occurred to her again. And it would have ended by her understanding every-thing. But now the rooms stand empty again and I'm alone once again. There's the pendulum ticking, it doesn't care, it doesn't feel sorry for anyone. There's no one - that's the awful thing!

I pace, I keep pacing. I know, I know, don't try to put words in my mouth : you think it's ridiculous that I complain about chance and the five minutes? But it's obvious, you see. Consider one thing : she didn't even leave a note saying, 'Don't blame anyone for my death', like everyone does. Could she really not have considered that even Lukerya might get into trouble? They might say, 'You were alone with her, so you must have pushed her.'In any event, she would have been dragged away, innocent though she was, if four people in the courtyard hadn't seen from the windows of the wing and the courtyard how she stood there holding the icon and hurled herself down. But, you see, that's chance as well that people were standing and saw it. No, this was all a moment, just one inexplicable moment. Suddenness and fan-tasy! So what if she was praying before the icon? That doesn't mean that this was before death. The entire moment lasted, perhaps, all of some ten minutes, the entire decision-precisely when she was standing by the wall, with her head resting on her arm, and smiling. The thought flew into her head, her head started spinning and-and she couldn't withstand it.

It was a clear misunderstanding, say what you will. She could still have lived with me. But what if it was anaemia? Simply on account of anaemia, the exhaustion of vital energy? She had grown tired during the winter, that's what it wa ...

I was late!

How very thin she is in the coffin, how sharp her little nose has become! Her eyelashes lie like arrows. And she fell, you see - without smashing or breaking anything! Just this one 'handful of blood'. A dessertspoon, that is. Internal concus-sion. A strange thought : Wat if it were possible not to bury her? Because if they take her away, the ... Oh, no, it's almost impossible that she'll be taken away! Oh, of course, I know that she must be taken away, I'm not a madman and I'm not the least bit delirious; on the contrary, my mind has never been so lucid - but how can it be that again there'll be no one in the house, again the two rooms, and again I'm alone with the pledges. Delirium, delirium, that's where the delirium lies! I tormented her - that's what it was!

Wat are your laws to me now? Wat do I need with your customs, your ways, your life, your government, your faith? Let your judges judge me, let them take me to court, to your public court, and I will say that I acknowledge nothing. The judge will shout : 'Silence, officer!' And I will cry out to him : 'Wat power do you now possess that I should obey you? Wy has dark inertia shattered that which was dearest of all? Wat need have I now of your laws? I part company with you.' Oh, it's all the same to me!

Blind, she's blind! Dead, she doesn't hear! You don't know with what paradise I would have surrounded you. The para-dise was in my soul; I would have planted it all round you! Well, you wouldn't have loved me - so be it, what of it? Everything would have been like that , everything would have stayed like that . You would have talked to me only as a friend - and we would have rejoiced and laughed with joy, as we looked into each other's eyes. That's how we would have lived. And if you had fallen in love with somebody else - well, so be it, so be it! You would have walked with him and laughed, while I looked on from the other side of the stree ... Oh, let it be anything, anything, if only she would open her eyes just once! For one moment, just one! If she would look at me as she did just now, when she stood before me and swore to be my faithful wife! Oh, she would have understood it all in one glance!

Inertia! Oh, nature! People are alone on this earth-that's the problem! 'Is there a man alive on the field?' the Russian bogatyr cries out. And I cry out as well, though I am not a bogatyr , and no one answers. They say that the sun gives life to the universe. The sun will rise and - look at it, isn't it dead? Everything is dead, the dead are everywhere. There are only people, and all around them is silence - that's the earth. 'People, love one another' - who said that? Wose commandment is that? The pendulum ticks insensibly, disgustingly. It's two o'clock in the morning. Her little shoes are by the bed, as if they were waiting for he ... No, ser-iously, when they take her away tomorrow, what will become of me?

一只鹰从高耸的岩石上飞下来，猛扑向一只绵羊，用爪子牢牢地抓住了它。一只寒鸦看到了整个过程，十分嫉妒，决定效仿鹰的力道和飞行方式。

寒鸦高高地飞到空中，飞快地俯冲下来，翅膀扇动得呼呼作响，落在一只大公羊的背上。他想要抓起公羊，可是爪子却缠在了羊毛里。尽管他不停地拍打翅膀，也无济于事。

牧羊人目睹了这一切，他跑过来，捉住了寒鸦，剪掉了他的翅膀，晚上带回家给孩子们。孩子们问：“爸爸，这是什么鸟呀？”他回答道：“据我所知，他是只寒鸦，但他想要人们以为他是只鹰呀。”

猫和公鸡

一只猫捉住了一只公鸡，想着找个好借口美餐一顿。他控诉公鸡晚上打鸣，不让人们睡觉。但公鸡却为自己辩护说，他打鸣也是为人们好，让他们能够及时起床劳作。猫回答道：“尽管你在粉饰你的过错，但我也不能饿肚子呀。”于是，猫杀了公鸡，把他给吃了。

山羊和驴

有个男人曾经养了一只山羊和一头驴。

山羊很嫉妒驴丰盛的饮食，于是他对驴说：“你这样被使唤真是可怜呀：有时你要去磨坊里拉磨，有时你又要驮很多重物。”紧接着，他建议驴假装患了癫痫，掉进一个沟里，这样就能够休息一会儿了。驴听从了山羊的建议，掉到了一个沟里，摔得遍体鳞伤。

驴的主人派人去请兽医，寻求他的意见。兽医吩咐他把山羊的肺敷在驴的伤口上。他们立即杀了山羊，然后医好了驴。

斗鸡和鹰

两只斗鸡正激烈地为农场的统治权而战。一只最终战胜了另一只。

被打败的那只逃走了，躲进了一个安静的角落；而胜利的那只飞上了高墙，扑腾着翅膀，用尽他浑身力气得意地鸣叫。一只鹰在高空飞翔，突然袭击了他，用爪子把他抓走了。

被打败的那只公鸡立即从角落里走了出来，无可争辩地成为农场的统治者。

骄兵必败。

渔夫和渔网

一个贪婪的渔夫，抛出了成功的一网，捕到了一大网鱼。他熟练的拉网技巧使得所有的大鱼都留在了渔网里，他将它们成功拖上了岸。但是他无法阻止小鱼从网眼里滑落，逃回大海。

狐狸和樵夫

一只狐狸在狂奔，后面跟着一群猎犬。他突然遇见了一个正在砍橡树的樵夫，就请求樵夫给他找个安全的藏身之所。樵夫建议狐狸藏在他的小木屋里。于是狐狸钻进去，悄悄地爬到一个角落，藏了起来。

不久之后，猎人赶上了他的猎犬，他向樵夫询问狐狸的踪迹。樵夫声称自己没有见到狐狸，但是在他说话时，他的手一直指着狐狸藏身的木屋。猎人没有留意他的暗示，但是相信了他说的话，于是赶紧向前追去。

等他们一离开，狐狸连声招呼都没打，就走了。樵夫高声地责备狐狸：“你这个不知感恩的家伙，你欠我一条命，而你现在呢，一句谢谢都不说就走了。”狐狸回答道：“如果你言行一致，如果你的手没有出卖你的言辞，那我的确会好好地感谢你。”

狐狸和山羊

一天，一只狐狸掉进了一口深井里，无论如何也逃不出来了。一只口渴难耐的山羊也路过了这口井，看见了井里的狐狸，便问他井里的水好不好。

狐狸用欢快的幌子掩饰了他悲惨的处境。他对井里的水不吝任何赞美之词，说它好得不能再好了，并请山羊自己下来尝一尝。山羊只想着赶紧解渴，其他想都没想，立刻跳进了井里。当他喝足了之后，狐狸和他说了他们所处的困境，并给出了解决之法。“如果，”狐狸说，“你前腿伸到墙上，头弯下来，我就能跳到你的背上，先逃出去，那之后我再来帮你。”

山羊欣然同意了，狐狸跳上了他的背，踩着山羊的角，安全地到达了井口，随即便以最快的速度跑走了。当山羊责骂他背弃诺言时，他转过身，呼喊道：“你这个愚蠢的老家伙！如果你脑子和你的胡须一样发达的话，你是不会在没想好出路前就跳进这口井的，更不会将自己置于如此险境，无从逃脱。”

三思而后行。

熊和狐狸

一只熊在吹嘘自己博爱。他说，在所有动物中，他对人类最温柔，因为他对人类如此尊重，以至于都不愿去触碰死尸。一只狐狸听见他的话，面露微笑地对熊说道：“哦！所以你宁可吃死尸也不吃活人呗。”

青蛙求王

青蛙们因没有一位稳定的国王统治而感到十分不满。于是，他们派了一个使者去见朱庇特，请求他赐给他们一个国王。

鉴于他们的无知，朱庇特 [1] 向湖里投了一根巨大的木头。青蛙被溅起的水花吓到了，他们飞快地游到了池塘最深处。可是渐渐地，他们发现木头一动不动。于是，他们再次浮出水面。消除恐惧之后便爬了上去，轻蔑地蹲坐在木头上。

过了一段时间，他们认为，被赐予这样一个国王，简直是对他们的侮辱。他们又派了一个使者去见朱庇特，请求他再赐给他们一个统治者。朱庇特让一条鳗鱼去统治他们。当他们发现鳗鱼天性温驯后，第三次派使者去见朱庇特，恳求他再选一个新国王。

朱庇特被这样纠缠得很生气，便派了一只鹭去统治他们。鹭每日以捕食青蛙为生，渐渐地，湖面上便再也听不到青蛙呱呱的叫声了。

[1] 此中文译本译自英文版，因此文中提及众神均属罗马神话体系，朱庇特对应希腊神话中，便是众神之王宙斯。

大力神与车夫

一个车夫驾驶着牛车在乡村小路上行驶。突然，车轮深深地陷进了车辙里。这位乡下的车夫一下子呆住了，站在那儿看着牛车，什么都不做，只是大声呼喊大力神来帮他。

大力神出现了，对他说：“这位老兄，用你的肩膀把车轮扛起来，并吆喝你的牛。在你尽力自助之前，别祈求别人帮你。否则，今后你的祈祷都是徒劳的。”

天助自助者。

维纳斯与猫

一只猫爱上了一位英俊的小伙子，它恳求维纳斯 [2] 把它变成女人。维纳斯答应了，立马将它变成了一位美丽的少女。小伙子对少女一见钟情，将她娶回了家。

一天，他们俩在房里依偎着，维纳斯想知道那只猫改变了外形后，是否也改变了本性。于是，她在屋子里放了只老鼠。那只猫忘乎所以，从沙发上站起来，捉住老鼠想要吃掉它。维纳斯十分失望，将她再次变回了原来的样子。

江山易改，本性难移。

[2] 身为罗马十二主神之一的维纳斯是代表爱与美的天神，对应希腊神话中的阿佛罗狄忒。

农夫与蛇

一年冬天，一位农夫发现了一条冻僵的蛇。出于同情，他捡起了蛇，把它放进怀里。蛇很快暖和了过来，便露出本来面目，冲着恩人的胸口就咬上致命的一口。“哦，”农夫用最后一口气哭喊道，“怜悯一个恶棍，我真是活该。”

最好的善意不会改变忘恩负义之人。

女人和母鸡

女人有一只母鸡，它每天都会为她下一颗蛋。她经常思索，如果一天想得到两个蛋该怎么做。最后，为了达成她的目的，她决定喂母鸡双份的大麦。从那天起，母鸡就长得又胖又圆，从此一个蛋也下不了了。

海豚、鲸鱼和小海鱼

海豚和鲸鱼在激烈地交战。当战斗进入高潮时，一只小海鱼从海浪中伸出头来说，如果他们愿意接受他做裁判，他可以来劝和。一只海豚回答道：“我们宁愿战斗至死，也不愿让你干涉我们的纠纷！”

水池里的牡鹿

一只热得受不了的牡鹿到水池边喝水。当他俯下身子，看到自己在水里的倒影时，他对自己犄角的尺寸和多样的形状十分满意。但同时，他又嫌自己的腿太瘦弱、太纤细了。

当他在自我欣赏的时候，一只狮子出现在水池边，盯上了他，并发动攻击。牡鹿立刻跑了起来，并加速到最快。在开阔的空地上，他始终保持着领先优势。但当他来到一片森林时，他的角被树枝挂住了。狮子飞快地赶上并捉住了他。

眼见为时已晚，牡鹿自责道：“我好悲哀啊！我是如何骗自己的！我鄙视我的腿，但它们可以挽救我的生命；我赞叹我的角，它们却见证了我的毁灭。”

最有价值的东西往往被低估。

两个死对头

两个互为死敌的男人乘坐同一艘船航行。为了能够离对方足够远，他们一个坐在船尾，一个坐在船头。

一场猛烈的暴风雨来临，船有沉没的危险。在船尾的那个人问领航员，船的哪头会先沉没。领航员回答说船头可能先沉下去。这个人说：“我不会觉得死亡是件悲伤的事情，只要我能看到我的敌人比我先死。”

青蛙怨日

很久很久以前，太阳宣布了自己想要娶个妻子的意图。青蛙们提着嗓门大声朝着天空呱呱叫。朱庇特被噪声弄烦了，便问他们呱呱叫个不停是什么原因。他们回答道：“当太阳还单身的时候，就已经要烤干我们的沼泽了，迫使我们悲惨地死在干旱的家中。如果他再生下其他太阳，我们未来该怎么办呀？”

骡子

一天早晨，一只骡子玉米棒吃多了，因为无事可做，便开始肆意地奔过来跑过去，还自言自语：“我的父亲一定是一匹精力充沛的赛马，我的速度和精气神完全随了他。”

第二天，因为经历了一段长途跋涉，骡子感到十分疲惫，于是用沮丧的腔调说道：“我一定搞错了，我的父亲可能终究只是个毛驴罢了。”

战马和磨坊主

一匹战马年老体衰，不再征战四方，而是被送到一家磨坊工作。

不过，当他被迫拉磨而不是在战争中服役时，便哀叹起命运的变化，并联想起自己之前的境遇，他说道：“啊！磨坊主，我之前的确四处征战，但我从背到尾巴都披着华服，有专人喂我。我现在想不通是什么促使我放弃服役，选择来磨坊的。”

“忍忍吧，”磨坊主对他说，“你一味地对过去喋喋不休，但命运总是起起伏伏的呀。”

骆驼

当一个人第一次看到骆驼时，他被骆驼庞大的体型吓得跑开了。

过了一段时间，这个人察觉到骆驼的温驯，便鼓起勇气走近他。

不久之后，这个人观察到骆驼完全没脾气时，便大胆地用缰绳套住了他的嘴，让一个小孩去驱赶他。

加以使用可以克服恐惧。

核桃树

一棵长在路边的核桃树结出了许多核桃。为了得到核桃，路过的人们用木棍或石头击打它的枝干。核桃树哀怨道：“哦！可怜的我！我用果实取悦那些人，他们却用疼痛来回报我！”

小虫子和公牛

一只小虫子飞落在公牛的一只角上，在那儿待了很长时间。当他准备飞走的时候，弄出了嗡嗡的响动，想以此来问询公牛是否介意他离开。公牛回应道：“你来的时候，我都没注意到；你走的时候，我自然也不会留恋你。”

有些人总是把自己看得比在旁人眼中重要得多。

捉蝗虫的男孩

一个男孩在捉蝗虫。他捉了好多。这时男孩看到一只蝎子，误以为他是蝗虫，伸手想要捉他。蝎子露出了他的刺，说道：“如果你摸了我的话，我的朋友，你不仅会失去我，你也会失去你所有的蝗虫。”

粗心大意，后果严重。

跳蚤和男人

一个男人被一只跳蚤惹烦了，最终捉到了他。男人说道：“你怎么如此大胆，不但敢咬我，还让我费了这么大劲才捉住你？”

跳蚤回答道：“哦，我亲爱的先生，求求你放我走吧，别杀我，我不可能对你造成很大伤害的。”

这个男人笑着回答道：“我现在就要亲手杀了你。因为邪恶是不应被容忍的，无论这邪恶是大是小。”

被狗咬的男人

一个男人被狗咬了之后，想要寻找一个可以医治他的人。一位朋友见了，他，弄清楚他的需求后说：“如果你想要伤口愈合，请拿一小片面包，用它蘸你伤口流出的血液，然后把它给咬你的那条狗。”

被狗咬的男人边嘲笑他的建议边说道：“为什么？如果我这样做的话，那我就好像在求全镇的狗都来咬我似的。”

对行恶者施与恩惠只会使他们加倍地伤害你。

恶狗

有一条狗总是悄无声息地走到每个遇到的人脚边，趁其不备张嘴就咬。于是，他的主人便在他的脖子上系了一个铃铛，以便在他出现的时候，给大家提个醒。狗将这个铃铛视为自己与众不同的标记，对此感到特别骄傲，十分得意地在市场里招摇。

一天，一条老猎狗对他说：“你为什么要如此炫耀自己？相信我，你戴着的那个铃铛不是勋章，恰恰相反，它是耻辱的象征呀。它提醒所有人你是一条恶狗，要避开你。”

恶名常被误认为是美誉。

狼和小羊

一只狼遇见了一只从羊群中走失的小羊，他决定不急着下毒手，而是想找个证明他有权利吃小羊的借口。他对小羊说：“先生，去年你狠狠地侮辱了我。”

“事实上，”小羊用悲哀的语调咩咩叫道，“我那时还没出生。”

狼又说道：“那你在我的牧场上吃过草。”

“不，好先生，”小羊回答道，“我还从未吃过草呢。”

狼再次说道：“你喝了我的井水。”

“不，”小羊呼喊道，“我从未喝过水，因为我妈妈的奶对我来说，既是饭也是水。”

狼捉住了他，把他给吃了，说道：“好吧！我是不会饿着肚子的，即使你推翻了我的每一种推论。”

暴君总会为他的暴政找借口。

小羊和狼

一只狼在追赶着一只小羊。小羊在一座庙里避难。狼要求小羊从里面出来，并说道：“如果你不出来的话，牧师就会捉住你，把你供奉在祭坛上。”小羊如是说：“谢谢，我想我就待在这儿了，我宁愿被拿去祭祀，也不要被你吃掉。”

因此，一些在学校里似乎有点才能的演说家，一旦进入政治舞台便暴露出了他们的无能。

城里鼠和乡下鼠

一天，乡下鼠邀请他的密友城里鼠来乡下做客并享用乡村野味。

当他们坐在裸露的耕地上，享用小麦和从篱笆上拔出的根茎拼凑出的晚餐时，城里鼠对他的朋友说：“你过着蝼蚁一般的生活呀，而在我的屋子里，食物应有尽有。我的四周都是美食，如果你跟我来的话，我也希望你能跟我来，我一定会让你美餐一顿的。”乡下鼠很轻易地就被说服了，和他的朋友一起去了城里。

他刚到，城里鼠就为他拿出了面包、大麦、豆子、无花果干、蜂蜜、葡萄干，最后还从篮子里拿了一块美味的奶酪。看到这么丰盛的食物，乡下鼠热忱地表达了他的谢意，还哀叹了自己悲惨的命运。

当他们正准备开始吃时，有人打开了门，他们飞快地吱吱叫着跑进了一个小洞里，那个洞小得只够他们两个在里面挤成一团。当他们心惊胆战地准备再次用餐时，另一个人走进来从碗橱里拿了东西。这两只老鼠比之前更加惊慌失措，赶紧躲起来了。

最后，乡下鼠饥饿难耐，他对他的朋友说：“尽管你为我准备了这么丰盛的一餐，你还是自己享用吧。取悦我要面临太多危险了。我更喜欢裸露的耕地和篱笆上的根茎，在那儿我可以安全地、不用担惊受怕地活着。”

墨丘利 [3] 和工人

一位工人在河边砍树，他的斧头不小心掉进了一个很深的水塘里。他因为没了谋生的手段，坐在河边，哀叹起了自己悲惨的命运。

墨丘利出现了，询问工人哭泣的缘由。在他听了工人不幸的经历后，跳入水中，捞出了一把金斧头，并问工人这是不是他丢的斧头。工人否认了，墨丘利再次潜入水中，捞出了一把银斧头，再次询问他。工人否认了，墨丘利又一次潜入河底，捞出了他丢的那把斧头。工人对斧头失而复得感到十分高兴。墨丘利很高兴他这么诚实，就把金斧头和银斧头也送给了他。

工人回到家后，把他的经历告诉了同伴。其中一个人决定自己也去碰碰运气。他跑到河边，故意在同一个地方把斧头扔进河里，并坐在河边抽泣。

墨丘利如他所料地出现了。当墨丘利弄清楚他悲伤的原因后，跳进水中，捞起了一把金斧头，问他是不是他丢的那把。工人贪婪地夺过斧头，并声称这正是他丢的那把。墨丘利对他的无赖行径十分反感，不仅拿走了这把金斧头，还拒绝为他寻回原来丢掉的那把斧头。

[3] 墨丘利为罗马神话中众神的使者，负责众神间的交流与沟通，罗马十二主神之一，对应希腊神话中的赫尔墨斯。

驴和宠物狗

曾经有个人养了一头驴和一只十分美丽的马耳他狗。

驴住在马厩里，有充足的燕麦和干草享用，过着跟别的驴一样的日子。小狗会耍许多花招，很讨主人喜欢。主人经常爱抚他，每次赴宴归来都会给他带点儿好吃的。相反，驴有许多工作要做，比如磨谷物啦，从森林里运木头啦，或是驮农场上的重物。

他经常哀叹命运的悲惨，并将自己的命运和小狗轻松懒散的生活相对比。直到有一天，他挣脱了缰绳，飞快地跑进了主人的屋子，无拘无束地尥着蹄子，尽他所能地蹦跳着献殷勤。当他看到小狗跳到主人的膝上时，他也想这么做，结果打翻了桌子，摔碎了碗碟。接着，他想要舔主人并跳到他的背上。仆人听到这异常的喧哗，察觉到主人身处险境，飞快地跑去救他，并连踢带打地将驴赶回了马厩。

驴回到马厩时已经被打得半死不活了，他悔恨道：“这都是我自找的！我为什么不能满足于和同伴一起劳作，而非要想着像那只无用的小狗一样整天无所事事呢？”

披着狮皮的驴

一头驴穿上了狮皮，在森林里巡游，以吓唬那些愚蠢的动物为乐。后来，驴遇见了狐狸，也想要吓吓他。但是狐狸一听到他的声音就大声说道：“如果我没听见你的驴叫，或许会真的害怕呢！”

母鸡和燕子

一只母鸡发现了一窝蛇蛋，小心翼翼地为它们保温，精心地将它们孵化了出来。一只燕子发现了她的所作所为，对她说：“你这个蠢东西！你为什么要孵这些蛇呀？当他们长大之后，会危害所有生物，就从你开始！”

鹧鸪和捕鸟人

一位捕鸟人捉住了一只鹧鸪，正要杀了它。鹧鸪恳切地求捕鸟人放了它，并说道：“祈求上帝，大人，放我一条生路吧，我会骗更多的鹧鸪飞到您的网里，作为对您的报答。”

捕鸟人回答道：“杀你这事儿，我现在更是没什么可犹豫的了。你居然想靠出卖朋友和亲人来换自己的命！”

猴子和骆驼

猴子站起身，跳起了舞，逗得森林里的动物们哈哈大笑。博得大家的欢心后，他在经久不息的掌声中坐了下来。

骆驼对猴子获得的赞赏感到十分嫉妒，也想要以同样的方式得到来宾们的喜爱。轮到他时，他决定也站起身，跳舞为大家助兴。他走动的方式非常滑稽，以至于所有动物一怒之下棍棒交加地把他赶出了集会。

模仿比我们更胜一筹的人总是荒谬可笑的。

鼯鼠和妈妈

鼯鼠是一种生下来就没有视力的动物。有一次，他对妈妈说：“我确信我能看见，妈妈！”

为了证明他是错的，他的妈妈在他面前摆放了一些乳香，并问他：“这是什么？”

小鼯鼠说道：“这是卵石。”

他的妈妈惊呼道：“我的儿子，恐怕你不仅看不见，鼻子也不灵了吧。”

墨丘利和被蚂蚁咬的人

一个人曾经目睹了一艘船和它上面全体船员沉没的场景。他严厉地斥责着众神的不公。

“他们根本不关心一个人的品性，”他说道，“只会让好人和坏人一起赴死。”

他站立的地方附近有一个蚁丘，在他说话时，一只蚂蚁咬了他的脚。他把脾气发在了蚁丘上且一脚踩上了蚁丘，数百只无辜的蚂蚁命丧黄泉。

突然，墨丘利出现了，他用他的手杖痛打这个人，并说道：“你这个恶棍，现在你那伟大的正义感哪去了呢？”

骗子/

一个人生病了，病入膏肓。他发誓，如果众神能够让他重获健康，他一定会为他们献上一百头牛。众神想知道他会如何履行诺言，就立即让他痊愈了。

现在，他一头牛都没有，于是他用牛油做了一百头小牛，并把它们供奉在祭坛上。他说道：“众神啊，我请你们见证，我信守了我的诺言。”

众神决定报复他一下，于是他们给他托了个梦。在梦中，他被吩咐去海边，去拿回他在那儿发现的一百克朗。醒来之后，他兴奋地跑到海边，却落入了一群强盗手中。他们捉住了他并把他卖为奴隶：卖得的钱刚好是他想要找的一百克朗。

别许下那些自己做不到的承诺。

男人和狮子

一个人和一只狮子结伴旅行。在谈话的过程中，他们开始吹嘘自己勇猛无敌，并声称自己无论在力量还是勇气方面都胜过对方。他们正在热烈地争论时，刚巧途经一个十字路口，这里摆放着一个人勒着狮子的雕塑。

“那儿！”人耀武扬威地说道，“看那个！这不正证明了我比你强吗？”

“别这么快地下结论，我的朋友，”狮子说，“这只是你看这个问题的角度。如果我们狮子也能够制作雕塑的话，你应该会看到大多数雕塑都是人在下面。”

每个问题都有两个角度。

蛇与朱庇特

一条蛇时不时地就会被人和野兽踩到，遭了不少的罪。一方面由于他身体太长，另一方面由于他不能够离开地面站立起来。于是，他向朱庇特抱怨他所要面临的风险。但是朱庇特一点儿都不同情他。“我敢说，”朱庇特说，“如果你第一次被踩时，就咬他的话，其他人就会费点劲儿，看看该把脚放在哪儿了。”

屋顶上的小孩

一个小孩被长在茅草屋顶上的小草和其他东西所吸引，爬上了外屋的屋顶。当他站在那儿四处眺望时，他发现一只狼从下面经过。小孩嘲笑那只狼捉不到自己。狼只是抬头看了看他，然后说道：“我听到你了，我年轻的朋友；但是嘲笑我的并不是你，而是你脚下的屋顶呀。”

蝙蝠、荆棘和海鸥

蝙蝠、荆棘和海鸥决定结伴一起出海贸易。蝙蝠为他的冒险活动借了一大笔钱；荆棘储存了各种各样的服饰；海鸥带了一些铅。就这样，他们出发上路了。

没过多久，一阵猛烈的暴风雨突然来袭。他们的船和所有货物都沉入海底。但这三个旅行者都设法回到了陆地上。从那时起，海鸥就在海面上来来回回地飞，不时地把头扎进海里，找寻他丢失的铅。而蝙蝠害怕见到他的债主，于是就在白天躲藏起来，晚上才出来觅食。荆棘则钩住每个过路人的衣服，梦想着有一天能够找回他丢失的服装。

所有人都更关心找回他们丢失的东西，而不是得到他们缺少的东西。

驴和货物

一个小贩有头驴。有一天他买了一些盐，并且尽可能多地装在了驴背上。在回家的路上，驴在渡过一条小溪时，蹄子滑了一下，跌入了水中。

盐全都湿透了，许多都溶解流走了。因此，当驴站起来时，他发现身上的负担轻了许多。他的主人赶着他回了集市，买了更多的盐放进了他的驮篮里。他们再一次出发了。

当他们刚到小溪时，驴立马跌坐在水里，然后像之前一样站起来，身上的负担又轻了许多。他的主人识破了他的诡计，又一次地回到集市，买了许多海绵，把它们堆在了驴背上。

当他们来到小溪时，驴故技重施，但是这一次，海绵吸了大量的水。当他站起来时，发现身上的负担变得前所未有的重。

好牌不能频繁地打。

驴、公鸡和狮子

驴和公鸡一起待在牛栏里。这时，一只几天没吃饭的狮子出现了，正准备攻击驴并吃掉他时，公鸡跳了起来，用力地扑棱着翅膀，发出惊人的鸣叫。

这种情境下，要是有什么还能吓到一只狮子的话，那也就是公鸡的鸣叫了：狮子刚一听见公鸡的叫声，就飞快地逃走了。

驴看到这个场景十分高兴，他想着，如果狮子连公鸡都怕的话，那么他肯定也不可能打得过驴。于是驴跑出去追赶狮子。但是当他们到达公鸡看不到也听不到的地方时，狮子径直扑向驴，把他给吃了。

盲目自信通常导致灾难。

狗和狼

一条狗躺在农场门前的阳光下。这时，一只狼突袭了他，正要吃掉他。但他乞求狼饶他一命，并说道：“你看我多瘦呀，现在的我只能给你塞塞牙缝。但是你再等几天的话，我的主人将要摆宴席。那时，所有丰盛的残羹剩饭都会落入我的腹中，我将变得又胖又美味，那才是你该吃我的时候。”

狼觉得这个主意不错，便走开了。不久之后，他又来到了农场，发现狗躺在马厩的屋顶上。“你下来，”他喊道，“该我吃你了，你记得我们的约定吗？”

但是狗冷酷地说：“我的朋友，如果你再看见我躺在门口的话，可别再等什么盛宴了。”

一回上当两回乖。

年迈的狮子

一只狮子，随着年龄的增长变得衰弱无力。他不再能够凭借武力获得食物，便决定用诡计给自己弄点食物。他走到山洞里，躺在那儿，假装病了。每当有动物进去询问他的身体状况时，他就一跃而起，把他们吞入腹中。

许多动物都以这种方式丧了命。直到有一天，一只狐狸来到这个山洞。因为怀疑狮子是不是真的病了，所以他并没有走进去，而是站在山洞外，问狮子感觉怎么样。狮子回答说，他感觉很不好。“但是，”他说，“你为什么站在外面呢？请进来吧。”

“我本该这么做，”狐狸回答说，“如果我没注意到这些脚印只有进没有出的话。”

预言家

一位预言家坐在集市里，给那些想要一探究竟的人算命。

突然来了一个人告诉他，他家里遭贼了。他们把所有能找到的东西都抢走了。预言家立即跳起来，冲了出去，扯着自己的头发，诅咒那些恶棍。

路人们都被逗笑了，其中一个人说道：“我们的朋友自称能够预测他人的命运，但他似乎还没聪明到能预测自己的未来呀。”

妻子和醉酒的丈夫

一个女人一直忍受着她酗酒的丈夫带来的屈辱。有一次，当她丈夫喝得烂醉时，她把他送进了存尸房。当她估摸着丈夫应该是时候恢复知觉时，她走开了，然后又回来敲门。

“谁在那儿？”酒徒说。

“一个给死人送肉的人。”女人说。

“朋友，”他说，“还是给我来点酒吧。我想任何认识我的人给我别的东西时，也不会忘了给我酒。”

“好吧，”她说，“这种我所察觉到的情绪已经完全控制了他，成了他的恶习，他已经没救了。”

养成的恶习会成为我们的天性，就好像我们被撕成碎片，然后重新被拼接在一起，仿若被修补过一样。

音乐家

一位嗓音嘶哑的人，有着一间很棒的音乐室。他在那个房间里练声，回音使他觉得自己的声音很美。他十分骄傲，并想着要在剧院展示一番。但他唱得实在太糟糕了，人们将他轰下了舞台，还朝他扔石头。

一个人可能会很喜欢自己镜中的样子，但公共场合中的世人却无法爱上他。事实上，我们对自己情况的了解很片面，除了从别人的眼中解读自己之外，我们没有其他方式。

The Cat and Venus

Nº 23

' . . . Until you have done your best to help yourself, or depend upon it you will henceforth pray in vain.'

The Eagle and the Jackdaw

An Eagle, flying down from his perch on a lofty rock, seized upon a lamb and carried him aloft in his talons. A Jackdaw, who witnessed the capture of the lamb, was stirred with envy and determined to emulate the strength and flight of the Eagle.

He flew around with a great whirl of his wings and settled upon a large ram, with the intention of carrying him off, but his claws became entangled in the ram's fleece and he was not able to release himself, although he fluttered with his feathers as much as he could.

The shepherd, seeing what had happened, ran up and caught him. He at once clipped the Jackdaw's wings, and taking him home at night, gave him to his children. On their saying, 'Father, what kind of bird is it?' he replied, 'To my certain knowledge he is a Daw; but he would like you to think an Eagle.'

The Cat and the Cock

A Cat caught a Cock, and pondered how he might find a reasonable excuse for eating him. He accused him of being nuisance to men by crowing in the night time and not per-mitting them to sleep. The Cock defended himself by saying that he did this for the benefit of men that they might rise in time for their labours. The Cat replied, 'Although you abound in specious apologies, I shall not remain supperless'; and he made a meal of him.

The Goat and the Ass

A man once kept a Goat and an Ass.

‘The Goat, envying the Ass on account of his greater abundance of food, said, ‘How shamefully you are treated : at one time grinding in the mill, and at another carrying heavy burdens’; and he further advised him to pretend to be epi-leptic and fall into a ditch and so obtain rest. The Ass listened to his words, and falling into a ditch, was very much bruised.’

His master, sending for a leech, asked his advice. He bade him pour upon the wounds the lungs of a Goat. They at once killed the Goat, and so healed the Ass.

The Fighting Cocks and the Eagle

Two game Cocks were fiercely fighting for the mastery of the farmyard. One at last put the other to flight.

The vanquished Cock skulked away and hid himself in a quiet corner, while the conqueror, flying up to a high wall, flapped his wings and crowed exultingly with all his might. An Eagle sailing through the air pounced upon him and carried him off in his talons

The vanquished Cock immediately came out of his corner, and ruled henceforth with undisputed mastery.

Pride goes before destruction.

The Fisherman and His Nets

A Fisherman, engaged in his calling, made a very successful cast and captured a great haul of fish. He managed by a skilful handling of his net to retain all the large fish and to draw them to the shore; but he could not prevent the smaller fish from falling back through the meshes of the net into the sea.

The Fox and the Woodcutter

A Fox, running before the hounds, came across a Woodcutter felling an oak and begged him to show him a safe hiding-place. The Woodcutter advised him to take shelter in his own hut, so the Fox crept in and hid himself in a corner.

The huntsman soon came up with his hounds and inquired of the Woodcutter if he had seen the Fox. He declared that he had not seen him, and yet pointed, all the time he was speaking, to the hut where the Fox lay hidden. The hunts-man took no notice of the signs, but believing his word, hastened forward in the chase.

As soon as they were well away, the Fox departed without taking any notice of the Woodcutter : whereon he called to him and reproached him, saying, 'You ungrateful fellow, you owe your life to me, and yet you leave me without a word of thanks.' The Fox replied, 'Indeed, I should have thanked you fervently if your deeds had been as good as your words, and if your hands had not been traitors to your speech.'

The Fox and the Goat

A Fox one day fell into a deep well and could find no means of escape. A Goat, overcome with thirst, came to the same well, and seeing the Fox, inquired if the water was good.

Concealing his sad plight under a merry guise, the Fox indulged in a lavish praise of the water, saying it was excellent beyond measure, and encouraging him to descend. The Goat, mindful only of his thirst, thoughtlessly jumped down, but just as he drank, the Fox informed him of the difficulty they were both in and suggested a scheme for their common escape. 'If,' said he, 'you will place your forefeet upon the wall and bend your head, I will run up your back and escape, and will help you out afterwards.'

The Goat readily assented and the Fox leapt upon his back. Steadying himself with the Goat's horns, he safely reached the mouth of the well and made off as fast as he could. When the Goat upbraided him for breaking his promise, he turned around and cried out, 'You foolish old fellow! If you had as many brains in your head as you have hairs in your beard, you would never have gone down before you had inspected the way up, nor have exposed yourself to dangers from which you had no means of escape.'

Look before you leap.

The Bear and the Fox

A Bear boasted very much of his philanthropy, saying that of all animals he was the most tender in his regard for man, for he had such respect for him that he would not even touch his dead body. A Fox hearing these words said with a smile to the Bear, 'Oh! That you would eat the dead and not the living.'

The Frogs Asking for a King

The Frogs, grieved at having no established Ruler, sent ambassadors to Jupiter entreating for a King.

Perceiving their simplicity, he cast down a huge log into the lake. The Frogs were terrified at the splash occasioned by its fall and hid themselves in the depths of the pool. But as soon as they realised that the huge log was motionless, they swam again to the top of the water, dismissed their fears, climbed up, and began squatting on it in contempt.

After some time they began to think themselves ill-treated in the appointment of so inert a Ruler, and sent a second deputation to Jupiter to pray that he would set over them another sovereign. He then gave them an Eel to govern them. When the Frogs discovered his easy good nature, they sent yet a third time to Jupiter to beg him to choose for them still another King.

Jupiter, displeased with all their complaints, sent a Heron, who preyed upon the Frogs day by day till there were none left to croak upon the lake.

Hercules and the Wagoner

A Carter was driving a wagon along a country lane, when the wheels sank down deep into a rut. The rustic driver, stupefied and aghast, stood looking at the wagon, and did nothing but utter loud cries to Hercules to come and help him.

Hercules, it is said, appeared and thus addressed him : ‘Put your shoulders to the wheels, my man. Goad on your bull-ocks, and never more pray to me for help, until you have done your best to help yourself, or depend upon it you will henceforth pray in vain.’

Self-help is the best help.

The Cat and Venus

A Cat fell in love with a handsome young man, and entreated Venus to change her into the form of a woman. Venus consented to her request and transformed her into a beautiful damsel, so that the youth saw her and loved her, and took her home as his bride.

While the two were reclining in their chamber, Venus wishing to discover if the Cat in her change of shape had also altered her habits of life, let down a mouse in the middle of the room. The Cat, quite forgetting her present condition, started up from the couch and pursued the mouse, wishing to eat it. Venus was much disappointed and again caused her to return to her former shape.

Nature exceeds nurture.

The Farmer and the Snake

One winter a Farmer found a Snake stiff and frozen with cold. He had compassion on it, and taking it up, placed it in his bosom. The Snake was quickly revived by the warmth, and resuming its natural instincts, bit its benefactor, inflict-ing on him a mortal wound. 'Oh,' cried the Farmer with his last breath, 'I am rightly served for pitying a scoundrel.'

The greatest kindness will not bind the ungrateful.

The Woman and Her Hen

A Woman possessed a Hen that gave her an egg every day. She often pondered how she might obtain two eggs daily instead of one, and at last, to gain her purpose, determined to give the Hen a double allowance of barley. From that day the Hen became fat and sleek, and never once laid another egg.

The Dolphins, the Whales, and the Sprat

The Dolphins and Whales waged a fierce war with each other. When the battle was at its height, a Sprat lifted its head out of the waves and said that he would reconcile their differences if they would accept him as an umpire. One of the Dolphins replied, 'We would far rather be destroyed in our battle with each other than admit any interference from you in our affairs.'

The Stag at the Pool

A Stag overpowered by heat came to a spring to drink. Seeing his own shadow reflected in the water, he greatly admired the size and variety of his horns, but felt angry with himself for having such slender and weak feet.

While he was thus contemplating himself, a Lion appeared at the pool and crouched to spring upon him. The Stag immediately took to flight, and exerting his utmost speed, as long as the plain was smooth and open kept himself easily at a safe distance from the Lion. But entering a wood he became entangled by his horns, and the Lion quickly came up to him and caught him.

When too late, he thus reproached himself : ‘Woe is me! How I have deceived myself! These feet which would have saved me I despised, and I gloried in these antlers which have proved my destruction.’

What is most truly valuable is often underrated.

The Two Men Who Were Enemies

Two Men, deadly enemies to each other, were sailing in the same vessel. Determined to keep as far apart as possible, the one seated himself in the stem, and the other in the prow of the ship.

A violent storm arose, and with the vessel in great danger of sinking, the one in the stern inquired of the pilot which of the two ends of the ship would go down first. On his replying that he supposed it would be the prow, the Man said, 'Death would not be grievous to me, if I could only see my Enemy die before me.'

The Frogs' Complaint Against the Sun

Once upon a time, when the Sun announced his intention to take a wife, the Frogs lifted up their voices in clamor to the sky. Jupiter, disturbed by the noise of their croaking, inquired the cause of their complaint. One of them said, 'The Sun, now while he is single, parches up the marsh, and compels us to die miserably in our arid homes. What will be our future condition if he should beget other suns?'

The Mule

A Mule, frolicsome from lack of work and from too much corn, galloped about in a very extravagant manner, and said to himself : 'My father surely was a high-mettled racer, and I am his own child in speed and spirit.'

On the next day, being driven a long journey, and feeling very wearied, he exclaimed in a disconsolate tone : 'I must have made a mistake; my father, after all, could have been only an ass.'

The Charger and the Miller

A Charger, feeling the infirmities of age, was sent to work in a mill instead of going out to battle.

But when he was compelled to grind instead of serving in the wars, he bewailed his change of fortune and called to mind his former state, saying, 'Ah! Miller, I had indeed to go campaigning before, but I was barbed from counter to tail, and a man went along to groom me; and now I cannot understand what ailed me to prefer the mill before the battle.'

'Forbear,' said the Miller to him, 'harping on what was of yore, for it is the common fate of mortals to question the ups and downs of fortune.'

The Camel

When man first saw the Camel, he was so frightened at his vast size that he ran away.

After a time, perceiving the meekness and gentleness of the beast's temper, he summoned courage enough to approach him.

Soon afterwards, observing that he was an animal alto-gether deficient in spirit, he assumed such boldness as to put a bridle in his mouth, and to let a child drive him.

The Walnut Tree

A Walnut Tree standing by the roadside bore an abundant crop of fruit. For the sake of the nuts, the passers-by broke its branches with stones and sticks. The Walnut-Tree pite-ously exclaimed, 'O wretched me! That those whom I cheer with my fruit should repay me with these painful requitals!'

The Gnat and the Bull

A Gnat settled on the horn of a Bull, and sat there a long time. Just as he was about to fly off, he made a buzzing noise, and inquired of the Bull if he would like him to go. The Bull replied, 'I did not know you had come, and I shall not miss you when you go away.'

Some men are of more consequence in their own eyes than in the eyes of their neighbours.

The Boy Hunting Locusts

A Boy was hunting for locusts. He had caught a goodly number, when he saw a Scorpion, and mistaking him for a locust, reached out his hand to take him. The Scorpion, showing his sting, said : 'If you had but touched me, my friend, you would have lost me, and all your locusts too!'

Carelessness has consequences.

The Flea and the Man

A Man, very much annoyed with a Flea, caught him at last, and said, 'Who are you who dare to feed on my limbs, and to cost me so much trouble in catching you?'

The Flea replied, 'O my dear sir, pray spare my life, and destroy me not, for I cannot possibly do you much harm.'

The Man, laughing, replied, 'Now you shall certainly die by mine own hands, for no evil, whether it be small or large, ought to be tolerated.'

The Man Bitten by a Dog

A Man who had been bitten by a Dog went about in quest of someone who might heal him. A friend, meeting him and learning what he wanted, said, 'If you would be cured, take a piece of bread, and dip it in the blood from your wound, and go and give it to the Dog that bit you.'

The Man who had been bitten laughed at this advice and said, 'Why? If I should do so, it would be as if I should beg every Dog in the town to bite me.'

Benefits bestowed upon the evil-disposed increase their means of injuring you.

The Mischievous Dog

A Dog used to run up quietly to the heels of everyone he met, and to bite them without notice. His master suspended a bell about his neck so that the Dog might give notice of his presence wherever he went. Thinking it a mark of distinction, the Dog grew proud of his bell and went tinkling it all over the marketplace.

One day an old hound said to him : ‘Why do you make such an exhibition of yourself? That bell that you carry is not, believe me, any order of merit, but on the contrary a mark of disgrace, a public notice to all men to avoid you as an ill-mannered dog.’

Notoriety is often mistaken for fame.

The Wolf and the Lamb

Wolf, meeting with a Lamb astray from the fold, resolved not to lay violent hands on him, but to find some plea to justify to the Lamb the Wolf's right to eat him. He thus addressed him : 'Sir, last year you grossly insulted me.'

'Indeed,' bleated the Lamb in a mournful tone of voice, 'I was not then born.'

Then said the Wolf, 'You feed in my pasture.'

'No, good sir,' replied the Lamb, 'I have not yet tasted grass.'

Again said the Wolf, 'You drink of my well.'

'No,' exclaimed the Lamb, 'I never yet drank water, for as yet my mother's milk is both food and drink to me.'

Upon which the Wolf seized him and ate him up, saying, 'Well! I won't remain supperless, even though you refute every one of my imputations.'

The tyrant will always find a pretext for his tyranny.

The Lamb and the Wolf

A Wolf pursued a Lamb, which fled for refuge to a certain Temple. The Wolf called out to him and said, 'The Priest will slay you in sacrifice, if he should catch you.' On which the Lamb replied, 'It would be better for me to be sacrificed in the Temple than to be eaten by you.'

Thus, certain orators who, at school, seem to have some talent, reveal their incompetence as soon as they enter the political arena.

The Town Mouse and the Country Mouse

A Country Mouse invited a Town Mouse, an intimate friend, to pay him a visit and partake of his country fare.

As they were on the bare plowlands, eating their wheat-stocks and roots pulled up from the hedgerow, the Town Mouse said to his friend, 'You live here the life of the ants, while in my house is the horn of plenty. I am surrounded by every luxury, and if you will come with me, as I wish you would, you shall have an ample share of my dainties.' The Country Mouse was easily persuaded, and returned to town with his friend.

On his arrival, the Town Mouse placed before him bread, barley, beans, dried figs, honey, raisins, and, last of all, brought a dainty piece of cheese from a basket. The Country Mouse, being much delighted at the sight of such good cheer, expressed his satisfaction in warm terms and lamented his own hard fate.

Just as they were beginning to eat, someone opened the door, and they both ran off squeaking, as fast as they could, to a hole so narrow that two could only find room in it by squeezing. They had scarcely begun their repast again when someone else entered to take something out of a cupboard, whereupon the two Mice, more frightened than before, ran away and hid themselves.

At last the Country Mouse, almost famished, said to his friend : 'Although you have prepared for me so dainty a feast, I must leave you to enjoy it by yourself. It is surrounded by too many dangers to please me. I prefer my bare plowlands and roots from the hedgerow, where I can live in safety, and without fear.'

Mercury and the Workmen

A Workman, felling wood by the side of a river, let his axe drop-by accident into a deep pool. Being thus deprived of the means of his livelihood, he sat down on the bank and lamented his hard fate.

Mercury appeared and demanded the cause of his tears. After he told him his misfortune, Mercury plunged into the stream, and, bringing up a golden axe, inquired if that were the one he had lost. On his saying that it was not his, Mercury disappeared beneath the water a second time, returned with a silver axe in his hand, and again asked the Workman if it were his. When the Workman said it was not, he dived into the pool for the third time and brought up the axe that had been lost. The Workman claimed it and expressed his joy at its recovery. Mercury, pleased with his honesty, gave him the gold and silver axes in addition to his own.

The Workman, on his return to his house, related to his companions all that had happened. One of them at once resolved to try and secure the same good fortune for himself. He ran to the river and threw his axe on purpose into the pool at the same place, and sat down on the bank to weep.

Mercury appeared to him just as he hoped he would; and having learned the cause of his grief, plunged into the stream and brought up a golden axe, inquiring if he had lost it. The Workman seized it greedily, and declared that truly it was the very same axe that he had lost. Mercury, displeased at his knavery, not only took away the golden axe, but refused to recover for him the axe he had thrown into the pool.

The Ass and the Lapdog

A man had an Ass, and a Maltese Lapdog, a very great beauty.

The Ass was left in a stable and had plenty of oats and hay to eat, just as any other Ass would. The Lapdog knew many tricks and was a great favourite with his master, who often fondled him and seldom went out to dine without bringing him home some tidbit to eat. The Ass, on the contrary, had much work to do in grinding the corn-mill and in carrying wood from the forest or burdens from the farm.

He often lamented his own hard fate and contrasted it with the luxury and idleness of the Lapdog, till at last one day he broke his cords and halter, and galloped into his master's house, kicking up his heels without measure, and frisking and fawning as well as he could. He next tried to jump about his master as he had seen the Lapdog do, but he broke the table and smashed all the dishes upon it to atoms. He then attempted to lick his master, and jumped upon his back. The servants, hearing the strange hubbub and perceiving the danger of their master, quickly relieved him, and drove out the Ass to his stable with kicks and clubs and cuffs.

The Ass, as he returned to his stall beaten nearly to death, thus lamented : 'I have brought it all on myself! Why could I not have been contented to labour with my companions, and not wish to be idle all the day like that useless little Lapdog!'

The Ass in the Lion's Skin

An Ass, having put on the Lion's skin, roamed about in the forest and amused himself by frightening all the foolish animals he met in his wanderings. At last coming upon a Fox, he tried to frighten him also, but the Fox no sooner heard the sound of his voice than he exclaimed, 'I might possibly have been frightened myself, if I had not heard your bray.'

The Hen and the Swallow

A Hen finding the eggs of a viper and carefully keeping them warm, nourished them into life. A Swallow, observing what she had done, said, 'You silly creature! why have you hatched these vipers which, when they shall have grown, will inflict injury on all, beginning with yourself!'

The Partridge and the Fowler

A Fowler caught a Partridge and was about to kill it. The Partridge earnestly begged him to spare his life, saying, 'Pray, master, permit me to live and I will entice many Par-tridges to you in recompense for your mercy to me.'

The Fowler replied, 'I shall now with less scruple take your life, because you are willing to save it at the cost of betraying your friends and relations.'

The Monkey and the Camel

The beasts of the forest gave a splendid entertainment at which the Monkey stood up and danced. Having vastly delighted the assembly, he sat down amidst universal applause.

The Camel, envious of the praises bestowed on the Mon-key and desiring to divert to himself the favour of the guests, proposed to stand up in his turn and dance for their amuse-ment. He moved about in so utterly ridiculous a manner that the Beasts, in a fit of indignation, set upon him with clubs and drove him out of the assembly.

It is absurd to ape our betters.

The Mole and His Mother

A Mole, a creature blind from birth, once said to his Mother : ‘I am sure than I can see, Mother!’

In the desire to prove to him his mistake, his Mother placed before him a few grains of frankincense, and asked, ‘What is it?’

The young Mole said, ‘It is a pebble.’

His Mother exclaimed : ‘My son, I am afraid that you are not only blind, but that you have lost your sense of smell.’

(Translated by George Fyler Townsend)

Mercury and the Man Bitten by an Ant

A Man once saw a ship go down with all its crew, and commented severely on the injustice of the gods.

‘They care nothing for a man’s character,’ said he, ‘but let the good and the bad go to their deaths together.’

There was an ant-heap close by where he was standing, and, just as he spoke, he was bitten in the foot by an Ant. Turning in a temper to the ant-heap he stamped upon it and crushed hundreds of unoffending ants.

Suddenly Mercury appeared, and belaboured him with his staff, saying as he did so, ‘You villain, where’s your nice sense of justice now?’

The Imposter

A certain man fell ill, and, being in a very bad way, he made a vow that he would sacrifice a hundred oxen to the gods if they would grant him a return to health. Wishing to see how he would keep his vow, they caused him to recover in a short time.

Now, he hadn't an ox in the world, so he made a hundred little oxen out of tallow and offered them up on an altar, at the same time saying, 'Ye gods, I call you to witness that I have discharged my vow.'

The gods determined to be even with him, so they sent him a dream, in which he was bidden to go to the sea-shore and fetch a hundred crowns which he was to find there. Hastening in great excitement to the shore, he fell in with a band of robbers, who seized him and carried him off to sell as a slave : and when they sold him a hundred crowns was the sum he fetched.

Do not promise more than you can perform.

The Man and the Lion

A Man and a Lion were companions on a journey, and in the course of conversation they began to boast about their prowess, and each claimed to be superior to the other in strength and courage. They were still arguing with some heat when they came to a cross-road where there was a statue of a Man strangling a Lion.

‘There!’ said the Man triumphantly, ‘look at that! Doesn’t that prove to you that we are stronger than you?’

‘Not so fast, my friend,’ said the Lion, ‘that is only your view of the case. If we Lions could make statues, you may be sure that in most of them you would see the Man underneath.’

There are two sides to every question.

The Snake and Jupiter

A Snake suffered a good deal from being constantly trodden upon by man and beast, owing partly to the length of his body and partly to his being unable to raise himself above the surface of the ground : so he went and complained to Jupiter about the risks to which he was exposed. But Jupiter had little sympathy for him. ‘I dare say,’ said he, ‘that if you had bitten the first that trod on you, the others would have taken more trouble to look where they put their feet.’

The Kid on the Housetop

A Kid climbed up on to the roof of an outhouse, attracted by the grass and other things that grew in the thatch; and as he stood there browsing away, he caught sight of a Wolf passing below, and jeered at him because he couldn't reach him. The Wolf only looked up and said, 'I hear you, my young friend; but it is not you who mock me, but the roof on which you are standing.'

Bat, the Bramble, and the Seagull

A Bat, a Bramble, and a Seagull went into partnership and determined to go on a trading voyage together. The Bat borrowed a sum of money for his venture; the Bramble laid in a stock of clothes of various kinds; and the Seagull took a quantity of lead : and so they set out.

By and by a great storm came on, and their boat with all the cargo went to the bottom, but the three travellers managed to reach land. Ever since then the Seagull flies to and fro over the sea, and every now and then dives below the surface, looking for the lead he's lost; while the Bat is so afraid of meeting his creditors that he hides away by day and only comes out at night to feed; and the Bramble catches hold of the clothes of everyone who passes by, hoping some-day to recognise and recover the lost garments.

All men are more concerned to recover what they lose than to acquire what they lack.

The Ass and his Burdens

A Pedlar who owned an Ass one day bought a quantity of salt, and loaded up his beast with as much as he could bear. On the way home the Ass stumbled as he was crossing a stream and fell into the water.

The salt got thoroughly wetted and much of it melted and drained away, so that, when he got on his legs again, the Ass found his load had become much less heavy. His master, however, drove him back to town and bought more salt, which he added to what remained in the panniers, and started out again.

No sooner had they reached a stream than the Ass lay down in it, and rose, as before, with a much lighter load. But his master detected the trick, and turning back once more, bought a large number of sponges, and piled them on the back of the Ass.

When they came to the stream the Ass again lay down : but this time, as the sponges soaked up large quantities of water, he found, when he got up on his legs, that he had a bigger burden to carry than ever.

You may play a good card once too often.

The Ass, the Cock, and the Lion

An Ass and a Cock were in a cattle-pen together. Presently a Lion, who had been starving for days, came along and was just about to fall upon the Ass and make a meal of him when the Cock, rising to his full height and flapping his wings vigorously, uttered a tremendous crow.

Now, if there is one thing that frightens a Lion, it is the crowing of a Cock : and this one had no sooner heard the noise than he fled.

The Ass was mightily elated at this, and thought that, if the Lion couldn't face a Cock, he would be still less likely to stand up to an Ass : so he ran out and pursued him. But when the two had got well out of sight and hearing of the Cock, the Lion suddenly turned upon the Ass and ate him up.

False confidence often leads to disaster.

The Dog and the Wolf

A Dog was lying in the sun before a farmyard gate when a Wolf pounced upon him and was just going to eat him up; but he begged for his life and said, 'You see how thin I am and what a wretched meal I should make you now : but if you will only wait a few days my master is going to give a feast. All the rich scraps and pickings will fall to me and I shall get nice and fat : then will be the time for you to eat me.'

The Wolf thought this was a very good plan and went away. Some time afterwards he came to the farmyard again, and found the Dog lying out of reach on the stable roof. 'Come down,' he called, 'and be eaten : you remember our agreement?'

But the Dog said coolly, 'My friend, if ever you catch me lying down by the gate there again, don't you wait for any feast.'

Once bitten, twice shy.

The Old Lion

A Lion, enfeebled by age and no longer able to procure food for himself by force, determined to do so by cunning. Betaking himself to a cave, he lay down inside and feigned to be sick : and whenever any of the other animals entered to inquire after his health, he sprang upon them and devoured them.

Many lost their lives in this way, till one day a Fox called at the cave, and, having a suspicion of the truth, addressed the Lion from outside instead of going in, and asked him how he did. He replied that he was in a very bad way : ‘But,’ said he, ‘why do you stand outside? Pray come in.’

‘I should have done so,’ answered the Fox, ‘if I hadn’t noticed that all the footprints point towards the cave and none the other way.’

The Prophet

A Prophet sat in the market-place and told the fortunes of all who cared to engage his services.

Suddenly there came running up one who told him that his house had been broken into by thieves, and that they had made off with everything they could lay hands on. He was up in a moment, and rushed off, tearing his hair and calling down curses on the miscreants.

The bystanders were much amused, and one of them said, 'Our friend professes to know what is going to happen to others, but it seems he's not clever enough to perceive what's in store for himself.'

(Translated by Vernon Jones)

A Wife and a Drunken Husband

A Woman that lay under the mortification of a fudling Husband, took him once when he was dead drunk; and had his body laid in a charnel-house. By the time she thought he might be come to himself again, away goes she, and knocks at the door.

Who's there? (says the Toper)

One, says the Woman, that brings meat for the dead.

Friend, says he, bring me drink rather. I wonder any body that knows me, should bring me one without t'other.

Nay then, says she, the humour I perceive has taken pos-session of him; he has gotten a habit, and his case is desperate.

Inveterate illhabits become another nature to us, and we may almost as well be taken to pieces, and new put together again, as mended.

Musician

A Man that had a very coarsevoice, but an excellent musick-room, would be still practising in that chamber, for the advantage of the eccho. He took such a conceit upon't, that he must needs be shewing his parts upon a public theatre, where he perform'd so very ill, that the auditory hiss'd him off the stage, and threw stones at him.

A man may like himself very well in his own glass, and yet the world not fall in love with him in publick. But the truth on't is, we are partial in our own case, and there's no reading of our selves but with other men'seyes.

黄昏之读

一，二，三，四，五。五个人。

在瑞士大圣伯纳德山口之巅，五个向导坐在修道院门外的长凳上。他们朝远处高山望去，那边巍峨的山峰浸染着落日的颜色，仿佛是谁失手泼洒了大量的红葡萄酒，色彩在山顶表面恣意流淌，好像还没来得及渗入下层白雪似的。

这可不是我的比喻，是那个最壮实的德国向导说的。不过其他向导对这番优美言辞倒没有多在意，就像他们也不在意我一样。此刻，我就坐在修道院门口另一边的长凳上，和他们一样抽着雪茄——也和他们一样——望着远处余晖染红的积雪。我们旁边是一间孤零零的小棚屋，里面放着不少旅行者的尸体，他们因大雪封山被困，从积雪下被挖出来，如今只能躺在地上慢慢干枯萎缩，毕竟这么冷，倒是不会腐烂。

我们就这样看着山顶的红酒一点点渗进雪中，山又恢复了洁白，天空泛着深蓝，风的呼啸声渐大，周遭空气寒冷刺骨。那五个向导扣紧了身上粗毛的大外套。在这里，向导做什么，你就跟着做什么，这样才最安全，于是我也赶忙扣紧了大衣。

先前夕阳映照下的山景打断了五个人的谈话，因为那实在雄伟壮丽，值得静静欣赏。现在太阳落山，他们又继续着之前的谈话。我之前没有听他们说，因为当时还在和一位美国绅士闲聊。他坐在修道院专门接待旅行者的客厅里，面朝壁炉，说要给我讲一个大骗子怎么靠着次次招摇撞骗，混成我们国家首富的故事。

“我的天！”瑞士向导冒出了一句法语。我不敢（像其他作者那样）说这个词可以完全表达出他的本意，但力求用英语写出来不像脏话吧。“如果谈起鬼魂——”

“但我说的不是鬼魂。”德国人说。

“那你要说什么？”瑞士人问。

“我要是知道，”德国人说，“那我懂的可就不止这些了。”

好答案，我心想，一下子就勾起了我的好奇心。因此，我挪到离他们较近的长凳的另一端，背靠着修道院墙，不用参与谈话，也能够听得十分清楚。

“电闪雷鸣！”德国人兴冲冲地说，“当一个人突然想要来看你，而他自己却毫无意识地把这个想法植入你的脑海，整日盘旋，仿佛是遣了某个看不见的信差，你怎么称呼这种现象？当你走在熙熙攘攘的街道——在法兰克福、米兰、伦敦、巴黎——想着身边走过的某个陌生人酷似你的朋友海因里希，另一个擦肩而过的路人也像海因里希，由此产生了一种奇怪的预感——不一会儿你就要见到他了——你还真就见到他了，虽然你一直以为他远在的里雅斯特 [1]。你又把这个叫什么？”

“这都不是什么稀罕事啊。”瑞士人和其他三个人小声说。

“这很不平常！”德国人说，“平常是什么？平常是黑森林里的樱桃，那不勒斯的通心面。说起那不勒斯倒提醒了我！老侯爵夫人苏珊尼姆在基艾亚 [2] 的纸牌宴会上尖叫来着——我就在现场，因为当时我服侍的巴伐利亚一家也去了——哎呀，那侯爵夫人往牌桌前一坐，嘴唇煞白，惊喊道：‘我那在西班牙的妹妹死了！我刚刚感觉到她冰凉的手在摸我的背。’而她的妹妹恰恰就是在那一刻走的，这个你怎么看？”

“还有神职人员祷告后圣热内罗的血液就会溶解 [3] ——整个世界都知道，每年发生一次，就在我的家乡，”那不勒斯向导停顿了一会儿，带着戏谑的表情说，“您又怎么称呼这个呢？”

“那个！”德国人大声说，“对！我想有个名称可以。”

“神迹？”那不勒斯人依然神色狡黠。

德国人只是抽了口烟，放声大笑，其他人也一起抽烟大笑。

“呸！”过了片刻，德国人啐了一口，“我说的这些都是实在发生的。我要是想看招魂，怎么不找个专业的，钱就值回来了。有些怪事根本和鬼魂无关。说到鬼魂！乔万尼·巴普蒂斯塔，讲讲你那个英国新娘的事吧，里面没有鬼，可就是很诡异。谁来说？”

一时间大家陷入沉默。我朝旁边瞥了瞥，猜那个重新点了支雪茄的人就是巴普蒂斯塔。果然片刻后他接过了话茬，听口音是热那亚人。

“英国新娘？”他说，“够了！这点小破事谈不上什么故事。不过，也算是吧，是真的。竖起耳朵听好了，各位，绝无半句虚言。发光的不一定都是金子，可我接下来要说的一定是真的。”

接着，他又强调了一遍。

十年前，我带着自己的履历去找一位英国绅士。他住在伦敦邦德街的长龙酒店，正打算旅行一两年。他对我的履历很满意，对我印象

也不错。问了价格后，对价钱也相当满意。于是他决定雇我六个月，给我的薪酬待遇也不错。

这位绅士年轻英俊，乐观潇洒，倾心一位貌美的英国富家小姐。他们就要结婚了，接下来的旅行算是度蜜月。为了在炎热的三个月中（当时已是初夏）能够充分休憩，他在里维埃拉 [4] 租了一栋老宅。从我所在的城市热那亚过去，非常方便，前往尼斯也需路过此地。我知不知道那栋宅子？当然。我告诉他，自己很了解那里。老宅带着大花园，有点昏暗阴森，周围树木环绕。不过宅子面积倒是不小，它伫立在海岸边，古老而庄严。他表示自己先前也听人这样讲过，很高兴我能有所了解。虽然里面家具是少了点，但别的地方也都这样。虽然房子阴森了点，但主要是看中了大花园，打算和女主人在树荫下避暑度日。

“所以没问题吧，巴普蒂斯塔？”他问。

“完全没有，先生。非常好。”

我们乘的是崭新的特制双轮马车，无论从哪方面来说都很完美。可以说是万事俱备，别无他求了。之后他们举办了婚礼，非常幸福。我也很高兴，因为生活是如此明快，一切都恰到好处，我又回到了自己长大的城市，还可以胡乱教女仆拉贝拉·卡罗琳娜说一些家乡话。她是一个活泼开朗的年轻女孩，时常被我逗得放声大笑。

时间就这样一天天过去，但我发现——听着，高潮来了！（说到这里向导压低了嗓音）——我发现女主人有的时候会陷入沉思，而且是以非常奇怪、可怕甚至悲伤的方式，脸上愁容惨淡，还有些飘忽不定的惊恐。开始注意到这个，是因为我正走着上坡，跟在马车边，主人早到前面去了。不管怎么说，到法国南部时，那天晚上发生的一些事让我更加确定了。当时女主人唤我把主人叫过来，于是主人又回头，陪着她走了很长的路，一直温柔地安慰她，鼓励她。他把手搭在打开的马车窗边，而女主人坐在车里，把手放在窗内沿。主人时不时地开怀大笑，仿佛是为了驱散她心中的忧虑。不久之后，她也放声大笑，一切就又好起来了。

这件事有点古怪，我向漂亮的小女仆拉贝拉·卡罗琳娜打听。女主人有哪里不舒服吗？没有。精神不振？没有。担心路况或者强盗土匪？没有。更神秘的是，卡罗琳娜回答问题时不愿意看着我，只是望向远处的风景。

不过，有一天她把秘密告诉了我。

“如果，你真想知道的话，”卡罗琳娜说，“我发现，根据我听到的情况来看，女主人是被鬼缠上了。”

“怎么缠上的？”

“因为一个梦。”

“什么梦？”

“一个有着一张脸的梦。结婚前有三个晚上，她都梦到了一张脸——同一个面孔，只有一个。”

“那张脸恐怖吗？”

“不，是一个相貌非凡、面色黝黑的男人的脸。他一身黑衣，黑头发，还有灰色的小胡子——相当帅气，不过又冷淡又神秘。女主人压根就没见过这张脸，连长得像的都没有。梦里，他只是从黑暗深处静静地凝视着她，什么也不做。”

“后来女主人又做过同样的梦吗？”

“再也没有。但只要想起这个梦境，她心中就充满了不安。”

“为什么会困扰她呢？”

卡罗琳娜摇了摇头。

“这也是主人的疑惑，”卡罗琳娜说，“她不知道，自己也弄不明白。我只听到昨天晚上，她跟主人说如果在意大利的房子里发现那张脸的画像（她担心她会），那就真要崩溃了。”

说实话，这之后我就开始担心（热那亚向导说），等我们到了那座豪华的旧宫殿，真会看到某幅类似的倒霉画像，毕竟那里这种画像还真不少。随着离目的地越来越近，我心中恨不得把整个宅子的画廊都扔到维苏威火山口去。然而好像事情还不够糟一样，偏巧我们到里维埃拉的那晚风狂雨骤，天色阴沉，还打着雷。由于热那亚周围高山环绕，雷声在其间回荡时，显得震耳欲聋。蜥蜴仿佛受了雷鸣的惊吓，在花园颓圯的石墙缝隙间蹿来蹿去。青蛙一直扯着嗓子呱呱大叫。海风咆哮着卷进来，湿透的树木滴着雨水，还有闪电——把圣劳伦斯教堂都照得通亮！

我们都知道一栋热那亚风格的老式宫殿会是什么样——时间和海风会怎样将它沾染，外墙的纹案图饰会怎样像石膏一样片片斑驳脱落，低层的窗框会怎样慢慢生锈发黑，院子里会怎样杂草丛生、日渐荒芜，外围的建筑会怎样颓圯失修，整栋建筑会怎样无人问津、逐渐破败。我们租下的这栋宫殿就是活生生的例子。它大门紧闭已经几个月了。几个月？——不对，应该是好多年！房子里有一种土味，像墓室一样；同时外面露台上的橘子树味，墙边烂熟柠檬的果味，以及破裂的喷泉周围疯长的灌木丛的草味，不知怎的都跑进来，闷在这里面发酵。每个房间都隐约弥漫着一种陈年的腐朽气息，充斥着橱柜和抽

屈。到了两个大房间之间用作流通的小间里，这种味道就变得更加令人窒息。如果你想挪动一幅画——说回到画来——是根本就动不了的，因为它们像蝙蝠一样牢牢粘在墙上。

房子里所有的格状百叶窗都紧闭着，只有两个头发灰白的老女仆在照看。其中一人拿着纺锤，站在门口缠卷着，咕哝着，估摸着她随时就能像放进空气一样把坏人放进来。主人、女主人、拉贝拉·卡罗琳娜和我一道穿过宫殿。虽然名字排在最后，但其实我走在最前面，打开了窗玻璃和网格百叶窗，结果自己淋到了几点雨，身上落了些石灰皮，还时不时有打盹的蚊子或热那亚当地带有斑点的大蜘蛛掉下来。

月光照进房间，主人们和拉贝拉·卡罗琳娜才进来。接着，大家查看了四周的画像，我则走进了另一间房。女主人打心底里恐惧，生怕见到和那张脸类似的任何东西——其实我们都怕，不过这没有发生。圣母圣婴、圣弗朗西斯科、圣塞巴斯蒂安、维纳斯、圣卡塔林纳、天使、强盗、修士、落日映照的神殿、战争、白马、森林、使徒和共和国 [5] 总督，画上尽是平凡无奇的常规题材——确实如此。那个身着黑衣、黑头发灰胡子、带着冷淡神秘气质、从黑暗中凝视女主人的帅气男子则毫无踪影。

最后我们走遍了所有房间，看过了所有画像，来到了花园。这里租给一个园丁后，维护得相当不错，面积很大，树木成荫。其中有一处简陋的露天小剧场，绿草覆盖的斜坡是主舞台：侧面一边三个入口，布景则是缀满叶子、散发着草木清香的绿幕。女主人明亮的大眼睛飞快转动着，即便在这儿，她仍然害怕那张脸会突然冒出来：还好一切正常。

“好了，克拉拉，”主人轻声说，“你看到了，什么都没有，开心点。”

女主人很受鼓舞，之后不久就适应了这个阴沉的宫殿，整天唱歌、弹竖琴，临摹古画，或者和男主人在绿树下或葡萄藤下散步。她光彩照人，他也心情畅快。男主人经常大笑着吩咐我备马，他要在中午热起来前骑马溜达一圈：

“一切都顺利，巴普蒂斯塔！”

“是的先生，谢天谢地，非常好！”

他不需要我陪伴，于是我就带着拉贝拉去看看大教堂、托雷安农齐亚塔 [6]、咖啡馆、歌剧院、村庄庆典活动、公园、日间剧场、牵线木偶表演。所有这些都能让漂亮的小拉贝拉着迷。她还学会了意大利语——天哪！奇迹啊！我有时会问她，女主人是不是快忘记那个梦了？差不多吧，卡罗琳娜说——基本上是，她在慢慢淡忘。

一天，主人收到了一封信，把我叫过去。

“巴普蒂斯塔！”

“先生。”

“一位别人介绍我认识的绅士说今天要来这里共进晚餐。他叫德尔欧布拉。准备一下，别让我丢脸。”

真是奇怪的名字，我没听说过，不过当时也有很多贵族绅士因为在奥地利受到政治猜忌，然后改名的。可能是其中一位吧。管他呢！德尔欧布拉这个名字对我来说和任何名字一样，没什么不好。

晚餐时间，德尔欧布拉先生来了（说到这里，热那亚向导再一次压低了声音），我把他带到会客室，也就是老宫殿的大厅。主人热情真诚地接待了他，并转身向女主人介绍。而女主人站起身，脸色唰地一变，尖叫一声就晕过去了，直接栽倒在大理石地面上。

接着，我立马看向德尔欧布拉先生，只见他一身黑衣，表情冷淡而神秘，面色黝黑，相貌非凡，还蓄着黑头发和灰色小胡子。

主人把女主人抱回到她的房间，我赶紧让拉贝拉跟过去服侍。后来她告诉我，女主人吓得大半条命没了，整晚脑子里都是之前那个梦。

主人既恼怒又焦躁不安——几近愤怒，心中又很担心。这位德尔欧布拉先生是一位谦和儒雅的绅士，对女主人的病况表示了关心和同情。他说，来自非洲的风已经吹了好些时日（这是他听马耳他十字架酒店的人说的，他住在那里），妖风经常伤人。他还祝愿美丽的夫人能够早日康复。接着便要请辞离开，说自己可以等女主人康复后再行登门。不过主人没有同意，认真挽留他坐下来进餐，最后他们俩一起吃了饭。

德尔欧布拉先生当晚早早走了，第二天又来敲门，骑在马上，问女主人是否安好。一周内他来了那么两三次。

根据我的观察，加上拉贝拉·卡罗琳娜的消息，显然主人正在努力安慰女主人，让她克服胡思乱想的恐惧。他非常温柔体贴，但也理智坚定，慢慢分析给她听，告诉她任何空想都不过是庸人自扰，如果能安定心神，就什么事都没有了。如果她能克服自己奇怪的弱点，成功像英国淑女招待客人那样接纳德尔欧布拉先生，那就永远不会再出事了。最终，德尔欧布拉先生再次到访，女主人招待了他，没有表露出什么明显的痛苦（尽管仍有些局促和忧虑），当晚平静地度过了。主人对这种变化感到十分欣喜，为了急于确认她已好转，于是德尔欧布拉先生成了我们的常客。他的画艺和乐理都十分精湛，还博览群书，这种社交伙伴，在任何沉闷的意大利宫殿，都是相当受欢迎的。

德尔欧布拉先生第二次来访结束后，我听到主人说：

“亲爱的克拉拉，你看，都结束了！德尔欧布拉来了又走，你的忧虑已经完全没有啦。”

“他还——还会再来吗？”女主人问。

“再来？为什么不！当然，他会来很多次的！怎么了，你是不是冷？”（女主人打了个哆嗦。）

“不，亲爱的——但是——我真的害怕他：你确定真的还要他来吗？”

“克拉拉，这是毫无疑问的！”主人愉快地答道。

不过，他对女主人的完全康复倒抱有极大希望，并且这种期冀与日俱增。女主人优雅美丽，他也心情畅快。

“一切都顺利吧，巴普蒂斯塔？”他又对我说一遍。

“是的先生，感谢老天。非常好。”

有一天（热那亚向导微微抬高了嗓门儿），我们都在罗马参加狂欢节。我有个西西里岛的朋友，他也是向导，当时陪同一个英国家庭。我和他出去玩了一整天，晚上回酒店的时候，碰到小卡罗琳娜。她从来不单独离开家，那天却沿着大道狂奔，显得心烦意乱。

“卡罗琳娜！怎么了？”

“哦，巴普蒂斯塔！哦，老天啊！女主人到底去哪儿了？”

“女主人？”

“人家说她不见了。今天早上，因为她前一晚没休息好（太痛苦的缘故），主人出门就没有叫她。本来她应该在床上躺到天黑，再精神抖擞地起来活动。结果现在她不见了，不见了！主人回来了，撞开了门，发现她不见了！美丽大方又善良的女主人！”

娇小漂亮的卡罗琳娜在我面前大喊着，咆哮着，甚至拉扯自己的头发，要不是她最后像中枪一样晕倒在我怀里，我几乎就快控制不住她了。这时主人出现了——我从来没见过他这副模样，仪态、脸色，甚至嗓音都变了。他叫上我（我把小卡罗琳娜抱回她的床上，让内侍

女仆陪着她)，驾着马车气冲冲地闯进夜色里，横穿荒无人烟的原野。天亮时我们赶到一家破败驿站，可惜所有马匹在十二个小时前已全被租用，分别去往不同的方向。听着！都是德尔欧布拉先生订的，驿站的人说他曾驾车来过这里，还带着一位害怕得蜷缩在角落的英国女士。

打那以后（热那亚向导说着长长地舒了一口气）我再也没有听过她的消息。我所知道的就是，女主人和梦中见过的那张可怖的脸一起消失了，从此湮没在离奇骇人的故事里。

“你怎么解释这种事呢？”德国向导得意扬扬地说，“鬼！那里根本就没有鬼！接下来我要告诉你的事，看看又如何理解呢？鬼嘛！这个故事里也没有鬼！”

我曾经（德国向导继续说道）跟着一位英国绅士干活，他上了年纪，又是单身，当时要去我的祖国德国旅行。这位绅士是做德国进出口贸易的商人，所以懂德语，他在小时候去过德国，但长大成人以后没再去过——据我判断，那大概是六十年前的事了。

他叫詹姆斯，有个双胞胎哥哥叫约翰，也是单身汉。兄弟俩感情深厚，一起在古德曼广场打拼生意，但是并不同住。詹姆斯先生住波兰街，伦敦牛津街的外面，而约翰先生住在埃平森林旁边。

詹姆斯先生和我准备在一周内启程去德国，具体日子看生意安排。约翰先生来到波兰街（当时我就在房子里），准备和詹姆斯先生共度那一周。但是第二天，他却说：“詹姆斯，我有点不舒服。应该问题不大，是痛风的毛病。我想回家，因为老管家很了解我，能好好照顾我。如果好一点了，我就回来，在你走之前看看你。如果我撑不住了回不来，你启程前能不能去看看我呢？”当然，詹姆斯先生答应了。他们握了手——双手交叉互握，一贯如此——然后约翰先生命令双轮马车出发，坐在车里摇摇晃晃地回去了。

第二天晚上——也就是那周的第四天——穿着法兰绒睡袍的詹姆斯先生举着一盏蜡烛走进我的房间，我从熟睡中醒过来。他坐在我床沿，看着我，说：

“威廉，我有理由相信自己得了某种怪病。”

我立即察觉到他的神情非同寻常。

“威廉，”他说，“有些事我不怕告诉你，也不觉得羞耻，但我不愿意告诉其他人。因为你来自一个理智的国度，在那里，这么多年来，疑神疑鬼的事总会有人关心，人们却不会轻易地下结论，也不会不分青红皂白地表示鄙夷。我刚刚看到了哥哥的幽灵。”

我承认（德国向导说）听到这里，我浑身打了个激灵。

“就在刚刚看到的，”詹姆斯先生直视着我重复了一遍，好让我看出他很镇定也很清醒，“哥哥约翰的幽灵。我正坐在床上，毫无困意，突然他就进来了，穿着白袍，严肃地和我打了招呼。然后飘到房间的另一端，扫了眼写字台上的纸，又转过来像刚才一样认真凝望着我，随后出门离去。听着，我根本没有疯，也不想用任何自己以外的客观存在来解释那个幽灵，只是觉得这说明我生病了，现在最好放点血清醒一下。”

我赶紧下床（德国向导说），一边穿衣，一边让他不要慌，我会去请医生过来。正要出门，这时大门外传来巨大的敲门声，有人还按了门铃。我的房间是后院的阁楼，詹姆斯先生的卧室在前院二层，于是我们去到他的房间，打开窗子，看看外面什么情况。

“是詹姆斯先生家吗？”底下一个男人，退回到路对面抬头问。

“是，”詹姆斯先生说，“我认得你，我哥哥的男仆罗伯特。”

“是的先生。很遗憾地告诉您，约翰先生病了，非常严重，可以说是在鬼门关了。他想见您，所以我驾了马车来接您，请不要耽搁了，快跟我走吧。”

詹姆斯先生和我对视了一眼。“威廉，”他说，“太奇怪了。你跟我一起去吧！”我立即服侍他更衣，其实一半衣服都是在车上穿的。马儿跑得飞快，从波兰街到森林这一路不知踩死了多少小草。

这时，听好了！（德国向导说）我和詹姆斯先生一起来到了他哥哥的房间，以下都是我亲眼所见，亲耳所闻。

他哥哥躺在那间狭长卧室里头的床上，老管家站在旁边，还有几个人也在；估计这三四个人从下午就来陪他了。约翰先生一身白色，像幽灵一样，因为他正穿着睡袍。不过他脸色也像幽灵，一看到自己弟弟进来，眼神就直勾勾地盯着他。

不过，当弟弟来到床边时，哥哥支着身子坐起来，眼睛睁得老大，望着他说：“詹姆斯，你见过我的，今晚——你知道的！”

然后就咽气了！

德国向导讲完这个诡异的故事后，我静静等着，还想听他谈谈自己的看法。空气却陷入了沉默。我环顾四周，骇然发现五个向导都不见了：周围如此静谧，仿佛幽幽大山已将他们吞噬，埋入亘古的积雪。此时，寒冷的空气再度侵袭，我一点儿都不想独自待在这可怕的环境中——或者老实说，是压根儿不想一个人。因此，我起身走向修道院的大厅，发现那位美国绅士还很愿意讲那个了不起的骗子的故事，于是我又听了一通。

信号员

“喂！下面的！”

听到有人叫他时，他正站在岗亭前，手里拿着一面卷起的小旗。鉴于我们的相对位置，你可能会觉得他绝不会弄错声音的方向。但是，他不仅没有抬头看上方陡峭岩峰处站着的我，反而转身向铁路远处望去。这一举动里有一些耐人寻味的东西，虽然我可能一辈子也搞不明白到底是什么。但我知道，我已经被吸引了，即使对于站在高处的我来说，他的身影在沟槽底部，显得又矮又暗。而我浑身浸染在晃眼的落日余晖里，只有用手挡住刺眼的光晕才能看清他。

“喂！下面的！”

他把目光从铁路上收回，转过身来抬了抬眼，看到了高处的我。

“这附近有路吗？我可以下去和你说说话。”

他看着我，没有答话，我也低头看了看他，没有再问，不想强迫他回答我无聊的问题。就在这时，地面和四周开始轻微地震颤，并很快演变成了剧烈的震动，一股迎面而来的急流迫使我开始后退，力量之大好像可以把我拖拽下去。从飞驰的火车中涌出的蒸汽升至和我一样的高度，飘过我身旁，渐渐散开。我再次向下望去，看到他正在卷火车经过时挥舞起来的小旗。

我又问了他一遍。他沉默了一阵，似乎是在定睛观察，然后用卷起的小旗指了指和我在同一高度的一个点，距我两三百码 [7] 远。我冲着下面喊了一句“好的”，随后开始朝着那个点走去。到达后我仔细地环顾了一下四周，发现岩壁上有一条曲曲折折的小道——我就是顺着这条道下去的。

岩壁上的这条路凿得很深，异常的陡峭，开在一块黏湿的巨石上，而且越往下走，石体就愈加湿软。因此，我走得十分缓慢，中途还想起了他最初给我指路时表现出的那种奇怪的不情愿，好像被谁胁迫了一样。

当我顺着这条曲折的下坡路走到能看到他的地方时，他正站在火车刚才经过的轨道中间，一副好像正等着我的样子。他的左手扶着下巴，右手则横在胸前托着左肘。他这种期待又警惕的态度让我停下来想了一会儿。

我继续往下走着，来到铁路旁，朝着他的方向走去。眼前的他是一个面色蜡黄的男人，胡须黑森森，眉毛浓密。他工作的地方是我见过的最孤立最凄凉的地方。两旁渗水的粗糙石墙遮蔽了所有的光线，只留下一道缝隙得以窥见天空。往一边望去，这个地牢般的空间弯弯曲曲不见尽头。而在另一侧，很快就能看到不远处昏暗的红色信号灯和更为昏暗的入口，后者通往一条漆黑的隧道，而这个庞然大物里还弥漫着粗野、压抑和令人生畏的气息。由于能照到这里的阳光少得可怜，四周氤氲着一股令人难以忍受的泥土气息。而且穿堂的冷风一阵接着一阵，吹得我直打颤，我觉得自己已经被冻死了。

在他还纹丝未动时，我就走到了能碰到他的位置。可还没把眼神从我身上移开，他就后退了一步，抬起了手。

这是一个孤独的岗位（我说过），我当时从那边的高处往下看时就完全被它吸引了。我想，来这里的人应该算是稀客了，希望我这个稀客不会让人讨厌。在他眼里，我只是一个终其一生都局限于狭窄的范围内毫无突破的人，一个终获自由后对这些伟大的工作萌发兴趣的人。带着这样的想法，我对他开了口。但是我对自己的用词根本毫无把握，因为除了我本人不喜欢引出话题外，这个人身上有一种令我生畏的东西。

他用一种非常好奇的目光望向隧道口附近的红灯，并仔细地打量了一番，好像那里少了什么东西，然后他才看向我。

那个灯也归他管吗？还是不归？

他低声答道：“你难道不知道它吗？”

我打量着他一直盯着我的眼睛和有点阴郁的脸，脑海中产生了一个可怕的念头，这是一个灵魂，不是人类。此后我就一直怀疑他脑子是不是坏了。

这次轮到我了，我往后退了几步。但在退的时候，我察觉到他眼中有一丝潜在的对我的恐惧。这让那个可怕的念头一扫而空。

“你看我的时候，”我说，强挤出一个笑脸，“感觉你在怕我。”

“我在想，”他答道，“我之前是不是见过你。”

“在哪儿？”

他指了指之前一直看的红灯。

“在那儿吗？”我反问道。

他立刻对我警觉起来，（无声地）说了一声“是”。

“老兄，我去那儿干吗啊？但就算有可能，我也根本没去过，你

可以肯定。”

“或许可以，”他接着说道，“是的，我可以。”

他的举止开始放松起来，像我一样。不仅回答爽快利落，用词还很恰当。他的工作很多吗？是的。也就是说，他要承担很多责任。但是他的岗位要求他保持精准和机警，几乎没有什么体力活。变换信号、修理灯具和把这个铁把手拉来推去 [8] 就是他所有的职责。那些我似乎过于看重的漫长寂寞时光，对他来说，只是被生活中的例行常规填充成现在的模样，他也慢慢习惯了这样的生活。在下边的这段日子他还自学了一门语言——如果看得懂、对发音有一些粗略理解可以算是学会一门语言的话。他还学了分数和小数，以及一点代数。但他还是像小时候一样，算数非常糟糕。当班的时候他就必须一直待在充斥着潮湿空气的隧道中吗？他永远都不能从那两堵高石墙中走出来感受阳光吗？哎呀，这还要看时机和情境。某些情况下在铁路上的时间确实显得比其他情形下的时间长，在一天之中也有某些时段情况如此。天气晴朗的时候，他确实也会走出阴影，往高处去。但是，由于随时都要注意聆听电铃，而且这种情况下更要加倍小心，他大概并没有我想的那么轻松。

他带我进了岗亭，屋里生着火，桌子上放着一本工作手册——他必须在上边做一些记录，一个带有拨号盘和指针的电报设备，还有他之前提到的小铃铛。他曾说自己受过良好教育——大概是要高于火车站工作人员受教育的水平（希望这么说没有冒犯之意）。我本以为他会对这样的说法感到难为情，但他说大多数人都会撒这样的小谎，并不稀奇。在救济院、警署，甚至是最让人绝望的地方——军队里，他都听过这样的吹嘘。而且他知道不管是干什么的铁路工，或多或少都会这样标榜一下。他年轻的时候曾经（如果说坐在那个小屋里的我还能相信，他自己都不信了）研究过自然哲学 [9]，还受过正规的教育。但当时年少轻狂，不肯好好把握机会，堕落至此，再也没有回头的一天了。他对此倒并无半句怨言，铺好了床，然后躺了上去，看样子也不打算另铺一张了。

总之，我应该会把这个人列为该岗位上最可靠的人之一，但是他

在对我说话时，会突然停下，沉着脸去看并没有发出任何声响的小电铃，而且还会打开小屋的门（之前因为要隔绝有害气体一直关闭着），伸出头去看隧道口附近的红灯。这种情况发生了两次，每次他回到火炉旁，脸上都挂着令人费解的神情，我们当时坐得很远，我说不太清。

起身准备走时，我说了一句：“我差点就以为你活得很惬意。”

（恐怕我必须要承认，我说这话的意思是想让他接的。）

“我觉得我之前是，”他用一开始的低沉嗓音答道，“但是我有麻烦了，先生，我被麻烦缠身了。”

只要愿意，他完全可以收回所说的话。但他还是说了，于是我很快接了上去。

“什么麻烦？你的麻烦是什么？”

“这个很难说清楚，先生。真的很难很难开口。如果你还来的话，我会试着告诉你的。”

“但是我是明确打算再来拜访你的。那么，什么时候呢？”

“我凌晨下班，先生，明天晚上十点再上班。”

“那我十一点过来。”

他谢过我，把我送到了门外。“先生，我会一直亮着白灯的，”他用自己独特的低音说道，“一直到你找到上去的路为止。找到之后，别叫！到了山顶，也别叫！”

他这么说，不禁让我觉得寒意更甚，但我只回了一句：“好的。”

“你明晚下来的时候，不要叫！让我问你最后一个问题。是什么让你今晚喊出那句‘喂！下面的’？”

“谁知道呢，”我说，“我就是喊出那个意思的——”

“别那个意思，先生。它们是具有特殊意义的词。我非常了解它们。”

“我承认它们有特殊意义。我的确那么叫了，因为看到了你就在下面啊。”

“没有其他的原因？”

“还能有什么原因！”

“你没觉得它们是通过某种非自然的方式传递给你的吗？”

“没有。”

他说了声“晚安”后，举起了灯。我沿着下行铁路的边缘走着（有一种火车就要从身后开过来的不适感），最后找到了路。上去要比下来容易些，我非常顺利地回到了自己的旅社。

第二天晚上，我准时赴约，在远方传来十一点钟声的时候，踏上了曲折小路的第一块石板。他在底下等着我，手里的白灯亮着。“我没有喊叫，”靠近后我说了这么一句，“我现在可以说话了吗？”“当然可以，先生。”“那么晚上好。”他伸出了手。“晚上好先生。”我也伸出了我的。随后我们并肩向他的岗亭走去，进来后关上门，在炉火边坐了下来。

“我决定了，先生，”刚一坐下他就探着身子说道，声音只比耳语大一点，“你不用再问我麻烦是什么了。昨晚我把你认作了别人。那就是我的麻烦。”

“认错人吗？”

“不。是那个‘别人’。”

“谁？”

“我不认识。”

“像我吗？”

“不知道。我从来没见过正脸。他的左臂挡在脸前，右臂在挥舞，挥舞得很厉害。就像这样。”

我注视着他的行为，那是一种非常激动与愤怒的姿势——“老天啊，把路让开！”

“那是一个月光皎洁的夜晚，”他说，“我当时正坐在这里，突然听到一声‘喂！下面的！’于是我起身站在门口向外看，那个‘别人’就站在隧道附近的红灯旁，像我刚才那样挥着胳膊。他的声音似乎已经因为喊叫沙哑了，他叫道，‘小心啊！小心！’然后又叫，‘喂！下边的！小心！’我拿起灯，把它调成了红光后向着那个人影边跑边叫，‘怎么了？发生什么事了？在哪里？’他就站在隧道的阴影外。我走到近处时，发现他一直用袖子遮住自己的眼睛，感到非常奇怪。所以我径直走过去，伸出手试图拉掉他的袖子，就在那个时候他消失了。”

“进隧道了。”我说道。

“不。我跑进了隧道，足足跑了五百码。我停下来把灯举过头顶，看到了测距的标记数字，当时潮湿的污渍从壁上缓缓流淌下来，还有些直接从拱顶滴落。我又跑出去，速度比之前还要快（因为我极度厌恶眼前这地方），路上我还用手中的红灯照了照隧道的红信号灯，查看周边情况，并且爬上铁梯去了顶部的走廊，之后又爬下来，

跑回了这里。我给两边都拍了电报：‘收到警报，一切可好？’两边的回电都是‘一切正常’。”

我感到一根冰凉的手指正慢慢划过后脊背，我努力克制住自己，告诉他这个人影一定是出现的幻觉，是视觉神经过于脆弱才出了问题，很多病人都曾这样，其中一些已经意识到了这种痛苦的本质，甚至通过医学实验证明了这种认识。“至于那个想象中的喊叫声，”我说，“我们小声说话的时候，你可以听一听这个怪异山谷的风声，听听它们吹过电报线时的诡异尖叫！”

“你说的也有道理。”在我们坐着听了一会儿后，他如是说道。他对大风和电线应该是熟悉的，毕竟他在那里度过了那么多冬夜，经常一个人默默看着这一切。但他跟我说，事情并没有完。

我对打断他的话表示了歉意，于是他慢慢把手搭在我胳膊上，一字一句地说了下面这段话：

“在这个‘现象’出现的六小时后，这条铁路线上最重大的事故发生了，十小时后，伤亡者被抬出隧道，恰好就经过了那个人影曾经站过的地方。”

我竭力克制住浑身的战栗，回答说，这巧合确实是太过出人意料了，仿佛是人为精心设计出来，好叫他永远难忘的。然而，毫无疑问的是，惊人的巧合确实一直都有，谈起类似的话题也必须考虑到这一点。尽管必须承认，我补充道（因为我认为我看出他准备对这番话提出异议），但凡有点常识的人都不会让事故成为日常轨迹的一部分。

他又一次请求继续说下去。

我再次为自己不知不觉打断他的话道了歉。

“这件事，”他说着，再次把手放在我胳膊上，空洞的眼神向后瞟去，“就发生在一年前。六七个月后，我已经从当时的震惊错愕中恢复了过来，有一天破晓时分，我就站在那个门前，朝着红灯的方向看，又看到了那个幽灵。”他停下来，直直地盯着我。

“它叫出声了吗？”

“没有。它很安静。”

“它挥手示警了吗？”

“没有。它倚着灯柱，双手都放在脸前。就像这样。”

我再次看向他。那是哀悼的姿势。我曾在坟墓上的石像上见过这种姿势。

“你过去了吗？”

“我进屋坐了下来，一方面是想理一下思绪，另一方面是因为它让我感到有点晕眩。等我再出门时，太阳已经升得很高了，那个鬼魂也不见了。”

“没有后续了？这之后没有发生什么？”

他一边用食指轻轻戳了我的胳膊两下，一边极为勉强地点点头：

“就在那一天，当一列火车驶出隧道时，我注意到在我这边的一个车厢窗户边有一些头和手，很混乱，有什么东西在挥舞。我又看到了它，立即给司机示意，停车！司机迅速关火踩刹车，但是火车还是往前走了一百五十码，甚至更多。我在后边追着跑，路上就听到了可怕的尖叫声和哭喊声。一个隔间里的漂亮小姐当场死亡，她被抬进了这里，就放在我们俩中间这片地板上。”

我看着他指的那片地方，不由自主地把自己的椅子向后推了推。

“真的，先生。千真万确。事实就是这样，和我告诉您的一样。”

我不知道该说些什么，也不知道怎么说，我的嘴巴非常干燥。风声和电线共同发出一声长长的哀叹，将故事接了下去。

他继续说道：“现在，先生，记住这个，帮我判断一下我脑子到底怎么了。那个灵魂一周前又回来了。从那之后，它就会时不时地出现在那里，断断续续地。”

“在灯光下？”

“在危险信号灯下。”

“它看上去想要干什么？”

他把之前“老天啊，把路让开”的动作又重复了一遍，似乎是带着更多的激情与愤怒。

然后，他继续说道：“我为了这事日夜不得安宁。它用一种痛苦的语调对我喊道‘下面的！小心！小心啊！’，持续的时间加起来有好几分钟，它就站在那里冲我挥手，敲我的小电铃……”

我突然想到了什么。“昨天晚上我在这里的时候是因为它敲你的铃，你才出门看的吗？”

“两次。”

“哎，你看吧，”我说，“你的想象欺骗了你。我的眼睛是盯着铃铛的，我的耳朵也是听着铃声的，所以如果我是一个活人，我就敢说它在那些时刻并没有响。不，在其他时候也没有响，除非是在火车开过，司机和你交流的时候它响了。”

他摇了摇头：“迄今为止我在那方面从没弄错过，先生。我从来没有把铃声和人声弄混过。鬼魂的铃声是电铃的一种奇怪震动，毫无来由，而且我还没有说，那个电铃就在我的眼前晃动。您没有听到它我并不奇怪。但是我确实听到了。”

“那你往外看时，那个灵魂还在吗？”

“在。”

“两次都是？”

他坚定地重复了一遍：“两次都是。”

“现在你能和我一起到门前去看看它吗？”

他咬了咬自己的下嘴唇，似乎不太情愿，但最终还是站了起来。我打开门，站在台阶上，他则站在门口。向远处望去，那边有危险信号灯，有阴森的隧道口，有凿壁湿漉漉的高墙，有头顶的一片星空。

“你看到它了吗？”我边问边特意看了看他的脸。他的双眼突出，满是紧张的神色，但是当我认真地看向同样的地点时，我的双眼可能更突出，神色更紧张。

“不，”他答道，“它不在那里。”

“同意。”我说道。

我们再次进去，关上了门，坐回原先的位置上。我开始考虑如何才能更好地发挥这个优势——如果他这样肯定的回答能够被称为一种优势的话，他是如此肯定事实的不可争辩，以至于我处在了一个最无力的位置上。

“这次你就彻底明白了吧，先生，”他说，“让我这么抓狂的，是一个问题，那个灵魂到底是什么意思？”

我告诉他，我也不确定，但我充分理解他。

“它让我们警惕什么？”他注视着火苗，沉思着，时不时往我这里看一眼。“危险是什么？危险又在哪里？有危险马上就要来临，就在铁路线上的某处。可怕的灾难就要发生。经历了前两次事故后，这一次不能再犹豫了。但是这对我来说确实太残酷，阴魂不散的。我能做什么呢！”

他扯出自己的手帕，擦了擦热得冒汗的额头。

“如果我发出危险两字，不管是发往其中一边，还是两边都发，我都没办法解释。”他一边继续说着，一边擦拭着手掌心，“我会陷入麻烦，于事无补。他们会觉得我疯了。情况就会是这样——信息：‘危险！当心！’回复：‘什么危险？地点？’信息：‘不知。但务必当心！’他

们会辞退我的。要不然还能怎么办呢？”

他的痛苦不禁让人心生怜悯。那是一个意识清醒的人在遭受精神上的折磨，他一直默默背负着某种关乎生命的难以理解的责任，压力已经到了极限。“当它第一次站在危险信号灯下的时候，”他一边继续说着，一边把额前的黑发拢到了脑后，伸手揉着两边的太阳穴，看上去极度悲痛，“为什么不告诉我事故发生的地点——如果它注定要发生？为什么不告诉我规避的方法——如果可以规避？它第二次来的时候遮住了自己的脸，为什么不直接告诉我‘那个女士就要死了，让他们把她留在家里吧’？如果它来的前两次，只是为了告诉我它的警报是正确的，从而让我为第三次做好准备，为什么现在不明白地警告我呢？而且我，老天帮帮我吧！我就是这个冷清车站里一个可怜的信号员而已！为什么不去找一个大家都相信的人呢，或者有能力做出改变的人！”

看到他这样，我意识到为了这个可怜人，也为了公共安全，必须立即平复他的情绪。因此，暂时撇开我们之间所有有关现实和非现实的争论，我告诉他任何一个被赋予职责的人都应该认真履行，虽然他不明白这些莫名其妙的现象到底是什么意思，但至少他明白自己的职责所在，这也是能够让他感到欣慰的地方了。相比于让他放弃自己想法的劝说，我的安慰要成功得多。他镇静了下来，随着夜色越来越深，他的工作对注意力的要求也越来越高。我是在凌晨两点离开的。我提出要过夜，可是他连听都不想听。

我在沿着小路往上走时不止一次地回头看那盏红灯，我并不喜欢那个灯，如果我的床在它下面，我应该已经睡着了，只不过会很不舒服。我没有理由隐瞒这些想法。而且我不喜欢那两场事故和死去的女孩。我也知道没有理由去隐瞒这些。

但是，我想得最多的还是应该怎么做。毕竟我已经知道了这个秘密。我已经证实了这个人聪明、机警、隐忍和严谨。然而他能维持这种状态多久呢？虽然他的职位不高，但做这份工作需要被充分信任，我（举个例子）愿意拿自己的生命做赌注去相信他会一如既往地精准吗？

如果我把他跟我说的这些话告诉公司领导，那就出卖了他。但我实在不愿意背叛他，也不想一开始真诚相待，随后又提出折中方案，于是最终决定陪他（要不然就暂时保守他的秘密）去看这一带最好的医生，照医生说的办。明天晚上就是换班时间，他告诉我，日出后的一两个小时下班，等日落后就赶回来上班。我也相应地做了往返安排。

第二天傍晚天色很好，我早早地就出了门。穿过岩顶凿壁附近的

田野小道时太阳还没有下山。我心里盘算再漫步一小时就差不多了，半小时去，半小时回，然后就该去岗亭找信号员了。

继续散步前，我往崖边走了走，机械性地往下看了看，就站在我第一次看见他的地方。这时，我看见一个人影站在隧道口的不远处，左袖遮住了眼睛，正在拼命地挥舞右臂。一种无法形容的恐惧袭上心头。

不过只一瞬间，这种无名恐惧就消失了。我发现那个人影的确确是一个人，而且不远处还站着另外一小撮人，他似乎正对着这群人排练这个姿势。危险信号灯还没有亮起来。灯柱旁出现了一个我完全没见过的矮小棚屋，由一些木质的支架和防水帆布搭建而成，看上去还没有一张床大。

一种不好的感觉袭上心头——自责带来的恐惧一闪而过，我把那个人留在那里，没让人去注意或纠正他的行为，导致了这一出致命的恶作剧——我以最快的速度从小路冲了下去。

“怎么了？”我问其中一个男人。

“信号员今天早上死了，先生。”

“不是那个岗亭里的人吧？”

“就是他，先生。”

“不是我认识的那个人吧？”

“你会认出他的，先生，如果你认识的话，”那个人说着郑重地脱下帽子，掀起了防水帆布的一角，“因为他的脸非常完好。”

“啊！怎么会这样呢，怎么会这样呢？”随着帆布再次盖上，我挨个问了好几个人。

“他是被火车头撞倒的，先生。在英格兰没有人比他更熟悉这份工作，但是不知道怎么回事，他没从外轨中出去。当时天已大亮，他打开了信号灯，手里还拿着他的提灯。火车头出隧道的时候，他正背朝着火车，就被撞倒了。那就是开火车的人，正在演示当时的过程。给这位绅士讲一下，汤姆。”

那个穿着粗布深色裙子的男人往后退了几步，站到了之前所在的隧道口：

“当时正在隧道的弯道附近，先生，”他解释道，“我看见了尽头处的他，好像是用望远镜看到的。当时没有时间去检查车速，而且我也知道他会的。由于他好像并没有注意到汽笛声，火车冲过去时我就把它关了，靠近的时候拼了命地大声喊他。”

“你喊了什么？”

“我喊的是：‘下面的！小心！小心啊！老天啊，把路让开！’”

我吃了一惊。

“啊！简直是噩梦，先生。我从来都用不着喊他的。这次我只能把胳膊挡在自己眼前，不去看，然后一直挥舞着胳膊，但是都没用。”

我不再继续赘述这几个相较于其他故事来说格外奇特的事件了。在文章结尾，我想说明，火车驾驶员发出警告的巧合，不仅仅是不幸的信号员反复说给我听的那些阴魂不散的话语，而且还有我自己——不是他——看到他模仿的姿势时，只在心里想过的话。

谋杀案审判

我发现，即便是智慧超群、学识卓越的人，如果要让他们吐露一下自己奇奇怪怪的心理活动，大家都会变得胆小谨慎。几乎所有人都会担心自己的一番讲述无法引起听众内心世界的共鸣，可能受到质疑或嘲笑。对于一个敢于说实话的旅行者来说，即便是见过（传说中）海蛇怪一般的神奇生物，他也会毫不害怕地说出自己的经历。但是，如果他已有某种奇特的不祥预感、内心冲动、奇思妙想、（所谓的）憧憬展望、梦境，抑或其他特别的心理印象，就会在最终承认前反复犹豫纠结，难以开口。在我看来，大部分以上那些不可言明的因素导致了这种缄默。习惯上，我们不会像谈论客观事物一样去沟通主观的感受。带来的后果就是，这方面的经历常常显得非同寻常，就其不幸与缺憾而言，的确如此。

接下来我要说的，既不是为了讲什么道理，也不是要反驳或声援什么理论。我了解柏林书商 [10] 的过去，也经戴维·布鲁斯特爵士介绍研究过一位已逝皇家天文学家妻子的案件。此外，我还深入研究过密友们身上发生的鬼魅幻影案。关于最后一点我有必要声明一下，受害人（一位女士）本人和我关系疏远，甚至可以说是毫无瓜葛。那件事的错误假设为我自己的案件提供了部分解释——不过只是部分——因为整件事是完全没有根据的，不能说明我天生就具有某种超能力，况且之前和之后也从没有经历过类似事情。

同时这也没有影射那桩英格兰谋杀案的意思，不记得是很多年还是好几年前了，总之当时那件案子可谓举世关注。这些年我们相继听过不少臭名昭著的谋杀犯，但如果可以，我想彻底埋葬关于那个暴徒的记忆，就像他的身躯被埋进新门监狱 [11] 地下一样。接下来的讲述中，我会尽量避免透露有关罪犯身份的直接线索。

谋杀案刚发现的时候，还没有人怀疑他——我不能说得太详细，应该说——这名后来入狱的犯人身上还没有任何公开的嫌疑。当时，由于各大报纸并没有对其进行报道，很显然，人们不可能从报纸上读到任何有关他的描述。记住这一点很关键。

我一边吃着早餐，一边翻看晨报，上面对这个谋杀案进行了首次曝光。我饶有兴致地细细读了两三遍。尸体是在卧室发现的，读到这里我放下报纸，突然眼前闪过——划过——流过——不知道应该叫什么，暂时还没找到恰当的词，总之就是我似乎看到那个卧室正穿过自

己的房子，就像是画在流水上的一幅画。虽然是一闪而过，但是清晰可见，甚至在我清楚地看到床上没有尸体后，心里还有一丝庆幸。

这种奇妙感觉不是在什么温柔乡产生的，而是在皮卡迪利大街的套间里，紧邻着圣詹姆斯街道的拐角。对此时窝在安乐椅里的我来说，这个案子相当新奇，除了奇妙外还伴有一丝古怪的战栗，让椅子都晃起来。（不过有必要说明椅子下面本来就很滑。）我走到一扇窗旁（房间在二层，有两扇窗），俯视皮卡迪利大街上的车水马龙，放松眼睛。明亮的秋日上午，大街在阳光照耀下熠熠生光，一切都显得愉悦惬意。秋风正劲，从邻近公园裹挟来大量落叶，一阵疾吹之下，只见叶子打着旋儿翻飞上升，形成小圆柱。恍然间，柱子又轰然倒塌，叶片四散。这时我看见马路对面有两个人，一前一后自西向东走去。前面的人时不时扭头往后看，后面的人跟他隔了约三十步，气势汹汹地举着右手。首先，在人来人往的大道上，这持续的怪异举动本身就吸引了我。接着我发现，如此不同寻常的情况，竟然没有任何人注意到。他们在行人间穿梭自如，丝毫不像走在人行道上。目之所及，没有一个人给他们让路、碰到他们或者多看他们一眼。从我窗前走过时，他们还都抬头凝视着我。我也认清了这两张脸，估计到哪儿都不会忘了，他们脸上倒没什么突出特征值得注意，只不过前面那个人一脸苦相，后面那位则面色蜡黄，一脸阴沉。

我是个单身汉，身边只有一名贴身男仆和他妻子跟着。我目前在一所银行分行工作，作为部门主管，我本希望这个职位和人们想的一样轻松。那个秋天，上面安排我待在城里，以防有任何变动。我没有生病，但也不算健康。本篇中，读者将会最大程度地感受到我的厌倦情绪，体会到我对单调乏味生活的失望，甚至还“有点消化不良 [12]”。给我看病的那位名医说，我的身体没什么大毛病，在我的要求之下，他写了一份纸质说明给我，我在这里只是引用他的原话。

随着谋杀案的调查逐渐展开，案情日益披露，公众也越来越关心。不过我尽量不去管这些事，不让自己陷入普遍的兴奋情绪。但据我所知，目前已经断定这是一场蓄意谋杀，并且嫌疑犯也已被押送至新门监狱，等候审判。我还知道，由于惯常的偏见和准备辩护所需的时间不够，定于伦敦中央刑事法院的审判被推迟了数个会期。我基本已经猜出，案件会具体推到什么时候开庭，但又觉得自己不知道。

我的客厅、卧室和更衣室都在同一层，更衣室只能从卧室过去。以前更衣室里确实有扇小门通向楼梯，不过多年前浴室重修，就把那里堵上了。当时装修工还顺手把门钉牢，盖上了帆布。

有天深夜，我正站在卧室里，趁仆人睡前吩咐他一些事情。我的脸正对着通向更衣室唯一的那扇门，当时门紧闭着，仆人背对着听我说话。就在此时，我看见门突然开了，一个男人探头朝这边看，还向

我招手，表情严肃而神秘。这个人正是在皮卡迪利大街上后面走着的那位，面色蜡黄，一脸阴沉。

打完招呼后他就退回去，关上了门。我略微怔住，赶紧穿过卧室，打开更衣室房门朝里看。我手上举着点燃的蜡烛，心里倒也不指望真能在更衣室看见那个身形。果然，最后什么也没看到。

想起来仆人还震惊在原地，我转身说：“德里克，你相信吗，我刚才十分清醒地看到了一个——”我刚把手放到他胸膛上，他突然猛烈颤抖起来，说：“噢，天哪，是的，先生！一个死人在招手！”

此时我意识到，眼前这个忠心耿耿跟了我二十多年的约翰·德里克，在我触碰到他之前，其实什么都没有看见，也什么都不知道。他身上的变化实在太过剧烈，我们接触时，我明显感觉到他通过某种神秘的方式，在一瞬间吸取了我的意识，从而得出现在的结论。

我让德里克去取白兰地酒来，给他和自己都倒了点，对于之前发生的事却只字未提。后来我细细回想了一番，可以肯定的是，除了在皮卡迪利大街，自己与这个人从未谋面。对比他在门边招手和在街上抬头凝视时的神情，我明白了：第一次他是要在我脑中留下印象，第二次他是想确认我能够迅速地记住他。

那晚，尽管有一种难以解释的确切预感——知道他不会再回来，我仍然睡得不安稳，天亮时才陷入沉沉睡梦。后来我是被约翰·德里克叫醒的，他来到床边，手里攥着一张纸。

依稀中正是因为这张纸，来者和仆人在门口好一顿争吵。这是一张传票，传唤我去老贝利街参加中央刑事法院的近期开庭。约翰·德里克很清楚我以前从未参加过陪审团，也认为——我不清楚是现在推理得出的还是什么其他方式——陪审团成员的身份通常要比我低，所以一开始婉拒了。传票人却态度倨傲，公事公办，说我去还是不去对他都没有影响，传票就在这里，怎么处理后果自负，与他无关。

一两天过去了，我还没想好到底是回复传票，还是直接无视。我自问心中不存丝毫的奇怪偏见，也没受到什么影响或诱惑，不会偏向于哪一方。说出这样的话，我问心无愧，和自己在这一里说的每一句话一样肯定。不过最终我还是决定前去，就当是乏味生活里的一点调剂好了。

约定的那天到来的时候已是十一月，上午出门，天气阴冷。皮卡迪利大街雾气浓重，雾色由棕转黑，在圣殿关 [\[13\]](#) 附近显得格外压抑。而在法院大楼内，煤气灯照得过道和楼梯灯火通明，整个法院也显得亮堂堂的。我觉得，在我跟着引导官员进入法院见到满堂听众前，我根本不知道那个谋杀犯是今天受审。我觉得，要不是他们费了老大劲才带我挤进这里，估计我也不会知道拿着这张传票到底应该进

哪个门。但是我说这话也不十分肯定，因为当时我对大脑所做的这个判断并不是很满意。

我在陪审团的预备席落座，尽力环顾四周，让视线穿过雾气和人们呼出气体的浓密混合物质。我看到巨大窗玻璃外的黑雾像是积满灰尘的窗帘，听到车轮压过稻草发出闷响，又或是鞣料洒落街道的窸窣，同时伴有人群逐渐聚拢的嗡嗡声，刺耳的哨音或响亮的歌声、喊声偶尔也会突兀地划过耳畔。不久，两位大法官进来坐下，法庭内原先的嗡嗡耳语迅速消寂，众人目光都集中在被带上来的谋杀犯身上。他出现在被告席栅栏后的一刹那，我就认出来了：他是走在皮卡迪利大街上的前者。

如果当时就点名，我可能会惊愕到说不出话。不过好在陪审团里我坐在大概第六、第八的位置，等轮到我时已经缓过来了。“到！”现在，注意了。囚犯之前一直密切却冷漠地注视着每一位陪审员，而就在我踏进陪审席时，他突然变得非常激动，还朝自己的律师打手势，针对我的意思再明显不过了。他强烈反对我就任陪审，闹得不得不暂时休庭。休庭时，辩护律师一只手搭在被告席上与他小声交谈，还不断摇头。后来我向这位绅士打听，他说客户的第一句话就吓到他了。“不惜任何代价，反对那个人！”不过，由于囚犯本人不愿意做任何解释，也承认在我被叫到之前，他从来没有听说过我，所以最终他还是没有如愿以偿。

我不希望唤起任何关于谋杀犯的不快记忆，这一点已经说过，再加上详细说明他的漫长审判过程之于整体叙述而言又并非不可或缺，因此，我准备根据极不寻常的个人经历，谈谈陪审团成员共同度过的十天十夜。这些事估计要比谋杀犯更吸引读者，希望大家关注它们，而不只是《新门记事》^[14]上那一纸故事。

我被选为陪审团团长。审判的第二天，取证就花了两小时（我亲耳听见教堂的钟敲了两次）。不经意间，我瞥了瞥陪审团的同人们，发现很难数清他们的人数。我来回回点了好几遍，始终有一种说不清道不明的困难，简而言之，总觉得多了一个人。

我拍拍邻座的同事，悄声说：“帮我点点人数。”听到这个请求他有些惊讶，但是很快扭头开始清点。“为什么，”他突然说，“一共十三——，但是不，不可能。不会，我们一共十二人啊。”

根据我当天的清点，具体到每个人都没有问题，但是总的来看时又显得多了一个。那时还什么都没有发生——没有任何人物出现——来解答我内心的困惑，但是我有预感，有东西一定会来。

陪审团都住在伦敦酒馆的一间大客房里，有各自的床位，始终受人看护，并且被监视着，尽管那个官员发誓他只是来保障我们安全

的。他聪明机警，很有礼貌，乐于助人，同时（我很高兴听说）他在伦敦城也是颇受尊敬的人物，不仅相貌堂堂，眼睛炯炯有神，还有着令人艳羡的黑络腮胡，甚至连嗓音也洪亮悦耳。我觉得这里倒没有必要隐去他的姓名，他叫哈克。

晚上，当我们各自回到床上时，哈克先生的床就会被拉过来横在门口。第二天夜里，我尚无困意，看到哈克先生坐在他的床边，就过去也坐下来，递了一口鼻烟。就在从我手里接过鼻烟盒开始吸烟时，他突然诡异地哆嗦了一下，说：“那是谁！”

我顺着他的目光望去，视线越过房间，看见意料之中的那个人——皮卡迪利大街上的后者。我嗖地站起来，向前跑了好几步，接着停下来，回头看向哈克先生。只见他一脸漫不经心，哈哈大笑，愉快地说：“有一瞬间我还以为出现第十三位没有床的陪审员了，定睛一看只是月光而已呀。”

我没有和哈克先生解释，只是邀请他一起走到房间那头，并且始终注视着眼前的那个身影。他在其他十一位成员床边枕头的位置分别伫立了一会儿，每次都是到床的右边，走到下一张床的床尾时总会闪一下。从他头的位置来看，好像他只是忧郁地看着每个躺下休息的陪审员，根本没注意到我和我的床，尽管我的床离哈克先生最近。接着，他从月光照进来的位置飘然出去，穿过高大的窗玻璃，仿佛踏上了空中步梯一般离开。

次日早餐时，我才知道，昨夜大家好像都不约而同地梦到了被谋杀的死者，除了我和哈克先生。

到此时我已经确信，走在皮卡迪利大街上的第二个人（应该）就是死者，他身体力行的证词已经深深扎根在我的脑海。不过在此之后，还是发生了让我不知所措的一些事。

审判的第五天，当检方陈述接近尾声，一个死者的袖珍画像作为证据被呈上来。这个画像本应在死者的床头，但是在案发现场却不见了踪影，之后它又出现在另一个据目击者称是谋杀犯埋尸的隐秘地点。目击者检查确认后，这项证物上呈给法官，继而交由陪审团。当一位穿着黑袍的官员拿着袖珍像朝我走来时，皮卡迪利大街上第二个人的身影突然自人群中冲出，他从官员手里夺走袖珍像，亲自交到我手上。因为画像在小盒子里，我还没看到画像，就听见他低沉空洞的声音飘来——“我当时还很年轻，脸上也没这么煞白。”这声音在我传给下一个陪审员的时候又出现了，等他传给他身边的另一位时再次响起，就这样每传到下一个人，这话就响起一遍，直到最后，画像又回到了我手里。而其他所有人好像对此都毫无察觉。

陪审团用餐通常都在一处，由哈克先生监管。打第一天开始，我

们就会很自然地在饭桌上讨论起当日案情进展。到第五天时，原告方的案情陈述已经结束，陪审团已经从这一角度了解到事件全貌，讨论自然更加热烈，也更为严肃 [15]。陪审团中有一位教区代表——我所见过的最愚蠢的白痴——他以非常荒谬的理由否决了最简单确凿的证据，还有两个优柔寡断的教区跟屁虫也支持他。他们三人都是从一个区被选进来的，那个区的治安简直一团糟，我敢说光他们那里的谋杀案审判估计就不下五百起。就在这些笨蛋家伙愈吵愈凶时，我又看到了那个死者，当时已临近午夜，我们中一些人已准备休息了。他阴森森地站在他们身后，朝我挥手。我一走到陪审员中间加入讨论，他就消失了。打那以后，他便时常出现，在我们被关着的这个大房间里来回飘荡。每当同事们把脑袋凑到一起商议时，我就看见他的脑袋也从中间冒出来。每当他们比较分析的内容于他不利时，他就会情不自禁地向我招手，表情一脸严肃。

不过你们要记住，直到审判的第五天，那个袖珍画像出现之前，他可从未在法庭显形。随着案件进入到辩护阶段，有三点变化出现了。我先说其中两点吧。首先，死者的身影如今频频出现在法庭上，再也不对着我，而总是向着正在发言的人。比如，死者的喉咙曾被人切断，辩方一开始就指出他很有可能是自己割喉而亡。这时，死者飘到说话人肘边，打开他恐怖的断喉部位（之前藏起来了），任凭支气管在空中交叉晃动，左右手还交替比画，奋力向律师展示，不论哪只手都不可能造成这种伤口。还有一次，有位女性作为品德证人出庭，宣誓说嫌犯是这世上最亲切友善的人。死者立即抵在她的面前，凑上去死命瞪她，还伸出手臂，用手指着犯人阴邪的面孔。

又耐心的人，他也跟了出去，等到料理好一切，才回来坐好，稳住自己，开始宣读总结陈词。这时死者从法官走进来的门飘入，直接到他桌旁，站在他身后急切地看笔录。法官大人正要翻页，突然脸色陡变，手也僵住，只见熟悉的一阵战栗传遍全身。他结结巴巴地说：“抱歉各位请稍等，不知怎的我被这污浊的空气弄魔怔了。”他端起杯子喝下一整杯水，才缓过来。

自打袖珍画像出现直到结案，死者再也没有看我一眼。陪审团在深夜十点还差七分钟的时候，退庭回去商议。由于教区代表和他的两个跟班太过蠢笨，又添了不少麻烦，以至于我们两次回法庭请求重读法官的部分笔录。我们九个人认为这些笔录一点儿问题都没有，随便从法庭上拽一个人估计他都会这么觉得。可那白痴三人组什么都不懂，就知道添乱，一直怀疑反对。我们争论了好久，才说服他们，于是陪审团在十二点十分重返法庭。

此时，死者站在陪审团坐席的正对面，法庭的另一边。待我入座，他十分刻意地盯着我看，然后似乎还比较满意，悠悠地拿起搭在手臂上的灰色大面纱——此前他从来没有戴过——盖住自己的头和整个身子。我宣读裁定时，讲到“判定有罪”，那纱巾一下掉在了地上，里面什么都没有了，他原先所在之处此时空空如也。

依照惯例，法官询问谋杀犯在宣布死刑之前他还有没有话要说，犯人含糊地嘟囔了一番。第二天，各大主要报纸都对此进行了报道，并形容这番话为“有点冗长混乱、不合逻辑、含糊不清的话，显然是为了抱怨自己受到不公，因为觉得陪审团团长早就对他心存偏见”。实际上，他那番不同寻常的说辞如下：“大人，我一看到陪审团团长就座，就知道自己完蛋了。法官阁下，他一定不会放过我的，因为我还没被抓的时候，有一天晚上，他就不知道怎的来到床边，把我叫醒，还要拿绳子勒死我。”

‘The monstrous

To Be Read at Dusk

One, two, three, four, five. There were five of them.

Five couriers, sitting on a bench outside the convent on the summit of the Great St Bernard in Switzerland, looking at the remote heights, stained by the setting sun, as if a mighty quantity of red wine had been broached upon the mountain top, and had not yet had time to sink into the snow.

This is not my simile. It was made for the occasion by the stoutest courier, who was a German. None of the others took any more notice of it than they took of me, sitting on another bench on the other side of the convent door, smoking my cigar, like them, and - also like them - looking at the reddened snow, and at the lonely shed hard by, where the bodies of belated travellers, dug out of it, slowly wither away, knowing no corruption in that cold region.

The wine upon the mountain top soaked in as we looked; the mountain became white; the sky, a very dark blue; the wind rose; and the air turned piercing cold. The five couriers buttoned their rough coats. There being no safer man to imitate in all such proceedings than a courier, I buttoned mine.

The mountain in the sunset had stopped the five couriers in a conversation. It is a sublime sight, likely to stop conversation. The mountain being now out of the sunset, they resumed. Not that I had heard any part of their previous discourse; for, indeed, I had not then broken away from the American gentleman, in the travellers' parlour of the convent, who, sitting with his face to the fire, had undertaken to realize to me the whole progress of events which had led to the accumulation by the Honourable Ananias Dodger of one of the largest acquisitions of dollars ever made in our country.

'My God!' said the Swiss courier, speaking in French, which I do not hold (as some authors appear to do) to be such an all-sufficient excuse for a naughty word, that I have only to write it in that language to make it innocent; 'if you talk of ghosts - '

'But I don't talk of ghosts,' said the German.

'Of what then?' asked the Swiss.

'If I knew of what then,' said the German, 'I should probably know a great deal more.'

It was a good answer, I thought, and it made me curious. So, I moved my position to that corner of my bench which was nearest to them, and leaning my back against the convent-wall, heard perfectly, without appearing to attend.

'Thunder and lightning!' said the German, warming, 'when a certain man is coming to see you, unexpectedly; and, without his own knowledge, sends some invisible messenger, to put the idea of him in your head all day, what do you call that? When you walk along a crowded street - at Frankfort, Milan, London, Paris - and think that a passing stranger is like your friend Heinrich, and then that another passing stranger is like your friend Heinrich, and so begin to have a strange foreknowledge that presently you'll meet your friend Heinrich - which you do, though you believed him at Trieste - what do you call that ?'

'It's not uncommon either,' murmured the Swiss and the other three.

'Uncommon!' said the German. 'It's as common as cherries in the Black Forest. It's as common as macaroni at Naples. And Naples reminds me! When the old Marchesa Senzanima shrieks at a card party on the Chiaja - as I heard and saw her, for it happened in a Bavarian family of mine, and I was overlooking the service that evening - I say, when the old Marchesa starts up at the card-table, white through her rouge, and cries, "My sister in Spain is dead! I felt her cold touch on my back!" - and when that sister is dead at the moment - what do you call that?'

'Or when the blood of San Gennaro liquefies at the request of the clergy - as all the world knows that it does regularly once a-year, in my native city,' said the Neapolitan courier after a pause, with a comical look, 'what do you call that?'

'That! ' cried the German. 'Well! I think I know a name for that.'

‘Miracle?’ said the Neapolitan, with the same sly face.

The German merely smoked and laughed; and they all smoked and laughed.

‘Bah!’ said the German, presently. ‘I speak of things that really do happen. When I want to see the conjurer, I pay to see a professed one, and have my money’s worth. Very strange things do happen without ghosts. Ghosts! Gio-vanni Baptista, tell your story of the English bride. There’s no ghost in that, but something full as strange. Will any man tell me what?’

As there was a silence among them, I glanced around. He whom I took to be Baptista was lighting a fresh cigar. He presently went on to speak. He was a Genoese, as I judged.

‘The story of the English bride?’ said he. ‘Basta! one ought not to call so slight a thing a story. Well, it’s all one. But it’s true. Observe me well, gentlemen, it’s true. That which glitters is not always gold; but what I am going to tell, is true.’

He repeated this more than once.

Ten years ago, I took my credentials to an English gentleman at Long’s Hotel, in Bond Street, London, who was about to travel - it might be for one year, it might be for two. He approved of them; likewise of me. He was pleased to make inquiry. The testimony that he received was favourable. He engaged me by the six months, and my entertainment was generous.

He was young, handsome, very happy. He was enamoured of a fair young English lady, with a sufficient fortune, and they were going to be married. It was the wedding trip, in short, that we were going to take. For three months’ rest in the hot weather (it was early summer then) he had hired an old palace on the Riviera, at an easy distance from my city, Genoa, on the road to Nice. Did I know that palace? Yes; I told him I knew it well. It was an old palace, with great gardens. It was a little bare, and it was a little dark and gloomy, being close surrounded by trees; but it was spacious, ancient, grand, and on the sea shore. He said it had been so described to him exactly, and he was well pleased that I knew it. For its being a little bare of furniture, all such places were. For its being a little gloomy, he had hired it principally for the gardens, and he and my mistress would pass the summer weather in their shade.

‘So all goes well, Baptista?’ said he.

We had a travelling chariot for our journey, newly built for us, and in all respects complete. All we had was complete; we wanted for nothing. The marriage took place. They were happy. I was happy, seeing all so bright, being so well situated, going to my own city, teaching my language in the rumble to the maid, la bella Carolina, whose heart was gay with laughter : who was young and rosy.

The time flew. But I observed-listen to this, I pray! (and here the courier dropped his voice) - I observed my mistress sometimes brooding in a manner very strange; in a frightened manner; in an unhappy manner; with a cloudy, uncertain alarm upon her. I think that I began to notice this when I was walking up hills by the carriage side, and master had gone on in front. At any rate, I remember that it impressed itself upon my mind one evening in the South of France, when she called to me to call master back; and when he came back, and walked for a long way, talking encouragingly and affectionately to her, with his hand upon the open window, and hers in it. Now and then, he laughed in a merry way, as if he were bantering her out of something. By and by, she laughed, and then all went well again.

It was curious. I asked la bella Carolina, the pretty little one, Was mistress unwell? - No. Out of spirits? - No. Fearful of bad roads, or brigands? - No. And what made it more mysterious was, the pretty little one would not look at me in giving answer, but would look at the view.

But, one day she told me the secret.

‘If you must know,’ said Carolina, ‘I find, from what I have overheard, that mistress is haunted.’

‘How haunted?’

‘By a dream.’

‘What dream?’

‘By a dream of a face. For three nights before her marriage, she saw a face in a dream - always the same face, and only One.'

'A terrible face?'

'No. The face of a dark, remarkable-looking man, in black, with black hair and a grey moustache - a hand - some man, except for a reserved and secret air. Not a face she ever saw, or at all like a face she ever saw. Doing nothing in the dream but looking at her fixedly, out of darkness.'

'Does the dream come back?'

'Never. The recollection of it, is all her trouble.'

'And why does it trouble her?'

Carolina shook her head.

'That's master's question,' said la bella. 'She don't know. She wonders why, herself. But I heard her tell him, only last night, that if she was to find a picture of that face in our Italian house (which she is afraid she will) , she did not know how she could ever bear it.'

Upon my word I was fearful after this (said the Geno-ese courier) of our coming to the old palazzo, lest some such ill-starred picture should happen to be there. I knew there were many there; and, as we got nearer and nearer to the place, I wished the whole gallery in the crater of Vesuvius. To mend the matter, it was a stormy dismal evening when we, at last, approached that part of the Riviera. It thundered; and the thunder of my city and its environs, rolling among the high hills, is very loud. The lizards ran in and out of the chinks in the broken stone wall of the garden, as if they were frightened; the frogs bubbled and croaked their loudest; the sea-wind moaned, and the wet trees dripped; and the lightning - body of San Lorenzo, how it lightened!

We all know what an old palazzo in or near Genoa is - how time and the sea air have blotted it - how the drapery painted on the outer walls has peeled off in great flakes of plaster-how the lower windows are darkened with rusty bars of iron - how the courtyard is overgrown with grass-how the outer buildings are dilapidated - how the whole pile seems devoted to ruin. Our palazzo was one of the true kind. It had been shut up close for months. Months? - years! It had an earthy smell, like a tomb. The scent of the orange-trees on the broad back terrace, and of the lemons ripening on the wall, and of some shrubs that grew around a broken fountain, had got into the house somehow, and had never been able to get out again. There it was, in every room, an aged smell, grown faint with confinement. It pined in all the cup-boards and drawers. In the little rooms of communication between great rooms, it was stifling. If you turned a picture - to come back to the pictures - there it still was, clinging to the wall behind the frame, like a sort of bat.

The lattice-blinds were close shut, all over the house. There were two ugly grey old women in the house, to take care of it; one of them with a spindle, who stood winding and mumbling in the doorway, and who would as soon have let in the devil as the air. Master, mistress, la bella Carolina, and I, went all through the palazzo. I went first, though I have named myself last, opening the windows and the lattice-blinds, and shaking down on myself splashes of rain, and scraps of mortar, and now and then a dozing mosquito, or a monstrous, fat, blotchy, Genoese spider.

When I had let the evening light into a room, master, mistress, and la bella Carolina, entered. Then, we looked round at all the pictures, and I went forward again into another room. Mistress secretly had great fear of meeting with the likeness of that face - we all had; but there was no such thing. The Madonna and Bambino, San Fran-cisco, San Sebastiano, Venus, Santa Caterina, Angels, Brigands, Friars, Temples at Sunset, Battles, White Horses, Forests, Apostles, Doges, all my old acquaint-ance many times repeated? - yes. Dark handsome man in black, reserved and secret, with black hair and grey moustache, looking fixedly at mistress out of darkness? - no.

At last we got through all the rooms and all the pictures, and came out into the gardens. They were pretty well kept, being rented by a gardener, and were large and shady. In one place, there was a rustic theatre, open to the sky, the stage a green slope : the coulisses, three entrances upon a side, sweet-smelling leafy screens. Mistress moved her bright eyes, even there, as if she looked to see the face come in upon the scene : but all was well.

‘Now Clara,’ master said, in a low voice, ‘you see that it is nothing? You are happy.’

Mistress was much encouraged. She soon accustomed herself to that grim palazzo, and would sing, and play the harp, and copy the old pictures, and stroll with mas-ter under the green trees and vines, all day. She was beautiful. He was happy. He would laugh and say to me, mounting his horse for his morning ride before the heat :

‘All goes well, Baptista!’

‘Yes, signore, thank God; very well!’

We kept no company. I took la bella to the Duomo and Annunciata, to the Café, to the Opera, to the village Festa, to the Public Garden, to the Day Theatre, to the Marionetti. The pretty little one was charmed with all she saw. She learnt Italian - heavens! miraculously! Was mistress quite forgetful of that dream? I asked Carolina sometimes. Nearly, said la bella - almost. It was wear-ing out.

One day master received a letter, and called me.

‘Baptista!’

‘Signore.’

‘A gentleman who is presented to me will dine here today. He is called the Signor Dellombra. Let me dine like a prince.’

It was an odd name. I did not know that name. But, there had been many noblemen and gentlemen pursued by Austria on political suspicions, lately, and some names had changed. Perhaps this was one. Altro! Dellombra was as good a name to me as another.

When the Signor Dellombra came to dinner (said the Genoese courier in the low voice, into which he had subsided once before) , I showed him into the reception-room, the great sala of the old palazzo. Master received him with cordiality, and presented him to mis-tress. As she rose, her face changed, she gave a cry, and fell upon the marble floor.

Then, I turned my head to the Signor Dellombra, and saw that he was dressed in black, and had a reserved and secret air, and was a dark remarkable-looking man, with black hair and a grey moustache.

Master raised mistress in his arms, and carried her to her own room, where I sent la bella Carolina straight. La bella told me afterwards that mistress was nearly terrified to death, and that she wandered in her mind about her dream, all night.

Master was vexed and anxious-almost angry, and yet full of solicitude. The Signor Dellombra was a courtly gentleman, and spoke with great respect and sympathy of mistress's being so ill. The African wind had been blowing for some days (they had told him at his Hôtel of the Maltese Cross), and he knew that it was often hurtful. He hoped the beautiful lady would recover soon. He begged permission to retire, and to renew his visit when he should have the happiness of hearing that she was better. Master would not allow of this, and they dined alone.

He withdrew early. Next day he called at the gate, on horseback, to inquire for mistress. He did so two or three times in that week.

What I observed myself, and what la bella Carolina told me, united to explain to me that master had now set his mind on curing mistress of her fanciful terror. He was all kindness, but he was sensible and firm. He reasoned with her, that to encourage such fancies was to invite melancholy, if not madness. That it rested with herself to be herself. That if she once resisted her strange weakness, so successfully as to receive the Signor Dellombra as an English lady would receive any other guest, it was for ever conquered. To make an end, the Signor came again, and mistress received him without marked distress (though with constraint and apprehension still), and the evening passed serenely. Master was so delighted with this change, and so anxious to confirm it, that the Signor Dellombra became a constant guest. He was accomplished in pictures, books, and music; and his society, in any grim palazzo, would have been welcome.

I used to notice, many times, that mistress was not quite recovered. She would cast down her eyes and droop her head, before the Signor Dellombra, or would look at him with a terrified and fascinated glance, as if his presence had some evil influence or power upon her. Turning from her to him, I used to see him in the shaded gardens, or the large half-lighted sala, looking, as I might say, 'fixedly upon her out of darkness'. But, truly, I had not forgotten la bella Carolina's words describing the face in the dream.

After his second visit I heard master say :

‘Now see, my dear Clara, it’s over! Dellombra has come and gone, and your apprehension is broken like glass.’

‘Will he - will he ever come again?’asked mistress.

‘Again? Why, surely, over and over again! Are you cold?’ (She shivered.)

‘No, dear - but - he terrifies me : are you sure that he need come again?’

‘The surer for the question, Clara!’replied master, cheerfully.

But, he was very hopeful of her complete recovery now, and grew more and more so every day. She was beautiful. He was happy.

‘All goes well, Baptista?’he would say to me again.

‘Yes, signore, thank God; very well.’

We were all (said the Genoese courier, constraining himself to speak a little louder) , we were all at Rome for the Carnival. I had been out, all day, with a Sicilian, a friend of mine and a courier, who was there with an Eng-lish family. As I returned at night to our hôtel, I met the little Carolina, who never stirred from home alone, run-ning distractedly along the Corso.

‘Carolina! What’s the matter?’

‘O Baptista! Oh, for the Lord’s sake! where is my mistress?’

‘Mistress, Carolina?’

‘Gone since morning - told me, when master went out on his day’s journey, not to call her, for she was tired with not resting in the night (having been in pain) , and would lie in bed until the evening; then get up refreshed. She is gone! - she is gone! Master has come back, broken down the door, and she is gone! My beautiful, my good, my innocent mistress!’

The pretty little one so cried, and raved, and tore herself, that I could not have held her, but for her swooning on my arm as if she had been shot. Master came up - in manner, face, or voice, no more the master that I knew, than I was he. He took me (I laid the little one upon her bed in the hôtel, and left her with the chamber-women) , in a carriage, furiously through the darkness, across the desolate Cam-pagna. When it was day, and we stopped at a miserable posthouse, all the horses had been hired twelve hours ago, and sent away in different directions. Mark me! - by the Signor Dellombra, who had passed there in a carriage, with a frightened English lady crouching in one corner.

I never heard (said the Genoese courier, drawing a long breath) that she was ever traced beyond that spot. All I know is, that she vanished into infamous oblivion, with the dreaded face beside her that she had seen in her dream.

‘What do you call that ?’ said the German courier, triumphantly : ‘Ghosts! There are no ghosts there ! What do you call this, that I am going to tell you? Ghosts! There are no ghosts here !’

I took an engagement once (pursued the German courier) with an English gentleman, elderly and a bachelor, to travel through my country, my Fatherland. He was a merchant who traded with my country and knew the language, but who had never been there since he was a boy - as I judge, some sixty years before.

His name was James, and he had a twin-brother John, also a bachelor. Between these brothers there was a great affection. They were in business together, at Goodman’s Fields, but they did not live together. Mr James dwelt in Poland Street, turning out of Oxford Street, London. Mr John resided by Epping Forest.

Mr James and I were to start for Germany in about a week. The exact day depended on business. Mr John came to Poland Street (where I was staying in the house) , to pass that week with Mr James. But, he said to his brother on the second day, ‘I don’t feel very well, James. There’s not much the matter with me; but I think I am a little gouty. I’ll go home and put myself under the care of my old housekeeper, who understands my ways. If I get quite better, I’ll come back and see you before you go. If I don’t feel well enough to resume my visit where I leave it off, why you will come and see me before you go.’Mr James, of course, said he would, and they shook hands - both hands, as they always did-and Mr John ordered out his old-fashioned chariot and rumbled home.

It was on the second night after that - that is to say, the fourth in the week - when I was awoke out of my sound sleep by Mr James coming into my bedroom in his flannel-gown, with a lighted candle. He sat upon the side of my bed, and looking at me, said :

‘Wilhelm, I have reason to think I have got some strange illness upon me.’

I then perceived that there was a very unusual expression in his face.

‘Wilhelm,’ said he, ‘I am not afraid or ashamed to tell you, what I might be afraid or ashamed to tell another man. You come from a sensible country, where mysterious things are inquired into, and are not settled to have been weighed and measured - or to have been unweighable and unmeasurable - or in either case to have been completely disposed of, for all time - ever so many years ago. I have just now seen the phantom of my brother.’

I confess (said the German courier) that it gave me a little tingling of the blood of hear it.

‘I have just now seen,’ Mr James repeated, looking full at me, that I might see how collected he was, ‘the phantom of my brother John. I was sitting up in bed, unable to sleep, when it came into my room, in a white dress, and, regarding me earnestly, passed up to the end of the room, glanced at some papers on my writing-desk, turned, and, still looking earnestly at me as it passed the bed, went out at the door. Now, I am not in the least mad, and am not in the least disposed to invest that phantom with any external existence out of myself. I think it is a warning to me that I am ill; and I think I had better be bled.’

I got out of bed directly (said the German courier) and began to get on my clothes, begging him not to be alarmed, and telling him that I would go myself to the doctor. I was just ready, when we heard a loud knocking and ringing at the street door. My room being an attic at the back, and Mr James’s being the second-floor room in the front, we went down to his room, and put up the window, to see what was the matter.

‘Is that Mr James?’ said a man below, falling back to the opposite side of the way to look up.

‘It is,’ said Mr James; ‘and you are my brother’s man, Robert.’

‘Yes, sir. I am sorry to say, sir, that Mr John is ill. He is very bad, sir. It is even feared that he may be lying at the point of death. He wants to see you, sir. I have a chaise here. Pray come to him. Pray lose no time.’

Mr James and I looked at one another. 'Wilhelm,' said he, 'this is strange. I wish you to come with me!' I helped him to dress, partly there and partly in the chaise; and no grass grew under the horses' iron shoes between Poland Street and the Forest.

Now, mind! (said the German courier). I went with Mr James into his brother's room, and I saw and heard myself what follows.

His brother lay upon his bed, at the upper end of a long bedchamber. His old housekeeper was there, and others were there : I think three others were there, if not four, and they had been with him since early in the after-noon. He was in white, like the figure - necessarily so, because he had his night-dress on. He looked like the figure - necessarily so, because he looked earnestly at his brother when he saw him come into the room.

But, when his brother reached the bedside, he slowly raised himself in bed, and looking full upon him, said these words :

'JAMES, YOU HAVE SEEN ME BEFORE, TO-NIGHT - AND YOU KNOW IT!'

And so died!

I waited, when the German courier ceased, to hear some-thing said of this strange story. The silence was unbroken. I looked round and the five couriers were gone : so noise-lessly that the ghostly mountain might have absorbed them into its eternal snows. By this time, I was by no means in a mood to sit alone in that awful scene, with the chill air coming solemnly upon me - or, if I may tell the truth, to sit alone anywhere. So I went back into the convent-parlour, and, finding the American gentleman still disposed to relate the biography of the Honourable Ananias Dodger, heard it all out.

Te Signalman

‘Halloa! Below there!’

When he heard a voice thus calling to him, he was stand-ing at the door of his box, with a flag in his hand, furred round its short pole. One would have thought, considering the nature of the ground, that he could not have doubted from what quarter the voice came; but, instead of looking up to where I stood on the top of the steep cutting nearly over his head, he turned himself about and looked down the Line. Tere was something remarkable in his manner of doing so, though I could not have said for my life, what. But, I know it was remarkable enough to attract my notice, even though his fgure was foreshortened and shadowed, down in the deep trench, and mine was high above him, so steeped in the glow of an angry sunset that I had shaded my eyes with my hand before I saw him at all.

‘Halloa! Below!’

From looking down the Line, he turned himself about again, and, raising his eyes, saw my fgure high above him.

‘Is there any path by which I can come down and speak to you?’

He looked up at me without replying, and I looked down at him without pressing him too soon with a repeti-tion of my idle question. Just then, there came a vague vibration in the earth and air, quickly changing into a violent pulsation, and an oncoming rush that caused me to start back, as though it had force to draw me down. Wen such vapour as rose to my height from this rapid train, had passed me and was skimming away over the landscape, I looked down again, and saw him re-furling the fag he had shown while the train went by.

I repeated my inquiry. After a pause, during which he seemed to regard me with fixed attention, he motioned with his rolled-up flag towards a point on my level, some two or three hundred yards distant. I called down to him, ‘All right!’ and made for that point.

There, by dint of looking closely about me, I found a rough zig-zag descend-ing path notched out : which I followed.

The cutting was extremely deep, and unusually pre-cipitate. It was made through a clammy stone that became oozier and wetter as I went down. For these reasons, I found the way long enough to give me time to recall a singular air of reluctance or compulsion with which he had pointed out the path.

When I came down low enough upon the zig-zag descent, to see him again, I saw that he was standing between the rails on the way by which the train had lately passed, in an attitude as if he were waiting for me to appear. He had his left hand at his chin, and that left elbow rested on his right hand crossed over his breast. His attitude was one of such expectation and watchfulness, that I stopped a moment, wondering at it.

I resumed my downward way, and, stepping out upon the level of the railroad and drawing nearer to him, saw that he was a dark sallow man, with a dark beard and rather heavy eyebrows. His post was in as solitary and dismal a place as ever I saw. On either side, a dripping-wet wall of jagged stone, excluding all view but a strip of sky; the per-spective one way, only a crooked prolongation of this great dungeon; the shorter perspective in the other direction, terminating in a gloomy red light, and the gloomier entrance to a black tunnel, in whose massive architecture there was a barbarous, depressing, and forbidding air. So little sun-light ever found its way to this spot, that it had an earthy deadly smell; and so much cold wind rushed through it, that it struck chill to me, as if I had left the natural world.

Before he stirred, I was near enough to him to have touched him. Not even then removing his eyes from mine, he stepped back one step, and lifted his hand.

Tis was a lonesome post to occupy (I said) , and it had riveted my attention when I looked down from up yonder. A visitor was a rarity, I should suppose; not an unwel-come rarity, I hoped? In me, he merely saw a man who had been shut up within narrow limits all his life, and who, being at last set free, had a newly awakened interest in these great works. To such purpose I spoke to him; but I am far from sure of the terms I used, for, besides that I am not happy in opening any conversation, there was something in the man that daunted me.

He directed a most curious look towards the red light near the tunnel's mouth, and looked all about it, as if something were missing from it, and then looked at me.

Tat light was part of his charge? Was it not?

He answered in a low voice : 'Don't you know it is?'

Te monstrous thought came into my mind as I perused the fixed eyes and the saturnine face, that this was a spirit, not a man. I have speculated since, whether there may have been infection in his mind.

In my turn, I stepped back. But in making the action, I detected in his eyes some latent fear of me. This put the monstrous thought to flight.

'You look at me,' I said, forcing a smile, 'as if you had a dread of me.'

'I was doubtful,' he returned, 'whether I had seen you before.'

'Where?'

He pointed to the red light he had looked at.

'There?' I said.

Intently watchful of me, he replied (but without sound) , Yes.

'My good fellow, what should I do there? However, be that as it may, I never was there, you may swear.'

'I think I may,' he rejoined. 'Yes. I am sure I may.'

His manner cleared, like my own. He replied to my remarks with readiness, and in well-chosen words. Had he much to do there? Yes; that was to say, he had enough responsibility to bear; but exactness and watchfulness were what was required of him, and of actual work - manual labour - he had next to none. To change that signal, to trim those lights, and to turn this iron handle now and then, was all he had to do under that head. Regarding those many long and lonely hours of which I seemed to make so much, he could only say that the routine of his life had shaped itself into that form, and he had grown used to it. He had taught himself a language down here - if only to know it by sight, and to have formed his own crude ideas of its pronunciation, could be called learning it. He had also worked at fractions and decimals, and tried a little algebra; but he was, and had been as a boy, a poor hand at figures. Was it necessary for him when on duty, always to remain in that channel of damp air, and could he never rise into the sunshine from between those high stone walls? Why, that depended upon times and circumstances. Under some conditions there would be less upon the Line than under others, and the same held good as to certain hours of the day and night. In bright weather, he did choose occasions for getting a little above these lower shadows; but, being at all times liable to be called by his electric bell, and at such times listening for it with redoubled anxiety, the relief was less than I would suppose.

He took me into his box, where there was a fire, a desk for an official book in which he had to make certain entries, a telegraphic instrument with its dial face and needles, and the little bell of which he had spoken. On my trusting that he would excuse the remark that he had been well educated, and (I hoped I might say without offence), perhaps educated above that station, he observed that instances of slight incongruity in such-wise would rarely be found wanting among large bodies of men; that he had heard it was so in workhouses, in the police force, even in that last desperate resource, the army; and that he knew it was so, more or less, in any great railway staff. He had been, when young (if I could believe it, sitting in that hut; he scarcely could), a student of natural philosophy, and had attended lectures; but he had run wild, misused his opportunities, gone down, and never risen again. He had no complaint to offer about that. He had made his bed, and he lay upon it. It was far too late to make another.

All that I have here condensed, he said in a quiet manner, with his grave dark regards divided between me and the fire. He threw in the word 'Sir', from time to time, and especially when he referred to his youth : as though to request me to understand that he claimed to be nothing but what I found him. He was several times interrupted by the little bell, and had to read off messages, and send replies. Once, he had to stand without the door, and display a flag as a train passed, and make some verbal communication to the driver. In the discharge of his duties I observed him to be remarkably exact and vigilant, breaking off his discourse at a syllable, and remaining silent until what he had to do was done.

In a word, I should have set this man down as one of the safest of men to be employed in that capacity, but for the circumstance that while he was speaking to me he twice broke off with a fallen colour, turned his face towards the little bell when it did NOT ring, opened the door of the hut (which was kept shut to exclude the unhealthy damp) , and looked out towards the red light near the mouth of the tunnel. On both of those occasions, he came back to the fire with the inexplicable air upon him which I had remarked, without being able to define, when we were so far asunder.

Said I when I rose to leave him : ‘You almost make me think that I have met with a contented man.’

(I am afraid I must acknowledge that I said it to lead him on.)

‘I believe I used to be so,’ he rejoined, in the low voice in which he had first spoken; ‘but I am troubled, sir, I am troubled.’

He would have recalled the words if he could. He had said them, however, and I took them up quickly.

‘With what? What is your trouble?’

‘It is very difficult to impart, sir. It is very, very difficult to speak of. If ever you make me another visit, I will try to tell you.’

‘But I expressly intend to make you another visit. Say, when shall it be?’

‘I go off early in the morning, and I shall be on again at ten to-morrow night, sir.’

‘I will come at eleven.’

He thanked me, and went out at the door with me. ‘I’ll show my white light, sir,’ he said, in his peculiar low voice, ‘till you have found the way up. When you have found it, don’t call out! And when you are at the top, don’t call out!’

His manner seemed to make the place strike colder to me, but I said no more than ‘Very well.’

‘And when you come down to-morrow night, don’t call out! Let me ask you a parting question. What made you cry “Halloa! Below there!” to-night?’

‘Heaven knows,’ said I. ‘I cried something to that effect - ’

‘Not to that effect, sir. Those were the very words. I know them well.’

‘Admit those were the very words. I said them, no doubt, because I saw you below.’

‘For no other reason?’

‘What other reason could I possibly have!’

‘You have no feeling that they were conveyed to you in any supernatural way?’

‘No.’

He wished me good night, and held up his light. I walked by the side of the down Line of rails (with a very disagreeable sensation of a train coming behind me) , until I found the path. It was easier to mount than to descend, and I got back to my inn without any adventure.

Punctual to my appointment, I placed my foot on the first notch of the zig-zag next night, as the distant clocks were striking eleven. He was waiting for me at the bot-tom, with his white light on. ‘I have not called out,’ I said, when we came close together; ‘may I speak now?’ ‘By all means, sir.’ ‘Good night then, and here’s my hand.’ ‘Good night, sir, and here’s mine.’ With that, we walked side by side to his box, entered it, closed the door, and sat down by the fire.

‘I have made up my mind, sir,’ he began, bending for-ward as soon as we were seated, and speaking in a tone but a little above a whisper, ‘that you shall not have to ask me twice what troubles me. I took you for some one else yesterday evening. That troubles me.’

‘That mistake?’

‘No. That some one else.’

‘Who is it?’

‘I don’t know.’

‘Like me?’

‘I don’t know. I never saw the face. The left arm is across the face, and the right arm is waved. Violently waved. This way.’

I followed his action with my eyes, and it was the action of an arm gesticulating with the utmost passion and vehemence : ‘For God’s sake clear the way!’

‘One moonlight night,’ said the man, ‘I was sitting here, when I heard a voice cry “Halloa! Below there!” I started up, looked from that door, and saw this Some one else standing by the red light near the tunnel, waving as I just now showed you. The voice seemed hoarse with shouting, and it cried, “Look out! Look out!” And then again “Halloa! Below there! Look out!” I caught up my lamp, turned it on red, and ran towards the figure, calling, “What’s wrong? What has happened? Where?” It stood just outside the blackness of the tunnel. I advanced so close upon it that I wondered at its keeping the sleeve across its eyes. I ran right up at it, and had my hand stretched out to pull the sleeve away, when it was gone.’

‘Into the tunnel,’ said I.

‘No. I ran on into the tunnel, five hundred yards. I stopped and held my lamp above my head, and saw the figures of the measured distance, and saw the wet stains stealing down the walls and trickling through the arch. I ran out again, faster than I had run in (for I had a mortal abhorrence of the place upon me), and I looked all round the red light with my own red light, and I went up the iron ladder to the gallery atop of it, and I came down again, and ran back here. I telegraphed both ways : “An alarm has been given. Is anything wrong?” The answer came back, both ways : “All well.”’

Resisting the slow touch of a frozen finger tracing out my spine, I showed him how that this figure must be a deception of his sense of sight, and how that figures, originating in disease of the delicate nerves that minister to the functions of the eye, were known to have often troubled patients, some of whom had become conscious of the nature of their affliction, and had even proved it by experiments upon themselves. ‘As to an imaginary cry,’ said I, ‘do but listen for a moment to the wind in this unnatural valley while we speak so low, and to the wild harp it makes of the telegraph wires!’

That was all very well, he returned, after we had sat listening for a while, and he ought to know something of the wind and the wires, he who so often passed long winter nights there, alone and watching. But he would beg to remark that he had not finished.

I asked his pardon, and he slowly added these words, touching my arm :

‘Within six hours after the Appearance, the memorable accident on this Line happened, and within ten hours the dead and wounded were brought along through the tunnel over the spot where the figure had stood.’

A disagreeable shudder crept over me, but I did my best against it. It was not to be denied, I rejoined, that this was a remarkable coincidence, calculated deeply to impress his mind. But, it was unquestionable that remarkable coincidences did continually occur, and they must be taken into account in dealing with such a subject. Tough to be sure I must admit, I added (for I thought I saw that he was going to bring the objection to bear upon me), men of common sense did not allow much for coincidences in making the ordinary calculations of life.

He again begged to remark that he had not finished.

I again begged his pardon for being betrayed into interruptions.

‘Tis,’ he said, again laying his hand upon my arm, and glancing over his shoulder with hollow eyes, ‘was just a year ago. Six or seven months passed, and I had recovered from the surprise and shock, when one morn-ing, as the day was breaking, I, standing at that door, looked towards the red light, and saw the spectre again.’He stopped, with a fixed look at me.

‘Did it cry out?’

‘No. It was silent.’

‘Did it wave its arm?’

‘No. It leaned against the shaft of the light, with both hands before the face. Like this.’

Once more, I followed his action with my eyes. It was an action of mourning. I have seen such an attitude in stone figures on tombs.

‘Did you go up to it?’

‘I came in and sat down, partly to collect my thoughts, partly because it had turned me faint. Wen I went to the door again, daylight was above me, and the ghost was gone.’

‘But nothing followed? Nothing came of this?’

He touched me on the arm with his forefinger twice or thrice, giving a ghastly nod each time :

‘Tat very day, as a train came out of the tunnel, I noticed, at a carriage window on my side, what looked like a confusion of hands and heads, and something waved. I saw it, just in time to signal the driver, Stop! He shut of, and put his brake on, but the train drifted past here a hundred and ffty yards or more. I ran after it, and, as I went along, heard terrible screams and cries. A beau-tiful young lady had died instantaneously in one of the compartments, and was brought in here, and laid down on this foor between us.’

Involuntarily, I pushed my chair back, as I looked from the boards at which he pointed, to himself.

‘True, sir. True. Precisely as it happened, so I tell it you.’

I could think of nothing to say, to any purpose, and my mouth was very dry. The wind and the wires took up the story with a long lamenting wail.

He resumed. ‘Now, sir, mark this, and judge how my mind is troubled. The spectre came back, a week ago. Ever since, it has been there, now and again, by fits and starts.’

‘At the light?’

‘At the Danger-light.’

‘What does it seem to do?’

He repeated, if possible with increased passion and vehemence, that former gesticulation of ‘For God’s sake clear the way!’

Then, he went on. ‘I have no peace or rest for it. It calls to me, for many minutes together, in an agonized man-ner, “Below there! Look out! Look out!” It stands waving to me. It rings my little bell - ,

I caught at that. ‘Did it ring your bell yesterday evening when I was here, and you went to the door?’

‘Twice.’

‘Why, see,’ said I, ‘how your imagination misleads you. My eyes were on the bell, and my ears were open to the bell, and if I am a living man, it did NOT ring at those times. No, nor at any other time, except when it was rung in the natural course of physical things by the station communicating with you.'

He shook his head. 'I have never made a mistake as to that, yet, sir. I have never confused the spectre's ring with the man's. The ghost's ring is a strange vibration in the bell that it derives from nothing else, and I have not asserted that the bell stirs to the eye. I don't wonder that you failed to hear it. But I heard it.'

'And did the spectre seem to be there, when you looked out?'

'It WAS there.'

'Both times?'

He repeated firmly : 'Both times.'

'Will you come to the door with me, and look for it now?'

He bit his under-lip as though he were somewhat unwilling, but arose. I opened the door, and stood on the step, while he stood in the doorway. There, was the Danger-light. There, was the dismal mouth of the tunnel. There, were the high wet stone walls of the cutting. There, were the stars above them.

'Do you see it?' I asked him, taking particular note of his face. His eyes were prominent and strained; but not very much more so, perhaps, than my own had been when I had directed them earnestly towards the same spot.

'No,' he answered. 'It is not there.'

'Agreed,' said I.

We went in again, shut the door, and resumed our seats. I was thinking how best to improve this advantage, if it might be called one, when he took up the conversation in such a matter of course way, so assuming that there could be no serious question of fact between us, that I felt myself in the weakest of positions.

'By this time you will fully understand, sir,' he said, 'that what troubles me so dreadfully, is the question, What does the spectre mean?'

I was not sure, I told him, that I did fully understand.

'What is its warning against?' he said, ruminating, with his eyes on the fire, and only by times turning them on me. 'What is the danger? Where is the danger? There is danger overhanging, somewhere on the Line. Some dreadful calamity will happen. It is not to be doubted this third time, after what has gone before. But surely this is a cruel haunting of me. What can I do!’

He pulled out his handkerchief, and wiped the drops from his heated forehead.

‘If I telegraph Danger, on either side of me, or on both, I can give no reason for it,’ he went on, wiping the palms of his hands. ‘I should get into trouble, and do no good. They would think I was mad. This is the way it would work : Message : “Danger! Take care!” Answer : “What Danger? Where?” Message : “Don’t know. But for God’s sake take care!” They would displace me. What else could they do?’

His pain of mind was most pitiable to see. It was the mental torture of a conscientious man, oppressed beyond endurance by an unintelligible responsibility involving life.

‘When it first stood under the Danger-light,’ he went on, putting his dark hair back from his head, and drawing his hands outward across and across his temples in an extremity of feverish distress, ‘why not tell me where that accident was to happen - if it must happen? Why not tell me how it could be averted - if it could have been averted? When on its second coming it hid its face, why not tell me instead : “She is going to die. Let them keep her at home”? If it came, on those two occasions, only to show me that its warnings were true, and so to prepare me for the third, why not warn me plainly now? And I, Lord help me! A mere poor signalman on this solitary station! Why not go to somebody with credit to be believed, and power to act!’

When I saw him in this state, I saw that for the poor man’s sake, as well as for the public safety, what I had to do for the time was, to compose his mind. Therefore, setting aside all question of reality or unreality between us, I represented to him that whoever thoroughly discharged his duty, must do well, and that at least it was his comfort that he understood his duty, though he did not understand these confounding Appearances. In this effort I succeeded far better than in the attempt to reason him out of his conviction. He became calm; the occupations incidental to his post as the night advanced, began to make larger demands on his attention; and I left him at two in the morning. I had offered to stay through the night, but he would not hear of it.

Tat I more than once looked back at the red light as I ascended the pathway, that I did not like the red light, and that I should have slept but poorly if my bed had been under it, I see no reason to conceal. Nor, did I like the two sequences of the accident and the dead girl. I see no reason to conceal that, either.

But, what ran most in my thoughts was the consideration how ought I to act, having become the recipient of this disclosure? I had proved the man to be intelligent, vigilant, painstaking, and exact; but how long might he remain so, in his state of mind? Tough in a subordinate position, still he held a most important trust, and would I (for instance) like to stake my own life on the chances of his continuing to execute it with precision?

Unable to overcome a feeling that there would be some-thing treacherous in my communicating what he had told me, to his superiors in the Company, without frst being plain with himself and proposing a middle course to him, I ultimately resolved to ofer to accompany him (otherwise keeping his secret for the present) to the wisest medical practitioner we could hear of in those parts, and to take his opinion. A change in his time of duty would come round next night, he had apprised me, and he would be of an hour or two after sunrise, and on again soon after sunset. I had appointed to return accordingly.

Next evening was a lovely evening, and I walked out early to enjoy it. Te sun was not yet quite down when I traversed the feld-path near the top of the deep cutting. I would extend my walk for an hour, I said to myself, half an hour on and half an hour back, and it would then be time to go to my signalman's box.

Before pursuing my stroll, I stepped to the brink, and mechanically looked down, from the point from which I had frst seen him. I cannot describe the thrill that seized upon me, when, close at the mouth of the tunnel, I saw the appearance of a man, with his left sleeve across his eyes, passionately waving his right arm.

The nameless horror that oppressed me, passed in a moment, for in a moment I saw that this appearance of a man was a man indeed, and that there was a little group of other men standing at a short distance, to whom he seemed to be rehearsing the gesture he made. The Danger-light was not yet lighted. Against its shaft, a little low hut, entirely new to me, had been made of some wooden supports and tarpaulin. It looked no bigger than a bed.

With an irresistible sense that something was wrong-with a flashing self-reproachful fear that fatal mischief had come of my leaving the man there, and causing no one to be sent to overlook or correct what he did - I descended the notched path with all the speed I could make.

‘What is the matter?’ I asked the men.

‘Signalman killed this morning, sir.’

‘Not the man belonging to that box?’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘Not the man I know?’

‘You will recognize him, sir, if you knew him,’ said the man who spoke for the others, solemnly uncovering his own head and raising an end of the tarpaulin, ‘for his face is quite composed.’

‘O! how did this happen, how did this happen?’ I asked, turning from one to another as the hut closed in again.

‘He was cut down by an engine, sir. No man in England knew his work better. But somehow he was not clear of the outer rail. It was just at broad day. He had struck the light, and had the lamp in his hand. As the engine came out of the tunnel, his back was towards her, and she cut him down. That man drove her, and was showing how it happened. Show the gentleman, Tom.’

The man, who wore a rough dark dress, stepped back to his former place at the mouth of the tunnel :

‘Coming round the curve in the tunnel, sir,’ he said, ‘I saw him at the end, like as if I saw him down a perspective-glass. There was no time to check speed, and I knew him to be very careful. As he didn’t seem to take heed of the whistle, I shut it off when we were running down upon him, and called to him as loud as I could call.’

‘What did you say?’

‘I said, Below there! Look out! Look out! For God’s sake clear the way!’

I started.

‘Ah! it was a dreadful time, sir. I never left off calling to him. I put this arm before my eyes, not to see, and I waved this arm to the last; but it was no use.’

Without prolonging the narrative to dwell on any one of its curious circumstances more than on any other, I may, in closing it, point out the coincidence that the warning of the Engine-Driver included, not only the words which the unfortunate Signaller had repeated to me as haunting him, but also the words which I myself - not he - had attached, and that only in my own mind, to the gesticulation he had imitated.

Te Trial for Murder

I have always noticed a prevalent want of courage, even among persons of superior intelligence and culture, as to imparting their own psychological experiences when those have been of a strange sort. Almost all men are afraid that what they could relate in such wise would find no parallel or response in a listener's internal life, and might be suspected or laughed at. A truthful traveller, who should have seen some extraordinary creature in the likeness of a sea-serpent, would have no fear of mentioning it; but the same traveller, having had some singular presentiment, impulse, vagary of thought, vision (so called) , dream, or other remarkable mental impression, would hesitate considerably before he would own to it. To this reticence I attribute much of the obscurity in which such subjects are involved. We do not habitually communicate our experiences of these subjective things as we do our experiences of objective creation. The consequence is, that the general stock of experience in this regard appears exceptional, and really is so, in respect of being miserably imperfect.

In what I am going to relate, I have no intention of setting up, opposing, or supporting any theory whatever. I know the history of the Bookseller of Berlin, I have studied the case of the wife of a late Astronomer Royal as related by Sir David Brewster, and I have followed the minutest details of a much more remarkable case of Spectral Illusion occurring within my private circle of friends. It may be necessary to state as to this last, that the sufferer (a lady) was in no degree, however distant, related to me. A mistaken assumption on that head might suggest an explanation of a part of my own case, - but only a part, - which would be wholly without foundation. It cannot be referred to my inheritance of any developed peculiarity, nor had I ever before any at all similar experience, nor have I ever had any at all similar experience since.

It does not signify how many years ago, or how few, a certain murder was committed in England, which attracted great attention. We hear more than enough of murderers as they rise in succession to their atrocious eminence, and I would bury the memory of this particular brute, if I could, as his body was buried, in Newgate Jail. I purposely abstain from giving any direct clew to the criminal's individuality.

When the murder was first discovered, no suspicion fell - or I ought rather to say, for I cannot be too precise in my facts, it was nowhere publicly hinted that any suspicion fell - on the man who was afterwards brought to trial. As no reference was at that time made to him in the newspapers, it is obviously impossible that any description of him can at that time have been given in the newspapers. It is essential that this fact be remembered.

Unfolding at breakfast my morning paper, containing the account of that first discovery, I found it to be deeply interesting, and I read it with close attention. I read it twice, if not three times. The discovery had been made in a bedroom, and, when I laid down the paper, I was aware of a flash - rush - flow - I do not know what to call it, - no word I can find is satisfactorily descriptive, - in which I seemed to see that bedroom passing through my room, like a picture impossibly painted on a running river. Though almost instantaneous in its passing, it was perfectly clear; so clear that I distinctly, and with a sense of relief, observed the absence of the dead body from the bed.

It was in no romantic place that I had this curious sensation, but in chambers in Piccadilly, very near to the corner of Saint James's Street. It was entirely new to me. I was in my easy-chair at the moment, and the sensation was accompanied with a peculiar shiver which started the chair from its position. (But it is to be noted that the chair ran easily on castors.) I went to one of the windows (there are two in the room, and the room is on the second floor) to refresh my eyes with the moving objects down in Piccadilly. It was a bright autumn morning, and the street was sparkling and cheerful. The wind was high. As I looked out, it brought down from the Park a quantity of fallen leaves, which a gust took, and whirled into a spiral pillar. As the pillar fell and the leaves dispersed, I saw two men on the opposite side of the way, going from West to East. They were one behind the other. The foremost man often looked back over his shoulder. The second man followed him, at a distance of some thirty paces, with his right hand menacingly raised. First, the singularity and steadiness of this threatening gesture in so public a thoroughfare attracted my attention; and next, the more remarkable circumstance that nobody heeded it. Both men threaded their way among the other passengers with a smoothness hardly consistent even with the action of walking on a pavement; and no single creature, that I could see, gave them place, touched them, or looked after them. In passing before my windows, they both stared up at me. I saw their two faces very distinctly, and I knew that I could recognize them anywhere. Not that I had consciously noticed anything very remarkable in either face, except that the man who went first had an unusually lowering appearance, and that the face of the man who followed him was of the colour of impure wax.

I am a bachelor, and my valet and his wife constitute my whole establishment. My occupation is in a certain Branch Bank, and I wish that my duties as head of a Department were as light as they are popularly supposed to be. They kept me in town that autumn, when I stood in need of change. I was not ill, but I was not well. My reader is to make the most that can be reasonably made of my feeling jaded, having a depressing sense upon me of a monotonous life, and being 'slightly dyspeptic.' I am assured by my renowned doctor that my real state of health at that time justifies no stronger description, and I quote his own from his written answer to my request for it.

As the circumstances of the murder, gradually unraveling, took stronger and stronger possession of the public mind, I kept them away from mine, by knowing as little about them as was possible in the midst of the universal excitement. But I knew that a verdict of Wilful Murder had been found against the suspected murderer, and that he had been committed to Newgate for trial. I also knew that his trial had been postponed over one Sessions of the Central Criminal Court, on the ground of general prejudice and want of time for the preparation of the defence. I may further have known, but I believe I did not, when, or about when, the Sessions to which his trial stood postponed would come on.

My sitting-room, bedroom, and dressing-room are all on one floor. With the last there is no communication but through the bedroom. True, there is a door in it, once communicating with the staircase; but a part of the fitting of my bath has been - and had then been for some years - fixed across it. At the same period, and as a part of the same arrangement, the door had been nailed up and canvassed over.

I was standing in my bedroom late one night, giving some directions to my servant before he went to bed. My face was towards the only available door of communication with the dressing-room, and it was closed. My servant's back was towards that door. While I was speaking to him, I saw it open, and a man look in, who very earnestly and mysteriously beckoned to me. That man was the man who had gone second of the two along Piccadilly, and whose face was of the colour of impure wax.

The figure, having beckoned, drew back, and closed the door. With no longer pause than was made by my crossing the bedroom, I opened the dressing-room door, and looked in. I had a lighted candle already in my hand. I felt no inward expectation of seeing the figure in the dressing-room, and I did not see it there.

Conscious that my servant stood amazed, I turned round to him, and said : 'Derrick, could you believe that in my cool senses I fancied I saw a - 'As I there laid my hand upon his breast, with a sudden start he trembled violently, and said, 'O Lord, yes, sir! A dead man beckoning!'

Now I do not believe that this John Derrick, my trusty and attached servant for more than twenty years, had any impression whatever of having seen any such figure, until I touched him. The change in him was so startling, when I touched him, that I fully believe he derived his impression in some occult manner from me at that instant.

I bade John Derrick bring some brandy, and I gave him a dram, and was glad to take one myself. Of what had preceded that night's phenomenon, I told him not a single word. Reflecting on it, I was absolutely certain that I had never seen that face before, except on the one occasion in Piccadilly. Comparing its expression when beckoning at the door with its expression when it had stared up at me as I stood at my window, I came to the conclusion that on the first occasion it had sought to fasten itself upon my memory, and that on the second occasion it had made sure of being immediately remembered.

I was not very comfortable that night, though I felt a certainty, difficult to explain, that the figure would not return. At daylight I fell into a heavy sleep, from which I was awakened by John Derrick's coming to my bedside with a paper in his hand.

This paper, it appeared, had been the subject of an altercation at the door between its bearer and my servant. It was a summons to me to serve upon a Jury at the forthcoming Sessions of the Central Criminal Court at the Old Bailey. I had never before been summoned on such a Jury, as John Derrick well knew. He believed - I am not certain at this hour whether with reason or otherwise - that that class of Jurors were customarily chosen on a lower qualification than mine, and he had at first refused to accept the summons. The man who served it had taken the matter very coolly. He had said that my attendance or non-attendance was nothing to him; there the summons was; and I should deal with it at my own peril, and not at his.

For a day or two I was undecided whether to respond to this call, or take no notice of it. I was not conscious of the slightest mysterious bias, influence, or attraction, one way or other. Of that I am as strictly sure as of every other statement that I make here. Ultimately I decided, as a break in the monotony of my life, that I would go.

The appointed morning was a raw morning in the month of November. There was a dense brown fog in Piccadilly, and it became positively black and in the last degree oppressive East of Temple Bar. I found the passages and staircases of the Court-House flaringly lighted with gas, and the Court itself similarly illuminated. I think that, until I was conducted by officers into the Old Court and saw its crowded state, I did not know that the Murderer was to be tried that day. I think that, until I was so helped into the Old Court with considerable difficulty, I did not know into which of the two Courts sitting my summons would take me. But this must not be received as a positive assertion, for I am not completely satisfied in my mind on either point.

I took my seat in the place appropriated to Jurors in waiting, and I looked about the Court as well as I could through the cloud of fog and breath that was heavy in it. I noticed the black vapor hanging like a murky curtain outside the great windows, and I noticed the stifled sound of wheels on the straw or tan that was littered in the street; also, the hum of the people gathered there, which a shrill whistle, or a louder song or hail than the rest, occasionally pierced. Soon afterwards the Judges, two in number, entered, and took their seats. The buzz in the Court was awfully hushed. The direction was given to put the Murderer to the bar. He appeared there. And in that same instant I recognized in him the first of the two men who had gone down Piccadilly.

If my name had been called then, I doubt if I could have answered to it audibly. But it was called about sixth or eighth in the panel, and I was by that time able to say, 'Here!' Now, observe. As I stepped into the box, the prisoner, who had been looking on attentively, but with no sign of concern, became violently agitated, and beckoned to his attorney. The prisoner's wish to challenge me was so manifest, that it occasioned a pause, during which the attorney, with his hand upon the dock, whispered with his client, and shook his head. I afterwards had it from that gentleman, that the prisoner's first afrighted words to him were. 'At all hazards, challenge that man!' But that, as he would give no reason for it, and admitted that he had not even known my name until he heard it called and I appeared, it was not done.

Both on the ground already explained, that I wish to avoid reviving the unwholesome memory of that Murderer, and also because a detailed account of his long trial is by no means indispensable to my narrative, I shall confine myself closely to such incidents in the ten days and nights during which we, the Jury, were kept together, as directly bear on my own curious personal experience. It is in that, and not in the Murderer, that I seek to interest my reader. It is to that, and not to a page of the Newgate Calendar, that I beg attention.

I was chosen Foreman of the Jury. On the second morning of the trial, after evidence had been taken for two hours (I heard the church clocks strike) , happening to cast my eyes over my brother jurymen, I found an inexplicable difficulty in counting them. I counted them several times, yet always with the same difficulty. In short, I made them one too many.

I touched the brother jurymen whose place was next me, and I whispered to him, 'Oblige me by counting us.' He looked surprised by the request, but turned his head and counted. 'Why,' says he, suddenly, 'we are Thirt -; but no, it's not possible. No. We are twelve.'

According to my counting that day, we were always right in detail, but in the gross we were always one too many. There was no appearance - no figure - to account for it; but I had now an inward foreshadowing of the figure that was surely coming.

The Jury were housed at the London Tavern. We all slept in one large room on separate tables, and we were constantly in the charge and under the eye of the officer sworn to hold us in safe-keeping. I see no reason for sup-pressing the real name of that officer. He was intelligent, highly polite, and obliging, and (I was glad to hear) much respected in the City. He had an agreeable presence, good eyes, enviable black whiskers, and a fine sonorous voice. His name was Mr Harker.

When we turned into our twelve beds at night, Mr Harker's bed was drawn across the door. On the night of the second day, not being disposed to lie down, and seeing Mr Harker sitting on his bed, I went and sat beside him, and offered him a pinch of snuff. As Mr Hark-er's hand touched mine in taking it from my box, a peculiar shiver crossed him, and he said : 'Who is this!'

Following Mr Harker's eyes, and looking along the room, I saw again the figure I expected, - the second of the two men who had gone down Piccadilly. I rose, and advanced a few steps; then stopped, and looked round at Mr Harker. He was quite unconcerned, laughed, and said in a pleasant way, 'I thought for a moment we had a thirteenth juryman, without a bed. But I see it is the moonlight.'

Making no revelation to Mr Harker, but inviting him to take a walk with me to the end of the room, I watched what the figure did. It stood for a few moments by the bedside of each of my eleven brother jurymen, close to the pillow. It always went to the right-hand side of the bed, and always passed out crossing the foot of the next bed. It seemed, from the action of the head, merely to look down pensively at each recumbent figure. It took no notice of me, or of my bed, which was that nearest to Mr Harker's. It seemed to go out where the moonlight came in, through a high window, as by an aerial flight of stairs.

Next morning at breakfast, it appeared that everybody present had dreamed of the murdered man last night, except myself and Mr Harker.

I now felt as convinced that the second man who had gone down Piccadilly was the murdered man (so to speak) , as if it had been borne into my comprehension by his immediate testimony. But even this took place, and in a manner for which I was not at all prepared.

On the fifth day of the trial, when the case for the prosecution was drawing to a close, a miniature of the murdered man, missing from his bedroom upon the discovery of the deed, and afterwards found in a hiding-place where the Murderer had been seen digging, was put in evidence. Having been identified by the witness under examination, it was handed up to the Bench, and thence handed down to be inspected by the Jury. As an officer in a black gown was making his way with it across to me, the figure of the second man who had gone down Piccadilly impetuously started from the crowd, caught the miniature from the officer, and gave it to me with its own hands, at the same time saying, in a low and hollow tone, - before I saw the miniature, which was in a locket, - 'I was younger then, and my face was not then drained of blood .' It also came between me and the brother jurymen to whom I would have given the miniature, and between him and the brother jurymen to whom he would have given it, and so passed it on through the whole of our number, and back into my possession. Not one of them, however, detected this.

At table, and generally when we were shut up together in Mr Harker's custody, we had from the first naturally discussed the day's proceedings a good deal. On that fifth day, the case for the prosecution being closed, and we having that side of the question in a completed shape before us, our discussion was more animated and serious. Among our number was a vestryman, - the densest idiot I have ever seen at large, - who met the plainest evidence with the most preposterous objections, and who was sided with by two flabby parochial parasites; all the three impanelled from a district so delivered over to Fever that they ought to have been upon their own trial for five hundred Murders. When these mischievous blockheads were at their loudest, which was towards midnight, while some of us were already preparing for bed, I again saw the murdered man. He stood grimly behind them, beckoning to me. On my going towards them, and striking into the conversation, he immediately retired. This was the begin-ning of a separate series of appearances, confined to that long room in which we were confined. Whenever a knot of my brother jurymen laid their heads together, I saw the head of the murdered man among theirs. Whenever their comparison of notes was going against him, he would solemnly and irresistibly beckon to me.

It will be borne in mind that down to the production of the miniature, on the fifth day of the trial, I had never seen the Appearance in Court. Three changes occurred now that we entered on the case for the defence. Two of them I will mention together, first. The figure was now in Court continually, and it never there addressed itself to me, but always to the person who was speaking at the time. For instance. The throat of the murdered man had been cut straight across. In the opening speech for the defence, it was suggested that the deceased might have cut his own throat. At that very moment, the figure, with its throat in the dreadful condition referred to (this it had concealed before) , stood at the speaker's elbow, motioning across and across its windpipe, now with the right hand, now with the left, vigorously suggesting to the speaker himself the impossibility of such a wound having been self-inflicted by either hand. For another instance. A witness to character, a woman, deposed to the prisoner's being the most amiable of mankind. The figure at that instant stood on the floor before her, looking her full in the face, and pointing out the prisoner's evil countenance with an extended arm and an outstretched finger.

The third change now to be added impressed me strongly as the most marked and striking of all. I do not theorize upon it; I accurately state it, and there leave it. Although the Appearance was not itself perceived by those whom it addressed, its coming close to such persons was invariably attended by some trepidation or disturbance on their part. It seemed to me as if it were prevented, by laws to which I was not amenable, from fully revealing itself to others, and yet as if it could invisibly, dumbly, and darkly overshadow their minds. When the leading counsel for the defence suggested that hypothesis of sui-cide, and the figure stood at the learned gentleman's elbow, frightfully sawing at its severed throat, it is undeniable that the counsel faltered in his speech, lost for a few seconds the thread of his ingenious discourse, wiped his forehead with his handkerchief, and turned extremely pale. When the witness to character was confronted by the Appearance, her eyes most certainly did follow the direction of its pointed finger, and rest in great hesitation and trouble upon the prisoner's face. Two additional illustrations will suffice. On the eighth day of the trial, after the pause which was every day made early in the after-noon for a few minutes' rest and refreshment, I came back into Court with the rest of the Jury, some little time before the return of the Judges. Standing up in the box and looking about me, I thought the figure was not there, until, chancing to raise my eyes to the gallery, I saw it bending forward, and leaning over a very decent woman, as if to assure itself whether the Judges had resumed their seats or not. Immediately afterwards that woman screamed, fainted, and was carried out. So with the venerable, sagacious, and patient Judge who conducted the trial. When the case was over, and he settled himself and his papers to sum up, the murdered man, entering by the Judges' door, advanced to his Lordship's desk, and looked eagerly over his shoulder at the pages of his notes which he was turning. A change came over his Lordship's face; his hand stopped; the peculiar shiver, that I knew so well, passed over him; he faltered, 'Excuse me, gentlemen, for a few moments. I am somewhat oppressed by the vitiated air'; and did not recover until he had drunk a glass of water.

Through all the monotony of six of those interminable ten days, - the same Judges and others on the Bench, the same Murderer in the dock, the same lawyers at the table, the same tones of question and answer rising to the roof of the Court, the same scratching of the Judge's pen, the same ushers going in and out, the same lights kindled at the same hour when there had been any natural light of day, the same foggy curtain outside the great windows when it was foggy, the same rain pattering and dripping when it was rainy, the same footmarks of turnkeys and prisoner day after day on the same sawdust, the same keys locking and unlocking the same heavy doors, - through all the wearisome monotony which made me feel as if I had been Foreman of the Jury for a vast period of time, and Piccadilly had flourished coevally with Babylon, the murdered man never lost one trace of his distinctness in my eyes, nor was he at any moment less distinct than any-body else. I must not omit, as a matter of fact, that I never once saw the Appearance which I call by the name of the murdered man look at the Murderer. Again and again I wondered, 'Why does he not?' But he never did.

Nor did he look at me, after the production of the miniature, until the last closing minutes of the trial arrived. We retired to consider, at seven minutes before ten at night. The idiotic vestryman and his two parochial parasites gave us so much trouble that we twice returned into Court to beg to have certain extracts from the Judge's notes re-read. Nine of us had not the smallest doubt about those passages, neither, I believe, had any one in Court; the dunder-headed triumvirate, however, having no idea but obstruction, disputed them for that very reason. At length we prevailed, and finally the Jury returned into Court at ten minutes past twelve.

The murdered man at that time stood directly opposite the Jury-box, on the other side of the Court. As I took my place, his eyes rested on me with great attention; he seemed satisfied, and slowly shook a great gray veil, which he carried on his arm for the first time, over his head and whole form. As I gave in our verdict, 'Guilty', the veil collapsed, all was gone, and his place was empty.

The Murderer, being asked by the Judge, according to usage, whether he had anything to say before sentence of Death should be passed upon him, indistinctly muttered something which was described in the leading newspapers of the following day as 'a few rambling, incoherent, and half-audible words, in which he was understood to complain that he had not had a fair trial, because the Foreman of the Jury was prepossessed against him'. The remarkable declaration that he really made was this : 'My Lord, I knew I was a doomed man, when the Foreman of my Jury came into the box. My Lord, I knew he would never let me off, because, before I was taken, he some-how got to my bedside in the night, woke me, and put a rope round my neck.'

银勺

在维也纳有一位军官，他盘算着：“我怎么着也得去红牛 [1] 吃顿午饭。”

如同其他地方一样，酒店里充斥着各色人等：既有熟客，也有生人；既有社会名流，也有无名鼠辈；既有坦荡君子，也有江湖骗子。人们在这里吃吃喝喝，有人吃得多，有人吃得少。人们在这里聊天闲扯，从摩拉维亚 [2] 最近为什么会天降陨石雨，一直聊到法国有个叫玛钦的家伙打败了大恶狼。总有某人向自己的听众们吹嘘：自己比其他人提前一年从相好的那里洞悉了不可告人的天机。

在午餐快要结束的时候，总有一两个家伙举着还剩下半升匈牙利葡萄酒的杯子开怀畅饮，另一个家伙就像药剂师生产药丸那样把软面包搓成一个个的球，第三个家伙则耍起了刀子、叉子或者银勺子。军官注意到：一个穿着绿色上衣的家伙正玩着银勺子，忽然勺子滑进了他的衣袖里，再也没有出现。

如果换作别人，可能会想：“这关我什么事？”然后就视而不见，或者干脆跟着一块儿胡闹。军官却想：“我不知道那个偷勺子的绿衣服家伙是谁，这可能会引起误会。所以在老板过来结账之前，我得保持沉默。”

当老板过来结账的时候，军官拿起一把银勺子，插进了自己上衣的两个扣眼之间——一个扣眼进，另一个扣眼出，就像士兵们在战场上携带勺子那样，只是没有汤。在军官买单的时候，老板盯着他的外套，心中暗想：“这位先生佩戴的勋章真是别具一格啊，莫非他是曾经与一碗龙虾汤英勇战斗，因此才获得了一把银勺子？或者这把勺子就是属于我的？”

在买完单之后，军官故意板着脸说：“这把勺子是送的，对不对？账单已经够贵的了。”老板回答：“我们这儿可没这规矩！如果您家里没有勺子使，我可以送您一把钢的，但我这把还请您留下！”

这时候军官站了起来，拍着老板的肩膀笑了。“我和那边那位穿绿色外套的先生，我们俩这是跟您开玩笑呢，”他说，“那位绿衣服先生，如果您能把您的勺子从袖子里拿出来，我也把我的勺子交出来。”偷勺子的贼人意识到：他双手不诚实的举动已经落入了一双诚实的眼睛里。他想：最好还是假装开玩笑，把勺子还给店主吧。

就这样，老板的财产终于物归原主，偷勺子的贼也笑了——然而他并没能得意多久。目睹了事件经过的其他顾客们齐心协力追打辱骂着行径暴露的贼人，将他轰出了酒店。老板也让佣人在贼人身后撒上了满满一把没有燃尽的炉灰 [3] 。这位好样儿的军官因为他正直的行为获得了一瓶匈牙利葡萄酒作为奖赏。

注意：不应该偷银勺子！

注意：正义从来不会缺席！

廉价午餐

有一句古老的谚语：自己挖坑埋自己。在某个小镇有家狮子客栈，这里发生的故事，恰好就说明了这句话的含义。

有一位衣冠楚楚的客人，他声称要点一份上等的肉汤、一块牛排和一份蔬菜。

客栈老板小心翼翼地问他：“您是否还想来一杯葡萄酒？”

“当然了，”客人回答，“只要对得起我兜里这钱。”

在把这些食物都一扫而光之后，客人掏出一枚磨损的五芬尼 [4] 硬币放到桌上，对客栈老板说：“老板先生，这是我的钱。”

客栈老板大怒：“这叫什么玩意儿？难道这顿饭不值一塔勒 [5] 吗？”

客人回答道：“我可没有说要点一顿价值一塔勒的饭菜，我说的是要点一顿对得起我兜里这钱的饭菜。我的钱就搁在这儿了，再多也没有了。是您饭菜给多了，这是您的错儿。”

很显然，客栈老板因为自己的傲慢和大意被顾客耍弄了，事情本应该到此为止的。然而，故事到这里并没有结束。

“您是个狡猾的流氓，”客栈老板说，“我本该好好收拾您一顿，然而这顿午饭算我白请，我再送给您二十四枚十字币 [6]，请您再去到隔壁的大熊客栈，对他们重复一遍刚才的把戏。”

客栈老板之所以这么说，是因为他和隔壁大熊客栈的同行一直是竞争关系，双方彼此仇视，经常赌咒发誓，Thnbsp；不共戴天。然而狡猾的客人一把攥紧了客栈老板给的钱币，小心地看了一眼门外，对客栈老板道了一声晚安，最后笑着说：“我之前已经去过隔壁的大熊客栈了，是他们家老板让我上您这儿来的。”

鹬蚌相争，渔翁得利。然而如果这两位客栈老板能够有所领悟，并且彼此和解的话，他们还是应该好好感谢这位狡猾的客人。所谓和则两利，斗则两伤。

户外午餐

人们常常抱怨：与某些人打交道是多么不容易。这么说当然没问题。然而在这些难打交道的人当中，很多人并不是坏人，只是脾气古怪而已。一旦别人正确理解了他们的思想和行为，并且用适当的方法对待他们，既不固持己见，也不一味附和，就会发现和他们相处其实是非常轻松愉快的。

从前有一位仆人对他的主人就是这么做的。这位仆人时常做错事，有时候也因为不是自己犯下的错误而受到责难。有一天，主人怒气冲冲地回到家里，坐下开始吃午餐。可能是因为汤太烫了，太凉了，或者不冷不热了，总而言之，主人怒了。他抄起盛汤的碗，从敞开的窗户将碗连同里面的汤汤水水一起扔到了外面的庭院里。

这时候仆人是这么做的呢？他毫不犹豫地拿起本来要上到餐桌上的肉，将它像汤那样扔到了庭院里，随后他又把面包、葡萄酒以及包括桌布在内桌上的所有东西一股脑儿都扔了出去。

“你这冒失鬼想要干吗？”主人从沙发上暴跳起来，怒气冲冲地问道。仆人不慌不忙地回答：“如果我错误理解了您的意思的话，还请您原谅我。我没想别的，只是以为您今天想去庭院里吃饭。空气是多么新鲜，天空是多么湛蓝，开花的苹果树是多么可爱，蜜蜂都在花间愉快地享用它们的午餐。”

——这一次汤被扔出了窗外，但以后再也不会了。主人认识到了自己的错误，他欣赏着窗外美妙的春光，为仆人机智的反应会心一笑，并且在心中暗自感谢仆人给他上的这一课。

机智的法官

我们曾经听说过：并不是所有在东方国家发生的事情都是不公平的。下面这件事情就发生在那里。

有一位财主因为疏忽大意遗失了被他缝在布袋里的一大笔钱。当他发现把钱弄丢了以后，他顺理成章地悬赏一百塔勒来奖励那个找到钱的诚实的发现者。

不久就来了一个诚实的好人。“您的钱我找到了。分文不少！如数奉还！”当好人说这番话的时候，他坦荡的目光中透着诚实和善良，真是好样儿的。可是财主只在财产失而复得的瞬间露出了笑容。他不诚实的品性很快就会展现在我们面前。财主一边数着钱，一边暗中盘算：按照我之前的承诺，我将要付给这位发现者一大笔赏金。

“好伙计，”财主说，“布袋里原来一共有八百塔勒，但是现在只剩七百了，我猜您一定从缝隙里拿走了一百塔勒作为赏金，谢谢您。”

这真是太坏了。然而我们的故事并没有结束。诚实永垂不朽，而制造不公平的人却总是搬起石头砸自己的脚。这位诚实的发现者努力捍卫自己的清白正直，他保证自己将捡到的布袋原封不动还给了失主。

最后他们一起来到了法官面前。这两人各执一词，一位声称布袋里原本就有八百塔勒，另一位则坚持自己并没有从布袋里拿走一分一毫。两人唇枪舌剑好一番。

然而这位机智的法官早已看出了这两人一个胸怀磊落，一个心怀鬼胎，于是他眉头一皱，计上心来。他表示相信当事双方的陈述都是真实可靠的，并且做出了如下的判决：“照这么说，你们两人一个遗失了有八百塔勒的布袋，另一个捡到了有七百塔勒的布袋，所以你捡到的这个布袋很显然不是他遗失的那个。你，诚实的发现者，把你捡到的这笔钱先拿回去，直到遗失了七百塔勒的那人过来找你。至于你嘛，我没有什么好说的，你应该耐心等着那个捡到八百塔勒的人来找你。”这就是法官的判决，并且是终审判决。

狡猾的轻骑兵

有一位参加最后一战 [7] 的轻骑兵，在街道上遇到向他迎面走来的一位庄稼汉。他得知这位庄稼汉刚刚由于出售干草而获得了一百古尔登 [8]，正打算带着这笔钱回家。因此他打算向庄稼汉要点儿钱去买烟打酒。谁知道他会不会因为讨到几个子儿而满足呢？

然而那位庄稼汉却指天咒地说：他的最后一枚十字币已经在隔壁的村庄花光了，现在他已经是一文不名。

“这地方离我们驻地不远，”轻骑兵说，“所以我们应该都能找到一些援助；但因为你啥都没有，我也啥都没有，所以我们得先走到圣阿方索 [9] 面前，如果他今天给咱俩恩赐的话，咱俩就像兄弟一样平分。”

所谓的圣阿方索，其实不过是立在乡村小路旁一座古老而人迹罕至的小教堂里的石头雕像。

起初，庄稼汉对徒步朝圣并没有什么兴趣，然而轻骑兵却不由分说，生拉硬拽着他一块儿上了路，还向他强调：圣阿方索从没有让他陷入过困境。这让农夫心中也燃起了一丝希望。

或许在小教堂里有一位轻骑兵的战友或者伙伴在等着他们？才没有呢！那儿只有一座圣阿方索的雕像，他俩在雕像前跪了下来，轻骑兵开始假装虔诚地祈祷。

“现在，”轻骑兵对他的伙伴耳语，“圣人在召唤我了。”他站起身，将自己的耳朵贴在石像的嘴唇上，然后面露喜色地回到他的同伴那里。

“圣人送给我一枚古尔登，就在我的衣兜里。”轻骑兵当着庄稼汉的面从衣兜里掏出一枚他事先藏好的古尔登，然后他俩就如同事先所约定的那样，像兄弟般平分了这笔钱。

庄稼汉觉得这很合理，他催促轻骑兵如法炮制再试一次。轻骑兵依样画葫芦又表演了一通，然后又欣喜若狂地从圣人那里回来了。“这一次好心的圣阿方索给了咱们一百古尔登，就在你的衣兜里。”

当庄稼汉听到这番话的时候，他的面色变得惨白起来，他再三保证，自己连一枚十字币都没剩下。然而轻骑兵告诉庄稼汉：他应该相

信圣人，圣阿方索是不会骗他的。无论结果如何，他都应该把衣兜翻出来清空。

当一百枚古尔登出现在两人面前的时候，庄稼汉也只有打落门牙肚里吞，像轻骑兵之前和他平分自己的一枚古尔登那样，和轻骑兵平分了他这一百枚古尔登。

这件事儿办得机智而巧妙，然而这么做是不对的，尤其是在教堂里。

牙医

有两个懒汉，在一起东游西荡已经有些日子了。他俩懒得去赚那点儿打工的小钱，又身无长技，找不到快速致富的门道，最后变得穷困潦倒，走投无路。

于是他俩想到一个主意：挨家挨户去乞讨，不是为了填饱肚子，而是为了坑蒙拐骗。他俩把讨来的面包又揉又捏，做成小药片和药丸的形状，再混上被虫蛀过的烂木头的碎屑，看起来和药剂师那里的黄色药丸一模一样。

随后他俩从书籍装订商那里花几个巴岑 [10] 买来了一些红色的纸张（漂亮的颜色对每一种骗局都有所帮助）。他们把纸裁开，每张包上六到八颗“药丸”。

现在其中一人来到了镇上的年集，走进了一家红狮酒馆，希望能多招徕一些客人。他要了一杯葡萄酒，然而并不喝，而是坐在角落里，双手托腮露出一副痛苦的表情，不断发出低声的呻吟。

酒馆里纯朴的农民和镇上的人，都认定这个可怜人应该是患上了严重的牙疼。然而怎么办呢？人们同情他，安慰他说这一切很快就会过去，喝完了杯中的葡萄酒，又回到各自的工作中去了。

这时候另一个懒汉出现了。这两个混蛋看起来就好像这辈子从来不认识对方一样。他们并没有彼此注视对方，直到第二个家伙好像被坐在角落里的第一个家伙的呻吟声所吸引。“好伙计，”他说，“您看上去好像犯了牙疼？”然后他缓缓迈着大步走到了对方跟前。

“我是特拉法尔加 [11] 的施瑙齐乌斯拉朋齐乌斯医生。”他接着说。这样一个奇特而响亮的名字就如同醒目的颜色一样，有助于实施诈骗。“如果您服下我的牙疼药丸的话，”他接着说，“即使是如此严重的症状，只需要一颗，最多两颗就可以药到病除。”

“看在上帝的分儿上。”另一个骗子回答。于是这位冒牌的拉朋齐乌斯医生从口袋里掏出红色的纸包，从里面取出一颗药丸，命令病人把药丸放在那颗坏牙上，完全嚼碎。顾客们一个接一个从桌边探过头来，围观这奇迹般的治愈。

接下来发生的事情您可想而知。病人不想从第一颗药丸开始就吹嘘它神奇的功效，于是他发出了一声尖利的号叫。这让医生感到非常满意。“您的疼痛，”他说，“已经开始被打破了。”说着他迅速拿出了

第二颗药丸，用同样的方式让病人服下。

所有的疼痛立刻消失了。病人欢快地一跃而起，擦去额头上由于紧张而冒出的汗珠，尽管他手中其实空空如也，他还是假装对救命恩人千恩万谢，并掏出一笔貌似可观的报酬放到对方手中表示感谢。

这种伎俩看起来非常高明，而且的确行之有效。每一个在场的人现在都想要拥有这种神奇的药丸。“医生”对每包药丸开价二十四个十字币，在几分钟之内药丸就被一抢而空。

这两个骗子一前一后分别离开了，当他俩再次相聚的时候，他们为人们的单纯以及他们因此骗来的钱财而放声大笑。

这些“面包”可真是价值不菲啊。损失二十四枚十字币这笔小钱并不能让人陷入贫困，然而这对受骗的人们来说还不是最糟糕的。软面包球随着时间的流逝会变得像石子儿一样坚硬。在一年半载之后，当一位可怜的受骗者牙疼发作，他自信满满地一颗接一颗用他的坏牙咬碎坚硬的药丸，然而并没有被治愈，而是感到撕心裂肺的疼痛。而这种疼痛就是用他当初从自己兜里掏出去的那二十四枚十字币换来的！

由此我们可以看到，人们是多么容易被四处游荡的流浪汉的伪装所欺骗，这些骗子他们今生前所未见，今后也不会再见。有些读者看到这里可能会想：“我是如此的单纯，曾经也上过类似的当。”

记住：那些知道如何从其他地方骗钱的家伙，当他们来到村庄或者年集上的时候，可不会穿着有破洞的袜子，或者在右脚和左脚的鞋上分别安上白色和黄色的鞋扣。

小站

一位驿站站长对一位驾着两匹马正向他的驿站驶来的犹太人说：“从这儿开始您必须得有三匹马！因为前面是上坡路，而且路面柔软，这样的话，您得花三小时才能赶到那儿。”

犹太人问：“如果我驾着四匹马，多长时间能赶到那儿？”

——“两小时。”

“驾着六匹马呢？”

——“一小时。”

“您知道的，”犹太人最后说，“给我套上八匹马吧，这样我不用赶路就直接到了！”

一份特殊的酒馆账单

一个恶作剧的念头有时候会成功，有时候却需要付出外套甚至是皮肤作为代价。这一次仅仅是外套。

从前有三个浪荡的大学生，他们在旅途中一路风流快活，衣兜里连一个赫勒 [12] 都没剩下。像往常那样，他们又走进了一家小酒馆，盘算着白吃白喝一顿然后悄悄从后门溜走。

天遂人愿，当时酒馆里只有年轻柔弱的老板娘一个人。他们仨一边胡吃海喝，一边高深莫测地对话，诸如：这个世界已经存在了几千年之久，将来还会存在这么久，Thnbsp；直到某一天的某一个时辰，每一年、每一天、每一小时都会像六千年前那样从头开始。

“是的。”他们中的一位终于发声了，他对坐在窗户旁，手里一边做着针线活儿，一边认真倾听的老板娘说道，“这是我们从学过的书籍里知道的。”

另一位则厚颜无耻地声称：他依稀记得他们在六千年前曾经来过这个地方，他还能清楚地认出老板娘那张美丽而友善的脸庞。

这样的对话持续了好长一段时间，老板娘看起来越是相信他们说的一切，这几个年轻的浪荡子弟越是卖力地享用着葡萄酒、烤肉和纽结面包。最后他们账单上的数字一路攀升到了五古尔登外加十六枚十字币。当他们吃饱喝足之后，哥仨打算按照之前计划的那样逃之夭夭。

“老板娘女士，”其中一位说，“这回哥几个手头有点儿紧。这条街上有很多酒馆，我们有幸找到了您这位聪明的女士，我们希望这次您作为老朋友能让我们赊账。如果您不介意的话，当六千年后哥几个再回来的时候，咱们新账旧账一块儿算。”

聪明的老板娘并没有面露愠色，而是显得十分愉快。她表示：几位先生如此满意，这让她也十分高兴。随后她不声不响地站在了酒馆的门口，要求这几位先生立刻把六千年前欠下的五古尔登外加十六枚十字币的账付了。因为按照他们所说，今天所发生的一切，从前已经原封不动地发生过一遍了。

不幸的是，这时村里的警长正领着几个精壮的汉子，走进酒馆想要为他们的荣誉喝上一杯。这对这几位瓮中之鳖来说可不是什么好事儿。很快警长就做出了判决：“欠账六千年可不是件光荣的事情，这

几位先生要么立刻把债还清，要么就把身上崭新的上衣脱下来抵债。”

哥仨不得不选择了第二个选项，而老板娘也保证：如果六千年后他们几个带着钱回来的话，她会衣服一件一件全部还给他们。

这个故事就发生在1805年4月17日泽灵根 [13] 的酒馆里。

意外的重逢

五十多年前，在瑞典的法伦有一位年轻的矿工，他亲吻着美丽的未婚妻，对她说：“在圣露西亚节 [14] 我们的爱情将会在牧师手中得到祝福，我们将成为夫妻，共同建筑爱巢。”

“那里面将充满了宁静和爱，”美丽的未婚妻带着甜蜜的微笑说，“你是我的唯一和全部，离开你，我除了坟墓哪里也不想去。”

然而，他俩还没来得及站在圣露西亚面前，牧师还没有机会说：“如果有谁反对这两位新人结成婚姻的，请站出来陈述理由。”——死亡就站出来了。

有一天早上，小伙子穿着他乌黑的矿工制服从姑娘的房前经过——矿工总是穿着他自己的寿衣——他又一次敲响了她的窗户，对她说早安，然而他却没能对她说晚安。他再也没能从矿井里回来。

那天早上，姑娘因为无聊系上了她为婚礼准备的带着红边的黑色围巾。当得知未婚夫的噩耗之后，她把围巾扯了下来，为他哭泣，念念不忘。

与此同时，葡萄牙的里斯本城被地震摧毁 [15]，七年战争 [16] 结束了，弗兰茨一世皇帝 [17] 去世了，耶稣会 [18] 被解散，波兰被瓜分 [19] 95年波兰被俄、普、奥三国最终瓜分。 [20] 去世，施特林泽 [21] 被处决，美国宣告独立，法国和西班牙联军没能攻破直布罗陀 [22]。土耳其人将斯坦因将军关进了匈牙利的“老兵山洞” [23]，约瑟夫皇帝 [24] 也去世了。瑞典的古斯塔夫国王7从俄罗斯手里夺取了芬兰，法国大革命引发了长期的战争，利奥波德二世皇帝 [25] 也进了坟墓。拿破仑征服了普鲁士 [26]，英国人炮轰哥本哈根 [27]。农民们播种又收割，磨坊主磨面，铁匠们敲打，矿工们在地下工场中挖掘金属矿脉。然而，在1809年圣约翰节◆◆圣约翰节（Johannistag），基督教节日，为纪念施洗者约翰——为耶稣洗礼的基督教先知而设立，时间通常在每年6月24日。◆◆前后，法伦的矿工们想要在两条竖井之间打开一条通道，在距离地面三百多腕尺 [28] 的碎石和酸水中，他们挖出了一具年轻男子的尸体。他在绿矾水的保护下，毫发未损，栩栩如生。人们可以清晰地辨认出他的容貌和年龄，仿佛他在一小时之前刚刚死去，或者正在工作间隙打盹儿。

当人们把尸体抬出矿井的那天，他的父母双亲、好友故知都早已离世，没有人能够认出这个长眠的小伙子，或者述说他不幸的遭遇。

直到矿工的未婚妻认出了那张某一天从她面前消逝、一去不返的面庞。

她苍白的脸上已布满皱纹，拄着一根拐棍来到广场上辨认她的未婚夫。她跪倒在爱人的尸体前，心中的喜悦胜过了忧伤。她内心波澜起伏，久久才平静下来。“他是我的未婚夫，”她终于说道，“五十年来我一直牵挂着他，如今在上帝的安排之下，我终于在离世之前再次见到了他。在我们婚礼之前八天他下了矿井，从此一去不返。”

那位昔日的未婚妻，无情的时光已经在她脸上刻满了皱纹，而她的未婚夫，面容却依然像年轻时候那样英俊。好像在五十年后，她胸中年轻时爱的火焰又被重新点燃了，然而他却再也不能发出笑声，眼睛再也不能睁开了。围观的人们都被这悲伤的情景感动得热泪盈眶。

最后她让矿工们把他的尸体抬进了她的小屋，就仿佛他是他所拥有的唯一东西，而他也拥有这样的权利，直到在教堂墓地他的墓穴被挖好。

第二天，墓穴已经挖好了，矿工们抬着尸体走向教堂墓地。她从一个箱子里拿出那条带着红边的黑色围巾系上，穿上她最好的衣服，陪伴着他走上她每周日去教堂的必经之路，就仿佛这是他俩的婚礼，而不是他的葬礼。

当人们把他的尸体放进教堂墓地的墓穴，她说：“安息吧，在冰冷的婚床上再待上几天，不要感到时光漫长。我还有一点儿事情要处理，重逢的日子不远了。——大地已经将你还给了我，它不会再次将你夺走的。”她一步三回头地离开了。

狡猾的朝圣者

几年前，有一个四处游荡的流浪汉，他把自己打扮成虔诚的朝圣者的样子，声称自己来自帕德伯恩 [29]，正走在朝拜耶路撒冷神圣墓地 [30] 的路上。

在米尔海姆 [31] 的驿站，他曾经向人打听：“这儿离耶路撒冷还有多远？”

别人告诉他：“需要七百个小时，但如果你从毛兴 [32] 的小路走的话，就可以省下一刻钟的时间 [33]。”

这听上去还不赖，所谓不积跬步，无以至千里嘛。毕竟节省或者赚到一个巴岑的机会，要比获得一个古尔登的机会多得多。

然而十五个巴岑毕竟就相当于一个古尔登。所以在七百个小时的旅程中，每五小时里就能省下一刻钟的话，谁知道一共能够省下多少时间呢。

但是这位冒牌的朝圣者可不是这么想的，他就是一门心思东游西荡，蹭吃蹭喝。

一个乞丐永远不应该忘记一句古老的谚语：不要去一个贫穷的村庄乞讨，因为讨来的东西还抵不上一路上鞋底的磨损，尤其是光着脚的时候更不要去。朝圣者也是这么想的，所以他很快就回到了大路上，这里有富人们的房屋和丰盛的食物。

这个无赖并不满足于作为一个普通朝圣者从一双双充满同情而虔诚的手中获取的寻常食物，他除了“营养丰富”的卵石汤 [34] 以外，什么都不想喝。

只要在路旁看到上好的酒馆，比如说克罗琴根 [35] 的驿站，或者施林根 [36] 的巴塞尔酒吧，他就装出一副极其谦卑和饥饿的样子，向别人乞讨一碗由清水和卵石煮成的汤，看在上帝的份儿上，钱自然是不付的。

当好心的老板娘对他说“虔诚的朝圣者，鹅卵石太硬了，在胃里没法儿消化！”的时候，他回答道：“所以我才要吃它！去耶路撒冷的路这么远，这玩意儿吃下去比面包顶饿！当然如果您能送我一杯葡萄酒的话，肯定会有助于我的消化。”

这时候老板娘会说：“然而，虔诚的朝圣者，这样的一碗汤没法

儿给您提供足够的能量啊。”

朝圣者这样回答：“如果您能把清水换成肉汁的话，肯定会更有营养的。”

现在老板娘给他端来了这样一碗汤，并且说：“底料还没煮得那么软。”朝圣者回答道：“是啊，而且肉汁看上去也太稀了。您能不能往汤里再添上满满几勺蔬菜或者一块肉，或者二者都添上？”

当好心的老板娘把蔬菜和肉加进汤碗里之后，朝圣者说道：“上帝保佑您！现在请把面包给我，我要喝汤了。”

于是朝圣者扔下他的手杖，挽起衣袖，坐下了。他满心欢喜地端起他的杰作，将最后一粒面包屑，最后一根肉丝，最后一滴葡萄酒和肉汁都吃喝得干干净净。然后用餐巾或者袖口擦了擦嘴，或者根本不擦嘴，说道：“老板娘女士，您的汤把我撑得太饱了，所以我无法勉为其难吃下这些美丽的鹅卵石了。太可惜了！但还是请您把它们收好。当我回来的时候，我会送给您一枚来自亚实基伦 [37] 的神圣贝壳或者一朵来自杰里科 [38] 的玫瑰。”

司令官和轻装步兵在赫斯菲尔德

在上一次与普鲁士-俄罗斯联军的战役中 [39]，法国军队和大部分联盟 [40] 军队都驻扎在波兰和普鲁士境内，其中有一支来自巴登 [41] 的轻装步兵队伍在黑森 [42] 的赫斯菲尔德 [43] 担任警戒任务。此地战端初起之时，就已经被皇帝 [44] 派兵占领，据为己有了。

相比旧的统治者而言，经常为非作歹的占领军显然不受当地居民的待见，因此他们在赫斯菲尔德也遇到了许多反抗，其中一起是一位法国军官被杀害了。

法国皇帝正在前线与不计其数的敌军鏖战，他可不允许敌人在他身后捣乱，造成这样的事情发生，因为即使是一点星星之火，也可能卷起燎原的烈焰。

赫斯菲尔德可怜的居民们，很快就被要求为自己鲁莽的行为承担后果。按照法国皇帝的命令，赫斯菲尔德市必须遭到劫掠，然后四处纵火，被烧成灰烬。

赫斯菲尔德是一个居民富足，有着许多工厂和美丽建筑的地方。当这样一个坏消息传来的时候，这些可怜的老乡亲们是一种什么样的心情，大家可想而知。穷人们仅有的身家将被人一把夺走，而富人们的财产则将被人用一辆辆马车运走。广场旁的豪宅和角落里的寒舍将化成同样的灰烬，就如同教堂墓地也是富人和穷人共同的归宿。

然而，最坏的情况并没有发生。在法国驻卡塞尔 [45] 和赫斯菲尔德司令官的求情下，惩罚明显减轻了：只有四座房屋被烧毁，损失有限；然而劫掠还将照旧执行，这依然是非常严厉的惩罚。

当不幸的居民们听到最终判决的时候，他们恐惧万分，魂飞魄散。他们对在仁慈的司令官面前进行徒劳无益的抱怨和请求已经不抱任何希望，只想争分夺秒在劫掠开始前将自己最重要的财物抢救出来。

恐怖的时刻终于来临了，鼓声在不幸的人们的号啕大哭声中响起。士兵们匆匆忙忙穿过恐惧、奔逃、绝望的人群，来到了他们的集合点。

于是这位正直的司令官站在他的轻装步兵队列前面，他首先声情并茂地向他们描述了居民们的悲惨遭遇，随后说道：“士兵们！劫掠的许可从现在开始生效。谁有兴趣参加的，请出列。”

没有人站出来，一个都没有！司令官又重复了一遍命令，依然没有人迈步。司令官表示：如果没有人想要参与劫掠，那他就只好自己去了。然而依然没有人愿意服从。于是显而易见，这次任务就被放弃了。

当居民们知道这件事情的时候，他们的心情就仿佛刚刚从一场噩梦中醒来一样。他们的快乐简直无法形容。他们立刻派出一位代表去见司令官，向他的宽宏大量表示感谢，并且送给他一份丰厚的礼物作为报答。谁知道如果没有他将会发生什么！

然而司令官却拒绝了礼物，他说，自己做好事不是为了钱财。

这个故事于1807年发生在赫斯菲尔德，这座小城至今依然屹立。

坏的奖赏

在上一次与普鲁士的战争中，法国人攻入了普鲁士国王 [46] 所在的城市柏林 [47]，许多属于王室的财产被夺走，它们被人占有，或者被变卖。因为战争从不会带来任何东西，它只会掠夺东西。

人们发现了许多精心藏匿的财宝，作为战利品的一部分，但王室财产并没有全都被找到。有大量属于王室的木质建材尚未被发现，保存完好。

在国王的侍从中有一个无赖，他想着借此好好赚上一笔。他跑到法国司令官那里，挤眉弄眼地告诉他：在某某地方有一批质量上乘的橡木和杉木，价值数千古尔登。

然而这位正直的司令官婉言谢绝了这种背叛行为，他说：“就让那些上乘的木料待在它们原来的地方吧，不应该对敌人赶尽杀绝。”

当国王回国之后，他命令用这些木材给这位“忠诚”的侍从建起了一座崭新的绞刑架，以此作为对他“忠诚”的报答。

在莱茵兰 [48] 的朋友如果欣赏这个故事的话，可以试着在自家的森林里挖一挖，或许能找到一些当时被遗忘的木材呢。

奇怪的鬼故事

去年秋天，有一位陌生的绅士来到了施林根这个美好的地方。在登山的时候，他放弃骑马，选择了步行。在途中，他向一位克罗伊茨纳赫 [49] 人讲述了一个他亲身经历的故事。

半年前，这位绅士在丹麦旅行，一天深夜他来到了一座村庄，村庄不远处的山丘上有一座整洁的小城堡，他决定就在村里过夜了。

客栈老板告诉他，当天晚上已经没有足够的床位了，而明天早上将有一场行刑，他将和三个刽子手一起过夜。于是这位绅士回答说：“我要去那座小城堡，那里的领主或者主人会让我进去，并且给我提供一张空床铺。”

老板说：“那里有许多挂着丝绸床幔的美丽的床，就在居高临下的房间里，而我负责保管城堡的钥匙。然而我不建议您去那里。三个月之前，城堡仁慈的主人和他的妻子儿女一起出了远门，打那以后，这座小城堡就被鬼魂占据了。城堡的看守和仆人们都待不下去了，其他去过小城堡的人就没有再去第二次的。”

这位陌生的绅士笑了。他是一个勇敢的人，对鬼魂毫不惧怕。他说：“我想去试试。”

尽管客栈老板对此表示反对，他还是从老板手里拿到了钥匙。随后他准备好了拜访鬼魂所需要的物品，与一直跟随他的仆人一起走进了城堡。

在城堡里，他衣不解带，睡意全无，一心等待着将要发生的事情。他把两盏点亮的灯放在桌上，旁边摆上两把上好膛的手枪，看着用细细的红丝带悬挂在镜框下面的金色纸片，欣赏着美丽的图画，回想着与莱茵兰发小儿共度的往日时光。很长时间过去了，可什么都没有发生。

然而到了午夜时分，教堂的屋顶开始闪烁，大钟敲响了十二点，一片乌云飘过来遮住了城堡，巨大的雨滴敲打着窗户，发出比敲打大门大三倍的响声。一个有着漆黑而空洞的眼睛、半肘长的鼻子、突出的牙齿和山羊胡子、全身长满了乱蓬蓬的毛发的身影开始在房间里游荡，并且发出可怕的鼻音：“我是梅菲斯特 [50]，欢迎来到我的宫殿。你们要和你们的老婆孩子永别了！”

陌生的绅士感到一股冷气从大脚趾上兴起，顺着后背一直蹿到了

睡帽上。至于他可怜的仆人，就更不用想了。

然而有着恐怖鬼脸的梅菲斯特正向他走来，膝盖抬得高高的，就好像在火焰上漫步一样。可怜的绅士想：以上帝的名义，在此一举了。他勇敢地站起身，用枪指着那个鬼魂，喊道：“不许动！不然我就开枪了！”

在这种情况下，没有任何鬼怪会感到害怕，因为尽管人们想开枪，但要么枪打不响，要么子弹对鬼怪毫发无损，反而飞回来击中开枪自卫的那个人。

然而梅菲斯特却高高地举起他的大脚趾，慢慢转过身，像他来的时候那样迈着缓慢的步伐离开了。

当陌生人看到魔鬼在火药面前心生畏惧的时候，他想：现在没有危险了。他用另一只手拿起灯，蹑手蹑脚地慢慢跟在鬼魂的身后。而这位仆人，他用最快的速度蹿出城堡，回到了客栈，他宁可跟刽子手在一起过夜，也不要和鬼魂待在一起。

然而，在过道里，鬼魂忽然从大胆的跟踪者的眼前消失了，看起来就仿佛沉入了地底一样。

当绅士想要再往前走几步一探究竟的时候，他脚下的地板忽然消失了，他掉进了一个地洞里。他看到迎面而来的火光，相信自己马上就要一命归西了。然而当他的十个脚趾终于安全落地的时候，他才发现自己身在一个有着穹顶的地窖里，毫发无损地躺在一堆干草上。有六个外形奇特的家伙围着火堆站着，梅菲斯特也在其中。在他们周围摆放着各种各样稀奇古怪的装备，在两张桌子上堆满了闪闪发光的伪造塔勒，一张比一张更迷人。

这时候陌生人终于恍然大悟：原来他们是一个伪造钱币的秘密团伙，所有人都是有血有肉的活人。他们利用城堡主人不在的时机，将造币设备秘密运进了城堡，有一些熟悉城堡情况的内部人员或许也参与其中。为了保证他们的秘密行动不被打扰和发现，他们开始装神弄鬼，每个来到城堡里的人都惊恐万状，以至于下次再也不来了。

然而现在旅行者开始为他没有听从村里客栈老板的劝告而感到后悔了。因为他被塞进一个狭窄的洞穴里一处阴森的小屋，并且听到他们的“战争法庭”在讨论对自己的处治方案。

“最好还是把他宰了，然后把尸体埋起来。”有人说。

然而另一个人却说：“我们应该先审问一下他，他是谁，他叫什么名字，他从哪儿来。”

当他们听到他是一位贵族绅士，并且要去哥本哈根觐见国王的时

候，他们面面相觑，瞪大了眼睛。在把他扔回阴森的储藏室之后，他们说：“这下大事不好了，一旦他失踪了，人们就会从客栈老板那里知道他进了城堡再也没有出来的事情。轻骑兵一夜之间就会来到这里，把我们揪出来。我们长期的苦心经营，就要毁于一旦了。”

他们表示愿意放过这位俘虏，前提是他发誓不把他们的秘密泄露出去。此外他们还威胁说，他们会在哥本哈根派人监视他。他们还要求他在誓词里把自己的住处说出来。

他说：“在野人左手附近有着绿色百叶窗的大房子。”

然后他们送给他一杯勃艮第葡萄酒作为起床饮料。在天亮之前他整晚看着他们如何铸造假塔勒。

当阳光穿过缝隙照进了地窖的时候，街上传来了啪啪的鞭子声和哞哞的牛叫声。陌生人告别了阴暗的地窖，向主人人们的“友好招待”表示了感谢，带着欢快的神情回到了客栈，全然不顾他的怀表、烟斗和手枪还留在城堡里。

老板说：“谢天谢地，终于再见到您了，我整个晚上都没睡着。您那边怎么样？”

然而旅人却想：“一诺千金。虽然是为了保命而许下的誓言，然而也不应该将它泄露出来，否则就是对上帝的亵渎。”

所以他一言不发。这时钟声又敲响了，那些可怜的罪犯已经把现场清理干净，一切就这样过去了。

在哥本哈根，他也对这件事情守口如瓶，几乎都快想不起来了。

然而，在几个星期后，邮局给他送来了一个小箱子，里边装着一对儿崭新的带着银饰价值不菲的手枪，一块崭新的镶嵌着昂贵宝石的金质怀表，一个带着金链子和金线刺绣烟袋的土耳其烟斗，还有一封短信。

短信上写着：“我们给您送上这份礼物，以此表达对给您带来惊吓的补偿，以及对您站在我们一边、保持沉默的感谢。现在一切都过去了，如果您愿意的话，可以把这个故事讲出来了。”

这就是那位绅士之所以把这个故事讲给克罗伊茨纳赫人听的原因。当他在登山途中听到赫廷根正午时分的钟声，掏出来对时的，就是他所说的那块金表。后来在巴塞尔的仙鹤旅馆 [51]，有一位法国将军出价七十五枚崭新的杜布伦 [52]。然而他没有答应。

废话连篇

有一位富裕的施瓦本 [53] 绅士将他的儿子送到巴黎去学习法语和礼仪。过了一年多，这位父亲的仆人也来到了巴黎。

当年轻的绅士看到仆人的时候，他充满惊喜和友善地叫出了声：“嗨，汉斯！哪阵风把你吹来的？家里怎么样？有什么消息吗？”

“没啥消息，威廉先生，只是一年前牧场工人送给您的那只美丽的乌鸦在十天前死了。”

“可怜的动物，”这位威廉先生回答，“它怎么死的？”

“唉，您知道，当咱家美丽的马一匹接一匹地死去之后，它可能吞吃了太多的尸体。我就知道会这样。”

“什么？我父亲那四匹美丽的摩尔马 [54] 都死了？”威廉先生问道，“这是怎么回事？”

“当咱家的房子和农场着火的时候，它们因为运水而劳累过度，我们对此也无能为力。”

“天哪！”威廉先生惊叫，“咱家的房子烧了？这是什么时候的事儿？”

“那天晚上我们正在火化您父亲的尸体，有人一不留神，一颗小火星就把房子点着了。”

“多么不幸的消息！”威廉先生哀号着，“那我的妹妹还好吧？”

“您还没出嫁的妹妹生了个没有父亲的孩子，是个男孩。这就是令尊大人被活活气死的原因。除此以外就没有什么消息了。”他补充道。

赔本买卖

在大都市伦敦及其周围地区，有许多极其愚蠢的傻瓜，他们对别人的金钱、怀表或者昂贵的戒指有着孩子般的喜好，不弄到一模一样的，誓不罢休。

他们常常通过诡计或者欺骗来达到自己的目的，更多时候则是通过明火执仗的抢劫，这样的抢劫有时就发生在光天化日之下开阔的公路上。其中有的成功了，有的则失败了。伦敦的狱卒或者刽子手可以讲述很多这样的故事。

有一天，一个奇特的故事就发生在一位高贵而富有的先生身上。

一个美丽的夏日，国王和许多贵族仕女聚集在一座巨大的王家花园中，那里有一条幽长曲折的道路，一直通往森林的深处。

有许多其他人等也聚集在那里，他们并没有兴趣花几个小时去小路上一探究竟，只要看到他们热爱的国王和王室成员就感到非常愉快和幸运了。

人们又吃又喝，歌舞嬉戏，成双成对或者独自一人在美丽的小路上或者茂密的玫瑰花丛中漫步。

一个衣冠楚楚的人，打扮得就好像众人中的一员，在外套下面掖着一把手枪，藏身在花园与森林交界处的一棵树后，等着有人路过。

说曹操，曹操就到。有一位绅士戴着闪闪发光的戒指、叮当作响的表链、钻石镶嵌的带扣、宽阔的绶带和金星，心无杂念地走进了凉爽的树荫里。

正在他心无杂念的时候，那个家伙从他面前的树林里走出来，给了这位好先生一个“谦卑的欢迎”。他从外套下面的马甲里掏出手枪，将枪口指着绅士的胸口，并且礼貌地要求他不要作声，因为他不想让别人听到他们之间的谈话。

当人站在枪口前面的时候，难免会感到恐惧，因为你也不知道枪里装着什么。

这位绅士理智地思考了一下：身体比钱财更有价值，而失去戒指总比失去手指要强。于是他同意保持沉默。

“尊贵的老爷，”这家伙开口了，“您能不能把您的两块金表出一个好价钱卖了呢？我们的校长每天都要找别人对表，而日晷上的刻度又

非常模糊，我们总是不清楚准确的时间。”

不管这位富有的绅士是否情愿，他不得不以几个斯蒂博 [55] 的价格将怀表卖给了这个无赖，这点儿钱甚至都不够去喝上一杯四分之一升的酒。

就这样，这个无赖右手举着枪，左手拿着几个小钱，一件一件地从绅士那里买来了戒指、带扣和金星。

到最后绅士想：“终于完事儿了，谢天谢地！”可这时无赖却耍起了新的花招：“尊贵的老爷，鉴于咱俩之间相处得还是挺融洽的，您想不想从我这儿买点儿东西呢？”

绅士思考了一下这句话，觉得面对这桩糟糕买卖，还是应该有个好的表情，于是说道：“让我瞧瞧吧！”

于是无赖就从口袋里掏出了各种各样的小玩意儿，Thnbsp；这些都是他从“件件两巴岑”的杂货店里买来的，现在可算是找到一位不还价的买主了。那位好绅士不得不把所有的东西以高昂的价格一件一件从他手里买过来。

到最后，除了手枪无赖把所有东西都卖光了，而绅士的绿色丝绸钱包里还剩下一些迷人的杜布伦。无赖还在说着：“尊贵的老爷，您难道不想用手里剩下的钱，买下我这把手枪吗？它是由伦敦最好的工匠打造的，看在咱哥俩的情面上，两个杜布伦卖给你。”

绅士惊讶地想：“你这个蠢贼！”然后买下了手枪。

当他把手枪买下之后，他立刻掉转枪口喊道：“不许动，坏家伙，立刻给我往前走，我叫你去哪儿你就去哪儿，否则我就一枪毙了你。”

无赖一下蹿进了树林，嘴里喊着：“尽管开枪吧，尊贵的老爷，枪没上膛！”

绅士扣动了扳机，枪果然没有响。他把通条插进了枪管，里面一粒火药都没有。

这时那个贼人已经逃进了树林深处，这位高贵的英国人只好面红耳赤地回去了。今天这段可怕的经历，够他好好回味一阵子的。

秘密斩首

我不知道，在某一年6月17日的早晨，兰道 [56] 的刽子手是否曾经再三向我们在天上的父虔诚地祈祷。

但在他的祈祷中，他肯定没有祈求一封来自南锡 [57] 的短信在那一天到来。

在这封信上写着：“兰道的邻居！您必须带上砍头用的大剑，立刻到南锡来。在这儿您将被告知要执行的任务，并且得到丰厚的报酬。”——一辆旅行马车已经停在了他家门前。

刽子手想：“这是我的工作。”于是就坐进了马车。

在离南锡还有一小时车程的时候，太阳已经和血红色的晚霞一起落下，夜幕降临了。车夫悄悄把车停下，说了声：“明天又是个好天气。”

这时候路边来了三个全副武装的壮汉，上车坐在刽子手的身旁，他们向他保证不会伤害他，但他必须让他们把他的眼睛蒙住。当把刽子手的眼睛蒙好以后，他们说道：“车夫，走吧。”

车夫驾车继续向前。刽子手感觉足足过去了十二个小时，但却不知道自己身处何方。一路上他听到了午夜猫头鹰的叫声，听到了公鸡的打鸣声，听到了早晨的钟声。

马车终于再次停了下来，有人把刽子手带进了一所房子，给了他一杯饮料和一根上好的香肠。

当食物和饮料让他恢复了体力之后，有人领着他在房子里继续前行，进进出出穿过一道道门，上上下下走过一级级台阶，当他的蒙眼布被解开的时候，他发现自己身处一座巨大的大厅之中。大厅的四周被黑布遮蔽，桌上点着蜡烛。

在大厅中央的椅子上坐着一个人，她的脖子裸露着，脸上戴着面具，她的嘴好像被什么东西堵住了，因此不能说话，只能发出呜咽声。

在四周的墙边站着许多穿着黑色外衣，脸部蒙着黑色面纱的绅士，这样下次当他再遇见他们的时候，就完全认不出他们来了。其中的一个人命令刽子手举起剑，把坐在椅子上的那个人的头颅砍下来。

可怜的刽子手感觉心脏里好像被冰凉的水灌满了，他表示：他的

剑是为了执行法律而铸造的，他不能用谋杀去亵渎它。

这时候其中一位绅士掏出一把手枪，从远处指着刽子手说：“您选吧！如果您不执行命令的话，那您再也见不到兰道的教堂钟楼了。”

刽子手想起了家中的老婆孩子。“既然别无选择的话，”他说，“愿我剑下这无辜之人的鲜血，流到你们的脖子上。”他一刀砍下去，那个可怜的人顿时身首异处。

行刑结束之后，这些绅士给了刽子手一个钱袋，里面装着二百杜布伦。有人把他的眼睛又蒙上了，领着他坐上了同一辆马车，还是同样那几个人陪着他一起返程。

当马车最后又停下来的时候，他被允许离开马车。解开蒙眼布，他发现自己又回到了那天晚上他遇见三个男人时距离南锡一小时车程的地方。然而这一次，马车匆匆掉头回去了。

这就是兰道的刽子手所经历的故事。这位好朋友非常遗憾自己无法说出是怎样一个可怜的灵魂通过这条血腥的道路去了天堂。

是啊，没有人知道她是谁，她犯了什么罪，也没有人知道她的坟墓在哪里。

假宝石

在斯特拉斯堡 [58] 的梅齐格门A [59] 前有一座美丽的花园，任何人只要有钱就可以进去参加一些有趣而公平的娱乐活动。这其中就有一个衣冠楚楚的男人，像别人一样，端着个小啤酒杯坐在那里。他的手指上还戴着一枚戒指，戒指上镶嵌着一枚价值昂贵的宝石，闪闪发光。

这时候来了一个犹太人。他说道：“我没有恶意，先生。您戒指上的宝石真漂亮。它闪闪发光的样子，难道不像祭司亚伦 [60] 胸牌上的乌灵与土明 [61] 吗？”

这个衣冠楚楚的陌生人简短而生硬地说：“这块宝石是假的。如果它是真的，可能就已经戴在别人的手指，而不是我的手指上了。”

犹太人请求陌生人把戒指给他看看。他把戒指拿在手里，翻来覆去，左看右看。“这块宝石难道不是真的吗？”他想着。随后他向陌生人出价两枚崭新的杜布伦购买这枚戒指。

那个陌生人不情愿地说：“我骗您干吗？您已经听到了，这块宝石是假的。”

犹太人请求把宝石给一位行家鉴定一下。这时候旁边坐着的一位开口了：“我可以为这个以色列人担保，这块宝石或许真像他所说的那样值点儿钱。”

陌生人说：“我不需要什么担保，这块宝石不是真的。”

在这座花园的另一张桌子上，有一位此间的常客正和他的狐朋狗友们一起进行着有趣而公平的金钱游戏。

其中一个人是精于此道的金匠。他曾经为一位在奥斯特利茨之战 [62] 失去了鼻子的士兵用银子打造了一个假鼻子，涂上肌肤的颜色，这个鼻子除了不能用来呼吸以外，看上去和真的毫无二致。

犹太人向那位金匠走过去。“先生，”他说，“这块宝石究竟是不是真的呢？所罗门王 [63] 的王冠上能不能有一块比它更漂亮的呢？”

那位金匠，也算是半个宝石专家，说道：“它就像天空中的毕宿五 [64] 一样闪亮，我愿意出九十杜布伦向您收购这枚戒指。如果您能够花言巧语把它买过来的话，那您就赚到了。”

犹太人转身回到陌生人跟前说：“不管真的假的，我给您六个杜

布伦。”说着，他数出几枚崭新的钱币放在桌上。

陌生人把戒指又戴回了手指上，并且说：“这玩意儿我不卖。这块假宝石的做工太逼真了，如果您把它当成真的买了，我心里会过意不去的。”说着，他把手插进了口袋里，这样贪心的以色列人就看不见那块宝石了。

“八杜布伦。”

“不行。”

“十杜布伦。”

“不行。”

“十二——十四——十五杜布伦。”

“这样的话，”陌生人终于说道，“如果您不肯让我安静一下，坚持要买的话，当着在场所有先生的面，我得跟您说好了：这块宝石是假的，我从来没有说过它是真的。我不想引起任何误会。这枚戒指现在是您的了。”

犹太人欢天喜地地把这枚戒指拿到金匠面前，说：“明天我来找您拿钱吧。”

然而这位从未被人蒙骗过的金匠，却吃惊地瞪大了双眼说道：“好伙计，这不是您两分钟以前拿给我看的那枚戒指。看在咱们们儿的情面上，这块宝石最多就值二十枚十字币。它是圣布拉辛 [65] 的玻璃工厂制造的。”

原来这个陌生人早就把一枚和在他手指上闪闪发光的真戒指看上去一模一样的假戒指藏在了口袋里，当犹太人和他交易的时候，他把手插进口袋里，用拇指把真戒指从手指上撸下来，再戴上假戒指，拿出来交给了犹太人。

受骗者怒气冲天地回到了陌生人那里，喊着：“天哪，天哪！我上当了！我真倒霉！这块宝石是假的！”

然而这个陌生人却十分沉着冷静地回答道：“我卖给您的就是假的，在场的先生们都能见证。”

一个可怕的故事是如何被一条普通的屠夫的狗公之于众的

两个屠夫一同来到郊外的一个村庄，他们在天鹅客栈门前分手，一个向左走，一个向右走，说：“我们在天鹅客栈里再见。”然而他俩再也没能重逢。

他们中的一人随着一位农夫走进了畜栏，农夫的妻子尽管正在厨房洗碗，也跟着一同走了进去，农夫的孩子也在后面跟着。

这时候魔鬼推了一下这个女人的胳膊：“看上去这个屠夫好像在他的围裙下面藏着一大笔钱！”

女人对她的男人使了个眼色，男人也给她回了个眼色。他俩一起砸死了那个可怜的屠夫，然后迅速把他的尸体用稻草掩盖了起来。

魔鬼又推了一下女人的胳膊：“瞧，谁正在看着。”

女人环顾四周，看到了自己的孩子。

于是他们一行人惊魂未定地回到了家中，紧锁房门，如临大敌。

这个心如蛇蝎的女人说道：“孩子，看看你把自己弄成什么样了，到厨房来，我给你洗洗。”

在厨房里，她把孩子的脑袋按进滚烫的肥皂水里，活活烫死了。

现在她感觉一切终于清静了，然而她却没有想到被谋杀的屠夫的那只狗。

被谋杀的屠夫的狗，和它的同伴们在一起旅行已经有些日子了。在孩子被烫死，并被迅速扔进火炉的时候，它就已经嗅到了味道。它顺着畜栏门外主人熟悉的味道一路嗅了过来，它扒着农舍的门，意识到这里发生了一些非同寻常的事情。它猛然蹿回村庄，寻找它的同伴。很快，它拉扯着另一个屠夫的上衣，呜咽哀号着，那个屠夫也意识到了什么。所以他和狗一同回到了农舍，他立刻判断出这里曾经发生过一些可怕的事情，于是挥手招来了两个从远处路过的男人。

当那两个杀人凶手听到了狗的哀鸣声和屠夫的呼喊声，他们的眼前仿佛出现了刑场的情景，心脏也仿佛掉进了地狱。

那个男人想要从后窗跳出去逃跑，女人却拉住他的外套说：“留下来吧！”

男人说：“跟我走吧！”

女人回答：“我走不动，我的双脚好像灌了铅一样。你没看见窗前那个可怕的身影吗？它有着闪亮的眼神和炽热的呼吸。”

这时候房门被撞开了，人们很快找到了被谋杀者的尸体。这两名罪犯被双手反绑送到了法官面前。

六个星期之后，他俩被执行了车轮刑 [66]。他们丑陋的尸体支离破碎地挂在车轮上，这时候乌鸦们说道：“这堆肉的味道不错！”

(1810年)

[66] 车轮刑（Rädern或Radebrechen）是古代欧洲通行的一种酷刑，因使用车轮作为行刑工具而得名。具体执行方式为将犯人绑在车轮侧面用铁棒打断四肢然后任其自然死亡，或直接将犯人用车轮砸死或者碾压致死。

狡猾的施泰尔马克人

在“最后一战”期间，在施泰尔马克 [67] 有一位富有的农夫，他思考着：在这样艰难的世道里，我怎么能保住我的皇冠塔勒 [68] 和杜卡特 [69] 呢？

“我经历过玛丽亚·特利莎女王的时代，愿上帝保佑她；约瑟夫皇帝的时代，愿上帝保佑他；以及弗兰茨皇帝的时代，愿上帝保佑他健康长寿，到现在依然安然无恙。

“如果有人认为在这些仁慈的君主统治下，还是比较容易将自己的钱财藏匿或者转移的话，那么现在敌人 [70] 的鼻子已经伸进了村庄，很有可能把他抓进洛林 [71] 或者香槟 [72] 的监狱里去。这样的话，这位可怜的臣民的心就要为爱国主义而流血了。”

“我明白了，”他说，“说干就干。”于是在一个伸手不见五指的黑夜里，他把钱埋进了菜园里。“天上的七星不会出卖我的。”他说。

在菜园里，他把钱埋在了甘蓝菜与甜豌豆之间的地方。然后他在旁边与糖萝卜之间的小径上又挖了一个坑，并且把挖出来的泥土全部堆在了埋钱的地方，再在四周插满美丽的花茎和菜梗，看上去就像为了制作混合泡菜而种植的那样。

星期一已经开始有轻骑兵在整个地区四处巡逻，星期二有一支新来的队伍开进了村里的磨坊，他们用白色的胳膊肘 [73] 推搡着农民们。“把钱交出来，老乡，”一个松德高 [74] 人挥舞着明晃晃的马刀喊道，“否则就准备向天父做临终祈祷吧。”

农夫表示：看在上帝的分儿上，他们可以把能找到的东西都拿走，他所有的钱在昨天和前天已经全部被抢走了。“在你们面前没有人能把东西藏起来，”他说，“你们就是法律。”

果然，他们除了几枚铜质的十字币，一枚带着玛丽亚·特利莎女皇头像的镀金五芬尼硬币，以及一枚小戒指以外，一无所获。

“老乡，”那个松德高人说道，“你肯定是把钱藏起来了，把你藏钱的地方指出来吧，否则你可以不用做临终祈祷，直接去见天父了。”

“我没法儿向您指出那个地方，”农夫说，“那帮匪徒是如此的凶恶，所以我不得不把他们带到菜园里。我可以向您指出我曾经藏钱的那个地方，并且告诉您曾经发生的事情。那帮坏人在昨天和前天已经

来过这里，并且把找到的全部钱财都带走了。”

轻骑兵们立刻把目光转向了菜园，在那里他们看到的景象与农夫所描述的毫无二致。他们中没有人想到钱就藏在土堆下面，而是看着空空如也的地洞想：“我要是早点儿来就好了。”

“要是他们没有伤害这些美丽的甘蓝菜和香罗兰就好了！”农夫说道。这就是他成功骗过了眼下这位以及之前包括弗兰茨皇帝、约瑟夫皇帝、玛丽亚·特利莎女皇以及至高无上的利奥波德一世大公在内所有接踵而至的王公贵族，成功保住埋藏在地下的钱财的方法。

土耳其故事

在土耳其有正义。

有一位商人的仆人，他在夜间赶路时感到十分疲惫，于是就把他驮着昂贵货物的马系在距护林人小屋不远的树上，自己在树荫下睡着了。

当他在晨风中被鹌鹑的拍打声惊醒的时候，发现当自己熟睡时，马儿已经不见了。

他立刻跑到这个行省的总督，也就是正驻扎在附近的卡洛斯曼·奥格鲁王子那里，在他的审判席前诉说了自己的困境。

王子倾听了一会儿，说道：“你离护林人的小屋如此之近，为什么不再向前走五十步，以确保自己的安全呢？这是由你的大意造成的过失。”

于是商人的仆人说道：“尊贵的王子，在您统治的土地下，难道我应该为在露天睡觉而感到恐惧吗？”

这番话让卡洛斯曼王子感到非常高兴，同时也感觉受了刺激。“今晚喝下这杯土耳其烈酒，”王子说，“然后回到树下再睡上一觉。”

仆人照办了。

第二天早晨，当他又好好睡了一觉，在晨风中被鹌鹑的拍打声惊醒的时候，他发现自己的马儿驮着所有珍贵的货物又被系在了他身旁，而树上吊着一个死人。那个贼，他再也见不到日出了。

在许多地方还有很多树，或大或小。

最轻的死刑判决

有人可能认为这是断头台，然而并不是！ [75]

有个男人，尽管他为祖国做出了许多贡献，并且受到了亲王的明文表彰，但还是因为一次由激情驱使的犯罪行为，被判处了死刑。

常言道：“如果乞求得不到的，祈祷也得不到。”然而由于他曾经受过亲王的明文表彰，他还是被获准选择自己最喜欢的死法，这意味着他可以选择用任意一种方式死去。

于是高等书记官来塔楼 [76] 拜访他，说道：“公爵想要向您展现他的仁慈。如果您想要被执行车轮刑，那么您将被执行车轮刑。如果您想要被执行绞刑，那么您将被执行绞刑。绞刑架上已经挂着两个人了，然而众所周知还有第三个位置。如果您想要吞耗子药的话，药剂师那儿有的是。公爵说了，无论您选择哪一种死法，都悉听尊便。然而您必须死，这您应该明白。”

于是这位罪犯说道：“如果我必须去死的话，车轮刑是一种非常憋屈的死法。而绞刑呢，尤其是在有风的时候，晃来晃去太难受了。然而您可能没有正确理解这个判决。依我来说，我一直相信，由于衰老而导致的死亡是最温和的。既然公爵让我选择死法，这就是我的选择，没人能够改变。”于是他就活了下来，没有被处决。

因此，这个男人得以重获自由，并且继续活着直到老死。公爵说：“一言既出，驷马难追。”

这个小故事来自我的岳母，如果她能够救别人的生命，她绝不会袖手旁观。

(1811年)

[75] 在古代欧洲有许多类似于前文中车轮刑的酷刑，斩首和绞刑被认为是死刑中最轻的刑罚。

[76] 古代欧洲统治者常常将塔楼用作囚禁贵族囚犯的监狱，例如著名的伦敦塔。

被欺骗的杂货商

在俄罗斯，一卢布就是一枚银质硬币，价值相当于二十七巴岑；而一帝国币 [77] 则是一枚价值十卢布的金币。

人们当然可以用一帝国币换来一卢布，比方说在牌桌上输了九卢布的时候，然而却不可能用一卢布换来一帝国币。

然而在莫斯科有一个狡猾的士兵却说：“明天我要去集市上，用一卢布做诱饵，赚上两帝国币。”

第二天，年集上的货摊已经排成了一条长龙，在每个摊位前都站着人，人们或夸耀或贬损着商品，讨价还价。人群忽而聚集忽而散开，小伙子们向姑娘们打着招呼。这时候士兵手拿一卢布来到了这里。

“这枚印着皇帝头像的卢布是谁的？是您的吗？”他向每一个摊位前站着的每一位摊主询问。

其中有位摊主其实并没有丢钱，他观察了一阵，最后想：要是你觉得这钱在你手里烧得慌，还不如拿过来给我呢。他喊道：“这边来，步兵！这个卢布是我的。”

步兵说：“如果您不喊我的话，我在人群中还真不容易找到您呢。”说着就把卢布给了摊主。

这位商人拿着这枚卢布左看右看，想从声音上确定它是否是真的。直到确定是真的之后，才把它放进了口袋。

“要是没问题的话，现在请把我的帝国币还给我。”那位步兵说道。

商人回答：“我没有拿过您的帝国币，所以我也不欠您的钱。如果您只是想开个玩笑的话，您可以把您的那一枚卢布拿回去。”

然而步兵却说：“我的一枚两帝国币已经给您了，我不是在跟您开玩笑，我要去找市场保安和警察了。”

于是他俩你一言我一语地争吵了起来，从宽容说到固执，从固执说到卑鄙，在摊位前聚集的人越来越多，就好像蜂箱上聚集的一群蜜蜂一样。

突然，有个身影像鼯鼠一样穿过了人群。

“这儿发生什么事情了？”这位警官带着手下穿过人群，一边问道。

“发生什么了？问我吗？”这位杂货商不善言辞，偏偏步兵却是个能言善辩的家伙。

步兵声称，在一刻钟之前，他在杂货商那里买了价值一卢布的商品，然而当他付钱的时候，翻遍了所有的口袋，只找到爷爷临终之前留给他的一枚价值两帝国币的金币。所以他只好把帝国币作为押金留下，去取卢布。当他拿着一卢布回来的时候，却找不到刚才那个货摊了，他只好在所有的摊位前询问：“我欠谁一卢布？”眼前这位商人承认自己就是刚才卖货给他的那一位，并且收下了那一卢布，然而他却拒绝承认关于帝国币的事情。

警官询问摊位周围的人，他们说道：“这位步兵确实曾经向每个货摊询问过这枚卢布是属于谁的，当这位杂货商听到步兵的声音，他承认这枚卢布是属于他的。他收下了卢布，并且通过听声音辨别了真伪。”

当警长听到这里，他立刻做出了裁决：“既然您已经收下了那枚卢布，那么就把士兵的帝国币还给他，否则我就让人用长钉子把您的摊位封起来，您将在属于自己的木板之间过上与世隔绝的生活，于是您将长时间忍饥挨饿，这样您就可以健康长寿了。”

这就是警察局长所说的。于是商人就这样以一帝国币的代价从步兵手里换来了一卢布。 [78]

好耐性

一个法国人骑马路过一座桥梁，这座位于河流之上的桥非常狭窄，以至于两名骑马的人都无法同时通过。

一个英国人也从另一端骑上了桥，他俩在桥的中间狭路相逢了，双方谁都不愿意给对方让路。

“一个英格兰人是不会给一个法国人让路的。”那个英格兰人说道。

“上帝啊” [79]，法国人回答，“我的马也是英格兰马 [80]，所以您如果想要我掉头，给您看看它的秃尾巴的话，门儿都没有。要不还是让您骑着的这匹英格兰马给我骑着的这匹英格兰马让路吧。您这匹看起来比我这匹要年轻一些，我这匹可是在路易十四 [81] 时代的公元1702年就参加过卡法奥泽战役 [82] 的。”

英格兰人自然对这种冒犯感到些许不快，然而他说道：“我可以等。我现在有了一个绝好的机会来读读今天的报纸。我可以一直等到您愿意给我让路为止。”说着，他就像英格兰人通常那样，非常冷漠地从口袋里掏出一张报纸，像叠手绢那样把它折了起来，骑着马在桥上看了整整一小时。

然而太阳却并不愿意长时间地注视这两个笨蛋，它飞快地朝着山头落了下去。

一小时之后，英格兰人终于看完了报纸，他把报纸重新收好，盯着法国人，说道：“好了吧？” [83]

然而法国人却不肯点头，他回答道：“英格兰人，把您的报纸给我看一会儿吧，我可以看看它，直到您愿意让路为止。”

当英格兰人终于见识到了对手的耐性的时候，他说道：“你猜怎么着，法国人？过来吧，我给你让路。”

于是英格兰人给法国人让了路。

(1812年)

[79] 此处原文为法语Par Dieu。

[80] 原文中的“英格兰人”和“英格兰马”都是德语“Engländer”，

此处法国人显然有羞辱英格兰人之意。

[81] 路易十四（Louis X IV，1638—1715），法国国王，自称“太阳王”（le Roi Solei），在位七十二年间曾发动多次对外战争，法国的版图及国际影响力均有所扩大。

[82] 在1702年期间英法两国的确为西班牙王位继承战争的交战双方，但历史文献中从未有“卡法奥泽”（Käferolse）这一地名出现，更遑论相关战役。此处显然系法国人信口开河。

[83] 此处原文为法语“Eh bien”。

伟大的游泳者

在漫长的战争爆发之前 [84]，人们还可以不受阻碍地从法国前往英国旅行，在多佛尔 [85] 喝上一小杯酒，或者买块儿衣料缝制马甲。每周有两班大型邮轮从加莱 [86] 穿过海峡开往多佛尔，然后返回。因为两国之间的海洋只有几英里宽而已 [87]。

当然，人们如果想搭船的话，必须在开船之前到达船所在地点。有一位来自加斯科涅 [88] 的法国人似乎不明白这个道理，他迟到了一刻钟，这时从加莱出发的邮轮船舱已经关闭，天空中只有云彩在飘荡。

“难道我就束手无策地在这儿坐上几天，直到下一班船过来吗？不行，”他想，“要不然，我就花十二苏 [89] 找个船夫，让他驾船跟在邮轮的后面。小船速度比大邮轮快，这样就能赶上邮轮了。”

然而当他坐进一艘敞篷的船只里的时候，船夫对他说道：“要是我想到会这样，我就带上一块遮雨布了！现在已经开始下雨了，不是吗？一会儿高高的夜空中就将降下倾盆大雨，就像天上有一座海洋将要倾泻到地上的海洋中那样。”

然而那个加斯科涅人却想：“这真有趣。”

“上帝保佑，”船夫终于说道，“我看见邮轮了。”

他们终于赶上了邮轮。当加斯科涅人于午夜时分在海中央登船，穿过客舱的小门走进船里的时候，每个人都十分好奇他从哪里来，为什么这么晚，一个人，而且浑身湿透。

这样的一次海上航行，就像坐在地窖里一样。除了船舱内的谈话、海员们的呼喊、船发出的噪声、海鸥的鸣叫以及海浪声以外，他们听不到外界的其他声音，也没有人意识到外面正在下雨。

“您看起来，”其中一个人说道，“就好像刚刚被龙骨拖曳 [90] 过，我的意思是说，被绑在船底下拖来拖去。”

“是吗？”加斯科涅人说，“您觉得有人能在游泳的时候身体保持干燥吗？如果您能找到一个这样的人，我也很想见识一下。我是来自奥莱龙 [91] 的信使，每个星期一我都要带着信件和公文游泳去大陆，因为这样速度比较快。”

“我现在要去英格兰办一些事情。如果你们允许的话，”他继续说

道，“我现在想和你们一起搭个船，遇到你们真是太幸运了。从星星判断，离多佛尔已经不远了。”

“同胞，”其中一人说道，他嘴里的烟斗冒出一团烟雾（其实他不是同胞，而是一个英格兰人），“既然您从加莱远跨重洋游到了这里，那您肯定比伦敦的那位黑人游泳者还要厉害。”

“那当然没错儿。”加斯科涅人说。

“如果您想要跟他比试比试的话，”英格兰人回答，“我下注一百金路易 [92] 赌您赢。”

加斯科涅人说：“我来！”

英格兰的富人们有在体育竞技项目上一掷千金进行赌博的传统，因此船上那位英格兰人按照他开出的价格将加斯科涅人带到了伦敦，好吃好喝地招待着，为的是让他保持良好的体力。

“阁下，”他对伦敦的一位好朋友说，“我从海上花一百基尼 [93] 找来了一个游泳者，让他跟你的摩尔人比一比怎么样？”

那位好朋友说：“行啊！”

于是第二天这两位都带着自己的游泳者来到了泰晤士河边约定的地方，这时候已经有数百人聚集在了那里，他们之间也相互下注。这个人赌摩尔人赢，那个人赌加斯科涅人赢，一先令 [94]、六先令、一基尼、二基尼、五基尼、十基尼、二十基尼。摩尔人看上去跟加斯科涅人旗鼓相当。

当两人都脱去衣服之后，加斯科涅人用一根皮带将一个小盒子绑在了腰间，他并没有说明缘由，仿佛这就是理所当然的那样。

摩尔人说：“您这是搞什么名堂？莫非您是想要向伟大的潜水员学习，在脚上绑个铅球，以免自己在逮兔子的时候跳得比兔子还高？”

加斯科涅人打开那个小盒子，说道：“这里面只有一小瓶葡萄酒、几根干香肠以及一小块面包。我正想问问您，把食物放在哪儿了。我现在要沿着泰晤士河一直游到北海，再穿过海峡进入大西洋，最后抵达加的斯 [95]。按照我的估计，直到16号我从奥莱龙岛返回之前，我们在路上不会再见面了。然而我早上会在加的斯的小马酒店订上一桌上好的午饭，等我吃完饭的时候，您应该就随后赶到了。”

聪明的读者们或许很难相信这种夸夸其谈，然而那位摩尔人却被吓得头晕目眩。

“在这只公鸭子面前，”他对他的主人说，“我肯定游不过他。您看着办吧。”说着他又重新穿上了衣服。

于是这场赌局就此宣告结束。加斯科涅人从他为英格兰人赢得的赌注当中分得了一大笔奖赏，而摩尔人则受到了每个人的耻笑。

无论大家是否发觉法国人的所作所为不过是一场骗局，每个人在从这个滑稽的故事及其出人意料的结局中得到乐趣之余，都应该认识到：此人打那以后在所有的客栈和啤酒馆里已经畅通无阻地赌了四个星期之久，而他其实一生中从来没有下过水。

天气操纵者

就如同一位筛子工匠或者一位补锅工匠那样，作为手艺人，当他居住在一个小地方的时候，他的同乡们不能给他提供全年的工作以及给养，所以他就需要在周边地区四处奔走，打工赚钱。

这位五金工匠像其他手艺人那样勤奋地在周边地区奔走，只不过他兜售的不是五金小玩意儿，而是欺骗和谎言。他就靠着蛊惑人心在客栈里骗吃骗喝。

有一天他来到了上埃欣根 [96]，径直去了镇长那儿。

“镇长先生，”他说道，“您难道不想换个天气吗？刚才我从您的田地上经过，土地深处已经吸收了太多雨水，这对庄稼的生长可不好。”

镇长表示，说起来倒是轻巧，要做起来可就需要本事了。

“嗯，”这位“五金工匠”回答，“在这一趟旅行中我就做到了。在意大利波隆纳改变天气的人不就是我吗？那里种着酸橙和柠檬，所有的天气都按照安排好的那样出现了。这方面你们德国人已经落后了。”

这位镇长是个正直的好人，他属于那种想快速致富，而不是缓慢积累的人。所以他接受了这位“五金工匠”的提议，然而还是希望保持一些谨慎。

“明天早上就给我来个晴天试试吧，”他说，“天空中还要有一些淡淡的白云，这样一整天一缕缕闪亮的阳光就可以从其间温和地投射下来。在中午时分您可以放飞第一只黄色的蝴蝶，在傍晚时分天气又重新变得凉爽。”

“五金工匠”回答：“我可不接只有一天的活儿，镇长先生。这对我来说不合算。我从来都只接为期一年的活儿，到那时候您就要为找不到足够的地方存放您的粮食和新酿的葡萄酒而发愁了。”

关于镇长先生提出的关于操纵一年天气所需要的费用问题，他表示：一切准备就绪至少需要三天时间，在此期间他除了每天一枚古尔登以及免费的酒水以外，别无所求。

“打那以后，您在每一桶 [97] 葡萄酒上都能收获更多，”他说道，“比最好的年份还要多四分之一。每一马尔脱 [98] 粮食都能多收一赛斯特 [99]。”

“这好像不多啊。”镇长说。

在当地，人们说“多”的时候，通常是用“veil”，而不是“viel”。为了表示对“五金工匠”的尊敬，镇长特地用了标准德语。

正当他从柜子里取出纸笔，想要让“五金工匠”把未来的天气按月份写下来的时候，“五金工匠”提出了新的意见：“这可不行，镇长先生！如果这样的话，您就得听听公民们的意见。毕竟天气是一件公共事务，您不能指望所有人都赞同您对天气的安排。”

镇长说道：“您说得对！您真是个明白事理的人。”

聪明的读者可能已经识破了“五金工匠”的伎俩，正如同他之前估计的那样，公民们不可能就这个问题达成一致。第一次镇民大会没有任何结果，第七次也没有。在第八次大会上，在经过一系列严肃的演讲之后，有位聪明的律师提出的意见终于获得了镇民们的一致认可：最好把钱付给这位天气操纵者，把他送走。

于是镇长告诉天气操纵者：“这是您的九古尔登，麻烦制造者，请您务必要离开，把谋杀和凶杀从镇上带走。”

“五金工匠”并不需要第二遍催促。他拿上这笔钱，留下了大约二十大壶 [100] 葡萄酒的酒馆账单，天气也一如既往没有任何改变。

总之，这位“五金工匠”真是一位有教育意义的人物啊。

注意：迄今为止，那位至高的统治者已经按照他自己的意志将天气安排妥当。即使我们的日历制定者、日月星辰和各界贤达 [101]，也不会轻易去问及这方面的问题，更遑论改变岁月静好的日子了。所以如果有人提起这事儿，还是洗洗睡吧。

最安全的路 [102]

有些时候即使是一个醉汉也会思考，或者突然冒出一个好主意，比如不走平时熟悉的道路从城里回家，而是从水里抄个近道。

他遇到了一位充满爱心、非常乐意向落难之人或者醉汉伸出援手的绅士。

“好伙计，”绅士说，“您没有注意到您正在水里走着吗？道路在这边哪！”

醉汉回答：尽管他觉得在干燥的道路上走着也很舒服，但这一次他还是想往另一边走走。

“话虽如此，”绅士说道，“还是让我帮您从溪水里出来吧。”

“话虽如此，”醉汉回答，“还是让我待在水里吧。要是我在小溪里摔倒了，那么我还在路上。可如果我在路上摔倒了，我就得掉进小溪里了。”

他一边这么说着，一边用食指敲打着额头，仿佛那里面除了醉意之外，还有别人意想不到的其他什么东西。

The Silver Spoon

An officer in Vienna was thinking, 'Just for once I'll dine at the Red Ox,' and into the Red Ox he went. There were regulars there and strangers, important and unimportant people, honest men and rascals such as you'll find any-where. They were eating and drinking, some a great deal, others little. They talked and argued about this and that, about how it had rained rocks at Stannern in Moravia, for instance, or about Machin who fought the great wolf in France. When the meal was almost over one or two were drinking a small jug of Tokay to round things off, one man was making little balls from bread crumbs as if he were an apothecary making pills, another was fiddling with his knife or his fork or his silver spoon. It was then the officer happened to notice how a fellow in a green huntsman's coat was playing with a silver spoon when it suddenly disappeared up his sleeve and stayed there.

Someone else might have thought, 'It's no business of mine,' and said nothing, or have made a great fuss. The officer thought, 'I don't know who this green spoon-hunter is and what I might let myself in for,' and he kept as quiet as a mouse, until the landlord came to collect his money. But when the landlord came to collect his money the officer, too, picked up a silver spoon, and tucked it through two button holes in his coat, in one and out the other as soldiers sometimes do in war when they take their spoons with them, but no soup. As the officer was paying his bill the landlord was looking at his coat and thinking, 'That's a funny medal this gentleman's wearing! He must have distinguished himself battling with a bowl of cray-fish soup to have got a silver spoon as a medal! Or could it just be one of mine?' But when the officer had paid the landlord he said, without a sign of a smile on his face, 'The spoon's included, I take it? The bill seems enough to cover it.' The landlord said, 'Nobody's tried that one on me before If you don't have a spoon at home I'll give you a tin one, but you can't have one of my silver spoons!' Then the officer stood up, slapped the landlord on the shoulder and laughed. 'It was only a joke we were hav-ing,' he said, 'that gentleman over there in the green jacket and me! - My green friend, if you give back that spoon you have up your sleeve I'll give mine back too.' When the spoon-hunter saw that he had been caught in the act and that an honest eye had observed his dishonest hand, he thought, 'Better pretend it was a joke,' and gave back his spoon. So the landlord got his property back, and the spoon thief smiled too - but not for long. For when the other customers saw what had happened they set about him with curses and hounded him out of the Holy of Holies and the landlord sent the boots after him with a big stick. But he stood the worthy officer a bottle of Tokay to toast the health of all honest men.

Remember : You must not steal silver spoons!

Remember : Someone will always stand up for what is right.

The Cheap Meal

There is an old saying : The biter is sometimes bit. But the landlord at the Lion in a certain little town was bitten first. He received a well-dressed customer who curtly demanded a good bowl of broth, the best his money would buy. Then he ordered beef and vegetables too for his money. The landlord asked him, all politeness, if he wouldn't like a glass of wine with it. 'Indeed I would,' his guest replied, 'if I can have a good one for my money.' When he had finished, and he enjoyed it all, he took a worn six-kreuzer piece from his pocket and said, 'Here you are, landlord, there's my money!' The landlord said, 'What's this? You owe me a thaler!' The customer answered, 'I didn't ask for a meal for a thaler, but for my money. Here it is. It's all I have. If you gave me too much for it then that's your fault!' It wasn't really such a clever trick. It called only for cheek and a devil-may-care view of the consequences. But the best is yet to come.

'You're an utter villain,' said the landlord, 'and don't deserve this. But you can have the meal for nothing and take this twenty-four kreuzer bit as well. Just keep quiet about it and go over to my neighbour who keeps the Bear and try the same trick on him!' He said this because he had had a quarrel with his neighbour and resented his success and each was keen to do the other down.

But the artful customer smiled as he took the money he was offered in his one hand and reached carefully for the door with the other, wished the innkeeper good after-noon, and said, 'I went to the Bear first, it was the landlord there who sent me over here!'

So really both of the innkeepers had been tricked; the cunning customer took advantage of their quarrel. Yet he might have also earned a further reward, grateful thanks from both of them, if they had learnt the right lesson from it and had made things up between them. For peace pays, whereas quarrels have to be paid for.

Dinner Outside

We often complain how difficult or impossible it is to get on with certain people. That may of course be true. But many such people are not bad but only strange, and if you got to know them well with all their ins and outs and learnt to deal with them properly, neither too wilfully nor too indulgently, then many of them might easily be brought to their senses. After all, one servant did manage to do that with his master. Sometimes he could do noth-ing right by him and, as often happens in such situations, was blamed for many things that were not his fault. Thus one day his master came home in a very bad mood and sat down to dinner. The soup was too hot or too cold for him, or neither; no matter, he was in a bad mood! So he picked up the dish and threw it and its contents out of the open window into the yard below. So what do you think the servant did? He didn't hesitate, he threw the meat he was bringing to table down into the yard after the soup, then the bread, the wine, and finally the table-cloth and everything on it, all down into the yard too. 'What the devil do you think you're doing?' said his mas-ter angrily and rose threateningly to his feet. But the servant replied quietly and calmly, 'Pardon me if I mis-understood your wishes. I thought you wanted to eat outside today. The air's warm, the sky's blue, and look how lovely the apple blossom is and how happy the bees are sipping at the flowers!' Never again would the soup go out through the window! His master saw he was wrong, cheered up at the sight of the beautiful spring day, smiled to himself at his man's quick thinking, and in his heart he was grateful to him for teaching him a lesson.

The Clever Judge

Not everything that happens in the East is so wrong. We are told the following event took place there. A rich man had been careless and lost a large sum of money sewn up in a cloth. He made his loss known, and in the usual way offered a reward for its return, in this case a hundred thalers. Soon a good honest man came to see him. 'I have found your money,' he said. 'This must be yours.' He had the open look of an upright fellow with a clear conscience, and that was good. The rich man looked happy too, but only at seeing his precious money again. As for his honesty, that we shall see! He counted the money and worked out quickly how he could cheat this man of the promised reward. 'My friend,' he said, 'there were in fact eight hundred thalers sewn up in this cloth. But I can find only seven hundred. So I take it you must have cut open a corner and taken your one hundred thalers' reward. You acted quite properly. I thank you!' That was not good. But we haven't got to the end yet. Honesty is the best policy, and wrongdoing never proves right. The honest man who had found the money and who was less concerned for his reward than for his blameless name protested that he had found the packet just as he handed it over, and had handed over exactly what he had found. In the end they appeared in court. Both of them stuck to their stories, one that eight hundred thalers were sewn up in the cloth, the other that he had left the packet just as he found it and had taken nothing from it. It was hard to know what to do. But the clever judge, who seemed from the outset to recognize the honesty of the one and the bad faith of the other, approached the problem as follows. He had both swear their statements on solemn oath, and then passed the following judgement : 'Since one of you lost eight hundred thalers and the other found a packet containing only seven hundred, the package found by that second party cannot be the one to which the first party has just claim. You, my honest friend, take back the money you found and put it into safe keeping until the person who lost only seven hundred thalers makes himself known. And you I can only advise to be patient until someone says he has found your eight hundred thalers.' That was his judgement, and that was final.

The Artful Hussar

A hussar in the last war knew that the farmer he met on the road had just sold his hay for a hundred guilders and was on his way home with the money. So he asked him for something to buy tobacco and brandy. Who knows, he might have been happy with a few coppers. But the farmer swore black and blue he had spent his last kreuzer in the nearby village and had nothing left. 'If we weren't so far from my quarters,' said the hussar, 'we could both be helped out of this difficulty; but you have nothing, and neither have I; so we'll just have to go to Saint Alphonsus! We'll share what he gives us like brothers.' This Saint Alphonsus stood carved from stone in an old, little frequented chapel in the fields. At first the farmer was not too keen to make the pilgrimage. But the hussar allowed no objection, and on the way he was so vigorous in his assurances that Saint Alphonsus had never let him down when in need that the farmer began to cherish hopes himself. So you think the hussar's comrade and accomplice was hiding in the deserted chapel, do you? Not a bit of it! No one was there, only the stone figure of Alphonsus, and they knelt before him, and the hussar appeared to be praying fervently. 'This is it!' he whispered to the farmer, 'the saint has just beckoned to me.' He got to his feet and went to put his ear to the lips of stone and came back delighted. 'He's given me a guilder, he says it's in my purse!' And indeed to the other's amazement the hussar took out a guilder, but one that he had had there all the time, and shared it like a brother as promised. That made sense to the farmer and he agreed that the hussar should try again. All went just as before. This time the hussar was even happier when he came back to the farmer. 'Now Saint Alphonsus has given us a hundred guilders all in one go! They're in your purse.' The farmer turned deadly white when he heard this and repeated his protests that he had no money at all. But the hussar persuaded him he must trust Saint Alphonsus and just take a look; Alphonsus had never deceived him! So whether he liked it or not he had to turn his pockets inside out and empty them. Then the hundred guilders appeared all right, and since he had taken half of the hussar's guilder it was no use pleading and imploring, he had to share his hundred.

That was all very artful and cunning, but that doesn't make it right, especially in a chapel.

The Dentist

Two loafers who had been roaming around the country together for some time because they were too lazy to work or had learnt no trade finally got into a tight corner because they had no money left, and they saw no quick way of getting any. Then they had this idea : they went begging at doors for bread which they intended to use, not to fill their stomachs, but to stage a trick. For they kneaded and rolled it into little balls and coated them with the dust from old, rotten worm-eaten wood so that they looked just like yellow pills from the chemist. Then for a couple of pence they bought some sheets of red paper at the bookbinder's (for a pretty colour often helps take people in) . Next they cut up the paper and wrapped the pills in it, six or eight to a little packet. Then one of them went on ahead to a village where there was a fair and into the Red Lion where he hoped to find a good crowd. He ordered a glass of wine, but he didn't drink it but sat sadly in a corner holding his face in his hand, moaning under his breath and fidgeting and turning this way and that. The good farmers and townsfolk in the inn thought the poor fellow must have terrible toothache. Yet what could they do? They pitied him, they consoled him, saying it would soon go away, then went back to their drinks and their market-day affairs. Meanwhile the other idler came in. The two scoundrels pretended they had never seen each other in their lives before. They didn't look at each other until the one seemed to react to the other's moans in the corner. 'My friend,' he said, 'have you got toothache?' and he strode slowly over to him. 'I am Dr Schnauzius Rapunzius from Trafalgar,' he continued. Such resounding foreign names help take people in too, you know, like pretty colours. 'If you take my tooth pills,' he went on, 'I can easily get rid of the pain, one of them will do the trick, at most two.' 'Please God you're right!' said the other rogue. So now the fine doctor Rapunzius took one of the red packets from his pocket and prescribed one pill, to be placed on the tongue and bitten on firmly. The customers at the other tables now craned their necks and one by one they came over to observe the miracle cure. You can imagine what happened! But no, the first bite seemed to do the patient no good at all, he gave a terrible scream. The doctor was pleased! They had, he said, got the better of the pain, and quickly he gave him the second pill to be taken likewise. Now suddenly the pain had all gone. The patient jumped for joy, wiped the sweat from his brow, though there was none there, and pretended to show his thanks by pressing more than a trifling sum into his saviour's hand. The trick was artfully done and had its desired effect. For all those present now wanted some of these excellent pills too. The doctor offered them at twenty-four kreuzers a packet, and they were all sold in a few minutes. Of course the two scoundrels now left separately one after the other, met up to laugh at the people's stupidity, and had a good time on their money.

The fools had paid dear for a few crumbs of bread ! Even in times of famine you never got so little for twenty-four kreuzers. But the waste of money was not the worst part of it. For in time the pellets of breadcrumbs naturally became as hard as stone. So when a year later a poor dupe had toothache and confidently bit on a pill with the offending tooth, once and then again, just imagine the awful pain that he had got himself for twenty-four kreuzers instead of a cure!

From this we can learn how easy it is to be tricked if you believe what is told you by any vagrant whom you meet for the first time in your life, have never seen before and will never see again. Some of you who read this will perhaps be thinking : 'I was once silly like that too and brought suffering on myself!'

Remember : Those who can, earn their money elsewhere and don't go around villages and fairs with holes in their stockings, or a white buckle on one shoe and a yellow one on the other.

A Short Stage

The postmaster told a Jew who drove up to his relay station with two horses, 'From here on you'll have to take three! It's a hard pull uphill and the surface is still soft. But that way you'll be there in three hours.' The Jew asked, 'When will I get there if I take four?' 'In two hours.' 'And if I take six?' 'In one hour.' 'I'll tell you what,' said the Jew after a while, 'Harness up eight. That way I shan't have to set off at all!'

Strange Reckoning at the Inn

Sometimes a cheeky trick comes off, sometimes it costs you your coat, often your skin as well. But in this case it was only coats. One day, you see, three merry students on their travels didn't have a brass farthing left between them, they had spent everything on a good time, but nevertheless they went into another inn intending to leave without sneaking out by the back door, and it suited them fine that they found only the landlord's nice young wife inside. They ate and drank merrily and talked very learnedly about the world being many thousands of years old and how it would last as long again, and how each year, to the day and the hour, everything that happened came to pass as it had done on that day and at that hour six thousand years before. Eventually one of them turned to the landlady, who was sitting on one side by the window knitting and listening attentively, and said, 'That's how it is, ma'am, we've had to learn that from our learned tomes.' And one had the impudence to assert that he just about remembered their being there six thousand years ago, and he remembered the landlady's pretty friendly face very well indeed. They carried on talking for some time, and the more the landlady seemed to believe everything they said the more the young gadabouts tucked into the wine and the meat and a fistful of pretzels, and in the end their bill stood chalked up at five guilders and sixteen kreuzers. They had eaten and drunk their fill, and now they came out with the trick they had planned.

'Ma'am,' said one, 'this time we are short of money, for there are so many inns on the road. But since we know you're a clever woman we hope that as old friends we can have credit here, and if you agree, in six thousand years'time when we come again we'll pay our old bill together with the new one.' The sensible landlady was not upset by that, it was fine by her, she was delighted that the young gentlemen were well served. But before they had noticed her move she was standing in front of the door and was asking the gentlemen kindly just to settle now the bill of five guilders and sixteen kreuzers that they owed from six thousand years ago, since, as they said, everything that happened now was an exact repetition of what had taken place before. Unfortunately just at that moment the village mayor came in with a couple of sturdy men to enjoy a glass of wine together. That didn't suit our gay young dogs at all! For now the official verdict was pronounced and carried out : you had to give it to some-one who had allowed credit for six thousand years! The gentlemen were therefore to pay their old debt immediately or leave their newish overcoats as a pledge. They were obliged to take the second option, and the landlady promised to return their coats in six thousand years'time when they came again with a bit more money.

This took place in 1805 on the 17th of April in the inn at Segringen.

Unexpected Reunion

At Falun in Sweden, a good fifty years ago, a young miner kissed his pretty young bride-to-be and said, 'On the feast of Saint Lucia the parson will bless our love and we shall be man and wife and start a home of our own.' 'And may peace and love dwell there with us,' said his lovely bride, and smiled sweetly, 'for you are everything to me, and without you I'd sooner be in the grave than anywhere else.' When however, before the feast of Saint Lucia, the parson had called out their names in church for the second time : 'If any of you know cause, or just hindrance, why these two persons should not be joined together in holy Matrimony' - Death paid a call. For the next day when the young man passed her house in his black miner's suit (a miner is always dressed ready for his own funeral) , he tapped at the window as usual and wished her good morning all right, but he did not wish her good evening. He did not return from the mine, and in vain that same morning she sewed a red border on a black neckerchief for him to wear on their wedding day, and when he did not come back she put it away, and she wept for him, and never forgot him.

In the meantime the city of Lisbon in Portugal was destroyed by an earthquake, the Seven Years War came and went, the Emperor Francis I died, the Jesuits were dissolved, Poland was partitioned, the Empress MariaTheresa died, and Struensee was executed, and America became independent, and the combined French and Spanish force failed to take Gibraltar. The Turks cooped up General Stein in the Veterane Cave in Hungary, and the Emperor Joseph died too. King Gustavus of Sweden conquered Russian Finland, the French Revolution came and the long war began, and the Emperor Leopold II too was buried. Napoleon defeated Prussia, the English bom-barded Copenhagen, and the farmers sowed and reaped. The millers ground the corn, the blacksmiths wielded their hammers, and the miners dug for seams of metal in their workplace under the ground.

But in 1809, within a day or two of the feast of Saint John, when the miners at Falun were trying to open up a passage between two shafts, they dug out from the rubble and the vitriol water, a good three hundred yards below ground, the body of a young man soaked in ferrous vitriol but otherwise untouched by decay and unchanged, so that all his features and his age were still clearly recognizable, as if he had died only an hour before or had just nodded off at work. Yet when they brought him to the surface his father and mother and friends and acquaintances were all long since dead, and no one claimed to know the sleeping youth or to remember his misadventure, until the woman came who had once been promised to the miner who one day had gone below and had not returned. Grey and bent, she hobbled up on a crutch to where he lay and recognized her bridegroom; and, more in joyous rapture than in grief, she sank down over the beloved corpse, and it was some time before she had recovered from her fervent emotion. 'It is my betrothed,' she said at last, 'whom I have mourned these past fifty years, and now God grants that I see him once more before I die. A week before our wedding he went under ground and never came up again.' The hearts of all those there were moved to sadness and tears when they saw the former bride-to-be as an old woman whose beauty and strength had left her, and the groom still in the flower of his youth; and how the flame of young love was rekindled in her breast after fifty years, yet he did not open his mouth to smile, nor his eyes to recognize her; and how finally she, as the sole relative and the only person who had claim to him, had the miners carry him into her house until his grave was made ready for him in the churchyard.

The next day when the grave lay ready in the church-yard and the miners came to fetch him she opened a casket and put the black silk neckerchief with the red stripes on him, and then she went with him in her best Sunday dress, as if it were her wedding day, not the day of his burial. You see, as they lowered him into his grave in the churchyard she said, 'Sleep well for another day or a week or so longer in your cold wedding bed, and don't let time weigh heavy on you! I have only a few things left to do, and I shall join you soon, and soon the day will dawn.'

'What the earth has given back once it will not withhold again at the final call', she said as she went away and looked back over her shoulder once more.

The Sly Pilgrim

A few years ago an idler roamed around the countryside pretending to be a pious pilgrim, saying he came from Paderborn and was making for the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, and already at the Coach and Horses in Mülheim he was asking, 'How far is it to Jerusalem now?' They told him, 'Seven hundred hours. But you'll save a quarter of an hour if you take the path to Mauchen.' So he went by way of Mauchen to save himself a quarter of an hour on his long journey. That wasn't such a bad idea. You must not scorn a small gain or a bigger one won't come your way. You more often get a chance to save or make threepence than a florin. But eight threepennies make a florin, and if on a journey of seven hundred hours you can save a quarter of an hour every five hours, over the whole journey you will save - now, who can work that out? How many hours? But that wasn't how our supposed pilgrim saw it! Since he was only after an easy life and a good meal he didn't care which way he went. As the old saying goes, a beggar can never take the wrong turning, it's a poor village indeed where he can't collect more than the cost of the shoe leather he has worn out on the road, especially if he goes barefoot. Yet our pilgrim intended to get back as soon as he could to the main road where he'd find rich people's houses and good cooking. For this rascal wasn't content, as a true pilgrim should be, with common food given in compassion by a pious hand, he wanted nothing but nourishing pebble soup! You see, whenever he saw a nice inn by the road, for instance the Post House at Krozingen or the Basel Arms at Schliengen, he would go in and very humbly and hungrily ask for a nice soup made of pebbles and water, in God's name, he had no money. And when the innkeeper's wife took pity on him and said, 'Pious pilgrim, pebbles are not easy to digest!', he said, 'That's just it! Pebbles last longer than bread and it's a long way to Jerusalem. But if you were to give me a little glass of wine too, in God's name, it would help me digest them.' Now if she said, 'But good pilgrim, a soup like that won't give you any strength at all!' then he replied, 'Well, if you use broth instead of water then of course it would be more nourishing.' And when she brought him his broth and said, 'The bits at the bottom are still a bit hard, I'm afraid,' then he'd say, 'You're right, and the broth looks a little thin. Would you have a couple of spoonfuls of vegetables to add to it, or a scrap of meat, or maybe both?' If now the innkeeper's wife still felt sorry for him and put some meat and vegetables in the bowl, he said, 'God bless you! Now just hand me a piece of bread and I'll tuck into your soup!' Then he would push back the sleeves of his pilgrim's habit, sit down and set to work with relish, and when he had eaten the last crumb of bread, drained the wine, and finished the last morsel of meat and vegetables and the last drop of broth, he would wipe his mouth on the tablecloth or his sleeve, or perhaps he wouldn't bother, and he'd say, 'Missus, your soup has strengthened me as a good soup should, what a shame I can't find room for the nice pebbles now! But put them by, and when I come back I'll bring you a holy conch from the seashore at Ascalon or a Jericho rose.'

The Commandant and the Light Infantry in Hersfeld

In the last campaign in Prussia and Russia when the French Army and a large part of the allied troops were in Poland and Prussia, a contingent of the Baden Light Infantry was in Hessen and stationed at Hersfeld. For the Emperor had taken that state at the beginning of the campaign and stationed troops there. The inhabitants who preferred the way things had been before defied the new order and there were several acts of lawlessness, particularly in the town of Hersfeld. In one incident a French officer was killed. The French Emperor was engaged face to face with great numbers of the enemy and couldn't allow hostilities behind his back or let a spark spread into a great fire. The unfortunate people of Hersfeld thus had cause to regret their rashness. For the Emperor ordered the town to be looted, set alight at each corner and burnt to the ground.

This town of Hersfeld has many factories and thus many rich inhabitants and fine buildings; and all of us with a heart can understand how its unfortunate people, those fathers and mothers with families, felt when they heard the dreadful news. The poor whose possessions could be carried off in one pair of arms were just as much affected as the rich whose goods couldn't all be loaded on a train of wagons. Great houses on the town square and small dwellings in the alleyways are all the same when burnt to the ground, just like rich and poor in the graveyard.

But the worst didn't happen. The French Commandant in Kassel and Hersfeld interceded and the punishment was reduced. Only four houses were to be burnt down, and that was lenient. But the plundering was to take place as ordered, and that was hard enough. The wretched townsfolk, hearing this latest decision, were so cowed and robbed of all presence of mind that the benevolent Commandant himself had to urge them, instead of weeping and pleading in vain, to remove their most precious possessions in the short time that was left. The dreadful hour arrived, the drums sounded over the wails of anguish. The soldiers hurried to their place of assembly through the crowds fleeing in despair. Then the stalwart Commandant of Hersfeld stood before the ranks of the infantry, and first he painted a vivid picture of the sad fate of the townspeople, then he said, 'Men, you now have permission to loot! Those who wish to take part, fall out!' Not one man moved. Not a single one! The order was repeated. Not one pair of boots stirred, and if the Commandant had intended the town to be plundered he would have had to do it himself. But no one was more pleased than he was that things turned out as they did, that is easy to tell. When the townsfolk learnt this, it was as if they woke from a bad dream. No one can describe their joy. They sent a delegation to the Commandant to thank him for his kindness and magnanimity, and offered him a handsome gift to mark their gratitude. Who knows what they might not have done! But the Commandant refused and said he wouldn't be paid for a good deed.

This happened in Hersfeld in the year 1807, and the town is still standing.

A Poor Reward

When in the last Prussian war the French came to Berlin where the King of Prussia resides, a great deal of the royal property as well as other people's was taken and carried off or sold. For war brings nothing, it only takes. Much was claimed as booty, however well it was hidden they found it, but not everything. A large store of royal building timber remained undiscovered and untouched for some time. But eventually a rascal among the king's own subjects thought, there's a fair penny to be made here, and with a smirk and a wink he went to tell the French com-mandant what a lovely stack of oak and pine logs was still at such and such a place, and it was worth a few thousand guilders. But the French commandant paid him badly for this betrayal and said, 'Just you leave those fine logs where they are! There's no call to deprive the enemy of his most basic needs. For when your king returns he will need timber for new gallows for trusty subjects like you!'

Your Family Friend can only applaud that, and he would make a present of a few logs from his own coppice if they were needed.

A Curious Ghost Story

Last autumn a gentleman was travelling through Schlien-gen, a nice little place. And as he was walking up the hill to spare the horses he told a man from Grenzach the following story of what had happened to him.

Six months earlier this gentleman was on his way to Denmark, and late one evening he arrived in a village with a fine mansion on a hill outside, and he wanted to stay the night. But the innkeeper said he had no room, there was a hanging the next day and three hangmen were staying with him. So the gentleman replied, 'Then I'll ask up there in the big house. The owner, the governor or whoever he is, will take me in and find a spare bed for me.' The innkeeper said, 'There are plenty of fine beds with silk hangings up there all ready made up, and I'm in charge of the keys. But I wouldn't advise you to go there! Three months ago the lord and the lady and the young master went away on a long journey, and since then the mansion house has been haunted by ghosts. The steward and the servants had to leave, and all the others who have been to the house never went back a second time.' Our stranger smiled. For he was a plucky man who wasn't afraid of ghosts, and he said, 'I'll risk it!' Despite all the innkeeper's objections he had to hand over the key, and after the traveller had put together what was needed to pay a visit on ghosts he went to the mansion with his servant who was travelling with him.

Once inside he didn't undress or get ready for bed, but waited to see what happened. He put two lights to burn on the table and a pair of loaded pistols next to them, and to pass away the time he picked up the Rhinelanders' Family Friend, bound in gold paper, which was hanging by a red silk ribbon under the mirror in its frame on the wall, and looked at the nice pictures. For a long time nothing happened. But when midnight stirred in the church tower and the clock struck twelve, and a rainstorm was passing over the house and large drops were beating against the window, there were three loud knocks on the door and a ghastly apparition with black squinting eyes, a nose half a yard long, gnashing teeth, a beard like a goat and hair all over its body came into the room and said in a horrible growl : ‘I am the lord Mephistopheles. Welcome to my palace! Have you said your goodbyes to your wife and children?’The visitor felt a cold shiver run up from his big toes over his back and up under his night-cap, and his poor servant was in a worse state still. But when this Mephistopheles came towards him, scowling dreadfully and stepping high as if he was crossing a floor of flames, the unfortunate gentleman thought : in God’s name, this is the test! And he stood up boldly and pointed his pistol at the monster and said, ‘Halt, or I’ll shoot!’ Not every ghost can be stopped like that, for even if you pull the trigger it doesn’t go off, or the bullet flies back and hits you instead of the target. But Mephistopheles raised his first finger in warning, turned slowly on his heels and strode away just as he had come. Now when our traveller saw that this devil had respect for gunpowder, he thought, ‘There’s no danger now!’, picked up a light in his free hand and followed the ghost cautiously along the passage; and his servant who was standing behind him ran for all he was worth out of this blessed place and down to the village, thinking he’d sooner spend the night with the hangmen than with spooks.

But suddenly in the passage the ghost disappeared from under the eyes of its plucky pursuer just as if it had gone through the floor. And when the gentleman went on another few paces to see where it had gone, all at once there was no floor under his feet and he fell down through a hole towards a flaming fire, and he himself thought he was on the way to hell. But after dropping about ten feet he found himself lying unharmed on a heap of hay in a cellar. And six weird fellows were standing around the fire, that Mephistopheles with them. All sorts of strange implements were piled up around them, and two tables stood heaped with shining thalers, each one more lovely than the other.

Now the stranger knew what was going on. For this was a secret band of forgers, all with blood running in their veins. They had taken advantage of the owner’s absence and set up their mint in his mansion, and some of them were probably servants of the house who knew their way about; and to make sure they were not disturbed and discovered they wailed like ghosts, and anyone who came to the house was so frightened he never came back to take a second look. Yet the plucky traveller now had cause to regret his lack of prudence in not listening to the innkeeper's warnings. For he was pushed through a narrow opening into a small dark room and could hear them deciding his fate : 'The best thing is to kill him!' said one. But another said, 'First we must question him, find out who he is and where he's from.' When they then learnt he was a man of consequence and on his way to Copenhagen to see the king they looked at each other wide-eyed. And when he was back in the dark storeroom they said, 'This is a bad business. For if he's missed and they find out from the innkeeper that he came here and didn't leave, the hussars will come overnight and fetch us out, and there's plenty of hemp in the fields this year, so hang-men's nooses come cheap.' So they told their prisoner they would let him go if he swore an oath not to betray them, threatening they would have him watched in Copenhagen. And he had to tell them on oath where he lived. He told them, 'Next to the Green Man, on the left in the big house with green shutters.' Then they poured him some Burgundy wine and he watched them coining their thalers until it was light.

When the morning light shone down through the gratings, and they heard the sound of whips on the road and the cowherd blowing his horn, the traveller took leave of his night-time companions, thanked them for having him and went gaily back to the inn, quite forgetting that he had left his watch and pipe and the pistols behind in the mansion. The innkeeper said, 'Thank God you're back, I didn't get a wink of sleep! How did you get on?' But the traveller thought, an oath is an oath, and you mustn't take God's name in vain to save your life. So he said nothing, and as the bell was ringing and the wretched malefactor was being led out everyone ran off to watch. He said nothing in Copenhagen either, and almost forgot the incident himself.

A few weeks later, however, he received a parcel by the post, and in it were a pair of expensive new pistols inlaid with silver, a new gold watch set with diamonds, a Turkish pipe with a gold chain and a silk tobacco-pouch embroidered with gold, and in the pouch was a note. It said, 'We are sending you this to make up for the fright we gave you and to thank you for keeping quiet. It's all over now, and you can tell anyone you like.' So the traveller told the man from Grenzach, and it was that same gold watch that he took out at the top of the hill to check that the clock at Hertingen was striking noon on time, and later on in the Stork in Basel a French general offered him seventy-five new doubloons for it. But he wouldn't part with it.

One Word Leads to Another

A rich man in Swabia sent his son to Paris to learn French and a few manners. After a year or more his father's farm-hand came to see him. The son was greatly surprised and cried out joyfully, 'Hans, whatever are you doing here? How are things at home, what's the news?'

'Nothing much, Mr William, though your fine raven copped it two weeks ago, the one the gamekeeper gave you.'

'Oh, the poor bird,' replied Mr William. 'What hap-pened to it?'

'Well, you see, he ate too much carrion when our fine horses died one after the other. I said he would.'

'What! My father's four fine greys are dead?' Mr William asked. 'How did that happen?'

'Well, you see, they were worked too hard hauling water when the house and the barns burned down, and it did no good.'

'Oh no!' exclaimed Mr William, horrified. 'Our house burnt down? When was that?'

'Well, you see, nobody thought of a fire when your father lay in his coffin. He was buried at night with torches. A small spark soon spreads.'

'That's terrible news!' exclaimed Mr William in his dis-tress. 'My father dead? And how is my sister?'

'Well, you see, your late father died of grief when the young Miss had a child and no father for it. It's a boy.'

'There's nothing much else to tell,' he added.

A Bad Bargain

In the great city of London and round about it there are an extraordinary number of silly fools who take a childish delight in other people's money or fob watches or pre-cious rings and don't rest until they have them for themselves. Sometimes they get them by cunning and trickery, but more often by fearless assault, sometimes in broad daylight on the open road. Some of them do well, others don't. The London jailors and executioners can tell a few tales about that! One day, however, a strange thing happened to a certain rich and distinguished man. The King and many other great lords and their ladies were gathered on a lovely summer's day in a royal park where the winding paths led to a wood in the distance. Crowds of other people were there too, they didn't think their journey or their time wasted if they could see that their beloved King and his family were happy and well. There was food and drink, music and dancing. There were walks to be taken in pairs or alone along the inviting paths and between scented rose bushes. A man, well-dressed so that he appeared to be one of the company, took up his stand with a pistol under his coat by a tree at a secluded spot where the park bordered on the wood, waiting for some-one to come his way. And someone did come, a gentleman with a ring sparkling on his finger, a tinkling watch chain, diamonds in his buckles, and a ribbon and a star on his breast. He was strolling in the cool shade and thinking of nothing in particular. And while he was thinking of nothing in particular the fellow behind the tree stepped out, bowed low, pulled his pistol from under his coat, pointed it at the gentleman's breast and asked him politely to keep quiet, no one need know about their conversation! You can't help feeling uneasy when a pistol is aimed at you, you can never be sure what's in it! The gentleman very sensibly thought : better your money than your life, better lose a ring than a finger! and he promised to keep quiet.

'Now, Your Honour,' said this fellow, 'would you part with your two gold watches for a good price? Our school-master adjusts the clock every day, so we can never be sure of the right time, and you can't see the figures on the sundial.' The gentleman had no choice, he was obliged to sell his watches to the scoundrel for a few pence, hardly the price of a glass of wine. In this way the rascal bought his ring and his buckles and the decorations off his breast, one after another and each for a paltry sum, with the pis-tol in his left hand all the time. When at last the gentleman thought, now he'll let me go, thank God!, the rogue began again.

'Your Honour, since we do business so easily, why don't you buy some of my things from me?' The gentleman thought, I must grin and bear it, that's the expression, and said, 'Show me what you have!' The fellow took a collection of trinkets from his pocket, things he had bought at a tuppenny stall or filched from somewhere, and the gentleman had to buy them all from him, one after the other, none of them cheap. Eventually the rogue had nothing left but the pistol, but seeing that the gentleman still had a couple of lovely doubloons in his green silk purse he said, 'Sir, won't you buy this pistol of mine with what's left in your purse? It's made by the best gun-maker in London and it's worth two doubloons of anyone's money!' The gentleman was surprised. 'This robber's an idiot!' he thought, and bought the pistol. When he had bought it from the robber he turned the tables on him and said : 'Hands up, my fine friend, and do as I tell you, keep walking in front of me or I'll blow your brains out!' But the rogue darted off into the wood. 'Go ahead and shoot, Your Excellency,' he said, 'it's not loaded!' The gentleman pulled the trigger, and in fact it didn't go off. He pushed the ramrod into the barrel, there was no trace of powder. By now the thief was well away into the wood; and the distinguished Englishman walked back, red in the face at being frightened by an empty threat, and he had something to think about now.

A Secret Beheading

Whether or not on that morning of 17 June that year the executioner at Landau said the Lord's Prayer with proper devotion and its 'Lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil' - that I don't know. But a delivery came, a note posted from Nancy, and if he hadn't said his prayers, then it arrived on just the right day. The note said : 'Executioner at Landau, come to Nancy straight away and bring your big sword. You will be told what to do and paid well.' A coach was waiting outside. 'It's my job', thought the executioner and got into the coach. When he was still one hour this side of Nancy, it was evening already and the sun was setting among blood-red clouds, the driver drew up, saying, 'It will be fine again tomorrow', when suddenly three strong armed men were standing by the road, climbed in beside the executioner and promised that he wouldn't come to any harm, 'But you must let us blindfold you!' And when they had put the blindfold over his eyes they said, 'Driver, drive on!' The coachman drove on, and it seemed to the executioner that he was taken a good twelve hours further, and he had no way of telling where he was. He heard the mid-night owls; he heard the cocks crow; he heard the morning bells. Then without warning the coach stopped again. They took him into a house and gave him something to drink and a nice roll and sausage too. When he was strengthened by food and drink they led him on inside the same building, through several doors and up stairs and down, and then they removed his blindfold and he saw he was in a large room. It was hung all around with black drapes, and wax candles burnt on the tables. In the middle sat a woman on a chair with her neck bared and a mask over her face, and she must have been gagged, for she couldn't speak, only sob. Round the walls stood a number of gentlemen dressed in black and with black crape over their faces so that the executioner could not have recognized them if he had met them again an hour later. And one of them handed him his sword and ordered him to cut off the head of the woman sitting on the chair. The poor executioner's blood ran cold and he said they must excuse him : his sword was dedicated to the service of justice and he could not defile it with murder. But one of the gentlemen by the wall pointed a pistol at him and said, 'Get on with it! Do as we tell you or you'll never set eyes on the church tower at Landau again!' The executioner thought of his wife and children at home. 'If I've no choice,' he said, 'and I must shed innocent blood, then on your head be it!' and with one blow he severed the poor woman's head from her body.

When it was done one of the men gave him a purse with two hundred doubloons. They put the blindfold over his eyes again and took him back to the coach he had come in. The men who had brought him there escorted him again. And when at last the coach drew up and they let him get out and remove the blindfold he was left standing where the three men had joined the coach, one hour this side of Nancy on the Landau road, and it was night. The coach sped off back.

That is what happened to the executioner at Landau, and Your Family Friend is not sorry that he can't say who that poor soul was who had to take such a bloody way to life everlasting. No, nobody found out who she was, what sin she had committed, and nobody knows where she is buried.

The Fake Gem

Outside the Butcher's Gate at Strassburg there is a pleasant garden where anyone can go and spend his money on decent pleasure, and there sat a well-dressed man drinking his wine like everyone else, and he had a ring with a precious stone on his finger and held it so it sparkled. So a Jew came up and said, 'Sir, you have a lovely gem in that ring on your finger, I wouldn't mind that myself! Doesn't it glitter like the Urim and Thummim in the breastplate of Aaron the priest?' The well-dressed stranger answered very curtly, 'The gem is a fake. If it weren't, it would be on someone else's finger, not mine!' The Jew asked to take a closer look at it. He turned it this way and that in his hand and bent his head to look at it from every angle. 'He says this stone is a fake?' he thought, and offered the stranger two new doubloons for the ring. But the stranger said quite angrily, 'Why do you think I'm lying? I told you, it's a fake!' The Jew asked permission to show it to an expert, and someone sitting close by said, 'I'll vouch for the Israelite, he'll know what the jewel is worth!' The stranger said, 'I don't need to consult anyone, the stone's a fake.'

While this was happening Your Family Friend was sitting at another table in the same garden with good friends of his, happily spending money on decent pleasure, and one of the company was a goldsmith who knows all about gems. He fitted a soldier who lost his nose at the battle of Austerlitz with a silver one and painted it skin colour, and it was a good nose. The only thing he couldn't do was breathe the breath of life into it. The Jew came over to this goldsmith. 'Sir,' he said, 'would you say this is a fake stone? Can King Solomon have worn anything more splendid in his crown?' The goldsmith, who was also something of a stargazer, said, 'It shines like Aldebaran in the sky all right. I'll get you ninety doubloons for this ring. If you come by it cheaper the profit is yours.'

The Jew went back to the stranger. 'Fake or not, I'll give you six doubloons!' and he counted them out on the table, sparkling new from the mint. The stranger put the ring back on his finger and said, 'I have no intention of parting with it. If it's such a good fake that you think it's real that doesn't make it worth any less to me,' and he put his hand in his pocket so that the eager Israelite could no longer see the stone. 'Eight doubloons.' 'No.' 'Ten doubloons.' 'No.' 'Twelve - fourteen - fifteen doubloons.' 'Very well,' said the stranger at last, 'if you won't leave me in peace and insist on being deceived at all costs! But I tell you, in front of all these gentlemen here, the stone is a fake, and I'll not say it isn't. For I don't want any trouble. You can have the ring, it's yours.'

Now the Jew took the ring joyfully over to the gold-smith. 'I'll come for the money tomorrow.' But the goldsmith, who had never been taken in by anyone, opened his eyes wide in amazement. 'My friend, this isn't the ring you showed me two minutes ago! This stone is worth twenty kreuzers at most. This is the sort they make in the glass works at Sankt Blasien!' For actually the stranger had in his pocket a fake ring which looked as good as the one that had first sparkled on his finger, and while the Jew was bargaining with him and his hand was in his pocket, he pushed the genuine ring off his finger with his thumb and slipped his finger into the fake, and that was the one he had given the Jew. At once the dupe shot back to the stranger as if fired on a rocket : 'Oh, woe, woe unto me! I have been tricked, the stone is a fake!' But the stranger said coldly and calmly, 'I sold it to you for a fake. These gentlemen here are witnesses. It's yours now. Did I talk you into buying it or did you talk me into selling it?' All those present had to admit, 'Yes, he told you the stone was a fake when he said you could have it!' So the Jew had to keep the ring and no further fuss was made of the matter.

How a Ghastly Story was Brought to Light by a Common or Garden Butcher's Dog

Two butchers out in their district buying in animals came to a village and split up, one went left past the Swan, the other right, and they said, 'We'll meet up again in the Swan.' But they never did meet up again. For one of them went with a farmer into his cowshed. The farmer's wife went as well, though she was doing the washing in the kitchen, and their child decided to follow too. The devil gave the woman a nudge : 'Look at that belt full of money peeping out from under the butcher's shirt!' The woman gave her husband a wink, he gave her a nod, and they killed the poor butcher in the cowshed and hurriedly hid his body under some straw. The devil nudged the woman again : 'Look who's watching!' She looked round and saw the child. So, driven out of their minds by fear, they went back together into the house and locked the doors as if the enemy were near. Then the woman, whose heart was not just as black as sin but blacker and hotter than hell, said, 'Child, just look at you again! Come into the kit-chen,' she said, 'I'll clean you up.' In the kitchen she pushed her child's head into the hot suds and scalded him to death. Now, she thought, there's no one to tell on us - but she didn't think of the murdered butcher's dog.

The murdered butcher's dog had run along a bit with the other butcher, and then, while the child was being boiled and then popped into the bread oven, the dog doubled back and picked up his master's scent, sniffed at the cowshed door, scratched at the door to the house, and knew that something was wrong. Off he ran at once, back into the village, looking for the other butcher. Soon he was whinging and whining and pulling at this butcher's coat, and the butcher, too, knew something was wrong. So he went with the dog back to the house, in no doubt that something dreadful had happened there. He beckoned over two men who were passing nearby. When the murderers heard the dog whining and the butcher shouting, they had nothing but the gallows before their eyes and the fear of hellfire in their hearts. The man tried to escape through the back window but his wife grabbed him by his coat and said, 'Stay here with me!' The man said, 'Come with me!' She answered, 'I can't, my legs won't move! Can't you see that ghastly figure outside the window, with its flaming eyes and fiery breath?' Meanwhile the door had been broken open. They soon found the two corpses. The criminals were taken and brought to court. Six weeks later they were put to death, their villainous corpses bound to the wheel, and even now the crows are still say-ing, 'That's tasty meat, that is!'

The Cunning Styrian

It was in Styria during the last war and some way off the main road, and a rich farmer was thinking : ‘How can I keep my thalers and my dear little ducats safe in these evil times? I’m ever so fond of the Empress MariaTheresa, God bless her, and the Emperor Joseph, God bless him, and the Emperor Francis, God give him long life and health! And just when you think you have these dear sovereigns ever so safe and out of harm’s way the enemy gets a whiff of them as soon as he sticks his nose into the village and takes them off prisoner to Lorraine or Cham-pagne! It’s enough to make a poor patriotic Austrian’s heart bleed!’ ‘I’ve got it!’ he said, ‘I know what I’ll do,’ and in the dark moonless night he took his money out into the kitchen garden. ‘The Seven Sisters will not betray me,’ he said. Out in the garden he put the money straight down between the wallflowers and the sweet peas. Next to it he dug a hole in the path between the beds, threw all the soil on top of the coins and trampled on the beau-tiful flowers and the chard all around like someone treading down sauerkraut. The next Monday the Chasseurs were scouting all round the district, and on the Tuesday a patrol entered the village and went straight to the mill, and then with white elbows from the mill to our farmer. And an Alsatian brandished his sword and bawled at him, ‘Out with your money, farmer, or say your last Our Father!’ The farmer said they were welcome in God’s name to take whatever they could find. He had nothing left, it had all gone yesterday and the day before that. ‘You’ll not find anything,’ he said, ‘you fine fellows!’ When they found nothing except for a couple of coppers and a gilded threepenny piece with the image of the Emp-ress MariaTheresa on it and a ring to hang it up by, the Alsatian said, ‘Farmer, you’ve buried your money! Show us here and now where you buried your money or you’ll leave for the hereafter without saying your last Our Father!’ ‘I can’t show you it here and now,’ said the farmer, ‘I’m sorry, but you’ll have to come with me out into the kitchen garden. I’ll show you where it was hidden there and what happened. Our lords and masters, the enemy, were here before you, yesterday and the day before, and they found it and took the lot."The Chasseurs saw how things looked in the garden, found everything just as the man said, and not one of them thought the money might be lying under the pile of earth, but each of them gazed into the empty hole and thought : 'If only I'd been here earlier!' 'And if only they hadn't ruined the wallflowers, and the chard as well!' said the farmer, and so he fooled them and all those who came after them, and so it was that he saved the whole family of archdukes, the Emperor Francis, the Emperor Joseph, the Empress MariaTheresa, and Leopold the First, the Most Blessed of All, and kept them safe in their own country.

A Report from Turkey

There is justice in Turkey. A merchant's man was over-taken on his journey by night and fatigue, tied his horse laden with precious goods to a tree not far from a guard-house, lay down under the shelter of the tree and went to sleep. Early next day he was woken by the morning air and the quails calling. He had slept well, but his horse had gone.

So he rushed off to the governor of the province, Prince Carosman Oglu he was called and he was staying nearby, and complained that he had been robbed. The prince cut the hearing short : 'So close to the guardhouse! Why didn't you ride on another fifty yards, then you would have been safe! It's your own stupid fault!' But then the merchant's man said, 'O just prince, should I have feared to sleep in the open in a land where you rule?' That pleased the Prince Carosman, and it annoyed him too. 'Drink a little glass of Turkish brandy tonight,' he said to the merchant's man, 'and sleep under the same tree again.' The man did just as he was told. The next morning when he was woken by the morning air and the quails calling he had slept well again, for the horse was standing there tethered at his side together with all the precious goods, and in the tree hung a dead man, the thief, who never saw the sun rise again.

They do say there are trees enough in most parts, big ones and little ones.

The Lightest Death Sentence

People have said it's the guillotine. But it isn't, you know! A man who had done much for his country and was highly thought of by its ruler was sentenced to death for a crime he'd committed in a fit of passion. Petitions or prayers were no use. But since he was otherwise highly regarded by the ruler, he, the prince, let him choose how he would like to die : he was to die in whatever way he chose. So the chief secretary came to him in prison : 'The prince has determined to show you mercy. If you wish to be put to death on the wheel you shall be put on the wheel; if you wish to be hanged he will have you hanged-there are already two up on the gallows but everybody knows there's room for three at a time. If, however, you would rather take rat poison there is some at the chemist's. For whatever kind of death you choose the prince says it shall be yours. But, as you know, die you must!' The criminal replied, 'If I really must die, then death on the wheel can be bent to suit one's taste, and hanging can be turned to suit one's inclination if the wind lends a hand. But you haven't got the point! For my part I have always thought that death from old age is the easiest way, and since the prince leaves the choice to me I'll choose it and no other!' And that was his final decision, he wouldn't be talked out of it. So they had to let him go free and live on until he died of old age. For the prince said, 'I gave my word and I'll not break it.'

This little story comes from our mother-in-law who doesn't like to let anyone die if she can possibly help it.

A Stallholder is Duped

A rouble is a silver coin in Russia, worth a bit less than two guilders, whereas an imperial is a gold coin and worth ten roubles. So you can get a rouble for an imperial, for instance if you lose nine roubles at cards, but you can't get an imperial for a rouble. Yet a cunning soldier in Moscow said, 'Want to bet? Tomorrow at the fair I'll get me an imperial for a rouble.' The next day long rows of stalls were set out at the fair, the people were already standing at all the booths, admiring or finding fault, mak-ing bids and haggling, the crowd was walking up and down and the boys were saying hello to the girls, when up came the soldier with a rouble in his hand. 'Whose is this rouble? Is it yours?' he asked all the stallkeepers in turn. One of them who wasn't doing much business looked on for some time and then thought : if that mon-ey's too hot for you to hold I can warm to it! 'Over here, musketeer, it's my rouble!' The soldier said, 'If you hadn't shouted I would never have found you in the crowd,' and he handed him the rouble. The trader turned it one way and the other and tested its ring; it was a good one all right, and he put it in his purse. 'Now give me back my imperial, please!' said the musketeer. The trader said, 'I don't have any imperial of yours, I owe you nothing. You can have this stupid rouble back if you're playing a trick on me!' But the musketeer said, 'Hand over my imperial, this is no joke, I'm serious and can easily fetch a constable!' One thing led to another, a polite word to a defiant one, defiance to insults, and a crowd gathered around the stall like bees round a honey pot. Then some-thing was burrowing its way through the throng. 'What's going on here?' said the police sergeant who had pushed through the crowd with his men. 'I said, what's all this?' The stallkeeper couldn't say much, but the musketeer had a good story to tell.

Less than a quarter of an hour before, he said, he had bought this and that from this man for one rouble. But when it came to paying he could find only a double imper-ial, nothing smaller, one his godfather had given him when he was enlisted. So he gave him the imperial until he came back with a rouble. When he came back with the rouble he couldn't find the right stall, so he asked at all the booths, 'Who do I owe a rouble?' And this man said it was him, and it was too, and he took the rouble but pretended he didn't have his imperial. 'Now will you agree to give it back?' The police sergeant questioned those around and they said : Yes, the musketeer asked at all the stalls whose rouble it was and this man said it was his, and took it too, and tested it to see if it was genuine. When the police sergeant heard that, he settled the matter : 'You've got your rouble, so give this soldier his imperial or we'll close down your stall and nail it up with you inside and leave you to starve to death!' Thus the police officer, and the trader it was who had to give the musketeer an imperial for a rouble.

Remember : Other people's property can eat into your own just as fresh snow swallows up the old.

Patience Rewarded

One day a Frenchman rode up on to a bridge over a stream, and it was so narrow there was scarcely room for two horses at once. An Englishman was riding up from the other side, and when they met in the middle neither of them would give way. 'An Englishman does not make way for a Frenchman!' said the Englishman. 'Pardieu,' said the Frenchman, 'My horse has an English pedigree too! It's a pity I can't turn him round and let you have a good look at his backside in retreat! But you could at least let that English fellow you're riding step aside for this English mount of mine. In any case yours seems to be the junior; mine served under Louis XIV in the battle of Kieferholz, 1702!'

But the Englishman was not greatly impressed. 'I have all the time in the world!' he said. 'This gives me a chance to read today's paper until you are pleased to make way.' So with the coolness the English are famed for he took a newspaper from his pocket and opened it up and sat on his horse on the bridge and read for an hour, and the sun didn't look as if it would shine on this pair of fools for ever, it was going down quickly towards the mountains. An hour later when he had finished reading and was about to fold up the newspaper again he looked at the Frenchman and said, 'Eh bien?' But the Frenchman had kept his head too and replied, 'Englishman, kindly lend me your paper a while, so that I can read it too until you are pleased to make way.' Now, when the Englishman saw that his adversary was a patient man, he said, 'Do you know what, Frenchman? Come on, I'll make way for you!' So the Englishman made way for the Frenchman.

The Champion Swimmer

Before the war and all its afflictions when you could still cross freely from France to England and drink a glass or two in Dover or buy material for a waistcoat, a large mail boat sailed from Calais across the straits to Dover and back again twice a week. For the sea between those two countries is only a few miles wide at that point, you see. But you had to get there before the boat left if you wanted to sail on it. A Frenchman from Gascony seemed not to know that, for he came to Calais a quarter of an hour too late, just as they were shutting up the hens, and the sky was clouding over. 'Must I sit around here for a couple of days twiddling my thumbs? No,' he thought, 'I'd do better to pay a boatman a twelve-sous piece to go after the mail boat.' For a small craft can sail faster than the heavy mail boat, you understand, and will catch up with it. But when he was sitting in the open boat the boatman said, 'If I'd thought I'd have brought a tarpaulin!' For it began to rain, and how! Very soon it poured down from the night sky as if a sea up above was emptying itself into the sea below. But the Gascon thought, 'This is going to be fun!' 'Praise be,' said the boatman at last, 'I can see the mail boat.' And he pulled up alongside and the Gascon climbed aboard, and when he suddenly appeared through the narrow hatchway in the middle of the night and in the middle of the sea and joined the passengers on the ship they all wondered where he had sprung from, all on his own, so late and so wet. For on a ship like that it is like being in a cellar, you can't hear what is going on outside over the talk of the passengers, the sailors' shouts, the noise of the wind, the flapping sails and the crashing waves, and nobody had any idea it was raining. 'You look as if you've been keelhauled,' said one, 'pulled right under the ship from one side to the other, I mean.' 'Is that what you're thinking?' said the Gascon. 'Do you imagine you can go swimming and stay dry? If you can tell me how to do that I'll be glad to hear it, you see I'm the postman from Oléron and every Monday I swim over to the mainland with letters and messages, it's quicker that way. But now I have a message to take to England. With your permission I'll join you, since I was fortunate enough to meet up with you. Judging from the stars it can't be far to Dover now.' 'You're welcome, fellow country-man,' said one (though he wasn't a fellow Frenchman but an Englishman) and blew a cloud of tobacco smoke from his mouth. 'If you have swum this far across the sea from Calais you must be a class above the black swimmer in London!' 'I'm not afraid of competition,' said the Gascon. 'Will you take him on,' replied the Englishman, 'if I place a hundred louis d'or on you?' The Gascon said, 'You can bet I will!' It's the custom of rich Englishmen to bet with each other for large sums placed on men who excel at some physical activity. And so it was that this Englishman on the ship took the Gascon to London with him at his expense and had him eat and drink well so that he stayed fit and strong. 'My lord,' he said to a good friend of his in London, 'I have brought with me a swimmer I found at sea. I bet you a hundred guineas he can beat your Moor!' His friend said, 'You're on!'

The next day they both appeared with their swimmers at an agreed spot on the river Thames, and hundreds of curious people had gathered there and they laid their bets too, some on the Moor, some on the Gascon, one shilling, or six shillings, one, two, five, twenty guineas, and the Moor didn't give the Gascon much of a chance. But when they had both undressed the Gascon tied a little box to his body with a leather strap without saying why, as if that were quite normal. The Moor said, 'What are you up to? Have you learnt that from the champion jumper who had to tie lead weights to his feet when he was set to catch a hare and was afraid he would jump right over it?' The Gascon opened his box and said, 'I've only got a bottle of wine in here, a couple of saveloys and a small loaf of bread! I was going to ask you where you have your eats. For I shall swim straight down the river Thames into the North Sea and down the Channel into the Atlantic and on to Cadiz, and I suggest we don't call in anywhere on the way, for I have to be back in Oléron by Monday, that's the 16th. But tomorrow morning in Cadiz at the White Horse I'll order a good dinner for you so it will be ready by the time you arrive.' You, good reader, will hardly be imagining that he could escape that way! But the Moor was scared stiff. 'I can't compete against that amphibian!' he told his master. 'You can please yourself what you do!' And he got dressed again.

So the bet was over, the Gascon was given a handsome reward by the Englishman who had brought him there and everyone scoffed at the Moor. For although they must have seen that the Frenchman was only shamming, they were all amused by his bravado and the unexpected out-come, and for a month after that he was treated in the inns and beerhouses by all those who had bet on him, and he admitted he had never been in the water in all his life.

The Weather Man

Just as a sieve-maker or a basket-weaver who lives in a small place cannot earn enough in his village or town to keep himself all year, but has to look for work and practise his craft in the countryside around, so our compasses-maker too does business away from home, and his trade is not in compasses but in knavish tricks that pay for a few drinks at the inn. Thus one day he appeared in Ober-ehingen and went straight to the mayor. 'Mr Mayor,' he said, 'could you do with different weather? I've seen how things are hereabouts. There's been too much rain on the bottom fields and the crops on the hill are behindhand.' The mayor thought that was easy to say but difficult to put right. 'Just so,' replied the compasses-maker, 'but that's my line of business! Didn't you know I'm the weather man from Bologna?' In Italy, he said, where the oranges and lemons grow, all the weather was made to order. 'You Germans are a bit behind in these matters.' The mayor was a good and trusting fellow and one of those who would like to get rich sooner rather than later. So he was attracted by the offer. But he also thought caution was called for! 'As a test run,' he said, 'make it a clear sky tomorrow with just a few fluffy white clouds, sunshine all day with some streaks of vapour glistening in the air. Let the first yellow butterflies come out round midday, and it can be a nice cool evening!' The compasses-maker replied, 'I can't commit myself just for one day, Mr Mayor! It wouldn't cover my costs. I can only take on the job by the year. But then you'll have problems finding room to store your crops and the new wine!' When the mayor wanted to know how much he would charge for the year he was careful and didn't ask for payment in advance, only a guilder a day and free drinks until the matter was properly in hand, that could take at least three days-'But after that a pint from each gallon of wine over what you press in your best years, and a peck from every bushel of fruit.' 'That's risnible,' said the mayor. He stood in awe of the compasses-maker and was using refined language, and people in his part of the country think it's refined to say 'risnible' for reasonable. But when he took pen and paper from the cupboard and was drawing up a schedule for the weather month by month the compasses-maker came up with a further complication : ‘You can’t do that, Mr Mayor! You will have to consult the people. The weather is a community matter. You can’t expect every-one to accept your choice of weather.’ ‘You’re right!’ said the mayor. ‘You’re a sensible man.’

You, good reader, will have taken the measure of our compasses-maker and will have foreseen that the people could not agree on the matter. At their first meeting no decision was reached, nor even at the seventh, at the eighth hard words were spoken, and in the end a level-headed lawyer concluded that the best thing to do, to preserve peace and avoid strife in the community, was to pay the weather man off and send him packing. So the mayor summoned the compasses-maker. ‘Here are your nine guilders, you mischief-maker, now make sure you leave before there’s blood shed in the village!’ The compasses-maker didn’t have to be told twice. He took the money, left owing for about twelve pints of wine at the inn, and the weather stayed as it was.

Now then, as always the compasses-maker has much to teach us! In this case how good it is that up till now the supreme ruler of the world has always governed the weather according to his will alone. Even we calendar-makers, luminaries and the other estates of the realm are scarcely consulted and need lose no sleep on that score.

The Safest Path

Now and then even someone drunk has the occasional notion or good idea, as a fellow did one day who didn't take his usual path home from town but walked straight into the stream running alongside it instead. There he met a good man ready to offer a hand to a fellow, even a drunk one, in trouble. 'My good friend,' said the man, 'haven't you noticed you're in the water? The footpath's over here.' He too, replied the drinker, generally found it best to use the path, but explained that this time he had had one too many. 'And that's just why I want to help you out of the stream,' said the good man. 'And that's just why I want to stay in it,' replied the drinker. 'Because if I walk in the stream and fall, I fall on to the path, but if I fell when walking on the path, I'd fall into the stream.' And that's what he said, tapping his forehead with his index finger, as if to show that he still knew a thing or two that might not have occurred to anyone else, despite being a bit the worse for wear.

亚瑟·萨维尔勋爵的罪行

Lord Arthur Savile's Crime

亚瑟·萨维尔勋爵的罪行

这是温德米尔夫人在复活节前的最后一场招待会，本廷克山庄比平日里更加热闹。六位内阁大臣直接从议长会议的现场赶来，身上还披挂着星章缎带；所有漂亮女人都穿上了她们最时髦的裙子。在画室尽头站着的，是卡尔斯鲁厄的索菲亚公主。她一副鞑靼人的面相，长着一对黑溜溜的小眼睛，佩戴着华美的翡翠首饰，尖声操着一口蹩脚的法语，无论谁对她说些什么，都报以夸张的大笑作回应。现场云集了各方各派的宾客：漂亮的贵族夫人们与狂热的激进派亲切地交谈，颇有声望的传教士与大名鼎鼎的无神论者擦肩而过，一群虔诚的主教追随着一位丰腴的歌剧首席女主唱穿堂过室，楼梯上站着几个皇家学院院士，假充成艺术家的样子。据说一时间，晚餐室里高朋满座，佳客云集。事实上，那真是温德米尔夫人最美好的一个夜晚，公主待到了快十一点半才离去。

公主刚一离开，温德米尔夫人就回到了画室，开始和佩斯利公爵夫人攀谈起来。画室里，一位著名的政治经济学家正表情严肃地向一位愤愤不平的匈牙利艺术大师解释音乐的科学原理。温德米尔夫人看上去去明艳动人，她那秀丽的脖颈白皙如象牙，大大的眼睛仿佛幽蓝的勿忘我花，一头浓密的卷发闪烁着金色光华——绝不是当今篡夺纯金声名的那种浅淡的麦秸色，而是交织在璀璨阳光里或隐藏在珍稀琥珀中的那种金色。它们为她的脸庞镀上了一圈圣光，全然掩去了她罪人的魅惑。她是一个奇妙的心理学研究课题。年轻的时候，她就发现了一条重要的真理：越是放浪形骸，越是清纯可人。于是经由一系列鲁莽的出格行为——其中多半无伤大雅，她赢得了一位名流所享有的优遇。她换了不少一任丈夫。据《德布雷特英国贵族年鉴》记载，她曾有过三段婚姻。不过她从来没换过情人，于是坊间早就不再传播她的流言蜚语了。如今她四十年华，无儿女承欢膝下，只对寻欢作乐有着极度的热情，这也是她永葆青春的秘密。

她突然急切地环顾了一下房间，用她清晰而低沉的嗓音问：“我的手相师呢？”

“你的什么，格拉迪斯？”公爵夫人不由自主地高声问道。

“我的手相师，公爵夫人。我现在没他活不下去。”

“亲爱的格拉迪斯，你总是这么别出心裁！”公爵夫人边低声说

着，边暗自琢磨手相师到底是什么，心想总不会和手足科医生差不多吧。

“他每周都会来给我看两次手相，”温德米尔夫人继续说道，“有趣极了。”

“我的老天！”公爵夫人自言自语道，“还真是一个手足科医生。太可怕了！我希望他无论如何至少是个外国人，那样的话还不算太糟糕。”

“我一定要把他介绍给您。”

“介绍给我？！”公爵夫人大喊一声，“你的意思是他就在这儿？”她开始四处张望，寻找她的玳瑁小扇子和一件破旧不堪的蕾丝披肩，以便做好准备，即刻离开。

“他当然在这儿。我怎么可能不邀请他来参加我的派对？他说我有一只通灵的手，要是我的拇指再短哪怕一丁点儿，我必定会是一个悲观主义者，会入修道院。”

“哦，我明白了！”公爵夫人如释重负，“他是个占吉卜卦的算命先生？”

“也卜算厄运。”温德米尔夫人答道，“吉凶祸福，前世今生。比如，明年我命里有灾，在陆地或海上都危险，所以我打算住在高空气球上，每天晚上用篮子把吃食拎上来。这些都写在我小手指上，也许是我的掌纹，我记不清是哪个了。”

“但你这必定是在违背天意，格拉迪斯。”

“我亲爱的公爵夫人，我坚信天意是禁得住这一回考验的。我认为每个人每月都应该看一次手相，好知道什么不该做。当然，有的人还是会去做，不过能被提前预警还是好的。现在，如果没有人赶紧去把波杰斯先生找来，我只好自己去了。”

“由我为您效劳吧，温德米尔夫人。”一个高大帅气的年轻男子说道。他一直微笑着站在旁边，饶有兴趣地聆听着她们的对话。

“太感谢了，亚瑟勋爵！可是我怕你不认识他。”

“如果他如您所说的那般出众，温德米尔夫人，我是不会认不出他的。跟我说说他什么样子，我会立刻把他带来。”

“嗯，他一点儿也不像是一个手相师。我的意思是，他并不是一副神秘莫测、深藏不露或不着边际的样子。他是一个矮壮的男人，滑稽的秃头，戴一副大大的金丝眼镜，形貌介于家庭医生和乡村律师之间。实在抱歉，可这并不是我的错——人们太讨厌了，我的钢琴师们都看起来和诗人一模一样，而我的诗人们又仿佛是一群钢琴家。我还记

得上一季我邀请了一个曾经炸死过许多人的、极度可怕的阴谋家来吃晚饭，他以前总是穿一件锁子甲，袖子上别着一把匕首。可你知道吗，他来的时候看起来就像是一位和善的老牧师，整晚都在讲笑话。当然了，他非常有趣，可是我失望至极。当我问起他的锁子甲，他只是大笑着说：‘英格兰实在太冷了，没法穿。’啊，波杰斯先生来了！波杰斯先生，我想让你给佩斯利公爵夫人看看手相。公爵夫人，您得把手套脱了。不，不是左手，另一只。”

“亲爱的格拉迪斯，我认为这实在是不妥。”公爵夫人说着，轻轻地脱下了一只脏污的小山羊皮手套。

“但凡有趣的事情都不妥，”温德米尔夫人说，“世事如此。不过，我一定要介绍你们认识。公爵夫人，这是波杰斯先生，我钟爱的手相师。波杰斯先生，这是佩斯利公爵夫人，如果你敢说她手掌上的月亮山 [1] 比我的大，我就再也不会相信你了。”

“我确信，格拉迪斯，我手上没有那东西。”公爵夫人严肃地说。

“夫人说得没错，”波杰斯先生瞥了一眼那只手指短粗的小胖手，说道，“月亮山没有成形。不过，生命线极好。请您弯一下手腕。谢谢！手腕上三条醒目的主线！您会长命百岁的，公爵夫人，而且非常幸福。志向线——不好不坏。才智线不算突出，情感线——”

“您就直言不讳吧，波杰斯先生！”温德米尔夫人大声说道。

“倘若看出了公爵夫人经历过什么，我自然乐意直言，”波杰斯先生说着，鞠了一躬，“可是很遗憾，我只看到了伟大的情感，伴随着强烈的责任感。”

“请您继续，波杰斯先生。”公爵夫人说道，看上去颇为受用。

“理财是夫人您重要的美德。”波杰斯先生继续说。温德米尔夫人大笑着离开了。

“理财是件极好的事。”公爵夫人自鸣得意地说，“我嫁给佩斯利的时候，他有十一座城堡，可没有一所房子能住人。”

“如今，他有了十二所房子，可一座城堡也没有了。”温德米尔夫人大声说道。

“哦，亲爱的，”公爵夫人说，“我喜欢……”

“舒适，”波杰斯先生说道，“现代化设施，而且每一间卧室里都有热水。夫人您完全正确，舒适是我们的文明带给我们的唯一的東西。”

“你已经准确地讲出了公爵夫人的性格，波杰斯先生，现在你一定要给弗劳拉夫人看看手相。”女主人微笑着点头示意，一位淡褐色

头发、削肩膀的高个儿女孩便从沙发后面笨手笨脚地走出来，伸出了一只瘦骨嶙峋的细长的手掌，手指像竹片儿一样。

“哈，一位钢琴师！”波杰斯先生说道，“我看是一位杰出的钢琴师，不过或许还称不上是音乐家。非常矜持，非常坦诚，而且非常爱动物。”

“太对了！”公爵夫人大声说着，转向温德米尔夫人，“完全正确！弗劳拉在麦克洛斯基养了二十四只柯利牧羊犬。如果她父亲允许的话，她会把我们城里的房子变成动物园。”

“哎呀，正巧每个星期四的晚上我也这么对待我的房子。”温德米尔夫人大笑着高声说道，“只不过比起柯利牧羊犬，我更喜欢狮子。”

“这是您的一桩错事，温德米尔夫人。”波杰斯先生说着，浮夸地鞠了一躬。

“如果一个女人不能令她所犯的错事楚楚动人，那她充其量也仅是一位女性罢了。”这是女主人的回答。“不过你一定要给我们多看几个手相。来，托马斯爵士，让波杰斯先生给您看看。”一位身穿白色西装马甲的亲切和蔼的老绅士走上前来，伸出一只厚实粗糙的手，中指尤其长。

“生性爱冒险。以往有过四次长途旅行，即将开启一段新旅程。遭遇过三次船难。不，两次，不过下次旅行会有遭遇海难的风险。一个坚定的保守派，非常守时，酷爱收藏奇珍异宝。在十六岁到十八岁之间生过一场重病，快三十岁的时候继承了一笔财富。对猫和激进派深恶痛绝。”

“太神奇了！”托马斯爵士惊呼道，“您一定得给我夫人也看看手相！”

“您的第二任夫人，”波杰斯先生依然握着托马斯爵士的手，轻声说道，“您第二任夫人的手。我荣幸之至！”可是马维尔夫人，一个棕色头发、连睫毛都伤感的忧郁女人，完全拒绝将她的过去或未来暴露出来。而温德米尔夫人费尽口舌也没能让俄国大使克洛夫先生脱下他的手套。事实上，似乎许多人都很害怕面对这个满脸一成不变的微笑、戴着金丝眼镜、眼睛贼亮的古怪的小个子男人。而且，当他当着所有人的面，对可怜的弗莫尔夫人说，她其实一点儿都不喜欢音乐，只是非常喜欢音乐家的时候，人们都觉察到，手相学真是一门最危险的科学，不应该受到鼓励，除非是两人私下交流。

然而，亚瑟·萨维尔勋爵全然不知弗莫尔夫人的不幸遭遇，他已经饶有兴致地看了波杰斯先生许久，迫不及待地希望他给自己看看手相，可是又不太好意思主动前去要求。于是他穿过房间走到了温德米

尔夫人落座的地方，满脸绯红地询问，是否能请波杰斯先生给他瞧瞧。

“当然了，他会愿意的。”温德米尔夫人说，“那正是他来这儿的目。亚瑟勋爵，我所有的狮子都是马戏团演员，无论何时，我一声令下，它们就得跳火圈。不过我得事先警告你，我会把一切都告诉西比尔的。她明天来和我共进午餐，聊聊帽子的事。如果波杰斯先生发现你脾气很坏，或者有痛风的征兆，或是在贝斯沃特金屋藏娇，我必定将一切如实奉告给西比尔。”

亚瑟勋爵微笑着摇了摇头。“我不担心，”他答道，“西比尔对我了如指掌，我对她也一样。”

“啊！你这么说过令我感到一丝遗憾。婚姻是建立在彼此误解的基石之上的。我可一点儿都不愤世嫉俗，只是有些经验罢了，然而事实正是如此。波杰斯先生，亚瑟·萨维尔勋爵巴不得你快给他看看手相。你可别说出什么‘他和伦敦最漂亮的女孩儿订婚了’之类的话，这消息早在一个月以前就登过《晨报》了。”

“亲爱的温德米尔夫人，”杰德堡侯爵夫人大声说道，“千万让波杰斯先生多留会儿。他刚刚才告诉我，我应该登台表演，我对此颇有兴趣。”

“如果他真是这么说的，杰德堡夫人，我必定得把他带走了。快过来，波杰斯先生，给亚瑟勋爵看看手相。”

“好吧，”杰德堡夫人噘着嘴从沙发上站起身，“就算我当不成演员，至少能当个听众吧。”

“当然，我们大家都来做听众。”温德米尔夫人说，“现在，波杰斯先生，千万告诉我们点儿好话，亚瑟勋爵可是我特别钟爱的客人之一。”

可是，当波杰斯先生看到亚瑟勋爵的手掌，他竟一言不发，面色变得莫名地苍白。他似乎打了个寒战，粗重的眉毛以一种奇怪又恼人的方式扭曲着，正如每次他困惑不解时的样子。接着他的黄脑门上渗出豆大的汗珠，仿佛有毒的露水，他的粗手指也变得冰冷黏湿。

亚瑟勋爵自然注意到了这些令人不安的奇怪迹象，有生以来第一次，他感觉到了恐惧。他想冲出房间，可是他克制住了自己的冲动。最好能知道最坏的情况，不管是什么，也好过在骇人的未知中惶惶度日。

“愿闻其详，波杰斯先生。”他说道。

“我们都等着呢！”不耐烦的温德米尔夫人急切地大喊道。可是那

位手相师偏偏缄口不言。

“我相信亚瑟勋爵也是要登台表演的。”杰德堡夫人说，“只不过刚才被你斥责一番，波杰斯先生就不敢再这样告诉他了。”

突然间，波杰斯先生松开了亚瑟勋爵的右手，抓起他的左手，低低地俯下身去，仔细查看，眼镜的金边都要蹭到手掌心了。霎时间，他的脸变得惨白，如同一副恐怖的面具，但他很快恢复了镇静。他抬起头看着温德米尔夫人，挤出一个微笑说：“这是一个迷人的年轻人的手。”

“当然了！”温德米尔夫人答道，“不过他会是一个可爱的丈夫吗？这才是我想知道的。”

“所有迷人的年轻人都会是可爱的丈夫。”波杰斯先生说道。

“我认为做丈夫的不应该太过迷人，”杰德堡夫人一脸忧思地低声说道，“那太危险了。”

“我亲爱的宝贝，他们永远都不会太过迷人的。”温德米尔夫人大声说，“不过我想知道细节，只有细节才是最有趣的。亚瑟勋爵会发生什么事？”

“哦，未来几个月之内，亚瑟勋爵将外出旅行……”

“没错，当然了，他要去度蜜月。”

“还会失去一位亲戚。”

“但愿可别是他妹妹？”杰德堡夫人用满是怜悯的语气问道。

“当然不是他妹妹，”波杰斯先生做了一个不以为然的手势，“只是个远房亲戚。”

“哦，我真是失望透顶，”温德米尔夫人说，“我明天没有一星半点儿的东西可以透露给西比尔。现如今可没人不在乎什么远房亲戚，多少年前就过时了。不过，我想她最好备一块黑丝巾在身边，去教堂总会用得到。好了，我们去吃晚餐吧。他们肯定把什么都吃光了，我们没准儿还能找些热汤喝。弗朗索瓦以前会烹制极美味的鲜汤，可是他现在对政治狂热，我都有些搞不懂他了。我倒是希望布朗热将军能保持安静。公爵夫人，您肯定累了吧？”

“一点儿也不，亲爱的格拉迪斯，”公爵夫人边回答，边蹒跚着走向门口，“我过得非常愉快，那个手足科医生，我是说那个手相师，真是太有意思了。弗劳拉，我的玳瑁扇子在哪儿？哦，谢谢你，托马斯爵士，非常感谢！我的蕾丝披肩呢，弗劳拉？哦，谢谢你，托马斯爵士，你真是个好人！”然后，这位高贵的人物终于走下了楼，途中只把香水瓶弄掉了两次。

这期间，亚瑟·萨维尔勋爵一直站在壁炉旁，挥之不去的恐惧与对厄运将临的胆战心惊笼罩着他。妹妹挽着普利姆代尔勋爵的胳膊从他身边经过，身着粉色织锦，戴着粉色珍珠配饰，楚楚动人，而他只对着妹妹苦笑一番。他几乎没听到温德米尔夫人在招呼他跟上。他想着西比尔·默顿，想着他们之间可能会产生嫌隙，不禁泪湿了眼眶。

看着他，人们会说，复仇女神涅墨西斯已经偷走了帕拉斯 [2] 的盾牌，让他看到了蛇发女妖戈耳工的头。他似乎石化了，忧郁阴沉的脸像是大理石一般。他从出生以来就过着富家公子锦衣玉食的生活，无俗事挂心，度过了无忧无虑的美妙的少年时光。此刻，有生以来第一次，他意识到了世事无常、命运捉弄，感受到了在劫难逃的可怕。

这真是疯狂且荒谬至极！这些骇人的秘密罪孽、血红的犯罪征兆，都以一种他自己无法识读的字符，写在他的手掌上，而另一个人却可以破译？没有逃离厄运的可能吗？无论是荣耀还是耻辱，我们难道都如棋子一般，被一股无形的力量左右，如陶工手下的器皿一般任由人搓扁揉圆？他的理智对抗着它，同时他又感到灾难正纠缠着自己，他突然被要求去承担一个难以负荷的重任。演员们太幸运了，他们可以选择演绎悲剧或喜剧，品尝苦涩或欢愉，大笑或哭泣。可现实生活并非如此。大部分男人和女人都被迫扮演一些他们并不能胜任的角色。我们的吉尔登斯吞 [3] 为我们扮演着哈姆雷特，而我们的哈姆雷特不得不像哈尔王子 [4] 一样开着玩笑。世界是一个舞台，可是剧里的演员都配错了角色。

波杰斯先生突然走进房间。看到亚瑟勋爵时，他惊了一下，粗鄙肥胖的脸青黄不定。两人目光交错，一时间沉默无言。

“公爵夫人把一只手套落在这里了，亚瑟勋爵，让我给她拿过去。”波杰斯先生终于开口，“啊，在沙发上！晚安！”

“波杰斯先生，我要请教您一个问题，请您务必直言不讳。”

“下次吧，亚瑟勋爵，公爵夫人等着急了，我得赶紧走。”

“先别走，公爵夫人没什么急事。”

“不该让夫人久等，亚瑟勋爵。”波杰斯先生说着，无力地笑了笑，“女士们很容易不耐烦的。”

亚瑟勋爵任性又轻蔑地撇了撇他轮廓鲜明的嘴唇。此刻，那位可怜的公爵夫人对他而言一点儿都不重要。他穿过房间，来到波杰斯先生身旁，伸出他的手。

“告诉我您看到了什么，”他说，“实话实说。我必须知道真相。我不是个小孩儿。”

金丝眼镜后面，波杰斯先生的眼睛眨了眨。他不安地交错着步子，手指紧张地把弄着一条闪闪发光的表链。

“您为什么会认为除了我告诉您的那些，我还在您手上看到了更多的东西呢，亚瑟勋爵？”

“我就是知道。你不说明白，我是不会罢休的。我可以付钱给你。我会给你一张一百英镑的支票。”

那对绿眼睛闪亮了片刻，紧接着又恢复了暗淡。

“基尼金币 [5] ？”最终，波杰斯先生低声说道。

“当然。我明天就把支票给您送去。您在哪个俱乐部？”

“我没有俱乐部。也就是说，目前还没有。我的地址是……还是请允许我奉上名片吧。”说着，波杰斯先生从马甲背心口袋里掏出一张镶金边的卡片，递给亚瑟勋爵，并向他深深鞠了一躬。卡片上写着：

塞普蒂默斯·R.波杰斯先生

—职业手相师—

西月街103a号

“我的工作时间是上午十点到下午四点。”波杰斯先生例行公事地小声说道，“全家一起来有折扣。”

“快点儿吧！”亚瑟勋爵的面色极度苍白，边高声催促，边伸出了他的手。

波杰斯先生紧张地环顾四周，拉上了厚重的门帘。

“要花点儿时间，亚瑟勋爵，您最好先坐下。”

“长话短说，先生！”亚瑟勋爵再次大声催促，在光可鉴人的地板上愤怒地跺着脚。

波杰斯先生笑了笑，从他胸前的口袋里掏出一面小放大镜，用手帕小心地擦拭着。

“我准备好了。”他说。

二

十分钟以后，大惊失色、悲痛欲绝的亚瑟勋爵从大条纹雨篷周遭站着的一群穿毛皮大衣的男仆们中间挤过去，冲出了本廷克山庄，似乎对一切视而不见、充耳不闻。那天晚上天寒地冻，广场四周的煤气

灯闪烁在凛冽的寒风中。可是他的双手却热得发烫，他的额头如火烧火燎一般。他迈着醉汉似的步伐，走了又走。他经过一个警察的身边，警察好奇地打量他；一个乞丐懒散地从拱廊中走出来，乞求施舍，看眼前人的痛苦更甚于自己，反倒害怕起来。他一度在路灯下驻足，看看自己的双手。他仿佛能觉察到上面已沾满血污，颤抖的双唇间迸出一声微弱的呜咽。

谋杀！那手相师看出来的竟是一场谋杀！此刻的夜晚似乎也洞悉了一切，荒凉的风在他耳畔呼啸，漆黑的街角也满是这秘密，这秘密在房顶上对他咧着嘴笑。

他先是来到公园，那里阴暗的树林似乎对他有强烈的吸引力。精疲力竭的他倚靠在栏杆上，额头抵着湿冷的金属降温。他倾听着林木间令人战栗的寂静。“谋杀！谋杀！”他不断地重复着，仿佛反复的诉说可以减弱这个词的恐怖。他自己的声音令他胆战心惊，然而他又希望回声女神或许能听到他，把这座酣睡的城市从梦境中唤醒。他感到一种强烈的欲望，想要拦住随便哪个过往的行人，将一切说与他听。

而后，他游荡过牛津街，来到逼仄腌臢的小巷子。他经过的时候，两个浓妆艳抹的女人逗弄他。一个漆黑的院子里传来打骂声，紧接着是尖叫声，然后他看到了弯腰驼背挤成一团的穷人和老者，都蜷缩在门前潮湿的台阶上。一种莫名的怜悯之情涌上心头。罪恶与苦难注定是这些人的结局吗？就像他也有命定的归宿一样？难道他们也和他一样，仅仅是一场大秀中的提线木偶吗？

然而击溃他的不是个中谜题，而是受难的喜剧性。它的全然无用，它荒谬至极得毫无意义。一切看起来是多么不合逻辑！毫无和谐可言！他惊诧于白日浅薄的乐观主义与真实存在的事实之间的不协调。他还非常年轻。

片刻之后，他发现自己来到了马里波恩教堂前。安静的车道看起来像是一条长长的亮闪闪的银缎带，斑驳错落的光影仿佛深色的蔓藤花纹。远处弯弯曲曲一排明灭不定的煤气灯，一座带围墙的小房子外面孤零零地停放着一辆双轮马车，车夫正在里面睡觉。他急匆匆地向着波特兰广场的方向走去，还不时地四处张望，似乎在担心被人跟踪。在里奇街的街角站着两个男人，他们正读着公告牌上的一张小布告。一股莫名的好奇心驱使他凑上前去。他刚一走近，那两个黑字——“谋杀”就映入他的眼帘。他吓了一跳，两颊变得通红。那是一张悬赏公告，为了抓捕一个中等身材、年龄在三十岁到四十岁之间、头戴圆顶毡帽、身穿黑色大衣和格子裤子、右脸上有道疤的男人。他读了一遍又一遍，想着那个可怜的男人会不会被抓住，猜想他脸上的疤是怎么来的。或许，某一天，他自己的名字也会出现在伦敦街墙的布告栏上。或许，某一天，人们也会给他的人头开个悬赏捉拿价。

这想法令他毛骨悚然。他猛然转身，快步没入夜色之中。

他不清楚自己身在何处。他模模糊糊地记得自己游荡过一片迷宫一样的脏房子，在一大片纵横交错的幽暗的街道中迷了路。最后他发现自己走到了皮卡迪利广场，此时已是曙光初照，黎明破晓。他溜达着回家，向贝尔格雷夫广场走去，路上遇见了驶向科芬园的四轮运货大马车。马车夫们身穿白色罩衫，留着粗糙的卷发，晒伤的脸上满是欢愉。他们稳坐在马车上，马鞭子挥得噼啪作响，彼此间时不时地高喊几声。这支嘈杂的队伍中为首的是一匹大灰马，马背上坐着一个胖嘟嘟的男孩，他破旧的帽子里有一束报春花。他一路笑着，小手紧紧地抓着马鬃毛。堆得高高的蔬菜看上去就像是许多块翡翠直冲云霄，又像是美艳玫瑰的粉红色花瓣上镶嵌的碧玉。亚瑟勋爵被莫名地感动，说不清是因为什么。黎明时分的柔和美妙中有些东西似乎于他而言是无以言表的可悲，他想起所有那些初时晴好、晚时暴风雨侵袭的日子。还有这些庄稼人，他们粗粝又欢快的声音，他们满不在乎的举止，他们眼中的伦敦是多么不寻常啊！没有夜晚的罪行，没有白天的烟雾，伦敦，一个毫无生气的鬼魅般的城市，一座荒冢之城！他好奇他们如何看待它，他们是否了解它的壮丽与耻辱，它热烈的色彩斑斓的欢乐，它恐怖的饥荒，它从早到晚的创造与破坏。也许对他们而言，它只不过是一个可以卖水果的集市，是他们至多逗留几个小时的地方——他们离开时街道依然安静，房屋依然沉睡未醒。观察这些过往的行人成为他的一件乐事。粗野的人们穿着笨重的大头鞋，迈着笨拙的步子，散发着几分超然世外的感觉。他觉得这些人与大自然共生，而自然教会了他们平和。他羡慕他们对许多事都不知晓。

他走到贝尔格雷夫广场的时候，天空泛着微蓝，花园中的鸟儿开始叽叽喳喳。

三

亚瑟勋爵醒来的时候是十二点，正午的阳光透过象牙色丝绸窗帘照进他的房间。他起身望向窗外。这座伟大的城市被笼罩在热气蒸腾的朦胧的雾中，一所所房子的屋顶是暗银色。下面广场上一闪一闪的绿色中，一些孩子正像白色的蝴蝶一般飞舞着，人行道上满是去往公园的人。在他眼中，生命从未如此美妙，邪祟从未离他如此遥远。

他的贴身男仆用托盘给他送来一杯巧克力。他喝完巧克力，拨开厚重的桃红色长丝绒门帘，走进浴室。柔和的光从上方倾泻下来，穿过透明的缟玛瑙薄板，大理石水池里的水像块月长石一样闪闪发光。他急切地跳了进去，直到清凉的水波触到了脖子、头发，然后他把头沉下去，仿佛这样可以洗刷掉一些可耻的斑驳记忆。他迈步出来的时候，感到几乎平静了。此刻他敏锐的身体状况支配了他，正如许多本

质精纯的事物一样，心智就像是烈火，既可用于提纯，亦可用于毁灭。

早餐之后，他瘫坐在沙发床上，点了根烟。壁炉架上，精致的旧织锦相框中，立着一幅西比尔·默顿的大照片。照片中的人一如他在诺埃尔夫人的舞会上初见时的模样。形状精致的小脑袋微微垂向一侧，就好像那个细长如芦苇似的脖子没法承担如此的美貌一般；双唇微启，仿佛专为甜美的音乐而生；一双满是好奇的梦幻的眼睛透出少女的清纯。她穿着柔软贴身的中国绉纱的裙子，手持大大的叶形团扇，看上去就像是一尊人们在塔纳格拉 [6] 附近的橄榄树丛中找到的那种精美的小陶俑。而她的仪态风度中确有些希腊风范。尽管她个子并不娇小，但她比例匀称完美——在那个大多数女人要么太魁梧，要么太微不足道的年纪，这可是件难得的事。

此刻亚瑟勋爵看着她，心中由爱而生出万般怜悯。他感到自己头上悬着谋杀的宿命，娶她为妻是一种堪比犹大的背叛，是连波吉亚家族 [7] 做梦也想不出的更恶劣的罪行。他可能在任何时刻受到感召，去实践那个写在他手上的罪大恶极的预言。如此，他们两个还有什么幸福可言呢？当命运依然掌握着这个可怕的天平，他们的生活会如何呢？无论如何，婚礼必须要推迟，对此他毅然决然。尽管他深爱着那个女孩，当他们坐在一起时，哪怕是手指轻触，也会令他全身上下每一个神经因无比的欢愉而震颤，然而他清楚地意识到自己的责任所在，也完全明白那个事实——在他完成这桩谋杀之前，他没有权利结婚。完成之后， he 可以和西比尔·默顿站在圣坛前，把自己的一生交付于她的手上，不再惧怕有恶事发生；完成之后，他可以拥她入怀，知道她再也不用因为他而脸红，再也不用羞愧得抬不起头。可是，完成这桩谋杀必须是第一要务，对他们两个人而言，越快越好。

对他来说，生命意味着行动，而非思考。他拥有最难能可贵的东西——直觉决断力。

前一晚狂乱混沌的感觉此刻已经完全褪去，回想自己走街串巷地疯狂游荡，回想起自己情感上经历的剧烈的苦痛挣扎，他甚至觉得有些羞愧。他那些锥心刻骨的痛苦现在似乎变得很不真实。他很纳闷，自己怎么会傻到对无可避免之事埋天怨地。唯一令他苦恼的问题是，他要杀死谁？他并没有无视那个事实——谋杀就像是异教世界的宗教信仰，除了要有一位祭司，还需要一名牺牲者。他不是天才，没有敌人，而且他确实感觉到，这次不是意气用事或满足个人好恶的时机，他卷入的任务是一件最重大、最严肃的事件。于是，他在一页纸上列出了他的亲友名单，经过一番深思熟虑，他最终选择了自己的远房表亲克莱门蒂娜·比彻姆夫人，一位住在可胜街的可爱的老妇人。他一直非常喜欢克莱姆 [8] 夫人——每个人都这么称呼她，而且他法定年龄一到就继承了拉格比勋爵的所有财产，自己非常富有，并不会从她的离世中获得什么钱物的好处。事实上，他越琢磨就越觉得她是最合适的人选，任何拖延都是对西比尔的不公，他决意即刻安排行事。

首先要搞定的当然是手相师。于是他在窗边的谢拉顿 [9] 小书桌前坐下来，开了一张一百零五英镑的支票，收款人为塞普蒂默斯·波杰斯先生。接着，他将支票装进信封，令他的贴身男仆送去西月街。而后他打电话给马厩，叫了一辆马车，自己穿戴好就出了门。离开房间之前，他回头看了看西比尔·默顿的照片，发誓无论如何，他绝不会让她知道自己为她做了什么，他要将自己牺牲的秘密永远深埋在心中。

然而，他对毒物学一无所知，而且除了《拉夫入门指南》和《贝利杂志》，侍者在图书馆中也实在找不出什么东西。他亲自查看了书架，终于发现一册装帧精美的《药典》，还有一本由皇家医师学院院

长马修·里德爵士编纂的厄斯金的《毒物学》。马修·里德爵士是白金汉宫最古老的成员之一，曾因为其他人被误选，那次令人窘困的意外事件大大激怒了委员会，以至于当真人出现的时候，他们全体一致投票反对他。亚瑟勋爵读不懂两本书中的专业术语，已经开始后悔当初在牛津大学没认真上古典文学课程了。不过他在《毒物学》第二卷中发现一个非常有趣的关于乌头碱性能的详细记录，是用简单易读的英文记述的，看起来正是他想要的毒药。毒发快——几乎是即刻生效，完全无痛，而且据马修爵士的建议，如果以胶囊的形态服用，丝毫不会难以下咽。他在衬衫袖口上记足以致命的药剂量，将书放回原位，然后漫步到圣詹姆斯街的帕索·亨贝大药房。帕索先生常与贵族阶层打交道，对于亚瑟勋爵的需求，他感到十分惊讶，极其毕恭毕敬地低声说道，买这些药品必须要有诊断书的。亚瑟勋爵解释说是为了解决一只挪威巨獒，因为它出现了早期的狂犬病症状，已经咬了马车夫小腿肚子两次。帕索先生对这个理由非常满意，还恭维了亚瑟勋爵丰富的毒物学知识，并立刻配好了药。

亚瑟勋爵在邦德街一家商店的橱窗里发现一个漂亮的银质小糖果盒。他将胶囊装进糖果盒中，丢掉帕索·亨贝大药房的丑陋的药盒，然后立刻动身前往克莱姆夫人家。

“好啊，坏小子，”他一进屋，老夫人就大声说道，“怎么这么长时间没来看我？”

“我亲爱的克莱姆夫人，我实在无暇抽身。”亚瑟勋爵笑着说。

“我猜你的意思是你整日间都陪在西比尔·默顿小姐身边，买衣服、聊废话？我真是不理解人们为何对结婚这样小题大做。在我那个年代，我们从没想过在公共场合喁喁私语、卿卿我我，甚至私下也不曾。”

“向您保证，克莱姆夫人，我已经二十个小时没见过西比尔了。依我看，她是完全属于她的女帽商的。”

“当然了，要不是这样，你也不会来看望我这个丑老太婆。我很纳闷，你们男人怎么不引以为戒？我年轻的时候也有人为我痴狂，现如今变成一个风湿病缠身的可怜的老东西，一副假牙外加一副臭脾气。要不是亲爱的詹森夫人四处搜罗些蹩脚的法国小说给我送来，我估计都熬不过这一天。医生真是百无一用，就会向我收钱。他们连我烧心的毛病都治不好。”

“我给您带来了治疗烧心的药，克莱姆夫人，”亚瑟勋爵一脸严肃地说，“美国人研制的，药效奇佳。”

“我可不喜欢美国人的发明创造，亚瑟。我一点儿也不喜欢。我最近读了几部美国小说，全都不知所云。”

“哦，我这个可不是不知所云的东西，克莱姆夫人！我向您保证，药到病除。您一定要答应我试试看。”说着，亚瑟勋爵从口袋里拿出那个小盒子，递给她。

“嗯，这个盒子还挺精致的，亚瑟。真是给我的礼物吗？你真是太贴心了。这是那个灵丹妙药吗？看上去像一颗糖果。我现在就吃。”

“我的天啊！克莱门蒂娜夫人，”亚瑟勋爵大喊一声，抓住她的手，“现在可不行，它是顺势疗法 [10] 的药，如果在不烧心的时候吃，可能会后患无穷呢。等您难受的时候再吃，您会被药效吓一跳的。”

“那我现在就该吃。”克莱姆夫人说着，将小小的透明胶囊举到灯前，里面流动着液态乌头碱的泡沫。“我相信它一定很好吃。事实上，我虽然讨厌医生，却很喜欢药。不过，我还是等下次犯病时再吃吧。”

“那会是什么时候呢？”亚瑟勋爵急切地问道，“会很快吗？”

“但愿一个星期内不要再犯了。我昨天早上烧心，难受极了。不过，谁知道呢？”

“那么，克莱姆夫人，您肯定在这个月底之前还会再犯病？”

“怕是如此。不过，亚瑟，你今天真是有心啊！真的，西比尔让你变得更好了。你现在得离开了，我一会儿要和几个非常无聊的人吃晚饭，他们从来不聊八卦丑闻，我如果现在不睡一会儿，晚饭的时候是没法保持清醒的。再见，亚瑟！代我问候西比尔，还有谢谢你带来的美国药。”

“您可别忘了吃啊，克莱姆夫人。”亚瑟勋爵从座位上起身说道。

“我当然不会忘啊，傻孩子。你这样为我着想，真是太贴心了！我如果需要更多，会写信告诉你的。”

亚瑟勋爵兴高采烈地离开了，感到如释重负。

那天晚上他和西比尔·默顿碰了面。他告诉她，他突然被置于一个极其困难的境地，无论出于尊严还是责任，他都无法退缩；他告诉她婚礼必须推迟，因为直到他摆脱那个可怕的纠缠物，他才能恢复自由之身；他恳求她相信自己，请她对未来不要有任何怀疑，一切都会走上正轨，但必须要忍耐。

这场景发生在帕克巷默顿先生家的花房里，亚瑟勋爵平日里常来这儿吃晚饭。今夜的西比尔处于莫大的幸福之中，有那么一刻，亚瑟勋爵险些向心中懦弱的部分屈服，打算写信向克莱门蒂娜夫人要回药

丸，让婚礼照常进行，假装这世上根本没有波杰斯先生这个人。然而，他良善的本性很快占了上风，甚至当西比尔埋在他怀中痛哭流涕时，他也没有犹疑。令他心旌荡漾的美丽也触动了他的良心。他觉得为了几个月的快乐而毁掉如此美好的一生，是大错特错的。

直到临近午夜，他一直陪着西比尔，两人彼此慰藉。第二天一早，他给默顿先生写了一封充满男子气概的意志坚决的信，言明婚礼不得不推迟，然后就动身前往威尼斯了。

四

在威尼斯，他见到了他的弟弟瑟比顿勋爵。瑟比顿正巧乘着他的游艇从科孚岛来，两个年轻人一起度过了愉快的两周。早上，他们在利多岛上骑马，或是乘着狭长的黑色贡多拉在绿色的水道中滑行；下午，他们通常在游艇上招待访客；晚上，他们在佛罗莱恩餐厅吃饭，在皮亚扎广场上没完没了地抽烟。但不知怎的，亚瑟勋爵并不开心。他每天都要读《泰晤士报》的讣告栏，希望能看到克莱门蒂娜夫人去世的消息，可每天都是失望。他开始担心是不是发生了什​​么意外。他经常后悔，当初她迫切地希望尝试药效的时候，自己阻止了她服下那枚乌头碱。尽管西比尔的信满是爱与信任以及温柔，却也总是语带哀伤。他常常在某些时候觉得自己与她永别了。

两周之后，瑟比顿勋爵厌倦了威尼斯，决定沿海岸南下，到拉文那去，因为他听说那里的松树园里有一些重要的射猎活动。一开始，亚瑟勋爵坚决拒绝同往，不过，他钟爱的瑟比顿最终说服了他，说他如果自己待在达涅利酒店，会闷死的。15号的早上，他们借着一阵强劲的东北风，在惊涛骇浪中出发了。那项运动十分精彩，而自由的户外生活也让亚瑟勋爵的脸上又焕发了生机。可是到了22号，他又开始担忧起克莱门蒂娜夫人的事，于是不顾瑟比顿的反对，乘坐火车回到了威尼斯。

他刚刚从贡多拉中迈步出来，踏上酒店的台阶，酒店老板就拿着一沓电报迎了上来。亚瑟勋爵从他手中一把夺过电报，把它们撕开。大功告成！克莱门蒂娜夫人于17号夜里突然离世！

他首先想到的是西比尔，于是发了一封电报告诉她自己即刻赶回伦敦。接着他让贴身男仆收拾行李，连夜赶车。他支付了贡多拉船夫五倍的船费，终于怀着轻松的心情、迈着轻快的步伐回到了家，直奔起居室。起居室里有三封给他的信。一封来自西比尔，满是同情与哀悼。另外两封分别来自他的母亲和克莱门蒂娜夫人的律师。似乎那天晚上老夫人先和公爵夫人吃了饭，席间相谈甚欢，可是因为烧心难受，提早离开了。第二天早上，她被发现死在了床上，很显然走得安详，没遭罪受苦。马修·里德爵士立刻被请来，当然也是于事无补，回

天乏术。她将于22号被安葬在比彻姆-查克特。她去世前几天刚刚立了遗嘱，除了将袖珍画收藏品都留给了自己的姐妹玛格丽特·拉福德夫人，紫水晶项链留给了西比尔·默顿之外，她将自己可胜街的小房子、所有的家具、个人财物、藏画等等悉数留给了亚瑟勋爵。遗产倒是不值什么，可律师曼斯菲尔德先生急切地要亚瑟勋爵尽早赶回来，因为有许多账单要支付，克莱门蒂娜夫人生前从没有理财记账的习惯。

克莱门蒂娜夫人对亚瑟勋爵的善念让他动容，他觉得波杰斯先生要为此事负很大的责任。然而他对西比尔的爱支配了其他所有情感，他认为自己履行了应尽的职责，这让他平静安宁。当他抵达查令十字街时，他感到全然的幸福。

默顿一家亲切地招待了他，西比尔让他发誓再也不会会有什么东西挡在两人之间。婚礼定在6月7日。他的生活又变得光明美好起来，往日的欢乐再次回到他身边。

这天，他在克莱门蒂娜夫人的律师和西比尔的陪同下，来到可胜街的那间房子。他们烧掉了一包包褪色的信件，收拾出一抽屉一抽屉的垃圾。突然，那个年轻的女孩兴奋地叫出了声。

“你发现了什么，西比尔？”亚瑟勋爵停下手中的活儿，抬起头微笑着问道。

“这个可爱的银质小糖果盒，亚瑟。你不觉得它古雅别致、有几分荷兰风格吗？把它给我吧！我知道八十岁以前我都用不上那条紫水晶项链的。”

是那个装了乌头碱的盒子。

亚瑟勋爵吓了一跳，两颊泛红。他几乎全然忘记了自己的所作所为。对他来说，这真是奇怪的巧合：西比尔，这个让他经历那一切烦恼的人，也最先让他想起了它。

“你当然可以拥有它，西比尔。本就是送给可怜的克莱姆夫人的。”

“哦！谢谢你，亚瑟。这颗糖也给我吗？我都不知道克莱门蒂娜夫人喜欢吃糖。我原以为她是理性行事的人。”

亚瑟勋爵面色惨白如纸，一个可怕的念头闪过他的脑海。

“糖？西比尔，你什么意思？”他用沙哑的声音缓慢地说。

“里面有一颗糖果，只有一颗，看上去很旧，沾满了灰尘，我可一点儿也不想吃它。怎么了，亚瑟？你脸色怎么这么差？”

亚瑟勋爵快步穿过房间，抓过那个盒子。里面正是带有毒性泡沫的琥珀色胶囊。原来克莱门蒂娜夫人是寿终正寝！

这个发现令他震惊不已！他将胶囊扔进火里，一屁股坐在沙发上，发出绝望的悲声。

五

第二次推迟婚礼让默顿先生忧心忡忡，而茱莉亚夫人已经订好了参加婚礼的礼服，因此她竭力劝说西比尔断了这段姻缘。西比尔虽深爱着自己的母亲，也同样将终身托付给了亚瑟勋爵，无论茱莉亚夫人说什么动摇不了她的信念。亚瑟勋爵自己则用了好多天才平复了巨大的沮丧，有一段时间，他处于神经衰弱的状态。然而，他绝佳的直觉决断力很快占了上风，他强健务实的大脑并没有让他陷于长久的迟疑之中。毒药计划彻底失败了，炸药或爆炸物显然值得一试。

他再次检视了一遍亲友名单，经过一番慎重考虑，他决定炸死他的舅舅，奇切斯特教长。这位学识渊博的教长酷爱钟表，收藏了一批从十五世纪到当代的精美钟表。在亚瑟勋爵看来，这位好教长的这个嗜好恰恰为他实施计划提供了绝佳的机会。当然，去哪儿搞来一套爆炸装置，那得再做打算了。《伦敦通讯簿》在这方面没有提供任何信息，而且他觉得就算去苏格兰场 [11] 也打听不到什么，因为在爆炸之前，他们似乎从来也搞不清楚炸药的来龙去脉，甚至炸过之后，依然一无所知。

他突然想起了他的朋友鲁沃洛夫，一个极具革命主义倾向的年轻俄国人，冬天的时候，他们曾经在温德米尔夫人家碰过面。据说鲁沃洛夫伯爵正在撰写彼得大帝的传记，来到英国是为了调研这位沙皇在此当造船工人时期的相关资料。不过人们普遍怀疑他是一名虚无主义特工。毫无疑问，俄国大使馆十分不愿意看到他出现在伦敦。亚瑟勋爵觉得他正是那个能助自己一臂之力的人。于是，亚瑟在一天早上驱车前往鲁沃洛夫位于布鲁姆斯伯里的寓所，去寻求意见和协助。

“所以您当真要投身政治？”当亚瑟勋爵道出此行目的时，鲁沃洛夫伯爵如此问道。可亚瑟勋爵讨厌任何形式的招摇，觉得有必要承认自己对社会问题没有一星半点儿兴趣，仅仅是需要一个爆炸装置来处理一件纯粹的家务事，而这件事只牵涉他自己，无关任何其他人。

鲁沃洛夫伯爵惊诧地看了他一会儿，发觉他十分认真，于是在纸上写下一个地址，签了名，递给桌子对面的他。

“苏格兰场可是不惜代价想得到这个地址，我亲爱的朋友。”

“他们不会知道的。”亚瑟勋爵大笑着高声说道。和这个年轻的俄国人热情地握手之后，他跑下楼，看了一眼纸条，让马车夫带他去苏荷广场。

到了那儿，他让马车夫先回去，自己则步行到希腊街，最终来到

一个叫贝尔庭院的地方。他穿过拱廊，走进一个奇怪的死胡同。这里显然是一家法国洗衣店，晾衣绳在房屋之间纵横交错成一张完美的大网，亚麻布在清晨的空气中飘动着。他径直走到头儿，敲了敲一所绿色小房子的门。在等人应门的空当，院子里的每一扇窗户都映出一张张模糊的窥探的脸。开门的是一个长相极其粗鄙的外国人，用一口蹩脚的英语问他有什么事。亚瑟勋爵递上鲁沃洛夫伯爵写给他的纸条。那个男人看到纸条后，鞠了一躬，将亚瑟勋爵请进了房屋底层一间破败不堪的前厅。没多久，温克尔科夫先生——在英格兰人们都这样称呼他——急匆匆地走进房间，脖子上围着沾了红酒渍的餐巾，左手还拿着一把餐叉。

“鲁沃洛夫伯爵介绍我来找您。”亚瑟勋爵鞠躬说道，“我急需和您简单聊聊，谈笔买卖。我叫史密斯，罗伯特·史密斯先生，我希望您卖给我一只爆炸的钟表。”

“很高兴见到您，亚瑟勋爵！”和蔼可亲的小个子德国人大笑着说道，“别紧张，我的职责就是认识每一个人，我记得某个夜晚在温德米尔夫人家见过您。我希望夫人她万安！您介意坐下来陪我吃完早餐吗？有一盘上乘的美味佳肴，我那些好心的朋友们都说我的莱茵葡萄酒比他们在德国大使馆喝到的还要好。”亚瑟勋爵还没从被认出的惊讶中缓过来，发现自己已经在里屋落座了。手持铭刻着皇家纹饰的浅黄色大酒杯，小口品着最美味的莱茵白葡萄酒，亚瑟勋爵十分友好地和这位著名的阴谋家交谈起来。

“爆炸钟表，”温克尔科夫先生说道，“可不是什么海外出口的好东西，就算成功通过了海关，可火车运输太不规律，经常还没运到目的地就爆炸了。不过，如果您是想家用，我倒是可以给您提供一件绝佳的物件，效果包您满意。我能问您是要给谁用吗？如果是针对警察，或者任何与苏格兰场有关的人，我恐怕没法帮您。英国警探们真是我们的好朋友，我发现仰仗他们的愚蠢，我们可以为所欲为。我可不想让他们任何一个遭殃。”

“我向您保证，”亚瑟勋爵说，“这件事和警察绝无半点牵连。其实，这钟表是给奇切斯特教长的。”

“哎呀！亚瑟勋爵，我都不知道您对宗教有如此强烈的态度。如今已经鲜少有年轻人如此了。”

“恐怕您抬举我了，温克尔科夫先生。”亚瑟勋爵红着脸说，“事实上，我对神学一无所知。”

“那么就是一件纯粹的私人恩怨了？”

“纯粹私事。”

温克尔科夫先生耸了耸肩，离开了房间。几分钟后回来的时候，他手里多了一小块一分钱硬币大小的圆形炸药，一只精美的法式钟表，顶端是一尊镀金的自由神像，脚踏象征独裁专政的九头蛇。

亚瑟勋爵一见到它不禁面露喜色。“正是我想要的。”他喊道，“快告诉我怎么让它爆炸。”

“啊！那是我的秘密。”温克尔科夫先生回答道，他注视着自己的发明创造，满脸是无可厚非的自豪。“告诉我您希望它什么时间爆炸，我会把这个装置设定到那个时间。”

“那么，今天是星期二，如果您能马上把它送去……”

“那可不行。我现在要为莫斯科那边的朋友处理一些重要的事情。不过，我明天倒是可以送出去。”

“哦，那时间足够了！”亚瑟勋爵礼貌地说，“如果明晚或周四一早抵达。爆炸时间，定在周五正午时分如何？那时候，教长通常会在家里。”

“星期五，正午时分。”温克尔科夫先生重复着，在壁炉旁衣柜上放着的大账本上做了大致记录。

“那么现在，”亚瑟勋爵从座位上起身说道，“请告诉我该支付您多少钱。”

“小事一桩，亚瑟勋爵，我可没打算从中牟利。那个炸药七先令六便士，钟表三镑十先令，马车费大约五先令。能为鲁沃洛夫伯爵的朋友服务，我感到万分荣幸。”

“可是劳您费了工夫，温克尔科夫先生。”

“哦，那没什么！我很乐意效劳。我工作可不是为了钱，我完全是为了我的艺术而活。”

亚瑟勋爵在桌上放了四英镑二先令六便士，向友善的小个子德国人道了谢，拒绝了下周六在某个茶会上见一些无政府主义者的邀请，然后离开了那所房子，前往帕克巷。

接下来的两天，他都处于极度兴奋的状态中。周五中午十二点，他驱车前往白金汉宫等待消息。整个下午，呆头呆脑的门厅侍者贴出来自全国各地的电报，公布赛马结果、离婚案的陪审团裁决、天气报告，诸如此类；电报机上打出下议院整晚会议的乏味细节，以及证券交易所的一小场恐慌。四点钟，各类晚报来了。亚瑟勋爵拿着《帕摩尔街报》《圣詹姆斯报》《环球报》《回声报》一头扎进了图书馆。古德柴尔德上校对此义愤填膺，他想要阅读关于他上午在伦敦市长官邸发表的一篇演讲的报道，演讲主题是南非传教以及在全省设立黑人

主教的建议。而出于种种原因，他对《晚间新闻报》抱有强烈的偏见。然而，所有报纸上都没有奇切斯特的任何消息，亚瑟勋爵猜想这次尝试肯定又失败了。这对他是一次沉重的打击，他一度感到万念俱灰。第二天他去见了温克尔科夫先生。温克尔科夫先生万分诚恳地道歉，主动提出为他免费提供另一块钟表，或者以成本价卖给他一套硝化甘油炸药装置。不过亚瑟勋爵已经对爆炸彻底死心，温克尔科夫先生自己也承认，现如今什么事都掺假，连炸药都不纯。这个小个子德国人承认那个装置一定是出了什么问题，可是那个钟表还是可能会爆炸的。他举例子说，他曾经给敖德萨的军政长官送去一个气压计装置，预设十天之后爆炸，可是三个月过去了都没动静。后来它果真爆炸了，仅仅把女仆炸得粉碎，军政长官早在六个星期以前就出城了。不过这至少证明了，虽然时间总是不准，可一旦奏效，炸药的杀伤力还是威力无穷的。亚瑟勋爵听了这些才感到一丝丝欣慰，可是这点儿希望也最终破灭了，因为两天之后，他正准备上楼时，公爵夫人把他叫到自己的房间，给他看了一封她刚刚收到的从教区发来的信。

“简的信向来写得生动。”公爵夫人说道，“你一定要读一读最近这一封，完全像穆迪送来的那些小说一样好看。”

亚瑟勋爵从她手中接过信件。内容如下：

教区，奇切斯特

5月27日

我最亲爱的姑妈：

十分感谢您为多加会 [12] 送来法兰绒和方格布。我非常赞同您的观点，她们想要穿漂亮衣服，这真是太荒唐了。可现如今，每一个人都如此激进，如此反宗教，很难让她们明白她们不该穿得像上流社会。我不确定我们的未来将如何。正如爸爸经常在布道时所说的，我们生活在一个没有信仰的年代。

我们这儿最近发生了一件趣事。上周四，某个匿名仰慕者给爸爸送来一只钟表。它被装在一个木头盒子里，邮资已付，寄件地址是伦敦。爸爸认为一定是某个人读了他杰出的布道文《放纵即为自由吗？》，然后送来了这东西，因为在钟表的上面是一尊女像，爸爸说她头上的帽子代表自由。我觉得它并不好看，可是爸爸说它有年头了，所以我猜想它应该还不错。帕克拆开了盒子，爸爸把钟表放在了图书室的壁炉架上。星期五早上我们都坐在那里，当钟表指针指向十二点的时候，我们听到嗡嗡的一声，人像底座冒出一小股烟，自由女神掉了下来，撞上壁炉挡板，撞坏了鼻子！玛丽亚吓了一跳，可是

当时太可笑了，詹姆斯和我不禁大笑起来，甚至连爸爸都被逗乐了。我们上前检查，才发现它其实是一只闹钟，如果你把它设定在某一时刻，然后在一个小锤子下面放些火药和一个小火帽，它可以在你预设的时刻爆炸。爸爸说它会产生噪声，不能放在图书室，因此雷吉把它带去了讲堂。它一点儿用处都没有，就是成天到晚地小规模爆炸。你觉得亚瑟会想要一个作为结婚礼物吗？我觉得它们在伦敦算是时鲜的玩意儿。爸爸说它们其实寓意深远，表明自由不能长久，最终会坠落。爸爸还说自由是在法国大革命时期被发明出来的。真是糟透了！

我现在得去多加会了，去给她们朗读您启迪心灵的书信。亲爱的姑妈，您说得太对了，她们这个阶层就应该穿一些简朴的衣服。我必须说，她们愁穿戴这件事真是太荒唐了，毕竟在这个世界上，在未来的日子里，还有那么多更加重要的事情。我很高兴您那件印花底绸效果很好，蕾丝花边都没坏。我打算在星期三的主教学校穿您送给我的那件黄缎子，我想看上去一定很不错。您会佩戴蝴蝶结吗？詹宁斯说如今每个人都佩戴蝴蝶结，而且衬裙要有荷叶边。雷吉那边又爆炸了，爸爸命令他把钟表送去马厩。我觉得爸爸不像刚开始那么喜欢它了，尽管有人送来这么一件漂亮精巧的玩具还是令他颇为受用的，至少说明人们读了他的布道文，并从中受益。

爸爸让我问候您，还有詹姆斯、雷吉和玛丽亚都问您好。希望塞西尔姑父痛风的毛病好些了。相信我，亲爱的姑妈，永远爱您的侄女。

简·佩尔西

又及，记得回答我蝴蝶结的问题，詹宁斯非说这是现在的时尚。

公爵夫人因为这封信大笑不已，亚瑟勋爵对着它却面色凝重，十分不快。

“我亲爱的亚瑟，”她大声说道，“我再也不会给你看年轻女士的信了！可是对于那只钟表我真是无话可说。我想它是一件伟大的发明，我自己也应该拥有一只。”

“我可没什么兴趣。”亚瑟勋爵苦笑着说道。他亲吻了母亲，然后离开了房间。

上楼以后，他瘫坐在沙发上，满眼噙泪。他殚精竭虑地去完成这桩谋杀，可两次都失败了，而且错都不在他。他已经努力去履行自己的责任了，可命运女神似乎背叛了他。他因为良愿无法达成而烦恼，因为徒劳无功而烦恼。或许，彻底取消这场婚姻更好一些。西比尔会痛苦，没错，可是这痛苦并不会真的毁掉她高洁的本质。至于他自

己，有什么关系呢？人终有一死，既然生无可恋，死亦无惧。就让命运主宰厄运吧，他也不费力去帮命运女神了。

七点半，他穿好衣服去俱乐部。瑟比顿正在那儿和年轻的人们开派对。他被迫留下来和他们共进晚餐。他们琐碎的闲谈和无聊的笑话实在提不起他的兴趣，上咖啡的时候，他谎称自己还有约会，先行离开了。他刚一走出俱乐部，侍者就递给他一封信。信来自温克尔科夫先生，邀请他第二天晚上屈尊前去看一个只要一打开就会爆炸的雨伞。这是最新的发明，刚刚从日内瓦运来。他把信撕得粉碎。他已经下定决心不再做任何尝试。然后他游逛到泰晤士河堤岸，在河边坐了几个小时。月亮从鬃毛一般的黄褐色的云团间透出头，仿佛是一只狮子的眼睛；空洞无边的苍穹中数不清的星光闪烁，仿佛在紫色的穹顶上撒满了金粉；偶尔，一只驳船摇晃着进入混浊的水流，随着起落的潮水漂远；铁路信号灯由绿变红，火车呼啸着驶过大桥。过了一会儿，威斯敏斯特高塔上发出十二点的低沉的钟声，每一声洪亮的钟声都仿佛让黑夜震颤。接着，火车信号灯熄灭了，一盏孤零零的路灯发出柔弱的光，就像是一根巨大的船桅杆上镶嵌着一颗硕大的红宝石。喧嚣的城市渐渐沉寂。

凌晨两点，他站起身，漫步去黑衣修士桥。一切看起来多么不真实！多像是一场奇怪的梦！河对岸的房子似乎建在黑暗中。人们会说银光黑影重新装点了这个世界。圣保罗教堂的大屋顶若隐若现，就像是朦胧天空中的一个气泡。

他走到克利奥帕特拉方尖碑 [13] 的附近，见一个男人正靠在矮墙上。等他再走近一些，那个男人抬起了头，煤气灯光照亮了他的整张脸。

是波杰斯先生，那个手相师！谁都不会认错那张松弛的胖脸，那副金丝眼镜，那个苍白无力的微笑，那张魅惑的巧嘴。

亚瑟勋爵停下脚步。一个机智的念头闪过他的脑海，他悄无声息地来到他的身后。说时迟，那时快，他一把抓住波杰斯先生的双腿，把他丢进了泰晤士河。一声粗俗的咒骂和一片重重的水花飞溅之后，一切归于平静。亚瑟勋爵紧张地观望，看不到那个手相师的踪迹，只有一顶高帽在月光照耀下的河水中随漩涡旋转着。过了一会儿，高帽也沉了，再寻不到波杰斯先生的任何踪迹。他一度以为大桥楼梯上一个身形高大的怪异的人看到了他，一股挫败的恐怖感笼罩了他。不过后来他发现那只是一个倒影，当月亮从云后面出来，它就消失不见了。终于，他似乎完成了命运的裁决。他长长地舒了一口气，如释重负，嘴边呢喃着西比尔的名字。

“您丢了什么东西吗，先生？”一个声音突然出现在他身后。

他转过身，看到一个手持牛眼灯的警察。

“没什么重要的，警察先生。”他微笑着回答。他招呼了一辆路过的马车，跳上去，让车夫驶往贝尔格雷夫广场。

接下来的几天，他在希望与恐惧之间煎熬。有时候，他期待波杰斯先生走进房间；有时候，他又觉得命运不该对他如此不公。他去了两次西月街手相师的住处，可是没勇气敲响门铃。他希望得到确信，又害怕它。

它终于来了。他正坐在俱乐部的吸烟室喝茶，心不在焉地听着瑟比顿描述狂欢会上最后一首滑稽歌曲，侍者拿着晚报走进来。他拿起《圣詹姆斯报》，百无聊赖地翻看，一个奇怪的标题引起了他的注意：

一名手相师的自杀

他赶紧读起来，脸色因为兴奋而变得苍白。文章是这样写的：

亚瑟勋爵拿着报纸冲出俱乐部，门厅侍者惊诧万分，企图拦住他，却是徒劳。他立刻乘车赶往帕克巷。西比尔透过窗户看到了他，感觉到他似乎带来了什么好消息。她跑下楼去迎接他，当她看到他的脸，她知道云开雾散了。

“我亲爱的西比尔，”亚瑟勋爵大喊道，“我们明天就结婚吧！”

“你这个傻瓜！急什么？蛋糕都没订呢！”西比尔说着，眼眶含泪，笑逐颜开。

六

大约三个星期之后，他们举行了婚礼，圣彼得教堂挤满了身着锦衣华服的人。奇切斯特教长极其郑重庄严地主持了婚礼仪式，所有人都承认他们从没见过比这对新人更漂亮的夫妻。然而，不只是漂亮，他们还非常幸福。亚瑟勋爵从未曾有一时半刻后悔他为西比尔所承受的一切苦楚，而她也给予了他一个女人可以给予男人的最好的东西——崇拜、温柔，还有爱。对于他们而言，现实没有扼杀情爱。他们一直

感到年轻。

几年之后，他们有了两个漂亮的孩子。温德米尔夫人来到奥尔顿修道院探望他们。奥尔顿修道院是个可爱的老房子，是公爵送给儿子的结婚礼物。一天下午，她正和亚瑟夫人坐在花园里的酸橙树下，看着小男孩和小女孩像是跃动的阳光一般在玫瑰小径上蹦蹦跳跳。她突然握住女主人的手，问道：“你幸福吗，西比尔？”

“亲爱的温德米尔夫人，我当然幸福。您呢？”

“我没时间幸福，西比尔。我总会喜欢新结识的人。我一旦和谁变得熟识，就会对他们厌烦。”

“您的狮子们也无法取悦您吗，温德米尔夫人？”

“哦，当然不能！狮子的趣味超不过一季。一旦它们的狮鬃被剪掉，它们就变成了世界上最无聊的东西。而且，如果你对它们非常好，它们就得寸进尺起来。你记得那个讨人厌的波杰斯先生吗？他是个大骗子。当然，我全然不在意，甚至当他想向我借钱的时候，我都原谅了他，但我无法忍受他向我求爱。他让我打心底里厌恶手相学。我现在相信传心术。那可好玩儿多了！”

“您可别在这儿说任何手相学的不好，温德米尔夫人。这是唯一一个亚瑟不喜欢别人打趣的话题。我向您保证，他是很认真的。”

“你不会告诉我他信手相学吧，西比尔？”

“您自己问他，温德米尔夫人，他来了。”亚瑟勋爵手捧着一大束黄玫瑰出现在花园中，他的两个孩子绕着他嬉闹。

“亚瑟勋爵？”

“什么事，温德米尔夫人？”

“别告诉我你相信手相学？”

“我当然相信啊。”那个年轻的男子微笑着说。

“可是，为什么呢？”

“因为我毕生的幸福都多亏了手相学。”他低声说着，坐到柳条椅上。

“我亲爱的亚瑟勋爵，它给了你什么？”

“西比尔。”他边回答，边将那束玫瑰献给妻子，并深深凝望着她紫色的眼睛。

“胡说八道！”温德米尔夫人大声说道，“我这辈子都没听过这种胡话！”

i

It was Lady Windermere's last reception before Easter, and Bentinck House was even more crowded than usual. Six Cabinet Ministers had come on from the Speaker's Levée in their stars and ribands, all the pretty women wore their smartest dresses, and at the end of the picture-gallery stood the Princess Sophia of Carlsruhe, a heavy Tartar-looking lady, with tiny black eyes and wonderful emeralds, talking bad French at the top of her voice, and laughing immoderately at everything that was said to her. It was certainly a wonderful medley of people. Gorgeous peeresses chatted affably to violent Radicals, popular preachers brushed coat-tails with eminent sceptics, a perfect bevy of bishops kept following a stout prima-donna from room to room, on the staircase stood several Royal Academicians, disguised as artists, and it was said that at one time the supper-room was absolutely crammed with geniuses. In fact, it was one of Lady Windermere's best nights, and the Princess stayed till nearly half-past eleven.

As soon as she had gone, Lady Windermere returned to the picture-gallery, where a celebrated political economist was solemnly explaining the scientific theory of music to an indignant virtuoso from Hungary, and began to talk to the Duchess of Paisley. She looked wonderfully beautiful with her grand ivory throat, her large blue forget-me-not eyes, and her heavy coils of golden hair. Or pur they were — not that pale straw colour that nowadays usurps the gracious name of gold, but such gold as is woven into sunbeams or hidden in strange amber; and they gave to her face something of the frame of a saint, with not a little of the fascination of a sinner. She was a curious psychological study. Early in life she had discovered the important truth that nothing looks so like innocence as an indiscretion; and by a series of reckless escapades, half of them quite harmless, she had acquired all the privileges of a personality. She had more than once changed her husband; indeed, Debrecht credits her with three marriages; but as she had never changed her lover, the world had long ago ceased to talk scandal about her. She was now forty years of age, childless, and with that inordinate passion for pleasure which is the secret of remaining young.

Suddenly she looked eagerly round the room, and said, in her clear contralto voice, 'Where is my cheiromantist?' 'Your what, Gladys?', exclaimed the Duchess, giving an involuntary start.

'My cheiromantist, Duchess; I can't live without him at present.'

'Dear Gladys! you are always so original,' murmured the Duchess, trying to remember what a cheiroman-tist really was, and hoping it was not the same as a cheiropodist.

'He comes to see my hand twice a week regularly,' continued Lady Windermere, 'and is most interesting about it.'

'Good heavens!' said the Duchess to herself, 'he is a sort of cheiropodist after all. How very dreadful. I hope he is a foreigner at any rate. It wouldn't be quite so bad then.'

'I must certainly introduce him to you.'

'Introduce him!' cried the Duchess; 'you don't mean to say he is here?' and she began looking about for a small tortoise-shell fan and a very tattered lace shawl, so as to be ready to go at a moment's notice.

'Of course he is here, I would not dream of giving a party without him. He tells me I have a pure psychic hand, and that if my thumb had been the least little bit shorter, I should have been a confirmed pessimist, and gone into a convent.'

'Oh, I see!' said the Duchess, feeling very much relieved; 'he tells fortunes, I suppose?'

'And misfortunes, too,' answered Lady Windermere, 'any amount of them. Next year, for instance, I am in great danger, both by land and sea, so I am going to live in a balloon, and draw up my dinner in a basket every evening. It is all written down on my little finger, or on the palm of my hand, I forget which.'

'But surely that is tempting Providence, Gladys.'

'My dear Duchess, surely Providence can resist temptation by this time. I think every one should have their hands told once a month, so as to know what not to do. Of course, one does it all the same, but it is so pleasant to be warned. Now, if some one doesn't go and fetch Mr Podgers at once, I shall have to go myself.'

'Let me go, Lady Windermere,' said a tall handsome young man, who was standing by, listening to the conversation with an amused smile.

'Thanks so much, Lord Arthur; but I am afraid you wouldn't recognise him.'

'If he is as wonderful as you say, Lady Windermere, I couldn't well miss him. Tell me what he is like, and I'll bring him to you at once.'

'Well, he is not a bit like a cheiromantist. I mean he is not mysterious, or esoteric, or romantic-looking. He is a little, stout man, with a funny, bald head, and great gold-rimmed spectacles; something between a family doctor and a country attorney. I'm really very sorry, but it is not my fault. People are so annoying. All my pianists look exactly like poets, and all my poets look exactly like pianists; and I remember last season asking a most dreadful conspirator to dinner, a man who had blown up ever so many people, and always wore a coat of mail, and carried a dagger up his shirt-sleeve; and do you know that when he came he looked just like a nice old clergy-man, and cracked jokes all the evening? Of course, he was very amusing, and all that, but I was awfully disappointed; and when I asked him about the coat of mail, he only laughed, and said it was far too cold to wear in England. Ah, here is Mr Podgers! Now, Mr Podgers, I want you to tell the Duchess of Paisley's hand. Duchess, you must take your glove off. No, not the left hand, the other.'

'Dear Gladys, I really don't think it is quite right,' said the Duchess, feebly unbuttoning a rather soiled kid glove.

'Nothing interesting ever is,' said Lady Windermere : 'on a fait le monde ainsi . But I must introduce you. Duch-ess, this is Mr Podgers, my pet cheiromantist. Mr Podgers, this is the Duchess of Paisley, and if you say that she has a larger mountain of the moon than I have, I will never believe in you again.'

'I am sure, Gladys, there is nothing of the kind in my hand,' said the Duchess gravely.

‘Your Grace is quite right,’ said Mr Podgers, glancing at the little fat hand with its short square fingers, ‘the mountain of the moon is not developed. The line of life, however, is excellent. Kindly bend the wrist. Thank you. Three distinct lines on the rascette ! You will live to a great age, Duchess, and be extremely happy. Ambition — very moderate, line of intellect not exaggerated, line of heart-’

‘Now, do be indiscreet, Mr Podgers,’ cried Lady Windermere.

‘Nothing would give me greater pleasure,’ said Mr Podgers, bowing, ‘if the Duchess ever had been, but I am sorry to say that I see great permanence of affection, combined with a strong sense of duty.’

‘Pray go on, Mr Podgers,’ said the Duchess, looking quite pleased.

‘Economy is not the least of your Grace’s virtues,’ continued Mr Podgers, and Lady Windermere went off into fits of laughter.

‘Economy is a very good thing,’ remarked the Duchess complacently; ‘when I married Paisley he had eleven castles, and not a single house fit to live in.’

‘And now he has twelve houses, and not a single castle,’ cried Lady Windermere.

‘Well, my dear,’ said the Duchess, ‘I like —’

‘Comfort,’ said Mr Podgers, ‘and modern improvements, and hot water laid on in every bedroom. Your Grace is quite right. Comfort is the only thing our civilisation can give us.’

‘You have told the Duchess’s character admirably, Mr Podgers, and now you must tell Lady Flora’s;’ and in answer to a nod from the smiling hostess, a tall girl, with sandy Scotch hair, and high shoulder-blades, stepped awkwardly from behind the sofa, and held out a long, bony hand with spatulate fingers.

‘Ah, a pianist! I see,’ said Mr Podgers, ‘an excellent pianist, but perhaps hardly a musician. Very reserved, very honest, and with a great love of animals.’

‘Quite true!’ exclaimed the Duchess, turning to Lady Windermere, ‘absolutely true! Flora keeps two dozen collie dogs at Macloskie, and would turn our town house into a menagerie if her father would let her.'

'Well, that is just what I do with my house every Thurs-day evening,' cried Lady Windermere, laughing, 'only I like lions better than collie dogs.'

'Your one mistake, Lady Windermere,' said Mr Podgers, with a pompous bow.

'If a woman can't make her mistakes charming, she is only a female,' was the answer. 'But you must read some more hands for us. Come, Sir Thomas, show Mr Podgers yours;' and a genial-looking old gentleman, in a white waistcoat, came forward, and held out a thick rugged hand, with a very long third finger.

'An adventurous nature; four long voyages in the past, and one to come. Been shipwrecked three times. No, only twice, but in danger of a shipwreck your next journey. A strong Conservative, very punctual, and with a passion for collecting curiosities. Had a severe illness between the ages of sixteen and eighteen. Was left a fortune when about thirty. Great aversion to cats and Radicals.'

'Extraordinary!' exclaimed Sir Thomas; 'you must really tell my wife's hand, too.'

'Your second wife's,' said Mr Podgers quietly, still keeping Sir Thomas's hand in his. 'Your second wife's. I shall be charmed;' but Lady Marvel, a melancholy-looking woman, with brown hair and sentimental eyelashes, entirely declined to have her past or her future exposed; and nothing that Lady Windermere could do would induce Monsieur de Koloff, the Russian Ambassador, even to take his gloves off. In fact, many people seemed afraid to face the odd little man with his stereotyped smile, his gold spectacles, and his bright, beady eyes; and when he told poor Lady Fermor, right out before every one, that she did not care a bit for music, but was extremely fond of musicians, it was generally felt that cheiromancy was a most dangerous science, and one that ought not to be encouraged, except in a tête-à-tête.

Lord Arthur Savile, however, who did not know anything about Lady Fermor's unfortunate story, and who had been watching Mr Podgers with a great deal of interest, was filled with an immense curiosity to have his own hand read, and feeling somewhat shy about putting him-self forward, crossed over the room to where Lady Windermere was sitting, and, with a charming blush, asked her if she thought Mr Podgers would mind.

‘Of course, he won’t mind,’ said Lady Windermere, ‘that is what he is here for. All my lions, Lord Arthur, are performing lions, and jump through hoops whenever I ask them. But I must warn you beforehand that I shall tell Sybil everything. She is coming to lunch with me to-morrow, to talk about bonnets, and if Mr Podgers finds out that you have a bad temper, or a tendency to gout, or a wife living in Bayswater, I shall certainly let her know all about it.’

Lord Arthur smiled, and shook his head. ‘I am not afraid,’ he answered. ‘Sybil knows me as well as I know her.’

‘Ah! I am a little sorry to hear you say that. The proper basis for marriage is a mutual misunderstanding. No, I am not at all cynical, I have merely got experience, which, however, is very much the same thing. Mr Podgers, Lord Arthur Savile is dying to have his hand read. Don’t tell him that he is engaged to one of the most beautiful girls in London, because that appeared in the Morning Post a month ago.

‘Dear Lady Windermere,’ cried the Marchioness of Jed-burgh, ‘do let Mr Podgers stay here a little longer. He has just told me I should go on the stage, and I am so interested.’

‘If he has told you that, Lady Jedburgh, I shall certainly take him away. Come over at once, Mr Podgers, and read Lord Arthur’s hand.’

‘Well,’ said Lady Jedburgh, making a little moue as she rose from the sofa, ‘if I am not to be allowed to go on the stage, I must be allowed to be part of the audience at any rate.’

‘Of course; we are all going to be part of the audience,’ said Lady Windermere; ‘and now, Mr Podgers, be sure and tell us something nice. Lord Arthur is one of my spe-cial favourites.’

But when Mr Podgers saw Lord Arthur’s hand he grew curiously pale, and said nothing. A shudder seemed to pass through him, and his great bushy eyebrows twitched convulsively, in an odd, irritating way they had when he was puzzled. Then some huge beads of perspiration broke out on his yellow forehead, like a poisonous dew, and his fat fingers grew cold and clammy.

Lord Arthur did not fail to notice these strange signs of agitation, and, for the first time in his life, he himself felt fear. His impulse was to rush from the room, but he restrained himself. It was better to know the worst, what-ever it was, than to be left in this hideous uncertainty.

‘I am waiting, Mr Podgers,’ he said.

‘We are all waiting,’ cried Lady Windermere, in her quick, impatient manner, but the cheiromantist made no reply.

‘I believe Arthur is going on the stage,’ said Lady Jedburgh, ‘and that, after your scolding, Mr Podgers is afraid to tell him so.’

Suddenly Mr Podgers dropped Lord Arthur’s right hand, and seized hold of his left, bending down so low to examine it that the gold rims of his spectacles seemed almost to touch the palm. For a moment his face became a white mask of horror, but he soon recovered his sang-froid, and looking up at Lady Windermere, said with a forced smile, ‘It is the hand of a charming young man.’

‘Of course it is!’ answered Lady Windermere, ‘but will he be a charming husband? That is what I want to know.’

‘All charming young men are,’ said Mr Podgers.

‘I don’t think a husband should be too fascinating,’ mur-mured Lady Jedburgh pensively, ‘it is so dangerous.’

‘My dear child, they never are too fascinating,’ cried Lady Windermere. ‘But what I want are details. Details are the only things that interest. What is going to happen to Lord Arthur?’

‘Well, within the next few months Lord Arthur will go on a voyage —’

‘Oh yes, his honeymoon, of course!’

‘And lose a relative.’

‘Not his sister, I hope?’ said Lady Jedburgh, in a pit-eous tone of voice.

‘Certainly not his sister.’ answered Mr Podgers, with a deprecating wave of the hand, ‘a distant relative merely.’

‘Well, I am dreadfully disappointed,’ said Lady Winder-mere. ‘I have absolutely nothing to tell Sybil to-morrow. No one cares about distant relatives nowadays. They went out of fashion years ago. However, I suppose she had better have a black silk by her; it always does for church, you know. And now let us go to supper. They are sure to have eaten everything up, but we may find some hot soup. François used to make excellent soup once, but he is so agitated about politics at present, that I never feel quite certain about him. I do wish General Boulanger would keep quiet. Duchess, I am sure you are tired?’

‘Not at all, dear Gladys,’ answered the Duchess, waddling towards the door. ‘I have enjoyed myself immensely, and the cheiropodist, I mean the cheiromantist, is most interesting. Flora, where can my tortoise-shell fan be? Oh, thank you, Sir Thomas, so much. And my lace shawl, Flora? Oh, thank you, Sir Thomas, very kind, I’m sure;’ and the worthy creature finally managed to get downstairs without dropping her scent-bottle more than twice.

All this time Lord Arthur Savile had remained standing by the fireplace, with the same feeling of dread over him, the same sickening sense of coming evil. He smiled sadly at his sister, as she swept past him on Lord Plymdale’s arm, looking lovely in her pink brocade and pearls, and he hardly heard Lady Windermere when she called to him to follow her. He thought of Sybil Merton, and the idea that anything could come between them made his eyes dim with tears.

Looking at him, one would have said that Nemesis had stolen the shield of Pallas, and shown him the Gorgon’s head. He seemed turned to stone, and his face was like marble in its melancholy. He had lived the delicate and luxurious life of a young man of birth and fortune, a life exquisite in its freedom from sordid care, its beautiful boyish insouciance; and now for the first time he became conscious of the terrible mystery of Destiny, of the awful meaning of Doom.

How mad and monstrous it all seemed! Could it be that written on his hand, in characters that he could not read himself, but that another could decipher, was some fearful secret of sin, some blood-red sign of crime? Was there no escape possible? Were we no better than chess-men, moved by an unseen power, vessels the potter fashions at his fancy, for honour or for shame? His reason revolted against it, and yet he felt that some tragedy was hanging over him, and that he had been suddenly called upon to bear an intolerable burden. Actors are so fortunate. They can choose whether they will appear in tragedy or in comedy, whether they will suffer or make merry, laugh or shed tears. But in real life it is different. Most men and women are forced to perform parts for which they have no qualifications. Our Guildensterns play Ham-let for us, and our Hamlets have to jest like Prince Hal. The world is a stage, but the play is badly cast.

Suddenly Mr Podgers entered the room. When he saw Lord Arthur he started, and his coarse, fat face became a sort of greenish-yellow colour. The two men's eyes met, and for a moment there was silence.

'The Duchess has left one of her gloves here, Lord Arthur, and has asked me to bring it to her,' said Mr Podgers finally. 'Ah, I see it on the sofa! Good evening.'

'Mr Podgers, I must insist on your giving me a straight-forward answer to a question I am going to put to you.' 'Another time, Lord Arthur, but the Duchess is anxious. I am afraid I must go.'

'You shall not go. The Duchess is in no hurry.'

'Ladies should not be kept waiting, Lord Arthur,' said Mr Podgers, with his sickly smile.

'The fair sex is apt to be impatient.'

Lord Arthur's finely-chiselled lips curled in petulant disdain. The poor Duchess seemed to him of very little importance at that moment. He walked across the room to where Mr Podgers was standing, and held his hand out.

'Tell me what you saw there,' he said. 'Tell me the truth. I must know it. I am not a child.'

Mr Podgers's eyes blinked behind his gold-rimmed spectacles, and he moved uneasily from one foot to the other, while his fingers played nervously with a flash watch-chain.

'What makes you think that I saw anything in your hand, Lord Arthur, more than I told you?'

'I know you did, and I insist on your telling me what it was. I will pay you. I will give you a cheque for a hundred pounds.'

The green eyes flashed for a moment, and then became dull again.

‘Guineas?’ said Mr Podgers at last, in a low voice.

‘Certainly. I will send you a cheque to-morrow. What is your club?’

‘I have no club. That is to say, not just at present. My address is-, but allow me to give you my card;’ and producing a bit of gilt-edged pasteboard from his waistcoat pocket, Mr Podgers handed it, with a low bow, to Lord Arthur, who read on it,

MR SEPTIMUS R. PODGERS

Professional Cheiromantist

103a West Moon Street

‘My hours are from ten to four,’ murmured Mr Podgers mechanically, ‘and I make a reduction for families.’

‘Be quick,’ cried Lord Arthur, looking very pale, and holding his hand out.

Mr Podgers glanced nervously round, and drew the heavy portière across the door.

‘It will take a little time, Lord Arthur, you had better sit down.’

‘Be quick, sir,’ cried Lord Arthur again, stamping his foot angrily on the polished floor.

Mr Podgers smiled, drew from his breast-pocket a small magnifying glass, and wiped it carefully with his handkerchief.

‘I am quite ready,’ he said.

ii

Ten minutes later, with face blanched by terror, and eyes wild with grief, Lord Arthur Savile rushed from Bentinck House, crushing his way through the crowd of fur-coated footmen that stood round the large striped awning, and seeming not to see or hear anything. The night was bitter cold, and the gas-lamps round the square flared and flick-ered in the keen wind; but his hands were hot with fever, and his forehead burned like fire. On and on he went, almost with the gait of a drunken man. A policeman looked curiously at him as he passed, and a beggar, who slouched from an archway to ask for alms, grew fright-ened, seeing misery greater than his own. Once he stopped under a lamp, and looked at his hands. He thought he could detect the stain of blood already upon them, and a faint cry broke from his trembling lips.

Murder! that is what the cheiromantist had seen there. Murder! The very night seemed to know it, and the deso-late wind to howl it in his ear. The dark corners of the streets were full of it. It grinned at him from the roofs of the houses.

First he came to the Park, whose sombre woodland seemed to fascinate him. He leaned wearily up against the railings, cooling his brow against the wet metal, and listening to the tremulous silence of the trees. 'Murder! murder!' he kept repeating, as though iteration could dim the horror of the word. The sound of his own voice made him shudder, yet he almost hoped that Echo might hear him, and wake the slumbering city from its dreams. He felt a mad desire to stop the casual passer-by, and tell him everything.

Then he wandered across Oxford Street into narrow, shameful alleys. Two women with painted faces mocked at him as he went by. From a dark courtyard came a sound of oaths and blows, followed by shrill screams, and, hud-dled upon a damp doorstep, he saw the crook-backed forms of poverty and eld. A strange pity came over him. Were these children of sin and misery predestined to their end, as he to his? Were they, like him, merely the puppets of a monstrous show?

And yet it was not the mystery, but the comedy of suf-fering that struck him; its absolute uselessness, its grotesque want of meaning. How incoherent everything seemed! How lacking in all harmony! He was amazed at the discord between the shallow optimism of the day, and the real facts of existence. He was still very young.

After a time he found himself in front of Marylebone Church. The silent roadway looked like a long riband of polished silver, flecked here and there by the dark ara-besques of waving shadows. Far into the distance curved the line of flickering gas-lamps, and outside a little walled-in house stood a solitary hansom, the driver asleep inside. He walked hastily in the direction of Portland Place, now and then looking round, as though he feared that he was being followed. At the corner of Rich Street stood two men, reading a small bill upon a hoarding. An odd feeling of curiosity stirred him, and he crossed over. As he came near, the word 'Murder,' printed in black letters, met his eye. He started, and a deep flush came into his cheek. It was an advertisement offering a reward for any information leading to the arrest of a man of medium height, between thirty and forty years of age, wearing a billy-cock hat, a black coat, and check trousers, and with a scar upon his right cheek. He read it over and over again, and wondered if the wretched man would be caught, and how he had been scarred. Perhaps, some day, his own name might be placarded on the walls of London. Some day, perhaps, a price would be set on his head also.

The thought made him sick with horror. He turned on his heel, and hurried on into the night.

Where he went he hardly knew. He had a dim memory of wandering through a labyrinth of sordid houses, of being lost in a giant web of sombre streets, and it was bright dawn when he found himself at last in Piccadilly Circus. As he strolled home towards Belgrave Square, he met the great waggons on their way to Covent Garden. The white-smocked carters, with their pleasant sunburnt faces and coarse curly hair, strode sturdily on, cracking their whips, and calling out now and then to each other; on the back of a huge grey horse, the leader of a jangling team, sat a chubby boy, with a bunch of primroses in his battered hat, keeping tight hold of the mane with his little hands, and laughing; and the great piles of vegetables looked like masses of jade against the morning sky, like masses of green jade against the pink petals of some marvellous rose. Lord Arthur felt curiously affected, he could not tell why. There was something in the dawn's delicate loveliness that seemed to him inexpressibly pathetic, and he thought of all the days that break in beauty, and that set in storm. These rustics, too, with their rough, good-humoured voices, and their nonchalant ways, what a strange London they saw! A London free from the sin of night and the smoke of day, a pallid, ghost-like city, a desolate town of tombs! He wondered what they thought of it, and whether they knew anything of its splendour and its shame, of its fierce, fiery-coloured joys, and its horrible hunger, of all it makes and mars from morn to eve. Probably it was to them merely a mart where they brought their fruits to sell, and where they tarried for a few hours at most, leaving the streets still silent, the houses still asleep. It gave him pleasure to watch them as they went by. Rude as they were, with their heavy, hob-nailed shoes, and their awkward gait, they brought a little of Arcady with them. He felt that they had lived with Nature, and that she had taught them peace. He envied them all that they did not know.

By the time he had reached Belgrave Square the sky was a faint blue, and the birds were beginning to twitter in the gardens.

iii

When Lord Arthur woke it was twelve o'clock, and the mid-day sun was streaming through the ivory-silk curtains of his room. He got up and looked out of the window. A dim haze of heat was hanging over the great city, and the roofs of the houses were like dull silver. In the flickering green of the square below some children were flitting about like white butterflies, and the pavement was crowded with people on their way to the Park. Never had life seemed lovelier to him, never had the things of evil seemed more remote.

Then his valet brought him a cup of chocolate on a tray. After he had drunk it, he drew aside a heavy portière of peach-coloured plush, and passed into the bathroom. The light stole softly from above, through thin slabs of transparent onyx, and the water in the marble tank glimmered like a moonstone. He plunged hastily in, till the cool ripples touched throat and hair, and then dipped his head right under, as though he would have wiped away the stain of some shameful memory. When he stepped out he felt almost at peace. The exquisite physical conditions of the moment had dominated him, as indeed often happens in the case of very finely-wrought natures, for the senses, like fire, can purify as well as destroy.

After breakfast, he flung himself down on a divan, and lit a cigarette. On the mantel-shelf, framed in dainty old brocade, stood a large photograph of Sybil Merton, as he had seen her first at Lady Noel's ball. The small, exquisitely-shaped head drooped slightly to one side, as though the thin, reed-like throat could hardly bear the burden of so much beauty; the lips were slightly parted, and seemed made for sweet music; and all the tender purity of girlhood looked out in wonder from the dream-ing eyes. With her soft, clinging dress of crêpe-de-chine , and her large leaf-shaped fan, she looked like one of those delicate little figures men find in the olive-woods near Tanagra; and there was a touch of Greek grace in her pose and attitude. Yet she was not petite . Yet she was simply perfectly proportioned — a rare thing in an age when so many women are either over life-size or insignificant.

Now as Lord Arthur looked at her, he was filled with the terrible pity that is born of love. He felt that to marry her, with the doom of murder hanging over his head, would be a betrayal like that of Judas, a sin worse than any the Borgia had ever dreamed of. What happiness could there be for them, when at any moment he might be called upon to carry out the awful prophecy written in his hand? What manner of life would be theirs while Fate still held this fearful fortune in the scales? The marriage must be postponed, at all costs. Of this he was quite resolved. Ardently though he loved the girl, and the mere touch of her fingers, when they sat together, made each nerve of his body thrill with exquisite joy, he recognised none the less clearly where his duty lay, and was fully conscious of the fact that he had no right to marry until he had committed the murder. This done, he could stand before the altar with Sybil Merton, and give his life into her hands without terror of wrongdoing. This done, he could take her to his arms, knowing that she would never have to blush for him, never have to hang her head in shame. But done it must be first; and the sooner the better for both.

Many men in his position would have preferred the primrose path of dalliance to the steep heights of duty; but Lord Arthur was too conscientious to set pleasure above principle. There was more than mere passion in his love; and Sybil was to him a symbol of all that is good and noble. For a moment he had a natural repugnance against what he was asked to do, but it soon passed away. His heart told him that it was not a sin, but a sacrifice; his reason reminded him that there was no other course open. He had to choose between living for himself and living for others, and terrible though the task laid upon him undoubtedly was, yet he knew that he must not suffer selfishness to triumph over love. Sooner or later we are all called upon to decide on the same issue — of us all, the same question is asked. To Lord Arthur it came early in life-before his nature had been spoiled by the calculating cynicism of middle-age, or his heart corroded by the shallow, fashionable egotism of our day, and he felt no hesitation about doing his duty. Fortunately also, for him, he was no mere dreamer, or idle dilettante. Had he been so, he would have hesitated, like Hamlet, and let irresolution mar his purpose. But he was essentially practical. Life to him meant action, rather than thought. He had that rarest of all things, common sense.

The wild, turbid feelings of the previous night had by this time completely passed away, and it was almost with a sense of shame that he looked back upon his mad wanderings from street to street, his fierce emotional agony. The very sincerity of his sufferings made them seem unreal to him now. He wondered how he could have been so foolish as to rant and rave about the inevitable. The only question that seemed to trouble him was, whom to make away with; for he was not blind to the fact that murder, like the religions of the Pagan world, requires a victim as well as a priest. Not being a genius, he had no enemies, and indeed he felt that this was not the time for the gratification of any personal pique or dislike, the mission in which he was engaged being one of great and grave solemnity. He accordingly made out a list of his friends and relatives on a sheet of notepaper, and after careful consideration, decided in favour of Lady Clementina Beauchamp, a dear old lady who lived in Curzon Street, and was his own second cousin by his mother's side. He had always been very fond of Lady Clem, as every one called her, and as he was very wealthy himself, having come into all Lord Rugby's property when he came of age, there was no possibility of his deriving any vulgar monetary advantage by her death. In fact, the more he thought over the matter, the more she seemed to him to be just the right person, and, feeling that any delay would be unfair to Sybil, he determined to make his arrangements at once.

The first thing to be done was, of course, to settle with the cheiromantist; so he sat down at a small Sheraton writing-table that stood near the window, drew a cheque for £105, payable to the order of Mr Septimus Podgers, and, enclosing it in an envelope, told his valet to take it to West Moon Street. He then telephoned to the stables for his hansom, and dressed to go out. As he was leaving the room, he looked back at Sybil Merton's photograph, and swore that, come what may, he would never let her know what he was doing for her sake, but would keep the secret of his self-sacrifice hidden always in his heart.

On his way to the Buckingham, he stopped at a florist's, and sent Sybil a beautiful basket of narcissi, with lovely white petals and staring pheasants' eyes, and on arriving at the club, went straight to the library, rang the bell, and ordered the waiter to bring him a lemon-and-soda, and a book on Toxicology. He had fully decided that poison was the best means to adopt in this troublesome business. Anything like personal violence was extremely distasteful to him, and besides, he was very anxious not to murder Lady Clementina in any way that might attract public attention, as he hated the idea of being lionised at Lady Windermere's, or seeing his name figuring in the paragraphs of vulgar society-newspapers. He had also to think of Sybil's father and mother, who were rather old-fashioned people, and might possibly object to the marriage if there was anything like a scandal, though he felt certain that if he told them the whole facts of the case they would be the very first to appreciate the motives that had actuated him. He had every reason, then, to decide in favour of poison. It was safe, sure, and quiet, and did away with any necessity for painful scenes, to which, like most Englishmen, he had a rooted objection.

Of the science of poisons, however, he knew absolutely nothing, and as the waiter seemed quite unable to find anything in the library but Ruff's Guide and Bailey's Magazine, he examined the book-shelves himself, and finally came across a handsomely-bound edition of the Pharmacopoeia, and a copy of Erskine's Toxicology, edited by Sir Mathew Reid, the President of the Royal College of Physicians, and one of the oldest members of the Buckingham, having been elected in mistake for somebody else; a contretemps that so enraged the Committee, that when the real man came up they black-balled him unanimously. Lord Arthur was a good deal puzzled at the technical terms used in both books, and had begun to regret that he had not paid more attention to his classics at Oxford, when in the second volume of Erskine, he found a very interesting and complete account of the properties of aconitine, written in fairly clear English. It seemed to him to be exactly the poison he wanted. It was swift — indeed, almost immediate, in its effect — perfectly painless, and when taken in the form of a gelatine capsule, the mode recommended by Sir Mathew, not by any means unpalatable. He accordingly made a note, upon his shirt-cuff, of the amount necessary for a fatal dose, put the books back in their places, and strolled up St James's Street, to Pestle and Humbey's, the great chemists. Mr Pestle, who always attended personally on the aris-tocracy, was a good deal surprised at the order, and in a very deferential manner murmured something about a medical certificate being necessary. However, as soon as Lord Arthur explained to him that it was for a large Nor-wegian mastiff that he was obliged to get rid of, as it showed signs of incipient rabies, and had already bitten the coachman twice in the calf of the leg, he expressed himself as being perfectly satisfied, complimented Lord Arthur on his wonderful knowledge of Toxicology, and had the prescription made up immediately.

Lord Arthur put the capsule into a pretty little silver bonbonnière that he saw in a shop-window in Bond Street, threw away Pestle and Humbey's ugly pill-box, and drove off at once to Lady Clementina's.

'Well, monsieur le mauvais sujet ,' cried the old lady, as he entered the room, 'why haven't you been to see me all this time?'

'My dear Lady Clem, I never have a moment to myself,' said Lord Arthur, smiling.

'I suppose you mean that you go about all day long with Miss Sybil Merton, buying chiffons and talking nonsense? I cannot understand why people make such a fuss about being married. In my day we never dreamed of billing and cooing in public, or in private for that matter.'

'I assure you I have not seen Sybil for twenty-four hours, Lady Clem. As far as I can make out, she belongs entirely to her milliners.'

'Of course; that is the only reason you come to see an ugly old woman like myself. I wonder you men don't take warning. On a fait des folies pour moi , and here I am, a poor, rheumatic creature, with a false front and a bad temper. Why, if it were not for dear Lady Jansen, who sends me all the worst French novels she can find, I don't think I could get through the day. Doctors are no use at all, except to get fees out of one. They can't even cure my heartburn.'

'I have brought you a cure for that, Lady Clem,' said Lord Arthur gravely. 'It is a wonderful thing, invented by an American.'

'I don't think I like American inventions, Arthur. I am quite sure I don't. I read some American novels lately, and they were quite nonsensical.'

'Oh, but there is no nonsense at all about this, Lady Clem! I assure you it is a perfect cure. You must promise to try it;' and Lord Arthur brought the little box out of his pocket, and handed it to her.

'Well, the box is charming, Arthur. Is it really a present? That is very sweet of you. And is this the wonderful medi-cine? It looks like abonbon. I'll take it at once.'

'Good heavens! Lady Clem,' cried Lord Arthur, catch-ing hold of her hand, 'you mustn't do anything of the kind. It is a homoeopathic medicine, and if you take it without having heartburn, it might do you no end of harm. Wait till you have an attack, and take it then. You will be astonished at the result.'

'I should like to take it now,' said Lady Clementina, holding up to the light the little transparent capsule, with its floating bubble of liquid aconitine. 'I am sure it is delicious. The fact is that, though I hate doctors, I love medicines. However, I'll keep it till my next attack.'

'And when will that be?' asked Lord Arthur eagerly. 'Will it be soon?'

'I hope not for a week. I had a very bad time yesterday morning with it. But one never knows.'

'You are sure to have one before the end of the month then, Lady Clem?'

'I am afraid so. But how sympathetic you are to-day, Arthur! Really, Sybil has done you a great deal of good. And now you must run away, for I am dining with some very dull people, who won't talk scandal, and I know that if I don't get my sleep now I shall never be able to keep awake during dinner. Good-bye, Arthur, give my love to Sybil, and thank you so much for the American medicine.'

'You won't forget to take it, Lady Clem, will you?' said Lord Arthur, rising from his seat.

'Of course I won't, you silly boy. I think it is most kind of you to think of me, and I shall write and tell you if I want any more.'

Lord Arthur left the house in high spirits, and with a feeling of immense relief.

That night he had an interview with Sybil Merton. He told her how he had been suddenly placed in a position of terrible difficulty, from which neither honour nor duty would allow him to recede. He told her that the marriage must be put off for the present, as until he had got rid of his fearful entanglements, he was not a free man. He implored her to trust him, and not to have any doubts about the future. Everything would come right, but patience was necessary.

The scene took place in the conservatory of Mr Mer-ton's house, in Park Lane, where Lord Arthur had dined as usual. Sybil had never seemed more happy, and for a moment Lord Arthur had been tempted to play the cow-ard's part, to write to Lady Clementina for the pill, and to let the marriage go on as if there was no such person as Mr Podgers in the world. His better nature, however, soon asserted itself, and even when Sybil flung herself weeping into his arms, he did not falter. The beauty that stirred his senses had touched his conscience also. He felt that to wreck so fair a life for the sake of a few months'pleasure would be a wrong thing to do.

He stayed with Sybil till nearly midnight, comforting her and being comforted in turn, and early the next morn-ing he left for Venice, after writing a manly, firm letter to Mr Merton about the necessary postponement of the marriage.

iv

In Venice he met his brother, Lord Surbiton, who hap-pened to have come over from Corfu in his yacht. The two young men spent a delightful fortnight together. In the morning they rode on the Lido, or glided up and down the green canals in their long black gondola; in the afternoon they usually entertained visitors on the yacht; and in the evening they dined at Florian's, and smoked innumerable cigarettes on the Piazza. Yet somehow Lord Arthur was not happy. Every day he studied the obituary column in the Times , expecting to see a notice of Lady Clementina's death, but every day he was disappointed. He began to be afraid that some accident had happened to her, and often regretted that he had prevented her tak-ing the aconitine when she had been so anxious to try its effect. Sybil's letters, too, though full of love, and trust, and tenderness, were often very sad in their tone, and sometimes he used to think that he was parted from her for ever.

After a fortnight Lord Surbiton got bored with Venice, and determined to run down the coast to Ravenna, as he heard that there was some capital cock-shooting in the Pinetum. Lord Arthur, at first, refused absolutely to come, but Surbiton, of whom he was extremely fond, finally persuaded him that if he stayed at Danielli's by himself he would be moped to death, and on the morning of the 15th they started, with a strong nor'-east wind blowing, and a rather sloppy sea. The sport was excellent, and the free, open-air life brought the colour back to Lord Arthur's cheeks, but about the 22nd he became anxious about Lady Clementina, and, in spite of Surbiton's remonstrances, came back to Venice by train.

As he stepped out of his gondola on to the hotel steps, the proprietor came forward to meet him with a sheaf of telegrams. Lord Arthur snatched them out of his hand, and tore them open. Everything had been successful. Lady Clementina had died quite suddenly on the night of the 17th!

His first thought was for Sybil, and he sent her off a telegram announcing his immediate return to London. He then ordered his valet to pack his things for the night mail, sent his gondoliers about five times their proper fare, and ran up to his sitting-room with a light step and a buoyant heart. There he found three letters waiting for him. One was from Sybil herself, full of sympathy and condolence. The others were from his mother, and from Lady Clementina's solicitor. It seemed that the old lady had dined with the Duchess that very night, had delighted every one by her wit and esprit , but had gone home some-what early, complaining of heartburn. In the morning she was found dead in her bed, having apparently suffered no pain. Sir Mathew Reid had been sent for at once, but, of course, there was nothing to be done, and she was to be buried on the 22nd at Beauchamp Chalcote. A few days before she died she had made her will, and left Lord Arthur her little house in Curzon Street, and all her furniture, personal effects, and pictures, with the exception of her collection of miniatures, which was to go to her sister, Lady Margaret Rufford, and her amethyst necklace, which Sybil Merton was to have. The property was not of much value; but Mr Mansfield the solicitor was extremely anxious for Lord Arthur to return at once, if possible, as there were a great many bills to be paid, and Lady Clementina had never kept any regular accounts.

Lord Arthur was very much touched by Lady Clementina's kind remembrance of him, and felt that Mr Podgers had a great deal to answer for. His love of Sybil, however, dominated every other emotion, and the consciousness that he had done his duty gave him peace and comfort. When he arrived at Charing Cross, he felt perfectly happy.

The Mertons received him very kindly, Sybil made him promise that he would never again allow anything to come between them, and the marriage was fixed for the 7th June. Life seemed to him once more bright and beautiful, and all his old gladness came back to him again.

One day, however, as he was going over the house in Curzon Street, in company with Lady Clementina's solicitor and Sybil herself, burning packages of faded letters, and turning out drawers of odd rubbish, the young girl suddenly gave a little cry of delight.

'What have you found, Sybil?' said Lord Arthur, looking up from his work, and smiling.

'This lovely little silver bonbonnière, Arthur. Isn't it quaint and Dutch? Do give it to me! I know amethysts won't become me till I am over eighty.'

It was the box that had held the aconitine.

Lord Arthur started, and a faint blush came into his cheek. He had almost entirely forgotten what he had done, and it seemed to him a curious coincidence that Sybil, for whose sake he had gone through all that terrible anxiety, should have been the first to remind him of it.

'Of course you can have it, Sybil. I gave it to poor Lady Clem myself.'

'Oh! thank you, Arthur; and may I have the bonbon too? I had no notion that Lady Clementina liked sweets. I thought she was far too intellectual.'

Lord Arthur grew deadly pale, and a horrible idea crossed his mind.

'Bonbon , Sybil? What do you mean?'he said, in a slow, hoarse voice.

'There is one in it, that is all. It looks quite old and dusty, and I have not the slightest intention of eating it. What is the matter, Arthur? How white you look!'

Lord Arthur rushed across the room, and seized the box. Inside it was the amber-coloured capsule, with its poison-bubble. Lady Clementina had died a natural death after all!

The shock of the discovery was almost too much for him. He flung the capsule into the fire, and sank on the sofa with a cry of despair.

V

Mr Merton was a good deal distressed at the second postponement of the marriage, and Lady Julia, who had already ordered her dress for the wedding, did all in her power to make Sybil break off the match. Dearly, how-ever, as Sybil loved her mother, she had given her whole life into Lord Arthur's hands, and nothing that Lady Julia could say could make her waver in her faith. As for Lord Arthur himself, it took him days to get over his terrible disappointment, and for a time his nerves were completely unstrung. His excellent common sense, however, soon asserted itself, and his sound, practical mind did not leave him long in doubt about what to do. Poison having proved a complete failure, dynamite, or some other form of explosive, was obviously the proper thing to try.

He accordingly looked again over the list of his friends and relatives, and, after careful consideration, determined to blow up his uncle, the Dean of Chichester. The Dean, who was a man of great culture and learning, was extremely fond of clocks, and had a wonderful collection of timepieces, ranging from the fifteenth century to the present day, and it seemed to Lord Arthur that this hobby of the good Dean's offered him an excellent opportunity for carrying out his scheme. Where to procure an explosive machine was, of course, quite another matter. The London Directory gave him no information on the point, and he felt that there was very little use in going to Scotland Yard about it, as they never seemed to know anything about the movements of the dynamite faction till after an explosion had taken place, and not much even then.

Suddenly he thought of his friend Rouvaloff, a young Russian of very revolutionary tendencies, whom he had met at Lady Windermere's in the winter. Count Rouvaloff was supposed to be writing a life of Peter the Great, and to have come over to England for the purpose of studying the documents relating to that Tsar's residence in this country as a ship carpenter; but it was generally suspected that he was a Nihilist agent, and there was no doubt that the Russian Embassy did not look with any favour upon his presence in London. Lord Arthur felt that he was just the man for his purpose, and drove down one morning to his lodgings in Bloomsbury, to ask his advice and assistance.

'So you are taking up politics seriously?' said Count Rouvaloff, when Lord Arthur had told him the object of his mission; but Lord Arthur, who hated swagger of any kind, felt bound to admit to him that he had not the slightest interest in social questions, and simply wanted the explosive machine for a purely family matter, in which no one was concerned but himself.

Count Rouvaloff looked at him for some moments in amazement, and then seeing that he was quite serious, wrote an address on a piece of paper, initialled it, and handed it to him across the table.

'Scotland Yard would give a good deal to know this address, my dear fellow.'

'They shan't have it,' cried Lord Arthur, laughing; and after shaking the young Russian warmly by the hand he ran downstairs, examined the paper, and told the coach-man to drive to Soho Square.

There he dismissed him, and strolled down Greek Street, till he came to a place called Bayle's Court. He passed under the archway, and found himself in a curious cul-de-sac, that was apparently occupied by a French Laundry, as a perfect network of clothes-lines was stretched across from house to house, and there was a flutter of white linen in the morning air. He walked right to the end, and knocked at a little green house. After some delay, during which every window in the court became a blurred mass of peering faces, the door was opened by a rather rough-looking foreigner, who asked him in very bad English what his business was. Lord Arthur handed him the paper Count Rouvaloff had given him. When the man saw it he bowed, and invited Lord Arthur into a very shabby front parlour on the ground-floor, and in a few moments Herr Winckelkopf, as he was called in England, bustled into the room, with a very wine-stained napkin round his neck, and a fork in his left hand.

‘Count Rouvaloff has given me an introduction to you,’ said Lord Arthur, bowing, ‘and I am anxious to have a short interview with you on a matter of business. My name is Smith, Mr Robert Smith, and I want you to supply me with an explosive clock.’

‘Charmed to meet you, Lord Arthur,’ said the genial little German, laughing. ‘Don’t look so alarmed, it is my duty to know everybody, and I remember seeing you one evening at Lady Windermere’s. I hope her ladyship is quite well. Do you mind sitting with me while I finish my breakfast? There is an excellent pâté, and my friends are kind enough to say that my Rhine wine is better than any they get at the German Embassy,’ and before Lord Arthur had got over his surprise at being recognised, he found himself seated in the back-room, sipping the most delicious Marcobrunner out of a pale yellow hock-glass marked with the Imperial monogram, and chatting in the friendliest manner possible to the famous conspirator.

‘Explosive clocks,’ said Herr Winckelkopf, ‘are not very good things for foreign exportation, as, even if they succeed in passing the Custom House, the train service is so irregular, that they usually go off before they have reached their proper destination. If, however, you want one for home use, I can supply you with an excellent article, and guarantee that you will be satisfied with the result. May I ask for whom it is intended? If it is for the police, or for any one connected with Scotland Yard, I’m afraid I cannot do anything for you. The English detectives are really our best friends, and I have always found that by relying on their stupidity, we can do exactly what we like. I could not spare one of them.’

‘I assure you,’ said Lord Arthur, ‘that it has nothing to do with the police at all. In fact, the clock is intended for the Dean of Chichester.’

‘Dear me! I had no idea that you felt so strongly about religion, Lord Arthur. Few young men do nowadays.’

‘I am afraid you overrate me, Herr Winckelkopf,’ said Lord Arthur, blushing. ‘The fact is, I really know nothing about theology.’

‘It is a purely private matter then?’

‘Purely private.’

Herr Winckelkopf shrugged his shoulders, and left the room, returning in a few minutes with a round cake of dynamite about the size of a penny, and a pretty little French clock, surmounted by an ormolu figure of Liberty trampling on the hydra of Despotism.

Lord Arthur’s face brightened up when he saw it. ‘That is just what I want,’ he cried, ‘and now tell me how it goes off.’

‘Ah! there is my secret,’ answered Herr Winckelkopf, contemplating his invention with a justifiable look of pride; ‘let me know when you wish it to explode, and I will set the machine to the moment.’

‘Well, to-day is Tuesday, and if you could send it off at once-’

‘That is impossible; I have a great deal of important work on hand for some friends of mine in Moscow. Still, I might send it off to-morrow.’

‘Oh, it will be quite time enough!’ said Lord Arthur politely, ‘if it is delivered to-morrow night or Thursday morning. For the moment of the explosion, say Friday at noon exactly. The Dean is always at home at that hour.’

‘Friday, at noon,’ repeated Herr Winckelkopf, and he made a note to that effect in a large ledger that was lying on a bureau near the fireplace.

‘And now,’ said Lord Arthur, rising from his seat, ‘pray let me know how much I am in your debt.’

‘It is such a small matter, Lord Arthur, that I do not care to make any charge. The dynamite comes to seven and sixpence, the clock will be three pounds ten, and the carriage about five shillings.

I am only too pleased to oblige any friend of Count Rouvaloff's.'

'But your trouble, Herr Winckelkopf?'

'Oh, that is nothing! It is a pleasure to me. I do not work for money; I live entirely for my art.'

Lord Arthur laid down £4 : 2 : 6 on the table, thanked the little German for his kindness, and, having succeeded in declining an invitation to meet some Anarchists at a meat-tea on the following Saturday, left the house and went off to the Park.

For the next two days he was in a state of the greatest excitement, and on Friday at twelve o'clock he drove down to the Buckingham to wait for news. All the after-noon the stolid hall-porter kept posting up telegrams from various parts of the country giving the results of horse-races, the verdicts in divorce suits, the state of the weather, and the like, while the tape ticked out wearisome details about an all-night sitting in the House of Commons, and a small panic on the Stock Exchange. At four o'clock the evening papers came in, and Lord Arthur disappeared into the library with the Pall Mall, the St James's, the Globe, and the Echo, to the immense indignation of Colonel Goodchild, who wanted to read the reports of a speech he had delivered that morning at the Mansion House, on the subject of South African Missions, and the advisability of having black Bishops in every province, and for some reason or other had a strong prejudice against the Evening News. None of the papers, however, contained even the slightest allusion to Chich-ester, and Lord Arthur felt that the attempt must have failed. It was a terrible blow to him, and for a time he was quite unnerved. Herr Winckelkopf, whom he went to see the next day, was full of elaborate apologies, and offered to supply him with another clock free of charge, or with a case of nitro-glycerine bombs at cost price. But he had lost all faith in explosives, and Herr Winckelkopf himself acknowledged that everything is so adulterated now-adays, that even dynamite can hardly be got in a pure condition. The little German, however, while admitting that something must have gone wrong with the machinery, was not without hope that the clock might still go off, and instanced the case of a barometer that he had once sent to the military Governor at Odessa, which, though timed to explode in ten days, had not done so for something like three months. It was quite true that when it did go off, it merely succeeded in blowing a housemaid to atoms, the Governor having gone out of town six weeks before, but at least it showed that dynamite, as a destructive force, was, when under the control of machinery, a powerful, though a somewhat unpunctual agent. Lord Arthur was a little consoled by this reflection, but even here he was destined to disappointment, for two days afterwards, as he was going upstairs, the Duchess called him into her boudoir, and showed him a letter she had just received from the Deanery.

‘Jane writes charming letters,’ said the Duchess; ‘you must really read her last. It is quite as good as the novels Mudie sends us.’

Lord Arthur seized the letter from her hand. It ran as follows :

‘The Deanery, Chichester,

‘27th May.

‘My Dearest Aunt,

‘Thank you so much for the flannel for the Dorcas Society, and also for the gingham. I quite agree with you that it is nonsense their wanting to wear pretty things, but everybody is so Radical and irreligious nowadays, that it is difficult to make them see that they should not try and dress like the upper classes. I am sure I don’t know what we are coming to. As papa has often said in his sermons, we live in an age of unbelief.

‘We have had great fun over a clock that an unknown admirer sent papa last Thursday. It arrived in a wooden box from London, carriage paid; and papa feels it must have been sent by some one who had read his remarkable sermon, “Is Licence Liberty?” for on the top of the clock was a figure of a woman, with what papa said was the cap of Liberty on her head. I didn’t think it very becoming myself, but papa said it was historical, so I suppose it is all right. Parker unpacked it, and papa put it on the mantel-piece in the library, and we were all sitting there on Friday morning, when just as the clock struck twelve, we heard a whirring noise, a little puff of smoke came from the pedestal of the figure, and the goddess of Liberty fell off, and broke her nose on the fender! Maria was quite alarmed, but it looked so ridiculous, that James and I went off into fits of laughter, and even papa was amused. When we examined it, we found it was a sort of alarum clock, and that, if you set it to a particular hour, and put some gunpowder and a cap under a little hammer, it went off whenever you wanted. Papa said it must not remain in the library, as it made a noise, so Reggie carried it away to the schoolroom, and does nothing but have small explosions all day long. Do you think Arthur would like one for a wedding present? I suppose they are quite fashionable in London. Papa says they should do a great deal of good, as they show that Liberty can't last, but must fall down. Papa says Liberty was invented at the time of the French Revolution. How awful it seems!

'I have now to go to the Dorcas, where I will read them your most instructive letter. How true, dear aunt, your idea is, that in their rank of life they should wear what is unbecoming. I must say it is absurd, their anxiety about dress, when there are so many more important things in this world, and in the next. I am so glad your flowered poplin turned out so well, and that your lace was not torn. I am wearing my yellow satin, that you so kindly gave me, at the Bishop's on Wednesday, and think it will look all right. Would you have bows or not? Jennings says that every one wears bows now, and that the underskirt should be frilled. Reggie has just had another explosion, and papa has ordered the clock to be sent to the stables. I don't think papa likes it so much as he did at first, though he is very flattered at being sent such a pretty and ingenious toy. It shows that people read his sermons, and profit by them.' Papa sends his love, in which James, and Reggie, and Maria all unite, and, hoping that Uncle Cecil's gout is better, believe me, dear aunt, ever your affectionate niece,

'Jane Percy

'P. S. — Do tell me about the bows. Jennings insists they are the fashion.'

Lord Arthur looked so serious and unhappy over the letter, that the Duchess went into fits of laughter.

'My dear Arthur,' she cried, 'I shall never show you a young lady's letter again! But what shall I say about the clock? I think it is a capital invention, and I should like to have one myself.'

'I don't think much of them,' said Lord Arthur, with a sad smile, and, after kissing his mother, he left the room.

When he got upstairs, he flung himself on a sofa, and his eyes filled with tears. He had done his best to commit this murder, but on both occasions he had failed, and through no fault of his own. He had tried to do his duty, but it seemed as if Destiny herself had turned traitor. He was oppressed with the sense of the barrenness of good intentions, of the futility of trying to be fine. Perhaps, it would be better to break off the marriage altogether. Sybil would suffer, it is true, but suffering could not really mar a nature so noble as hers. As for himself, what did it mat-ter? There is always some war in which a man can die, some cause to which a man can give his life, and as life had no pleasure for him, so death had no terror. Let Destiny work out his doom. He would not stir to help her.

At half-past seven he dressed, and went down to the club. Surbiton was there with a party of young men, and he was obliged to dine with them. Their trivial conversation and idle jests did not interest him, and as soon as coffee was brought he left them, inventing some engagement in order to get away. As he was going out of the club, the hall porter handed him a letter. It was from Herr Winckelkopf, asking him to call down the next evening, and look at an explosive umbrella, that went off as soon as it was opened. It was the very latest invention, and had just arrived from Geneva. He tore the letter up into fragments. He had made up his mind not to try any more experiments. Then he wandered down to the Thames Embankment, and sat for hours by the river. The moon peered through a mane of tawny clouds, as if it were a lion's eye, and innumerable stars spangled the hollow vault, like gold dust powdered on a purple dome. Now and then a barge swung out into the turbid stream, and floated away with the tide, and the railway signals changed from green to scarlet as the trains ran shrieking across the bridge. After some time, twelve o'clock boomed from the tall tower at Westminster, and at each stroke of the sonorous bell the night seemed to tremble. Then the railway lights went out, one solitary lamp left gleaming like a large ruby on a giant mast, and the roar of the city became fainter.

At two o'clock he got up, and strolled towards Black-friars.

How unreal everything looked! How like a strange dream! The houses on the other side of the river seemed built out of darkness. One would have said that silver and shadow had fashioned the world anew. The huge dome of St Paul's loomed like a bubble through the dusky air.

As he approached Cleopatra's Needle he saw a man leaning over the parapet, and as he came nearer the man looked up, the gas-light falling full upon his face.

It was Mr Podgers, the cheiromantist! No one could mistake the fat, flabby face, the gold-rimmed spectacles, the sickly feeble smile, the sensual mouth.

Lord Arthur stopped. A brilliant idea flashed across him, and he stole softly up behind. In a moment he had seized Mr Podgers by the legs, and flung him into the Thames. There was a coarse oath, a heavy splash, and all was still. Lord Arthur looked anxiously over, but could see nothing of the cheiromantist but a tall hat, pirouetting in an eddy of moonlit water. After a time it also sank, and no trace of Mr Podgers was visible. Once he thought that he caught sight of the bulky misshapen figure striking out for the staircase by the bridge, and a horrible feeling of failure came over him, but it turned out to be merely a reflection, and when the moon shone out from behind a cloud it passed away. At last he seemed to have realised the decree of destiny. He heaved a deep sigh of relief, and Sybil's name came to his lips.

'Have you dropped anything, sir?' said a voice behind him suddenly.

He turned round, and saw a policeman with a bull's-eye lantern.

'Nothing of importance, sergeant,' he answered, smiling, and hailing a passing hansom, he jumped in, and told the man to drive to Belgrave Square.

For the next few days he alternated between hope and fear. There were moments when he almost expected Mr Podgers to walk into the room, and yet at other times he felt that Fate could not be so unjust to him. Twice he went to the cheiromantist's address in West Moon Street, but he could not bring himself to ring the bell. He longed for certainty, and was afraid of it.

Finally it came. He was sitting in the smoking-room of the club having tea, and listening rather wearily to Sur-biton's account of the last comic song at the Gaiety, when the waiter came in with the evening papers. He took up the St James's, and was listlessly turning over its pages, when this strange heading caught his eye :

SUICIDE OF A CHEIROMANTIST.

He turned pale with excitement, and began to read. The paragraph ran as follows : —

Yesterday morning, at seven o'clock, the body of Mr Sep-timus R. Podgers, the eminent cheiromantist, was washed on shore at Greenwich, just in front of the Ship Hotel. The unfortunate gentleman had been missing for some days, and considerable anxiety for his safety had been felt in cheiromantic circles. It is supposed that he committed sui-cide under the influence of a temporary mental derangement, caused by overwork, and a verdict to that effect was returned this afternoon by the coroner's jury. Mr Podgers had just completed an elaborate treatise on the subject of the Human Hand, that will shortly be published, when it will no doubt attract much attention. The deceased was sixty-five years of age, and does not seem to have left any relations.

Lord Arthur rushed out of the club with the paper still in his hand, to the immense amazement of the hall-porter, who tried in vain to stop him, and drove at once to Park Lane. Sybil saw him from the window, and something told her that he was the bearer of good news. She ran down to meet him, and, when she saw his face, she knew that all was well.

'My dear Sybil,' cried Lord Arthur, 'let us be married tomorrow!'

'You foolish boy! Why the cake is not even ordered!' said Sybil, laughing through her tears.

Vi

When the wedding took place, some three weeks later, St Peter's was crowded with a perfect mob of smart people. The service was read in a most impressive manner by the Dean of Chichester, and everybody agreed that they had never seen a handsomer couple than the bride and bride-groom. They were more than handsome, however — they were happy. Never for a single moment did Lord Arthur regret all that he had suffered for Sybil's sake, while she, on her side, gave him the best things a woman can give to any man — worship, tenderness, and love. For them romance was not killed by reality. They always felt young.

Some years afterwards, when two beautiful children had been born to them, Lady Windermere came down on a visit to Alton Priory, a lovely old place, that had been the Duke's wedding present to his son; and one afternoon as she was sitting with Lady Arthur under a lime-tree in the garden, watching the little boy and girl as they played up and down the rose-walk, like fitful sunbeams, she suddenly took her hostess's hand in hers, and said, 'Are you happy, Sybil?'

'Dear Lady Windermere, of course I am happy. Aren't you?'

'I have no time to be happy, Sybil. I always like the last person who is introduced to me; but, as a rule, as soon as I know people I get tired of them.'

'Don't your lions satisfy you, Lady Windermere?'

'Oh dear, no! lions are only good for one season. As soon as their manes are cut, they are the dullerest creatures going. Besides, they behave very badly, if you are really nice to them. Do you remember that horrid Mr Podgers? He was a dreadful impostor. Of course, I didn't mind that at all, and even when he wanted to borrow money I forgave him, but I could not stand his making love to me. He has really made me hate cheiromancy. I go in for telepathy now. It is much more amusing.'

'You mustn't say anything against cheiromancy here, Lady Windermere; it is the only subject that Arthur does not like people to chaff about. I assure you he is quite serious over it.'

'You don't mean to say that he believes in it, Sybil?'

'Ask him, Lady Windermere, here he is;' and Lord Arthur came up the garden with a large bunch of yellow roses in his hand, and his two children dancing round him.

'Lord Arthur?'

'Yes, Lady Windermere.'

‘You don’t mean to say that you believe in cheiro-mancy?’

‘Of course I do,’ said the young man, smiling.

‘But why?’

‘Because I owe to it all the happiness of my life,’ he murmured, throwing himself into a wicker chair.

‘My dear Lord Arthur, what do you owe to it?’

‘Sybil,’ he answered, handing his wife the roses, and looking into her violet eyes.

‘What nonsense!’ cried Lady Windermere. ‘I never heard such nonsense in all my life.’

伊凡·伊里奇之死

三死

The Death of Ivan Ilyich

Three Deaths

伊凡·伊里奇之死

在法院大厦里，当梅尔文斯基案审讯暂停时，法官和检察官都聚集在伊凡·叶果罗维奇·谢贝克的办公室里，谈论着闹得满城风雨的克拉索夫案件。费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇情绪激动，认为此案不属本院审理范围；伊凡·叶果罗维奇坚持相反意见；彼得·伊凡内奇一开始就没加入争论，始终不过问此事，而是翻阅着刚送来的《公报》。

“诸位！”他说，“伊凡·伊里奇死了。”

“真的吗？”

“喏，您看吧！”他对费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇说，同时把那份散发出油墨味的刚出版的《公报》递给他。

公报上印着一则带黑框的讣告：“普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜·高洛文娜沉痛哀告亲友，先夫伊凡·伊里奇·高洛文法官于1882年2月4日逝世。兹定于礼拜五下午一时出殡。”

伊凡·伊里奇是在座几位先生的同事，大家都喜欢他。他病了几个礼拜，据说患的是不治之症。他生病以来职位还给他保留着，但大家早就推测过，他死后将由阿历克谢耶夫接替，而阿历克谢耶夫的位置则将由文尼科夫或施塔别尔接替。因此，一听到伊凡·伊里奇的死讯，办公室里在座的人首先想到的就是，他一死对他们本人和亲友在职位调动和升迁上会有什么影响。

“这下子我很可能弄到施塔别尔或文尼科夫的位置，”费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇想，“这个位置早就说好给我了，而这样一提升，我就可以在车马费之外每年净增加八百卢布收入。”

“这下子我可以申请把内弟从卡卢加调来。”彼得·伊凡内奇想，“妻子一定会很高兴的。如今她可不能再说不关心她家的人了。”

“我早就想到，他这一病恐怕起不来了，”彼得·伊凡内奇说，“真可怜！”

“他究竟害的是什么病啊？”

“几个医生都不准。或者说，各有各的说法。我最后一次看见

他，还以为他会好起来呢。”

“自从过节以来我就没有去看过他，去是一直想去的。”

“那么，他有财产吗？”

“他妻子手里大概有一点，但很有限。”

“是啊，应该去看看她。他们住得太远。”

“从您那儿去是很远。您到什么地方去都很远。”

“嘿，我住在河对岸，他总是有意见。”彼得·伊凡内奇笑眯眯地瞧着谢贝克说道。大家又说了一通城市太大、市内各区距离太远之类的话，然后回到法庭上。

伊凡·伊里奇的死讯使每个人不由得推测，人事上会因此发生什么变动，同时照例使认识他的人都暗自庆幸：“还好，死的是他，不是我。”

“嘿，他死了，可我没有死。”人人都这样想，或者有这样的感觉。伊凡·伊里奇的知交，他的所谓朋友，都同时不由自主地想，这下子他们得遵循习俗，参加丧礼，慰问遗孀了。

费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇和彼得·伊凡内奇是伊凡·伊里奇最知心的朋友。

彼得·伊凡内奇跟伊凡·伊里奇在法学院时是同学，自认为受过伊凡·伊里奇的恩惠。

午饭时，彼得·伊凡内奇把伊凡·伊里奇的死讯告诉了妻子，同时讲了争取把内弟调到本区的想法。饭后他没休息，就穿上礼服，乘车到伊凡·伊里奇家里去了。

伊凡·伊里奇家门口停着一辆自备轿车和两辆出租马车。在前厅衣帽架旁的墙上，靠着带穗子和擦得闪闪发亮的金银饰带的棺盖。两位穿黑衣的太太在这里脱去皮外套。其中一位是伊凡·伊里奇的姐姐，彼得·伊凡内奇认识她；另一位没有见过面。彼得·伊凡内奇的同事施瓦尔茨从楼上下来，一看见他进门，就站住向他使了个眼色，仿佛在说：“伊凡·伊里奇真没出息，咱们可不至于如此。”

施瓦尔茨脸上留着英国式络腮胡子，瘦长的身体穿着礼服，照例表现出一种典雅庄重的气派，但这同他天生的顽皮性格不协调，因此显得很滑稽。彼得·伊凡内奇心里有这样的感觉。

彼得·伊凡内奇让太太们先走，自己则慢吞吞地跟着她们上楼。施瓦尔茨在楼梯顶上站住，没有下来。彼得·伊凡内奇懂得施瓦尔茨的用意：他想跟他约定，今晚到什么地方去打桥牌。太太们上楼向孀妇屋

里走去；施瓦尔茨却一本正经地抿着厚嘴唇，眼睛里露出戏谑的神气，挤挤眉向彼得·伊凡内奇示意，死人在右边房间。

彼得·伊凡内奇进去时照例有点困惑，不知做什么好。但有一点他很清楚，凡是到这种场合，画十字总是不会错的。至于要不要同时鞠躬，他可没有把握，因此选择了个折中的办法：他走进屋里，动手画十字，同时微微点头，好像在鞠躬。在画十字和点头时，他向屋子里偷偷环顾了一下。有两个青年和一个中学生，大概是伊凡·伊里奇的侄儿们，正一面画十字，一面从屋子里出来。一个老妇人一动不动地站在那里。一个眉毛弯得出奇的女人在对她低声说话。诵经士身穿法衣，精神饱满，神态严峻，大声念着什么，脸上表现出神圣不可侵犯的样子，充当餐室侍仆的庄稼汉盖拉西姆蹑手蹑脚地从彼得·伊凡内奇面前走过，把什么东西撒在地板上。彼得·伊凡内奇一看见这情景，立刻闻到淡淡的腐尸臭。他上次探望伊凡·伊里奇时，在书房里看到过这个庄稼汉。当时他在护理伊凡·伊里奇，伊凡·伊里奇特别喜爱他。彼得·伊凡内奇一直画着十字，向棺材、诵经士和屋角桌上的圣像微微鞠躬。后来，他觉得十字已画得够了，就停下来打量死人。

死人躺在那里，也像一般死人那样，显得特别沉重，僵硬的四肢陷在棺材衬垫里，脑袋高高地靠在枕头上，蜡黄的前额高高隆起，半秃的两鬓凹进去，高耸的鼻子仿佛压迫着上唇。同彼得·伊凡内奇上次看见他时相比，他的模样大变了，身体更瘦了，但他的脸也像一般死人那样，比生前好看，显得端庄。脸上的神态似乎表示，他已尽了责任，而且尽得很周到。此外，那神态还好像在责备活人或者提醒他们什么事。彼得·伊凡内奇却觉得没有什么事需要提醒他，至少没有事跟他有关系。他心里有点不快，就又匆匆画了个十字——他自己也觉得这个十字画得太快，未免有点失礼——转身往门口走去。施瓦尔茨宽宽地叉开两腿站在穿堂里等他，双手在背后玩弄着大礼帽。彼得·伊凡内奇瞧了瞧服饰雅致、模样顽皮可笑的施瓦尔茨，顿时精神振作起来。他知道施瓦尔茨性格开朗，不会受这里哀伤气氛的影响。他那副神气仿佛表示：伊凡·伊里奇的丧事绝没有理由破坏他们的例会，也就是说不能妨碍他们今天晚上就拆开一副新牌，在仆人点亮的四支新蜡烛照耀下打牌。总之，这次丧事不能影响他们今晚快乐的聚会。他就把这个想法低声告诉从旁边走过的彼得·伊凡内奇，并建议今晚到费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇家打牌。不过，彼得·伊凡内奇今天显然没有打牌的运气。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜同几位太太从内室出来了。她身材矮胖，尽管千方百计要自己消瘦，可是肩膀以下的部分却一个劲儿向横里发展。她穿一身黑衣，头上包一块花边头巾，眉毛像站在棺材旁那个女人一样弯得出奇。她把她们送到灵堂门口，说：“马上要做丧事礼拜了，你们请进。”

施瓦尔茨微微点头站住，显得犹豫不决，是不是接受这个邀请。

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜认出彼得·伊凡内奇，叹了一口气，走到他跟前，握住他的手说：“我知道您是伊凡·伊里奇的知心朋友……”她说到这里对他瞧瞧，等待他听了这话后做出相应的反应。彼得·伊凡内奇知道，既然刚才应该画十字，那么这会儿就得握手，叹气，说一句：“真是想不到！”他就这样做了。做了以后，他发觉达到了预期的效果：他感动了，她也感动了。

“现在那边还没有开始，您来一下，我有话要跟您说，”孀妇说，“您扶着我。”

彼得·伊凡内奇伸出手臂挽住她，他们向内室走去。经过施瓦尔茨身边时，施瓦尔茨失望地向彼得·伊凡内奇使了个眼色。“唉，牌打不成了！要是我们另外找到搭档，您可别怪我们。要是您能脱身，五人一起玩也行。”他那淘气的目光仿佛在这么说。

彼得·伊凡内奇更深沉更悲伤地叹了口气，普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜便感激地捏了捏他的手臂。他们走进灯光暗淡、挂着玫瑰红花布窗帘的客厅，在桌旁坐下来：她坐在沙发上，彼得·伊凡内奇坐在弹簧损坏、凳面凹陷的矮沙发凳上。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜想叫他换一把椅子坐，可是觉得此刻说这些话不得体，就作罢了。彼得·伊凡内奇坐到沙发凳上时，想起伊凡·伊里奇当年装饰这客厅时曾同他商量，最后决定用这种带绿叶的玫瑰红花布做窗帘和沙发套。客厅里摆满家具杂物，孀妇走过时，她那件黑斗篷的黑花边在雕花桌上挂住了。彼得·伊凡内奇欠起身，想帮她解开斗篷，沙发凳一摆脱负担，里面的弹簧立刻蹦起来，往他身上弹。孀妇自己解开斗篷，彼得·伊凡内奇又坐下来，把跳动的弹簧重新压下去。但孀妇没有把斗篷完全解开，彼得·伊凡内奇又欠起身，弹簧又往上蹦，还噔地响了一声。等这一切都过去了，她拿出一块洁净的麻纱手绢，哭起来。斗篷钩住和沙发凳的弹簧蹦跳这些插曲使彼得·伊凡内奇冷静下来，他皱紧眉头坐着。这当儿，伊凡·伊里奇的男仆索科洛夫走进来，把这种尴尬局面打破了。他报告普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜，她指定的那块坟地要价两百卢布。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜止住哭，可怜巴巴地瞟了一眼彼得·伊凡内奇，用法语说她的日子很难过。彼得·伊凡内奇默默地做了个手势，表示他深信她说的是实话。

“您请抽烟。”她用宽宏大量而又极其悲痛的语气说，然后同索科洛夫谈坟地的价钱。彼得·伊凡内奇一面吸烟，一面听她怎样详细询问坟地的价格，最后决定买哪一块。谈完坟地，她又吩咐索科洛夫去请唱诗班。索科洛夫走了。

“什么事都是我自己料理。”她对彼得·伊凡内奇说，把桌上的照相簿挪到一边。接着发现烟灰快掉到桌上，连忙把烟灰碟推到彼得·伊凡内奇面前，嘴里说：“要是说我悲伤得不能做事，那未免有点做作。

相反，现在只有为他的后事多操点心，我才感到安慰……至少可以排遣点悲伤。”她掏出手绢，又要哭，但突然勉强忍住，打起精神，镇静地说：“我有点事要跟您谈谈。”

彼得·伊凡内奇点点头，不让他身下蠢蠢欲动的沙发弹簧再蹦起来。

“最后几天他真是难受。”

“非常难受吗？”彼得·伊凡内奇问。

“唉，太可怕了！他不停地叫嚷，不是一连几分钟，而是一连几个钟头。三天三夜嚷个不停。实在叫人受不了。我真不懂我这是怎么熬过来的。隔着三道门都听得见他的叫声。唉，我这是怎么熬过来的哟！”

“当时他神志清醒吗？”彼得·伊凡内奇问。

“清醒，”她喃喃地说，“直到最后一分钟都清醒。他在临终前一刻钟跟我们告了别，还叫我们把伏洛嘉带开。”

彼得·伊凡内奇想到，他那么熟识的这个人，原先是快乐的孩子，小学生，后来成了他的同事，最后竟受到这样的折磨。尽管他觉得自己和这个女人都有点做作，但想到这一点，心里却十分恐惧。他又看见那个前额和那个压住嘴唇的鼻子，不禁感到不寒而栗。

“三天三夜极度的痛苦，然后死去。这种情况也可能随时落到我的头上。”他想，刹那间感到毛骨悚然。但是，他自己也不知怎的，一种常有的想法很快就使他镇静下来：“这种事只有伊凡·伊里奇会碰上，我可绝不会碰上。这种事不应该也不可能落到我的头上。”他想到这些，心情忧郁，但施瓦尔茨分明向他做过暗示，他不该有这种心情。彼得·伊凡内奇思考了一下，镇静下来，详细询问伊凡·伊里奇临终前的情况，仿佛这种事故只会发生在伊凡·伊里奇身上，可绝不会发生在他身上。

在谈了一通伊凡·伊里奇肉体上所受非人痛苦的情况以后（这种痛苦，彼得·伊凡内奇是从普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜神经所受的影响上领会的），孀妇显然认为该转到正题上了。

“唉，彼得·伊凡内奇，真是难受，真是太难受了，太难受了。”她又哭起来。

彼得·伊凡内奇叹着气，等她擦去鼻涕眼泪，才说：“真是想不到……”

接着她又说起来，说到了显然是她找他来的主要问题。她问他，丈夫去世后怎样向政府申请抚恤金。她装作向彼得·伊凡内奇请教，

怎样领取赡养费，不过他看得出，因丈夫去世她可以向政府弄到多少钱，这事她已经了解得清清楚楚，比他知道得还清楚。她不过是想知道，可不可以通过什么办法弄到更多的钱。彼得·伊凡内奇竭力思索，想到几种办法，但最后只是出于礼节骂了一通政府的吝啬，说不可能弄到更多的钱了。于是她叹了一口气，显然是要摆脱这位来客。他理会了，就摁灭香烟，站起身，同孀妇握了握手，走到前厅。

餐厅里摆着伊凡·伊里奇十分得意地从旧货店买来的大钟。彼得·伊凡内奇在那里遇见神父和几个来参加丧事礼拜的客人，还看见一位熟识的美丽小姐，就是伊凡·伊里奇的女儿。她穿一身黑衣，腰身本来很苗条，如今似乎变得更苗条了。她的神态忧郁、冷淡，甚至还有点愤慨。她向彼得·伊凡内奇鞠躬，但那副神气显出仿佛他有什么过错似的。女儿后面站着一个同样面带愠色的青年。彼得·伊凡内奇认识他是法院侦讯官，家里很有几个钱，而且听说是她的未婚夫。彼得·伊凡内奇沮丧地向他们点点头，正要往死人房间走去，这时楼梯下出现了逝者在中学念书的儿子。这孩子活脱就是年轻时的伊凡·伊里奇。彼得·伊凡内奇记得伊凡·伊里奇在法学院念书时就是这个模样。这孩子眼睛里含着泪水，神态也像那些十三四岁的愣小子。他一看见彼得·伊凡内奇，就忧郁而害臊地皱起眉头。彼得·伊凡内奇向他点点头，走进灵堂。丧事礼拜开始了：又是蜡烛，又是呻吟，又是神香，又是眼泪，又是啜泣。彼得·伊凡内奇皱紧眉头站着，眼睛瞅着自己的双脚。他一眼也不看死人，直到礼拜结束他的心情都没有受悲伤气氛的影响，并且第一个走出灵堂。前厅里一个人也没有。充任餐厅侍仆的庄稼汉盖拉西姆从灵堂奔出来，用他那双强壮的手臂努力地在—排外套中间翻寻着，终于把彼得·伊凡内奇的外套找出来，递给他。

“嗯，盖拉西姆老弟，你说呢？”彼得·伊凡内奇想说话应酬一下，“可怜不可怜哪？”

“这是上帝的意思！我们都要到那里去的。”盖拉西姆露出一排洁白整齐的庄稼汉的牙齿，说完就像在紧张地干活那样猛地推开门，大声呼喊马车夫，把彼得·伊凡内奇送上车，又奔回台阶上，仿佛在考虑还有些什么事要做。

在闻过神香、尸体和石碳酸的臭味以后，彼得·伊凡内奇特别爽快地吸了一大口新鲜空气。

“上哪儿，老爷？”马车夫问。

“不晚。还可以到费多尔·瓦西里耶维奇家去一下。”

彼得·伊凡内奇就去了。果然，他到的时候，第一局牌刚结束，因此他就顺当地成了第五名赌客。

伊凡·伊里奇的身世极其普通、极其简单而又极其可怕。

他是个法官，去世时才四十五岁。他父亲是彼得堡一名官员，曾在好几个政府机关任职，虽不能胜任某些要职，但凭着他的资格和身份，从没被逐出官场，因此总能弄到一些有名无实的官职和六千到一万卢布的有名有实的年俸，并一直享受到晚年。

伊里亚·叶斐莫维奇·高洛文就是这样一个多余机关里的多余的三等文官。

he有三个儿子。伊凡·伊里奇排行第二。老大像他父亲一样官运亨通，不过在另一个机关，也快到领干薪的年龄。老三没有出息。他在几个地方都败坏了名声，眼下在铁路上供职。父亲也好，两位哥哥也好，特别是两位嫂子，不仅不愿同他见面，而且非万不得已从不会想到有他这样一个兄弟。姐姐嫁给了格列夫男爵，他同他岳父一样是彼得堡的官员。伊凡·伊里奇是家里所谓的佼佼者 [1]。他不像老大那样冷淡古板，也不像老三那样放荡不羁。他介于他们之间：聪明，活泼，乐观，文雅。他跟弟弟一起在法学院念过书。老三没有毕业，念到五年级就被学校开除了；伊凡·伊里奇则毕了业，而且成绩优良。他在法学院里就显示了后来终生具备的特点：能干，乐观，厚道，随和，但又能严格履行自认为应尽的责任，而他心目中的责任就是达官贵人所公认的职责。他从小不会巴结拍马，成年后还是不善于阿谀奉承，但从青年时代起就像飞蛾扑火那样追随上层人士，模仿他们的一举一动，接受他们的人生观，并同他们交朋友。童年时代和少年时代的热情在他身上消失得干干净净。他开始迷恋声色，追逐功名，最后发展到了自由放纵的地步。不过，他的本性还能使他保持一定分寸，不至于过分逾越常规。

在法学院里，他认为自己的有些行为很卑劣，因此很嫌恶自己。但后来看到地位比他高的人都在那样干，而且并不认为卑劣，他也就以为不以为意，不再把它们放在心上，即使想到也无动于衷。伊凡·伊里奇在法学院毕业，获得十等文官官衔，从父亲手里领到治装费，在著名的沙尔玛裁缝铺里定制了服装，表坠上挂一块刻着“高瞻远瞩” [2] 的纪念章，向导师和任校董的亲王辞了行，跟同学们在唐农大饭店欢宴话别，带着从最高级商店买来的时式手提箱、衬衣、西服、剃刀、梳妆用品和旅行毛毯，走马上任，当了省长特派员。这个官职是他父亲替他谋得的。伊凡·伊里奇到了外省，很快就像在法学院那样过得称心如意。他奉公守法，兢兢业业，生活得欢快而又不失体统。他有时奉命到各县视察，待人接物稳重得体，对上待下恰如其分，不贪赃枉法，而且总能圆满完成上司交下的差事，主要是处理好分裂派教徒事件。他虽然年轻放荡，但处理公务却异常审慎，甚至可以说是铁面无

私；在社交场中，他活泼风趣而又和蔼有礼，正像他的上司和上司太太——他们是他们家的常客——称赞他的那样，是个好小子 [3]。他同省里一位死缠住他这个风流法学家的太太有暧昧关系；还同一个女裁缝私通；有时同巡察的副官们狂饮欢宴，饭后还去花街柳巷寻欢作乐。他奉承上级长官，甚至长官夫人，手法高明，无懈可击，从未引起非议，人家至多说一句法国谚语：年轻时放荡在所难免。这一切他都干得体的面面，嘴里说的又是法国话，主要则是因为他跻身在最上层，Thnbsp；容易博得达官显贵的青睐。伊凡·伊里奇就这样干了五年。接着他的工作调动了，因为成立了新的司法机关，需要新的官员。

于是伊凡·伊里奇就调任了这样的新职。

伊凡·伊里奇被推荐任法院侦讯官的职务，他接受了，虽然这位置在另一个省里，因此他得放弃原有的各种关系，另起炉灶，重新结交朋友。朋友们给伊凡·伊里奇饯行，同他一起拍照，还赠给他一个银烟盒留念。那之后，他便走马上任去了。

伊凡·伊里奇当法院侦讯官同样循规蹈矩 [4]，公私分明，并且像做特派员一样受到普遍尊敬。对伊凡·伊里奇来说，侦讯官的工作比原来的工作有趣得多，迷人得多。以前让他感到扬扬得意的是，身穿精工缝制的文官制服，昂首阔步地经过战战兢兢等待接见的来访者和对他羡慕不已的官员们面前，一直走进长官办公室，并且跟长官一起喝茶吸烟；但那时直接听命于他的人，只有县警察局的局长和分裂派教徒，而且还是要在奉命出差的时候。他对待他们总是客客气气，使他们感到，他尽管操着生杀大权，却平易近人，毫无架子。那个时候，这样直接听命于他的人不多。如今伊凡·伊里奇当上法院侦讯官，他懂得就连达官贵人的命运也都操在他手里，他只要在公文上批几句，随便哪个要人都会成为被告或证人来到他面前，并且得站着回答他的问题，如果他不请他坐下的话。伊凡·伊里奇从不滥用权力，相反总是不露锋芒，而这种权力的意识和适当用权的技术，就成了他担任新职后最感兴趣的事。从事这项新职，也就是说审查工作，伊凡·伊里奇很快就掌握了一种本领，能排除一切与本案无关的情节，使各种错综复杂的案情在公文上表现得简单明了，不带丝毫个人意见，完全符合公文要求。这是一项新的工作，而伊凡·伊里奇则属于第一批执行1864年新法典的人。

自从在新地方就任法院侦讯官以来，伊凡·伊里奇结交了一批新朋友，建立了一些新关系，获得了新的社会地位，并多少采取了新作风。他在省里同政府保持一定距离，却周旋于司法界头面人物和豪门巨富之间，对当局稍表不满，发表温和的自由主义言论和开明观点。此外，伊凡·伊里奇就任新职后仍旧讲究服饰，注意仪表，只是不再刮

去下巴颏上的胡子而任其自然生长。

伊凡·伊里奇在新地方过得很愉快。他跟一批反对省长的人关系很好；薪俸比以前优厚；他逢场作戏，打打纸牌，以增添乐趣。他头脑聪敏，很会打牌，因此常常赢钱。

伊凡·伊里奇在新地方任职两年后遇见了后来成为他妻子的普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜·米海尔。她是伊凡·伊里奇出入的圈子里最迷人最伶俐最出色的姑娘。伊凡·伊里奇在办公之余，找点消遣，其中就包括同普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜戏谑调情。

伊凡·伊里奇任特派员时常常跳舞，但当上侦讯官后就难得跳了。如今他跳舞只是为了要显示，尽管他身为侦讯官和五等文官，跳舞水平可绝不比别人差。有时晚会将近结束，他就请普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜一起跳舞，主要借这种机会去征服普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜的心。她爱上了他。伊凡·伊里奇并没有明确想到要结婚，但既然人家姑娘爱上了他，他就问自己：“是啊，那么何不就结婚呢？”

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜出身望族，长得不错，而且小有家产。伊凡·伊里奇可以指望找到一个更出色的配偶，但这个配偶也不错。

伊凡·伊里奇自己有薪俸收入，他希望她也有同样多的进款。她出身名门，又生得温柔美丽，很有教养。说伊凡·伊里奇同她结婚，是因为爱上这位小姐，并且发觉她的人生观同他一致，那不符合事实。说他结婚，是因为在他的圈子里大家都赞成这门婚事，那同样不符合事实。伊凡·伊里奇结婚是出于双重考虑：娶这样一位妻子是幸福的，而达官贵人们又都赞成这门亲事。

伊凡·伊里奇就这样结了婚。

在准备结婚和婚后初期，夫妻恩爱，妻子尚未怀孕，再加上崭新的家具，崭新的餐具，崭新的衣服，日子过得很美满。伊凡·伊里奇认为他原来的生活轻松愉快而又高尚体面，并且受到上流社会的赞许，如今结婚不仅不会损害这种生活，而且使它更加美满。但在妻子怀孕几个月后，出现了一种痛苦难堪而有失体统的新局面，那是他万万没有料到的，而且怎么也无法摆脱。

伊凡·伊里奇认为妻子完全是出于任性 [5]，破坏了快乐体面的生活，莫名其妙地动辄猜疑，要求他更加体贴她。不论什么事她都横加挑剔，动不动就对他大吵大闹。

起初伊凡·伊里奇想继续用快乐体面的人生态度来排除烦恼。他不管妻子的情绪，照旧高高兴兴地过日子：请朋友到家里来打牌，自己上俱乐部或者到朋友家串门子。可是有一次妻子气势汹汹地对他破口大骂。这以后只要他稍不顺她的意，她就把他臭骂一顿，显然非把他

制服不可，也就是说要他安守在家里，并且像她一样唉声叹气，无病呻吟，这使伊凡·伊里奇感到心惊胆战。他懂得了，夫妇生活，至少是他同妻子的生活，并不能始终维持快乐和体面，相反，这样的气氛常常会被损害，因此必须设法防范。伊凡·伊里奇借口公务繁忙，来对付普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜。他发现这种办法很有效，因此常用它来保卫自己的独立天地。

孩子出生后，喂养很费事，常常发生这样那样的麻烦，不是婴儿害病就是做母亲的害病，有时是真病，有时是假病。不管怎样，伊凡·伊里奇都得照顾，尽管他对这些事一窍不通。伊凡·伊里奇保卫自己独立天地、不受家庭干扰的欲望越来越强烈。

妻子的脾气越来越暴躁，要求越来越苛刻，伊凡·伊里奇也越来越把生活的重心转移到公务上。他更加喜爱官职，醉心功名。

不久，在结婚一年后，伊凡·伊里奇懂得了，夫妇生活虽然也有一些好处，但却是一件很复杂很痛苦的事。而要尽到自己的责任，过一种受社会赞许的体面生活，必须像做官一样建立适当的关系。

伊凡·伊里奇就给自己建立了这样的夫妇关系。他对家庭生活的要求，只是能吃到家常便饭，生活上有照料和过床第生活，而这些都是她能向他提供的。他主要的要求是维持社会所公认的体面的夫妇关系。此外，他就自寻欢乐，获得了欢乐也就心满意足。要是家里遇到不愉快，他就立刻逃到公务活动的独立天地里去，并在那里自得其乐。

伊凡·伊里奇当侦讯官，声誉显赫，三年后就升任副检察官。新的官职、重要的地位、控诉和拘捕任何人的权力、当众的演说、辉煌的功绩——这一切使伊凡·伊里奇更加官迷心窍。

孩子一个个生下来。妻子变得越来越乖戾，越来越易怒，但伊凡·伊里奇确立的家庭关系几乎不受妻子脾气的影响。

伊凡·伊里奇在这个城市里任职七年，接着被调到另一个省里当检察官。他们搬了家，手头的钱不多，妻子又不喜欢新地方。薪俸尽管比原来多，但生活成本也高了，再说又死了两个孩子，因此伊凡·伊里奇就感到家庭生活比以前更乏味了。

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜搬到新地方后，不论遇到什么麻烦，总要责怪丈夫。夫妇间不论谈什么事，尤其是谈教育孩子的问题，总会联想到以前的不和，引起新的争吵。夫妇俩如今难得有恩爱的时刻，即使有，也是很短暂的。他们在爱情的小岛上临时停泊一下，不久又会掉进互相敌视的汪洋大海，彼此冷若冰霜。要是伊凡·伊里奇认为家庭生活不该如此，他准会对这种冷漠感到伤心，不过他不仅认为这样的局面是正常的，而且正是他所企求的。他的目标就是要尽量摆脱家

庭生活的烦恼，而表面上又要装得若无其事，保持体面。为了达到这一目的，他尽量少同家人待在一起，如果不得已必须这样做，也总是竭力找有旁人在场的机会。不过，伊凡·伊里奇这样过日子，主要靠的是他有公务。他把全部生活乐趣都集中在官场的天地里。而这种乐趣支配了他的整个身心。意识到自己的权力，对任何人都操有生杀大权，每次走进法庭和遇到下属时那种威风凛凛的气派（即使只是表面的），在上司与下属之间周旋的本领，尤其是自觉高明的办事能力——这一切都使他扬扬得意，再加上跟同事们谈天、宴会和打牌，他的生活就显得很充实。总之，伊凡·伊里奇的生活过得合乎他的愿望：快乐而体面。

就这样他又过了七年。大女儿已经十六岁，另外又死了一个孩子，只剩下一个男孩在中学念书。这个孩子是引起夫妇争吵的一大因素。伊凡·伊里奇要送他读法学院，而普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜却偏把他送进普通中学。女儿在家里学习，成绩良好；儿子学得也不错。

三

伊凡·伊里奇婚后就这样过了十七年的光阴。现在他已是一个老检察官了。他推辞了几次工作上的调动，一心想找个更称心的职司，不料出了一件不愉快的事，把他生活的安宁给破坏了。伊凡·伊里奇想谋取大学城首席法官的位置，但被戈佩捷足先得。伊凡·伊里奇十分生气，提出责问，同戈佩吵嘴，又冒犯顶头上司；他从此受冷遇，下一次任命也没有他的份儿。

这是1880年，也是伊凡·伊里奇一生中最倒霉的年头。他一方面入不敷出，另一方面又被人家遗忘。他觉得人家待他极不公平，人家却认为对他已仁至义尽。就连父亲都认为无须再帮助他了。他觉得大家都把他抛弃了，并认为他有三千五百卢布年俸已很不错，甚至可说是十分幸福了。人家待他这么不公平，妻子经常责骂他，家里入不敷出，开始负债。这种情况当然谈不上正常，而且只有他一个人知道。

今年夏天，伊凡·伊里奇为了节省开支，同妻子一起到内弟乡下度假。

在乡下不做事，伊凡·伊里奇第一次不仅感到无聊，而且十分愁闷。他认定无法这样过活，必须断然采取措施。

伊凡·伊里奇不能入睡，在露台上踱了个通宵，决定上彼得堡奔走一番，争取调到其他部门工作，以惩罚他们，惩罚那些不会赏识他能的人。

第二天早晨，他不顾妻子和内弟的劝阻，乘车上彼得堡。

他唯一的目的是弄到一个年俸五千卢布的位置。他不再计较是

哪个机关，是哪个派别和哪种工作。他只要一个位置，年俸五千卢布的位置，不论政府机关、银行、铁路、玛丽皇后御用机关，甚至海关都行，但一定要有五千卢布收入，一定要离开那个不会赏识他才能的机关。

伊凡·伊里奇此行取得了意外收获。在库尔斯克火车站，头等车厢里上来一个熟人，名叫伊林。伊林告诉他库尔斯克省刚接到电报，部里最近人事上有重大变动，彼得·伊凡内奇的位置将由伊凡·谢苗内奇接任。

这次调动，除了对国家有一定影响外，对伊凡·伊里奇具有特殊意义，因为起用了新人彼得·彼得罗维奇和他的朋友扎哈尔·伊凡内奇。这对他伊凡·伊里奇极其有利，因为扎哈尔·伊凡内奇是伊凡·伊里奇的同学，又是他的好朋友。

在莫斯科，这个消息得到了证实。伊凡·伊里奇来到彼得堡，找到了扎哈尔·伊凡内奇，后者答应给他在原来的司法部里谋一个好差事。

一个星期后，他给妻子发了一封电报。

“扎哈尔接替米勒，我申请后即可提升。”

伊凡·伊里奇通过这次人事调动在他的旧部里获得意外任命：比同事高两级，年俸五千，再加调差费三千五百。伊凡·伊里奇消除了对原来对头和整个机关的怨气，感到十分得意。

伊凡·伊里奇回到乡下，兴高采烈。他好久没有这样快活了。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜也很高兴，夫妇俩和好了。伊凡·伊里奇讲到他在彼得堡怎样受祝贺，原来的对头怎样厚着脸皮巴结他，怎样羡慕他的地位，特别讲到他在彼得堡怎样受人尊敬。

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜听着他讲，装出相信的样子，也不打岔，心里却盘算着怎样到新地方去重新安排生活。伊凡·伊里奇高兴地看到，她的想法同他的想法不谋而合，他们一度坎坷的生活重又变得快乐而体面了。

伊凡·伊里奇只回家几天。九月十日他就得走马上任。此外，他还得在新地方安顿下来，把家具什物从省里运去，再要添置和定做许多新东西。总之，要根据他同普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜几乎一致的想法把新居布置好。

现在，一切都进行得称心如意，他同妻子又意气相投。他们俩一起生活的时间很少像现在这样投契，除了婚后头几年，还不曾有过。伊凡·伊里奇本想举家搬走，可他的嫂子和姐夫对伊凡·伊里奇一家忽然十分亲热，弄得伊凡·伊里奇只好独自先走。伊凡·伊里奇走了，事业上一帆风顺，同妻子言归于好，这两件事互为因果，使他心情愉

快。他找到一座精美的住宅，恰合夫妇俩的心意，高大宽敞的老式客厅、豪华舒适的书房、妻子的房间、女儿的房间、儿子的书房，一切都是为他们特意设计的。伊凡·伊里奇亲自布置房间，选择墙纸，添置家具——从旧货店买来的，式样特别古雅，定制了沙发套和窗帘。房子布置得越来越漂亮，符合他的理想。他布置到一半，发觉比他希望的更美。他相信，等全部完工，将更加富丽堂皇，而绝不会流于庸俗。临睡前，他想象他的前厅将是什么样子。他瞧着没有布置好的客厅，仿佛看到壁炉、屏风、古董架、散放着的小椅子、墙上的挂盘和铜器都已安放得井井有条。他想到妻子和女儿在这方面跟他有同样的爱好，看到这种排场，准会大吃一惊，不禁暗暗高兴。她们一定想不到会有这样的气派。他特别得意的是买到一些价廉物美的古董，使整座房子显得额外豪华。他在信里故意把情况说得差一些，这样她们一看到就会更加惊讶。他热衷于装饰新居，就连对心爱的公务都不那么感兴趣了。有时法院开庭，他也心不在焉：他在考虑究竟用什么样的窗帘顶檐，直的还是拱的。他对这事兴致勃勃，亲自动手安放家具，重新挂上窗帘。有一次他爬到梯子上，指点愚笨的沙发裁缝怎样挂窗帘，一不留神失足掉下来，但他是个强壮而灵活的汉子，立刻站住了，只是腰部撞在窗框上。伤处痛了一阵，不久就好了。这一时期，伊凡·伊里奇觉得自己特别快乐和健康。他写信说：“我感到自己仿佛年轻了十五岁。”他原想到九月底把房子布置好，结果拖到十月半。不过，房子布置得十分雅致——不仅他自己这么认为，凡是看到的人都这么说。

其实，房子里的摆设无非是那种不太富裕却一味模仿富裕人家的小康之家的气派，千篇一律地尽是花缎、红木家具、盆花、地毯、古铜器、发亮铜器等等。一定阶级的人总是拿这些东西来表示他们一定的身份。伊凡·伊里奇家里的摆设同人家没有什么两样，因此引不起人家的注意，但他却扬扬自得，以为与众不同。他到车站去接家眷，把他们带到装修一新的寓所里，系白领带的男仆打开摆满鲜花的前厅，他们走进客厅、书房，高兴得欢呼起来。他领他们到各处观看，得意扬扬地听着他们的称赞，容光焕发，感到十分幸福。当天晚上喝茶的时候，普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜随便问到他是怎么摔跤的，他就笑着做给他们看，他怎样从梯子上掉下来，把沙发裁缝吓坏了。

“幸亏我练过体操。要是换了别人，准会摔坏的，可我只在这儿撞了一下，摸摸有点疼，但已经好多了，只是有点青肿。”

就这样他们在新居开始生活，并且也像一般人移居到新地方那样，觉得还少一个房间，收入虽然增加，但还嫌钱少——少这么五百卢布。不过总的来说，他们感到称心如意了。最初他们过得特别愉快，房子还没有完全布置好，需要再买些什么，定制些什么，有些东西需要搬动，有些东西需要调整。尽管夫妇之间有时意见分歧，但两

人对新的生活都很满意，而且有许多事要做，因此没有发生大的争吵。等一切都安排完毕，他们开始感到有点空虚，但当时还需要结交一批新朋友，培养新习惯，因此生活还是很充实。

伊凡·伊里奇上午在法院办公，下午回家吃饭，起初那段时光情绪很好，虽然为房子的事有时也有点烦恼（例如，他发现桌布或沙发罩子上有污点，窗帘系带断了，就会发脾气，因为看到他煞费苦心置办的东西被损坏，心里难过）。不过，伊凡·伊里奇的生活还是过得合乎他的理想：轻松、愉快而体面。他每天早晨九时起床，喝咖啡，看报，然后穿上制服去法院。那儿已为他准备好“轭”，让他一到就套到身上：接见来访者，处理与诉讼有关的问题，主持诉讼案件，出席公开开庭和预备庭。他必须排除各种外来干预，免得妨碍诉讼程序，同时严禁徇私枉法，严格依法办事。要是有人想探听什么事，而这事不属伊凡·伊里奇主管，他就不能同这人发生任何关系，但要是这人有正式公文，上面写明事由，那么伊凡·伊里奇就会根据法律许可的范围尽力去办，并且办得不违反人情，也就是说面子上过得去。但只要公事一结束，其他关系也就结束了。分清法律和人情这种本领伊凡·伊里奇已达到登峰造极的地步，而且凭着天赋的才能和长期的经验，他有时还会故意把法律和人情混淆起来。他之所以敢于这样做，那是因为他自信总有能力划清两者的界限，如果需要的话。伊凡·伊里奇办这种事不仅轻松、愉快和体面，简直可以说是得心应手。在休庭时，他吸烟、喝茶，随便谈谈政治、社会新闻和纸牌，而谈得最多的还是官场中的任命。然后，他好像第一小提琴手，出色地演奏完毕，疲劳地乘车回家。回到家里，发现母女俩出去了，有时在接待客人，儿子上学了，有时在跟补课教师复习功课。一切都井井有条。饭后要是没有客人来，伊凡·伊里奇就看些当时流行的书籍。晚上，他坐下来处理公事：批阅文件，查看法典，核对证词。他干这些，既不感到无聊，也不觉得有趣。要是有机会打牌，那么处理公事就感到无聊；要是没有机会打牌，那么处理公事总比独自闲坐或者跟妻子面面相相对要好得多。伊凡·伊里奇喜欢举行便宴，邀请有权有势的先生夫人参加。这种消遣跟其他同样身份的人没有差别，犹如他的客厅跟人家的客厅没有差别一样。

他们家里还举行过一次舞会。舞会办得很好，伊凡·伊里奇心情愉快，可惜最后为蛋糕糖果的事同妻子大闹了一场。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜有她的打算，但伊凡·伊里奇坚持要到最高级的糖果铺去买糕点，结果买了许多蛋糕。争吵就是由于蛋糕太多吃不完，而糖果铺的账却高达四十五卢布引起的。争吵很激烈，闹得很不愉快。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜骂他：“傻瓜，低能。”伊凡·伊里奇气得双手抱住脑袋，恨恨地说出离婚之类的话来。不过，晚会本身还是很快的，前来参加的都是社会名流。伊凡·伊里奇同特鲁峰诺娃公爵夫人跳舞。特

鲁峰诺娃公爵夫人的姐姐就是著名的“消灭苦难会”的创办人。身居要职的乐趣在于自尊心的满足，社会活动的乐趣在于虚荣心的满足，但伊凡·伊里奇的真正乐趣却在于打牌。他认为，不管生活上遇到什么烦恼，那像蜡烛一样驱除黑暗的最大乐趣，就是同几个规矩矩的好搭档坐下来一起打牌，而且一定要四人一起（五人一起打就很难有结果，虽然得装出很感兴趣的样子），认认真真地打（要是顺手的话），然后吃点夜宵，喝一大杯葡萄酒。打过牌以后睡觉，尤其是稍微赢一点钱（赢得太多也不好），伊凡·伊里奇觉得特别愉快。

他们就这样过着日子。他们家的来客都是达官贵人，有的地位显赫，有的年少英俊。

夫妻和女儿待人的态度完全一致。凡是满脸堆笑、投奔到他们那间墙上装饰着日本盘子的客厅来的潦倒亲友，他们都加以排斥。不久，这些寒酸的亲友便不再上门，高洛文家的来客就限于达官贵人。年轻人纷纷追求丽莎，其中包括彼特利歇夫。那是德米特里·伊凡内奇·彼特利歇夫的儿子，又是他财产的唯一继承人，现任法院侦讯官。他也在热烈地追求丽莎，弄得伊凡·伊里奇已在跟普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜商量：要不要让他们一起坐三驾马车，或者举办一次堂会看看表演。他们就这样过着日子，一切都称心如意，没有任何变化。

四

家里人个个身体健康。只有伊凡·伊里奇有时说，他嘴里有一种怪味，左腹有点不舒服，但不能说有病。

这种不舒服的感觉逐渐增长，虽还没有转变为疼痛，但他经常感到腰部发胀，情绪恶劣。他的心情越来越坏，影响了全家快乐而体面的生活。夫妇吵嘴的事越来越多，轻松愉快的气氛消失了，体面也很难维持。争吵更加频繁，夫妇之间相安无事的日子少得就像汪洋大海里的小岛。

如今普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜说丈夫脾气难弄，那倒不是没有理由的。她说话喜欢夸张，往往夸张地说，他的脾气一直很坏，要不是她心地善良，这二十年可真没法忍受。的确，现在的争吵总是由伊凡·伊里奇引起的。他吃饭总要发脾气，往往从吃汤开始。他一会儿发现碗碟有裂痕，一会儿批评饭菜烧得不好吃，一会儿责备儿子吃饭把臂肘搁在桌上，一会儿批评女儿的发式不正派。而罪魁祸首总是普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜起初向他回敬，也对他说了一些难听的话，但有两三次他一开始吃饭就勃然大怒。她明白了，这是一种由进食而引起的病态，就克制自己，不再还嘴，只是催他快吃。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜认为自己的忍让是一种值得称道的美德。她认定丈夫脾气极坏，给她的生活带来不幸。她开始可怜自

己。她越是可怜自己，就越是憎恨丈夫。她巴不得他早点死，但又觉得不能这样想，因为他一死就没有薪俸了。而这一点却使她更加恨他。她认为自己不幸极了，因为就连他的死都不能拯救她。她变得很容易发脾气，但又强忍着，而她这样勉强忍住脾气，却使他的脾气变得更坏。

有一次夫妻争吵，伊凡·伊里奇特别不讲理。事后他解释说，他确实脾气暴躁，但这是由于病的缘故。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜就对他说，既然有病，就得治疗，要他去请教一位名医。

他乘车去了。一切都不出他所料，一切都照章办理。又是等待，又是医生装出一副煞有介事的样子——这种样子他是很熟悉的，就跟他自己在法庭上一样，——又是叩诊，又是听诊，又是各种不问也知道的多余问题，又是那种威风凛凛的神气，仿佛在说：“你一旦落到我手里，就得听我摆布。我知道该怎么办，对付每个病人都是这样的。”一切都同法庭上一样。医生对待他的神气，就如他在法庭上对待被告那样。

医生说，如此这般的症状表明您有如此这般的病，但要是化验不能证明如此这般的病，那就得假定您有如此这般的病。要是假定有如此这般的病，那么……对伊凡·伊里奇来说，只有一个问题是重要的：他的病有没有危险？但医生对这个不合时宜的问题置之不理。从医生的观点来说，这问题没有意思，不值得讨论；存在的问题只是估计一下可能性：是游走肾，还是慢性盲肠炎。这里不存在伊凡·伊里奇的生死问题，只存在游走肾和盲肠炎之间的争执。在伊凡·伊里奇看来，医生已明确认定是盲肠炎，但又保留说，等小便化验后可以得到新的资料，到那时再做进一步诊断。这一切，就跟伊凡·伊里奇上千次振振有词地对被告宣布罪状一模一样。医生也是那么得意扬扬，甚至从眼镜上方瞧了一眼“被告”，振振有词地做了结论。从医生的结论中伊凡·伊里奇断定，情况严重，对医生或其他人都无所谓，可是对他却非同小可。这结论对伊凡·伊里奇是个沉重的打击，使他十分怜悯自己，同时十分憎恨那遇到如此严重问题却无动于衷的医生。

不过他什么也没有说，就站起来，把钱往桌上一放，叹了一口气。“也许我们病人常向您提些不该问的问题，”他说，“一般说来，这病是不是有危险？”

医生用一只眼睛从眼镜上方狠狠地瞪了他一下，仿佛在说：被告，你说话要是超出规定的范围，我将不得不命令把你带出法庭。

“我已把该说的话都对您说了，”医生说，“别的，等化验结果出来了再说。”医生结束道。

伊凡·伊里奇慢吞吞地走出诊所，垂头丧气地坐上雪橇回家。一路

上他反复分析医生的话，竭力把难懂的医学用语翻译成普通的话，想从中找出问题的答案：“我的病严重？十分严重？或者还不要紧？”他觉得医生所有的话，都表示病情严重。伊凡·伊里奇觉得街上的一切都是阴郁的：马车夫是阴郁的，房子是阴郁的，路上行人是阴郁的，小铺子是阴郁的。他身上的疼痛一秒钟也没有停止，听了医生模棱两可的话后就觉得越发厉害。伊凡·伊里奇如今更加心情沉重地忍受着身上的疼痛。

他回到家里，给妻子讲了看病的经过。妻子听着。他讲到一半，女儿戴着帽子进来，准备同母亲一起出去。女儿勉强坐下来听他讲这无聊的事，但她听得不耐烦了，母亲也没有听完他的话。

“哦，我很高兴，”妻子说，“今后你一定要准时吃药。把药方给我，我叫盖拉西姆到药房去抓药。”说完她就去换衣服。

妻子在屋子里时，他不敢大声喘气，等她走了，他才深深地叹了一口气。

“好吧，”伊凡·伊里奇说，“也许真的还不要紧……”

他听医生的话，服药，养病。验过小便后，医生又改了药方。不过，小便化验结果和临床症状之间有矛盾。不知怎的，医生说的与实际情况不符。也许是医生疏忽了，也许是撒谎，也许有什么事瞒着他。

不过伊凡·伊里奇还是照医生的话养病，最初心里感到安慰。

伊凡·伊里奇看过病后，努力执行医生的指示，讲卫生，服药，注意疼痛和大小便。现在他最关心的是疾病和健康。人家一谈到病人、死亡、复原，特别是谈到跟他相似的病，他表面上装作镇定，其实全神贯注地听着，有时提些问题，把听到的情况同自己的病做着比较。

疼痛没有减轻，但伊凡·伊里奇强迫自己认为好一点了。没有事惹他生气，他还能欺骗自己。要是同妻子发生争吵，公务上不顺利，打牌输钱，他立刻感到病情严重。以前遇到挫折他总是希望时来运转，打牌顺手，获得大满贯，因此还能忍受。可是现在每次遇到挫折，他都会悲观绝望，丧失信心。他对自己说：“唉，我刚刚有点好转，药物刚刚见效，就遇到这倒霉的事……”于是他恨那种倒霉事，恨给他带来不幸并要置他于死命的人。他明白这种愤怒在危害他的生命，但他无法自制。照理他应该明白，他这样怨天尤人只会使病情加重，因此遇到不愉快的事，不应该放在心上，可是他的行为正好相反。他说，他需要安宁，并且特别警惕破坏安宁的事。只要他的安宁稍稍遇到破坏，他就大发雷霆。他读医书，向医生请教，结果有害无益。情况是逐渐恶化的，因此拿今天同昨天比较，差别似乎并不大，他还能聊以自慰，但同医生一商量，就觉得病情在不断恶化，而且发展得很

快。尽管如此，他还是经常请教医生。

这个月里他又找了一位名医。这位名医的话，简直同原来那位一模一样，但问题的提法不同。请教这位名医，只增加伊凡·伊里奇的疑虑和恐惧。另外有位医生，是他朋友的朋友，也很出名。这位医生对他的病做了完全不同的诊断。尽管保证他能康复，但提出的问题和假设却使伊凡·伊里奇更加疑虑。一个提倡顺势疗法的医生又做了另一种诊断，给了不同的药，伊凡·伊里奇偷偷地服了一个礼拜。可是，一个礼拜后并没有见效，伊凡·伊里奇对原来的疗法丧失了信心，对这种新疗法也丧失了信心，于是越发沮丧了。有一次，一位熟识的太太给他介绍圣像疗法。伊凡·伊里奇勉强听着，并相信她的话。但这事使他不寒而栗。“难道我真的那样神经衰弱吗？”他自言自语。“废话！真是荒唐，这样神经过敏要不得，应该选定一个医生，听他的话好好疗养。就这么办，这下子主意定了。我不再胡思乱想，我要严格遵照这种疗法，坚持到夏天。到那时会见效的。别再犹豫不决了！”这话说说容易，实行起来可难了。腰痛在折磨他，越来越厉害，一刻也不停。他觉得嘴里的味道越来越难受，还有一股恶臭从嘴里出来，胃口越来越差，体力越来越弱。他不能欺骗自己：他身上出现了一种空前严重的情况。这一点只有他自己明白，周围的人谁也不知道，或者不想知道。他们总以为天下太平，一切如旧。这一点使伊凡·伊里奇觉得格外难受。家里人，尤其是妻子和女儿，热衷于社交活动。他看到，她们什么也不明白，还埋怨他情绪不好，难以伺候，仿佛还是他不对似的。他看出，尽管她们嘴里没说，他已成了她们的累赘，妻子对他的病已有定见，不管他说什么或做什么，她的态度都不会变。

“不瞒您说，”她对熟人说，“伊凡·伊里奇也像一切老实人那样，不能认真遵照医生的话养病。今天他听医生的话服药，吃东西；明天我一疏忽，他就忘记吃药，还吃鳊鱼（那是医生禁止的），而且坐下来打牌，一打就打到深夜一点钟。”

“哼，几时有过这种事？”伊凡·伊里奇恼怒地说，“总共在彼得·伊凡内奇家打过一次。”

“昨天不是跟谢贝克一起打过吗？”

“反正我痛得睡不着……”

“不管怎么说，你这样就永远好不了，还要折磨我们。”

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜向人家也向伊凡·伊里奇本人说，他生病主要是他自己不好，给她这个做妻子的带来痛苦。伊凡·伊里奇觉得她有这样的看法是很自然的，但心里总感到难受。

在法院里，伊凡·伊里奇发现或者心里感到人家对他抱着奇怪的态度：一会儿，人家把他看作一个不久将把位置空出来的人；一会儿，

朋友们不怀恶意地嘲笑他神经过敏，因为他自认为有一种神秘可怕的东西，在不断吮吸他的精神，硬把他往那儿拉。朋友们觉得这事挺好玩，就拿来取笑他。尤其是施瓦尔茨说话诙谐生动而又装得彬彬有礼，使伊凡·伊里奇想起十年前他自己的模样，因而格外生气。

来了几个朋友，坐下来打牌。他拿出一副新牌，洗了洗，发了牌。他把红方块跟红方块叠在一起，总共七张。他的搭档说：没有王牌，给了他两张红方块。还指望什么呢？快乐，兴奋，得了大满贯。伊凡·伊里奇突然又感到那种抽痛，嘴里又有那股味道。他在这种情况下还能赢得大满贯而高兴，未免太荒唐了。

他瞧着他的搭档米哈伊尔·米哈伊洛维奇，看他怎样用厚实的手掌拍着桌子，客客气气地不去抓一墩牌，却把它推给伊凡·伊里奇，使他一举手就能享受赢牌的乐趣。“他是不是以为我身子虚得手都伸不出去了？”伊凡·伊里奇想，忘记了王牌，却用更大的王牌去压搭档的牌，结果少了三墩牌，失去了大满贯。最可怕的是他看见米哈伊尔·米哈伊洛维奇脸色十分痛苦，却表现得若无其事。他怎么能若无其事，这一点想想也可怕。

大家看出他很痛苦，对他说：“要是您累了，我们就不打了。您休息一会儿吧。”休息？不，他一点也不累，可以把一圈牌打完。大家闷闷不乐，谁也不开口。伊凡·伊里奇觉得是他害得大家这样闷闷不乐，但又无法改变这种气氛。客人们吃过晚饭，各自走散了。伊凡·伊里奇独自留在家，意识到他的生命遭到了毒害，还毒害了别人的生命，这种毒不仅没有减轻，而且越来越深地渗透到他的全身。

他常常带着这样的思想，再加上肉体上的疼痛和恐惧躺到床上，疼得大半夜不能合眼。可是天一亮又得起来，穿好衣服，乘车上法院，说话，批公文，要是不上班待在家里，那么一天二十四小时，每个小时都得活受罪。而且，在这样的生死边缘上，他只能独自默默地忍受，没有一个人了解他，也没有一个人可怜他。

五

就这样过了两个月光景。新年前夕，他的内弟来到他们城里，住在他们家。那天，伊凡·伊里奇上法院尚未回家。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜上街买东西去了。伊凡·伊里奇回到家里，走进书房，看见内弟体格强壮，脸色红润，正在打开手提箱。他听见伊凡·伊里奇脚步声，抬起头，默默地对他瞧了一会儿。他的眼神向伊凡·伊里奇说明了问题。内弟张大嘴，正要喔唷一声叫出来，但立刻忍住了。这个动作证实了一切。

“怎么，我的样子变了吗？”

“是的……有点变。”

接着，不管伊凡·伊里奇怎样想使内弟再谈谈他的模样，内弟却绝口不提。普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜一回来，内弟就到她屋里去了。伊凡·伊里奇锁上房门，去照镜子，先照正面，再照侧面。他拿起同妻子合拍的照片，拿它同镜子里的自己做着比较。变化很大。然后他把双臂露到肘部，打量了一番，才放下袖子，在软榻上坐下来，脸色变得漆黑。

“别这样，别这样。”他对自己说，霍地站起来，走到写字台边，打开卷宗，他开始批阅公文，可是脑子里什么也进不去。他打开门，走到前厅，客厅的门关着。他踮着脚走到门边，侧着耳朵听。

“不，你说得过分了。”普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜说。

“怎么过分？你没发觉，他已经像个死人了。你看看他的眼睛，没有一点光。他这是怎么搞的？”

“谁也不知道。尼古拉耶夫（一位医生）说如此这般，可我不知道。列谢季茨基（名医）说的正好相反……”

伊凡·伊里奇回到自己屋里，躺下来想：“肾，游走肾。”他回忆起医生们对他说过话，肾脏怎样离开原位而游走。他竭力在想象中捕捉这个肾脏，不让它游走，把它固定下来。这事看上去轻而易举。“不，我还是去找找彼得·伊凡内奇（那个有医生朋友的朋友）。”他打了铃，吩咐套车，准备出去。

“你上哪儿去，约翰？”妻子露出异常忧愁和矫揉造作的贤惠神情问。

这种矫揉造作的贤惠使他生气。他阴沉着脸对她瞅了一眼。

“我去找彼得·伊凡内奇。”

他去找这个有医生朋友的朋友。然后跟他一起到医生家去。他遇见医生，跟他谈了好半天。

医生根据解剖学和生理学对他的病做了分析，他全听懂了。

盲肠里有点毛病，有点小毛病。全会好的。只要加强一个器官的功能，减少另一个器官的活动，多吸收一点，就会好的。吃饭时，他晚到了一点。吃过饭，他兴致勃勃地谈了一通，但好一阵不能定下心来做事。最后他回到书房，立刻动手工作。他批阅公文，处理公事，但心里念念不忘有一件要事被耽误了。等公事完毕，他才记起那件事就是盲肠的毛病。但他故作镇定，走到客厅喝茶。那里有几个客人，正在说话，弹琴，唱歌。他得意的未来女婿——法院侦讯官也在座。据普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜说，伊凡·伊里奇那天晚上过得比谁都快

活，其实他一分钟也没有忘记盲肠的毛病被耽误了。十一点钟他向大家告辞，回自己屋里去。自从生病以来，他就独自睡在书房里。他走进屋里，脱去衣服，拿起一本左拉的小说，但没有看，却想着心事。他想象盲肠被治愈了。通过吸收，排泄，功能恢复正常。“对了，就是那么一回事，”他自言自语，“只要补养补养身体就好了。”他想到了药，支起身来，服了药，又仰天躺下，仔细体味药物怎样在治病，怎样在制止疼痛。“只要按时服药，避免不良影响就行；我现在已觉得好一点了，好多了。”他按按腰部，按上去不疼了。“是的，不疼了，真的好多了。”他灭了蜡烛，侧身躺下……盲肠在逐渐恢复，逐渐吸收。突然他又感觉到那种熟悉的隐痛，痛得一刻不停，而且很厉害。嘴里又是那种恶臭。他顿时心头发凉，头脑发晕。“天哪！天哪！”他喃喃地说。“又来了，又来了，再也好不了啦！”突然他觉得完全不是那么一回事。“哼，盲肠！肾脏！”他自言自语，“问题根本不在盲肠，不在肾脏，而在生和……死。是啊，有过生命，可现在它在溜走，在走，而我又留不住它。是啊！何必欺骗自己呢？除了我自己，不是人人都很清楚我快死了吗？问题只在于还有几个礼拜、几天，还是现在就死。原来有过光明，现在却变成一片黑暗。我此刻在这个世界，但不久就要离开！到哪儿去？”他觉得浑身发凉，呼吸停止，只听见心脏在扑扑跳动。

“等我没有了，那还有什么呢？什么也没有了。等我没有了，我将在哪儿？难道真的要死了吗？不，我不愿死。”他霍地跳起来，想点燃蜡烛，用颤动的双手摸索着。蜡烛和烛台被碰翻，落到地上。他又仰天倒在枕头上。“何必呢？反正都一样。”他在黑暗中瞪着一双眼睛，自言自语。“死。是的，死。他们谁也不知道，谁也不想知道，谁也不可可怜我。他们玩得可快乐了（他听见远处传来喧闹和伴奏声）。他们若无其事，可他们有朝一日也要死的。都是傻瓜！我先死，他们后死，他们也免不了一死。可他们还乐呢。畜生！”他愤怒得喘不过气来。他痛苦得受不了。难道谁都得受这样的罪吗！他坐起来。

“总有什么地方不对头，我得定下心，从头至尾好好想一想。”他开始思索。“对了，病是这样开始的。先是腰部撞了一下，但过了一两天我还是好好的。稍微有点疼，后来疼得厉害了，后来请医生，后来泄气了，发愁了，后来又请医生，但越来越接近深渊。体力越来越差，越来越接近……越来越接近……我的身子虚透了，我的眼睛没有光。我要死了，可我还以为是盲肠有病。我想治好盲肠，其实是死神临头了。难道真的要死吗？”他又感到魂飞魄散，呼吸急促。他侧身摸索火柴，用臂肘撑住床几。臂肘撑得发痛，他恼火了，撑得更加使劲，结果把床几推倒了。他绝望得喘不过气来，又仰天倒下，恨不得立刻死去。

这当儿，客人们纷纷走散。普拉斯柯菲·费多罗夫娜送他们走。她听见什么东西倒下，走进来。

“你怎么了？”

“没什么，不留神把它撞倒了。”

她走出去，拿着一支蜡烛进来。他躺着，喘息得又重又急，好像刚跑完了几里路，眼睛停滞地瞧着她。

“你怎么了，约翰？”

“没……什么。撞……倒了。”他回答，心里却想，“有什么可说的。她不会明白的。”

她确实不明白。她扶起床几，给他点上蜡烛，又匆匆走掉了：她还送客。

等她回来，他仍旧仰天躺着，眼睛瞪着天花板。

“你怎么了，更加不舒服吗？”

“是的。”

她摇摇头，坐下来。

“我说，约翰，我们把列谢季茨基请到家里来好吗？”

这就是说，不惜金钱，请那位名医来出诊。他冷笑了一声说：“不用了。”她坐了一会儿，走到他旁边，吻了吻他的前额。

她吻他的时候，他从心底里憎恨她，好容易才忍住不把她推开。

“再见。上帝保佑你好好睡一觉。”

“嗯。”

六

伊凡·伊里奇看到自己快要死了，经常处于绝望中。

他心里明白，他快要死了，但他对这个念头很不习惯，他实在不理解，怎么也不能理解。

他在基捷韦帖尔的逻辑学里读到这样一种三段论法：盖尤斯是人，凡人都要死，因此盖尤斯也要死。他始终认为这个例子只适用于盖尤斯，绝对不适用于他。盖尤斯是人，是个普通人，这个道理完全正确；但他不是盖尤斯，不是个普通人，他永远是个与众不同的特殊人物。他原来是小伊凡，有妈妈，有爸爸，有两个兄弟——米嘉和伏洛嘉，有许多玩具，有马车夫，有保姆，后来又有了妹妹卡嘉，还有儿童时代、少年时代和青年时代的喜怒哀乐。难道盖尤斯也闻到过他

小伊凡所喜爱的那种花皮球的气味吗？难道盖尤斯也那么吻过妈妈的手，听到过妈妈绸衣褶裥的声吗？难道盖尤斯也曾在法学院里因点心不好吃而闹过事吗？难道盖尤斯也那么谈过恋爱吗？难道盖尤斯能像他那样主持审讯吗？

盖尤斯的确是要死的，要他死是正常的，但我是小伊凡，是伊凡·伊里奇，我有我的思想感情，跟他截然不同。我不该死，要不真是太可怕了。

这就是他的心情。

“我要是像盖尤斯那样也要死，那我一定会知道，一定会听到内心的声音，可是我心里没有这样的声音。我和我的朋友们都明白，我跟盖尤斯完全不同。可是如今呢！”他自言自语，“这是不可能的，不可能发生的，可是偏偏发生了。这是怎么搞的？这事该怎么理解？”

他无法理解，就竭力驱除这个想法，把这个想法看成是虚假、错误和病态的，并且用正确健康的想法来挤掉它。但这不只是思想，而是现实，它出现了，摆在他面前。

他故意想想别的事来排挤这个想法，希望从中找到精神上的支持。他试图用原来的一套思路来对抗死的念头。但奇怪得很，以前用这种办法可以抵挡和驱除死的念头，如今却不行。近来，伊凡·伊里奇常常想恢复原来的思绪，以驱除死的念头。有时他对自己说：“我还是去办公吧，我一向靠工作过活。”他摆脱心头的种种疑虑，到法院去。他跟同事们谈话，在法庭上坐下来，照例漫不经心地扫一眼人群，两条干瘦的胳膊搁在麻栎椅扶手上，照例侧身凑近旁边的法官，挪过卷宗，同他耳语几句，然后猛地抬起眼睛，挺直身子，说几句老套，宣布开庭。但审讯到一半，腰部不顾正在开庭，突然又抽痛起来。伊凡·伊里奇定下神，竭力不去想它，可是没有用。它又来了，站在他面前，打量着他。他吓得呆若木鸡，眼睛里的光也熄灭了。他又自言自语：“难道只有它是真的吗？”同事和下属惊奇而痛心地看着，像他这样一位精明能干的法官竟然说话颠三倒四，在审讯中出差错。他竭力振作精神，定下心来，勉强坚持到庭审结束，闷闷不乐地回家去。他明白，法院开庭也不再能回避他想回避的事，他在审讯时也不能摆脱它。最最糟糕的是，它吸引他，并非要他有什么行动，而只是要他瞧着它，面对面地瞧着它，什么事也不做，难堪地忍受着折磨。

为了摆脱这种痛苦，伊凡·伊里奇寻找另一种屏风来自卫，但另一种屏风也只能暂时保护他，不久又破裂了，或者变得透明了，仿佛它能穿透一切，什么东西也挡不住它。

有一次他走进精心布置的客厅——他摔跤的地方，他嘲弄地想，正是为了布置它而献出了生命，因为他知道他的病是由跌伤引起的

——他发现油漆一新的桌上有被什么东西划过的痕迹。他研究原因，发现那是被照相簿上弯卷的青铜饰边划破的。他拿起他深情地贴上照片的照相簿，对女儿和她那些朋友的粗野很恼火——有的地方撕破了，有的照片被颠倒了。他把照片仔细整理好，把照相簿饰边扳平。

然后他想重新布置，把照相簿改放到盆花旁的角落里。他吩咐仆人请女儿或者妻子来帮忙，可是她们不同意他的想法，反对搬动。他同她们争吵、生气。但这样倒好，因为他可以不再想到它，不再看见它。

不过，当他亲自动手挪动东西的时候，妻子对他说：“啊，让仆人搬吧，你又要糟蹋自己了。”这当儿，它突然又从屏风后面出现，他又看见了它。它的影子一闪，他还希望它能再消失，可是他又注意到自己的腰。腰还是在抽痛。他再也无法把它忘记，它明明在盆花后面瞧着他。“这是干什么呀？”

“真的，我为了这窗帘就像冲锋陷阵一样送了命。难道真是这样吗？多么可怕而又多么愚蠢哪！这不可能！不可能！但这是事实。”

他回到书房里躺下，又同它单独相处。他同它又面面相觑，但对它束手无策。他只能瞧着它，浑身发抖。

七

伊凡·伊里奇生病的第三个月的情况怎样，很难说，因为病情是逐步发展的，不易察觉。但妻子也好，女儿也好，儿子也好，用人也好，朋友也好，医生也好，主要是他自己，都知道，大家唯一关心的事是，他的位置是不是快空出来，活着的人能不能解除由于他存在而招惹的麻烦，他自己是不是快摆脱痛苦。

他的睡眠越来越少；医生给他服鸦片，注射吗啡，但都不能减轻他的痛苦。他在昏昏沉沉中所感到的麻木，起初使他稍微好过些，但不久又感到同样痛苦，甚至比清醒时更不好受。

家里人遵照医生的指示给他做了特殊的饭菜，但他觉得这种饭菜越来越没有滋味，越来越倒胃口。

他大便这件事也被做了特殊的安排。每次大便他都觉得很痛苦，因为不清洁，不体面，有臭味，还得麻烦别人帮忙。

不过，在这件不愉快的事上，伊凡·伊里奇倒也得到一种安慰。每次大便总是由男仆盖拉西姆伺候。

盖拉西姆是个年轻的庄稼汉，衣着整洁，容光焕发，因为长期吃城里伙食长得格外强壮。他性格开朗，总是乐呵呵的。这个整洁的小伙子身穿俄罗斯民族服，做着这种不体面的事，总使伊凡·伊里奇感到

困窘。

有一次，他从便盆上起来，无力拉上裤子，就倒在沙发上。他看见自己皮包骨头的大腿，不禁心惊胆战。

盖拉西姆脚蹬散发着柏油味的大皮靴，身上系着干净的麻布围裙，穿着干净的印花布衬衫，卷起袖子，露出年轻强壮的胳膊，带着清新的冬天空气走进来。他目光避开伊凡·伊里奇，竭力抑制着从焕发的容光中表现出来的生的欢乐，免得病人见了不高兴，走到便盆旁。

“盖拉西姆。”伊凡·伊里奇有气无力地叫道。

盖拉西姆打了个哆嗦，显然害怕自己什么地方做得不对，慌忙把他那张刚开始长胡子的纯朴善良而又青春洋溢的脸转过来对着病人。

“老爷，您有什么吩咐？”

“我想，你做这事一定很不好受。你要原谅我，我是没有办法。”

“哦，老爷，好说。”盖拉西姆闪亮着眼睛，露出一排洁白健康的牙齿。“那算得了什么？您有病嘛，老爷。”

他用他那双强壮的手熟练地做着做惯的事，轻悄地走了出去。过了五分钟，又那么轻悄地走回来。

伊凡·伊里奇一直那么坐在沙发上。

“盖拉西姆，”当盖拉西姆把洗干净的便盆放回原处时，伊凡·伊里奇说，“请你帮帮我，你过来。”盖拉西姆走过去。“你搀我一把。我自己爬不起来，德米特里被我派出去了。”

盖拉西姆走过去。他用他那双强壮的手，也像走路一样轻松、利索而温柔地把主人抱起来，一只手扶住他，另一只手给他拉上裤子，想让他坐下。但伊凡·伊里奇要求把他扶到长沙发上。盖拉西姆一点也不费劲，稳稳当当地把他抱到长沙发上坐下。

“谢谢。你真行，干得真轻巧。”

盖拉西姆又微微一笑，想走。可是伊凡·伊里奇同他一起觉得很愉快，不肯放他走。

“还有，请你把那把椅子给我推过来。不，是那一把，让我搁腿。腿搁得高，好过些。”

盖拉西姆端过椅子，轻轻地把它放在长沙发前，然后抬起伊凡·伊里奇的双腿放在上面。当盖拉西姆把他的腿高高抬起时，他觉得舒服些。

“腿抬得高，我觉得舒服些，”伊凡·伊里奇说，“你把这个枕头给

我垫在下面。”

盖拉西姆照他的吩咐做了。他又把他的腿抬起来放好。盖拉西姆抬起他的双腿，他觉得确实好过些。双腿一放下，他又觉得不舒服。

“盖拉西姆，”伊凡·伊里奇对他说，“你现在有事吗？”

“没有，老爷。”盖拉西姆说，他已学会像城里仆人那样同老爷说话。

“你还有什么活要干？”

“我还有什么活要干？什么都干好了，只要再劈点木柴留着明天用。”

“那你把我的腿这么高高抬着，行吗？”

“有什么不行的？行！”盖拉西姆把主人的腿抬起来，伊凡·伊里奇觉得这样一点也不疼了。

“那么劈柴怎么办？”

“不用老爷您操心。这我来得及的。”

伊凡·伊里奇叫盖拉西姆坐下抬着他的腿，并同他谈话。真奇怪，盖拉西姆抬着他的腿，他觉得好过多了。

从此以后伊凡·伊里奇就常常把盖拉西姆唤来，要他用肩膀扛着他的腿，并喜欢同他谈天。盖拉西姆做这事轻松愉快，态度诚恳，使伊凡·伊里奇很感动。别人身上的健康、力量和生气往往使伊凡·伊里奇感到屈辱；只有盖拉西姆的力量和生气不仅没有使他觉得伤心，反而使他感到安慰。

伊凡·伊里奇觉得最痛苦的事就是听谎言，听大家出于某种原因都相信的那个谎言，他只是病了，并不会死，只要安心治疗，一定会好的。可是他知道，不论采取什么办法，他都不会好了，痛苦只会越来越厉害，直到死去。这个谎言折磨着他。他感到痛苦的是，大家都知道，他自己也知道他的病很严重，但大家都讳言真相而撒谎，还要迫使他一起撒谎。谎言，在他临死前夕散布的谎言，把他不久于人世这样严肃可怕的大事，缩小到访问、挂窗帘和晚餐吃鲑鱼等小事，这使他感到极其痛苦。说也奇怪，好多次当他们就他的情况编造谎言时，他差一点大声叫出来：“别再撒谎了，我快要死了。这事你们知道，我也知道，所以大家别再撒谎了。”但他从来没有勇气这样做。他看到，他不久于人世这样严肃可怕的事，被周围的人看成只是一件不愉快或者不体面的事（就像一个人走进会客室从身上散发出臭气一样），还要勉强维持他一辈子苦苦撑住的“体面”。他看到，谁也不可怜他，谁也不想了解他的真实情况。只有盖拉西姆一人了解他，并且

可怜他。因此只有同盖拉西姆在一起他才觉得好过些。盖拉西姆有时通宵扛着他的腿，不去睡觉，还说：“您可不用操心，老爷，我回头会睡个够的。”这时他感到安慰。或者当盖拉西姆脱口而出亲热地说：“要是您没病就好了，我这样伺候伺候您算得了什么？”他也感到安慰。只有盖拉西姆一人不撒谎，显然也只有他一人明白真实情况，并且认为无须隐讳，但他怜悯日益消瘦的老爷。有一次伊凡·伊里奇打发他走，他直截了当地说：“我们大家都要死的。我为什么不能伺候您呢？”他说这话的意思就是，现在他不辞辛劳，因为伺候的是个垂死的人，希望将来有朝一日轮到他的时候也有人伺候他。

八

有一天早晨，伊凡·伊里奇知道这是早晨，因为每天早晨都是盖拉西姆从书房里出去，男仆彼得进来吹灭蜡烛，拉开一扇窗帘，悄悄地收拾房间。早晨也好，晚上也好，礼拜五也好，礼拜天也好，反正都一样，反正没有区别：永远是一刻不停的令人难堪的疼痛；他意识到生命正在无可奈何地消逝，但还没有完全消逝；那愈益逼近的可怕而又可恨的死，只有它才是真实的，其他一切都是谎言。在这种情况下，几天、几个礼拜和几小时有什么区别？

“老爷，您要不要用茶？”

“他还是老一套，知道老爷太太每天早晨都要喝茶。”他想，接着回答说，“不用了。”

“您要不要坐到沙发上去？”

“他得把屋子收拾干净，可我在这里碍事。我太邋遢，太不整齐了，”他想了想回答说，“不，不用管我。”

男仆继续收拾屋子。伊凡·伊里奇伸出一只手。彼得殷勤地走过

去。

“老爷，您要什么？”

“我的表。”

彼得拿起手边的表，递给他。

“八点半了。她们还没有起来吗？”

“还没有，老爷。瓦西里·伊凡内奇（这是儿子）上学去了，普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜关照过，要是您问起，就去叫醒她。要去叫她吗？”

“不，不用了。”他回答，接着想，“要不要喝点茶呢？”于是就对彼得说：“对了，你拿点茶来吧。”

彼得走到门口。伊凡·伊里奇独自留着觉得害怕。“怎么把他留住呢？有了，吃药。”他想了想，说：“彼得，给我拿药来。”接着又想：“是啊，说不定吃药还有用呢。”他拿起匙子，把药吃下去。“不，没有用。一切都是胡闹，都是欺骗，”他一尝到那种熟悉的甜腻腻的怪味，就想，“不，我再也不能相信了。可是那个疼，那个疼，要是能停止一会儿就好了。”他呻吟起来。彼得向他回过头来。“不，你去吧，拿茶来。”

彼得走了，剩下伊凡·伊里奇一个人。他又呻吟起来。他疼得很厉害，可呻吟主要不是由于疼痛，而是由于悲伤。“老是那个样子，老是那样的白天和黑夜。但愿快一点。什么快一点？死，黑暗。不，不！好死不如赖活！”

彼得托着茶盘进来，伊凡·伊里奇茫然看了他好一阵，认不出他是谁，不知道他是来干什么的。他这种目光弄得彼得很狼狈。彼得现出尴尬的神色，伊凡·伊里奇才醒悟过来。

“噢，茶……”他说，“好的，放着。你帮我洗洗脸，拿一件干净衬衫来。”

伊凡·伊里奇开始梳洗。他断断续续地洗手，洗脸，刷牙，梳头，然后照照镜子。他感到害怕，特别是看到他的头发怎样贴着苍白的前额。

彼得给他换衬衫。他知道他要是看到自己的身体，一定会更加吃惊，因此不往身上看。梳洗完毕了，他穿上晨衣，身上盖了一条方格毛毯，坐到扶手椅上喝茶。有那么一会儿他觉得神清气爽，但一喝茶，立刻又感到那种味道、那种疼痛。他勉强喝完茶，伸直腿躺下来。他躺下，让彼得走。

还是那个样子。一会儿出现了一线希望，一会儿又掉进绝望的海

洋。老是疼，老是疼，老是悲怆凄凉，一切都是老样子。独个儿待着格外悲伤，想叫个人来，但他知道同人家待在一起更难受。“最好再来点儿吗啡，把什么都忘记。我要请求医生，叫他想点别的办法。这样可真受不了，真受不了！”

一小时、两小时就这样过去了。忽然前厅里响起了铃声。会不会是医生？果然是医生。他走进来，精神饱满，容光焕发，喜气洋洋。那副神气仿佛表示：你们何必这样大惊小怪，我这就来给你们解决问题。医生知道，这样的表情是不得体的，但他已经习惯了，改不掉，好像一个人一早穿上大礼服，就这样穿着一家家去拜客，没有办法改变了。

医生生气勃勃而又使人宽慰地搓搓手。

“啊，真冷，可把我冻坏了。让我暖和暖和身子。”他说这话时的神气仿佛表示，只要稍微等一下，等他身子一暖和，就什么问题都解决了。

“嗯，怎么样？”

伊凡·伊里奇觉得，医生想说：“情况怎么样？”但他觉得不该那么问，就说：“晚上睡得怎么样？”

伊凡·伊里奇望着医生的那副神气表示：“您老是撒谎，怎么不害臊？”但医生不理睬他的表情。

伊凡·伊里奇就说：“还是那么糟。疼痛没有消除，也没有减轻。您能不能想点办法……”

“啊，你们病人总是这样。嗯，这会儿我可暖和了，就连普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜那么仔细，也不会对我的体温有意见了。嗯，您好。”医生说握着握病人的手。

接着医生收起戏谑的口吻，现出严肃的神色给病人看病：把脉，量体温，叩诊，听诊。

伊凡·伊里奇清清楚楚地知道，这一切都毫无意思，全是骗人的，但医生跪在他面前，身子凑近他，用一只耳朵忽上忽下地细听，脸上显出极其认真的神气，像体操运动员一般做着各种姿势。伊凡·伊里奇面对这种场面，屈服了，就像他在法庭上听辩护律师发言一样，尽管他明明知道他们都在撒谎以及为什么撒谎。

医生跪在沙发上，还在他身上敲着。这当儿门口传来普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜绸衣裳的窸窣声，还听见她在责备彼得没有及时向她报告医生的来到。

她走进来，吻吻大夫，立刻振振有词地说，她早就起来了，只是

不知道医生来了才没有及时出来迎接。

伊凡·伊里奇对她望望，打量着她的全身，对她那白净浮肿的双手和脖子、光泽的头发和充满活力的明亮眼睛感到嫌恶。他从心底里憎恨她。她的亲吻更激起他对她的难以克制的憎恨。

她对待他和他的病还是老样子。正像医生对病人的态度都已定型不变那样，她对丈夫的态度也已定型不变：她总是亲昵地责备他没有按照规定服药休息，总是怪他自己不好。

“喂，这人就是不听话！不肯按时吃药。尤其是他睡的姿势不对，两腿搁得太高，这样睡对他不好。”

她告诉医生他怎样叫盖拉西姆扛着腿睡。

医生鄙夷不屑而又和蔼可亲地微微一笑，仿佛说：“有什么办法呢？病人总会做出这样的蠢事来，但情有可原。”

检查完毕，医生看了看表。这时普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜向伊凡·伊里奇宣布，不管他是不是愿意，她今天就去请那位名医来，让他同米哈伊尔·达尼洛维奇（平时看病的医生）会诊一下，商量商量。

“请你不要反对。我是为我自己才这样做的。”她嘲讽地说，让他感到这一切都是为她而做的，因此他不该拒绝。他不作声，皱起眉头。他觉得周围是一片谎言，很难判断是非曲直。

她为他做的一切都是为了她自己。她对他说这样做是为了她自己，那倒是真的，不过她的行为叫人很难相信，因此必须从反面来理解。

十一点半，那位名医果然来了。又是听诊，又是当着他的面一本正经地交谈，而到了隔壁房间又是谈肾脏，谈盲肠，又是一本正经地问答，又是避开他现在面临的生死问题，大谈什么肾脏和盲肠有毛病，米哈伊尔·达尼洛维奇和名医又都主张对肾脏和盲肠进行治疗。

名医临别时神态十分严肃，但并没有绝望。伊凡·伊里奇眼睛里露出恐惧和希望的光芒仰望着名医，怯生生地问他，是不是还能恢复健康。名医回答说，不能保证，但可能性还是有的。伊凡·伊里奇用满怀希望的目光送别医生，他的样子显得那么可怜，以至普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜走出书房付给医生出诊费时都忍不住哭了。

被医生鼓舞起来的希望并没有持续多久。还是那个房间，还是那些图画，还是那些窗帘，还是那种墙纸，还是那些药瓶，还是他那个疼痛的身子。伊凡·伊里奇呻吟起来，给自己注射了吗啡，便迷迷糊糊睡着了。

他醒来时，天色开始发黑。仆人给他送来晚餐，他勉强吃了一点

肉汤。于是一切如旧，黑夜又来临了。

饭后七点钟，普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜走进他的房间。她穿着晚礼服，丰满的胸部被衣服绷得隆起，脸上有扑过粉的痕迹。早晨她就提起，今晚她们要去看戏。萨拉·贝娜到这个城里做访问演出，她们订了一个包厢。那也是他的主意。这会儿，他把这事忘记了，她那副打扮使他生气。不过，当他记起是他要她们订包厢去看戏的，认为孩子们看这戏可以获得美的享受，他就把自己的愤怒掩饰起来。

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜进来的时候得意扬扬，但仿佛又有点负疚。她坐下来，问他身体怎么样，不过他看出，她只是为了应酬几句才问的，并非真的想了解什么，而且知道也问不出什么来。接着她就讲她要讲的话：她本来说什么也不愿去，可是包厢已经订了，爱伦和女儿，还有彼特利歇夫（法院侦讯官，未来的女婿）都要去，总不能让他们自己去，她其实是宁可待在家里陪他的。现在她只希望她不在家时，他能照医生的嘱咐休息。

“对了，费多尔·彼得罗维奇（未来的女婿）想进来看看你，行吗？还有丽莎。”

“让他们来好了。”

女儿走进来。她打扮得漂漂亮亮，露出部分年轻的身体。对比之下，他觉得更加难受。她却公然显示她健美的身体。显然她正在谈恋爱，对妨碍她幸福的疾病、痛苦和死亡感到嫌恶。

费多尔·彼得罗维奇也进来了。他身穿燕尾服，头发烫出波纹，雪白的硬领夹着青筋毕露的细长脖子，胸前露出一大块白硬衬，瘦长的黑裤裹着两条强壮的大腿，手上套着雪白的手套，拿着大礼帽。

一个中学生在后面悄悄走进来。这个可怜的孩子穿一身崭新的学生装，戴着手套，眼圈发黑——伊凡·伊里奇知道为什么会这样。

他总是很怜悯儿子。儿子那种满怀同情的怯生生目光使他心惊胆战。伊凡·伊里奇觉得除了盖拉西姆以外，只有儿子一人了解他、同情他。

大家都坐下来，又问了一下病情。接下来是一片沉默。丽莎问母亲要望远镜。母女俩争吵起来，不知是谁拿了，放在什么地方。这事弄得大家都很不高兴。

费多尔·彼得罗维奇问伊凡·伊里奇有没有看过萨拉·贝娜。伊凡·伊里奇起初没听懂他问什么，后来才说：

“没有，您看过吗？”

“看过了，她演过《阿德里安娜·莱科芙露尔》。”

普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜说，她演那种角色特别好。女儿不同意她的看法。大家谈到她的演技又典雅又真挚——那题目已谈过不知多少次了。

谈话中间，费多尔·彼得罗维奇对伊凡·伊里奇瞧了一眼，不作声了。其他人跟着瞧了一眼，也不作声了。伊凡·伊里奇睁大眼睛向前望望，显然对他们很生气。这种尴尬的局面必须改变，可是怎么也无法改变。必须设法打破这种沉默，谁也不敢这样做，大家都害怕，唯恐这种礼貌周到的虚伪做法一旦被揭穿，真相就会大白。丽莎第一个鼓起勇气，打破了沉默。她想掩饰大家心里都有的感觉，却脱口而出：

“嗯，要是去的话，那么是时候了。”她瞧了瞧父亲送给她的表，说。接着对未婚夫会意地微微一笑，衣服窸窣响着站起来。

大家都站起来，告辞走了。

等他们一走，伊凡·伊里奇觉得好过些，因为虚伪的局面结束了，随着他们一起消失了，但疼痛依旧。依旧是那种疼痛，依旧是那种恐惧，一点也没有缓和，而是每况愈下。

时间还是一分钟又一分钟、一小时又一小时地过去，一切如旧，没完没了，而无法避免的结局却越来越使人不寒而栗。

“好了，你去叫盖拉西姆来。”他对向他提出了问题的彼得给出了这样的回答。

九

妻子深夜才回家。她蹑着脚悄悄进来，但他还是听见她的脚步声。他睁开眼睛，连忙又闭上。她想打发盖拉西姆走开，自己陪他坐一会儿。他却睁开眼睛，说：

“不，你去吧。”

“你很难受吗？”

“老样子。”

“服点鸦片吧。”

他同意了，服了点鸦片。她走了。

直到凌晨三时，他一直处在痛苦的迷糊状态中。他仿佛觉得人家硬把他这个病痛的身子往一个又窄又黑又深的口袋里塞，一个劲地往下塞，却怎么也塞不到袋底。这件可怕的事把他折磨得好苦。他又害怕，又想往下沉，不断挣扎，越挣扎越往下沉。他突然跌了下去，随即惊醒过来。依旧是那个盖拉西姆坐在床脚，平静而耐心地打着瞌睡。他却躺在那里，把那双穿着袜子的瘦腿搁在盖拉西姆肩上；依旧

是那支有罩的蜡烛，依旧是那种一刻不停的疼痛。

“你去吧，盖拉西姆。”他喃喃地说。

“不要紧，老爷，我坐坐。”

“不，你去吧。”

他放下腿，侧过身子来睡。他开始可怜自己。他等盖拉西姆走到隔壁屋里，再也忍不住，就像孩子般痛哭起来。他哭自己的无依无靠，哭自己的孤独寂寞，哭人们的残酷，哭上帝的残酷和冷漠。

“你为什么要这样做？为什么把我带到这儿来？为什么？为什么这么狠心地折磨我？……”

他知道不会有谁回答，但又因得不到也不可能得到回答而痛哭。疼痛又发作了，但他一动不动，也不呼号。他自言自语：“痛吧，再痛吧！可是为了什么呀？我对你做了什么啦？这是为了什么呀？”后来他安静了，不仅停止哭泣，而且屏住呼吸，提起精神来。他仿佛不是在倾听说话声，而是在倾听灵魂的呼声，倾听自己思潮的翻腾。

“你要什么呀？”这是他听出来的第一句明确的话。“你要什么呀？你要什么呀？”他一再问自己，“要什么？”——“摆脱痛苦，活下去。”他自己回答。

他又全神贯注地倾听，连疼痛都忘记了。

“活下去，怎么活？”心灵里有个声音问他。

“是的，活下去，像我以前那样活得舒畅而快乐。”

“像你以前那样，活得舒畅而快乐吗？”心灵里的声音问。于是他开始回忆自己一生中美好的日子。奇怪的是，所有那些美好的日子现在看来一点也不美好，只有童年的回忆是例外。童年时代确实有过欢乐的日子，要是时光能倒转，那是值得重温的。但享受过当年欢乐的人已经不存在了，存在的似乎只有对别人的回忆。

自从伊凡·伊里奇变成现在这个样子以来，过去的欢乐都在他眼里消失了，或者说，变得不足道了，变得令人讨厌了。

离童年越远，离现在越近，那些欢乐就越显得不足道、越可疑。这是从法学院开始的。在那里还有点真正美好的事：还有欢乐，还有友谊，还有希望。但读到高年级，美好的时光就越来越少。后来开始在官府供职，又出现了美好的时光：那是对一个女人的倾慕。后来生活又浑浑噩噩，美好的时光更少了，越来越少，越来越少。

结婚……是那么意外，那么叫人失望。妻子嘴里的臭味，放纵情欲，装腔作势！死气沉沉地办公，不择手段地捞钱，就这样过了一

年，两年，十年，二十年——始终是那么一套。而且越是往后，就越是死气沉沉。我在走下坡路，却还以为在上山。就是这么一回事。大家都说我官运亨通，步步高升，其实生命在我脚下溜掉……如今瞧吧，末日到了！

这究竟是怎么一回事？为什么会这样？生活不该那么无聊，那么讨厌。不该！即使生活确是那么讨厌，那么无聊，那又为什么要死，而且死得那么痛苦？总有点不对头。

“是不是我的生活有些什么地方不对头？”他忽然想到。“但我不论做什么都是循规蹈矩的，怎么会不对头？”他自言自语，顿时找到了唯一的答案：生死之谜是无法解答的。

如今你到底要什么呢？要活命？怎么活？像法庭上听到民事执行吏高呼“开庭了！”时那样活。“开庭了，开庭了！”他一再对自己说。“喏，现在要开庭了！可我又没有罪！”他恨恨地叫道。“为了什么呀？”他停止哭泣，转过脸来对着墙壁，一直思考着那个问题：为什么要忍受这样的恐怖？为什么？

然而，不管他怎样苦苦思索，都找不到答案。他头脑里又出现了那个常常出现的想法：这一切都是由于他生活过得不对头。他重新回顾自己规规矩矩的一生，立刻又把这个古怪的想法驱除掉。

十

又过了两个礼拜。伊凡·伊里奇躺在沙发上已经起不来了。他不愿躺在床上，就躺在长沙发上。他几乎一直面对墙壁躺着，孤独地忍受着那难以摆脱的痛苦，孤独地思索着那难以解答的问题：“这是怎么回事？难道真的要死吗？”心里有个声音回答说：“是的，是要死的。”——“为什么要受这样的罪？”那声音回答说：“不为什么，就是这样。”除此以外就什么也没有了。

自从伊凡·伊里奇开始生病，自从他第一次看医生以来，他的心情就分裂成两种对立的状态，两种状态交替出现着：一会儿是绝望地等待着神秘而恐怖的死亡，一会儿是充满希望和紧张地观察自己身上的器官。一会儿眼前出现了功能暂时停止的肾脏或者盲肠，一会儿又出现了无可避免的神秘而恐怖的死亡。

这两种心情从一开始生病就交替出现；但随着病情的发展，他就觉得肾脏的功能越来越可疑，越来越虚幻，而日益逼近的死亡却越来越现实。

他只要想想三个月前的身体，再看看现在的情况，看看他怎样一步步不停地走着下坡路，任何侥幸的心情就自然而然土崩瓦解了。

近来，他面向沙发背躺着，感到异常孤寂，那是一种身处在闹市和许多亲友中间却没有理睬他而感到的孤寂，即使跑遍天涯海角都找不到的孤寂。身处在这种可怕的孤寂中，他只能靠回忆往事度日。一幕幕往事像图画般浮现在他眼前。他总是从近期的事开始，一直回忆到遥远的过去，回忆到童年时代，然后停留在那些往事上。譬如他从今天给他端来的李子酱，就会想到童年吃过的干瘪法国李子，觉得别有风味，吃到果核，满口生津。同时他又会想到当年的种种情景：保姆、兄弟、玩具。“那些事别去想了……太痛苦了。”伊凡·伊里奇对自己说，思想又回到现实上来。他瞧着羊皮沙发上的皱纹和沙发背上的纽扣。“山羊皮很贵，又不牢；有一次就为这事争吵过。还记得当年我们撕坏父亲的皮包，因此受罚，但那是另一种山羊皮，是另一次争吵……妈妈还送包子来给我们吃。”他的思想又停留在童年时代，他又感到很难过。他竭力驱散这种回忆，想些别的事。

在对一系列往事的回忆中，他又想到了那件事：他怎样生病和病情怎样恶化。他想到年纪越小，越是充满生气。生命里善的因素越多，生命力也就越充沛。两者互为因果。“病痛越来越厉害，整个生命也就越来越糟，”他想，“生命开始还有一点光明，后来却越来越暗淡，消逝得越来越快，离死越来越近。”他忽然想到，一块石子落下总是不断增加速度，生命也是这样，带着不断增加的痛苦，越来越快地掉落下去，掉进痛苦的深渊。“我在飞逝……”他浑身打了个哆嗦，试图抗拒，但知道这是无法抗拒的。他的眼睛虽已疲劳，却依旧瞪着前面，瞪着沙发背。他等待着，等待着那可怕的坠落、震动和灭亡。“无法抗拒。”他自言自语，“真想知道，为什么会这样？可是无法知道。要是说我生活得不对头，那还有理由解释，可是不能这么说。”他对自己说，想到自己一辈子奉公守法，过着正派而体面的生活。“不能这么说，”他露出冷笑，仿佛人家会看到他这个样子，并且会因此受骗似的，“可是找不到解释！折磨，死亡……为了什么呀？”

十一

这样过了两个礼拜。在这期间发生了伊凡·伊里奇夫妇所希望的那件事：彼特里歇夫正式来求婚。这事发生在一天晚上。第二天，普拉斯柯雅·费多罗夫娜走进丈夫房间，考虑着怎样向他宣布彼特里歇夫求婚的事，但就在那天夜里，伊凡·伊里奇的病情又有新的发展。普拉斯柯雅·费多罗夫娜发现他又躺在长沙发上，但姿势跟以前不同。他仰天躺着，呻吟着，眼睛呆滞地瞪着前方。

她谈起吃药的事。他把目光转到她身上。她没有把话说完，因为她发现他的目光里充满对她的愤恨。

“看在基督的分儿上，让我安安静静地死吧！”他说。

她正想出去，但这当儿女儿进来向他请安。他也像对妻子那样对女儿望望，而对女儿问候病情的话只冷冷地说，他不久就会让她们解脱的。母女俩默不作声，坐了一会儿走了。

“我们究竟有什么过错呀？”丽莎对母亲说，“仿佛都是我们弄得他这样似的！我可怜爸爸，可他为什么要折磨我们？”

医生按时来给他看病。伊凡·伊里奇对他的问题只回答“是”或者“不是”，并愤怒地盯住医生，最后说：

“您明明知道毫无办法，那就让我去吧！”

“我们可以减轻您的痛苦。”医生说。

“这点您也办不到，让我去吧！”

医生走到客厅，告诉普拉斯柯菲雅·费多罗夫娜情况很严重，只有一样东西可以减轻他的痛苦，就是鸦片。

医生说，他肉体上的痛苦很厉害，这是事实，但精神上的痛苦比肉体上的痛苦更厉害，而这也是让他最难受的事。

他精神上的痛苦就是，那天夜里他瞧着盖拉西姆睡眠惺忪、颧骨突出的善良的脸，忽然想：我这辈子说不定真的过得不对头。

他忽然想，以前说他这辈子生活过得不对头，他是绝对不同意的，但现在看来可能是真的。他忽然想，以前他有过轻微的冲动，反对豪门权贵肯定的好事，这种冲动虽然很快就被他自己克制住，但说不定倒是正确的，而其他一切可能都不对头。他的职务，他所安排的生活，他的家庭，他所献身的公益事业和本职工作，这一切可能都不对头。他试图为这一切辩护，但忽然发现一切都有问题，没有什么可辩护的。

“既然如此，那么现在在我将离开世界的时候，发觉我把天赋予我的一切都糟蹋了，但又无法挽救，那可怎么办？”他自言自语。他仰天躺着，重新回顾自己的一生。早晨他看到仆人，后来看到妻子，后来看到女儿，后来看到医生，他们的一举一动、一言一语，都证实他夜间所发现的可怕真理。他从他们身上看到了自己，看到了他赖以生活的一切，并且明白这一切都不对头，这一切都是掩盖着生死问题的可怕的大骗局。这种思想增加了他肉体上的痛苦，比以前增加了十倍。他不断呻吟，辗转反侧，扯着身上的衣服。他觉得衣服束缚他，使他喘不过气来。他为此憎恨它们。

医生给了他大剂量鸦片，他昏睡过去，但到吃晚饭时又开始折腾。他把所有的人都赶走，不断地翻来覆去。

妻子走过来对他说：“约翰，心肝，你就为了我（为了我？）这

么办吧。这没有什么害处，常常还有点用。真的，这没什么。健康的人也常常……”

他睁大眼睛，问：“什么事？进圣餐吗？干什么呀？不用了！不过……”

她哭了。

“好吗，我的亲人？我去叫我们的神父来，他这人挺好。”

“好，太好了。”他说。

神父来了，听了他的忏悔，他觉得好过些，疑虑似乎减少些，痛苦也减轻了，刹那间心里看到了希望。他又想到了盲肠，觉得还可以治愈。他含着眼泪进了圣餐。

他进了圣餐，又被放到床上，刹那间觉得好过些，并且又出现了生的希望。他想到他们曾建议他动手术。“活下去，我要活下去！”他自言自语。妻子走来祝贺；她敷衍了几句，又问：“你是不是感到好些？”他眼睛不看她，嘴里说：“是。”她的服装，她的体态，她的神情，她的腔调，全都向他说明一个意思：“不对头。你过去和现在赖以生活的一切都是谎言，都是对你掩盖生死大事的骗局。”他一想到这点，心头就冒起一阵愤恨，随着愤恨又感觉到肉体上的痛苦，同时意识到不可避免的临近的死亡。接着又增加了一种新的感觉：拧痛、刺痛和窒息。

当他说“是”的时候，他的脸色是可怕的。他说了一声“是”，眼睛直盯住她的脸，接着使出全身的力气迅速地把脸转过去，伏在床上嚷道：“都给我走，都给我走，让我一个人待着！”

十二

自从那时起，他连续三天一刻不停地惨叫，叫得那么可怕，就是隔着两道门听了也觉得毛骨悚然。当他回答妻子的时候，他明白他完了，无法挽救了，末日到了，生命的末日到了，可是生死之谜始终没有解决，永远是个谜。

“哎哟！哎哟！哎哟！”他用不同的音调惨叫着。他开始嚷道：“我不要！”接下去又是哎哟哎哟地惨叫。

整整三天，他一刻不停地在那个黑口袋里拼命挣扎，而一个肉眼看不见的力量却无可抗拒地把他往口袋里塞。他好像一个死刑犯，落到刽子手手里，知道没有生路了。他每分钟都感觉到，不管他怎样挣扎，他是越来越接近那恐怖的末日了。他觉得他的痛苦在于他正被人塞到那个黑窟窿里去，而更痛苦的是他不能爽爽快快地落进去。他之所以不能爽爽快快地落进去，是因为他认为他的生命是有价值的。这种对

自己生命的肯定，阻碍了他，不让他走，使他特别痛苦。

突然，他的胸部和腰部受到猛烈的打击，呼吸更加困难，他掉到窟窿里。在窟窿底里有一道亮光。他觉得自己仿佛身处在火车车厢里，你以为火车在前进，其实却在后退。这时他突然辨出了方向。“是的，一切都不对头，”他自言自语，“但没有关系，可以纠正的。可怎样才算‘对头’呢？”他问自己，接着突然沉默了。

第三天傍晚，他临终前两小时，念中学的儿子悄悄地进来，走到父亲床跟前。垂死的人一直在惨叫，挥动双臂。他的一只手落在儿子头上。儿子捉住他的手，把它贴在嘴唇上，哭了起来。

就在这时候，伊凡·伊里奇掉了下去，看见了光。他领悟到他的生活过得不对头，但还可以纠正。他问自己：怎样才“对头”，接着一动不动地留神听着。他感到有人在吻他的手。他睁开眼睛，对儿子瞧了一眼。他可怜起儿子来。妻子走到他跟前。他对她瞧了一眼。她张开嘴，鼻子上和面颊上挂着眼泪，露出绝望的神情瞧着他。他为她难过。“是的，我把他们害苦了，”他想，“他们真可怜，但等我一死，他们就会好过些。”他想把这话说出来，可是没有力气说。“不过，何必说呢，应该行动。”他想。他对着妻子用目光示意说：“带他走……可怜……你也……”他还想说“原谅我”，但却说了“原来我”。他已经没有力气纠正，只摆了摆手，知道谁需要听懂自然会懂的。

他恍然大悟，原来折磨他的东西消失了，从四面八方消失了，从一切方面消失了。他可怜他们，应该使他们不再受罪。应该使他们，也使自己摆脱种种痛苦。“多么简单，多么快乐。”他想。“疼痛呢？”他问自己，“它哪儿去了？噢，疼痛，你在哪儿啊？”

他留神倾听。“噢，它在这里。好吧，疼就疼吧。”

“那么死呢？它在哪里？”

他寻找着往常折磨他的死的恐惧，可是没有找到。它在哪里？是什么样的死啊？他一点也不觉得恐惧，因为根本没有死。

没有死，只有光。

“原来如此！”他突然说出声来。“多么快乐呀！”

对于他，这一切都只是一刹那的事。

这一刹那的含义没有再变。但旁人看到，临死前他又折腾了两小时。他的胸膛里咯咯发响，皮包骨头的身体不断抽搐。接着咯咯声越来越少，喘息也越来越微弱。

“过去了！”有人在他旁边说。

他听见这话，心里重复了一遍。“死过去了，”他对自己说，“再也

不会有死了。”

他吸了一口气，吸到一半停住，两腿一伸就死了。

三死

秋天，两辆马车在大道上疾驰。前面的轿车上坐着两个女人。一个是贵夫人，身体消瘦，脸色苍白。另一个是使女，脸色红润，体态丰满。使女干枯的短发老从褪色的帽子里掉下来，她只好用戴破手套的冻红的手不时把头发塞进去。她那高高的胸脯裹着粗披巾，散发出健康的气息。她那双乌溜溜的眼睛时而望望窗外掠过的田野，时而怯生生地瞧瞧太太，时而不安地打量马车的角落。她的鼻子前面晃动着太太那顶挂在网架上的帽子，她的膝盖上躺着一条小狗，她的腿因地上放着一堆匣子而高高地翘着，在车座弹簧的抖动声和车窗玻璃的叮叮声中，可以隐隐听见她的鞋底碰到匣子的声音。

贵夫人双手叠放在膝盖上，闭着眼睛，稍稍皱起眉头，从胸膛里咳嗽着，身子靠在背后的靠垫上微微摇晃。她头上戴着一顶白色睡帽，娇嫩白净的脖子上系着一条浅蓝色头巾。睡帽底下露出笔直的头皮，把她那搽过油的平整的淡褐色头发分开，苍白的头皮显得没有生气，像死人的皮肤一样。她的脸清秀美丽，但皮肤松弛枯黄，两颊和颧骨泛出红潮。她的嘴唇干燥，不断翕动；稀疏的睫毛没有卷起；凹陷的胸脯使她的旅行呢外套现出一条条直褶。她双目紧闭，脸上现出疲倦、烦躁和常有的痛苦神色。

听差双肘支着软椅，在驭座上打瞌睡。驿车夫神气活现地吆喝着，赶着四匹热汗淋漓的高头大马，偶尔回头望望后面篷车上吆喝着的一名马车夫。宽阔的平行车辙在泥泞的石灰路上均匀而迅速地向前提展。天空阴沉寒冷，黑雾不断降落到田野和大路上。马车里很闷，散发出花露水和尘土的气味。病人把头往后一靠，慢慢睁开眼睛，她那双眼睛又大又亮，黑得很美。

当使女外套的下摆稍稍触到太太的腿时，她就用消瘦的纤手神经质地把它推开，并且说：“又来了！”她的嘴痛苦地瘪了一下。玛特廖莎双手提起外套，用强壮的腿支起身子，坐得远一点。她那娇嫩的脸上泛起鲜艳的红晕。病人那双美丽的乌黑眼睛紧紧盯着使女的一举一动。太太两手按住座位，也想支起身子坐得高些，但她力不从心。她的嘴瘪了一下，整个脸由于无可奈何的自嘲而变得难看。“你哪怕帮我一把也好啊！唉！不必了！我自己也能，只是对不起，别把你这些麻袋之类的东西都放在我背后！别这么弄，别碰我！”太太闭上眼

睛，接着又迅速地抬起眼皮，瞧了使女一眼。玛特廖莎望着她，咬着红红的下唇。病人从胸膛里吐出深沉的叹息，但叹息到一半又变成了咳嗽。她转过脸去，皱起眉头，双手按住胸口。咳嗽完了，她又闭上眼睛，仍旧一动不动地坐着。轿车和篷车驶进了村庄。玛特廖莎从披巾下伸出一只胖鼓鼓的手，画了个十字。

“什么事？”太太问。

“到站了，太太。”

“我问你为什么画十字？”

“有座教堂，太太。”

病人转身对着窗外，睁大眼睛望着马车经过的那座乡村教堂，动手慢慢地画十字。

轿车和篷车同时在驿站前停下。病人的丈夫和医生下车来到轿车跟前。

“您觉得怎么样？”医生把着她的脉问。

“哦，怎么样，亲爱的，不太累吧？”丈夫用法语问，“你不想下车吗？”

玛特廖莎抱起包裹缩在角落里，免得妨碍他们谈话。“没什么，还是那样，”病人回答，“我不下车。”

丈夫站了一会儿，走进驿站。

玛特廖莎霍地跳下马车，蹣跚地跑过泥泞地，也走进驿站大门。

“就算我身体不好，也不能成为您不吃早饭的理由。”

病人含笑对站在车窗旁的医生说。

“他们谁也不来管我。”医生刚轻手轻脚地离开她，跑上驿站台阶，她就这样自言自语，“他们身体好，什么都不在乎。哦！天哪！”

“怎么样，爱德华·伊凡诺维奇？”丈夫遇到医生，快乐地笑着搓搓手说，“我吩咐他们把食盒拿进来，您觉得怎么样？”

“行。”医生回答。

“那么，她怎么样？”丈夫压低声音，扬起眉毛，叹了口气说。

“我说过，她不仅到不了意大利，能到莫斯科就算不错了。特别是碰到这种天气。”

“那怎么办呢？哦，天哪！天哪！”丈夫用手掩住眼睛说。“拿到这儿来！”他对端食盒进来的仆人说。

“本来就该待在家里。”医生耸耸肩膀回答。

“您说，我有什么办法呢？”丈夫反问道，“不瞒您说，我曾想尽办法留住她，我提到费用，提到不得不撇在家里的孩子，提到我的工作，可她什么都不听。她定了在国外生活的计划，仿佛她是个健康人。但如果把她的病情如实告诉她，那就等于要她的命。”

“其实她已经没命了，华西里·德米特里奇，这一点您心里要有数。人没有肺不能活，而肺又不能重新生出来。这确实很让人伤心，难受，但是有什么办法呢？你我所能做到的，只是让她死得尽可能平静些。现在得请神父了。”

“哦，天哪！您要明白我的处境，要问问她有什么遗愿。听天由命吧，我可不能对她说这事。您知道，她这人多么善良……”

“不论怎么说，您还得劝她等路冻硬了再走，”医生意味深长地摇摇头说，“要不路上会出事……”

“阿克秀莎，喂，阿克秀莎！”驿站长的女儿从头上套上一件短袄，在泥泞的后门台阶上跺着脚，尖声喊道，“我们去瞧瞧希尔金家的太太，据说她得了肺病，要到外国去，我还从没见过害痼病的人是什么样子。”

阿克秀莎从门里跳出来，两人手拉着手跑到大门外。她们放慢脚步走过马车，向开着的车窗张望了一下。病人向她们转过头来，发现她们好奇的神色，就皱起眉头转过脸去。

“我的妈呀！”驿站长的女儿连忙转过头来说，“她原来是个多么漂亮的美人，可现在变成什么样了？简直可怕。阿克秀莎，你看见了吗？看见了吗？”

“是啊，真瘦呀！”阿克秀莎附和说，“我们假装到井边去，再去看看。瞧，她转过头去，可我还是看见了。真可怜，玛莎。”

“路上真泥泞啊！”玛莎回答。接着两人都跑回大门里去。

“我的样子一定很可怕，”病人想，“但愿快一点到国外，快一点到国外，到了那边很快就会康复了。”

“你觉得怎么样，我亲爱的？”丈夫走到马车跟前，嘴里还嚼着东西说道。

“问来问去就是这句话，”病人想，“自己还在吃东西！”

“没什么。”她透过牙缝说。

“要知道，亲爱的，我担心这种天气赶路对你更不好。爱德华大夫也这么说。我们还不如回去吧？”

她气呼呼地不吭声。

“天气说不定会好起来，到那时路也就好走了，你的身体也会好些，那时我们再一起去。”

“对不起。要是我早先不听你的话，我现在已到了柏林，身体也完全康复了。”

“有什么办法呢，我的天使，你知道那是办不到的。可现在，你要是肯再等一个月，你的身体就会大大康复，我也可以把事情办完，我们还可以把孩子带去……”

“孩子们身体健康，可是我有病。”

“不过你要明白，亲爱的，在这样的天气里，万一你的病在路上加重……不然至少还在家里。”

“家里，家里怎么样？……叫我死在家里吗？”病人暴躁地说。但死这个字显然使她害怕，她恳求而又询问似的对丈夫瞧瞧。丈夫垂下眼睛没作声。病人的嘴突然像孩子似的瘪了一下，接着眼泪夺眶而出。丈夫用手帕捂住脸，默默地从马车旁走开去。

“不，我要去。”病人抬起眼睛望着天空，抱着双臂，嘴里断断续续地低声说着话。“天哪！这是为什么呀？”她说。泪水流得更多了。她热烈地祈祷了很久，但胸口还是感到疼痛，喘不过气来；天空、田野和道路还是那么阴沉灰暗，秋天的黑雾还是那样不密不稀地落在泥泞的道路上、屋顶上、马车上和车夫们的皮袄上。车夫们热烈而快乐地交谈着，给车轮抹油，套车。

二

轿车套好了，但车夫还在磨蹭。他走进车夫休息的小屋。小屋里又热又闷又暗，充满人气和烤面包、白菜、羊皮袄的气味。正房里有几个车夫，厨娘在炉灶旁忙碌着，炕上躺着一个穿羊皮袄的病人。

“费多尔叔叔！费多尔叔叔！”一个身穿羊皮袄、腰里插着鞭子的年轻车夫走进屋来招呼病人。

“懒鬼，你找费多尔干什么！”一个车夫答应说，“瞧，人家在马车里等你哪。”

“我想问他借双靴子，我那双破了。”小伙子把头发往后一甩，又把手套塞在腰里，回答。“他睡着了？喂，费多尔叔叔！”他走到炕边，又喊道。

“什么事？”一个微弱的声音答应道，接着一张红褐色的瘦脸从炕上探下来。接着，一只毛茸茸的苍白瘦弱的大手拉上一件粗呢大衣，

盖住穿着肮脏衬衫的瘦肩膀。“给我点水喝，老弟，你有什么事？”

小伙子递给他一勺水。

“是这么回事，费多尔，”他迟疑不决地说，“你现在大概用不着新靴子了，给我吧，你大概不会到处跑了。”

病人把疲软无力的头俯在光滑的勺子上，稀疏的下垂胡子浸在浑浊的水里，他吃力而贪婪地喝着水。他那蓬乱的胡子很脏，凹陷无神的眼睛勉强抬起来望着小伙子的脸。喝完水，他想举起手来擦擦湿嘴唇，可是没有力气，只能在大衣袖子上蹭一蹭。他没吭声，困难地用鼻子呼吸着，勉强打起精神直盯着小伙子的脸。

“也许你已经答应别人了，”小伙子说，“那就算了。主要是外面地上泥泞，我得出去干活，因此我就想：把费多尔那双靴子借来吧，他大概用不着了。也许你自己要用，那就直说吧……”

病人胸口有什么东西涌上来，咕噜咕噜直响。他佝偻着身子，拼命咳嗽起来。

“他要靴子做什么？”厨娘突然怒气冲冲地嚷起来，嚷得整个屋子都能听见，“他有一个多月没下炕了。嘿，听见他那个咳嗽呀，我连心口都疼了。他要靴子做什么？总不会让他穿着新靴子入土吧。上帝恕我直说，他早该上路了。瞧他那个咳嗽。得把他搬到别的屋子或者什么地方去！听说城里有这种医院，要不他占着整个角落，怎么行。弄得你没有一点儿空地方，还讲究什么干净。”

“喂，谢廖加！快上车，老爷们等着哪！”驿站长向屋里喊道。

谢廖加没等到回答想走，但病人一面咳嗽，一面用目光表示他有话要说。

“谢廖加，你把靴子拿去吧。”他忍住咳嗽，歇了一会儿，“但你听我说，我死后你得给我买块墓碑。”他哑着嗓子加了一句。

“谢谢叔叔，那我拿去了，墓碑我会给你买的。”

“喂，伙计们，听见了没有？”病人还有话要说，但他又佝偻着身子喘不过气来。

“好，听见了，”一个车夫说，“去吧，谢廖加，上车吧，要不站长又要跑来了。你知道，希尔金家的太太正病着呢。”

谢廖加连忙脱下他那双大得出奇的破靴子，把它扔到长凳底下。费多尔叔叔那双新靴子正好合脚，谢廖加端详着那双靴子，向马车走去。

“瞧，多漂亮的靴子！我来给你上点油。”当谢廖加爬上驭座、拿

起缰绳时，一个手拿刷子的车夫说，“白白送给你了？”

“你眼红是不是？”谢廖加回答，拉拉粗呢大衣的下摆把腿盖好。“走吧！我的宝贝！”他挥挥鞭子向马吆喝道。于是载着乘客、各种箱子的轿车和篷车就在泥泞的大路上飞驰，渐渐隐没在灰蒙蒙的秋雾里。

生病的车夫留在闷热小屋的炕上，他咳不出痰，好不容易翻了个身，才安静下来。

小屋里，到傍晚一直有人进进出出，来这里吃饭，但谁也不理会病人。晚上，厨娘爬到炕上，伸手从他的腿边拿走羊皮袄。

“你别生我的气，娜斯塔西雅，”病人说，“我很快就会把这地方给你腾出来的。”

“好，好，那有什么，没关系，”娜斯塔西雅含糊地说，“叔叔，你哪儿疼呀？你说吧。”

“五脏六腑都难受。天知道是怎么回事。”

“咳嗽的时候嗓子大概疼吧？”

“哪儿都疼。我快死了，就是那么回事。喔唷，喔唷，喔唷！”病人呻吟道。

“你把腿盖盖好，就这样。”娜斯塔西雅说，顺手替他拉好粗呢大衣，从炕上爬下来。

夜里，小屋里灯光暗淡。娜斯塔西雅和十来个车夫睡在地板上 and 长凳上，大声打着呼噜。只有病人一人在炕上翻来覆去，微弱地呻吟着，咳嗽着。到早上，他一点声音也没有了。

“昨天晚上我做了一个怪梦，”第二天，厨娘在晨光熹微中伸着懒腰说，“我梦见费多尔叔叔从炕上爬下来，出去劈柴。他说：‘娜斯塔西雅，我来帮你忙。’我就对他说：‘你怎么能劈柴呢？’他却抓起斧头就劈，劈得很有劲，只见木屑飞溅开来。我说：‘你不是有病吗？’他说：‘不，我好了。’他说着抡起斧头猛劈，可把我吓了一跳。我大叫一声就醒了。莫非他死了？喂，费多尔叔叔！叔叔！”

费多尔没有回答。

“可不是，他也许是死了？让我去瞧瞧。”一个刚醒来的车夫说。

一条长满黄褐色茸毛的手臂从炕上垂下来，又白又凉。

“他大概死了，得去告诉驿站长。”车夫说。

费多尔没有亲人，他是个外乡人。第二天，他被埋在小树林后面

的新墓地里。娜斯塔西雅一连好几天逢人就说她的梦，并且说是她第一个发现费多尔死了。

三

春天来了。在城里潮湿的街上，湍急的流水潺潺地流过上冻的畜粪；熙来攘往的人群穿着鲜艳的衣衫，热闹地交谈着。在围着篱笆的花园里，树木已经发芽，树枝飒飒地在微风中摇摆。到处都有清澈的水流动着，滴下来……麻雀叽叽喳喳地欢叫，鼓动小翅膀飞来飞去。在向阳的一边，篱笆上、房屋上、树木上，一切都在晃动，一切都闪闪发亮。空中、地上和人们心里都洋溢着青春的欢乐。

大街上一座大公馆门前刚铺上干草；那位急于出国的垂死的女病人就在这个公馆里。

在一间关着的房门口站着病人的丈夫和一个上了年纪的女人。一位神父坐在沙发上，垂下眼睛，手里拿着一包用长巾包着的东西。一位老太太——病人的母亲——躺在屋角那张高背安乐椅里，伤心地哭着。一个使女拿着一块干净手帕伺候老太太；另一个使女用什么东西揉着老太太的太阳穴，并且吹着她睡帽底下的白发。

“嗯，基督保佑您，我亲爱的。”病人丈夫对站在门口上了年纪的女人说，“她那么信任您。您又那么会同她说话，去吧，您去好好劝她。”

他正要给她开门，但表姐拦住他，几次拿手帕按在自己眼睛上，猛地摇摇头。

“好了，这下子我不像哭过了。”她说，接着自己打开门走进去。

丈夫心里十分焦急，似乎完全手足无措。他向老太太走去，但没走几步又转过身，穿过房间，走到神父跟前。神父对他瞧瞧，扬起眉毛，叹了一口气。他那浓密的花白大胡子也扬起来，接着又垂下。

“天哪！天哪！”丈夫说。

“有什么办法？”神父叹息着说，眉毛和胡子又向上扬起，然后又垂下来。

“她妈妈也在这儿！”丈夫几乎绝望地说，“她可受不了这样的打击。要知道她是多么爱她呀，我没见过谁像她这样爱女儿……神父，您最好想法子安慰安慰她，劝她离开这儿。”

神父站起来，走到老太太跟前。

“是的，做母亲的心是谁也无法估量的，”他说，“不过上帝是仁慈的。”

老太太的整个脸突然抽搐起来，她神经质地打着嗝。

“上帝是仁慈的，”等她稍微平静下来，神父继续说，“我可以告诉您，在我的教区里有一个病人，比玛丽雅·德米特里耶夫娜的病重得多，但有个普通市民用草药很快就把他治好了。而且那个市民现在就在莫斯科。我对华西里·德米特里奇说过，不妨请他来试试。至少对病人是个安慰。上帝是万能的。”

“不，她已经没救了，”老太太说，“上帝不召我去，却要把她带走。”接着，她更厉害地打着神经质的嗝，一会儿就昏过去了。

病人的丈夫双手捂住脸，从屋子里跑出来。

他在走廊里首先遇见他那个六岁的男孩，男孩正一个劲儿地追着妹妹。

“请问，要不要把孩子们带到妈妈那儿去？”保姆问。

“不，她不愿看见他们，这会使她伤心的。”

男孩站了一会儿，凝神瞧瞧父亲的脸，突然撒腿向前跑去，嘴里快乐地嚷嚷着。“爸爸，她好像一匹黑马！”男孩指指妹妹叫道。

这时候在另一个房间里，表姐坐在病人旁边，巧妙地和她谈着话，使她对死有个思想准备。医生在另一扇窗前调药水。

病人穿着宽大的白色睡袍坐在床上，四周围着枕头，默默地望着表姐。

“唉，表姐，”病人突然打断她的话说，“你不用来给我做思想准备。不要把我当孩子。我是个基督徒。我什么都知道。我知道我活不长了。我也知道我的丈夫要是早点听我的话，现在我已经到了意大利，说不定——简直可以肯定——身体已经好了。大家都这么对他说。可是有什么办法呢，看来这是上帝的意思。我们大家都有许多罪孽，这一点我知道，但我相信上帝是仁慈的，人人都会得到宽恕，人人准会得到宽恕。我竭力了解自己。我知道我也有许多罪孽，表姐。因此我受了那么多苦。我一直在努力忍受痛苦……”

“那么，我去叫神父来好吗，表妹？你领了圣餐，一定会好过些。”表姐说。

病人点点头表示同意。

“上帝啊！饶恕我这个罪人吧。”她喃喃地说。

表姐走出去，对神父使了个眼色。

“她是个天使！”她含泪对病人丈夫说。

丈夫哭了，神父走进门去，老太太还是不省人事，第一间屋里鸦雀无声。五分钟后，神父从屋里出来，取下长巾，理理头发。

“感谢上帝，她现在比较安静了，”他说，“她想看看你们。”表姐和丈夫走了进去。病人正望着圣像低声哭泣。

“恭喜你，我亲爱的。”丈夫说。

“谢谢！我现在觉得好多了，我感到说不出的快乐，”病人说，薄薄的嘴唇上露出一丝微笑，“上帝真是仁慈！他是仁慈和万能的，是不是？”她又双眼饱含泪水，目光虔诚地望着圣像。

然后她仿佛突然想起什么事，示意丈夫到她跟前去。“我求你的事，你总是不肯做。”她用微弱的声音不满地说。

丈夫伸长脖子，恭顺地听着。“什么事，我亲爱的？”

“我跟你说过多少次，这些医生什么也不懂，倒是有些郎中能治病……神父说……有一个市民……去把他找来。”

“把谁找来呀，我亲爱的？”

“天哪！你什么也不愿懂！……”病人皱起眉头，闭上眼睛。

医生走到她跟前，拿起她的手。她的脉搏显然越来越弱。他对丈夫使了个眼色。病人发现这眼色，害怕地环顾了一下。表姐转过脸去，哭起来。

“不要哭，不要折磨自己，也不要折磨我，”病人说，“这样你会使我失去最后的安宁。”

“你是个天使！”表姐吻着她的手说。

“不，吻这儿，只有对死人才吻手。天哪！天哪！”

当天晚上，病人已成了一具尸体，尸体入殓后，灵柩停在公馆大厅里。大厅门户紧闭，里面坐着一名诵经士，用鼻音有节奏地念着大卫的诗篇。明亮的烛光从高高的银烛台上投射到死者苍白的额上，投射到那双僵硬的白蜡似的手上，投射到膝盖和脚趾处可怕地凸出的袈衣的挺直皱褶上。诵经士并不懂得所念的诗句，只是有节奏地念着；在肃静的屋子里，诗句古怪地交替响起和静止。从遥远的房间里时而传来孩子们的说话声和脚步声。

“你掩面，他们便惊惶，”诗篇说，“你收回他们的气，他们就死亡，归于尘土。你发出你的灵，他们便受造，你使地面更换为新。愿耶和华的荣耀存到永远。”

死者的脸严峻、平静而庄严。她那冰凉的洁白前额、她那紧闭的嘴都一动不动。她看上去全神贯注。但现在她是否理解这些庄严的诗

句呢？

一个月后，贵夫人的墓上盖起了一座石头小教堂。车夫的坟上却还没有石碑，坟上长出嫩绿的青草，成为这里埋葬着一个人的仅有标志。

“谢廖加，你真造孽，不给费多尔买块石碑，”驿站的厨娘有一次说，“你说过，冬天买，冬天买，可是到现在还不守信用。你这是当着我的面说的。他来找过你一次了，你再也不买，他还会来，会把你掐死的。”

“什么，难道我说话不算数吗？”谢廖加回答，“石碑我会买的，我答应过，我会买的，我会花一个半卢布去买。我没有忘记，但得去把它运回来。哪天进城，我一定去买。”

“你哪怕先去竖个十字架也好，”一个年老的车夫插嘴说，“要不太不像话。靴子倒穿在脚上了。”

“叫我到哪儿去弄十字架呀？总不能用木柴削一个吧？”

“你这算什么话？木柴是削不出来的，你带把斧头一早到小树林去，在那儿做一个不就得了吗？砍一棵白蜡树什么的，不就可以做个十字架吗？要不你还得请护林员喝酒。为这么一根废料请他喝酒可划不来。瞧，前天我弄断一根撬棒，我就去砍了一根新的，挺结实，谁也没说过一句话。”

第二天清早，天色刚亮，谢廖加就拿着斧头到小树林里去。

大地万物盖着一层灰白的寒露，没有照到阳光的露水一滴一滴地滴下来。东方破晓，微弱的曙光映在薄云片片的苍穹上。地上的小草，枝头的树叶，都纹丝不动。只有树丛中鸟雀的扑翼声和地上沙沙的响声偶尔打破树林的寂静。在树林边缘，突然响起一阵与大自然格格不入的响声，然后又沉寂了。接着响声又起，并且在一棵一动不动的树干周围有节奏地重复着。一棵树的树梢异乎寻常地颤动起来，苍翠欲滴的叶子飒飒发响，一只红胸鸽栖在树枝上，叽叽地叫着鼓动翅膀，摇摇尾巴，落到另一棵树上。

斧头低低地发出越来越重浊的响声，湿润的白木片飞落到露珠滚滚的草地上，在砍击声中传出一声轻微的折裂声。整棵树颤动了一下，向一边倾斜，又迅速地挺直，根部恐惧地摇摆着。一瞬间又万籁俱寂，接着那棵树向一边倾斜的树干上又发出折裂声，于是枯枝折断，树枝下垂，一棵树树梢朝下轰隆一声倒在潮湿的地上。斧头声和脚步声都静止了。那只红胸鸽叫了一声，拍拍翅膀往高处飞去。被它

的翅膀触动的树枝摇晃了一会儿，又像其他树枝一样一动不动了。树林披着纹丝不动的枝叶，在开阔的新的空地上更加快乐地展示出它们的美丽。

最初的几道阳光穿过透明的云片在空中闪了一下，然后照遍大地和天空。朝雾在谷地里像波浪似的翻腾，草木上露珠滚滚，闪闪发亮，透明的云片在蓝幽幽的空中迅速地飞散开来。鸟儿在树丛中扑腾，兴高采烈地啁啾；苍翠欲滴的叶子在树梢上快乐而宁静地飒飒作响，而那些活着的树木的枝叶也在倒下的死树上面庄严地微微晃动。

The Death of Ivan Ilyich

‘It is only a bruise.’

In the large law court building, during an adjournment of the Melvinsky trial, the members of the Bench and the public prosecutor had come together in the office of Ivan Yegorovich Shebek, and the conversation touched on the celebrated Krasovsky case. Fyodor Vasilyevich argued vehemently that it was beyond their jurisdiction, Ivan Yegorovich had his own view and was sticking to it, while Pyotr Ivanovich, who had kept out of the discussion at the outset and was still not contributing, was perusing a copy of the Gazette which had just been delivered.

‘Gentlemen!’ he said. ‘Ivan Ilyich is dead.’

‘Is he really?’

‘Here you are. Read it yourself,’ he said to Fyodor Vasilyevich, handing him the paper, fresh off the press and still smelling.

There was an announcement within a black border : ‘It is with profound sorrow that Praskovya Fyodorovna Golovina informs family and friends that her beloved husband, Ivan Ilyich Golovin, Member of the Court of Justice, passed away on the 4th of February this year, 1882. The funeral will take place on Friday at 1 p. m.’

Ivan Ilyich had been a colleague of the gentlemen assembled there, and they had all liked him. He had been ill for several weeks, and the word was that his ill-ness was incurable. His post had been kept open for him, but there was an understanding that in the event of his death Alexeyev would step into his place, and Alexeyev’s place would be taken by either Vinnikov or Shtabel. So, the first thought that occurred to each of the assembled gentlemen on hearing the news of his death was how this death might affect his own prospects, and those of their acquaintances, for transfer or promotion.

‘I’m sure to get Shtabel’s job now, or Vinnikov’s,’ thought Fyodor Vasilyevich. ‘They promised me ages ago, and a promotion like that would give me another eight hundred roubles a year, plus expenses.'

'I must apply to have my brother-in-law transferred from Kaluga,' thought Pyotr Ivanovich. 'My wife will be delighted. She won't be able to tell me I never do any-thing for her people.'

'I had a feeling he wasn't going to get better,' said Pyotr Ivanovich. 'It's sad.'

'What was actually wrong with him?'

'The doctors couldn't decide. Well, they could, but they all decided differently. The last time I saw him I thought he was going to come through it.'

'And I haven't been to see him since Christmas. I kept meaning to go.'

'Was he all right financially?'

'His wife had a bit of money, I think. Nothing very much.'

'Well, we'll have to go and see her. They live an awfully long way away.'

'For you they do. Where you live, everywhere's a long way away.'

'Look at that. He can't forgive me for living across the river,' said Pyotr Ivanovich, smiling at Shebek. The conversation turned to the long distances between the different parts of the city, and then they walked back into session.

Apart from the speculations aroused in each of them by this death, concerning the transfers and possible changes that this death might bring about, the very fact of the death of someone close to them aroused in all who heard about it, as always, a feeling of delight that he had died and they hadn't.

'There you have it. He's dead, and I'm not'was what everyone thought or felt. But his closest acquaintances, Ivan Ilyich's so-called friends, couldn't help thinking that they would now have to fulfil some tedious social obligations such as attending the funeral and calling on the widow to express their condolences.

Closest of all were Fyodor Vasilyevich and Pyotr Ivanovich.

Pyotr Ivanovich was an old friend from law school, and he felt indebted to Ivan Ilyich.

Over dinner he told his wife about the death of Ivan Ilyich and the mooted possibility of her brother being transferred to their district, and then, dispensing with his usual nap, he put on a dress-coat and set off for Ivan Ilyich's house.

At the entrance stood a carriage and two cabs. Down-stairs in the entrance hall, next to the coat stand, a coffin lid with silk brocade, tassels and gold braid that had been powdered and polished stood propped against a wall. Two ladies in black were taking off their fur cloaks. He knew one of them, Ivan Ilyich's sister, but not the other. His colleague Schwartz was at the top of the stairs about to come down, but when he saw Pyotr Ivanovich he stopped and gave him a wink that seemed to say, 'Ivan Ilyich has messed things up - not what you or I would have done.'

Schwartz's face, with its English sidewhiskers and his lean figure in formal dress, exuded, as always, an air of elegant solemnity and, although the solemnity belied his playful personality, it was particularly poignant here, or so it seemed to Pyotr Ivanovich.

Pyotr Ivanovich allowed the ladies to pass on ahead, and slowly followed them upstairs. Instead of coming down, Schwartz stood waiting at the top. Pyotr Ivanovich knew why; he clearly wanted to arrange a game of whist somewhere that evening. The ladies proceeded upstairs to see the widow, but Schwartz pursed his lips tightly with all seriousness, though his eyes had a mischievous look as he twitched his eyebrows, directing Pyotr Ivanovich off to the right and into the room where the dead man lay.

Pyotr Ivanovich entered the room, and hesitated, as people always do on these occasions, not knowing pre-cisely what to do. The only thing he was certain of was that in this situation you couldn't go wrong if you made the sign of the cross. Whether or not you should bow at the same time he wasn't sure, so he went for a compromise, crossing himself as he walked in and giving a bit of a bow as he did so. At the same time, as far as hand and head movements permitted, he glanced round the room. Two young persons, nephews apparently, one of them a schoolboy, were crossing themselves as they left the room. A little old woman was standing there motionless. And a lady with curiously arched eyebrows was whispering to her. A church reader in a frock-coat - a hearty character of considerable spirit - was reading something out in a loud voice and a tone that brooked no contradiction. Gerasim, the peasant who waited at table, darted ahead of Pyotr Ivanovich, sprinkling something on the floor. Seeing this, Pyotr Ivanovich instantly recognized a slight smell of decaying flesh. When he had visited Ivan Ilyich for the last time he had seen this peasant in Ivan Ilyich's room, acting as a sick nurse, and Ivan Ilyich had had a special fondness for him.

Pyotr Ivanovich kept on crossing himself, and aimed a slight bow midway between the reader, the coffin and the icons on the corner table. Then, when the business of crossing himself seemed to be going on too long, he paused and took a close look at the dead man.

The dead man lay as all dead men lie, unusually heavy with his dead weight, with rigid limbs sinking into the soft lining of the coffin and his head bowed for eternity on the pillow, and he displayed what dead people always display, a waxen yellow forehead (with bald patches over his hollow temples) and a protruding nose that seemed to be pressing down hard on his upper lip. He had changed a good deal; he was even thinner than he had been when Pyotr Ivanovich had last seen him, but, as with all dead bodies, his face had acquired greater beauty, or, more to the point, greater significance, than it had had in life. Its expression seemed to say that what needed to be done had been done, and done properly. More than that, the expression contained a reproach, or at least a reminder, to the living. The reminder seemed out of place to Pyotr Ivanovich, or at least he felt it didn't apply to him personally. But an unpleasant feeling came over him, and he crossed himself again, hurriedly - too hurriedly, he thought, the haste was almost indecent - before turning and heading for the door.

Schwartz was waiting for him in the next room with his feet planted wide apart and both hands fiddling with the top hat held behind his back. One glance at his mischievous, immaculately elegant figure and Pyotr Ivanovich felt restored. He could see that Schwartz was above all this, and would be impervious to anything that might have been depressing. His very appearance spoke volumes : in no way would the occasion of Ivan Ilyich's funeral serve as a reason for cancelling their usual session; in other words, nothing would prevent them from breaking open a new pack and riffling through the cards that evening while a servant set up four new candles. There was, in fact, no reason to think that this occasion should stop them having a good time that very evening. He said so in a low voice to Pyotr Ivanovich as he walked past, proposing that they meet for a game at Fyodor Vasilyevich's.

But Pyotr Ivanovich was clearly not destined to play whist that evening. Praskovya Fyodorovna, a short, plump woman whose body expanded from the shoulders down despite her best efforts to the contrary, done out in black, with a lace shawl over her head and the same curiously arched eyebrows as the lady facing the coffin, emerged from her chambers with some other ladies, showed them to the door of the dead man's room, and said, 'The service is about to begin. Do go in.'

Schwartz made an indeterminate bow, and stood there without accepting or rejecting this invitation. Praskovya, recognizing Pyotr Ivanovich, gave a sigh, went straight up to him, took him by the hand, and said, 'I know you were a good friend to Ivan Ilyich...' And she looked at him, anticipating a suitable response. Pyotr Ivanovich knew that just as he had had to cross himself in there, out here it was necessary to squeeze her hand and say with a sigh, 'Believe me...' And that's what he did. Having done it, he felt that the desired effect had been achieved - he had been touched, and she had been touched.

'Let's go in before they get started. I must have a word with you,' said the widow. 'Give me your arm.'

Pyotr Ivanovich offered an arm and they made their way into the inner rooms, walking past Schwartz, who gave Pyotr Ivanovich a gloomy wink. 'No whist for you, then. You won't mind if we find another partner. We might make up a fivesome when you can get free,' said his mischievous glance.

Pyotr Ivanovich sighed even more deeply and plainly, and Praskovya showed her gratitude by squeezing his hand. Proceeding into her drawing-room, which was done out in pink cretonne and lit by one dismal lamp, they sat down near to a table, she on a sofa, he on a low pouffe with broken springs that wobbled unevenly as he sat on it. Praskovya had wanted to warn him off into another chair, but a warning like that did not seem appropriate in the circumstances, so she thought better of it. As he sat down on his pouffe, Pyotr Ivanovich remembered the time when Ivan Ilyich had been decorating this room and had asked his advice about this pink cretonne with the green leaves. On her way past the table to sit down on the sofa - the room was crammed with furniture and knick-knacks - Praskovya snagged the black lace of her black shawl on the carved edge of the table. Pyotr Ivanovich rose slightly to disentangle it, thus releasing the pouffe, which quivered and pushed up at him. The widow began disentangling the lace herself, so Pyotr Ivanovich sat down again, crushing the rebellious pouffe back into submission. But the widow had not finished disentangling herself, so Pyotr Ivanovich rose again, and so did the pouffe, rebellious and even creaking. When this was all over, she took out a clean cambric handkerchief and burst into tears. But Pyotr Ivanovich had cooled somewhat after the episode with the lace and the battle with the pouffe, and he sat there with a scowl on his face. The embarrassment was broken when Sokolov, Ivan Ilyich's footman, came in to report that the plot which Praskovya had chosen in the cemetery was going to cost two hundred roubles. She had stopped weeping, and she looked at Pyotr Ivanovich with a victimized air as she told him in French how hard things were for her. Pyotr Ivanovich made a silent gesture to acknowledge his absolute conviction that it could not be otherwise.

'Do smoke if you would like to,' she said in a tone of voice that was magnanimous yet flat with defeat, and she went on to discuss the cost of the plot with Sokolov. As he lit his cigarette, Pyotr Ivanovich heard that she had made detailed enquiries about the cost of various plots of land before settling on the one she wanted. That was not all : once the plot had been ordered, she went on to make arrangements for the choir. Then Sokolov left.

'I'm doing everything myself,' she told Pyotr Ivanovich, pushing aside some albums on the table. Noticing that the table was under threat from the cigarette, she swiftly moved an ashtray across and spoke again. 'I think it would be hypocritical to claim that I cannot manage practicalities because of my grief. On the contrary, if anything can... I won't say console me, but... take my mind off things, it's seeing to what has to be done about him.' She took out her handkerchief again as if on the verge of tears, but suddenly she seemed to get a grip on her feelings, snapped out of it and spoke calmly. 'But there is one thing I would like to discuss with you.'

Pyotr Ivanovich bowed his head. The springs shifted under him, but he did not let them have their way.

'He suffered terribly those last few days.'

'Did he really?' asked Pyotr Ivanovich.

'Oh yes, terribly. The last few minutes, no, hours really, he never stopped screaming. He screamed for three solid days without stopping for breath. It was unbearable. I don't know how I got through it. You could hear him three rooms away. Oh, I've been through it all right!'

'And was he conscious?' asked Pyotr Ivanovich.

'Yes,' she whispered. 'To the very end. He said goodbye a quarter of an hour before he died, and he was still ask-ing us to take Volodya away.'

For all the disagreeable awareness of hypocrisy, his own and hers, the thought of the suffering endured by a man he had known so well, first as a happy young lad, then as a schoolboy, then as an adult colleague, left Pyotr Ivanovich with a feeling of horror. Once again he could see that forehead, the nose pressing down on the upper lip, and he felt a pang of fear for himself.

'Three days and three nights of horrible suffering, and then death. Just think, it could happen to me any time, now,' he thought, and he felt that momentary pang of fear. But immediately he was saved, without knowing how, by the old familiar idea that this had happened to Ivan Ilyich, not him, and it could not and would not happen to him, and that kind of thinking would put him in a gloomy mood, for which there was no need, as Schwartz's face had clearly demonstrated. Pursuing this line of thought, Pyotr Ivanovich calmed down and began to show a close interest in the details of Ivan Ilyich's death, as if death was a chance experience that may have applied to Ivan Ilyich but certainly didn't apply to him.

After giving a detailed account of the truly horrendous physical agony that Ivan Ilyich had endured (details that Pyotr Ivanovich learned only in terms of the distressing effect they had had on Praskovya), the widow clearly saw that it was now necessary to get down to business.

Pyotr Ivanovich gave a sigh, and waited for her to blow her nose. When she had blown her nose, he said, ‘Believe me...’ Then she spoke out again, and told him what must have been the main reason for consulting him : it was all a matter of using the death of her husband to get some money from the Treasury. She made it seem as if she was asking Pyotr Ivanovich’s advice about getting a pension, but he could see that here she knew more than he did, she knew the finest details of this subject down to the last penny that could be screwed out of the Treasury in terms of death benefits. What she wanted to know was whether there might be some way of screwing a bit more out of them. Pyotr Ivanovich tried to think of some way of doing this but, having given it some thought and doing the decent thing by cursing the government for being so stingy, he said he thought there was no more to be had. Upon which she gave a sigh, and made no bones about getting rid of her visitor. He got the message, stubbed his cigarette out, stood up, shook hands, and went out into the hall.

In the dining-room with the clock that Ivan Ilyich had prided himself on having acquired in an antique shop, Pyotr Ivanovich came across a priest and a number of people that he knew, here for the funeral, and he saw a pretty young lady whom he also knew, Ivan Ilyich’s daughter. She was all in black. Her tiny waist looked tinier than ever. She looked gloomy, assertive, almost truculent. She bowed to Pyotr Ivanovich in a way that suggested he was to blame for something. Behind the daughter stood a wealthy young man, also known to Pyotr Ivanovich, who looked no less offended - he was an examining magistrate, her fiancé by all accounts. Pyotr Ivanovich gave a gloomy bow in their direction and was about to walk through into the dead man’s room when Ivan Ilyich’s schoolboy son, the image of his father, appeared from behind the stairwell. This was the little Ivan Ilyich that Pyotr Ivanovich remembered from law school. His tear-filled eyes were those of a twelve-or thirteen-year-old boy who has lost his innocence. Seeing Pyotr Ivanovich, he looked embarrassed and scowled morosely. Pyotr Ivanovich gave him a nod and walked into the dead man’s room. The funeral service was soon under way - candles, moaning, incense, tears, sobbing. Pyotr Ivanovich stood there with a frown on his face, staring at the legs of those in front of him. Not once did he look at the dead man or succumb to any feelings of weakness; he was one of the first to leave. There was no one in the hall. Gerasim, the servant of peasant stock, darted out of the dead man's room, and sorted through all the fur coats with his big strong hands before finding Pyotr Ivanovich's coat and handing it over.

'Gerasim. How are you feeling, my boy?' said Pyotr Ivanovich, who had to say something. 'A bit sad?'

'Tis God's will, sir.' 'Twill come to us all,' said Gerasim, displaying an even white row of peasant's teeth, and then, with the air of a man with a lot of work to do, he wrenched the door open, called the driver up and sprang back to the porch steps, wondering what else needed to be done.

Pyotr Ivanovich found it particularly pleasant to inhale the fresh air after the incense, the corpse and carbolic.

'Where to, sir?' asked the coachman.

'It's still quite early. I think I'll drop in on Fyodor Vasilyevich.'

And that's where he went. And there they were, sure enough, finishing the first rubber. He was just in time to make up a fifth.

The past history of Ivan Ilyich's life had been straight-forward, ordinary and dreadful in the extreme.

Ivan Ilyich had died at forty-five, a member of the Court of Justice. He was the son of an official who had worked his way through various ministries and departments in Petersburg, carving out the kind of career which brings people to a position from which, despite their obvious incapacity for doing anything remotely useful, they cannot be sacked because of their status and long years of service, so they end up being given wholly false and fictitious jobs to do for which they receive salaries that are anything but fictitious, anything from six to ten thousand a year, and this enables them to live on to a ripe old age.

Such a man was Ilya Yefimovich Golovin, Privy Coun-cillor, superfluous member of various superfluous institutions.

He had three sons. Ivan Ilyich was the second son. The eldest had carved out the same career as his father but in a different ministry, and was now near to achieving the kind of seniority that confers sinecure status. The third son was a failure. He had gone through a series of jobs, ruining his prospects in all of them, and he now worked for the railways. His father, his brothers and especially their wives not only hated meeting him but forgot his existence unless compelled to do otherwise. Their sister had married Baron Greff, a Petersburg official cut from the same cloth as his father-in-law. Ivan Ilyich was what they called le phénix de la famille. He was neither as cold and starchy as the elder brother nor as profligate as the younger. He was halfway between - an intelligent, lively, personable and decent man. He had attended law school along with his younger brother. The younger brother didn't finish the course; he was expelled in the fifth grade, whereas Ivan Ilyich passed with honours. As a student he was already the kind of person he remained for the rest of his life, a capable man, cheerful and kind, sociable and convinced of the need to follow the path of duty - duty being anything so designated by higher authority. Boy and man he had avoided toadyism, but from his earliest years he was like a moth to the flame in being drawn towards people in authority, he assumed their mannerisms along with their philosophy of life, and he was on good terms with them. All the distractions of childhood and youth had passed him by leaving scarcely a trace; he had succumbed to both sensuality and vanity, and then in the top classes to liberal thinking, but always within limits unerringly set by his own instinctive feelings.

In his student days he had done things that at first he thought of as utterly revolting, things that made him feel disgusted with himself even as he was doing them, but in later life, noticing that the same things were being done by people of high standing without a qualm, although he couldn't quite bring himself to think they were good, he did manage to dismiss them, and he felt no pangs of remorse when he recalled them.

When he graduated from law school, qualifying for the tenth grade of the civil service, and received enough money from his father to buy his basic necessities, Ivan Ilyich ordered a new set of clothes from Scharmer's, hung a medallion on his watch chain inscribed with the words Respice finem, said goodbye to the prince and principal, dined at Donon's with his friends, and set off for one of the provinces with his fashionable luggage, linen, clothes, shaving tackle, toiletries and travelling rug, all ordered and purchased from the very best shops, to take up a position arranged for him by his father as special assist-ant to the governor.

In the provinces it did not take Ivan Ilyich long to arrange a lifestyle that was as easy and agreeable as the one he had enjoyed at law school. He did his work, pursued his career and at the same time discreetly enjoyed himself. He went off now and then on official visits to country districts, cutting a dignified figure with superiors and inferiors alike, and he prided himself on carrying out his duties, especially in matters concerning religious dissidents, with scrupulous fairness and incorruptibility.

In his official duties, despite his youth and an attitude of some frivolity, he was exceedingly conservative, bureaucratic and even forbidding, but on the social side he was often amusing and witty, and always pleasantly polite - what the governor and the governor's wife called a bon enfant , and with them he was like one of the family.

In the provinces he had an affair with a lady only too keen to liaise with a smart young lawyer. There was also a milliner, and there were drinking sessions with visiting aides-de-camp, as well as after-dinner excursions to a certain street on the outskirts. There was a need to work on the governor and even the governor's wife in order to win them over. But all of this bore the stamp of high respectability to such an extent that no one could have called it by a bad name; all of it was catered for by what the French describe as 'youth having its fling'. All of it was conducted with clean hands, in clean linen, in French phrases, and - what mattered most - at the highest level of society, which meant with approval from those in authority.

Ivan Ilyich spent five years in this kind of service, but the time came for a career change. New legal institutions were opening up; new men were needed.

Ivan Ilyich became one of the new men.

Ivan Ilyich was offered the post of examining magis-trate, and he took it, even though it meant moving to a new province, dropping all his old contacts and establishing new ones. Ivan Ilyich was given a send-off by his friends, who presented him with a silver cigarette case; they had a group photograph taken, and off he went to his new job.

As an examining magistrate Ivan Ilyich was just as comme il faut and respectable, just as capable of separating official duty from private life and earning respect as he had been when working as a special assistant to the governor. The new work itself struck Ivan Ilyich as far more interesting and rewarding than his earlier job. Before, he had quite liked strutting about in his Scharmer uniform, sauntering past anxious petitioners and envious officials and walking straight into the governor's office, where he would sit down for a cup of tea and a smoke. But not many people had been under his authority - only the rural police chiefs and the religious dissidents that he came across on his assignments - and he loved to treat these dependent people with a courteous, almost comradely spirit, he loved to let them feel that although he had the power to crush them he was being straight with them, treating them like friends. There had not been many of them then, but now that Ivan Ilyich was an examining magistrate he felt that everyone without exception was in his power, even the most important and self-satisfied of people; at a stroke from his pen on headed notepaper any important or self-satisfied person could be brought before him as a defendant or witness to answer questions and be kept on his feet if Ivan Ilyich chose not to let him sit down. Far from abusing this power, he did his best to play it down, but his consciousness of that power and the very chance to play it down were what gave his new job its interest and appeal. In the work itself, the process of investigation, Ivan Ilyich soon mastered the technique of distancing himself from all irrelevancies and reducing the most complicated cases to a version that could be set down on paper in objective outline, excluding any personal opinion on his part, while observing all the necessary formalities, which was what mattered most. This was the new way of working, and he was one of the first men to implement the reformed Legal Code of 1864.

Ivan Ilyich's transfer to a new town and the post of examining magistrate meant meeting new people and making new contacts; he also struck a new attitude, and slightly changed his tone. The new attitude involved distancing himself somewhat from the provincial authorities while cultivating the best circles among the judiciary and the wealthy gentry of the town, and the new tone entailed mild dissatisfaction with the government, a degree of liberalism and a civilized man's sense of public duty. At the same time, without compromising the fastidiousness of his dress sense, in his new situation he left his chin unshaven, allowing his beard to grow as and where it wanted.

In his new town, too, Ivan Ilyich set himself up very nicely. The section of society opposed to the governor was friendly and agreeable, his pay had gone up, and one thing that made his life particularly pleasurable was the playing of whist, which he now took to with the enjoyment of a skilled card-player, astute, quick-thinking and almost invariably a winner.

After two years working in the new town Ivan Ilyich met his future wife. Praskovya Fyodorovna Mikhel was the most attractive, intelligent and colourful young lady in the social circle frequented by Ivan Ilyich. To the list of other distractions and relaxations from his work as an examining magistrate Ivan Ilyich added a mild flirtation with Praskovya.

When he had been an assistant on special commissions Ivan Ilyich had been quite a dancer, but now he was an examining magistrate he took to the floor much less frequently. When he danced it was only as if to say, 'Look, I may be part of the reformed system, and I've got as far as Grade 5, but if you want to see me on the floor I can show you that even in dancing I can be the best.' So, just occasionally, he would take to the floor with Praskovya at the end of an evening, and it was actually while dancing like this that he won her heart. She fell in love with him. Ivan Ilyich had no clear and definite plans for marriage, but once the girl fell in love with him he began to wonder. 'When all's said and done, why shouldn't I get married?' he asked himself.

This young woman, Praskovya Fyodorovna, belonged to a good family, and she was quite attractive. She also came with a little money. Ivan Ilyich might have held out for a more brilliant partner, but she was herself a decent catch. Ivan was earning good money, and he could count on something similar from her. It would be a good match - she was a nice girl, quite pretty and a thoroughly decent young woman. To claim that Ivan Ilyich got married because he was in love with his bride, and saw in her someone who shared his outlook on life, would have been no more justifiable than to say that he married because the match met with the approval of the society that he moved in. Ivan Ilyich married for both reasons. He was pleasing himself by acquiring such a wife, but at the same time he was appealing to his superiors and their sense of propriety.

So, Ivan Ilyich got married.

The process of getting married, and the early days of married life, with conjugal caresses, new furniture, new crockery, new linen, everything up to his wife's pregnancy, went very smoothly, to the extent that Ivan Ilyich was beginning to think that marriage would not disrupt his easy, agreeable and enjoyable lifestyle, which was decency itself, approved of by society and something that Ivan Ilyich considered to be part of life itself - and it might even improve it. But it was at this stage, during the first months of his wife's pregnancy, that something happened, something new, unexpected, unpleasant, difficult and disgusting, something that could not have been anticipated and could not in any way be got rid of.

For no reason that Ivan Ilyich could fathom, other than what he called gaîté de coeur, his wife did begin to disrupt the pleasant and decent run of his life. She became jealous of him for no apparent cause, demanded his closest attention, laid into him and started arguments that were unpleasantly vulgar.

At first Ivan Ilyich hoped to escape the unpleasantness of his new situation by relapsing into the same carefree but respectable way of life that had stood him in good stead before - he tried to ignore his wife's moodiness and carry on in the easy, agreeable way that he had formerly enjoyed, inviting friends round for a game of cards and trying to get out and drive round to the club or visit people close to him. But there came a time when his wife started shouting at him so furiously, using such foul language, determined to keep on yelling at him when he failed to do what she wanted, obviously with every intention of keeping it up until he came to heel, stayed in and went through the same anguish that she felt, that Ivan Ilyich was horrified. He realized that married life - at least with his wife - didn't always mean enjoyment and decency, but, on the contrary, it often disrupted them, and it was therefore necessary to guard against such disruptions. And Ivan Ilyich began to seek ways of doing this. His work was the one thing that impressed Praskovya, and it was through work and the commitments associated with it that he took on his wife and asserted his own independence.

When the baby was born, with the various difficulties with feeding, the real and imaginary illnesses of mother and child, which demanded his sympathetic involvement even though he understood nothing about them, the need for Ivan Ilyich to safeguard his independence became even more urgent.

As his wife grew more and more irritable and demanding, Ivan Ilyich gradually shifted his life's centre of gravity on to his work. He loved his work more and more, and became more ambitious than he had been.

It didn't take him long - no more than a year after his wedding - to realize that although married life did provide some conveniences, it was actually rather a complex and difficult business, and the path of duty, which meant leading a decent life approved of by society, called for a clearly defined attitude, as at work.

And Ivan Ilyich managed to establish such an attitude towards his married life. He required of it whatever domestic conveniences it could provide in terms of meals on the table, a good household and a bed and, most important, the outward show of respectability that society required. Beyond this, he required some enjoyment and pleasure, and if he found this he was very thankful, but if he was met with rejection and crabbiness he immediately took himself off into his own separate, carefully guarded world, the world of work which gave him pleasure.

Ivan Ilyich was considered a good colleague, and within three years he was promoted to assistant chief prosecutor. His new responsibilities, the importance that they entailed, the opportunity of bringing people before the court and sending them to prison, the publicity given to his speeches, and the success enjoyed by Ivan Ilyich in these matters - all of this made his work seem even more enjoyable.

Other children were born. His wife was becoming more and more bad-tempered and crabby, but the new attitude established by Ivan Ilyich towards his home life made him all but impervious to her crabbiness.

After serving for seven years in the same town Ivan Ilyich was transferred to another province, as public prosecutor. They moved, they were short of money, and his wife didn't like the town they had moved to. His salary had gone up, but so had their living expenses. On top of that, two of their children died, and family life became even more unpleasant for Ivan Ilyich.

Praskovya blamed her husband for all the setbacks they were suffering in their new place of residence. Most of the topics of conversation between husband and wife, especially about bringing up the children, led to questions that reminded them of past arguments, and new arguments were liable to flare up at any moment. They were left with a few short periods of amorousness that came over them as husband and wife, but these did not last long. These were nothing more than little islands where they could anchor for a while, only to plunge back into a sea of hidden hostility as they grew further and further apart. This growing apart might have upset Ivan Ilyich if he had thought there was anything wrong with it, but now not only did he consider this state of affairs to be quite normal, he saw it as the whole point of his role in the family. His role was to distance himself increasingly from all the unpleasantness and give it an air of harmless respectability; this he achieved by spending less and less time with the family, and when he was forced to be with them he sought to safeguard his own position by ensuring the presence of others. But the main thing was that Ivan Ilyich did have his work. It was in the world of his work that the whole interest of his life came into focus. And this interest absorbed him totally. The knowledge of the power that he wielded, the possibility of ruining anyone that he fancied ruining, the gravitas (even if it was all outward show) which could be sensed as he walked into court or dealt with his subordinates, the success that he was enjoying with his superiors and subordinates alike, and, above all, his masterly handling of the cases - all of this gave him pleasure, and, along with chit-chat with colleagues, dinners and whist, filled his life to the full. And so, life in general proceeded for Ivan Ilyich just as he thought it should proceed - pleasantly and respectably.

He lived like this for about seven years. Their daughter, the eldest child, was now sixteen, another child had died and their one remaining son was the subject of strong disagreement. Ivan Ilyich wanted to send him to law school, but Praskovya had defied him by putting him down for the high school. The daughter was being educated at home, and was developing nicely; the boy too was doing quite well at his studies.

This was the course that Ivan Ilyich's life had taken during the seventeen years that followed his wedding. He was now a senior public prosecutor who had turned down several transfers in the hope of securing an even more desirable position, but then suddenly an unpleasant circumstance arose which looked like completely disrupting the peaceful progress of his life. Ivan Ilyich was expecting an appointment as presiding judge in a university town, but Hoppe pipped him at the post and got the job. Ivan Ilyich was livid, and he made some insinuations, taking issue with Hoppe himself and his immediate superiors. He was met with a chill rebuff, and was overlooked again when the next appointment came up.

This was in 1880. That year was the hardest he ever lived through. It was a year in which it transpired, for one thing, that they couldn't make ends meet financially, and, for another, that he was a forgotten man and, whereas he saw himself as the victim of an outrageously cruel injustice, everyone else thought it was just the way things went. Even his father saw it as no duty of his to help out. He felt deserted by everyone; they all thought that his situation, with a salary of three thousand five hundred roubles, was perfectly normal, even fortunate. He was the only person who knew that, with all the injustices that had been visited upon him, with nothing but nagging from his wife, and the debts that were now mounting up because he was living beyond his means - he was the only one who knew that his position was anything but normal.

That summer, in order to cut costs, he took leave of absence and went with his wife for a country holiday at her brother's place. In the country, with no work to occupy him, Ivan Ilyich had his first experience of not just boredom but unbearable anguish. He decided he couldn't go on like this - definite steps must be taken.

During a sleepless night, the whole of which he spent pacing the terrace, he decided he would go to Petersburg and make representations; he would get his own back on those men who had underestimated him, by changing ministries. Next morning he defied all the remonstrations from his wife and brother-in-law, and left for Petersburg.

He went with one aim in mind : to get himself a position that would bring in five thousand a year. By now he had no allegiance to any particular ministry, faction or function. All he needed was a job, a job that would bring in five thousand a year, in administration, in one of the banks, with the railways, in one of the charitable institutions set up by the Dowager Empress Maria, even in the customs service; all that mattered was five thousand a year and an immediate transfer from the ministry where he was so undervalued.

And his trip was crowned with unexpected, unbelievable success. At Kursk, an acquaintance of his, F. S.Ilyin, got into his first-class carriage, sat down and told him that the governor of the province had just received a telegram informing him of a reshuffle in the ministry - Pyotr Ivanovich was being replaced by Ivan Semyonovich.

The proposed reshuffle, whatever its impact on Russia at large, meant something special to Ivan Ilyich : the emergence of Pyotr Petrovich, and also apparently his friend, Zakhar Ivanovich, was very good news for him. Zakhar Ivanovich was a colleague and friend.

The new development had been confirmed in Moscow; now, arriving in Petersburg, Ivan Ilyich looked up Zakhar, who promised him a definite position in his former department, the Ministry of Justice.

Within a week he was able to send the following telegram to his wife : Zakhar replaces Miller. Appointment mine with first report.

Because of this change of staff Ivan Ilyich had suddenly achieved a position in his former ministry which put him two grades higher than his colleagues, with five thousand a year plus three thousand five hundred roubles removal expenses. All the acrimony that he had felt towards his enemies and the ministry in general was forgotten, and Ivan Ilyich was a happy man.

He returned to the country feeling in high spirits, more contented than he had been for a long time. Praskovya's spirits had also picked up, and a truce was declared between the two of them. Ivan Ilyich described how hon-oured he had been in Petersburg, how his former enemies had been put to shame and were now licking his boots, how people envied him his new position, and, most of all, how popular he had been in Petersburg.

Praskovya listened to all of this, pretending to believe it and not querying anything, but her real interest was only in sketching out the new way of life that they would lead in the city to which they were moving. And Ivan Ilyich was delighted to see that her plans were his plans, they were together as one, and that his life, having hit a bad patch, was now getting back to its old way, its true path of happy enjoyment and respectability.

Ivan Ilyich had not come back for long. He had to take up his duties on the 10th of September, and before that he had to settle into new surroundings, have all his things brought in from the provinces, buy in and order up many more items - in other words he had set up home just as he had worked things out in his own mind, which was almost exactly as Praskovya had worked things out in her own heart.

And now that everything had been set up so success-fully, and he and his wife were agreed in their aims, having lived together so little of late, they came together more closely than at any time since they were first married. Ivan Ilyich had intended to move his family in straightaway, but at the insistence of his sister-in-law and brother-in-law, who were suddenly all over Ivan Ilyich and his family, it was arranged for him to go on alone.

Ivan Ilyich set out on his journey. The happy feelings brought on by his success and a rapprochement with his wife, each intensifying the other, never left him. He found a delightful place, a dream apartment for him and his wife. The spacious, high-ceilinged reception rooms with their old-fashioned décor, the gracefully appointed and comfortable study, the rooms for his wife and daughter, the classroom for his son - all of it seemed to have been designed with them in mind. Ivan Ilyich took it upon himself to organize the fittings and furnishings; he chose the wallpaper, purchased furniture, predominantly of the old-fashioned style which he considered to be comme il faut, the upholstery... and the whole thing grew and grew, approaching the ideal that he had set himself. Even halfway through the refurbishment, the whole thing exceeded his expectations. He could see how elegant it would all be, quite comme il faut and devoid of vulgarity, when it was completed. As he went to sleep he would imagine what the large reception room was going to look like. When he glanced into the half-finished drawing-room he could envisage the fireplace, the screen, the whatnot and the little chairs dotted about the room, the plates and dishes on the walls and the bronze pieces, everything in its proper place. He enjoyed the thought of surprising Pasha and Lizanka, who were not without taste themselves. This was beyond their expectations. He had been particularly successful in tracking down antiques and buying them at bargain prices; they now gave the whole place an air of distinction. He deliberately understated everything in his letters home so that they would be surprised. He was so taken up with all of this that the work he loved so dearly interested him less than he had thought it would. In court he found his mind wandering; he would be miles away, wondering whether to have plain or moulded cornices with his curtains. He became so involved that he often did the work himself, rearranging the furniture and rehangng the curtains. On one occasion, climbing a stepladder to show a dull-witted upholsterer how to hang the draperies, he slipped and fell, though he was strong and agile enough to hold on, and all he did was bump his side on a window-frame knob. The bruised place hurt for a while but it soon passed off. And all this time Ivan Ilyich felt particularly well and in the best of spirits. 'I seem to have shed fifteen years,' he wrote home. He had hoped to get it all finished by the end of September, but things dragged on until mid-October. Still, it was magnificent, and he wasn't the only one to say so - everybody did.

But these were essentially the accoutrements that appeal to all people who are not actually rich but who want to look rich, though all they manage to do is look like each other : damasks, ebony, plants, rugs and bronzes, anything dark and gleaming - everything that all people of a certain class affect so as to be like all other people of a certain class. And his arrangements looked so much like everyone else's that they were unremarkable, though he saw them as something truly distinctive. When he met his family at the railway station, brought them home and ushered them into his well-lit furnished apartment and a footman wearing a white tie opened the door into the entrance hall decorated with flowers, and then they went into the drawing-room and the study, ooh-ing and ah-ing with delight, he was a very happy man, showing them around everywhere, revelling in their praise and beaming with delight. That evening, as they took tea, when Pras-kovya asked him casually about his fall he gave a laugh and demonstrated how he had gone flying and given the upholsterer a scare.

‘It’s a good job I’m athletic. Any other man would have killed himself, but all I did was bruise myself a bit here. It hurts when you touch it, but it’s getting better. It is only a bruise.’

And so they began life in their new abode, where, as always happens with people who have recently settled in, they found themselves just one room short, and their new income wouldn’t quite run to it, though it was only a matter of five hundred roubles or so. Still, they were very nicely off, especially during the early days when not everything was finished and work was still to be done - things had to be bought, ordered, rearranged, adjusted. There were one or two disagreements between husband and wife, but both of them were so satisfied and so busy that everything resolved itself without serious arguments. When there was nothing more to be finished off they developed a feeling of dullness and a sense of something missing, but by this time they had got to know new people and formed new habits. Their lives had filled out.

Ivan Ilyich would return for lunch after a morning in court and in those early days he tended to be in a good mood; any slight distress that he suffered came from the apartment itself. (The slightest stain on a tablecloth or upholstery, or a loose cord on the draperies annoyed him; he had put so much effort into the furnishings that the slightest disturbance upset him.) But, all things considered, Ivan Ilyich’s life went along, as he saw it, just as life ought to go - easily, pleasantly, decently. He rose at nine, drank some coffee, read the newspaper, then put on his uniform and went to court. There, the collar that he worked in had been worn into shape and he soon found that it fitted him well - the petitioners, the enquiries received, the office, the public sessions and the administrative meetings. In all of this the trick was to eliminate the element of crude everyday life that always disrupts the smooth flow of official business; no relationships should be entered into beyond the official ones, the reason behind any relationship had to be strictly official and the relationship itself had to be strictly official. Say, for example, a person arrives wanting to know something. This is not the responsibility of Ivan Ilyich; he can have no relationship with such a person. But if this person were to approach him in his capacity as a member of the judiciary and in a relationship that can be set down on letterhead paper, within the terms of that relationship Ivan Ilyich will do anything he can, and do it decisively, while maintaining a semblance of friendly human relations - nothing more than common courtesy. At the point where an official relationship breaks off, everything else breaks off, too. The skill of compartmentalizing the official side of things and keeping that apart from his own real life was one that Ivan Ilyich possessed in the highest degree; long practice and natural talent had enabled him to refine it to such a degree that now he could act like a virtuoso performer, occasionally allowing himself to mix human and official relationships by way of a joke. He allowed himself this liberty because he felt strong enough whenever necessary to reinstate the distinction between the official and the human by discarding the latter. This was more than just an easy, pleasant and decent thing for Ivan Ilyich to do - he was acting like a virtuoso performer. During his breaks he would have a smoke, drink tea and chat, exchange a word or two about politics, current affairs and cards, and a whole lot more about who was in and who was out. And he would go home tired, but feeling like a virtuoso performer, a first violin in the orchestra, who has given of his best. At home his daughter and his wife would either have been out visiting or would have entertained someone at home, while his son, back from school, would have had a session with his private tutors and gone on to cram whatever it is they teach in schools. Everything was fine. After dinner, if there were no guests, Ivan Ilyich sometimes read a book that people were talking about, and later in the evening he sat down to do some work, reading through papers, studying the law, comparing depositions and sorting them by statute. This neither bored nor amused him. He found it boring when he might have been playing whist, but if whist was off it was better than just sitting there on his own or with his wife. What gave Ivan Ilyich real pleasure, though, was having little dinner parties to which he would invite ladies and gentlemen of good social standing and passing the time with them precisely as such people invariably do pass the time, in the way that his drawing-room was exactly like all the others.

One day they held an evening party with dancing. Ivan Ilyich enjoyed it and everything went swimmingly, except for a big row between him and his wife over the cakes and sweets. Praskovya had had her own ideas, but Ivan Ilyich had insisted on bringing in an expensive caterer who had provided too many cakes; the leftovers had caused the row when the caterer's bill came to forty-five roubles. The row was a big one, very nasty, and it ended with Praskovya calling him a stupid fool while he clutched his head and muttered something about divorce. But he still enjoyed the party. The best people were there and Ivan Ilyich danced with Princess Tru-fonova, whose sister had famously founded the charity known as 'Take Away My Sorrow'. Pleasure derived from work was self-indulgence, pleasure derived from social-izing tickled his vanity, but real pleasure came to Ivan Ilyich only from playing cards. He was prepared to admit that, at the end of the day, with any amount of unpleasantness behind him, the one pleasure that outshone all others like a beacon was to sit down and play whist with quiet-mannered partners, good players, always in a four-some (sitting out was such a bore when there were five, and you had to pretend not to mind) , and playing seriously and playing well (when you got a decent hand) before going on to supper with a glass of wine. And after a game of cards, especially if he had won a small amount (big winnings were not nice) , Ivan Ilyich would go to bed in the very best of spirits.

This was how they lived. They moved in the best of circles, receiving people of quality, and the younger set.

In their attitude towards the circle of their acquaintances husband, wife and daughter were of one mind. Without collusion, each of them in the same way shrugged off and discarded all the shabby friends and relatives who flocked around fawning on them in the drawing-room with the Japanese plates on the walls. It wasn't long before the shabby friends stopped flocking around and left the Golovin family to the best people in society and no one else. Young men were attracted to their little Liza and one examining magistrate by the name of Petrishchev, the son of Dmitriy Ivanovich Petrishchev and his sole heir, became so attentive towards her that Ivan Ilyich mentioned this once or twice to Praskovya and wondered whether they ought perhaps to take them out for a ride in a troika or set up some private theatricals. This was how they lived. This was how things went, nothing changed, and everything was fine.

They were all in good health. The fact that Ivan Ilyich sometimes complained of a strange taste in his mouth and a funny feeling in his left side didn't count as ill health. But as it happened this funny feeling began to get worse and turned into, if not pain exactly, a constant dragging sensation in his side, which put him in a bad mood. And this bad mood, which got worse and worse, began to spoil the pleasant, easy-going and respectable way of life that the Golovins had just set up for them-selves. There were more and more quarrels between husband and wife, the pleasant, easy-going way of life lapsed, and they were hard put to keep up an appearance of decency. Once again scenes became more and more frequent. They were left once again with nothing more than those little islands, all too few of them, on which husband and wife could come together without an explosion.

And now Praskovya began to say, not without justification, that her husband was a hard man. With her usual capacity for exaggeration she claimed that he had always been horrible like that and only her good nature had enabled her to put up with it for twenty years. It was true that all the arguments now began on his side. His jibes always started just as they sat down to dinner, often over the soup. There was always something - if it wasn't chipped crockery or something wrong with the food, he would go on about his son putting his elbow on the table or his daughter's hair. And it was always Praskovya's fault. To begin with, Praskovya would take issue with him and say something nasty, but on a couple of occasions he flew into such a rage at the beginning of dinner that she realized this was a pathological condition brought on by consuming food, so she bit it all back, stopped objecting and got on with her dinner as fast as she could. Praskovya took great pride in biting things back. Convinced that her husband was a horrible man who had made her life a misery, she was now sorry for herself. And the sorrier she became, the more she hated her husband. She began to wish he was dead, and then not to, because without him there would be no income. All of which made her even more exasperated with him. She felt thoroughly miserable at the thought that not even his death could rescue her. She was exasperated, though she hid it, but her hidden exasperation served only to strengthen his exasperation.

After one scene during which Ivan Ilyich had been particularly unfair and after which, by way of explanation, he had admitted being exasperated but claimed he was ill, she told him that if he was ill he needed treatment and insisted that he must go and see a famous doctor.

He did. The whole thing turned out just as he had expected, and as it always does. He was made to wait, the doctor was full of his own importance - an attitude he was familiar with because it was one that he himself assumed in court - then came all the tapping and listening, the questions with predetermined and obviously superfluous answers, the knowing look that seemed to say, 'Just place yourself in our hands and we'll sort it out, we know what we're doing, there's no doubt about it, we can sort things out the same way as we would for anyone you care to name.' It was just like being in court. The way he looked at the accused in court was exactly the way he was being looked at now by the famous doctor.

The doctor was holding forth. Such-and-such demonstrates that in your insides there is such-and-such, but if this is not confirmed by our tests on this-and-that then you will need to go on to such-and-such. And if you go on to such-and-such, then... and so on. As far as Ivan Ilyich was concerned there was only one question that mattered : is this condition life-threatening or not? But the doctor treated this question as irrelevant, and ignored it. From the doctor's point of view it was a pointless question not worthy of discussion; the only thing was a balancing of probabilities - floating kidney, chronic colitis, problem with the blind gut. The question of Ivan Ilyich living or dying didn't arise; there was just this conflict between the floating kidney and the blind gut. And before his very eyes the doctor resolved the conflict at a brilliant stroke in favour of the floating kidney, with the sole proviso that new evidence might emerge from the urine test, and if that happened the case would have to be reviewed. All of it from start to finish was precisely what Ivan Ilyich himself had done to the accused a thousand times and with no less brilliance. Brilliant indeed was the doctor's summing-up of the situation as he looked in triumph bordering on delight over his glasses at his own prisoner in the dock. From the summary Ivan Ilyich drew only one conclusion : he was in a bad way and the doctor didn't care, nobody cared probably, but he was in a bad way. And this conclusion left Ivan Ilyich with a sickly feeling, filling him with self-pity and great animosity towards the doctor who showed so much indifference to such an important question.

But he said nothing about it. He got up, laid his money on the table and said, with a sigh, 'I'm sure that when we're ill we ask a lot of pointless questions. But, er, is it life-threatening or not...?'

The doctor glared at him through one eye over his glasses as if to say, 'Prisoner in the dock, if you will not confine yourself to answering the questions put to you I shall have to arrange for you to be removed from the courtroom.'

'I have already told you what I consider necessary and appropriate. Anything further will be determined by the tests.' The doctor bowed.

Ivan Ilyich walked out slowly, climbed gloomily into his sledge and drove home. All the way back he kept going over in his mind everything the doctor had said, trying to translate his confusingly complex technicalities into everyday speech and find in them an answer to one question : am I in a bad way, a really bad way, or is it nothing to worry about just now? And it seemed to him that the message from all that the doctor had said was yes, you're in a very bad way. Ivan Ilyich thought the streets looked dismal. The drivers looked dismal, the houses looked dismal, and so did the pedestrians and the shops. And in the light of the doctor's confusing pronouncements the pain, that dull, nagging pain that never went away, was taking on a new and more serious significance. It was with a new feeling of dejection that Ivan Ilyich focused on it.

He reached home and started to tell his wife. His wife listened closely, but halfway through his account their daughter came in wearing a little hat - she and her mother were on their way out. She made an effort to sit down and listen to his boring story, but she couldn't contain herself for long and her mother gave up listening.

'Well, I'm very pleased,' said his wife. 'And now, you listen to me. Make sure you take your medicine properly. Give me the prescription and I'll send Gerasim to the chemist's.' And she went off to get dressed.

He had hardly paused for breath while she was in the room, and when she went out he gave a deep sigh.

‘Oh well,’ he said. ‘Maybe that’s right. Nothing to worry about just now...’

He started taking his medicine and following the doctor’s instructions, though these were changed once the urine test results were in. But at this point it turned out that there was some confusion over the test itself and what was supposed to follow it. Without getting at the doctor, it was becoming clear that what was going on was not what the doctor had said. He must have overlooked something, or he had been telling lies, or he was hiding something.

Nevertheless, Ivan Ilyich started to follow his instructions, and from the process of doing so he derived some comfort for a while. Since his visit to the doctor Ivan Ilyich had made it his main preoccupation to follow all instructions to the letter in matters of hygiene, the taking of medicine, focusing on his pain and monitoring all his bodily functions. His main interests were in human sickness and human health. When he overheard anyone talking about people who had fallen ill, died or recovered, especially if the illness sounded like his own, he tried to hide his agitation but he listened closely, asked lots of questions and applied what he heard to his own illness.

The pain was not getting any less, but Ivan Ilyich made every effort to make himself believe he was feeling better. And he was able to delude himself as long as nothing upset him. But the moment he fell out with his wife, or something went wrong at work or he got a bad hand at whist, he felt the full force of his illness. Before this he had been able to withstand setbacks like these, expecting to put things right before long, to win through, succeed again, come out with a grand slam. But now the slightest setback cut the ground from under him and left him in despair. He would say to himself, ‘Look at that. I was just starting to get better and the medicine was just beginning to work, and now this damn thing comes up, this rotten luck...’ And he raged against his misfortune or against those people who were causing his problems and killing him off; he sensed that it was his own rage that was killing him and he couldn't control it. It ought to have been obvious to him that raging against his situation and the people around him was only feeding his illness and, because of that, he ought to ignore any unpleasant developments, but he thought the exact opposite : he told himself he needed peace of mind so he had to get on to anything that disrupted his peace of mind, and the slightest disruption left him exasperated. His situation was made worse by the fact that he had taken to reading medical books and consulting doctors. The decline was so gradual that he was able to delude himself by comparing one day with another and seeing little difference. But the moment he consulted a doctor he thought he was going downhill, and fast. Yet, despite this, he kept on consulting the doctors.

That month he went to see another celebrity. This celebrity told him more or less the same as the first one, but put things differently. And the consultation with this celebrity served only to reinforce Ivan Ilyich's doubts and fears. A friend of a friend - a very good doctor - diagnosed something entirely different and, even though he swore he would get better, his questions and assumptions confused Ivan Ilyich even more and deepened his suspicions. A homeopath produced yet another diagnosis and gave him some medicine, which Ivan Ilyich took for a week or so without telling anyone. But by the end of the week, feeling no better and losing faith in every treatment that had been prescribed so far including that one, he felt more despondent than ever. One day a lady of his acquaintance talked to him about the curative powers of icons. Ivan Ilyich caught himself listening closely to what she was saying, and beginning to accept it as fact. This scared him. 'Am I really going weak in the head?' he wondered. 'Nonsense. It's all rubbish! I'm not falling for stupid ideas like that. I'd rather pick one doctor and stick to what he says. That's what I'm going to do. That's it. I'm going to stop thinking about it, and follow the treatment to the letter until the summer. Then we'll see. No more shilly-shallying.' This was easy to say but impossible to do. The pain in his side went on wearing him down and seemed to be getting worse, nagging incessantly, while the taste in his mouth got more and more peculiar and he began to think that his breath smelt awful, and his appetite and strength fell away. The time for fooling himself was over : something new and dreadful was going on inside Ivan Ilyich, something significant, more significant than anything in his whole life. And he was the only one who knew it; the people around him didn't know, or didn't want to know - they thought that every-thing in the world was going on as before. This was what tormented Ivan Ilyich more than anything. He could see that his family - especially his wife and daughter, whose visiting season was in full swing - had no inkling; it annoyed them that he was not much fun and asked so much of them - as if he was to blame. Despite their best efforts to hide it, he could see that he was in their way. His wife had developed an attitude to his illness and she was sticking to it whatever he might say or do. Her attitude went like this : 'You know what it's like,' she would say to her friends. 'Ivan Ilyich can't be like other people. He won't stick to his treatment. One moment he takes his drops and eats what he's supposed to, and goes to bed when he should; the next day, if I'm not watching him, he doesn't take his medicine, he eats sturgeon - which he's not allowed - and he stays up playing whist until one in the morning.'

'Oh, come on,' says Ivan Ilyich. 'I did that once, with Pyotr Ivanovich.'

'What about yesterday, with Shebek?'

'It made no difference. I couldn't sleep with all that pain...'

'Well, it doesn't matter why. Only you'll never get better like that, and it's getting us down.'

Praskovya's attitude towards Ivan Ilyich's illness, of which she made no secret to other people or to him, was that it was all his fault; he was making his wife's life a misery yet again. Ivan Ilyich felt she was doing this unconsciously, but that didn't make things any easier for him.

In court Ivan Ilyich noticed, or thought he noticed, the same strange attitude towards him. There were times when he thought people were watching him closely like a man who was about to give up his job; at other times his associates would make friendly little jokes about the way he worried over his health, as if this ghastly, fearful, unheard-of thing that had got going inside him and was now incessantly gnawing at him and inexorably taking him away was a good subject and a laughing matter. The one who infuriated him most was Schwartz, with his playfulness, joie de vivre and all-round respectability which recalled the Ivan Ilyich of ten years before.

His friends have come round for a game of cards. They take their places and deal, softening the new cards. He sorts his diamonds - seven of them. His partner bids no trumps and supports him with two diamonds. Couldn't be better. This should be a wonderful, joyous moment - a grand slam is on. But suddenly he feels that gnawing pain, that taste in his mouth, and he is struck by the bar-barity of rejoicing in a grand slam.

He glances across at his partner, Mikhail Mikhaylovich, who is tapping the table with an eager hand, politely and graciously holding back from grabbing the tricks and pushing them towards Ivan Ilyich so that he can enjoy the pleasure of raking them in without having to make any effort or reaching very far. 'Does he think I'm too weak to reach out?' thinks Ivan Ilyich, forgetting what are trumps and overtrumping his partner with his own, which leaves them three tricks short of a grand slam. And worst of all, he can see how upset Mikhail Mikhaylovich is, and he doesn't care. And it is awful to think why he doesn't care.

They can all see that he is distraught, and they say to him, 'We can stop if you're feeling tired. Why don't you have a rest?' Rest? No, he's not tired. They finish the rub-ber. They are all gloomy and silent. Ivan Ilyich senses that he has caused the gloom, and he cannot dispel it. They have supper and go home, and Ivan Ilyich is left there alone with the knowledge that his life has been poisoned and is poisoning other people's lives, and the poison is not wearing off, it is working its way deeper and deeper into his very being.

And he has to take this knowledge to bed with him, along with the physical pain and the terror, often to spend a near-sleepless night because of the pain. And next morning he has to get up again, put on his clothes, go to court, talk, write or, if he doesn't go out, stay in with every one of those twenty-four hours that make up a day and a night, each one of them an agony. And he has to live like this on the edge of destruction, alone, with nobody at all to understand and pity him.

One month passed like this, then another. His brother-in-law came to their town to stay with them for the New Year celebrations. Ivan Ilyich was in court when he arrived. Praskovya was out shopping. On his return Ivan Ilyich walked into his study and found his brother-in-law already there, a strong, fit young man, busy unpacking his own suitcase. He looked up when he heard Ivan Ilyich approaching and stared at him in silence for a moment. That stare told Ivan Ilyich every-thing. His brother-in-law opened his mouth to exclaim, but managed to restrain himself. That movement confirmed everything.

‘I’ve changed, haven’t I?’

And after this, however hard Ivan Ilyich tried to raise the subject of his appearance, his brother-in-law wouldn’t say a word. Praskovya arrived home and her brother went to see her. Ivan Ilyich locked the door and went to have a good look at himself in the mirror, full face, then in profile. He picked up a photograph of himself with his wife and compared his likeness with what he now saw in the mirror. The difference was enormous. Then he pulled his sleeves up, looked at his arms, pulled his sleeves back down and sat down on an ottoman, looking blacker than night.

‘No, no. I mustn’t,’ he told himself. He jumped up and went to his desk, where he opened a file and began to read, but he couldn’t go on. He opened the door and went out into the hallway. The door into the drawing-room was shut. He tiptoed over to it and started to listen.

‘No, you’re exaggerating,’ Praskovya was saying.

‘What do you mean, exaggerating? You can’t see it. He’s a dead man. Look at his eyes - there’s no light in them. What is it he’s got exactly?’

‘Nobody knows. Nikolayev [yet another doctor] said something, but I don’t know what it was. Leshchetitsky [the celebrity] said the exact opposite...’

Ivan Ilyich walked away back into his room, lay down and started to think things over. ‘Kidney, a floating kid-ney...’ He could remember everything the doctors had told him about it becoming detached and starting to wander. With an effort of his imagination he tried to catch the kidney, stop it moving and fix it strongly. It seemed to take so little effort. ‘No, I’m going back to Pyotr Ivanovich [the friend who was the doctor’s friend].’ He rang the bell, ordered the carriage and prepared to go out.

'Jean , where are you going?' asked his wife, looking very gloomy but uncharacteristically kind.

The uncharacteristic kindness infuriated him. He gave her a dark look. 'I've got to go and see Pyotr Ivanovich.'

He went to see the friend with the friend who was the doctor, and on with him to the doctor himself, who was in. They had a long talk.

Going through the details of anatomy and physiology in terms of what the doctor considered to be happening in his insides made everything quite clear to him.

There was a little bit of something, a tiny little thing, in his blind gut. It could all be put right. By raising the energy level in one organ and lowering the activity of another, absorption could be achieved and everything would be all right. He was a little late for dinner. He talked cheerfully after dinner, but for some time he couldn't bring himself to go to his room and work. Eventually he did go off to his study and he got straight down to it. He worked at the files for a while, but he couldn't shrug off the awareness that he had some important unfinished personal business that would have to be attended to in the end. When he had finished the files he remembered that this personal business meant thinking about his gut. But instead of giving in to this he went to take tea in the drawing-room. They had guests - there was conversation, piano-playing and singing - and among them was the examining magistrate who was such a good match for his daughter. As Praskovya remarked, he enjoyed the evening more than usual, but never for a minute did he forget that he had some important unfinished thinking to do, about his gut. At eleven o'clock he said goodnight and went to his room. He had been sleeping alone since his illness began, in a tiny little room next to his study. He went in, undressed and took up a Zola novel, but instead of reading it he lapsed into thought. And in his imagination the longed-for healing of his blind gut took place; absorption was followed by evacuation and its proper function was restored. 'Yes, that's how it goes,' he said to himself. 'All you have to do is give nature a helping hand.' He remembered his medicine, eased himself up and took it, then lay on his back focusing on the good that the medicine was doing and the way it was getting rid of the pain. 'Keep taking it regularly and avoid anything harmful. I feel a bit better already, a lot better.' He felt his side - no pain to the touch. 'No, there's no feeling there. It really is getting a lot better.' He put out the candle and lay on his side...

Absorption; the blind gut was curing itself. Then suddenly he could feel the same old dull gnawing pain, quiet, serious, unrelenting. The same nasty taste in his mouth. His heart sank and his head swam. 'O God! O God!' he muttered. 'It's here again, and it's not going away.' And suddenly he saw things from a completely different angle. 'The blind gut! The kidney!' he said to himself. 'It's got nothing to do with the blind gut or the kidney. It's a matter of living or... dying. Yes, I have been alive, and now my life is steadily going away and I can't stop it. No. There's no point in fooling myself. Can't they all see - everybody but me - that I'm dying? It's only a matter of weeks, or days - maybe any minute now. There has been daylight; now there is darkness. I have been here ; now I'm going there. Where ?' A cold shiver ran over him; he stopped breathing. He could hear nothing but the beat-ing of his heart.

'When I'm dead, what happens then? Nothing happens. So where shall I be when I'm no longer here? Is this really death? No, I won't have it!' He jumped up, tried to light the candle, fumbling with trembling hands, dropped the candle and the stick on the floor and flopped back down on to his pillow. 'Why bother? It doesn't make any difference,' he said to himself, staring into the darkness with his eyes wide open. 'Death. Yes, it's death. And not one of them knows, or wants to know. They have no pity for me. Too busy playing.' (Through the door he could hear the distant sounds of a singing voice and the accompaniment.) 'They don't care, but they're going to die, too. Fools! Me first, then them, but they've got it coming to them. And they're enjoying themselves! Animals!' He was choking with spite. And he felt a wave of agonizing, unbearable misery. It surely wasn't possible that everybody everywhere should be condemned to this awful horror. He sat up.

'Something's not right. I've got to calm down and think it through from the beginning.' And he began to think. 'Yes, the beginning of the illness. I banged my side, but I felt just the same that day and the next. A bit of dis-comfort, then a bit more, then doctors, depression, worry, more doctors, and all the time I was getting nearer and nearer to the edge. Less and less strength. Nearer and nearer. And I've been wasting away. No light in my eyes. Death is here, and I've been worrying about my gut. Worrying about getting my gut better, and this is death. Is it really death?

Horror swept over him again, he gasped for breath, bent over and groped for the matches, leaning with one elbow on the bedside table. It was in his way, hurting him; he lost his temper with it, pressing down on it even harder in exasperation, and knocked it over. Breathless and in despair, he flopped down on to his back, expecting to die at any moment.

By this time the guests were leaving. Praskovya was seeing them out. She heard something fall, and came in.

'What's the matter?'

'Nothing. I just dropped something.'

She went out and came back with a candle. He lay there, puffing and panting heavily like a man who has just run a mile. His eyes settled on her.

'What's the matter, Jean ?'

'No-thing. I... dropped it.' ('No use talking to her. She won't understand,' he thought.)

And she didn't. She picked up the candle and lit it for him, then she hurried out of the room to say goodnight to another guest.

When she came back he was still lying there on his back, staring upwards.

'What's wrong? Are you feeling worse?'

'Yes.'

She shook her head and sat down.

'Listen, Jean. I think perhaps we ought to ask Lesh-chetitsky to visit you at home.'

This meant asking the celebrated doctor to come to them, whatever the expense. He gave her a vitriolic smile and said no. She sat there for a while, then came over and kissed him on the forehead.

He hated her with every fibre of his being while she was kissing him, and it took all his strength not to push her away.

‘Goodnight. God willing, you’ll soon go to sleep.’

‘Yes.’

Ivan Ilyich could see that he was dying, and he was in constant despair.

In the depths of his soul Ivan Ilyich knew he was dying but, not only could he not get used to the idea, he didn’t understand it, couldn’t understand it at all.

All his life the syllogism he had learned from Kiese-wetter’s logic - Julius Caesar is a man, men are mortal, therefore Caesar is mortal - had always seemed to him to be true only when it applied to Caesar, certainly not to him. There was Caesar the man, and man in gen-eral, and it was fair enough for them, but he wasn’t Caesar the man and he wasn’t man in general, he had always been a special being, totally different from all others, he had been Vanya with his mama and his papa, with Vitya and Volodya, with his toys, and the carriage-driver, then little Katya, with all the delights, sorrows and rapture of child-hood, boyhood and youth. Did Caesar have anything to do with the smell of that little striped leather ball that Vanya had loved so much? Was it Caesar who had kissed his mother’s hand like that, and was it for Caesar that the silken folds of his mother’s dress had rustled the way they did? Was he the one who had rebelled at law school over the provision of snacks? Had Caesar been in love like him? Could Caesar chair a session like him?

Yes, Caesar is mortal and it’s all right for him to die, but not me, Vanya, Ivan Ilyich, with all my feelings and thoughts - it’s different for me. It can’t be me having to die. That would be too horrible.

These were the feelings that came to him.

‘If I had to be like Caesar and die, I would have been aware of it, an inner voice would have told me, but there hasn’t been anything like that on the inside. I’ve always thought - and all my friends have, too - that we’re not the same as Caesar. And now look what’s happened!’ he said to himself. ‘It can’t be. It can’t be, but it is. How can it be? What’s it all about?’

He couldn't understand, and he tried to banish the idea - it was false, wrong and morbid - and replace it with proper, healthy thinking. But the same thought - it wasn't just a thought but something that seemed like reality - kept coming back and facing him.

And in order to dispel these thoughts he started calling up different thoughts one after another, hoping to get support from them. He tried to get back to his earlier ways of thinking which had once protected him from thinking about death. But, strange to say, everything that once had protected him by hiding and eliminating any awareness of death was unable to perform that function now. In these latter days Ivan Ilyich spent most of his time trying to get back to the earlier ways of feeling that had protected him from death. He would say to himself, 'I must get down to some work. When all's said and done it's what I've been living for.' And he would go off to court banishing all his doubts, get into conversation with his colleagues and casually take his seat as he had done so many times before, contemplating the crowd before him with a pensive air and resting his wasted hands on the oaken arms of his chair, leaning over in his usual way to exchange whispered words with a colleague while toy-ing with a file before raising his eyes suddenly and sitting up straight in order to go through the familiar words and begin the proceedings. But then suddenly there it was, the pain in his side, irrespective of where they had got to in the proceedings, and it was beginning to gnaw at him. Ivan Ilyich focused on it, drove the thought of it away, but it continued to make itself felt. It kept coming back, facing him and looking at him, while he sat there rigid, the fire went out of his eyes and he began to wonder whether It was the only truth. And his colleagues and subordinates looked on in distress, amazed that he, a man of such brilliant and subtle judgement, was getting confused and making mistakes. He would pull himself together, try to bring himself round and somehow bring the session to a conclusion, only to return home sadly aware that his judicial work could no longer hide him, as it once had done, from what he wanted to conceal, that he could not use his judicial work to rid himself of It. And the worst thing was that It was distracting him not in order to make him do something but only to get him to look It straight in the eye, just look at It and do noth-ing but suffer beyond words.

And in order to escape from this situation Ivan Ilyich sought other forms of consolation, other ways of screening it off; other screens appeared and for a while they seemed to be the saving of him, but immediately they were not so much destroyed as shone right through; it was as if It could penetrate anything, no defence being any good.

Sometimes in these latter days he would go into the drawing-room that he had furnished - the very room where he had had his fall, the room which (it was bitterly amusing to reflect) he had given his life to furnish, because he knew his illness had started with that bruise - he would go in and notice a scratch on a lacquered table top left behind by something sharp. Looking for the cause he would find it in the decorative bronzework on an album with one edge bent up. He would pick up the album, an expensive one which he had compiled with loving care, annoyed at the carelessness shown by his daughter and her friends - it was torn in places and some of the photographs were upside down. He would go to a lot of trouble sorting it out and bending the bronzework back into place.

Then it would occur to him to move this entire établissement of albums over into a corner near the flowers. He would call the footman. Either his wife or his daughter would come to help. They wouldn't agree, they would take issue with him, he would argue and lose his temper - but none of this mattered because he had stopped remembering It. It was nowhere to be seen.

But once, when he was moving something himself, his wife said, 'Let the servants do that. You'll hurt yourself again,' and suddenly It flashed through the screen - he saw It. It flashed at him and, even as he longed for It to disappear, he couldn't help focusing on his side - still there, the same ache that would not be ignored, and It was staring straight at him from behind the flowers. What was it all about?

'And that's the truth of it - I've lost my life here on this curtain, my battleground. Have I really? How horrible and how stupid! It can't be! It can't be, but it is.'

He would go into his study, lie down and find himself alone again with It. Face to face with It. Nothing to be done about It. Only stare at It and go cold.

How it came about in the third month of Ivan Ilyich's illness no one could have said, because it came on imperceptibly, by stages, but it happened that all of them - his wife, and daughter, and son, and the servants, and their friends, and the doctors, and most importantly he himself - everybody knew that the only interesting thing about him now was whether it would take him a long time to give up his place, finally release the living from the oppression caused by his presence, and himself be released from his suffering.

He slept less and less. He was given opium and injected with morphine, but this brought no relief. To begin with, the dull feeling of anguish which he experienced in his semi-conscious state gave him a sense of relief simply by being something new, but then it became just as agonizing as the raw pain, perhaps more so.

They gave him special food cooked from recipes provided by the doctors, but the food became more and more tasteless, more and more repulsive.

For the call of nature he also had special arrangements, and each time it was agonizing. The agony came from the dirtiness, the unseemliness, the smell and also the knowledge that someone else had to be involved in it.

But this most unpleasant business brought one consolation to Ivan Ilyich. The person who came to take things away was Gerasim, the peasant servant who waited on them at table.

Gerasim was a clean, fresh peasant lad, always bright and cheerful, who had fattened up on city food. To begin with, Ivan Ilyich was embarrassed to watch him, always so neatly dressed in his Russian costume, performing such a distasteful service.

One day as he got up from the chamber pot not strong enough to pull up his own trousers he collapsed into a soft armchair and looked down in horror at his bared puny thighs with their starkly protruding muscles.

Who should come in but Gerasim, wearing his thick boots and exuding both their nice tarry smell and that of the fresh winter air, Gerasim with his light but firm tread, sporting a clean hessian apron and a clean cotton shirt, with his sleeves rolled up his bare strong young arms, and without a glance at Ivan Ilyich - to spare the sick man's feelings he was clearly suppressing the joyful vitality that shone from his face - he walked over to the pot.

'Gerasim,' said Ivan Ilyich feebly.

Gerasim started, clearly worried that he might have done something wrong, and in one swift movement he presented to the sick man his fresh, kind, open young face which was showing the first traces of a beard.

'Yes, sir?'

'This is not very nice for you, is it? You'll have to for-give me. I can't help it.'

'Please don't worry, sir.' And Gerasim's eyes flashed as he bared his young white teeth. 'It's no trouble. You're a sick man.'

And with his quick strong hands he did his usual thing and walked out with a light step. And five minutes later with the same light step he came back in.

Ivan Ilyich was still sitting there in his armchair.

'Gerasim , 'he said, when the lad had replaced the clean, freshly washed chamber pot, 'would you mind helping me? Over here.' Gerasim came across. 'Lift me up, please. I can't manage it on my own, and I've sent Dmitriy away.'

Gerasim came over. In one movement that was as easy as his way of walking, he put his strong arms gently round Ivan Ilyich, lifted him up and held him with one hand, pulled up his trousers with the other, and tried to settle him down. But Ivan Ilyich asked to be taken across to the sofa. effortlessly and apparently without tightening his grip, Gerasim took him, almost carried him, to the sofa and settled him down there.

'Thank you. You do everything so... nicely. So well.'

Gerasim gave another smile and made as if to leave the room. But Ivan Ilyich felt so comfortable with him that he didn't feel like letting him go.

'That's better... Would you mind moving that chair over here? No, that one. Under my legs. It feels easier when my legs are up high.'

Gerasim brought the chair over, set it squarely on the floor without banging it down, and lifted Ivan Ilyich's legs up on to it. Ivan Ilyich felt an easing of the pain as Gerasim raised his legs.

'I feel better when my legs are up,' said Ivan Ilyich. 'Would you put that cushion under me?'

Gerasim did so. He raised his legs again and put the cushion under them. Again Ivan Ilyich felt better when Gerasim was holding his legs. When he lowered them he felt worse.

'Gerasim,' he asked, 'are you busy just now?'

'Not in the slightest, sir,' said Gerasim, who had learned from the townspeople how to speak to the masters.

'What do you have on at the moment?'

'What do I have on? I've done everything there is to do - except chop the firewood for tomorrow.'

'Well, I'd like you to hold my legs up. Would you mind?'

'Of course not. I don't mind.' Gerasim held his legs up, and Ivan Ilyich could have sworn that in this position he couldn't feel any pain.

'But what about the firewood?'

'Don't you worry about that, sir. We'll manage.'

Ivan Ilyich told Gerasim to sit down and hold his legs up. He struck up a conversation and, strangely enough, he seemed to feel better with Gerasim holding his legs.

After that Ivan Ilyich would send for Gerasim now and then and have his legs held up on his shoulders. He liked it when they talked to each other. Gerasim did all of this easily, willingly and with a kindliness that Ivan Ilyich found moving. Health, strength and vitality in all other people were offensive to Ivan Ilyich; only Gerasim's strength and vitality gave him comfort rather than distressed him.

Ivan Ilyich's worst torment was the lying - the lie, which was somehow maintained by them all, that he wasn't dying, he was only ill, and all he had to do was keep calm and follow doctor's orders and then something good would emerge. Whereas he knew that, whatever was done to him, nothing would emerge but more and more agony, suffering and death. And this lie was torture for him - he was tortured by their unwillingness to acknowledge what they all knew and he knew; they wanted to lie to him about his terrible situation, and they wanted him - they were compelling him - to be a party to this lie. All this lying to him, lie upon lie, on the eve of his death, lying that was inexorably reducing the sol-emn act of his death to the same level as their social calls, their draperies, the sturgeon for dinner... it was all a terrible torment for Ivan Ilyich. And strangely enough, on many occasions when they were acting out this farce in front of him, he was within a hair's breadth of scream-ing at them, 'Stop all this lying! You know and I know that I'm dying, so the least you can do is stop lying to me.' But he never quite had the nerve to do it. He could see that the awful, terrible act of his dying had been reduced by those around him to the level of an unpleas-ant incident, something rather indecent (as if they were dealing with someone who had come into the drawing-room and let off a bad smell) , and this was done by exploiting the very sense of decency that he had been observing all his life. He could see that no one had any pity for him because no one had the slightest desire to understand his situation. Gerasim was the only one who did understand his situation, and he was sorry for him. This was why Ivan Ilyich felt comfortable only with Ger-asim. It was a comfort to him when Gerasim, sometimes for nights on end, held his legs up and refused to go to bed, saying, 'Please don't worry about it, Ivan Ilyich. I'll catch up on my sleep.' Or else he would suddenly address him in familiar language and add, 'It'd be different if you weren't ill, but with things the way they are why shouldn't I help you out?' Gerasim was the only one who didn't lie to him; everything showed that he was the only one who understood what was going on and saw no need to hide it. He just felt sorry for his weak and emaciated master. Once, when Ivan Ilyich was dismissing him, he put it quite bluntly : 'We've all got to die one day. Why shouldn't I give you a hand?' This was to say there was a good reason for not making a fuss about helping out : he was doing it for a dying man and he hoped that when his time came someone would help him out in the same way.

Apart from all this lying, or perhaps because of it, the most tormenting thing of all for Ivan Ilyich was the fact that no one showed him any pity in the way that he wanted them to. There were some moments, after long periods of suffering, when what Ivan Ilyich wanted more than anything else - however embarrassed he would have been to admit it - what he wanted was for someone to take pity on him as if he were a sick child. He wanted to be kissed and cuddled and have a few tears shed over him in the way that children are cuddled and comforted. He knew he was a big man and something of a greybeard, which made this impossible, but nevertheless that is what he wanted. And his relationship with Gerasim offered something close to this, which was why the relationship with Gerasim gave him comfort.

Here is Ivan Ilyich wanting to weep, wanting to be cuddled and have tears shed over him, when in comes his colleague Shebek and, instead of weeping and getting some tenderness, Ivan Ilyich puts on a solemn and serious face, looks thoughtful and from sheer habit not only comments on the significance of a decision handed down by the Court of Cassation, but goes on to defend it strongly.

It was this living a lie, all around him and within him, that did most to poison the last days in the life of Ivan Ilyich.

It was morning. It was morning only because Gerasim had gone and Pyotr the servant was there, putting out the candles, opening one curtain and quietly tidying up. Morning or evening, Friday or Sunday - it didn't matter, it was all the same - grinding, agonizing pain, never for a moment relenting; an awareness of life hopelessly slipping away but not yet gone; the same terrible, relentless approach of hateful death, the only reality; and still all that lying. With all of this, what did the days, weeks and hours matter?

'Can I get you some tea, sir?'

'He likes good order. The masters must have their tea in the morning,' he thought, but all he said was, 'No.'

'Would you care to move over to the sofa, sir?'

'He wants to tidy the room, and I'm in the way. I am dirt and disorder,' he thought, but all he said was, 'No. Leave me alone.'

The servant went about his work again. Ivan Ilyich stretched out one hand. Pyotr came over ready to help.

'What can I do for you, sir?'

'My watch.'

Pyotr took the watch, which was lying nearby, and handed it over.

‘Half-past eight. Are they still in bed?’

‘No, sir, they’re not. Master Vasily [his son] has gone to school and madam asked me to wake her if you wanted her. Shall I do that?’

‘No. Don’t brother.’ Ivan Ilyich wondered whether to try some tea. Yes. ‘Bring me some tea.’

Pyotr moved towards the door. Ivan Ilyich felt terrified at the thought of being left alone. How could he stop him leaving? Oh yes, medicine. ‘Pyotr, would you give me my medicine?’ Well, why not? The medicine might help. He took a spoonful and swallowed it. No, it wouldn’t help. It was all rubbish. Just pretending. He felt sure of this as the old familiar taste returned, sickly and beyond hope. No, his faith was gone. And the pain, the pain, why couldn’t it ease up just for a minute? He gave a groan. Pyotr came back in.

‘No, carry on. Get me some tea.’

Pyotr left the room. Ivan Ilyich groaned, not really from the pain, however terrible that was, but from anguish. It was the same thing all the time, day and night, with no end to it. Make it soon. Make what soon? Death, darkness. No, no. Anything was better than death!

When Pyotr came back in with the tea tray Ivan Ilyich looked at him distractedly for some time, unable to work out who he was or what he was doing there. Pyotr was embarrassed by the long look. The embarrassment brought Ivan Ilyich to his senses.

‘Yes,’ he said. ‘Tea... Good. Leave it there. But I’d like you to help me get washed and put a clean shirt on.’

And Ivan Ilyich began to wash himself. With pauses for rest he washed his hands and face, cleaned his teeth, combed his hair and then took a look in the mirror. He was horrified. The most horrible thing was the limp way his hair stuck to his pallid forehead.

As he had his shirt changed he knew it would be more horrible still to glance down at his body, so he looked away. At last it was done. He put on his dressing-gown, wrapped a rug around himself and sat down in the arm-chair with his tea. For one moment he felt refreshed, but at the first drink of tea there it was again, the same taste, the same pain. He forced the tea down, then lay back and stretched out his legs. He lay down and told Pyotr he could go.

The same thing again. One glittering drop of hope followed by a raging sea of despair, and nothing but pain, more pain, more anguish, always the same thing. It was depressing to be left alone, and he felt like calling somebody in, but he knew in advance that to have other people there would be even worse. Oh, for another dose of morphine - he might lose himself in that. He must tell that doctor to think of something else. 'I can't go on like this. I can't.'

An hour goes by like this, then another. The bell rings in the hall - could it be the doctor? Yes, it is the doctor, fresh and cheerful, fleshy and hearty, with a look on his face that seems to say, 'Well now, you seem to have had a bit of a fright, but we'll soon sort you out.' The doctor knows that this look is out of place here, but he has assumed it once and for all and he can't get rid of it any more than a man who has gone out visiting can get rid of the frock-coat he put on that morning.

The doctor rubs his hands cheerfully, reassuringly.

'Chilly out there. Thick frost. Give me a minute to get warmed up.' His manner of speaking implies that he won't take long, he just needs to warm up and once he is warmed up he'll put everything right.

'Right then. How are you feeling?'

Ivan Ilyich senses that the doctor feels like saying, 'How's tricks?' but even he can see that this won't do, so he says, 'What sort of night did you have?'

Ivan Ilyich fixes the doctor with a look that seems to ask whether anything would ever make him feel too ashamed to go on lying. The doctor does not wish to understand.

So Ivan Ilyich says, 'No change. Terrible. The pain won't go. It's there all the time. There must be something you can do!'

'Yes, it's normal for patients like you to say that sort of thing. Right then. I think I'm warm enough now. Your good lady is a stickler for these things, but even she wouldn't say I was too cold. So. Good morning to you...' And the doctor shakes him by the hand.

And now, dropping all the banter, the doctor adopts a serious attitude and begins to examine the patient - pulse, temperature, tapping and listening.

Ivan Ilyich knows full well - it is beyond doubt - that this is all nonsense, an empty sham, but when the doctor goes down on his knees, reaches across him, applies his ear higher up and lower down, and then with the gravest look on his face performs a selection of gymnastic contortions, Ivan Ilyich accedes to this just as he once acceded to speeches from lawyers even when he was well aware that they were lying, and why they were lying.

The doctor is still kneeling on the sofa, busily tapping away, when from the doorway comes the rustling of a silk dress and Praskovya can be heard reproaching Pyotr for not letting her know the doctor has arrived.

She comes in, kisses her husband and immediately begins to make it clear that she has been up for some time and only a little misunderstanding has prevented her from being there when the doctor arrived.

Ivan Ilyich looks at her searchingly, resenting everything about her, the whiteness, fullness and cleanliness of her arms and neck, the sheen of her hair and the light in her eyes that are so full of life. He loathes her with every fibre of his being. Physical contact with her is agony for him because it brings on a surge of loathing.

Her attitude towards him and his illness is still the same. Just as the doctor has worked out an attitude towards his patients which he cannot now get rid of, she has worked out a particular attitude towards him - he is failing to do something he ought to do, and it's his fault, and she lovingly reproaches him for it - and she has not been able to rid herself of this attitude towards him.

'He just won't do as he's told! He forgets to take his medicine. And the worst thing is he will lie there in a position that must be bad for him - with his legs up.'

She described how he got Gerasim to hold his legs up for him.

The doctor gave a sweetly condescending smile. 'Can't be helped,' he seemed to be saying. 'These sick people do sometimes have silly ideas. We can't blame them.'

When the examination was over the doctor consulted his watch and then Praskovya informed Ivan Ilyich that, like it or not, she had invited a celebrated specialist to visit them that day and, along with Mikhail Danilovich (the name of the regular doctor) , he would conduct an examination and consultation.

‘Now please don’t argue with me. I’m doing this for myself,’ she said sarcastically, implying that she was doing it all for him and this alone deprived him of any right to refuse. He scowled and said nothing. He felt that the lies that enveloped him were now so messy that he could hardly make sense of anything.

Everything she did for him she was doing for herself, and she told him she was doing for herself what she was actually doing for herself, but she made it sound so implausible that he was forced to assume the opposite.

Sure enough, at half-past eleven, the celebrated specialist arrived. More soundings and grave consultations both in his presence and in the next room concerning the kidney and the blind gut, with questions and answers expressed with such an air of gravity that, instead of the real life-and-death question which was the only one staring him in the face, up came the question of his kidney and blind gut, which were not doing quite what they should and which would shortly be set upon by Mikhail Danilovich and made to work properly.

The celebrated specialist took his leave looking serious but not hopeless. And in answer to the question put to him diffidently by Ivan Ilyich, whose eyes were glistening with fear and hope, as to whether there was any possibility of recovery, he replied that nothing could be guaranteed but there was a possibility. The look of hope on Ivan Ilyich’s face as he watched the doctor leave was so pathetic that when she saw it Praskovya actually burst into tears as she walked out of the study to give the celebrated specialist his fee.

The lifting of his spirits induced by the doctor’s words of encouragement was short-lived. It was still the same room, the same pictures, curtains, wallpaper, medicine bottles, and the same body, his body, still suffering, racked with pain. And Ivan Ilyich began to moan, so they gave him an injection and he lapsed into unconsciousness.

When he came to, it was getting dark. They brought him his dinner. He forced down a little thin soup, then it was the same again, with another night coming on.

When dinner was over, at seven o'clock, Praskovya came in dressed for going out, with her ample breasts well supported and traces of powder on her face. That morning she had reminded him that they were going to the theatre. Sarah Bernhardt was in town, and they had a box which they had taken at his insistence. By now he had forgotten this, and he was offended to see her dressed up. But he hid his feelings when he remembered having insisted that they reserve the box and go, this being an aesthetic experience of educational value for the children.

As she came in Praskovya had looked pleased with herself, if rather guilty. She sat down on the edge of a chair and asked how he was feeling, though he could see that she was asking for the sake of asking rather than to find out, since she knew there was nothing to find out, and then she launched into what she felt she had to say, that nothing would have induced her to go out tonight, but the box had been reserved, Hélène and her daughter were going and so was Petrishchev (their daughter's fiancé, the examining magistrate), and they couldn't be allowed to go alone. But for that, she would have preferred to stay in with him. And he must be sure to follow the doctor's orders while she was out.

'Oh yes, and Fyodor[the fiancé]would like to come in. Do you mind? And Liza.'

'Let them come in.'

In came his daughter, dressed up to the nines, an exposed young body - while his body was causing him so much suffering. And she was flaunting it. Healthy and strong, obviously in love, she had no time for the illness, suffering and death that were marring her happiness.

In came Fyodor Petrovich, also in evening dress and sporting an à la Capoul hairstyle. The veins stood out on his long neck which was squeezed into its tight collar over a vast expanse of white shirtfront, and his narrow black trousers were tightly stretched over his strong thighs. One of his hands wore a close-fitting white glove and he carried an opera hat.

Creeping in unobtrusively behind him came the school-boy, wearing a new uniform and gloves, poor chap, with terrible dark blue rings under his eyes, the meaning of which was not lost on Ivan Ilyich.

He had always felt sorry for his son. And his fright-ened, compassionate look was dreadful to behold. Apart from Gerasim, Ivan Ilyich thought, Vasya was the only one who understood and felt sorry for him.

They all sat down and asked how he was feeling. Then for a while no one spoke. Liza asked her mother whether she had the opera glasses. Mother and daughter had a little argument about who had put them where. It ended nastily.

Fyodor asked Ivan Ilyich whether he had ever seen Sarah Bernhardt. At first Ivan Ilyich didn't quite catch what the question was, but then he said, 'No. Have you?'

'Yes. In Adrienne Lecouvreur. '

Praskovya mentioned something she had been particularly good in. Her daughter demurred. They were off into a conversation about her charm and naturalism as an actress, the same old conversation that everybody else has.

In the midst of it Fyodor looked across at Ivan Ilyich and suddenly broke off. The others looked, and they stopped, too. Ivan Ilyich was staring straight ahead, his eyes glittering, and he was obviously furious with them. Things had to be put right, but there was absolutely no way of putting things right. Somehow the silence had to be broken. No one made a move, and everyone was becoming terrified that the living lie demanded by propriety would somehow be shattered and seen by everyone for what it was. It was Liza who made the first move. She broke the silence. She wanted to cover up what everyone was feeling, but by speaking out she revealed it.

'Oh well, if we're going it's time we got started,' she said, glancing at her watch, a present from her father, and she smiled almost imperceptibly at her young man to convey something known only to the two of them as she got up, rustling her skirts.

They all got up, took their leave and drove off.

When they had gone Ivan Ilyich seemed to feel easier; the lie had gone, gone away with them - but the pain was still there. That same pain, that same feeling of dread made sure that nothing was harder, nothing easier. Every-thing was worse.

Once again the minutes passed one after another, then the hours one after another; it was always the same, end-lessly, and the inevitable end itself was all the more horrible.

‘Yes, send Gerasim in,’ he said in reply to a question from Pyotr.

It was late at night when his wife returned. She tiptoed into the room, but he heard her; he opened his eyes and rapidly closed them again. She wanted to dismiss Ger-asim and sit with him herself. He opened his eyes and said, ‘No. You go.’

‘Are you in a lot of pain?’

‘It doesn’t matter.’

‘Take some opium.’

He consented, and drank some. She went away.

Until about three in the morning he was in a state of excruciating pain and delirium. He dreamt that somehow he was being forced, along with his pain, into the depths of a narrow black sack, being forced further and further in and not quite getting there. It was a harrowing, agon-izing process. And he was scared, he wanted to get through and out, he was struggling, trying to help. Then suddenly he lost his hold and fell, and woke up. Gerasim was still there, sitting at the foot of the bed, dozing quietly, patiently. And he himself was lying there with his withered stockinged legs raised up on Gerasim’s shoulders. The same candle was there, with its shade, and the same unremitting pain.

‘Go away, Gerasim,’ he whispered.

‘I don’t mind, sir. I’ll just sit here for a bit longer.’

‘No, you go away.’

He lowered his legs, turned sideways on to one arm and felt sorry for himself. He waited only for Gerasim to go out into the next room, and then he could restrain himself no longer : he burst into tears like a child. He was weeping because of his own helpless state, and his loneliness, and other people's cruelty, and God's cruelty, and God's non-existence.

'Why hastThou done all of this? Why hastThou brought me to this point? Why oh why dostThou torture me like this?...'

He was not expecting any answers; he was weeping because there were not and could not be any answers. The pain struck him again, but he didn't move and didn't call out. He said to himself, 'Here it comes again. Hit me then! But what's it for? What have I done toThee? What is it for?'

Then he fell silent, and not only stopped crying, he stopped breathing. Suddenly he was all ears; he seemed to be listening not to a voice speaking in words but to the voice of his soul, the thoughts welling up in his mind.

'What do you want?' was the first expressible concept that came to him. 'What do you want? What do you want?' he repeated to himself. 'What is it?'

'No more pain. Staying alive,' came the answer.

And once again his concentration became so intense that not even the pain could distract him.

'Staying alive? How?' asked the voice of his soul.

'Oh, life like it used to be. Happy and good.'

'Life like it used to be? Happy and good?' came the voice.

And in his imagination he started to run through the best times of his happy life. But what was strange was that all the best times of his happy life no longer seemed anything like what they had been before. Nothing did - except the first recollections of his childhood. There, in his childhood, there was something truly happy that he could have lived with if it returned. But the person living out that happiness no longer existed; it was like remembering someone quite different.

At the point where he, today's Ivan Ilyich, began to emerge, all the pleasures that had seemed so real melted away now before his eyes and turned into something trivial and often disgusting.

And the further he was from childhood, the nearer he got to the present day, the more trivial and dubious his pleasures appeared. It started with law school. That had retained a little something that was still really good : there was fun, there was friendship, there was hope. But in the last years the good times had become more exceptional. Then, at the beginning of his service with the governor, some good times came again : memories of making love to a woman. Then it became all confused, and the good times were not so many. After that there were fewer still; the further he went the fewer there were.

Marriage... an accident and such a disappointment, and his wife's bad breath, and all that sensuality and hypocrisy! And the deadliness of his working life, and those money worries, going on for a year, two years, ten, twenty - always the same old story. And the longer it went on the deadlier it became.

'It's as if I had been going downhill when I thought I was going uphill. That's how it was. In society's opinion I was heading uphill, but in equal measure life was slipping away from me... And now it's all over. Nothing left but to die!

'So what's it all about? What's it for? It's not possible. It's not possible that life could have been as senseless and sickening as this. And if it has really been as sickening and senseless as this, why do I have to die, and die in agony? There's something wrong. Maybe I didn't live as I should have done?' came the sudden thought. 'But how can that be when I did everything properly?' he wondered, instantly dismissing as a total impossibility the one and only solution to the mystery of life and death.

'So, what do you want now? To live? Live how? To live as you do in court when the usher yells out, "The Court is in session!"' 'Court in session, sessions in court,' he repeated to himself. 'Here comes judgement! But I'm not guilty,' he cried out angrily. 'What is this for?'

And he stopped crying, turned to face the wall and let his mind dwell on one single question : 'Why all this horror? What's the reason for it?'

But, for all his dwelling on it, he could find no answer. And whenever the thought occurred to him - which it often did - that all this was happening to him because he had been living the wrong kind of life, he would instantly remember how proper his life had been and dismiss such a bizarre notion.

Another two weeks went by. Ivan Ilyich no longer rose from his sofa. He didn't care to lie in bed, so he lay on the sofa. And lying there, almost invariably facing the wall, he endured all the inexplicable agony in solitude, and in solitude he brooded on the same inexplicable question : 'What is this? Can it really be death?' And an inner voice would reply, 'Yes, that's what it is.' 'What is this torture for?' And the voice would reply, 'It's just there. It's not for anything.' Above and beyond this there was nothing.

From the very onset of his illness, since the first time he had driven round to see the doctor, his life had divided itself into two opposite and alternating moods : either despair and the anticipation of a horribly incomprehensible death, or hope accompanied by an obsessive fascination for the workings of his body. He had eyes for only two things : either a kidney or blind gut that had temporarily stopped doing what it should do, or a horribly incomprehensible death, which there was no way to avoid.

These two moods alternated in him from the very out-set of his illness, but the further the illness progressed the more dubious and preposterous his notions of a kidney became, and the more realistic was his awareness of impending death.

All he had to do was remember what he had been like three months before and what he was now, remember how steadily he had gone downhill, and any possibility of hope was shattered.

In his last days of solitude, when he found himself lying there facing the back of the sofa, solitude in the midst of a populous city and his own friends and family - a solitude more complete than anything anywhere, at the bottom of the sea or in the bowels of the earth - in these last days of terrible solitude Ivan Ilyich lived only by recreating the past. Images of his past life came back to him one after another. This process always began with the most recent ones and proceeded back to the most remote, to childhood, and there it lingered. If Ivan Ilyich remembered the stewed prunes he had been offered for dinner that day he would remember the raw and wrinkly

French prunes of his childhood, their special taste and how his mouth watered when he got down to the stone, and along with the memory of that taste would come a whole series of further memories of that time : his nurse, his brother, his toys. 'No, don't, not that. It's too painful,' Ivan Ilyich would say to himself, transporting himself back to the present : there it was - a button of the back of the sofa, creases in the morocco. 'Morocco is expensive, and it doesn't wear well. It started an argument. But that was different morocco and a different argument - when we tore father's briefcase and got punished, and mother brought us some tarts.' Once again his thoughts were settling on his childhood, and again they were too painful for Ivan Ilyich, so he tried to drive them away and think of something else.

And once again, along with this train of recollections, another train of recollections troubled his spirit - the way in which his illness had grown and got worse. Here, too, the further back he went the more life there was. More goodness in life, more of life itself. The two things were merging. 'It's like the pain getting worse and worse - all of my life has been getting worse and worse,' he thought. There was one point of light back there at the beginning of life, but after that everything had been getting blacker and blacker. 'In inverse proportion to the square of the distance from death,' he thought. And this image of a stone accelerating as it flies down imprinted itself on his soul. Life, a series of increasing sufferings, flies ever faster towards its end, the most terrible suffering. 'I'm flying somewhere...' He would shiver and shudder, trying to resist, but he knew by now that resistance was impossible, and he would turn his eyes to the back of the sofa, eyes that were weary of looking, but couldn't stop looking, at what lay ahead. And he was waiting, waiting for that terrible fall, shock and annihilation. 'Resistance is impossible,' he would say to himself. 'But if only I could see what it's all about! No, that's impossible, too. There would be an explanation if I could say I've been wrong in the way I've lived my life. But you couldn't say that. It's not possible,' he would tell himself, recalling how fastidious he had been about the propriety and respectability of his life. 'You can't say that. It's not possible,' he would tell himself, twisting his lips into a smile as if someone might see it and be taken in by it. 'There is no explanation. Agony and death... What for?'

Two weeks went by like this. During those two weeks an event took place that Ivan Ilyich and his wife had been hoping for : Petrishchev made a formal proposal. It hap-pened one evening. The next morning Praskovya came in to see her husband, wondering how best to break the news of Fyodor's proposal, but during that night Ivan Ilyich's condition had taken another turn for the worse. Praskovya found him on the same sofa, but in a different position. He was lying flat on his back, moaning and staring ahead with a fixed look.

She started talking about his medicine. He transferred his gaze to her. She didn't finish what she had started to say; there was so much enmity in that gaze, and it was levelled straight at her.

'For Christ's sake, let me die in peace!' he said.

She made as if to leave the room, but at that moment in walked their daughter, who came over to say good morning. He gave her the same look he had directed at his wife, and in response to her enquiries about his health he said drily that soon he would no longer be a burden to them. Both of them sat on for a while, saying nothing, and then they left.

'What have we done wrong?' Liza asked her mother. 'Anyone would think it was our fault. I'm sorry for Papa, but why do we have to suffer?'

The doctor arrived at his usual time. Ivan Ilyich responded to him with a yes and no, fixing him with a malevolent look, and finally he said, 'Look, you know you can't help me. Just leave me alone.'

'We can ease the pain,' said the doctor.

'You can't. Leave me alone.'

The doctor went out into the drawing-room and told Praskovya that things were very bad. Only one thing could help - opium. That might ease the pain, which must be dreadful.

The doctor said that the physical pain must be dread-ful, which was true. But more dreadful than the physical pain was the suffering in spirit, his greatest agony.

His spiritual suffering took the form of a thought that had suddenly struck him that night as he looked at Ger-asim's sleepy-eyed, good-natured face with its high cheekbones. 'What if I really have been wrong in the way I've lived my whole life, my conscious life?'

It occurred to him that what had once seemed a total impossibility - that he had not lived his life as he should have done - might actually be true. It occurred to him that the slight stirrings of doubt he had experienced about what was considered good by those in the high-est positions, slight stirrings that he had immediately repudiated - that these misgivings might have been true and everything else might have been wrong. His career, the ordering of his life, his family, the things that pre-occupied people in society and at work - all of this might have been wrong. He made an attempt at defending these things for himself. And suddenly he sensed the feebleness of what he was defending. There was nothing to defend.

'But if it's like that,' he said to himself, 'and I am leav-ing this life knowing I have ruined everything I was given, and it can't be put right, what then?' He lay on his back and started to go through his whole life again in a different way. Next morning, when he saw his servant, then his wife, then his daughter, then the doctor - their every movement and every word bore out the terrible truth that had been revealed to him during the night. In them he saw himself and all he had lived by, and he could clearly see that it was all wrong; it was all a gross decep-tion obscuring life and death. This knowledge exacerbated his physical suffering, making it ten times worse. He moaned and writhed, and clutched at his clothing, which seemed to be choking and stifling him. And he hated them for it.

After being given a heavy dose of opium he lost con-sciousness, but by dinner time it had all begun again. He sent everyone away and lay there tossing and turning.

His wife came to him and said, 'Jean , darling, please do this for my sake.' (For her sake?) 'It can't do any harm, and it often helps. Look, it's nothing much. Even healthy people...'

He opened his eyes wide.

'What? Take communion? What for? I'm not doing that... Oh, I don't know...'

She burst into tears.

'All right, my dear? I'll send for our priest. He's such a nice man.'

'All right. That's fine,' he said.

When the priest came and heard his confession, Ivan Ilyich relaxed, feeling some relief from his doubts and therefore from his suffering, and he experienced a moment of hope. His mind turned again to his blind gut and the possibility of a cure for it. When he took communion there were tears in his eyes.

When he was laid down after taking communion he felt better for a while; there was hope that he might live on. His thoughts turned to the operation that he had been offered. 'I want to live. I do want to live,' he said to himself. His wife came in to greet him after communion. She said the usual things, and then added : 'You really do feel better, don't you?'

'Yes,' he said, looking away.

Her clothes, her figure, the look on her face, the sound of her voice - all said the same thing to him : 'This is wrong. Everything you have lived by, and still do, is a lie, a deception that hides life and death away from you.' And the moment this thought occurred to him, his hatred welled up, and along with the hatred came physical suffering and agony, and along with the agony came awareness of the inevitable destruction that was now so close. There was something different about it : a twisting, shooting pain, and constricted breathing.

The look on his face as he said 'Yes' had been dreadful. When he had got the word out, looking straight at her, he wrenched himself over face down remarkably quickly for one so weak, and roared at her : 'Get out! Go away! Leave me alone!'

From that moment on the screaming began. It went on unbroken for three days, so terrible that people two rooms away were horrified to hear it. At the moment when he had answered his wife he had realized he was done for, there was no way back, the end was here, the absolute end, and his unresolved doubts would remain as doubts.

‘Oh! Oh! Oh!’ he cried, varying the tone. He began by crying out, ‘Oh no!’ and went on screaming the letter ‘o’. Throughout the three days, during which time had ceased to exist for him, he struggled with the black sack into which he was being crammed by an invisible, unstop-pable force. He resisted like a condemned man resisting his executioner, knowing that he is not going to be spared, and with every minute that passed he sensed that, despite all his fighting and struggling, he was getting nearer and nearer to the thing that terrified him. He sensed that the pain came from being thrust into that black hole and, what was worse, not being able to get through. What was preventing him from getting through was his insistence that his life had been a good one. This vindication of his lifestyle was holding him down, pre-venting him from moving on, and causing him the greatest suffering.

Suddenly he felt a strong jolt in his chest and side, and a further constriction of his breathing. He was into the hole, and there at the end of the hole a kind of light was shining. What was happening to him was like when he had been in a railway carriage and you think you are going forwards but you are really going backwards, and suddenly you know what the right direction is.

‘Yes, it’s all been wrong,’ he told himself, ‘but that doesn’t matter. It’s possible to do the right thing. But what is the right thing?’ he wondered, and suddenly he was calm.

It was nearing the end of the third day, an hour before his death. At that very moment his schoolboy son crept in to see his father and came over to his bed. The dying man was still screaming desperately and waving his arms about. His hand happened to catch the boy’s head. The boy took hold of it, pressed it to his lips and burst into tears.

This was the very moment when Ivan Ilyich had fallen through and seen a light, and it was revealed to him that his life had not been what it should have been, but that it could still be put right. He was wondering what the right thing was, and he had calmed down, listening. Now he could feel someone kissing his hand. He opened his eyes and looked at his son. He felt sorry for him. His wife came over. He looked at her. With her mouth open and the tears not wiped away from her nose and cheek she was looking at him in despair. He felt sorry for her.

‘Yes, I’m hurting them,’ he thought. ‘They feel sorry for me, but they’ll be all right when I’m dead.’ He wanted to tell them this, but he wasn’t strong enough to get the words out. ‘Anyway... no good talking. Must do something.’ He looked at his wife, motioned to their son and said : ‘Take him away... sorry for him... and you...’ He tried to say, ‘Forgive me,’ but it came out as, ‘For goodness...’ Too weak to correct himself, he waved his hand knowing that he who needed to would understand.

And suddenly everything was clear to him : what had been oppressing him and would not go away was now going away, all at once, on two sides, ten sides, all sides. He felt sorry for them, and he must do something to stop hurting them. Set them free, and free himself from all this suffering. ‘So nice, and so simple,’ he thought. ‘But what about the pain?’ he wondered. ‘Where’s it gone? Hey, pain, where are you?’

He listened and waited.

‘Oh, here it comes. So what? Bring on the pain.’

‘What about death? Where is it?’

He was looking for his earlier, accustomed fear of death, but he couldn’t find it. Where was death? What death? There was no fear whatsoever, because there was no death.

Instead of death there was light.

‘So that’s it!’ he said suddenly, out loud. ‘Oh, bliss!’

All of this happened to him in a single moment, and the meaning of that moment was not going to change. For those present, his agony went on for another two hours. There was a rattling in his chest. His wasted body shook. Then the rattling and the wheezing dwindled away.

‘He’s gone!’ said someone over him.

He caught these words and repeated them in spirit. ‘Death has gone,’ he told himself.

‘It’s gone.’

He took in some air, stopped halfway through a deep breath, stretched out, and died.

It was autumn. Two carriages were bowling along the highway at a fast trot. In the first carriage there were two women. One was a lady, thin and pale. The other was her maid, with a shiny red face and a stout figure; her short, dry hair kept straggling out from under her faded bon-net, and she pushed it back fitfully with a red hand in a torn glove. Her full bosom, covered by a thick cloth of carpet material, exuded good health, and her black eyes were busy; one moment they were peering through the window at the fields flashing by, then they would glance across diffidently at the mistress, or watch the corners of the carriage with some concern. In front of the maid's nose dangled her mistress's bonnet, hanging from the rack, and on her knees lay a puppy. Her feet, raised up on boxes standing on the floor, could just about be heard drumming along with the creaking springs and the rat-tling of the window-panes.

With her hands folded on her lap and her eyes shut the lady rocked feebly against the cushions placed behind her back, frowned slightly and gave a little cough from time to time. She wore a white nightcap on her head, and a light blue scarf was wound round her delicate white neck. A straight parting disappeared under her nightcap, dividing her remarkably sleek, pomaded, light brown hair, and there was something deathly and desiccated in the white skin that formed the parting. The withered, yellowing skin hung loosely over the thin but beautiful contours of her face, with crimson on her prominent cheekbones. Her lips were dry and restless, her thinning eyelashes had no curl in them, and a cloth travelling cloak lay in straight folds across her sunken chest. Even though her eyes were shut, the lady's face gave an impression of weariness, irritation and continual suffering.

A footman, wedged into his seat with his elbows on the sides, was dozing on the box. The coach driver drove his four big, sweating horses, yelling them on and glancing back now and then at another driver calling to him from a little open carriage behind them. Broad tyre tracks spread themselves evenly in speeding parallel lines along the limy, muddy road. The sky was grey and cold, and a damp mist was settling on the fields. Inside the carriage it was stuffy, smelling of eau-de-Cologne and dust. The invalid lady put her head back and opened her eyes. Her eyes were splendidly dark, and glittering.

‘Again,’ she said, and her beautiful thin hand nervously pushed away the hem of her maid’s cloak which was brushing lightly against her leg, and her mouth was contorted with pain. Matryosha gathered up her cloak with both hands, half-rose on her strong legs and shifted away. Her fresh face was flushed bright red. The splendidly dark eyes of the invalid lady followed the maid’s every movement. Her mistress gripped the seat with both hands and also tried to lift herself and sit up higher, but she couldn’t manage it. Her mouth contracted and her whole face twisted itself into an expression of impotent, malevolent irony. ‘A fat lot of help you are! Oh, don’t bother! I can do it myself, and you needn’t shove all your bags behind me. Please don’t! No, don’t touch me. You’ve no idea!’ The lady closed her eyes, then raised her eyelids again sharply and glared at her maid. Matryosha looked back at her, biting her red lower lip. A heavy sigh arose in the invalid’s bosom, but it was a sigh that cut itself short as it turned into a cough. She looked away, scowl-ing, and clutched at her chest with both hands. When the coughing spasm was over she closed her eyes again and sat there without moving. The two carriages, one large and one small, drove into the village. Matryosha reached out from under her cover and made the sign of the cross.

‘What is it?’ asked her mistress.

‘A post station, madam.’

‘Why are you crossing yourself? That’s what I’m ask-ing you.’

The invalid turned towards the window and began crossing herself slowly, her eyes widening at the sight of the country church that her carriage was driving past.

The two carriages stopped together by the church. From the small one two men emerged : the invalid lady’s husband and a doctor. They walked over to the large carriage.

‘How are you feeling?’ asked the doctor, taking her pulse.

‘How are you, darling? Not too tired?’ asked her husband, in French. ‘Would you like to get out?’

Matryosha had scraped up her belongings and was squeezing back into the corner so as not to interfere with their conversation.

‘Not too bad. Just the same,’ the sick woman replied. ‘I’m not getting out.’

The husband stood there for a short while, then went into the station building.

Matryosha skipped down from the carriage and ran tiptoeing in through the gateway.

‘If I feel bad, that’s no reason for you to miss lunch.’ The sick lady gave a feeble smile as she spoke to the doctor, who was standing by her window.

‘They’re not bothered about me, any of them,’ she added, talking to herself, as soon as the doctor had walked gently away and trotted up the steps into the station house. ‘They’re all right, and that’s all that matters. Oh! My God!’

‘Well then, Edward Ivanovich,’ said the husband, rubbing his hands with a cheerful smile as he welcomed the doctor in. ‘I’ve told them to bring the lunch basket in. How does that strike you?’

‘Not a bad idea.’ replied the doctor.

‘How is she doing, then?’ the husband asked with a sigh, lowering his voice and raising his eyebrows.

‘I’ve told you. She won’t make it, not to Italy. She’ll need God’s grace to get to Moscow. Especially in this weather.’

‘What can we do, then? Oh, my God! My God!’ The husband buried his face in one hand. ‘Put it down here,’ he said to the man who was bringing in the lunch basket.

‘She should have stayed put,’ answered the doctor with a shrug.

‘Oh yes, but what could I have done?’ the husband protested. ‘Look, I did all I could to stop her. I told her how about the money involved, leaving the children behind, my work. She just wouldn’t listen. She was plan-ning her life abroad as if she was well again. And telling her about her condition - well, that would have been the same as killing her off.'

'She's already been killed off. That's what you must realize, Vasily Dmitrich. A person cannot live without lungs, and lungs won't grow back. It's sad, it's hard to bear, but what can you do? Only one thing matters for you and me - to give her the most peaceful ending we can. And for that we need a priest.'

'Oh, my God! You can imagine my situation, having to remind her about her last wishes. Whatever happens, I'm not going to talk to her about that. You know how good she is...'

'Well, try and persuade her to wait until the roads are frozen over,' said the doctor, with a meaningful shake of his head. 'Otherwise something nasty might happen out on the road...'

'Aksyusha! Hey, Aksyusha!' yelled the stationmaster's daughter, throwing a jacket over her head and stamping on the dirty back porch. 'Let's go and have a look at that Shirkin lady. She's supposed to be goin'abroad with that disease in her chest. I ain't never seen how it is with them consumptives.'

Aksyusha skipped out on to the threshold, and both girls ran out through the gate, linking hands. They slowed down, walked past the carriage and took a look in through the lowered window. The sick lady turned to face them, but when she saw their curiosity she scowled and looked away.

'Gosh!' said the stationmaster's daughter, whirling her head round. 'She must have been a real beauty - and now look what's happened to her. It's horrible. Did you see her, Aksyusha? Did you see her?'

'Yes, all thin, wasn't she?' said Aksyusha, eager to back her up. 'Let's go and have another look, as if we're going to the well. She looked away, see, and I never got a good look. It's such a pity, Masha.'

'Yes, but look at all this mud!' said Masha, and they both ran back in through the gate.

'I must be a terrible sight,' thought the invalid lady. 'Must get going, as soon as we can, go abroad. I'll soon get better there.'

‘Now then, how are you feeling, my dear?’ said her husband, coming over to the carriage and chewing as he came.

‘Always the same question,’ thought the sick woman, ‘but he’s eating.’

‘So-so,’ she managed to get out, through clenched teeth.

‘Do you know what, my dear, I’m afraid you’re going to feel worse out on the road in this weather, and Edward says the same. Don’t you think we should go back home?’

Furious with him, she said nothing.

‘The weather might improve, the road could harden up, and you might feel better. Then we could all travel together.’

‘I’m sorry. If I had stopped listening to you ages ago I’d be in Berlin by now, and I’d be better again.’

‘We can’t help it, my angel. It just wasn’t possible, as you know. And now, if you would just stay on for another month, you’d feel so much better, I could get my business finished and we could bring the children...’

‘The children are well. I’m not.’

‘Darling, you must understand. In this kind of weather, if you take a turn for the worse out on the road... I mean, when you’re at home, at least...’

‘What? What could I do at home? ...Die there?’ The sick woman’s response was venomous. But the word ‘die’ had clearly shaken her; she looked at her husband imploringly, her eyes questioning. He looked down, saying nothing. The woman’s mouth crumpled like a child’s, and tears streamed from her eyes. The husband buried his face in a handkerchief, and he walked away from the carriage without a word.

‘No, I’m going on,’ she said, raising her eyes to the heavens and folding her arms. She began to whisper incoherently. ‘Oh my God, what’s it all for?’ she said, her tears flowing faster than ever. For some time she prayed, fervently, but her chest felt so painful and tight, the sky, the fields and the road looked so steeped in their gloomy grey, and the autumn mist never thickened and never thinned as it drizzled down in the same old way on to the muddy road, the roofs, the carriage and the thick coats of the drivers chatting to each other in ringing, cheerful voices while they greased the wheels and got the horses ready for the carriage.

The carriage was ready, but the driver was in no hurry. He had disappeared into the drivers' cabin. Inside it was hot and stuffy, dark and oppressive, smelling of people, newly baked bread, cabbage and sheepskins. There were one or two drivers there, a cook was fussing over the stove, and on the stove-top itself a sick man lay stretched out on some sheepskins.

'Uncle Fedya! Hey, Uncle Fedya!' said the young driver, still wearing his top-coat and a whip in his belt, as he came in and spoke to the sick man.

'What'm you doin'hangin'about here askin'after Fedya?' responded another driver. 'Look, they'm waitin'for you out in the carriage.'

'I want to ask him about his boots. Mine are worn out,' answered the young man, tossing his hair back and straightening the mittens in his belt. 'Maybe he's asleep. Hey, Uncle Fedya!' he repeated, walking over to the stove.

'You what?' came a feeble voice, and a thin, ruddy face bent down from the stove-top. A broad, skinny, pale and hairy arm jerked a coat up over a bony shoulder in a dirty shirt. 'Give us something to drink, me lad. What was you saying?'

The lad offered him some water in a dipper.

'Well, Fedya, it's...er...like this,' he said, shifting from one foot to the other. 'I don't imagine you needs new boots now. You could let me've'em. Seems as if you won't be doing no walking.'

The sick man brought his weary head down to the shiny dipper, wetting his thin, straggling whiskers in the dark water as he drank feebly but thirstily. His matted beard was dirty, and his sunken clouded eyes didn't find it easy to look up at the young man's face. Finishing with the water, he tried to lift one hand to wipe his wet lips, but he couldn't manage it and he wiped himself on the coat sleeve. Saying nothing, he breathed in heavily through his nose and looked the young man straight in the eye, getting his strength up.

‘Maybe they’re already spoken for,’ said the young man. ‘If they are, it doesn’t matter. The thing is - it’s wet out there, and I’ve got my work to do, and I just thought I’d ask old Fedya about his boots - maybe he don’t need them any more. Perhaps you do need them. Just tell me...’

There was a rumbling and a gurgling in the sick man’s chest. He bent double and started choking on a throaty cough that never really got going.

‘How can he need them?’ the cook snapped unexpectedly, speaking angrily to the whole cabin. ‘He ain’t been down off that stove for a couple of months. You can hear him. Gives you a pain inside just to listen to him. Can’t be needing no boots, can he? They’re not going to bury him with new boots on. His time’s up, God forgive me, I’m a sinner. You can see he’s cracking up. He ought be taken away into another hut or somewhere else. What I’m saying is, there’s hospitals in town. And what right has he got taking up all that corner? No two ways about it. Some of us don’t have no room at all. And they keeps telling you to keep the place clean.’

Sergey made as if to go, without waiting for a response, but the sick man’s eyes signalled while he was coughing that he wanted to give him an answer.

‘You can have my boots, Sergey,’ he said, stifling his cough. ‘But listen,’ he added wheezily, ‘you buy me a stone when I’m dead.’

‘Thanks, Uncle. All right, I’ll take them. And I really will get you a stone.’

‘That’s it, then. You heard that, lads.’ The sick man was finding it hard to speak, and he bent double again, choking.

‘Sure, we heard,’ said one of the drivers. ‘Get going, Sergey, or the boss’ll be back. That Shirkin lady’s not well, you know.’

Sergey slipped off his worn-out boots - they were too big for him - and chucked them under the bench. Uncle Fyodor’s new boots fitted him nicely, and Sergey looked down at them as he walked out to the carriage.

‘Nice pair of boots! Let me grease them for you,’ said a driver with a handful of axle grease as Sergey got up on his box and gathered the reins. ‘Got’em for nothing?’

‘Not jealous, are you?’ Sergey replied, half-rising and tucking the bottom of his coat round his legs. ‘Forget it! Come on, me beauties!’ he cried to the horses, cracking the whip, and the two carriages - one large and one small, with their drivers, bags and baggage - disappeared into the grey autumn mist, rocking as they sped away down the wet road.

The sick driver was left behind on his stove in the stuffy hut. Unable to stifle his coughing, he made a big effort, turned on to his other side and lay there still and quiet.

The hut was busy until late in the day with people coming and going and having their supper. Not a sound came from the sick man. As night drew on, the cook climbed up on to the stove and reached across his legs to get at her long coat.

‘Don’t moan at me, Nastasya,’ said the sick man. ‘I’ll soon make room for you in this corner.’

‘All right. All right. Don’t go on about it.’ ‘Taint noth-ing,’ muttered Nastasya. ‘Where’s it hurt, Uncle? You can tell me.’

‘Throat giving you trouble, with all that coughing?’

‘It all hurts. Time for me to die - and that’s it. Oh, oh, oh...’ moaned the sick man.

‘Cover your feet up.’ Ere, like this,’ said Natasha, clam-bering down and pulling his coat over him as she did so.

A night light burned feebly in the hut. Nastasya and a dozen drivers were asleep on the floor or on benches, snoring loudly. Only the sick man could be heard wheez-ing and coughing as he tossed and turned on the stove. When morning came he was completely quiet.

‘I’ve had a fantastic dream,’ said the cook, stretching herself in the half-light of a new morning. ‘Uncle Fyodor got down from the stove and went out to chop some wood. "Come on, Nastasya," he says. "Let me give you some help." And I says to him, "How can you go out chopping wood?" but off he goes with the axe, chopping away like mad and the chips flying everywhere. "What's all this?" I says. "I thought you was ill." He says, "No, I'm all right now", and he swings that axe round - scared me stiff, he did. I shouted out and woke up. He's not dead, is he? Uncle Fyodor. Hey, Uncle!

Fyodor didn't answer.

'I wonder if he has died. Ought to go and have a look,' said one of the drivers, who had just woken up.

The scrawny arm dangling down from the stove, covered in reddish hair, was cold and pale.

'Go and tell the boss it looks like he's dead,' said the driver.

Fyodor didn't have any relatives - he came from miles away. They buried him the next day in the new cemetery beyond the wood, and for several days Nastasya went around telling everybody about her dream and how she had been the first to find out Uncle Fyodor was dead.

It was now spring. Gurgling rivulets of water ran down the wet city streets, scurrying between frozen chunks of manure; people bustled about in a bright display of colour and sound given off by their clothing and their chatter. In little fenced-off gardens the buds had begun to swell on the trees, and you could just catch the murmur of branches rocking in the breeze. Limpid droplets dripped and trickled everywhere... Sparrows squawked and twittered amidst a fluttering of tiny wings. On the sunny side, on fences, houses and trees, everything shimmered and shone. Joy and youth shone in the sky, and on earth and in the heart of man.

One of the main streets, outside a large house belonging to a member of the gentry, had been strewn with fresh straw; inside, the lady who had been rushing to travel abroad lay dying.

The sick lady's husband and an elderly woman stood by the closed doors of her room. On the sofa sat a priest with downcast eyes, holding on to something wrapped in his stole. In one corner an old woman reclined in a high-backed armchair - the sick lady's mother - weeping bitter tears. At her side, holding a clean handkerchief, stood a maid waiting to be called; another maid was using some sort of cloth to massage the old woman's temples while she blew upon her grey head under her cap.

'Christ be with you, my dear,' said the husband of an elderly lady standing with him by the door. 'She has so much faith in you, and you know exactly how to talk to her. Try and persuade her, as nicely as you can. Go in and see her.'

He was about to open the door for her, but she, a cousin of the invalid, stopped him, pressed a handkerchief to her eyes several times, and shook her head.

'Now I don't look as if I've been crying,' she said, opening the door herself and walking through.

The husband was in a state of extreme agitation; he looked distraught. He set off towards the old woman, but within a few strides he turned away and headed for the priest. The priest looked at him, raised his eyebrows to Heaven and sighed. His thick beard, shot through with grey, also raised and lowered itself.

'My God, my God!' said the husband.

'What can we do?' said the priest with another sigh, and once again his eyebrows and his short beard were raised and lowered.

'And her mother's here!' said the husband, on the verge of despair. 'That will finish her off. So much love, so much love for her, and she... oh, I don't know. Maybe you could comfort her, Father, and get her to go away.'

The priest got up and went to the old lady.

'Quite so,' he said. 'No one can appreciate a mother's heart. But God is merciful.'

The old lady's face suddenly started to twitch all over, and she was retching with hysteria.

'God is merciful,' continued the priest once she was a little calmer. 'I can tell you this. In my parish there was a man who was ill - much worse than Marya Dmitrievna - and - do you know what? - he was cured in no time by a tradesman with some herbs. And you'll find that trades-man alive in Moscow today. I was just saying to Vasily Dmitrievich that we might give him a try. At least it would bring some comfort to the poor woman. For God, all things are possible.'

'No, she's not going to live,' put in the old woman. 'It should be me, but God's taking her.' And her hysterical retching came on so strongly that she fell into a faint.

The invalid's husband buried his face in his hands and rushed out of the room.

Out in the passage the first person he ran into was a six-year-old boy chasing a younger girl as fast as his legs would carry him.

'What would you like me to do? Should I take the children in to see their mother?' asked the nanny.

'No, she doesn't want to see them. It will upset her.'

The boy stopped for a moment, looked his father straight in the face, lashed out with his foot and ran off again yelling with delight.

'She's being a black horse, Daddy!' cried the little boy, pointing to his sister.

Meanwhile, in the next room the invalid's cousin was sitting at her side, conducting a forced conversation in which she was trying to prepare her for death. The doctor stood by another window, stirring his drink.

The sick woman was sitting up in bed, clad in a white dressing-gown and beset with pillows on every side, watching her cousin in silence.

'Oh, my dear friend,' she said, suddenly interrupting, 'don't prepare me. Don't treat me like a child. I'm a Christian. I know it all. I know I haven't got long to live, and I know that if only my husband had listened to me I'd have been in Italy by now, and I might have been better - I probably would have been. Everybody told him. But there's nothing we can do. It seems to have been God's will. We all bear many sins, I know that, but I trust in God's mercy that all will be forgiven. It must surely be that all will be forgiven. I am trying to come to terms with myself. I too have borne many sins, my dear. But think how much I have suffered. I've tried to bear my sufferings with patience...'

‘So, should I tell the priest to come in? You’ll feel better when you’ve taken communion,’ said her cousin.

The invalid inclined her head in agreement.

‘God forgive me, sinner that I am,’ she whispered.

Her cousin went out and winked at the holy father.

‘She’s an angel!’ she said to the husband with tears in her eyes.

The husband burst into tears, the priest walked in through the door, the old woman was still lost to the world, and in the room itself all was completely quiet. Five minutes later the priest emerged from the room, took off his stole and ran a hand through his hair.

‘Thank God she’s calmer now,’ he said. ‘She wants to see you.’

The cousin and the husband went in. The invalid was weeping softly, looking at an icon.

‘Well done, my darling,’ said her husband.

‘Thank you! I feel so well now. I feel a kind of sweetness,’ said the invalid, a gentle smile playing on her thin lips. ‘God is so merciful! Isn’t that right? So merciful, and omnipotent.’ And she looked at the icon again, her eyes brimming with tears and eager with supplication.

Then suddenly she seemed to remember something. She beckoned her husband closer. ‘You never want to do what I ask,’ she said in a feeble and petulant voice.

Her husband craned his neck, listening submissively. ‘What’s that, darling?’

‘How many times have I told you the doctors are ignorant? There are folk healers, and they can cure people... The priest was telling me just now... about a tradesman... Send for him.’

‘Who?’

‘Oh God! You’re determined not to understand!...’ The invalid scowled and closed her eyes.

The doctor came over and took her hand. Her pulse was getting noticeably weaker and weaker. He winked at the husband. The invalid noticed the gesture and looked round in alarm.

‘Don’t cry, and torment yourself or me,’ said the patient. ‘You’re taking away my last consolation.’

‘You’re an angel!’ said her cousin, kissing her hand.

‘No. Kiss me here. Only dead people get kissed on the hand. Oh God! Oh God!’

By that evening the patient had become a body, and the body lay in its coffin in the biggest room in the large house. A deacon sat alone in that great room with the doors wide open, intoning the Psalms in a nasal voice. A bright waxy light fell from the tall silver candlesticks on to the pallid face of the dead lady, the heavy waxen hands and the frozen folds of her pall, which stuck up horribly at her knees and toes. The deacon droned on, with no understanding of his words - words which rang out and died away horribly. Now and then the sounds of chil-dren’s voices and their rumpus floated in from a distant room.

‘Thou hidestThy face, they are troubled,’ ran the psal-ter. ‘Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust. Thou sendest forthThy spirit, they are cre-ated, andThou renewest the face of the earth. The glory of the Lord shall endure for ever.’

The face of the dead lady was stern, tranquil and majes-tic. Neither on her clear cold brow nor on her tightly closed lips was there any movement. She was all ears. But was she even now understanding those solemn words?

A month later a stone chapel had been erected above the dead lady’s grave. Above the driver’s grave the stone had yet to appear; nothing more than bright green grass came up from the mound that served as the only indication of the past existence of a man.

‘It’ll be a sin on your conscience,’ said the cook one day at the post station, ‘if you don’t buy a stone for Fyo-dor. You kept on saying, “It’s winter. It’s winter,” but now it’s different - why don’t you keep your promise? You know I witnessed it. He’s been back once to ask why you haven’t bought it. Next time he’ll throttle you.’

‘What are you on about? Have I gone back on my word?’ Sergey answered. ‘I’m going to buy him a stone, like I said, and I will. I’ll shell out one and a half roubles. I haven’t forgotten, but it’s got to be fetched. When I'm in town I'll go and buy it.'

'At least you ought to stick a cross up, that's what I says,' put in an old driver. 'Tis just plain wrong if you don't. You'm wearing his boots.'

'Where am I going to get a cross from? I can't chop one out of a log.'

'Can't chop one out of a log - what are you talking about? Take your axe, get yourself out in the forest first thing, and you can cut one there. Go on, cut a little ash tree down... and there's your cross. Either that or buy the forester a few drinks. Doesn't mean you've got to treat him for any old bit of rubbish. Couple of days ago when I broke me splinter bar I cut meself a smashing new one, and nobody said nothing about it.'

Early next morning at the crack of dawn Sergey took his axe and went into the woods.

Everything was covered with a cold blanket of dew that was still settling, untouched by the sun. The east was getting imperceptibly brighter, reflecting its feeble light on the vault of heaven that was still thinly veiled with clouds. Not a blade of grass below, not a leaf on the top-most branches stirred. Only now and then the disturbing sounds of wings flapping in the brushwood or a rustling on the ground intruded on the silence of the forest. Then suddenly a strange noise, alien to the world of nature, rang out and died away on the edge of the forest. But the noise came again and repeated itself rhythmically at the bottom of the trunk of one of the motionless trees. One of the treetops gave an unusual shudder, its sappy leaves whispering, and a little robin who had been sitting on one of its branches gave a chirrup and flitted about a couple of times before cocking its tail and transferring to another tree.

Down below, the ring of the axe sounded more and more muffled, sappy white splinters flew down on to the dewy grass, and through the chopping came a slight creaking sound. The tree shook throughout its whole body, lurched over and quickly straightened up, wobbling with alarm upon its roots. Everything was quiet for a moment, but then the tree lurched again, another creak came from its trunk, and with its branches snapping and its boughs dangling it crashed down crown first on to the damp ground. The sounds of chopping and the foot-steps stopped. The robin gave a chirrup and fluttered up higher. Its wings snagged against a twig, which shook for a moment or two before settling its leaves like all the others. The trees revelled in the beauty of their branches all the more joyously in the newly created space.

The first rays of the sun found their way through the thinning clouds, shone out against the sky and ran across the ground and sky together. Mist rolled down the valleys in waves, the dew glittered as it toyed with the greenery, and limpid whitening cloudlets sped across the azure firmament. Birds stirred in the thickets, twittering their happy song for all they were worth. On high, the succulent leaves whispered in peace and joy, and the boughs of the living trees slowly stirred themselves, looking down in majesty on the dead tree that lay flat out on the ground.

我们为何为同一件事哭和笑

[理解矛盾情感的复杂性，能够使我们避免片面解读伟人及其悲痛。] [1]

我们在史书中读到，安提柯对儿子非常不满，因为他刚才在一场争斗中把他的敌人皮洛士国王杀了，提了头颅来献给他；他看到头颅却号啕大哭起来。还有洛林的勒内公爵打败勃艮第的查理公爵后不久也为他的死亡惋惜，还在他的葬礼上服丧。在奥雷战役中，蒙福尔伯爵战胜查理·德·布卢瓦，赢得了他的布列塔尼公爵封邑，战胜者看到敌人的尸体，深表哀悼。但是读了这些不应该立刻惊叫：

普天之下，人的心灵
都隐藏这些不同的感情， 脸上表现时而喜悦时而阴郁。

——彼特拉克

有人把庞培的首级献给恺撒时，史书记载说他转过头去，仿佛看到了丑恶、惨不忍睹的情景。他们两人长期一起商量国家大计，同舟共济，相互协助，建立联盟，所以不应该认为这个举动完全是装腔作势，像这位说的：

他想这回可以安心当岳丈了。
眼泪是挤出来的，
呻吟发自欢愉的心。

——卢卡努

因为，虽然我们大部分行为实际上只是门面与装饰，有时也可能是真心的：

继承人当面哭，背后笑。

——普布利流斯·西鲁斯

然而在评判这些事时，必须考虑我们的心灵怎样经常受各种情欲的冲击。就像我们的躯体内是各种体液 [2] 的大汇合，根据我们的性情使其中一种占主导地位；同样，我们的心灵内也有各种不同的活动冲击它，必然也有一个活动统率全局。但是这种优势并不会一直保持下去，我们的心灵变化不定，那些原本较弱的活动也会趁势反扑，收复失地。从这里看出，不但孩子一切都天真地从本性出发，经常为同一件事哭和笑，我们中间也有人虽然很想出外旅行，在跟家人和朋友道别时，却也不能吹嘘，否则会感到勇气受挫；眼泪若没有完全流出来，至少踏上马镫时会黯然神伤。不管好人家的女儿心里燃着怎样的热情，还是要把她们从母亲的脖子上拉下来，送到夫婿家，不管这位好心的同伴怎么说：

维纳斯是不是跟新娘有冤仇，

还是为了哄骗快活的爹娘，

在房前床边流几滴眼泪？

眼泪也可能不是真的！上帝帮帮我吧！

——卡图鲁斯

一个人人皆曰可杀的人死了，还是有人悼念，也是不奇怪的。

当我斥责仆人时，真的是火冒三丈，不是装模作样骂几声；但是怒气发过以后，他若对我有所要求，我还是乐意帮他忙；我立即把这一页翻了过去。当我骂他笨蛋蠢驴，不是要他一辈子背这个名声，也不想收回这句话立即再称他是正人君子。没有一种品质只配我们拥有，而且永远拥有。如果自言自语算不上是疯子行为，没一天我不听到心里在骂自己：“大笨蛋！”这绝不是在说我自己真是这样的人。

如果谁看到我在妻子面前一会儿冷若冰霜，一会儿春风满面，就认为这都是装的，他就是个傻子。尼禄下令淹死自己的母亲，跟她分手时突然动了情，对这次母子诀别感到厌恶与怜悯。

有人说太阳放光不是连续不断的，它是不停地让一束束新光照射着我们，以至我们辨别不出而以为是连续的了：

太阳，不歇的以太之源，火的洪流，

使天空永远白昼如新，

光明接着光明。

我们的心灵也是巧思纷呈，细流无声。

阿尔塔巴努斯无意中看到他的侄子泽尔士，问他为什么刚才神色大异。泽尔士正在考虑他的军队无比强大，要通过赫勒斯旁海峡去进攻希腊。起初看到有成千上万人归他指挥，踌躇满志，面露欣喜之情。但是继而就在同时想到那么多的生命至迟在本世纪内就要消失，不由得皱起眉头，伤心得落下了眼泪。

我们曾经坚定不移地报仇雪耻，为胜利而欢天喜地，可是也因而落泪。我们不是为了胜利而落泪，事情没有丝毫变化，只是我们不是怀着同一颗心去看待它，看到的就是另一副面目。因为每件事都有不同的侧面、不同的光线。心头想起血缘之亲、昔日的情谊，根据不同情况会激动一时，但是轮廓的闪现那么突然，我们无法把握。

说到速度，什么也比不上

思想的闪动，要来就来，

思想灵活多变，超过任何

置于目光下、落入感觉中的物体。

——卢克莱修

由于这个原因，要用这一系列断断续续的闪念构筑一个物体，必然会出差错。蒂莫利昂经过深思熟虑大义灭亲以后，他哭了，他哭的不是祖国恢复了自由，他哭的不是暴君，他哭的是他的兄弟。当他的一部分职责完成后，另一部分职责又要他履行了。

[2] 古希腊有“体液学说”，认为机体的生命取决于四种体液：血液、黏液、黄胆汁和黑胆汁。每一种液体与一定的“气质”相适应，每个人的气质则取决于他体内占优势的那种液体。例如，在蒙田那个时代，人们认为忧郁症是体液不平衡、黑色胆汁分泌过多所致。——编者注

论良心

[良心最初指纵容默许。良心的概念深深吸引着蒙田，即我们个人的是非观，抑或是我们的负罪感与正义感。宗教战争期间，蒙田目睹了种种残忍行径、诬告栽赃，见惯了对犯人的严刑拷打，由此开始重点反思良心。他发现，非常奇怪的是，“拷问”（刑讯逼供）所依凭的道德准则似乎正是出于人们对良心力量的尊重——一个人内心是负罪还是无辜，都体现在他忍受苦痛的能力是削弱还是增强上。蒙田此篇主要受圣·奥古斯丁和璜·路易斯·斐微斯的启发。关于奥古斯丁的《上帝之城》，斐微斯曾经写下一篇激情洋溢的笔记，谈论要减少人们对酷刑的过度信任。]

内战时期，我的兄弟拉勃鲁斯领主和我有一次在旅途中，遇见一位风度翩翩的贵族，他属于我们的敌对派别，但是我并不知道，因为他掩饰得很巧妙。这类战争中最糟的是局势错综复杂，从外表、语言和穿戴来说，敌人和你无法得以区分，双方接受同样的法律，遵守同样的习俗，呼吸同样的空气，难免混淆不清。我害怕在一个陌生地方遇见我们的军队，不得不说出自己的名字，这时真是生死难卜。我以前遇到过这样的事，在那次不幸的遭遇中，我人马俱损，不但如此，他们还残忍地杀害了一名意大利宫廷侍从贵族，我精心培育过他，一个有着光明前程的年轻的命就这样消失了。

但是那位贵族非常容易惊慌失措，我看他每次遇见骑马的人过来，穿越效忠于国王的城市，都吓得要死，我终于猜到他的恐惧是由于他的良心而来的。这名青年觉得，人家通过他的面具和大氅上的十字架可以看到他内心的秘密意图。良心的力量竟是那么奇妙！良心使我们背叛，使我们控诉，使我们战斗；在没有外界证人的情况下，良心会追逐我们，反对我们：

用无形的鞭子抽打，充当刽子手。

——朱维纳利斯

这已是妇孺皆知的故事：一个名叫贝苏斯的帕奥尼人，被人指责说他故意打下一个鸟窝，把里面的小鸟统统杀光，他说自己做得有理，因为小鸟不停地无端指责他害死了自己的父亲。这桩弑父罪进行得滴水不漏，直到那时也没有人知晓；但是良心提出了申冤，使这个背上沉重赎罪包袱的人无法自制。

柏拉图认为，惩罚紧紧跟在罪恶的后面，赫西俄德纠正了柏拉图的说法，他说惩罚是与罪恶同时开始的。谁在等待惩罚，就在受惩罚；谁该受惩罚，就在等待惩罚。恶意给怀恶意的人带来痛苦：

做坏事的人最受做坏事的苦！

——拉丁谚语

胡蜂刺伤了人，但是自己受害更深，因为它从此失去了自己的刺和力量。

它们把自己的生命留在了伤疤里。

——维吉尔

由于自然界的矛盾对立规律，斑蝥身上分泌一种自身毒液的解毒素。所以，即使人在作恶时感受到乐趣，良心上却会适得其反，产生一种憎恶感，引起许多痛苦和联想，不论睡时醒时都折磨着自己。

这样的罪人不在少数，

在睡梦或谵妄中自怨自艾，

泄露了长期隐藏的罪过。

——卢克莱修

暴君阿波罗多罗斯在梦中见到自己被斯基泰人剥掉了皮，放在一口锅里煮，他的心喃喃地对他说：“你的所有痛苦都是我引起的。”伊壁鸠鲁说：“坏人无处藏身，因为他们躲在哪儿都不安宁，良心会暴露他们。”

没有一名罪人在自我判决中得到赦免，

这才是主要的惩罚。

——朱维纳利斯

良心可使我们恐惧，也可使我们坚定和自信。我敢于说人生道路上经过许多险阻而步伐始终不乱，就是因为我对自己的意图深有了解，自己的计划光明正大。

人的内心充满恐惧还是希望，

全凭良心的判断。

——奥维德

这类例子成千上万，这里只需举出同一个人物的三个例子。

西庇阿有一次在罗马人民面前被指控犯了一桩大罪，他不但不要
求宽恕或向法官讨情，还对他们说：“好哇，你们还不是靠了我才有
权力审判每个人，如今竟要起我的脑袋来了。”

又一次，人民法庭对他起诉，他决不声辩，只是侃侃而
谈：“来吧，我的公民们，去向神祇拜谢，也是在今天这样的日子，
让我战胜了迦太基人。”说罢，他大踏步向神庙走去，只见所有人跟
在他后面，其中还有他的起诉人。

又是人民法庭应加图的要求，传讯西庇阿，要他对安蒂奥克省的一
切开支做出汇报。西庇阿为此事来到元老院，从袍子下抽出账册，
说这本账册把一切收支原原本本记了下来；但是他没有同意把它转交
给法院档案室保存，说他不愿意自取其辱，便在元老院当着众人的面
亲手把账册撕成碎片。我不相信这个饱经沧桑的灵魂会弄虚作假。李
维说他天性慷慨豪爽，一向气度恢宏，他决不会当个罪人，低三下四
去声辩自己是无辜的。

苦刑是一项危险的发明，这像是在检验人的耐性而不是检验人的
真情。能够忍受苦刑的人会隐瞒真情，不能够忍受苦刑的人也会隐瞒
真情。痛苦能够使我供认事实，为什么就不能使我供认非事实呢？另
一方面，如果那个受到无理指责的人有耐性忍受这些折磨，罪有应得
的人难道就没有耐性忍受这些折磨，去获得美好的生命报偿吗？

我相信这项发明的理论基础是建立在良心力量的想法上。因为对
有罪的人，似乎利用苦刑可以使他软弱，说出他的错误；然而无罪
的人则会更加坚强，不畏苦刑。说实在的，这个方法充满不确定性和危
险。

为了躲过难忍的痛苦，什么话不会说，什么事不会做呢？

痛苦会迫使无辜的人撒谎。

——普布利流斯·西鲁斯

审判者折磨人是为了不让他清白死去，而结果是让那个人受尽折
磨后清白死去。成千上万的受刑者脑袋里装满了假忏悔。我想到亚历
山大审判菲罗塔斯的情景，以及他受折磨的过程。我尤其要以菲罗塔
斯作为例子。

然而有人却说，揭示人类弱点的许多发明中，苦刑还是痛苦最少

的一项发明。

依我看来也是最不人道、最无意义的发明！有许多被希腊和罗马称为野蛮的国家，在这方面却不及希腊和罗马野蛮，它们认为折磨和杀害一个人们对其错误还只是心存怀疑的人，是可怕的残酷行为。你不知道实情，他又能怎么样呢？你不想无缘无故地杀他，对他做的事却比杀他还糟糕，你没有不公正吗？事情就是如此：多少次他宁愿无缘无故地死去，也不愿接受审讯，这种审讯往往比死刑还痛苦，这等于在执行死刑以前已把人处决了。

我不知道从哪儿听来这个故事，但是它如实地代表了我们良心的公正。一名村妇在一位军队司令兼大法官面前控诉一名士兵，说他抢去了她仅剩下的喂几个小孩的一点点面糊，这支军队已把四周村庄掠夺一空。然而没有证据。这位将军首先告诫妇女要对自己说的话仔细想一想，若是诬告就要判罪，她坚持不改口，将军下令割开士兵的肚子验证事实真相。妇女说的话是对的。罪证确凿。

命运与理智经常相遇在一条道上

[罗马的审查官对蒙田有关命运（区别于天意）的言论甚是不满——这很奇怪，因为几个世纪以来，变幻莫测的命运以及命运之轮早已是老生常谈。（“命运”一词在蒙田散文中出现多达三百五十次。）]

命运变幻无常，在我们面前展现的面貌也就千变万化。这不也是在明白无误地伸张正义吗？瓦朗蒂努瓦公爵恺撒·波齐亚决心要毒死科尔内托的红衣主教阿德里安，他的父亲亚历山大六世教皇偕同他到梵蒂冈吃晚饭。公爵事先差人送了一瓶毒酒交给司膳总管，嘱他好好看管。教皇在儿子之前到，要求喝酒，司膳总管以为这是瓶好酒，交给他就是给教皇喝的，就倒了一杯敬教皇；公爵本人恰在上点心时赶到，以为他自己的那瓶酒还没开过，也就拿来喝了；这样父亲立即暴死，儿子长期受病痛折磨，命运更加悲惨。

有时候命运好像有意跟我们作对。德斯特雷领主是旺多姆殿下的军旗手，里克领主是阿尔斯霍特公爵的随从副官，虽分属对立的部队，但都在追求封凯泽尔领主的妹妹（在前线相邻的两支部队常有这样的事）。里克领求婚成功；但是在婚礼那天，不幸的是新郎在上床之前，要去逞能来取悦新娘，离家到了圣奥梅尔附近跟人交了手，却让德斯特雷领主占了上风，把他捉了当俘虏。

离开年轻郎君的怀抱，

让一个冬天，又一个冬天，

在漫漫长夜中烧尽了他们的烈火。

——卡图鲁斯

为了摆足威风，德斯特雷迫使那位夫人亲自来向他求情，把他的俘虏客客气气还给她；人也确实放了，法国贵族从不拒绝夫人的要求。

君士坦丁（一世），海伦娜的儿子，创立了君士坦丁帝国；多少世纪以后，又是一个君士坦丁（十一世），也是海伦娜的儿子，断送了君士坦丁帝国。这不像是巧妙的命运安排吗？

有时候，命运喜欢跟奇迹争高低。我们知道克洛维斯国王围困昂古莱姆时，城墙自个儿坍塌，如有神助。布歇援引某位作者的话，虔

诚者罗伯特二世国王在围城时，偷偷离开前线溜回奥尔良庆祝圣埃尼昂节，正当他弥撒做到中途顶礼膜拜时，围城的城墙不攻自破了。这跟我们在米兰战争中发生的事恰恰相反。朗佐统帅在为我们包围阿罗纳城时，命人在一堵大墙下埋炸药。这堵墙突然被炸离地面，又直挺挺落下竖在地基上，被困的人还是安然无恙。

有时候，命运还会治病。费雷斯的亚逊胸口长了个脓疮，医生都已束手无策，他一心要摆脱折磨，即使死了也甘心。在一次战役中他奋不顾身冲进敌阵，被刺穿身子，恰巧伤在病患处，脓疮破裂，这下子治愈了。

命运在艺术技艺方面不是还超过了画家普罗托盖纳斯吗？画家画了一条疲劳的狗，全身什么部位都感到很称心，但就是狗嘴里的口水画得不中意，他对自己的画发起了脾气，拿起一块蘸满各种颜料的海绵朝它扔了过去，要把它都擦掉；命运让那块海绵恰好扔在狗嘴上，在上面留下的正是艺术家想画而画不出的艺术效果。

有时，命运不是在指导我们、改正我们吗？英格兰伊莎贝尔女王率领一支军队去支援儿子反对她的丈夫，要从泽兰回到王国内；她若按原计划抵达港口必然完了，敌人都在那里等着她，但是命运却不顾她的意愿让她在一个安全地点登了陆。那位古人，拿起石头要砸狗，却砸死了自己的老娘，不是很有理由念一念这句诗吗？

命运比我们更有主意。

——米南德

蒂莫利昂在西西里岛阿德拉诺暂住，伊塞特召了两名士兵要杀他。他们决定在他献祭时动手。他们混在人群中，正在相互发信号趁机下手时，突然来了第三个人，在其中一位头上狠狠砍了一剑，待他死在地上后，自己拔腿就跑。那位同伴以为自己被人识破，脱不了身，奔到祭台，答应把一切都招供出来，要求宽恕。

正当他在交代阴谋过程时，那第三个人被大家当作谋杀犯抓住了，推推搡搡穿过人群到了蒂莫利昂和在场的显贵面前。这时那个人大叫饶命，说他杀死的只是杀他父亲的凶手。他运气来得正好，当场有人证明他的父亲确是在利恩泰奈人的城里被那个他杀死报仇的人杀的。他由于这件巧事得到了一大笔赏金，既报了父亲的仇，又救了西西里父母官的命。这样的命运在讨回公道方面，是任何人精心制定的法律也难以达到的。

最后一个例子。这件事还不能清楚说明命运总是倾向于善良与赤诚之心吗？伊格纳蒂乌斯父子被罗马三世执政放逐，决定做出惊人之举，互相结束对方的生命，不让暴政者得逞施加酷刑。他们手握宝剑

朝着对方奔去。命运指挥着他们的剑头，两剑都立即夺去他们的生命，为了表彰这么美好的父子情，还让他们有力气从洞穿的身子里抽出鲜血淋漓的手臂与宝剑，相互紧紧拥抱，再也一动不动。刽子手无法把他们分离，只得一下子割下两人的头颅，让两具尸体始终有尊严地贴在一起，伤口对着伤口深情地吮吸着对方的血与残留的生命。

论对懦夫行为的惩罚

[文艺复兴时期的法律学者，如安德烈·蒂亚居伊想要通过研究人的动机与局限，从而缓和社会的严刑峻法。在这里，蒙田效仿前者，对战争年代的男士们表达了深切担忧。]

曾听到一位亲王、杰出的将领说过，一名士兵不能因丧失勇气而被处死。他在用餐时听到德·韦尔万领主一案，后者因献出布洛涅而被判处死刑。

因软弱造成的错误与因恶意造成的错误，中间有巨大的差别，这样说实在是道理的。恶意是我们有心鼓动自己违背天性形成的理智规则。至于软弱，不妨也拿天性来自我辩护，说是它造成了我们这样的不完美和缺陷，以至不少人想到，只有违背自己良心做事才可以加以责备。这条规则，使一部分人形成这样的看法，反对对异教徒和无信仰者使用极刑，同样认为律师和法官不必承担无知渎职的责任。

但是，说到懦夫行为，最常见的惩罚是当众羞辱。据说这条规则最早是由法学家夏隆达斯提出的，在他以前，希腊法律以死刑处分临阵脱逃的人。夏隆达斯只是罚那些人穿上妇女服装在广场中央坐三天，指望他们羞愧后恢复勇气，还能入伍打仗。“与其让男人血流在地上，还不如让他血涌到脸上。”（德尔图良）

从前，罗马法律对逃兵也是判死罪。据阿米阿努斯·马西利纳斯的叙述，在帕提亚战役中，有十名士兵冲锋时转身往回跑，朱利安皇帝先把他们逐出军队，后来据说依古法处死。然而另一次，有人犯了相似的罪过，他只是处分他们跟囚徒一起待在辎重部队。罗马人对在卡尼战役中逃跑的士兵，还有在同一场战争中随同执政官法尔维乌斯吃败仗的士兵，惩罚再严也不至把他们处死。

然而有一事必须提防，羞辱使他们失去颜面，不但会使他们冷漠无情，还会将他们变为敌人。

在我们祖辈那个时代，弗朗杰领主当过德·夏蒂永元帅的副官，受德·夏巴纳元帅派遣，取代杜·吕德大人当富恩塔拉比亚总督。他把富恩塔拉比亚拱手让与西班牙人，因此被废除贵族称号，他与他的后代都被贬为平民，要缴人头税，不准入伍当兵。这一严厉的判决是在里昂执行的。后来纳索伯爵带军队开进吉兹时，城里的全体贵族都遭到类似的惩罚；后来其他类似的事也复如此处理。

然而，如果无知与懦夫行为过于恶劣或明显，超出了一般的程度，那时就有理由把它看成是确凿的证据，说明当事人的狡猾和恶意，并以此定罪。

论言过其实

[尽管蒙田对语言的运用已炉火纯青，他本人却鄙视文字，崇尚行动或“实事”。早在开始散文创作之前，他就曾在雷蒙德·塞朋德《自然神学》一书译作的开篇献词——“给父亲的一封信”中表达了该观点。对“行动胜于雄辩”的尊重，正是他景仰古代斯巴达王国的原因，同时也是当世所欠缺的品质。]

从前一位修辞学家说，他的职业是把小事物说得大，显得大。这就像鞋匠给一对小脚丫做上一双大鞋子。在斯巴达靠吹牛说谎为职业就会挨鞭子。我相信阿基达默斯国王听到修昔底德的回答不会不表示惊讶。国王问他与伯里克利角斗谁更强，他回答说：“这不好验证，因为我在角斗中把他摔倒在地，他却说服在场观看的人说他并没有倒地，于是他赢了。”

有人让女人戴上面纱，涂脂抹粉，这为害不大，因为不能看到她们处在自然状态，不是大不了的损失；而其他人要欺骗的不是我们的眼睛，而是我们的判断，要歪曲和败坏的是事物的本质。像克里特、斯巴达这样的城邦，局势稳定，治理有方，并不重视雄辩家。

阿里斯托给修辞学下了个聪明的定义：说服老百姓的技术。苏格拉底、柏拉图则说是骗人和拍马的艺术。有人从大道理上否定它，却在自己的训诫中到处使用。

伊斯兰教禁止向孩子传授修辞学，因为它无用。

雅典人发现修辞学的使用在都城里有上升趋势，这是很有害的，下令把煽动情绪的主要篇章，连同前言和结论部分一齐删去。

修辞学的发明，是为了操纵和煽动一群乌合之众和暴徒。这个工具专门用于病态政体，就像是药。在那些庸人、无知的人或任何人独占一切的地方，如雅典、罗德岛和罗马，在那些局势纷争不已的地方，演说家才应运而生。的确，在这些政体里，很少有人是不靠口才而平步青云的；庞培、恺撒、克拉苏、卢库卢斯、兰图卢斯，都是慷慨陈词以后得到极大的支持，最后登上权柄的高位，他们依仗口才更甚于军队，这与太平盛世的看法是相悖的。

L.沃卢姆努斯当众演说，支持Q.法比乌斯和P.德基乌斯当选为执政官，他说：“这些人是为战争而生的，建功立业的大人物，打嘴仗也毫不示弱，是真正的执政人才；头脑精明，说话服众和博学多才， 可以管理城市，执政主持民事裁判工作。”

当局一片混乱，内战的风暴搅得人心惶惶时，罗马城内的雄辩家如沐春风，就像一块没有开垦的荒地上野草丛生。这样看来，由单独君主控制的政府不像其他政府那样需要这种东西；因为百姓愚昧轻信，耳边听了甜言蜜语，很容易受到操纵和误导，不会用理智的力量去审察和认识事物的真相；对这种轻信态度，我要说，在君主个人身上是不容易存在的，良好教育与好言规劝也较为容易使他免受这种毒药的伤害。在马其顿和波斯就没出过一个有名气的雄辩家。

我刚才跟一位意大利人谈过话，才引起我说了上面一番话。他曾给已故的红衣主教加拉法当过司膳总管，直至主教过世。我请他谈谈他的差使。他神色严肃，把这门讲究口腹之欲的学问，一本正经地说了一通，仿佛在跟我讲神学的大道理。他向我细分不同的胃口：饥饿时的胃口，上了两三道菜后的胃口；什么方法吃了只不过使胃舒服，什么方法引得胃口大开；调料使用方法，一般的，特殊的，针对菜肴的特点和作用；不同季节的沙拉也不同，有需要加热的，也有需要冷食的，如何搭配花色使它们赏心悦目。在这之后，又说到上菜的顺序，其中的微妙大有讲究。

怎样切兔肉，如何斩鸡块，

当然都大有学问。

——朱维纳利斯

言辞里充满崇论闳议，就像在发表治国大略。这使我想起我的朋友：

太咸啦！烧糊啦！淡啦！恰到好处！

下次就照这样做！我教他们，

以我浅薄的学识尽心尽力。

总之，德梅亚，我要他们

拿锅子当镜子，教他们毫不留一手。

——泰伦提乌斯

埃米利乌斯·波勒斯从马其顿回来，宴请希腊人；希腊人对他宴会的组织安排大加赞赏；但是我这里说的不是他们做了什么，而是他们说了什么。

我不知道别人听了是不是与我有同感。当我听到我们的建筑师踌躇满志，大谈壁柱、下楣、挑檐、科林斯和陶立克柱型，还有他们类似的行话，我不由自主地想到阿波里东宫；实际上，我发现那是指我家厨房上那几条质地单薄的横档。

当你听到有人说替代、隐喻、讽喻这类语法词汇，那不是像在指某个罕见冷僻的语言现象吗？其实是涉及你的女仆唠叨的用语。

还有一种与此相近的花招，就是用罗马人的显赫官衔来称呼我们的官吏，然而他们在职务上没有丝毫相似之处，更没有那样的权威与权力。这种做法我相信，总有一天会说明我们这个世纪的荒谬绝伦，把古代荣耀了几个世纪的一两位人物的最光辉称号，不恰当地加到我们中意的人身上。称柏拉图是神，这是举世公认的，谁也不会嫉妒。然而意大利人，他们自诩整体上跟他们那个时代的其他民族相比，更为隽智和明白事理，这话有点道理，但是不久前却把那个尊号安到了阿雷蒂诺头上，这一位除了说话诙谐刻薄，确有高明之处，只是经常牵强附会，莫名其妙。就算他口才高明，我也看不出他有什么才能超越他同一世纪的大多数作家，更不用说跟古人的神号相去甚远了。

“伟大”这个词，我们却动辄加在并不比群众伟大的亲王身上。

探讨哲学就是学习死亡

[蒙田一直以来安于愁思，如今却是轻描淡写。他被死亡的恐惧所困扰，这种恐惧通常源于行将就木时所遭受的折磨——以前人们往往难逃临死的苦痛。对此，蒙田的处理可谓言辞雄辩，却并不客观冷漠，而是努力找寻普通人身上的美好品质。]

西塞罗说，探讨哲学不是别的，只是准备死亡。尤因探讨与静观可以说是让我们的灵魂脱离肉体而独自行动，有点像在学习与模拟死亡；或者也可以说，人类的一切智慧与推理归根结底，就是要我们学习不怕死亡。

说实在的，理智不是在冷嘲热讽，而是把目标定在使我们满足上。理智的工作，总的是要人活得好，要我们如《圣经》所说的“终身喜乐行善”。世上人人都是这种看法，尽管表达形式各有不同，快乐是我们的目标；与此不同的看法一出笼就被排斥，若有人说什么他的目的是让我们受苦受难，那谁会去听呢？

在这方面，哲学宗派之间的分歧只表现在口头上。“别去听那些美妙的妖言。”（塞涅卡）在这么一个神圣的学科中不应该有那么多的顽固与恶言。某人不论扮演什么角色，扮演的总是他自己。他们不论说什么，即使谈到美德，瞄准的最终目标也是感官享乐。他们听到这个词那么反感，而我偏要在他们耳边说个不休。如果这个词意味着最强的欢乐与极度的满足，那时美德的介入才胜过其他东西的介入。这种感官享乐不论如何纵情胡闹，粗野强健，也只是更加享乐而已。我们还不如称为欢乐，更容易接受，更温和自然，而不是曾用的“精力”一词。

另一种感官享乐——若也可用这个好名词的话——较为庸俗，也是应该相提并论的，但并不更占优势。我觉得它不像美德那样不包含放肆与邪念。除了感受更短暂、更流动、毫无新鲜感，它还有熬夜、挨饿、辛苦和血与汗；此外还有各种各样的情感折磨，然后再有这种沉重的满足，这无异于一种受罪了。

我们还大错特错地认为，这些磨难可以成为温情的刺激物与调味品，好像大自然中的万物相生相克；也不要说当我们转向美德时，同样的障碍与困难会压倒它，使它变得严峻、不可接近；而在美德介入的情况下，会使这种神圣完美的欢乐更高尚、更兴奋、更昂扬，要胜过低级的享乐许多。

一个人权衡他的所失与所得，不知道美德的温馨与作用，当然是不配认识这种欢乐的。有人劝导我们说美德的追求艰辛曲折，美德的享受则是愉快的，这岂不是在对我们说它不会令人快乐吗？因为哪个人曾有法子获得过它呢？最成功的人也只是做到向往它，接近它，而没有获得过它。

但是那些人错了，要知道追求我们所认识的任何乐趣，这本身就是乐趣；行动包含的乐趣，存在于我们眼前的美好目标，因为这是与大部分激情共生共灭的。在美德中闪闪发光的愉悦福乐，自有千百条渠道小路，引导你进入第一个入口，直至最后一道墙。那时美德的主要好处是对死亡的蔑视，这样使人的一生过得恬然安逸，让我们专注于愉悦的享受，不如此，其他一切享乐都会黯然无光。

这说明为什么一切规则都集中和会合在这个主题上。虽则那些规则也一致认为要蔑视痛苦、贫困和其他隶属于人生的遭遇，这在关心的程度上不一样，因为有的遭遇不是必然发生的（许多人一生中并没有经历过贫困，有的还不曾有过疼痛的病患，如音乐师色诺菲吕斯，他活了一百零六岁，身体一直良好），还可以在万不得已时轻生，把烦恼一了百了。但是死亡本身则是不可避免的。

人人都被推向同一个方向，

我们的命运在缸里转动，

迟早会从里面跃出，

上了船，

带往不归路。

——贺拉斯

因而，要是死亡使我们害怕，这就成了一个说不完的痛苦话题，而又不能使心情纾解一丝一毫。死亡从哪儿都可以向我们袭击；我们就会不停地左右窥视，像进了一座疑阵以防不测：“这就像永世悬在坦塔罗斯头上的岩石。”^[3]（西塞罗）我们的法院经常把罪犯送到案发地点处决，一路上押着他们经过漂亮的房子，让他们拣好吃的吃个痛快：

……西西里岛的盛宴

也引不起他的馋涎。

鸟语与琴声

都不能使他入眠。

——贺拉斯

不妨想一想，他们能够高兴起来吗？游街的最终意图昭然若揭，难道不会败坏他们领受这一切恩典的兴致？

他打听道路，他掐算日子，

走了多少还剩下多少，

想到眼前的极刑痛不欲生。

——克洛迪安

我们生涯的终点是死亡，我们必须注视的是这个结局；假若它使我们害怕，怎么可能走前一步而又不发愁呢？凡人的药方是把它置之脑后。只是愚蠢透顶才会这么懵然无知！真是把马笼头套在了驴子尾巴上。

因为他决定了往回走。

——卢克莱修

他经常跌入陷阱也就不足为奇了。这让我们这些人一说到死亡就害怕，大多数人像听到魔鬼的名字一样画十字。由于遗嘱中必然提到这件事，就别指望在医生给他们宣读终审判决以前，他们会动手立遗嘱。在痛苦与惊慌之间，他们会以怎样清晰的判断力，给你凑合出一份遗嘱，只有天知道了。

由于这个词听在他们的耳朵里太刺激，这个声音对他们又像不吉利，罗马人学会了用婉转的说法来减弱或冲淡它的含意。不说：他死了，他停止了生命；只说：他活过了。只要是“活”，即使过去式也感到安慰。我们的“故人某某”就是从他们那里借来的。

说到这里，是不是像俗语说的，时间就是金钱？我生于一五三三年二月的最后一天，是按现行的以正月为一年之始的年历来说的 [4]。恰好十五天前刚过了三十九岁，至少还可以活那么久；可是急着去考虑那么远的事不是发疯吗？但怎么说呢，年轻人与老年人同样都会抛下生命。刚刚进来的人照样可以随即离去。再衰老的人，只要还看到玛士撒拉 [5] 走在前面，都相信自己的身子还可以撑上二十年。

再说，你这个可怜的傻瓜，谁给你规定了寿限啦？你这是根据医

生的胡说八道。还不如瞧一瞧事实与经验吧。按照事物的常规，你活到今天已是鸿运高照了。你已超过了常人的寿数。为了证明这一点，算一算你的朋友中间有多少人在你这个年龄以前已经谢世，肯定比达到你的年龄的人要多。再来列一张表，记上一生中名声显赫的人，我敢打赌在三十五岁前死的要比在这以后死的多。把耶稣基督作为人类的楷模，也是十分理智与虔诚的，因为耶稣在三十三岁就结束了人生。亚历山大是最伟大的凡人，也是在这岁数去世的。

死亡又有多少种袭击方式？

时时刻刻需要提防危险，

人是难以预料的。

——贺拉斯

且不说发高烧和胸膜炎病人。谁想到一位布列塔尼公爵会在人群中挤死？我的邻居克莱芒五世教皇进入里昂也是这样。你没看到我们的一位国王在比武游戏中被误伤害了命吗？他的一位祖先竟会被一头公猪撞死？埃斯库罗斯眼看一幢房子要坍塌，徒然躲到空地上，有一只苍鹰飞过空中，从爪子里丢下一块乌龟壳，把他砸死了。还有人被一颗葡萄核梗死；一位皇帝在梳头时被梳子划破头皮而死；埃米利乌斯·李必达脚绊在门槛上，奥菲迪乌斯进议院时撞上了大门。还有死于女人大腿间的教士科内利乌斯·加吕，罗马巡逻队长蒂日利努斯，曼图亚侯爵吉·德·贡萨格的儿子吕多维可。

更糟糕的例子是柏拉图派哲学家斯珀西普斯和我们的一位教皇。可怜的伯比乌斯法官给诉讼一方八天期限，自己却突然得病，没有活到那个时候。凯乌斯·朱利乌斯是医生，在给病人上眼药膏时，死神来给他闭上了眼睛。我还该说一说我自己的弟弟，圣马丁步兵司令，年二十三岁，早已显出大胆勇敢，打网球时球击中他左耳上方，表面看不出挫伤和破裂，他甚至没有坐下来休息，但是五六小时后，他死于这次球击引起的中风。

这些都是发生在我们眼前的例子，稀松平常，怎么还能够不去想到死亡呢？怎么能够不觉得死神每时每刻在掐我们的脖子呢？

你们或许会对我说，既然不管怎样总是要来的，大家就不用去操这份心了吧？我同意这个看法；若有什么方法可以躲过死亡的袭击，即使是藏在一张牛皮底下，我也不是个会退缩回避的人。因为我只要过得自在就够了；我自己尽量往最好的方面去做，至于荣耀与表率则不在我的考虑之内。

我宁可被人看成傻子与呆子，

只要我的古怪令我痛快，叫我开心， 也不去当个聪明人愤愤不平。

——贺拉斯

以为这样就能做到了，这也是妄想。他们来了，他们去了，他们骑马，他们跳舞，闭口不谈死亡。这一切多么美好。毫不注意，毫不防范，当死亡降临到他们身上，或者他们的妻儿朋友身上时，则悲痛欲绝，呼天抢地，愤怒失望！你们几曾见过如此萎靡、恍惚、混乱！我们必须及早防范。一个头脑明白的人，对待死亡却像动物似的混混沌沌，我认为这是要不得的，也会让我们付出沉重的代价。如果死亡是个可以躲开的敌人，我建议大家不妨拿起胆小鬼的武器。但是既然它是不可避免的，既然退缩求饶和勇敢面对，它都是要把你抓走的：

他对逃跑中的壮汉穷追不舍，
也不放过胆怯的后生 露出的腿弯与背脊。

——贺拉斯

既然没有铁甲保护你：
躲在盔甲下也是枉然，
死神会让他露出后缩的脑袋。

——普罗佩提乌斯

我们必须学习挺身而出，面对它进行斗争。为了打落它的气势，我们必须采取逆常规而行的办法。不要把死亡看成是一件意外事，要看成是一件常事，习惯它，脑子里常常想到它。时时刻刻让它以各种各样的面目出现在我们的想象中。马匹惊跳，瓦片坠落，针轻轻一刺，立即想到：“要是这就是死亡呢？”这时候我们要坚强，要努力。

欢天喜地的时候，总是想到我们的生存状态，不要纵情而忘乎所以，记得多少回乐极会生悲，死亡会骤然而至。埃及人设宴，席间在上好菜时，叫人抬上一具干尸，作为对宴客的警告。

照亮你的每一天都当作最后一天，
赞美它带来的恩惠与意外的时间。

——贺拉斯

死亡在哪里等着我们是很不确定的，那就随时恭候它。事前考虑死亡也是事前考虑自由。谁学习了死亡，谁也就学习了不被奴役。死亡的学问使我们超越任何束缚与强制。一个人明白了失去生命不是坏事，那么生命对他也就不存在坏事了。可怜的马其顿国王当了波勒斯·伊米利厄斯的俘虏，差人求他不要把他带到凯旋仪式上，伊米利厄斯答复说：“让他向自己求情吧。”

其实，在一切事情上，天公若不助一臂之力，手段与心计都很难施展。我本性并不忧郁，但爱好空想。从小对什么事都没像对死亡想得那么多，即使在放荡的岁月也是这样。

年少风流，青春欢悦。

——卡图鲁斯

在女人堆里寻欢作乐时，有人以为我站在一旁醋性大发，或者抱着希望拿不定主意，其实我在想着今已不知是谁的那个人，他就在几天前突然发高烧一命呜呼了；当他离开这样一次盛会时，满脑子是闲情、爱欲和好时光，像我一样，耳边也响着同样的话：

好时光即将消逝，消逝后再不回来。

——卢克莱修

这个想法不会比其他事情更叫我皱眉头。最初想到这类事不可能没有感触。但是日子一久，翻来覆去想多了，无疑也就习以为常了，否则我会终日提心吊胆；因为从来没有人会那么舍弃生命，没有人会那么不计较寿命的长短。直到今天为止，我一直精力充沛，极少生病，健康既没有使我对生命的期望增大，疾病也没有使我对生命的期望减少。我觉得自己每分钟都在逃过一劫。我不停地对自己唱：“另一天会发生的事，今天也会发生。”

说真的，意外与危险并不使我们更靠近死亡。如果我们想到，即使没有这桩好像威胁着我们的最大事件，还有成千上万桩其他事件悬在我们头上，我们就会明白，不论精力充沛还是高烧难退，在海上还是在家里，战场上还是休息中，死亡离我们都一样近。“谁都不比谁更脆弱，也不比谁对明天更有把握。”（塞涅卡）

去世前我有事要做，即使只需一小时就可完成，我也不敢说一定有时间去做完。日前有人翻阅我的记事册，发现一份备忘录，列上我在死前要做的事。我实实在在地对他说，那时我离家才一里地，还精神十足，心情愉快，但还是匆匆把这些事记了下来，因为没把握一定

能够回到家。我这个人脑子随时随地在想东西，随即把它们记在心里，时刻做好充分准备；当死亡突然降临，对我也不算是突如其来的新鲜事。

应该随时穿好鞋子，准备上路，尤其要注意和做到的是这事只与自己有关。

短短的一生内何必计划成堆？

——贺拉斯

不算上这件事我们已经够忙碌的了。有一个人抱怨死亡，只是因为死亡使他功亏一篑，没有打完一场漂亮的胜仗；另一个人自思自叹，没把女儿嫁出去或把孩子教育安排好就会撒手人寰；这人舍不得抛下妻子，那人离不开儿子，这都是人生的主要乐趣。

我现在——感谢上帝——处于这样的状态下，可以应召离开，对什么事都毫无牵挂，虽然对人生尚有依恋，失去它会感到哀伤。我正在给自己松绑，已跟大家告别了一半，除了对自己。没有人对离开世界做了那么干脆与充分的准备，那么彻底摆脱一切，如同我正在做的一样。

可怜啊可怜，他们说，只要一个凶日

就会掳走我在世上的全部财富！

——卢克莱修

而建筑师说：

工程未完成，前功尽弃，

墙头砌到一半，摇摇欲坠。

——维吉尔

凡事不必筹备过于长期的规划，至少对于看不到其完成的事也保持热诚。我们生来是为了行动：

当我死时，但愿正在工作。

——奥维德

我愿意大家行动，尽量延长生命的功能，死神来时我若正在园子里种菜，不在乎它，更不在乎园子还没种完。我看见过一个人死去，

他到了人生最后关头，不停地埋怨命运割断了他手中的历史之线，他还只写到我们的第十五或第十六位国王。

谁也不能说，对财物的留恋

不会也存在于你的残骸中。

——卢克莱修

应该摆脱这些庸俗有害的心态。正因为如此，坟墓盖在教堂附近，在城市里人来人往最多的地方，据利库尔戈斯说，这是为了让男女老少不要看到死人而发毛，不断看见骸骨、坟墓和送灵，提醒着我们什么是人的处境：

古代用杀人给宴会助兴，

让武士相互残杀，

身子跌倒在酒杯上，

鲜血洒满宴席。

——西流斯·伊塔利库斯

埃及人在宴会结束后，给宾客展示一张死神的巨像，举像的人对着他们大叫：“喝吧，玩吧，死后你就是这个样。”因而我也养成了习惯，不但心里老惦记着死，嘴边也念叨着死，干什么都没那么乐意地去打听人的死亡，他们那时说过些什么，脸上表情怎么样，神态如何；读史书时也最注意这方面的章节。

我的书里充斥着这些例子，也可看出我对这些材料情有独钟。如果我编书，就要出一部集子，评论形形色色的死亡。教人如何死亡，也是在教人如何生活。

狄凯阿科斯编了一部题目类似的书，但内容不同，不很实用。

有人跟我说，事实远远超出想象，当人到了那个地步，剑法再高明也有失手时。让他们去说吧，事前考虑必定大有裨益。再说，脸不变色心不动，从容前赴，难道不算本领吗？

况且，大自然会伸出援助之手，给我们勇气。如果是暴卒，我们来不及害怕。若情况相反，我发觉随着病情的进展，也自然而然对生命日益蔑视。我发现身体有病时比身体健康时更易下决心去死。尤其我并不眷恋人生的欢乐，理由是我已开始失去享受的乐趣，对死亡也看得不如以前那么害怕。这使我希望做到离生愈远，离死愈近，也愈

容易实行生与死的交替。

我在许多情况下试验过恺撒的说法：事物远看时常比近看显得大。我发觉自己健康时要比生病时更怕死亡。当我高高兴兴时，欢乐与力量使我把生与死的状态看得明显不成比例，成倍夸大烦恼以及它们造成的心理压力，我真的有病缠身时从来不至于如此。

我希望死亡来时我也有这样好的心态。体验变化与衰退很正常：这好比是大自然悄悄让我们在不知不觉中衰败凋零。往日青春年少的活力，在一位老人身上还留下多少？

唉，老人身上还剩下多少生命。

——马克西米努斯

恺撒有一名卫兵，神情憔悴，在街上向他走来，要求他批准自己去寻死。恺撒看他失魂落魄的样子，风趣地回答：“你居然以为自己在活着。”谁要是猝然消失，我相信我们谁都难以忍受。但是我们被它牵着手，从一条感觉不出的斜坡上，慢慢地一步步滑入这种惨境，再与之相适应。所以当青春在我们身上消逝时我们不觉得震动。虽然从本质与实情来说，青春消逝也是一种死亡，要比郁郁而死及寿终正寝更加严酷的死亡。尤其从恶活到不活这个跳跃不是很沉重，还比不得从青春欢乐的人生跌入痛苦艰难的境地。

佝偻的身躯背不起重担，心灵也是如此。必须让心灵开朗飞扬才能顶住这个死敌的压力。因为心灵害怕时就永远不会安宁。一旦心灵安宁了，它就可以自豪地说，焦虑、恐惧甚至微不足道的烦恼不足以干扰它。这差不多超越了我们人类的处境。

坚如磐石的心动摇不了，

无论是暴君威逼的目光，

亚得里亚海上肆虐的风暴，

还是朱庇特的霹雳掌。

——贺拉斯

心灵就成了情欲与贪婪的主宰，匮乏、羞耻、贫困和其他一切厄运的主宰。谁能够主宰谁就应去获得这种心灵优势。这才是至高无上的自由，让我们养成浩气去取笑武力与不公，嘲弄监牢与铁链：

我叫你戴上手铐脚镣，

交给一个恶吏看管——神会来救我的。

——你是说：我会死的，以死来一了百了？

——贺拉斯

在我们的宗教中，人最可靠的基础就是蔑视生命。不光是理智的推理要我们这样做：有一件东西失去后不可能后悔，我们又为什么害怕失去呢？而且既然我们受到那么多死亡方式的威胁，害怕一切方式还不如忍受一种方式而少受些痛苦吧？既然死亡是不可避免的，什么时候来也就不管它了吧？当苏格拉底听人说：“三十僭主已经判了你死刑。”他回答：“自然法则也会轮到他们的。”

走在摆脱一切苦难的旅程上难过起来，这是何等的愚蠢！

一切事物随我们诞生而诞生，同样，一切事物随我们死亡而死亡。为一百年后我们不会活着的一切哭泣，犹如为一百年前我们不曾活过的一切哭泣，都是一样傻。死亡是另一种生命的开始，正如我们当年哭闹着到来，正如我们艰难地走进这个生命，正如我们进去时换下了以前的面纱。

凡事仅有一次也就无所谓痛苦。有什么理由为瞬息的事去担那么长久的忧？活得短与活得长在死亡面前都一样。对于不复存在的东西，长与短也不存在。亚里士多德说，希帕尼斯河上有些小动物只能活上一天。上午八点钟死的属于青春夭折，下午五点钟死的属于寿终正寝。对这段时间的幸与不幸斤斤计较，我们中间谁见了不会嘲笑？我们最长与最短的生命，若与永恒相比，或者跟山川、星辰、树木甚至某些动物相比，也是同样可笑。

但是大自然逼迫我们走上这条路。它说：你们怎么来到也就怎么走出这个世界。从死到生这条路你们走时不热情也不害怕，从生到死你们也这样去走。你们的死亡是宇宙秩序的一个组成部分，地球生命中的一刹那——

世人之间传递生命，

就像赛跑手交接火炬。

——卢克莱修

事物这样紧密安排，我能为你做出任何改变吗？这是你诞生的条件，死亡也是你的一部分；你这是在躲避自己。你享受的人生对生与对死均是有份的。你诞生的第一天引导你走向死，也同样引导你走向生。

第一时刻提供生命，同时也侵蚀生命。

——塞涅卡

诞生时开始了死亡，根源中包含了终结。

——马尼利乌斯

你生活的一切，是从生命那里窃取的；你活着是对生命的侵害。你一生中不断营造的是死亡。当你在生命中，你也是在死亡中。当你不再活着时，你的死亡也过去了。

因此，你若更喜欢如此，在活过了以后再死吧。可是在生活中你是个垂死的人，垂死的人要比已死的人遭受死亡的冲击更严酷，更强烈，更本质。

你若得到过人生的好处，享尽了欢乐，那就心满意足地走吧。

为何不像酒足饭饱的宾客一样离开人生宴席？

——卢克莱修

你若不曾欢度人生，它对你没有用处，失去它又有什么要紧的呢？你留下又做什么用呢？

必然要失去的时间，一事无成的时间，

又何必苦苦去延长呢？

——卢克莱修

生命本身既不好也不坏：按照你给它什么位子才会有好坏之分。你若生活了一天，也就一切都看见了。一天与天天是相同的。没有其他的光，也没有其他的暗。这个太阳，这个月亮，这些星星，这样的排列，跟你的祖先欣赏到的一样，也将让你的后代同样欣赏。

你的祖先看到的不是别的，

你的后代也不会看到其他。

——马尼利乌斯

再差的话，我的喜剧里每一幕的演员搭配与剧情变化也都在一年内轮转一遍。如果你注意到我的四季更替，这四季包含了尘世的童年、青年、壮年和老年。它完成它的工作，没有其他奥妙，只是周而

复始，永无止境。

我们绕着我们永远待着的圈子在转。

——卢克莱修

一年四季环绕着自己的足迹转动。

——维吉尔

我决不会故意给你设计其他的新消遣。

我不能给你有什么创新，

新的游戏同老的游戏一样。

——卢克莱修

你给别人让出位子，犹如别人曾给你让出位子。

平等是公正的主要组成部分。人人逃脱不了的地方你也逃脱不了，这能怨谁吗？不管你活着还是不活，你不能把你死的时间减少一二。这一切都是徒劳的，你在你害怕的这个状态里依然待得这么长，犹如你在吃奶的婴儿时期死去一样——

你就是称心如意活了几世纪，

死亡还是千秋万代存在下去。

——卢克莱修

我将妥善安排你，不让你有任何怨言——

你知道吧，死亡不会让

另一个你活下来，站在

你的尸体前哭泣。

——卢克莱修

也不让你留恋你那么难舍的生命——

无人会想起他一己的生命，

我们也不会悼念自身伤心。

——卢克莱修

死比无还不值得害怕，还有什么比无更少的吗？

在我们看来死亡代表失去，

但已经是无，还能失去什么呢？

——卢克莱修

这跟你在生时与死时都无关。生时，因为你还存在；死时，因为你不再存在。

谁都不会在寿数已尽前去世。你死后留下的时间，正如你生前过去的时间，都不是你的，跟你无关。

从前天长地久的时间，

对我们已了无影踪。

——卢克莱修

你的生命不论在何地结束，总是整个留在了那里。生命的价值不在于岁月长短，而在于如何度过。有的人寿命很长，但内容很少；当你活着的时候要提防这一点。你活得是否有意义，这取决于你的意愿，不是岁数多少。你不停往那儿走的地方，你可曾想过会走不到吗？何况条条道路都是有尽头的。

如果有人相伴可以给你安慰，世界不正是跟你并肩而行吗？

你的生命结束，万物跟随你死亡。

——卢克莱修

不是一切都随着你摇晃而摇晃吗？哪有什么不跟着你一起衰老的呢？成千上万的人、动物、其他生灵都在你死亡的一刻死亡：

白天接着黑夜，黑夜接着白天，

不会听不到

葬礼上的哭丧声

与婴儿的呱呱声响成一片。

既然身后无路，倒退又有什么用？你见过不少人很乐意死去，借此结束了莫大的苦难。但是不乐意死去的，你曾经见过吗？有的事你没亲自经历过，也没通过别人体验过，就加以谴责，岂不是太天真了吗？你为什么要抱怨我和命运？我们错待你了吗？是你控制我们，还是我们控制你？你虽说年纪还不大，生命却已经到了尽头。人无论大小都是一个完整的人。人及其生命都不是以尺子来丈量的。萨图恩是掌管时间与生命的神，儿子喀戎听了他的介绍不死的条件后，断然拒绝永生。

“你可以想象对于人来说永生永世不死，实在比我给他规定的有限人生更难忍受，更艰苦。如果你不会死，你会不停地咒骂我没给你准备死亡。我有意在死亡中增添了一些悲情，免得你看到死亡来得方便，过于迫切和随便地去拥抱它。为了让你把节制铭记在心，既不逃避生，也不逃避死——这是我对你的要求——我把生与死调节在苦与乐之间。

“你们七贤中的第一人泰勒斯，我教导他说生与死并无区别；因而，有人问他为什么不去死，他非常聪明地回答：‘因为这并无区别。’

“水、土、火以及我们这个球体建筑的其他组件，既构成你的生命，也构成你的死亡。你为什么担心最后一天？它并不比其他的每一天更促成你的死亡。劳累不是最后一步走出来的，只是在最后一步表现出来了。每天都走向死亡，最后一天走到了。”

以上是我们大自然母亲的忠告。我经常思忖怎么会这样，就是战争期间，我们在自己和别人身上见到死亡的面目，不像在家里见到的那么狰狞，无从相比，要不又是一大群医生与哭哭啼啼的人。同样是死，村民与老百姓心里要比其他阶层的人泰然得多。

我相信实际上还是我们围绕死者露出可怕的神情，制造阴沉的气氛，比死亡本身更加吓人。生活完全变了样，老母妻儿号啕大哭，惊慌发呆的亲友前来吊丧，脸色苍白、两眼垂泪的一大群仆人四处张罗，不见日光的一个房间里点着蜡烛，床头围着医生与教士；总之，我们四周惊恐万状。在那时候，我们未死的人也被埋葬在土里了。孩子看到自己的小朋友戴了面具会害怕，我们也是这样。人的面具与事物的面具同样应该摘掉。摘掉以后，我们发现罩在面具之下的这个死亡，跟不久前一名仆人或丫鬟平平静静的死亡并无两样。

铲除了这一切繁文缛节，死亡是幸福的！

How We Weep and Laugh at the Same Thing

[An understanding of the complexity of conflicting emotions helps us to avoid trivial interpretations of great men and their grief.]

When we read in our history books that Antigonus was severely displeased with his son for having brought him the head of his enemy King Pyrrhus who had just been killed fighting against him and that he burst into copious tears when he saw it; and that Duke René of Lorraine also lamented the death of Duke Charles of Burgundy whom he had just defeated, and wore mourning at his funeral; and that at the battle of Auroy which the Count de Montfort won against Charles de Blois, his rival for the Duchy of Brittany, the victor showed great grief when he hap-pened upon his enemy's corpse : we should not at once exclaim ,

Et cosi aven che l'animo ciascuna

Sua passion sotto et contrario manto

Ricopre, con la vista hor'chiara hor bruna.

[Thus does the mind cloak every passion with its opposite, our faces showing now joy, now sadness.]

When they presented Caesar with the head of Pompey our histories say that he turned his gaze away as from a spectacle both ugly and displeasing. There had been such a long understanding and fellowship between them in the management of affairs of State, they had shared the same fortunes and rendered each other so many mutual services as allies, that we should not believe that his behaviour was quite false and counterfeit - as this other poet thinks it was :

tutumque putavit

Jam bonus esse socer; lachrimas non sponte cadentes

Effudit, gemitusque expressit pectore læto.

[And now he thought it was safe to play the good father-in-law; he poured out tears, but not spontaneous ones, and he forced out groans from his happy breast.]

For while it is true that most of our actions are but mask and cosmetic, and that it is sometimes true that

Hoereditas fletus sub persona risus est;

[Behind the mask, the tears of an heir are laughter;]

nevertheless we ought to consider when judging such events how our souls are often shaken by conflicting emotions. Even as there is said to be a variety of humours assembled in our bodies, the dominant one being that which normally prevails according to our complexion, so too in our souls : although diverse emotions may shake them, there is one which must remain in possession of the field; nevertheless its victory is not so complete but that the weaker ones do not sometimes regain lost ground because of the pliancy and mutability of our soul and make a brief sally in their turn. That is why we can see that not only children, who artlessly follow Nature, often weep and laugh at the same thing, but that not one of us either can boast that, no matter how much he may want to set out on a journey, he still does not feel his heart a-tremble when he says goodbye to family and friends : even if he does not actually burst into tears at least he puts foot to stirrup with a sad and gloomy face. And however noble the passion which enflames the heart of a well-born bride, she still has to have her arms prised from her mother's neck before being given to her husband, no matter what that merry fellow may say :

Est ne novis nuptis odio venus, anne parentum

Frustrantur falsis gaudia lachrimulis,

Ubertim thalami quas intra limina fundunt?

Non, ita me divi, vera gemunt, juverint.

[Is Venus really hated by our brides, or do they mock their parents'joy with those false tears which they pour forth in abundance at their chamber-door? No. So help me, gods, their sobs are false ones.]

And so it is not odd to lament the death of a man whom we would by no means wish to be still alive.

When I rail at my manservant I do so sincerely with all my mind : my curses are real not feigned. But once I cease to fume, if he needs help from me I am glad to help him : I turn over the page. When I call him a dolt or a calf I have no intention of stitching such labels on to him for ever : nor do I believe I am contradicting myself when I later call him an honest fellow. No one characteristic clasps us purely and universally in its embrace. If only talking to oneself did not look mad, no day would go by without my being heard growling to myself, against myself, 'You silly shit!' Yet I do not intend that to be a definition of me.

If anyone should think when he sees me sometimes look bleakly at my wife and sometimes lovingly that either emotion is put on, then he is daft. When Nero took leave of his mother whom he was sending to be drowned, he nevertheless felt some emotion at his mother's departure and felt horror and pity.

The sun, they say, does not shed its light in one continuous flow but ceaselessly darts fresh rays so thickly at us, one after another, that we cannot perceive any gap between them :

Largus enim liquidi fons luminis, ætherius sol

Inrigat assidue cœlum candore recenti,

Suppeditatque novo confestim lumine lumen.

[That generous source of liquid light, the æthereal sun, assiduously floods the heavens with new rays and ceaselessly sheds light upon new light.]

So, too, our soul darts its arrows separately but imperceptibly.

Artabanus happened to take his nephew Xerxes by sur-prise. He teased him about the sudden change which he saw come over his face. But Xerxes was in fact thinking about the huge size of his army as it was crossing the Hellespont for the expedition against Greece; he first felt a quiver of joy at seeing so many thousands of men devoted to his service and showed this by a happy and festive look on his face; then, all of a sudden his thoughts turned to all those lives which would wither in a hundred years at most : he knit his brow and was saddened to tears.

We have pursued revenge for an injury with a resolute will; we have felt a singular joy at our victory... and we weep : yet it is not for that that we weep. Nothing has changed; but our mind contemplates the matter in a different light and sees it from another aspect : for everything has many angles and many different sheens. Thoughts of kinship, old acquaintanceships and affections suddenly seize our minds and stir them each according to their worth : but the change is so sudden that it escapes us :

Nil adeo fieri celeri ratione videtur

Quam si mens fieri proponit et inchoat ipsa.

Ocius ergo animus quam res se perciet ulla,

Ante oculos quarum in promptu natura videtur.

[Nothing can be seen to match the rapidity of the thoughts which the mind produces and initiates. The mind is swifter than anything which the nature of our eyes allows them to see.]

That is why we deceive ourselves if we want to make this never-ending succession into one continuous whole. When Timoleon weeps for the murder which, with noble determination, he committed, he does not weep for the liberty he has restored to his country; he does not weep for the Tyrant : he weeps for his brother. He has done one part of his duty : let us allow him to do the other.

On conscience

[Conscience originally meant connivance. Conscience in the sense of our individual consciousness of right and wrong or of our own guilt or rectitude fascinated Montaigne. It became a vital concern of his during the Wars of Religion with their cruel-ties, their false accusations and their use of torture on prisoners. Such moral basis as there was for the 'question' (judicial torture) seems, curiously enough, to have been a respect for the power of conscience - of a man's inner sense of his guilt or innocence which would strengthen or weaken his power to withstand pain. A major source of Montaigne's ideas here is St Augustine and a passionate note by Juan Luis Vives in his edition of the City of God designed to undermine confidence in torture.]

During our civil wars I was travelling one day with my brother the Sieur de la Brousse when we met a gentleman of good appearance who was on the other side from us; I did not know anything about that since he feigned otherwise. The worst of these wars is that the cards are so mixed up, with your enemy indistinguishable from you by any clear indication of language or deportment, being brought up under the same laws, manners and climate, that it is not easy to avoid confusion and disorder. That made me fear that I myself would come upon our own troops in a place where I was not known, be obliged to state my name and wait for the worst. That did happen to me on another occasion : for, from just such a mishap, I lost men and horses. Among others, they killed one of my pages, pitifully : an Italian of good family whom I was carefully training; in him was extinguished a young life, beautiful and full of great promise.

But that man of mine was so madly afraid! I noticed that he nearly died every time we met any horsemen or passed through towns loyal to the King; I finally guessed that his alarm arose from his conscience. It seemed to that wretched man that you could read right into the very secret thoughts of his mind through his mask and the crosses on his greatcoat. So wondrous is the power of conscience! It makes us betray, accuse and fight against ourselves. In default of an outside testimony it leads us to witness against ourselves :

Occultum quatiens animo tortore flagellum.

[Lashing us with invisible whips, our soul torments us.]

The following story is on the lips of children : a Paeon-ian called Bessus was rebuked for having deliberately destroyed a nest of swallows, killing them all. He said he was right to do so : those little birds kept falsely accusing him of having murdered his father! Until then this act of parricide had been hidden and unknown; but the aveng-ing Furies of his conscience made him who was to pay the penalty reveal the crime.

Hesiod corrects that saying of Plato's, that the punishment follows hard upon the sin. He says it is born at the same instant, with the sin itself; to expect punishment is to suffer it : to merit it is to expect it. Wickedness forges torments for itself,

Malum consilium consultori pessimum,

[Who counsels evil, suffers evil most,] just as the wasp harms others when it stings but especially itself, for it loses sting and strength for ever :

Vitasque in vulnere ponunt.

[In that wound they lay down their lives.]

The Spanish blister-fly secretes an antidote to its poi-son, by some mutual antipathy within nature. So too, just when we take pleasure in vice, there is born in our con-science an opposite displeasure, which tortures us, sleeping and waking, with many painful thoughts.

Quippe ubi se multi, per somnia sæpe loquentes,

Aut morbo delirantes, procraxe ferantur,

Et celata diu in medium peccala dedisse.

[Many indeed, often talking in their sleep or delirious in illness, have proclaimed, it is said, and betrayed long-hidden sins.]

Apollodorus dreamed that he saw himself being flayed by the Scythians then boiled in a pot while his heart kept muttering, 'I am the cause of all these ills.' No hiding-place awaits the wicked, said Epicurus, for they can never be certain of hiding there while their conscience gives them away.

Prima est hæc ultio, quod se

Judice nemo nocens absolvitur.

[This is the principal vengeance : no guilty man is absolved : he is his own judge.]

Conscience can fill us with fear, but she can also fill us with assurance and confidence. And I can say that I have walked more firmly through some dangers by reflecting on the secret knowledge I had of my own will and the innocence of my designs.

Conscia mens ut cuique sua est, ita concipit intra

Pectora pro facto spemque metumque suo.

[A mind conscious of what we have done conceives within our breast either hope or fear, according to our deeds.]

There are hundreds of examples : it will suffice to cite three of them about the same great man.

When Scipio was arraigned one day before the Roman people on a grave indictment, instead of defending him-self and flattering his judges he said : 'Your wishing to judge, on a capital charge, a man through whom you have authority to judge the Roman world, becomes you well!'

Another time his only reply to the accusations made against him by a Tribune of the People was not to plead his cause but to say : 'Come, fellow citizens! Let us go and give thanks to the gods for the victory they gave me over the Carthaginians on just such a day as this!' Then as he started to walk towards the temple all the assembled people could be seen following after him - even his prosecutor.

Again when Petilius, under the instigation of Cato, demanded that Scipio account for the monies that had passed through his hands in the province of Antioch, Scipio came to the Senate for this purpose, took his account-book from under his toga and declared that it contained the truth about his receipts and expenditure; but when he was told to produce it as evidence he refused to do so, saying that he had no wish to act so shamefully towards himself; in the presence of the Senate he tore it up with his own hands. I do not believe that a soul with seared scars could have counterfeited such assurance. He had, says Livy, a mind too great by nature, a mind too elevated by Fortune, even to know how to be a criminal or to condescend to the baseness of defending his innocence.

Torture is a dangerous innovation; it would appear that it is an assay not of the truth but of a man's endurance. The man who can endure it hides the truth : so does he who cannot. For why should pain make me confess what is true rather than force me to say what is not true? And on the contrary if a man who has not done what he is accused of is able to support such torment, why should a man who has done it be unable to support it, when so beautiful a reward as life itself is offered him?

I think that this innovation is founded on the importance of the power of conscience. It would seem that in the case of the guilty man it would weaken him and assist the torture in making him confess his fault, whereas it strengthens the innocent man against the torture. But to speak the truth, it is a method full of danger and uncertainty. What would you not say, what would you not do, to avoid such grievous pain?

Etiam innocentes cogit mentiri dolor.

[Pain compels even the innocent to lie.]

This results in a man whom the judge has put to the torture lest he die innocent being condemned to die both innocent and tortured. Thousands upon thousands have falsely confessed to capital charges. Among them, after considering the details of the trial which Alexander made him face and the way he was tortured, I place Philotas.

All the same it is, so they say, the least bad method that human frailty has been able to discover. Very inhumanely, however, and very ineffectually in my opinion. Many peoples less barbarous in this respect than the Greeks and the Romans who call them the Barbarians reckon it horrifying and cruel to torture and smash a man of whose crime you are still in doubt. That ignorant doubt is yours : what has it to do with him? You are the unjust one, are you not? who do worse than kill a man so as not to kill him without due cause! You can prove that by seeing how frequently a man prefers to die for no reason at all rather than to pass through such a questioning which is more painful than the death-penalty itself and which by its harshness often anticipates that penalty by carrying it out.

I do not know where I heard this from, but it exactly represents the conscience of our own Justice : a village woman accused a soldier before his commanding general - a great man for justice - of having wrenched from her little children such sops as she had left to feed them with, the army having laid waste all the surrounding vil-lages. As for proof, there was none. That general first summoned the woman to think carefully what she was saying, especially since she would be guilty of perjury if she were lying; she persisted, so he had the soldier's belly slit open in order to throw the light of truth on to the fact. The woman was found to be right. An investiga-tory condemnation!

Fortune is often found in Reason's train

[The Roman censor was not too happy about Montaigne's writing about Fortune (as distinct from Providence) - strangely so, since fickle Fortune and Fortune's Wheel were centuries-old commonplaces. (The word Fortune itself occurs some 350 times in the Essays.)]

The changeableness of Fortune's varied dance means that she must inevitably show us every kind of face. Has any of her actions ever been more expressly just than the following? The Duke of Valentino decided to poison Adrian the Cardinal of Corneto, to whose home in the Vatican he and his father Pope Alexander VI were coming to dine; so he sent ahead a bottle of poisoned wine with instructions to the butler to look after it carefully. The Pope, chancing to arrive before his son, asked for a drink; that butler, who thought that the wine had been entrusted to him merely because of its quality, served it to him; then the Duke himself, arriving just in time for dinner and trusting that nobody would have touched his bottle, drank some too, so that the father died suddenly while the son, after being tormented by a long illness, was reserved for a worse and different fortune.

Sometimes it seems that Fortune is literally playing with us. The Seigneur d'Estrées (who was then ensign to Mon-seigneur de Vendôme) and the Seigneur de Licques (a lieutenant in the forces of the Duke of Aerschot) were both suitors of the sister of the Sieur de Fouquerolle - despite their being on opposite sides, as often happens with neighbours on the frontier. The Seigneur de Licques was successful. However, on his very wedding-day and, what is worse, before going to bed, the bridegroom desired to break a lance as a tribute to his new bride and went out skirmishing near St Omer; there, he was taken prisoner by the Seigneur d'Estrées who had proved the stronger. To exploit this advantage to the full, d'Estrées compelled the lady -

Conjugis ante coacta novi dimittere collum,

Quam veniens una atque altera rursus hyems

Noctibus in longis avidum saturasset amorem.

[Forced to release her embrace of her young husband before the long nights of a couple of winters had sated her eager love] - personally to beg him, of his courtesy, to surrender his prisoner to her. Which he did, the French nobility never refusing anything to the ladies...

Was the following not Fate apparently playing the art-ist? The Empire of Constantinople was founded by Constantine son of Helena : many centuries later it was ended by another Constantine son of Helena!

Sometimes it pleases Fortune to rival our Christian miracles. We hold that when King Clovis was besieging Angoulême, by God's favour the walls collapsed of them-selves; Bouchet borrows from some other author an account of what happened when King Robert was laying siege to a certain city : he slipped off to Orleans to celebrate the festival of St Aignan; while he was saying his prayers, at a certain point in the Mass the walls of the besieged city collapsed without being attacked. But Fortune produced quite opposite results during our Milanese wars : for after Captain Renzo had mined a great stretch of the wall while besieging the town of Arona for us French it was blown right up in the air, only to fall straight back on to its foundations all in one piece so that the besieged were no worse off.

Sometimes Fortune dabbles in medicine. Jason Phereus was given up by his doctors because of a tumour on the breast; wishing to rid himself of it even by death, he threw himself recklessly into battle where the enemy was thick-est; he was struck through the body at precisely the right spot, lancing his tumour and curing him.

Did Fortune not surpass Protogenes the painter in mas-tery of his art? He had completed a portrait of a tired and exhausted dog; he was pleased with everything else but could not paint its foaming slaver to his own satisfaction; irritated against his work, he grabbed a sponge and threw it at it, intending to blot everything out since the sponge was impregnated with a variety of paints : Fortune guided his throw right to the mouth of the dog and produced the effect which his art had been unable to attain.

Does she not sometimes direct our counsels and correct them? Queen Isabella of England had to cross over to her kingdom from Zealand with her army to come to the aid of her son against her husband; she would have been undone if she had landed at the port she had intended, for her enemies were awaiting her there; but Fortune drove her unwillingly to another place, where she landed in complete safety. And that Ancient who chucked a stone at a dog only to hit his stepmother and kill her could he not have rightly recited this verse :

Ταυτόματον ἡμῶν καλλίῳ βουλεύεται.

‘Fortune has better counsel than we do.’ Icetes had bribed two soldiers to murder Tomoleon during his stay in Adrana in Sicily. They chose a time when he was about to make some sacrifice or other; they mingled with the crowd; just as they were signalling to each other that the time was right for their deed, along comes a third soldier who landed a mighty sword-blow on the head of one of them and then ran away. His companion, believing he was discovered and undone, ran to the altar begging for sanctuary and promising to reveal all the truth. Just as he was giving an account of the conspiracy the third man was caught and was being dragged and manhandled through the crowd towards Timoleon and the more not-able members of the congregation : he begged for mercy, saying that he had rightly killed his father’s murderer, immediately proving by witnesses which good luck had conveniently provided that his father had indeed been murdered in the town of the Leontines by the very man against whom he had taken his revenge. He was granted ten Attic silver-pounds as a reward for his good luck in saving the life of the Father of the Sicilian People while avenging the death of his own father. Such fortune sur-passes in rightness the right-rules of human wisdom.

To conclude. Does not the following reveal a most explicit granting of her favour as well as her goodness and singular piety? The two Ignatii, father and son, having been proscribed by the Roman Triumvirate, nobly decided that their duty was to take each other's life and so frustrate the cruelty of those tyrants. Sword in hand they fell on each other. Fortune guided their sword-points, made both blows equally mortal and honoured the beauty of such a loving affection by giving them just enough strength to withdraw their forearms from the wounds, blood-stained and still grasping their weapons, and to clasp each other, there as they lay, in such an embrace that the executioners cut off both their heads at once, allowing their bodies to remain nobly entwined together, wound against wound, lovingly soaking up each other's life-blood.

On punishing cowardice

[Renaissance Jurisconsults such as Tiraquellus were concerned to temper the severity of the Law by examining motives and human limitations. Montaigne does so here in a matter of great concern to gentlemen in time of war.]

I once heard a prince, a very great general, maintain that a soldier should not be condemned to death for coward-ice : he was at table, being told about the trial of the Seigneur de Vervins who was sentenced to death for sur-rendering Boulogne.

In truth it is reasonable that we should make a great difference between defects due to our weakness and those due to our wickedness. In the latter we deliberately brace ourselves against reason's rules, which are imprinted on us by Nature; in the former it seems we can call Nature herself as a defence-witness for having left us so weak and imperfect. That is why a great many people believe that we can only be punished for deeds done against our conscience : on that rule is partly based the opinion of those who condemn the capital punishment of heretics and misbelievers as well as the opinion that a barrister or a judge cannot be arraigned if they fail in their duty merely from ignorance.

Where cowardice is concerned the usual way is, cer-tainly, to punish it by disgrace and ignominy. It is said that this rule was first introduced by Charondas the law-giver, and that before his time the laws of Greece condemned to death those who had fled from battle, whereas he ordered that they be made merely to sit for three days in the market-place dressed as women : he hoped he could still make use of them once he had restored their courage by this disgrace - 'Suffundere malis hominis sanguinem quam effundere .' [Make the blood of a bad man blush not gush.]

It seems too that in ancient times the laws of Rome condemned deserters to death : Ammianus Marcellinus tells how the Emperor Julian condemned ten of his sol-diers to be stripped of their rank and then suffer death, 'following,' he said, 'our Ancient laws'.Elsewhere how-ever Julian for a similar fault condemned others to remain among the prisoners under the ensign in charge of the baggage. Even the harsh sentences decreed against those who had fled at Cannae and those who in that same war had followed Gnaeus Fulvius in his defeat did not extend to death.

Yet it is to be feared that disgrace, by making men desperate, may make them not merely estranged but hostile.

When our fathers were young the Seigneur de Franget, formerly a deputy-commander in the Company of My Lord Marshal de Châtillon, was sent by My Lord Marshal de Chabannes to replace the Seigneur Du Lude as Gov-ernor of Fuentarabia; he surrendered it to the Spaniards. He was sentenced to be stripped of his nobility, both he and his descendants being pronounced commoners, liable to taxation and unfit to bear arms. That severe sentence was executed at Lyons. Later all the noblemen who were at Guyse when the Count of Nassau entered it suffered a similar punishment; and subsequently others still.

Anyway, wherever there is a case of ignorance so crass and of cowardice so flagrant as to surpass any norm, that should be an adequate reason for accepting them as proof of wickedness and malice, to be punished as such.

On the vanity of words

[Montaigne, despite his own mastery of language, despised words and admired deeds or 'matter'. He showed this before he embarked on the Essays in the dedicatory letter of his translation of Raymond Sebond's Natural Theology, addressed to his father. What Montaigne admired in ancient Sparta - and what he found lacking in his own day - was a genuine respect for action over rhetoric.]

In former times there was a rhetorician who said his job was to make trivial things seem big and to be accepted as such. He is a cobbler who can make big shoes fit little feet. In Sparta they would have had him flogged for practising the art of lying and deception. And I am sure that Archidamus their king did not hear without amazement the answer given by Thucydides when he asked him whether he was better at wrestling than Pericles : 'That,' Thucydides replied, 'would be hard to prove : for after I have thrown him to the ground in the match he persuades the spectators that he did not have a fall and is declared the winner.' Those who hide women behind a mask of make-up do less harm, since it is not much of a loss not to see them as they are by nature, whereas rhetoricians pride themselves on deceiving not our eyes but our judgement, bastardizing and corrupting things in their very essence. Countries such as Crete and Sparta which maintained themselves in a sound and regulated polity did not rate orators very highly.

Ariston wisely defined rhetoric as the art of persuading the people; Socrates and Plato, as the art of deceiving and flattering; and those who reject this generic description show it to be true by what they teach. The Mahometans will not allow their children to be taught it because of its uselessness. And the Athenians, despite the fact that the practice of it was esteemed in their city, realizing how pernicious it was, ordained that the main part of it which is to work on the emotions should be abolished, together with formal introductions and perorations.

It is a means invented for manipulating and stirring up the mob and a community fallen into lawlessness; it is a means which, like medicine, is used only when states are sick; in states such as Athens, Rhodes and Rome where the populace, or the ignorant, or all men, held all power and where everything was in perpetual turmoil, the ora-tors flooded in. And in truth few great men in those countries managed to thrust themselves into positions of trust without the help of eloquent speech : Pompey, Caesar, Crassus, Lucullus, Lentulus and Metellus all made it their mainstay for scrambling up towards that grandiose authority which they finally achieved, helped more by rhetoric than by arms, contrary to what was thought right in better times. For Lucius Volumnius, making a public address in favour of the candidates Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius during the consular elections, declared, 'These are great men of action, born for war; they have consular minds, uncouth in verbal conflict. Subtle, eloquent, learned minds are good but for Praetors, admin-istering justice in the City.'

Rhetoric flourished in Rome when their affairs were in their worst state and when they were shattered by the storms of civil war, just as a field left untamed bears the most flourishing weeds.

It would seem that polities which rely on a monarch have less use for it than the others : for that animal-stupidity and levity which are found in the masses, making them apt to be manipulated and swayed through the ears by those sweet harmonious sounds without succeeding in weighing the truth of anything by force of reason - such levity, I repeat, is not so readily found in one individual man; and it is easier to protect him by a good education and counsel from being impressed by that poison. No famous orator has ever been seen to come from Macedo-nia or from Persia.

What I have just said was prompted by my having talked with an Italian who served as chief steward to the late Cardinal Caraffa until his death. I got him to tell me about his job. He harangued me on the art of feeding with a professional gravity and demeanour as though he were explaining some important point of Theology. He listed differences of appetite : the appetite you have when you are hungry, the one you have after the second and third courses; what means there are of simply satis-fying it or of sometimes exciting it and stimulating it; how to govern the commonwealth of sauces, first in gen-eral then in particular, listing the qualities of every ingredient and its effects; the different green-stuffs in their season, the ones which must be served hot, the ones which must be served cold as well as the ways of decorating them and embellishing them to make them look even more appetizing. After all that he embarked upon how the service should be ordered, full of fine and weighty considerations :

nec minimo sane discrimine refert

Quo gestu lepores, et quo gallina secetur!

[For it is of no small importance to know how to carve a hare or a chicken!]

And all this was inflated with rich and magnificent words, the very ones we use to discuss the government of an empire. I was reminded of that man in the poem :

Hoc salsum est, hoc adustum est, hoc lautum est parum,

Illud recte; iterum sic memento; sedulo

Moneo quæ possum pro mea sapientia.

Postremo, tanquam in speculum, in patinas, Demea,

Inspicere jubeo, et moneo quid facto usus sit.

[‘This is too salty; this has been burned; this needs to be properly washed; this is excellent - remember that next time.’I advise them carefully as far as my wisdom allows; finally I tell them, Demea, to polish the dishes until they can see their faces in them as in a mirror. I tell them the lot.]

Even the Greeks after all highly praised the order and arrangement which were observed in the banquet which Paulus Aemilius threw for them on his return from Macedonia; but I am not talking here of deeds but of words.

I cannot tell if others feel as I do, but when I hear our architects inflating their importance with big words such as pilasters, architraves, cornices, Corinthian style or Doric style, I cannot stop my thoughts from suddenly dwelling on the magic palaces of Apollidon : yet their deeds concern the wretched parts of my kitchen-door!

When you hear grammatical terms such as metonymy, metaphor and allegory do they not seem to refer to some rare, exotic tongue? Yet they are categories which apply to the chatter of your chambermaid.

It is a similar act of deception to use for our offices of state the same grandiloquent titles as the Romans did, even though they have no similarity of function and even less authority and power. Similar too - and a practice which will, in my judgement, bear witness one day to the singular ineptitude of our century - is our unworthily employing for anybody we like those glorious cognomens with which Antiquity honoured one or two great men every few hundred years. By universal acclaim Plato bore the name divine , and nobody thought to dispute it with him : now the Italians, who rightly boast of having in general more lively minds and saner discourse than other peoples of their time, have made a gift of it to Aretino, in whom (apart from a style of writing stuffed and sim-mering over with pointed sayings, ingenious it is true but fantastical and far-fetched, and apart from his eloquence - such as it is) I can see nothing beyond the common run of authors of his century, so far is he from even approach-ing that 'divinity' of the Ancients.

And the title Great we now attach to kings who have nothing beyond routine greatness.

To philosophize is to learn how to die

[Montaigne comes to terms with his melancholy, now somewhat played down. He remains preoccupied with that fear of death - fear that is of the often excruciating act of dying - which in older times seems to have been widespread and acute. His treatment is rhetorical but not impersonal. Montaigne is on the way to discovering admirable qualities in common men and women.

Cicero says that philosophizing is nothing other than getting ready to die. That is because study and contemplation draw our souls somewhat outside ourselves, keeping them occupied away from the body, a state which both resembles death and which forms a kind of apprenticeship for it; or perhaps it is because all the wisdom and argument in the world eventually come down to one conclusion; which is to teach us not to be afraid of dying.

In truth, either reason is joking or her target must be our happiness; all the labour of reason must be to make us live well, and at our ease, as Holy Scripture says. All the opinions in the world reach the same point, that pleasure is our target even though they may get there by different means; otherwise we would throw them out immediately, for who would listen to anyone whose goal was to achieve for us pain and suffering?

In this case the disagreements between the schools of philosophy are a matter of words. 'Transcurramus solertissimas nugas.' [Let us skip quickly through those most frivolous trivialities.] More stubbornness and prickliness are there than is appropriate for so dedicated a vocation, but then, no matter what role a man may assume, he always plays his own part within it.

Even in virtue our ultimate aim - no matter what they say - is pleasure. I enjoy bashing people's ears with that word which runs so strongly counter to their minds. When pleasure is taken to mean the most profound delight and an exceeding happiness it is a better companion to virtue than anything else; and rightly so. Such pleasure is no less seriously pleasurable for being more lively, taut, robust and virile. We ought to have given virtue the more favourable, noble and natural name of pleasure not (as we have done) a name derived from vis (vigour) .

There is that lower voluptuous pleasure which can only be said to have a disputed claim to the name not a privileged right to it. I find it less pure of lets and hindrances than virtue. Apart from having a savour which is fleeting, fluid and perishable, it has its vigils, fasts and travails, its blood and its sweat; it also has its own peculiar sufferings, which are sharp in so many different ways and accompanied by a satiety of such weight that it amounts to repentance.

Since we reckon that obstacles serve as a spur to that pleasure and as seasoning to its sweetness (on the grounds that in Nature contraries are enhanced by their contraries) we are quite wrong to say when we turn to virtue that identical obstacles and difficulties overwhelm her, making her austere and inaccessible, whereas (much more appropriately than for voluptuous pleasure) they ennoble, sharpen and enhance that holy, perfect pleasure which virtue procures for us. A man is quite unworthy of an acquaintance with virtue who weighs her fruit against the price she exacts; he knows neither her graces nor her ways. Those who proceed to teach us that the questing after virtue is rugged and wearisome whereas it is delightful to possess her can only mean that she always lacks delight. (For what human means have ever brought any-one to the joy of possessing her?) Even the most perfect of men have been satisfied with aspiring to her - not possessing her but drawing near to her. The contention is wrong, seeing that in every pleasure known to Man the very pursuit of it is pleasurable : the undertaking savours of the quality of the object it has in view; it effectively constitutes a large proportion of it and is consubstantial with it. There is a happiness and blessedness radiating from virtue; they fill all that appertains to her and every approach to her, from the first way in to the very last barrier.

Now one of virtue's main gifts is a contempt for death, which is the means of furnishing our life with easy tranquillity, of giving us a pure and friendly taste for it; without it every other pleasure is snuffed out. That is why all rules meet and concur in this one clause. It is true that they all lead us by common accord to despise pain, poverty and the other misfortunes to which human lives are subject, but they do not do so with the same care. That is partly because such misfortunes are not inevitable. (Most of Mankind spend their lives without tasting poverty; some without even experiencing pain or sickness, like Xenophilus the musician, who lived in good health to a hundred and six.) It is also because, if the worse comes to worse, we can sheer off the bung of our misfortunes whenever we like : death can end them. But, as for death itself, that is inevitable.

Omnes eodem cogimur, omnium

Versatur urna, serius ocius

Sors exitura et nos in æter-

Num exitium impositura cymbœ.

[All of our lots are shaken about in the Urn, destined sooner or later to be cast forth, placing us in everlasting exile via Charon's boat.]

And so if death makes us afraid, that is a subject of continual torment which nothing can assuage. There is no place where death cannot find us - even if we constantly twist our heads about in all directions as in a suspect land : 'Quæ quasi saxum Tantalø semper impendet. ' [It is like the rock for ever hanging over the head of Tantalus.] Our assizes often send prisoners to be executed at the scene of their crimes. On the way there, take them past fair mansions and ply them with good cheer as much as you like -

...non Siculœ dapes

Dulcem elaborabunt saporem,

Non avium cytharœque cantus

Somnum reducent -

[even Sicilian banquets produce no sweet savours; not even the music of birdsong nor of lyre can bring back sleep] - do you think they can enjoy it or that having the final purpose of their journey ever before their eyes will not spoil their taste for such entertainment?

Audit iter, numeratque dies, spacioque viarum

Metitur vitam, torquetur peste futura

[He inquires about the way; he counts the days; the length of his life is the length of those roads. He is tortured by future anguish.]

The end of our course is death. It is the objective necessarily within our sights. If death frightens us how can we go one step forward without anguish? For ordinary people the remedy is not to think about it; but what brutish insensitivity can produce so gross a blindness? They lead the donkey by the tail :

Qui capite ipse suo instituit vestigia retro.

[They walk forward with their heads turned backwards.]

No wonder that they often get caught in a trap. You can frighten such people simply by mentioning death (most of them cross themselves as when the Devil is named) ; and since it is mentioned in wills, never expect them to draw one up before the doctor has pronounced the death-sentence. And then, in the midst of pain and terror, God only knows what shape their good judgement kneads it into!

(That syllable 'death' struck Roman ears too roughly; the very word was thought to bring ill-luck, so they learned to soften and dilute it with periphrases. Instead of saying He is dead they said He has ceased to live or He has lived. They found consolation in living, even in a past tense! Whence our 'late' (feu) So-and-So : 'he was' So-and-So.)

Perhaps it is a case of, 'Repayment delayed means money in hand', as they say; I was born between eleven and noon on the last day of February, one thousand five hundred and thirty-three (as we date things nowadays, beginning the year in January) ; it is exactly a fortnight since I became thirty-nine : 'I ought to live at least as long again; meanwhile it would be mad to think of something so far off'. - Yes, but all leave life in the same circumstances, young and old alike. Everybody goes out as though he had just come in. Moreover, however decrepit a man may be, he thinks he still has another twenty years to go in the body, so long as he has Methuselah ahead of him. Silly fool, you! Where your life is concerned, who has decided the term? You are relying on doctors' tales; look at facts and experience instead. As things usually go, you have been living for some time now by favour extraordinary. You have already exceeded the usual term of life; to prove it, just count how many more of your acquaintances have died younger than you are compared with those who have reached your age. Just make a list of people who have ennobled their lives by fame : I wager that we shall find more who died before thirty-five than after. It is full of reason and piety to take as our example the manhood of Jesus Christ : his life ended at thirty-three. The same term applies to Alexander, the greatest man who was simply man.

Death can surprise us in so many ways :

Quid quisque vitet, nunquam homini satis

Cautum est in horas.

[No man knows what dangers he should avoid from one hour to another.]

Leaving aside fevers and pleurisies, who would ever have thought that a Duke of Brittany was to be crushed to death in a crowd, as one was during the state entry into Lyons of Pope Clement, who came from my part of the world! Have you not seen one of our kings killed at sport? And was not one of his ancestors killed by a bump from a pig? Aeschylus was warned against a falling house; he was always on the alert, but in vain : he was killed by the shell of a tortoise which slipped from the talons of an eagle in flight. Another choked to death on a pip from a grape; an Emperor died from a scratch when combing his hair; Aemilius Lepidus, from knocking his foot on his own doorstep; Aufidius from bumping into a door of his Council chamber. Those who died between a woman's thighs include Cornelius Gallus, a praetor; Tigillinus, a captain of the Roman Guard; Ludovico, the son of Guy di Gonzaga, the Marquis of Mantua; and - providing even worse examples - Speucippus the Platonic philosopher, and one of our Popes.

Then there was that wretched judge Bebius; he was just granting a week's extra time to a litigant when he died of a seizure : his own time had run out. Caius Julius, a doctor, was putting ointment on the eyes of a patient when death closed his. And if I may include a personal example, Captain Saint-Martin, my brother, died at the age of twenty-three while playing tennis; he was felled by a blow from a tennis-ball just above the right ear. There was no sign of bruising or of a wound. He did not even sit down or take a rest; yet five or six hours later he was dead from an apoplexy caused by that blow.

When there pass before our eyes examples such as these, so frequent and so ordinary, how can we ever rid ourselves of thoughts of death or stop imagining that death has us by the scruff of the neck at every moment?

You might say : 'But what does it matter how you do it, so long as you avoid pain?' I agree with that. If there were any way at all of sheltering from Death's blows - even by crawling under the skin of a calf - I am not the man to recoil from it. It is enough for me to spend my time contentedly. I deal myself the best hand I can, and then accept it. It can be as inglorious or as unexemplary as you please :

proetulerim delirus inersque videri,

Dum mea delectent mala me, vel denique fallant,

Quam sapere et ringi.

[I would rather be delirious or a dullard if my faults pleased me, or at least deceived me, rather than to be wise and snarling.]

But it is madness to think you can succeed that way. They come and they go and they trot and they dance : and never a word about death. All well and good. Yet when death does come - to them, their wives, their children, their friends - catching them unawares and unprepared, then what storms of passion overwhelm them, what cries, what fury, what despair! Have you ever seen anything brought so low, anything so changed, so confused?

We must start providing for it earlier. Even if such brutish indifference could find lodgings in the head of an intelligent man

(which seems quite impossible to me) it sells its wares too dearly. If death were an enemy which could be avoided I would counsel borrowing the arms of cowardice. But it cannot be done. Death can catch you just as easily as a coward on the run or as an honourable man :

Nempe et fugacem persequitur virum,

Nec parcit imbellis juventœ

Poplitibus, timidoque tergo;

[It hounds the man who runs away, and it does not spare the legs fearful backs of unwarlike youth;]

no tempered steel can protect your shoulders;

Ille licet ferro cautus se condat œre,

Mors tamen inclusum protrahet inde caput;

[No use a man hiding prudently behind iron or brass : Death will know how to make him stick out his cowering head;]

we must learn to stand firm and to fight it.

To begin depriving death of its greatest advantage over us, let us adopt a way clean contrary to that common one; let us deprive death of its strangeness; let us frequent it, let us get used to it; let us have nothing more often in mind than death. At every instant let us evoke it in our imagination under all its aspects. Whenever a horse stumbles, a tile falls or a pin pricks however slightly, let us at once chew over this thought : ‘Supposing that was death itself?’ With that, let us brace ourselves and make an effort. In the midst of joy and feasting let our refrain be one which recalls our human condition. Let us never be carried away by pleasure so strongly that we fail to recall occasionally how many are the ways in which that joy of ours is subject to death or how many are the fashions in which death threatens to snatch it away. That is what the Egyptians did : in the midst of all their banquets and good cheer they would bring in a mummified corpse to serve as a warning to the guests :

Omnem crede diem tibi diluxisse supremum.

Grata superveniet, quæ non sperabitur hora.

[Believe that each day was the last to shine on you. If it comes, any unexpected hour will be welcome indeed.]

We do not know where death awaits us : so let us wait for it everywhere. To practise death is to practise freedom. A man who has learned how to die has unlearned how to be a slave. Knowing how to die gives us freedom from subjection and constraint. Life has no evil for him who has thoroughly understood that loss of life is not an evil. Paulus Aemilius was sent a messenger by that wretched King of Macedonia who was his prisoner, begging not to be led in his triumphant procession. He replied : 'Let him beg that favour from himself.'

It is true that, in all things, if Nature does not lend a hand art and industry do not progress very far. I myself am not so much melancholic as an idle dreamer : from the outset there was no topic I ever concerned myself with more than with thoughts about death - even in the most licentious period of my life.

Jucundum cum aetas florida ver ageret.

[When my blossoming youth rejoiced in spring.]

Among the games and the courting many thought I was standing apart chewing over some jealousy or the uncertainty of my aspirations : meanwhile I was reflecting on someone or other who, on leaving festivities just like these, had been surprised by a burning fever and his end, with his head full of idleness, love and merriment - just like me; and the same could be dogging me now :

Jam fuerit, nec post unquam revocare licebit.

[The present will soon be the past, never to be recalled.]

Thoughts such as these did not furrow my brow any more than others did. At first it does seem impossible not to feel the sting of such ideas, but if you keep handling them and running through them you eventually tame them. No doubt about that. Otherwise I would, for my part, be in continual terror and frenzy : for no man ever had less confidence than I did that he would go on living; and no man ever counted less on his life proving long. Up till now I have enjoyed robust good health almost uninterruptedly : yet that never extends my hopes for life any more than sickness shortens them. Every moment it seems to me that I am running away from myself. And I ceaselessly chant the refrain, 'Anything you can do another day can be done now.'

In truth risks and dangers do little or nothing to bring us nearer to death. If we think of all the millions of threats which remain hanging over us, apart from the one which happens to appear most menacing just now, we shall realize that death is equally near when we are vigorous or feverish, at sea or at home, in battle or in repose. 'Nemo altero fragilior est : nemo in crastinam sui certior.' [No man is frailer than another : no man more certain of the morrow.]

If I have only one hour's work to do before I die, I am never sure I have time enough to finish it. The other day someone was going through my notebooks and found a declaration about something I wanted done after my death. I told him straight that, though I was hale and healthy and but a league away from my house, I had hastened to jot it down because I had not been absolutely certain of getting back home. Being a man who broods over his thoughts and stores them up inside him, I am always just about as ready as I can be : when death does suddenly appear, it will bear no new warning for me. As far as we possibly can we must always have our boots on, ready to go; above all we should take care to have no outstanding business with anyone else.

Quid brevi fortes jaculamur œvo

Multa?

[Why, in so brief a span do we find strength to make so many projects?]

We shall have enough to do then without adding to it.

One man complains less of death itself than of its cutting short the course of a fine victory; another, that he has to depart before marrying off his daughter or arranging the education of his children; one laments the company of his wife; another, of his son; as though they were the principal attributes of his being.

I am now ready to leave, thank God, whenever He pleases, regretting nothing except life itself - if its loss should happen to weigh heavy on me. I am untying all the knots. I have already half-said my adieus to everyone but myself. No man has ever prepared to leave the world more simply nor more fully than I have. No one has more completely let go of everything than I try to do.

Miser o miser, aiunt, omnia ademit

Una dies infesta mihi tot proemia vitæ.

['I am wretched, so wretched,' they say : 'One dreadful day has stripped me of all life's rewards.']

And the builder says :

Manent opera interrupta, minaeque

Murorum ingentes.

[My work remains unfinished; huge walls may fall down.]

We ought not to plan anything on so large a scale - at least, not if we are to get all worked up if we cannot see it through to the end.

We are born for action :

Cum moriar, medium solvere inter opus.

[When I die, may I be in the midst of my work.]

I want us to be doing things, prolonging life's duties as much as we can; I want Death to find me planting my cabbages, neither worrying about it nor the unfinished gardening. I once saw a man die who, right to the last, kept lamenting that destiny had cut the thread of the history he was writing when he had only got up to our fifteenth or sixteenth king!

Illud in his rebus non addunt, nec tibi earum

Jam desiderium rerum super insidet una!

[They never add, that desire for such things does not linger on in your remains!]

We must throw off such humours; they are harmful and vulgar.

Our graveyards have been planted next to churches, says Lycurgus, so that women, children and lesser folk should grow accustomed to seeing a dead man without feeling terror, and so that this continual spectacle of bones, tombs and funerals should remind us of our human condition :

Quin etiam exhilarare viris convivia cœde

Mos olim, et miscere epulis spectacula dira

Certantum ferro, sœpe et super ipsa cadentum

Pocula respersis non parco sanguine mensis;

[It was once the custom, moreover, to enliven feasts with human slaughter and to entertain guests with the cruel sight of gladiators fighting : they often fell among the goblets, flooding the tables with their blood;]

so too, after their festivities the Egyptians used to display before their guests a huge portrait of death, held up by a man crying, 'Drink and be merry : once dead you will look like this'; similarly, I have adopted the practice of always having death not only in my mind but on my lips. There is nothing I inquire about more readily than how men have died : what did they say? How did they look? What expression did they have? There are no passages in the history books which I note more attentively. That I have a particular liking for such matters is shown by the examples with which I stuff my book. If I were a scribbler I would produce a compendium with commentaries of the various ways men have died. (Anyone who taught men how to die would teach them how to live.) Dicearchus did write a book with some such title, but for another and less useful purpose.

People will tell me that the reality of death so far exceeds the thought that when we actually get there all our fine fencing amounts to nothing. Let them say so : there is no doubt whatsoever that meditating on it before-hand confers great advantages. Anyway, is it nothing to get even that far without faltering or feverish agitation?

But there is more to it than that : Nature herself lends us a hand and gives us courage. If our death is violent and short we have no time to feel afraid : if it be otherwise, I have noticed that as an illness gets more and more hold on me I naturally slip into a kind of contempt for life. I find that a determination to die is harder to digest when I am in good health than when I am feverish, especially since I no longer hold so firmly to the pleasures of life once I begin to lose the use and enjoyment of them, and can look on death with a far less terrified gaze. That leads me to hope that the further I get from good health and the nearer I approach to death the more easily I will come to terms with exchanging one for the other. Just as I have in several other matters assayed the truth of Caesar's assertion that things often look bigger from afar than close to, I have also found that I was much more terrified of illness when I was well than when I felt ill. Being in a happy state, all pleasure and vigour, leads me to get the other state quite out of proportion, so that I mentally increase all its discomforts by half and imagine them heavier than they prove to be when I have to bear them.

I hope that the same will apply to me when I die. It is normal to experience change and decay : let us note how Nature robs us of our sense of loss and decline. What does an old man still retain of his youthful vigour and of his own past life?

Heu senibus vitae portio quanta manet.

[Alas, what little of life's portion remains with the aged.]

When a soldier of Caesar's guard, broken and worn out, came up to him in the street and begged leave to kill himself, Caesar looked at his decrepit bearing and said with a smile : 'So you think you are still alive, then?'

If any of us were to be plunged into old age all of a sudden I do not think that the change would be bearable. But, almost imperceptibly, Nature leads us by the hand down a gentle slope; little by little, step by step, she engulfs us in that pitiful state and breaks us in, so that we feel no jolt when youth dies in us, although in essence and in truth that is a harsher death than the total extinction of a languishing life as old age dies. For it is not so grievous a leap from a wretched existence to non-existence as it is from a sweet existence in full bloom to one full of travail and pain.

When our bodies are bent and stooping low they have less strength for supporting burdens. So too for our souls : we must therefore educate and train them for their encounter with that adversary, death; for the soul can find no rest while she remains afraid of him. But once she does find assurance she can boast that it is impossible for anx-iety, anguish, fear or even the slightest dissatisfaction to dwell within her. And that almost surpasses our human condition.

Non vultus instantis tyranni

Mente quatit solida, neque Auster

Dux inquieti turbidus Adriæ,

Nec fulminantis magna Jovis manus.

[Nothing can shake such firmness : neither the threatening face of a tyrant, nor the South Wind (that tempestuous Master of the Stormy Adriatic) nor even the mighty hand of thundering Jove.]

She has made herself Mistress of her passions and her lusts, Mistress of destitution, shame, poverty and of all other injuries of Fortune. Let any of us who can gain such a superiority do so : for here is that true and sovereign freedom which enables us to cock a snook at force and injustice and to laugh at manacles and prisons :

in manicis, et

Compeditibus, sævo te sub custode tenebo.

Ipse Deus simul atque volam, me solvet : opinor,

Hoc sentit, moriar. Mors ultima linea rerum est.

['I will shackle your hands and feet and keep you under a cruel gaoler.' - 'God himself will set me free as soon as I ask him to.' (He means, I think, 'I will die' : for death is the last line of all.)]

Our religion has never had a surer human foundation than contempt for life; rational argument (though not it alone) summons us to such contempt : for why should we fear to lose something which, once lost, cannot be regretted? And since we are threatened by so many kinds of death is it not worse to fear them all than to bear one? Death is inevitable : does it matter when it comes? When Socrates was told that the Thirty Tyrants had condemned him to death, he retorted, 'And nature, them ! '

How absurd to anguish over our passing into freedom from all anguish. Just as our birth was the birth of all things for us, so our death will be the death of them all. That is why it is equally mad to weep because we shall not be alive a hundred years from now and to weep because we were not alive a hundred years ago. Death is the origin of another life. We wept like this and it cost us just as dear when we entered into this life, similarly stripping off our former veil as we did so. Nothing can be grievous which occurs but once; is it reasonable to fear for so long a time something which lasts so short a time? Living a long life or a short life are made all one by death : long and short do not apply to that which is no more. Aristotle says that there are tiny creatures on the river Hypanis whose life lasts one single day : those which die at eight in the morning die in youth; those which die at five in the evening die of senility. Which of us would not laugh if so momentary a span counted as happiness or unhappiness? Yet if we compare our own span against eternity or even against the span of mountains, rivers, stars, trees or, indeed, of some animals, then saying shorter or longer becomes equally ridiculous.

Nature drives us that way, too : 'Leave this world,' she says, 'just as you entered it. That same journey from death to life, which you once made without suffering or fear, make it again from life to death. Your death is a part of the order of the universe; it is a part of the life of the world :

inter se mortales mutua vivunt...

Et quasi cursores vitaï lampada tradunt.

[Mortal creatures live lives dependent on each other; like runners in a relay they pass on the torch of life.]

Shall I change, just for you, this beautiful interwoven structure! Death is one of the attributes you were created with; death is a part of you; you are running away from yourself; this being which you enjoy is equally divided between death and life. From the day you were born your path leads to death as well as life :

Prima, quae vitam dedit, hora, carpsit.

[Our first hour gave us life and began to devour it.]

Nascentes morimur, finisque ab origine pendet.

[As we are born we die; the end of our life is attached to its beginning.]

All that you live, you have stolen from life; you live at her expense. Your life's continual task is to build your death. You are in death while you are in life : when you are no more in life you are after death. Or if you prefer it thus : after life you are dead, but during life you are dying : and death touches the dying more harshly than the dead, in more lively a fashion and more essentially.

'If you have profited from life, you have had your fill; go away satisfied :

Cur non ut plenus vitae conviva recedis?

[Why not withdraw from life like a guest replete?]

But if you have never learned how to use life, if life is useless to you, what does it matter if you have lost it? What do you still want it for?

Cur amplius addere quæris

Rursum quod pereat male, et ingratum occidat omne?

[Why seek to add more, just to lose it again, wretchedly, without joy?]

Life itself is neither a good nor an evil : life is where good or evil find a place, depending on how you make it for them.

'If you have lived one day, you have seen everything. One day equals all days. There is no other light, no other night. The Sun, Moon and Stars, disposed just as they are now, were enjoyed by your grandsires and will enter-tain your great-grandchildren :

Non alium videre patres : aliumve nepotes

Aspicient.

[Your fathers saw none other : none other shall your progeny discern.]

And at the worst estimate the division and variety of all the acts of my play are complete in one year. If you have observed the vicissitude of my four seasons you know they embrace the childhood, youth, manhood and old age of the World. Its play is done. It knows no other trick but to start all over again. Always it will be the same.

Versamur ibidem, atque insumus usque;

[We turn in the same circle, for ever;]

Atque in se sua per vestigia volvitur annus.

[And the year rolls on again through its own traces.]

I have not the slightest intention of creating new pastimes for you.

Nam tibi proeterea quod machiner, inveniamque

Quod placeat, nihil est, eadem sunt omnia semper.

[For there is nothing else I can make or discover to please you : all things are the same for ever.]

Make way for others as others did for you. The first part of equity is equality. Who can complain of being included when all are included?

'It is no good going on living : it will in no wise shorten the time you will stay dead. It is all for nothing : you will be just as long in that state which you fear as though you had died at the breast;

licet, quod vis, vivendo vincere secla,

Mors æterna tamen nihilominus illa manebit.

[Triumph over time and live as long as you please : death eternal will still be waiting for you.]

‘And yet I shall arrange that you have no unhappiness :

In vera nescis nullum fore morte alium te,

Qui possit vivus tibi te lugere peremptum,

Stansque jacentem.

[Do you not know that in real death there will be no second You, living to lament your death and standing by your corpse.]

“You”will not desire the life which now you so much lament.

Nec sibi enim quisquam tum se vitamque requirit...

Nec desiderium nostri nos afficit ullum.

[Then no one worries about his life or his self; ...we feel no yearning for our own being.]

Death is less to be feared than nothing - if there be any-thing less than nothing :

multo mortem minus ad nos esse putandum

Si minus esse potest quam quod nihil esse videmus.

[We should think death to be less - if anything is‘less’tan what we can see to be nothing at all.]

‘Death does not concern you, dead or alive; alive, because you are : dead, because you are no more.

‘No one dies before his time; the time you leave behind you is no more yours than the time which passed before you were born; and does not concern you either :

Respice enim quam nil ad nos ante acta vetustas

Temporis æterni fuerit.

[Look back and see that the aeons of eternity before we were born have been nothing to us.]

‘Wherever your life ends, there all of it ends. The usefulness of living lies not in duration but in what you make of it. Some have lived long and lived little. See to it while you are still here. Whether you have lived enough depends not on a count of years but on your will.

‘Do you think you will never arrive whither you are ceaselessly heading? Yet every road has its end. And, if it is a relief to have company, is not the whole world pro-ceeding at the same pace as you are?

Omnia te vita perfuncta sequentur.

[All things will follow you when their life is done.]

Does not everything move with the same motion as you do? Is there anything which is not growing old with you? At this same instant that you die hundreds of men, of beasts and of other creatures are dying too.

Nam nox nulla diem, neque noctem aurora sequuta est,

Qua non audierit mistos vagitibus ægris

Ploratus, mortis comites et funeris atri.

[No night has ever followed day, no dawn has ever followed night, without hearing, interspersed among the wails of infants, the cries of pain attending death and sombre funerals.]

‘Why do you pull back when retreat is impossible? You have seen cases enough where men were lucky to die, avoiding great misfortunes by doing so : but have you ever seen anyone for whom death turned out badly? And it is very simple-minded of you to condemn something which you have never experienced either yourself or through another. Why do you complain of me or of Destiny? Do we do you wrong? Should you govern us or should we govern you? You may not have finished your stint but you have finished your life. A small man is no less whole than a tall one. Neither men nor their lives are measured by the yard. Chiron refused immortality when he was told of its characteristics by his father Saturn, the god of time and of duration.

‘Truly imagine how much less bearable for Man, and how much more painful, would be a life which lasted for ever rather than the life which I have given you. If you did not have death you would curse me, for ever, for depriving you of it.

‘Seeing what advantages death holds I have deliberately mixed a little anguish into it to stop you from embracing it too avidly or too injudiciously. To lodge you in that moderation which I require of you, neither fleeing from life nor yet fleeing from death, I have tempered them both between the bitter and the sweet.

‘I taught Thales, the foremost of your Sages, that living and dying are things indifferent. So, when asked “why he did not go and die then,” he very wisely replied : “Because it is indifferent.”

‘Water, Earth, Air and Fire and the other parts of this my edifice are no more instrumental to your life than to your death. Why are you afraid of your last day? It brings you no closer to your death than any other did. The last step does not make you tired : it shows that you are tired. All days lead to death : the last one gets there.’

Those are the good counsels of Nature, our Mother.

I have often wondered why the face of death, seen in ourselves or in other men, appears incomparably less terrifying to us in war than in our own homes - otherwise armies would consist of doctors and cry-babies - and why, since death is ever the same, there is always more stead-fastness among village-folk and the lower orders than among all the rest. I truly believe that what frightens us more than death itself are those terrifying grimaces and preparations with which we surround it - a brand new way of life : mothers, wives and children weeping; visits from people stunned and beside themselves with grief; the presence of a crowd of servants, pale and tear-stained; a bedchamber without daylight; candles lighted; our bedside besieged by doctors and preachers; in short, all about us is horror and terror. We are under the ground, buried in our graves already! Children are frightened of their very friends when they see them masked. So are we. We must rip the masks off things as well as off people. Once we have done that we shall find underneath only that same death which a valet and a chambermaid got through recently, without being afraid. Blessed the death which leaves no time for preparing such gatherings of mourners.

* 关于本书中破折号的使用说明：因狄金森习惯在句末用英文短破折号“—”来表达诗歌的节奏感，中文译本保留了这一用法，但因汉语标点符号的使用规则，统一改为中文长破折号“——”。

狄金森诗集版本概要

A wounded deer leaps highest

A precious, mouldering pleasure'tis

To fight aloud is very brave

The brain within its groove

I'm nobody! Who are you?

I can wade grief

I like to see it lap the miles

Is Heaven a physician?

I took my power in my hand

Before I got my eye put out

Heart not so heavy as mine

I know that he exists

'Tis little I could care for pearls

I felt a cleavage in my mind

The reticent volcano keeps

One of the ones that Midas touched

I dreaded that first robin so

A route of evanescence

Who robbed the woods

The leaves, like women, interchange

It sounded as if the streets were running

The rat is the concisest tenant.
Where ships of purple gently toss
Blazing in gold and quenching in purple
There is a word
He fumbles at your spirit
Because I could not stop for Death
Essential oils are wrung :
Death is like the insect
Bereaved of all, I went abroad
I felt a funeral in my brain
Fame is a fickle food
My Wheel is in the dark —
Summer begins to have the look
To-day or this noon
The Bible is an antique volume
Candor, my tepid Friend
On my volcano grows the grass —
Color, Caste, Denomination —
Doom is the House Without the Door —
I dwell in Possibility
To intercept his yellow plan
All the letters I can write
It's coming — the postponeless Creature
My life had stood a loaded gun
Good morning, Midnight!

Longing is like the seed

A toad can die of light!

一只受伤的鹿跳得最高，
我听那猎人讲： 那不过是死的惊恐，
然后矮树丛寂然不动。

被重击的岩石迸涌，
被践踏的钢铁涌流：
面颊总是骤然绯红
当一阵潮热激刺！

欢乐是苦痛的铠甲，
在内里它小心武装，
以免任何人察觉血迹
而惊呼“你受伤了”！

[1] 狄金森原诗均无标题，为查阅方便，目录取每首诗首句为标题。——编者注

那是一种珍贵，粉碎成尘的愉悦，
与一本古老的书相遇，
他恰恰穿着他的世纪的衣裳；
一种特权，我想，

握着他可敬的手，
在我们的手里温暖他，
一段，或者两段回程，抵达
他年轻时候的岁月。

检视他古雅的看法，
打开他的知识，
关于我们的心灵共同关注的
过去的文学。

学者最感兴趣的，
竞争追逐的，
当柏拉图是一种确然，
索福克勒斯 [2] 是个人；

当萨福 [3] 是个活生生的女孩，
贝阿特丽切穿着
被但丁神话了的长袍。
事实，多少世纪前，

他寻常般遍历，
就像有人会来到城里
告诉你你所有的梦都会成真：
他住在梦诞生的地方。

他的出现是魅惑，
你祈求他不要走；
老卷本摇摇他们羊皮纸的头
吊人胃口，就这样。

[2] 索福克勒斯（Sopocēls，约公元前496—前406），古希腊悲剧家之一。——编者注

[3] 萨福（Sappho，约公元前7—前6世纪），古希腊女诗人，出身贵族。——编者注

响亮地战斗很勇敢，
可是勇士，据我所知，
胸中满怀
骑士的悲痛。

他赢了，王国看不见，
他失败，无人察觉，
没有哪个国以对爱国者的爱
瞩目他垂死的双眼。

我们相信，为这样的人
天使们身披羽翅列队，
按等级依序前行，甚至脚
和制服都是白雪。

大脑在它的沟槽中
均衡并且真实地运动；
可要是让一个碎片骤然偏转，
对你来说那样
更易让水回流；
当洪水已裂开山峦，
并为自己挖出一道迂回之路，
还毁掉了磨坊！

我谁都不是！你是谁？
难道你也寂寂无名？
那我们俩就是一对——别吭声！
他们会驱逐我们，你知道。

做个有头脸的人物多无趣！
多风光，像只青蛙
一整天对着一片爱慕的泥沼
宣扬自己的名字！

我能涉水蹚过，
 整池的悲伤，——
 我习惯了。 可是快乐微微一推
 就折断了我的脚，
 我歪倒——醉了。
 别让哪颗石子笑，
 那是新酒，——
 那是一切！

力量只是痛苦，
 通过自律，拧成股，
 直到沉重都挂起。
 把没药 [4] 给巨人们
 他们会萎靡，就像常人。
 给他们喜马拉雅山，——
 他们会扛着他！

[4] 没药，中药名，为橄榄科植物地丁树的干燥树脂。——编者

🐾 [5]

我喜欢看它折叠里程
并舔过山谷，
然后停下来在水槽那儿补给；
之后，令人惊愕，绕过

一叠群山，
盛气凌人，窥探
路边的棚屋；
然后修剪一副残骸

好和它的半边毛皮合体，再蜿蜒穿过， [6]
用可怕，呜呜的音节
一路抱怨；
之后追赶自己跑下山

像半尼其 [7] 一样嘶鸣；
然后，像一颗星星般准时，
停在它自己的马厩门口
温顺而全能——

[5] 这首诗是写火车的。19世纪时，人们对火车有许多好奇和想象。诗文中常见，绘画、摄影也一样。（说明：书中脚注除特别标明之外，均为译者注。）

[6] 这句是关于火车运动对风景裁剪的形象描述。火车行过，穿过风景，如同撕裂一个完整的身体，同时遮挡了一半风景。“quarry”是被捕获的鹿的一部分骨架，扔给猎狗吃的。“pare”是剥皮修剪。诗中第一节让人联想到猫儿、马儿，而到第二节，对火车代表的工业革命这个庞然大物，心理上感觉可怕，还不明所以，狄金森对感受到的它潜在的全能和毁灭性做了隐喻。这两句的力量，体现

了一个诗人捕捉集体心理、预言时代的能力。文德勒谈这首诗，问诗中可能暗示了哪些动物，其实它既暗示某些动物，又暗示了上帝，科技来临相当于上帝重现。狄金森的父亲曾致力于把火车引入艾摩斯特市，火车站后来就设在离狄金森家不远的地方。文德勒说诗中的火车是狄金森自己的戏仿，表面上看知书达礼，温文尔雅，实际上却像那个庞大的机器一般，充满兽性和全能。

[7] 半尼其，出自《马可福音》3：17：“还有西庇太的儿子雅各和雅各的兄弟约翰，又给这两个人起名叫半尼其，就是雷子的意思。”

老天是个医生吗？
他们说他能治病；
可是死后的药
不可得。

老天是座金库吗？
他们谈论我们所拥有的；
可是那种磋商
我不是加入其中的一员。

💙 [8]

我手中紧握我的力量
和世界作对；
没有大卫拥有的那么多力量，
可我双倍勇敢。

我的石子投中了，可我自己
是那唯一栽倒的人。
难道歌利亚太巨大，
还是我太小？

[8] 本诗可参见圣经故事：大卫与歌利亚之战。

在我把我的眼睛弄瞎前，
我不妨也像其他
有眼睛的生命一样看，
不晓得还有其它办法。

可要是告诉我，就今天，
我也许能自个儿拥有
整个天空，我告诉你我的心
就我的那么大小，会裂开。

草地是我的，山脉是我的，——
所有的森林，无止尽的星星，
在我有限的双眼之间
我所能尽取的正午。

点水的鸟儿的动作，
闪电连接的道路，
要喜欢尽由我的眼睛去看，——
这消息会让我呆若木鸡！

那么，安全点，仅以我搁在
窗台上的灵魂猜想
其他生命的眼睛也看着那儿，
而对太阳毫无戒备。

不像我的心那般沉重的心，
悠然晚归，
它经过我的窗口
给自己吹着一个小曲儿，——

漫不经心的一段，一支谣曲，
一首街头小调；
可是对我恼怒的耳朵来说
却是多么甜美的抚慰，

就好像一只食米鸟，
闲逛到这边，
一边欢歌一边沉思接着又欢歌，
歌声婉转缓缓消逝。

那就好像一条潺湲的小溪
流过艰辛的路程
让流血的双脚跳起小步舞
却不知为何。

明日，夜会再度来临，
疲惫，也许，酸痛。
啊，号角，在我窗边，
恳求你再来溜达。

我知道他存在
在某处，在沉默中。
从我们粗俗的眼前
他藏起了他珍稀的生命。

这片刻间的游戏，
这愚蠢的埋伏，
只是为了让喜乐
自己赢得惊讶！

可倘若这游戏
证实刺穿了最诚挚的心，
倘若欢喜在死亡
僵硬的凝视中呆滞，

难道那乐子
不是看来太过奢侈？
难道那玩笑
不是伸得太远？

我可以为珍珠操点心
它拥有广袤的大海；
或领针，当皇帝
把红宝石骤雨般朝我猛扔；

或者金子，他是矿山的王公；
或钻石，当我看见
可以配上一个穹顶的王冠
持续为我加冕。

我感觉我的心神中有一道裂缝
好像我的大脑已经裂开；
我试图拼起它，严丝合缝，
却不能让它们对齐。

我努力让后面的念头接上
前面的念头，
可是次序散开无法控制
就像地板上的线球。

缄默的火山藏着
他永不休眠的计划；
不向任何靠不住的人
吐露他粉色的规划。

如果自然不讲
耶和华告诉她的故事，
难道没有一个倾听者
人性就不能够幸存？

被她紧扣的双唇告诫
让多嘴的人随便。
人所藏着的唯一秘密
是不朽。

没能把我们全都触摸的米达斯 [9] ，
摸过的东西中的一个，
是那倾心相诉的浪子，
乐而无忧的金莺。

这般沉醉，他用
戏谑的占卜 [10] 否认它；
这般炫目，我们错把他
当成一座降落的藏宝窟 [11] 。

花言巧语的家伙，骗子，
贪图享欲的人，一个贼，——
偶尔也是一个演说家，
销魂首领；

果园的耶稣，
一边欺骗一边诱走
全部的玫瑰精油
为他的潜逃之需。

金丝雀的光芒，
鸟中的流星，
谣曲和歌手
露天表演般的华丽道别。

我从没想过伊阿宋

是为了寻求什么金羊毛；
可那时我是个乡下人，
想法只为图个安宁。

可要是真有个伊阿宋，
传统容忍我
看苹果树上
他失去的报偿。

[9] 米达斯，希腊神话中弗里吉亚国王，“点石成金”的出处来自他的故事。他解救了酒神狄俄尼索斯的老师西勒诺斯，酒神允他实现他的愿望，他希望触手所碰一切成金。愿望实现，最终他的女儿也被他变成了一座金子雕像。他悔恨不已，再求酒神解救。酒神让他去帕克托罗斯河洗澡，洗去了点石成金的魔力。米达斯后舍弃王位，追随酒神。“米达斯的触摸”因此成为一个隐喻。

[10] “占卜”（divine），参见《创世记》44：15：约瑟对他们说：你们做的是什么事呢？你们岂不知像我这样的人必能占卜吗？

[11] “藏宝窟”（mine），一词双关，既是“藏宝库”，也暗指“我的宝贝”“我的珍宝”。

我如此畏惧那第一只知更鸟，
但是现在他已经驯服，
我习惯了他成长，——
尽管，他有些伤人。

我想要是我能只活到
那第一声鸣叫过去，
不是所有林中的钢琴
都有力量撕碎我——

我不敢与水仙花相见，
因为害怕她们黄色的长袍
会以完全相异于
我自己的风尚刺穿我。

我希望青草快点长，
这样当去看的时候，
他就会太高，最高的一个
能够伸展到看着我。

我受不了蜜蜂要来，
我希望他们远远待在
他们所去的那些幽暗国度：
他们有什么话对我说？

可是，他们在这儿；没一个生命爽约，

没有一朵花避开
温柔地顺从我，
髑髅地的女王。

在他走时每一个都向我致敬，
而我是我孩子气的羽毛
在哀恸中明白
他们无情地鼓鸣时，飘举。

一条隐没的路；
有一只旋转的轮子；
绿宝石的振鸣，
胭脂虫的急奔；
树丛上的每一朵花
调整乱转的头，——
突尼斯来的信，或许，
早晨一趟轻松的出行。

谁劫掠了树林，
不知提防的树林？
毫无疑心的树木
拿出他们的荚壳和青苔
取悦他的幻想。
他好奇，浏览他们的小饰物，
他抓取，他夺走。
一本正经的铁杉，
还有枞树会说什么？

树叶，像女人，交换
精明的私语；
有点头称赞，也有
暗示的推断。

两种情形下的对话者
享受秘密，——
对曝光泄露
达成绝不违背的约定。

听起来街道在奔跑，
然后街道又静静站立。
日食是我们在窗口能看到的一切，
敬畏是我们能感受到的一切。

渐渐地，最勇敢的人偷偷溜出他的隐蔽所，
去看看时间是不是还在那儿。
自然戴着它绿玉色的花冠，
搅动着更新鲜的空气。

老鼠是最节俭的房客。
他不付房租，——
否认义务，
蓄意如此。

让我们的聪明受挫、
探测或绕行，

恨无法伤害
这般悄悄的敌人。

法令
也不禁止他，
合法得
如同公正。

紫色的船只轻轻摇荡
在黄水仙的大海之上，
奇妙的水手融入其中，
而后——码头寂然。

熠然铄金，熄灭于紫色，
猎豹般跃向天空，
而后在古老的地平线
俯下她斑驳的脸，去死；

倾身低俯与厨房窗户般高，
触摸屋顶，微染谷仓，
对着草地飞吻她的女帽，——
白日的魔术师走了！

有一个词
它带着一把剑
能刺穿一个全副武装的人。
它掷出它带刺的音节，——
马上又变得沉默。

可在它落下的地方
被拯救的人
会在爱国日告诉，
某个佩戴肩章的兄弟
尽情呼吸。

不管那气喘吁吁的太阳在哪儿奔跑，
不管白天在哪儿浪游，
有它无声的进攻，
有它的胜利！
看那最精准的神枪手！
最成功的射击！
时间最崇高的目标
是一个灵魂“被忘记”！

他笨拙地触弄你的精神，
就像演奏者触弄琴键，
在他们奏出完整的音乐前；
他让你一点一点地惊叹，

让你脆弱不堪的心性准备
迎接那飘然出尘的打击，
以那轻柔的音槌，在很远处听到，
然后近了，变得那么缓慢。

你的呼吸有时间得以舒展，
你的大脑浮想联翩，——
发出唯一庄严的雷击
它剥去你赤裸灵魂的头皮。

因为我不能为死亡而停步，
他亲切地为我止步；
马车只载着我们自己
还有不朽。

我们驾马缓行，他不疾不徐，
而我也放下
我的劳作，还有我的悠闲，
因为他殷勤有礼。

我们经过一个学校，孩子们在玩耍，
围成一圈扭打，
我们经过谷物凝视着的田野，
我们经过落日。

我们在一所房子面前稍歇
它像是地上隆起的肿块；
屋顶几乎看不见，
飞檐不过是个土堆。

从那时起已是许多世纪；可每个世纪
都感觉比那一天短暂；
我初猜那天马儿的头
是朝向永生。

精油被榨出：
玫瑰中的花油
不只是被太阳榨取，
它也是技艺的礼物。

寻常的玫瑰衰败；
可这朵，在女子的抽屉里，
创造了夏天，当那女子
躺在无尽的玫瑰经颂祷中。

死亡像那虫子
威胁着树，
足能杀死它，
但可能被引诱。

用香脂诱惑它，
用刀子寻找它，
思量，它是否让你付出
生命中的一切。

如果它已经钻出
技艺所及之处，
敲响大树并离开它，—— 这是害虫的意愿。

丧失了一切，我出国远游，
并未减少丧失感
在一座新的半岛上，——
坟墓先我而行，

很快我也找到我的寄居处，
而当我寻找我的床，
它却是一座坟墓，在枕头上
安放下我的头。

我醒来，发现它比我先醒，
我起来，——它跟着我；
我想把它扔在人群中，
把它丢进大海，

在一杯杯人工安眠剂中
把它的形影睡去，——
坟墓消失了，可是铲子
还保留在记忆中。

我感觉大脑里有一场葬礼，
送葬者，来来去去，
不停地踩踏，踩踏，直到似乎
感知挣脱而出。

当他们都坐下来，
一场仪式像一面鼓
不停地敲啊敲，直到我以为
我的意识变得麻木。

然后我听到他们举起一个棺材，
又一次，踩着那铅做的靴子，
嘎吱嘎吱穿过我的灵魂，
而后空间开始鸣响，

仿佛整个天穹是一口钟，
而存在只是一只耳朵，
我和沉默是某种奇怪的种类，
遇难，孤独，就在这儿。

声名是浮浪不定的食物
在一个飘移的盘子上，
它的桌子曾为一个客人摆好，可是
不会再摆第二次。

乌鸦检视它的碎屑，
以嘲弄的聒聒
飞过它去找农夫的谷物；
人们吃了它而死去。

我的轮子在黑暗中，——
我看不到一根轮辐，
可是知道它嘀嗒嗒的脚
绕了一圈又一圈。

我的脚踩在浪涛上——
一条人迹罕至的路，
可是所有的路
尽头都有一块空地。

有些人放弃了织布机，
有些在忙碌的坟墓
找到稀奇的消遣，
有些用崭新、庄重的脚步
尊贵地经过大门，
把问题又抛回给你和我。

夏天开始有了样子，
迷人大书的穷究者
不情愿，可的确察觉——
姗姗来迟的树叶上新的收获。

秋天开始得以暗示
从云朵的女帽那儿，
或是萦绕永在的山峦的
那条披肩上深沉的颜色。

眼睛开始贪得无厌，
冥想精练了言辞，
一株远树的染匠
重拾他绚烂的活计。

结束是一切的归程，
几乎是终年常在，
然后逃脱了稳定，
召回到不朽。

今天或这个正午，
她待得这么近，
我几乎都摸到了她；
今夜她卧着
经过街邻——
还有树干和尖塔——
此刻越过了猜想。

圣经是一部古老的书
 由消逝的人们写成，
 应圣灵的建议——
 主题——伯利恒——
 伊甸园——那古老的家园——
 撒旦——敌将，
 犹大——伟大的失职者，
 大卫——游吟诗人。
 罪恶——一个著名的绝境
 其他人必须抵制，
 “虔信的”男孩子们
 非常孤独——
 别的男孩已经“迷失”。
 若故事有个巧言讲述者
 所有的男孩都会来——
 俄耳甫斯的布道惑人，
 它并不谴责。

真挚，我不温不火的朋友，
别来和我戏耍！
心灵的没药和穆哈
是它的有失平衡。

我的火山上长了青草，——
一个沉思的地点，
一只鸟儿会去挑选的地方
将是通常的想法。

火在下面熏烧得多红，
草皮多不安全——
我透露了吗，我的孤独
将充满敬畏。

颜色，地位，教派——
这些是时间的事儿，
死亡的分类划分
不知道它们是什么。

就像在睡眠中——这儿的一切都被遗忘，
教义丢在脑后，
死亡硕大的民主的手指
抹去了名号。

假若是茧蛹——他才不操心——
假若他收起 金色或红棕的蝶蛹，
都同样是蝴蝶

从死亡一清二楚的
他的昏冥中，它们浮现；
我们最细微的直觉
注定不可信。

厄运是没有大门的房子——
它从太阳那儿进来，
然后梯子被扔掉
因为逃跑没戏。

外面它们都在干什么
在梦里情景各异，
当松鼠玩耍，野莓死掉——
万物向上帝躬身致意。

我栖居于可能性中，
比散文更漂亮的一座房子，
有更多窗户，
比门高级。

房间，是雪松木的——
眼睛不能穿透；
而经久的房顶
是天空的复折屋顶 [12]。

让最漂亮的客人——
拥有——这个——
我窄小的双手展开的广阔
好收集乐园。

[12] 这个版本中第二节第四行的“gambels”（三角墙）是1933年版本中手稿辨识中辨认为错误的词语，严重影响这首诗的准确和人们的理解。正确的词语应当是“gambrels”（复折屋顶）。

要阻挡他黄色的计划，
太阳不允许
大气的反复无常；
甚至当雪

像恶作剧的男孩扔起雪球
到他的眼睛里，
他也不过是转过头； 正忙于崇高的事业！

催动大地
磁吸大海是他的事儿，
并让天象各安其所——
可每个过客

都认为我们更繁忙，
就像一只飘荡的微不足道的蜜蜂
支持一道闪电，
理应是颗炸弹！

（用一朵花）
所有我能写的信 都没有这一封漂亮，
丝绒的音节，
长毛绒的句子，
红宝石的深度，深不见底，
藏起，轻诉，为你——
是一只蜂鸟演唱它
它刚刚啜饮了我！

它来了——毫不迟延的造物，
它获得街区现在又获得了大门，
从所有其他的栓扣中挑选了它的门闩，
进来，说——“你认识我吗，先生？”
简单的问候和确然相认，
要是敌人便无畏——要是朋友便简洁，
用薄饼和冰溜装扮每座房子，
并且拿出去一座送给上帝。

我的生命是一杆上实弹的枪
立在角落，直到一天
主人经过——验明正身，
带走我。

一时我们游荡在绝美的树林，
一时我们猎取母鹿——
而每次我代他而言
群山径自回应。

若我微笑，热忱的光
便闪耀山谷——
就像一张维苏威的脸，[\[13\]](#)
让它的喜悦由衷焕发。

而在夜晚，当我们美好的白日结束，
我守护着我主人的头，
那比曾经共享的
厚厚的鸭绒枕头要好。

对他的仇敌我无比仇恨，
不用第二次刺激
我便投以怒黄之眼
或是按下断然的拇指。

尽管可能是我而不是他活得更久，

他却必须比我活得更久，
因为我只有杀戮的技艺——
却没有去死的力量。

[13] 维苏威是意大利那不勒斯的著名火山。

早上好，午夜！
我就回家，
白天厌倦了我——
可我怎能厌倦他？

阳光照耀之处是可爱的地方，
我喜欢逗留——
可是现在——早晨不想要我——
那么晚安，白天！

我能看，不能吗？
当东方变红的时候？
那时，山峦有它们的办法，
让心游历海外。

你没有那么美，午夜——
我选择白天，
可接受一个小女孩吧
他却转过身去！

渴望就像种子
在地里努力，
相信如果它求情
最终会被发现。

时辰和区域
每个情境都不清楚，
必须达到何种恒心，
在它终见太阳之前！

一只癞蛤蟆会见光而死！

死亡是癞蛤蟆和人
共同的权利，——
也是伯爵和蠓虫的

特权。

还要妄自尊大吗？

小蚋虫的霸权
和你的一样大。

狄金森诗集版本概要

狄金森生前的诗歌作品主要在朋友和家人之间流传。在1850年至1866年间，共有10首诗由她的朋友交给报纸匿名发表。1878年，诗人海伦·亨特·杰克逊（Helen Hunt Jackson）哄诱狄金森在《诗人的面具》（A Masque of Poets）中发表了一些诗歌，这是一本作者完全匿名的诗集。

1886年狄金森去世后，她的妹妹拉维尼亚发现了数百首之前狄金森从未示人的诗歌手稿。狄金森总共留下了大约1800首诗歌。拉维尼亚认为狄金森的诗歌理应得到出版。在她的努力下，梅布尔·卢米斯·托德（Mabel Loomis Todd）和托马斯·温特沃斯·希金森（Thomas Wentworth Higginson）于1890年编辑出版了第一本狄金森诗集《狄金森诗歌》（Poems of Emily Dickinson）。两位编辑对狄金森的诗歌按照当时的诗歌阅读传统和他们自己对诗歌的认识做了大量修改，包括规范标点、增加标题、按照韵律需要修改用词等等。第一版诗集取得了很大成功，一年后，他们又出版了《狄金森诗歌第二卷》（Poems of Emily Dickinson, Second Series）。其后，托德又分别于1894年编辑出版了《狄金森书信集》（Dickinson's Letters）和1896年的《狄金森诗歌第三卷》（Poems of Emily Dickinson, Third Series）。

狄金森的外甥女玛莎·狄金森·比安奇（Martha Dickinson Bianchi）不赞同托德和希金森对狄金森诗歌的过度编辑，根据她从拉维尼亚和狄金森的嫂嫂苏珊·狄金森（Susan Dickinson）那儿继承的狄金森手稿，先后编辑出版了六卷狄金森诗歌。她采取了与托德截然不同的编辑方式，不改变原诗的韵律，不添加标题。1945年，托德的女儿完成了托德生前未完成的对所保留的全部狄金森手稿的编辑，出版了《旋律霹雳》（Bolts of Melody）。这样，在几个不同的版本中，狄金森的大多数诗歌均得以出版，但是并没有一个完整收录所有诗歌的选集。

1955年托马斯·H·约翰逊（Thomas H. Johnson）的《狄金森诗歌》出版。约翰逊的版本基本完整收录了狄金森的诗歌。他依据狄金森手稿，忠实于狄金森的原文。此外，他对狄金森的诗歌按照年代进行了排列。这是一个划时代的文学事件，对诗歌界和读者重新认识评价狄金森起到了决定性作用。

拉尔夫·W·富兰克林在约翰逊的成就之上，进一步关注手稿和诗人的书写过程。1981年，他出版了带有狄金森手稿复印件的版本《狄金森手稿集》（The Manuscript Books of Emily Dickinson）。之后，1998年他又出版了《狄金森诗歌全集》（The Poems of Emily Dickinson）。2016年克蕾斯坦纳·米勒（Cristanne Miller）编辑出版了一个全新版本《狄金森诗歌：如她所保留》（Emily Dickinson's Poems: As She Preserved Them），声称最忠实地保留了狄金森诗歌原作的状态。

2016年重印的《企鹅经典：小黑书》系列中的这本狄金森诗选，是1933年马丁·塞克尔（Martin Secker）从玛莎·狄金森·比安奇1924年编选出版的《狄金森诗全集》（The Complete Poems of Emily Dickinson）中摘选的。这个版本目前已经非常罕见了。自从1955年约翰逊版本出版以来，通行的英文版本和各种翻译版本都是以约翰逊、富兰克林等人的版本为基础编辑翻译的。这个早期版本的再版，对读者和研究者了解早期狄金森诗歌出版和认知状况非常有益，可以和大家熟悉的通行版本对照阅读。

My life had stood a loaded gun

N° 29

‘It’s coming—
the postponeless
Creature . . .’

A wounded deer leaps highest,
I've heard the hunter tell;
'Tis but the ecstasy of death,
And then the brake is still.

The smitten rock that gushes,
The trampled steel that springs :
A cheek is always redder
Just where the hectic stings!

Mirth is the mail of anguish,
In which it caution arm,
Lest anybody spy the blood
And 'You're hurt' exclaim!

A precious, mouldering pleasure'tis
To meet an antique book,
In just the dress his century wore;
A privilege, I think,

His venerable hand to take,
And warming in our own,
A passage back, or two, to make
To times when he was young.

His quaint opinions to inspect,
His knowledge to unfold
On what concerns our mutual mind,
The literature of old;

What interested scholars most,
What competitions ran
When Plato was a certainty,
And Sophocles a man;

When Sappho was a living girl,
And Beatrice wore
The gown that Dante deified.
Facts, centuries before,

He traverses familiar,
As one should come to town
And tell you all your dreams were true :

He lived where dreams were born.

His presence is enchantment,
You beg him not to go;
Old volumes shake their vellum heads
And tantalize, just so.

To fight aloud is very brave,
But gallanter, I know,
Who charge within the bosom,
The cavalry of woe.

Who win, and nations do not see,
Who fall, and none observe,
Whose dying eyes no country
Regards with patriot love.

We trust, in plumed procession,
For such the angels go,
Rank after rank, with even feet
And uniforms of snow.

The brain within its groove
Runs evenly and true;
But let a splinter swerve,
'Twere easier for you
To put the water back
When floods have slit the hills,
And scooped a turnpike for themselves,
And blotted out the mills!

I'm nobody! Who are you?
Are you nobody, too?
Then there's a pair of us — don't tell!
They'd banish us, you know.

How dreary to be somebody!
How public, like a frog
To tell your name the livelong day
To an admiring bog!

I can wade grief,
Whole pools of it, —
I'm used to that.
But the least push of joy
Breaks up my feet,
And I tip — drunken.
Let no pebble smile,
'Twas the new liquor, —
That was all!

Power is only pain,
Stranded, through discipline,
Till weights will hang.
Give balm to giants,
And they'll wilt, like men.
Give Himmaleh, —
They'll carry him!

I like to see it lap the miles,
And lick the valleys up,
And stop to feed itself at tanks;
And then, prodigious, step

Around a pile of mountains,
And, supercilious, peer
In shanties by the sides of roads;
And then a quarry pare

To fit its sides, and crawl between,
Complaining all the while
In horrid, hooting stanza;
Then chase itself down hill

And neigh like Boanerges;
Then, punctual as a star,
Stop — docile and omnipotent —
At its own stable door.

Is Heaven a physician?
They say that He can heal;
But medicine posthumous
Is unavailable.

Is Heaven an exchequer?
They speak of what we owe;
But that negotiation
I'm not a party to.

I took my power in my hand
And went against the world;
'Twas not so much as David had,
But I was twice as bold.

I aimed my pebble, but myself
Was all the one that fell.
Was it Goliath was too large,
Or only I too small?

Before I got my eye put out,
I liked as well to see
As other creatures that have eyes,
And know no other way.

But were it told to me, to-day,
That I might have the sky
For mine, I tell you that my heart
Would split, for size of me.

The meadows mine, the mountains mine, —
All forests, stintless stars,
As much of noon as I could take
Between my finite eyes.

The motions of the dipping birds,
The lightning's jointed road,
For mine to look at when I liked, —
The news would strike me dead!

So, safer, guess, with just my soul
Upon the window-pane
Where other creatures put their eyes,
Incautious of the sun.

Heart not so heavy as mine,
Wending late home,
As it passed my window
Whistled itself a tune, —

A careless snatch, a ballad,
A ditty of the street;
Yet to my irritated ear
An anodyne so sweet,

It was as if a bobolink,
Sauntering this way,
Carolled and mused and carolled
Then bubbled slow away.

It was as if a chirping brook
Upon a toilsome way
Set bleeding feet to minuets
Without the knowing why.

To-morrow, night will come again,
Weary, perhaps, and sore.
Ah, bugle, by my window,
I pray you stroll once more!

I know that he exists
Somewhere, in silence.
He has hid his rare life
From our gross eyes.

'Tis in instant's play,
'Tis a fond ambush,
Just to make bliss
Earn her own surprise!

But should the play
Prove piercing earnest,
Should the glee glaze
In death's stiff stare,

Would not the fun
Look too expensive?
Would not the jest
Have crawled too far?

'Tis little I could care for pearls
Who own the ample sea;
Or brooches, when the Emperor
With rubies pelteth me;

Or gold, who am the Prince of Mines;
Or diamonds, when I see
A diadem to fit a dome
Continual crowning me.

I felt a cleavage in my mind
As if my brain had split;
I tried to match it, seam by seam,
But could not make them fit.

The thought behind I strove to join
Unto the thought before,
But sequence unravelled out of reach
Like balls upon a floor.

The reticent volcano keeps
His never slumbering plan;
Confided are his projects pink
To no precarious man.

If nature will not tell the tale
Jehovah told to her,
Can human nature not survive
Without a listener?

Admonished by her buckled lips
Let every babbler be.
The only secret people keep
Is Immortality.

One of the ones that Midas touched,
Who failed to touch us all,
Was that confiding prodigal,
The blissful oriole.

So drunk, he disavows it
With badinage divine;
So dazzling, we mistake him
For an alighting mine.

A pleader, a dissembler,
An epicure, a thief, —
Betimes an oratorio,
An ecstasy in chief;

The Jesuit of orchards,
He cheats as he enchants
Of an entire attar
For his decamping wants.

The splendor of a Burmah,
The meteor of birds,
Departing like a pageant
Of ballads and of bards.

I never thought that Jason sought
For any golden fleece;
But then I am a rural man,

With thoughts that make for peace.

But if there were a Jason,
Tradition suffer me
Behold his lost emolument
Upon the apple-tree.

I dreaded that first robin so,
But he is mastered now,
And I'm accustomed to him grown, —
He hurts a little, though.

I thought if I could only live
Till that first shout got by,
Not all pianos in the woods
Had power to mangle me.

I dared not meet the daffodils,
For fear their yellow gown
Would pierce me with a fashion
So foreign to my own.

I wished the grass would hurry,
So when'twas time to see,
He'd be too tall, the tallest one
Could stretch to look at me.

I could not bear the bees should come,
I wished they'd stay away
In those dim countries where they go :
What word had they for me?

They're here, though; not a creature failed,
No blossom stayed away
In gentle deference to me,

The Queen of Calvary.

Each one salutes me as he goes,
And I my childish plumes
Lift, in bereaved acknowledgment
Of their unthinking drums.

A route of evanescence
With a revolving wheel;
A resonance of emerald,
A rush of cochineal;
And every blossom on the bush
Adjusts its tumbled head, —
The mail from Tunis, probably,
An easy morning's ride.

Who robbed the woods,
The trusting woods?
The unsuspecting trees
Brought out their burrs and mosses
His fantasy to please.
He scanned their trinkets, curious,
He grasped, he bore away.
What will the solemn hemlock,
What will the fir-tree say?

The leaves, like women, interchange
Sagacious confidence;
Somewhat of nods, and somewhat of Portentous inference,

The parties in both cases
Enjoining secrecy, —
Inviolable compact
To notoriety.

It sounded as if the streets were running,
And then the streets stood still.
Eclipse was all we could see at the window,
And awe was all we could feel.

By and by the boldest stole out of his covert,
To see if time was there.
Nature was in her beryl apron,
Mixing fresher air.

The rat is the concisest tenant.
He pays no rent, —
Repudiates the obligation,
On schemes intent.

Balking our wit
To sound or circumvent,
Hate cannot harm
A foe so reticent.

Neither decree
Prohibits him,
Lawful as Equilibrium.

Where ships of purple gently toss
On seas of daffodil,
Fantastic sailors mingle,
And then — the wharf is still.

Blazing in gold and quenching in purple,
Leaping like leopards to the sky,
Then at the feet of the old horizon
Laying her spotted face, to die;

Stooping as low as the kitchen window,
Touching the roof and tinting the barn,
Kissing her bonnet to the meadow, —
And the juggler of day is gone!

There is a word
Which bears a sword
Can pierce an armed man.
It hurls its barbed syllables, —
At once is mute again.

But where it fell
The saved will tell
On patriotic day,
Some epauletted brother
Gave his breath away.

Wherever runs the breathless sun,
Wherever roams the day,
There is its noiseless onset,
There is its victory!
Behold the keenest marksman!
The most accomplished shot!
Time's sublimest target
Is a soul 'forgot'!

He fumbles at your spirit
As players at the keys
Before they drop full music on;
He stuns you by degrees,

Prepares your brittle substance
For the ethereal blow,
By fainter hammers, further heard,
Then nearer, then so slow

Your breath has time to straighten,
Your brain to bubble cool, —
Deals one imperial thunderbolt
That scalps your naked soul.

Because I could not stop for Death,
He kindly stopped for me;
The carriage held but just ourselves
And Immortality.

We slowly drove, he knew no haste,
And I had put away
My labor, and my leisure too,
For his civility.

We passed the school where children played
At wrestling in a ring;
We passed the fields of gazing grain,
We passed the setting sun.

We paused before a house that seemed
A swelling of the ground;
The roof was scarcely visible,
The cornice but a mound.

Since then'tis centuries; but each
Feels shorter than the day
I first surmised the horses'heads
Were toward eternity.

Essential oils are wrung :
The attar from the rose
Is not expressed by suns alone,
It is the gift of screws.

The general rose decays;
But this, in lady's drawer,
Makes summer when the lady lies
In ceaseless rosemary.

Death is like the insect
Menacing the tree,
Competent to kill it,
But decoyed may be.

Bait it with the balsam,
Seek it with the knife,
Baffie, if it cost you
Everything in life.

Then, if it have burrowed
Out of reach of skill,
Ring the tree and leave it, —
'Tis the vermin's will.

Bereaved of all, I went abroad,
No less bereaved to be
Upon a new peninsula, —
The grave preceded me,

Obtained my lodgings ere myself,
And when I sought my bed,
The grave it was, reposed upon
The pillow for my head.

I waked, to find it first awake,
I rose, —it followed me;
I tried to drop it in the crowd,
To lose it in the sea,

In cups of artificial drowse
To sleep its shape away, —
The grave was finished, but the spade
Remained in memory.

I felt a funeral in my brain,
And mourners, to and fro,
Kept treading, treading, till it seemed
That sense was breaking through.

And when they all were seated,
A service like a drum
Kept beating, beating, till I thought
My mind was going numb.

And then I heard them lift a box,
And creak across my soul
With those same boots of lead, again,
Then space began to toll

As all the heavens were a bell,
And Being but an ear,
And I and silence some strange race,
Wrecked, solitary, here.

Fame is a fickle food
Upon a shifting plate,
Whose table once a Guest, but not
The second time, is set.

Whose crumbs the crows inspect,
And with ironic caw
Flap past it to the Farmer's corn;
Men eat of it and die.

My Wheel is in the dark, —
I cannot see a spoke,
Yet know its dripping feet
Go round and round.

My foot is on the tide —
An unfrequented road,
Yet have all roads
A 'clearing' at the end.

Some have resigned the loom,
Some in the busy tomb
Find quaint employ,
Some with new, stately feet
Pass royal through the gate,
Flinging the problem back at you and me.

Summer begins to have the look,
Peruser of enchanting Book
Reluctantly, but sure, perceives —
A gain upon the backward leaves.

Autumn begins to be inferred
By millinery of the cloud,
Or deeper color in the shawl
That wraps the everlasting hill.

The eye begins its avarice,
A meditation chastens speech,
Some Dyer of a distant tree
Resumes his gaudy industry.

Conclusion is the course of all,
Almost to be perennial,
And then elude stability
Recalls to immortality.

To-day or this noon
She dwelt so close,
I almost touched her;
Tonight she lies
Past neighborhood —
And bough and steeple —
Now past surmise.

The Bible is an antique volume
Written by faded men,
At the suggestion of Holy Spectres —
Subjects — Bethlehem —
Eden — the ancient Homestead —
Satan — the Brigadier,
Judas — the great Defaulter,
David — the Troubadour.
Sin — a distinguished Precipice
Others must resist,
Boys that 'believe'
Are very lonesome —
Other boys are 'lost'.
Had but the tale a warbling Teller
All the boys would come —
Orpheus' sermon captivated,
It did not condemn.

Candor, my tepid Friend,
Come not to play with me!
The Myrrhs and Mochas of the Mind
Are its Iniquity.

On my volcano grows the grass, —
A meditative spot,
An area for a bird to choose
Would be the general thought.

How red the fire reeks below,
How insecure the sod —
Did I disclose, would populate
With awe my solitude.

Color, Caste, Denomination —
These are Time's affair,
Death's division classifying
Does not know they are.

As in sleep — all here forgotten,
Tenets put behind,
Death's large democratic fingers
Rub away the brand.

If Circassian — He is careless —
If He put away
Chrysalis of Blonde or Umber,
Equal butterfly

They emerge from His obscuring;
What Death knows so well,
Our minuter intuitions
Deem incredible.

Doom is the House Without the Door —
'Tis entered from the sun,
And then the ladder's thrown away
Because escape is done.

'Tis varied by the dream
Of what they do outside,
When squirrels play and berries die —
And hundreds bow to God.

I dwell in Possibility,
A fairer house than Prose,
More numerous of windows,
Superior of doors.

Of chambers, as the cedars —
Impregnable of eye;
And for an everlasting roof
The gables of the sky.

Of visitors — the fairest —
For occupation — this —
The spreading wide my narrow hands
To gather Paradise.

To intercept his yellow plan
The sun does not allow
Caprices of the atmosphere;
And even when the snow

Heaves balls of specks like vicious boy
Directly in his eye,
Does not so much as turn his head —
Busy with majesty!

'Tis his to stimulate the earth,
And magnetize the sea,
And bind astronomy in place —
Yet any passer-by

Would deem Ourselves the busier,
As the minutest bee
That rides supports a thunder,
A bomb to justify!

(With a flower)

All the letters I can write
Are not fair as this,
Syllables of velvet,
Sentences of plush,
Depths of ruby, undrained,
Hid, lip, for thee —
Play it were a humming bird
And just sipped me!

It's coming — the postponeless Creature,
It gains the block and now it gains the door,
Chooses its latch from all the other fastenings,
Enters with a—'You know me, Sir?'
Simple salute and certain recognition,
Bold — were it enemy — brief were it friend,
Dresses each house in crêpe and icicle,
And carries one out of it to God.

My life had stood a loaded gun
In corners, till a day
The owner passed — identified,
And carried me away.

And now we roam the sov'reign woods,
And now we hunt the doe —
And every time I speak for him
The mountains straight reply.

And do I smile, such cordial light
Upon the valley glow —
It is as a Vesuvian face
Had let its pleasure through.

And when at night, our good day done,
I guard my master's head,
'Tis better than the eider duck's
Deep pillow to have shared.

To foe of his I'm deadly foe,
None stir the second time
On whom I lay a yellow eye
Or an emphatic thumb.

Though I than he may longer live,
He longer must than I,
For I have but the art to kill —

Without the power to die.

Good morning, Midnight!
I'm coming home,
Day got tired of me —
How could I of him?

Sunshine was a sweet place,
I liked to stay —
But Morn didn't want me — now —
So good night, Day!

I can look, can't I?
When the East is red?
The hills have a way, then,
That puts the heart abroad.

You are not so fair, Midnight —
I chose Day,
But please take a little Girl
He turned away!

Longing is like the seed
That wrestles in the ground,
Believing if it intercede
It shall at length be found.

The hour and the zone
Each circumstance unknown,
What constancy must be achieved
Before it see the sun!

A toad can die of light!
Deaths is the common right
Of toads and men, —
Of earl and midge

The privilege.
Why swagger then?
The gnat's supremacy
Is large as thine.

普遍性之歌 [\[1\]](#)

来呀，缪斯说，
为我唱一首没有诗人唱过的歌，
为我歌咏普遍性吧。

在我们这广阔的地球中，
深不可测的厚度和熔渣之间，
它中心的中央安然包裹着、
栖息着完美的种子。

每个生命或多或少享有它的一份，
一切出生都是它的出生，掩藏不掩藏，种子都在等待。

二

看啊！目光犀利而卓然挺拔的科学，
如同从高峰上俯视着现代人，
不断地发出绝对的律令。

但再看啊！灵魂，超乎一切科学之上，

历史由于它一层层环绕了地球，
整个星河由于它在天空上转动。

经过漫长周折的螺旋之路，
（如同海上一条因风转舵的船）
部分的由于它向恒常的汇流；
真实的由于它向理想的趋近 [2]。

由于它，神秘的演化
不但令正义合理，也令我们称之为邪恶者合理。

从无论什么样的面具底下，
从溃烂的巨大躯干之中，从奸诈和诡计和泪水之中，
将出现健康和欢乐，普遍的欢乐。

脱开病态的和浮浅的主体，脱开恶劣的多数，人和国家的变化无穷的欺骗，

如电、没有污染，分劈着、充盈着一切，
只有良善是普遍的。

三

在疾病和哀愁丛生的群山之上，
一只无拘无束的鸟儿永远展翅悬停着，停着，
高高地处在更纯净、更快乐的风中。

从最浓重的缺憾的云翳那里，
永远会放射一道完美的光，
闪现天堂的荣耀。

对着潮流和习俗的争吵，
对着巴别塔般的喧嚣、震耳欲聋的狂欢，
一缕清音，依稀可辨，安抚着每一个间歇，
那是最终的合唱，来自某个遥远的海岸。

啊，蒙福的眼睛、快乐的心，
能看见、能认识宏伟的迷宫中
一条细细的指引之线。 [3]

四

而你，阿美利加 [4] ，
你为了宏图的顶点、它的理想和它的成真，
你为了这些（并非为你自己）而来临。

你也包围一切，
拥抱着、提携着、迎接着一切，你也通过崭新的大道，
向理想趋近。

别的大陆上局限的信仰、过去的伟大，
不是给你的，你拥有自己的伟大，
属灵的信仰和广博，吸收着、容纳着一切，
适合一切人的一切。

一切，一切追求不朽，
爱如同静静包裹万物的光，
大自然的改善福佑万物，

花儿、时令的果实、神圣和从不爽约的果园，
形态、事物、各种生长、各种人性，都在成熟为精神的形象。

神啊，为了让我能歌唱那个理想，
请向我，向我所爱的男女赐予这不灭的信仰，

不管你从整体 [5] 中保留什么，也请赐予我们蕴含在时间和空间
中的对你蓝图的信念，
健康、和平、普遍的拯救。

它是否是一个梦？
不，但没有它则是梦，
辜负它，生命的传承和财富就是个梦，
全世界都会是一个梦。

开拓者！啊，开拓者！

来呀，我脸面黝黑的孩子们，
排好队形，准备好你们的武器，
手枪带上了吗？锋利的斧子带上了吗？
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

因为我们不能在这里徘徊，
我们必须前进，亲爱的，我们必须一马当先，
我们是年轻力壮的民族，别的民族全依靠我们，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

啊，你们青年，西部的青年，
如此性急、充满活力，充满男儿的骄傲和友情，
我清楚看见了你们，西部的青年，看见你们大步当先，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

年长的民族止步了吗？
他们在大洋彼岸暮气沉沉，不再学习了吗？
我们来扛起这永恒的使命、责任和课业吧，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

我们将过去的一切抛在身后，
一个更新、更强的世界，多种多样的世界，豁然开朗，
我们抓住这鲜活健朗的世界，劳动和行进的世界，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

我们的分遣队源源不断进发，

走下悬崖，穿过关隘，攀上陡峭的山岭，
我们在未知的道路中征服、占据、冒险、勇闯，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

我们砍倒原始的森林，
我们截停江河的流水，我们摇动大地，钻探内里，
我们测量广阔的原野，我们在处女地垦荒，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

我们是科罗拉多的男人，
从巨大的山峰，从庞大的齿形山脉和高原，
从矿井和沟壑，从狩猎的小径上，我们来了，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

从内布拉斯加来，从阿肯色来，
我们是内陆中部的人种，从密苏里来，与大陆血脉相连，
伙伴们扣紧彼此的手，所有的南方人，所有的北方人，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

啊，不可阻挡，不知停歇的民族！
啊，大家都可爱！对大家的柔情令我胸口作痛！
啊，我伤怀而又雀跃，我欣喜若狂地爱着大家，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

举起那伟大的母亲般的女主人，
高高地摇动着娇巧的女主人，比一切灿烂如星的女主人都高，
(你们全都低下头吧，)
举起有獠牙并且好战的女主人，严峻、冷漠、武装的女主人，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！ [6]

看，我的孩子们，勇敢的孩子们，
看在我们后方的蜂拥人群的分儿上，我们决不能退让或动摇，
以往世代的数以百万的幽灵在我们身后皱眉催促，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

前进又前进，紧簇的队伍，
永远有增补，死者的位置被迅速填充，
穿越战斗，穿越战败，依然前行而永不停止，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

啊，在前进中死去！
我们当中有人委顿而死吗？时候到了吗？
那么我们在行进中死去正当其时，缺口会迅速填补！
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

世界上所有的脉搏，
各就各位地以西部运动的拍子，为我们跳动，
有单独有联合，稳稳地移向前方，全为我们，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

生活中复杂多变的盛会，
所有的形态和展览，所有干活的工人，
所有的水手和陆上的人，所有的主人和奴隶，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

所有不幸的沉默的恋人，
所有在监狱坐牢的人，所有的义人和恶人，

所有欢喜的人，所有哀愁的人，所有活着的人，所有垂死的人，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

我也跟我的灵魂和肉体，
组成好奇的三者，我们在路途上跋涉、游荡，
穿过死荫之地的这些海岸，幽灵们紧紧相随，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

看，那迅疾滚动的星球！
看，它四周的兄弟星球，所有一簇簇的恒星和行星，
所有灿烂的白昼，所有多梦的神秘之夜，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

这一切关乎我们，和我们同在，
它都是为了初始而必要的劳作，后继者尚在胚胎中等待，
我们这今日向前的队伍，我们开辟着行进的道路，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

你们啊，西部的女儿！
你们啊，青春的和年长的女儿！你们啊，母亲们和妻子们！
你们千万不要失散，在我们的队伍里你们团结向前吧，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

潜伏在大草原上的歌手！

（别的大陆上裹着尸衣的诗人呀，你们已完成工作，可以歇息了，）

很快我会听见你们来临的婉转歌喉，很快你们会起来跟我们同行，

开拓者！啊，开拓者！

不是为了甜美的娱乐，
不是靠枕和软鞋，不是宁静的日子和学者的生活，
不是安全乏味的财富，寡淡的享受对我们无用，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

贪嘴的宴饮者总是在宴饮？
肥胖的沉睡者总是在睡觉？他们锁门上闩了吗？
我们的餐食粗糙如故，毯子铺地而眠，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

夜幕降临了吗？

近来的路是否太过辛苦？我们是否气馁地停下过，在路途上垂头打盹儿？

但是我让你们在小径上休息短短的一小时，放空身心，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

直到随着号角的吹响，
黎明远远地发出呼唤——听！我听见它嘹亮清楚的呼声，
快呀！赶到军队的前头！——快呀！冲上你们的位置，
开拓者！啊，开拓者！

给你

不管你是谁，我只怕你行走的是梦中的道路，
我只怕这些所谓的现实即将从你的脚下和手中消融。

即便此刻，你的五官、欢乐、言谈、房子、职业、举止、烦恼、
蠢事、装束、罪行，也已经散逸离开你，

你真正的灵魂和肉体出现在我面前，

它们摆脱了事务，摆脱了商业、店铺、工作、农场、衣服、房子、
购买、出售、进食、饮酒、受苦、死亡。

不管你是谁，现在我把手放在你身上，你来做我的诗，
我以嘴唇俯近你的耳朵低语，
我爱过很多女人和男人，但是都没有我爱你这么深。

噢，过去我拖沓又迟钝，
我许久以前就应该径直向你奔来，
我早就应该仅仅叨念着你，我早就应该仅仅歌唱着你。

我会离开所有人来创作你的赞美诗，
没有人曾经了解你，但是我了解你，
没有人曾经公平地对待你，你也未曾公平地对待自己，
没有人觉得你处处完美，只有我觉得你完美，
没有人不会把你放在次要位置，只有我这个人决不同意把你放在
次要位置，
只有我一人看见你内在的潜能，不让任何主人、所有权人、优越
者、上帝凌驾于你。

画家们画出人头攒动的群体和一切的中心人物，
从中心人物的头部放射金色的光轮，
但是我画出无数的头部，画笔下却没有一个不带着金色的光轮，

从我的手从每个男人和女人的大脑中它流泻出来，永远灿烂。

啊，关于你，我能唱多少壮阔和荣耀的歌！

你还不知道你是什么，你一生都在自己身上酣睡，

你的眼皮大部分时间就像闭着一般，

你做过的事已经在滑稽模仿中回来，

（你的节俭、知识、祈祷，如果不在滑稽模仿中回来，还能怎样回来？）

滑稽模仿并不是你，

我看见你潜藏在其下和其中，

我在无人追逐你的地方追逐你，

沉默、书桌、轻佻的表情、黑夜、日常习惯，如果这些对别人和你自己构成一重重的掩盖，你对于我却是没有掩盖的，

刮净的脸、游移的眼神、不纯净的肤色，如果这些阻挡着别人却并不阻挡我，

光鲜的衣着、畸形的体态、烂醉、贪婪、早死，我把这些全都抛在一边。

凡是男人或女人具有的天赋，你无一不具备，

凡是男人或女人具有的贤德和美好，也同样存于你身上，

别人身上的任何胆量或毅力，也同样存于你身上，

任何等待着别人享受的快乐，也同样等待着你来享受。

至于我，我什么也不给任何人，除了我谨慎交给你的，

每当我咏唱任何人，乃至上帝的荣耀之歌，那都是我为你唱的荣耀之歌。

不管你是谁！要不顾风险获取你自己的一切！

这些东方和西方的气象跟你相比都平淡无奇，

这些广阔的草原、滔滔不息的江河，你就像它们一样广阔而滔滔不息，

这些天昏地暗、狂风暴雨、雷霆、大自然的运动、分解时显现的
挣扎，你是掌控它们的男女主宰，

你就是大权在握的男女主宰，掌控着大自然、狂风暴雨、痛苦、
激情、分解。

镣铐从你的脚踝脱落，你找到可靠的独立，

无论老少、无论男女，粗鲁、卑微、被其他人拒绝，你不管什么
本性都传播你自己，

穿过出生、生命、死亡、埋葬，通路都齐备，没有一样缺少，

穿过愤怒、丧失、野心、无知、厌倦，你凭着本性举足落步。

法兰西，合众国的第18年 [7]

一个伟大的年份和地方。

一声粗嘎不协调的新生的尖叫传出，比什么都更深地触动母亲的心。

我行走在我的东部海岸上，
听见那小嗓子隔着浪涛传来，

看见那神圣的婴儿在她醒来的地方哀哀啼哭，炮声隆隆，咒骂声、嘶喊声、建筑物的倒塌声不绝，

阴沟中流淌的血、一具具尸体、成堆的尸体、被死囚车运走的尸体并不那么令我恶心，

屠杀的碾压并不那么令我绝望——频频齐发的枪弹并不那么令我震惊。

我苍白、沉默、冷峻，我能对那种常年积怨的报复说什么？

我能期求不一样的人性？

我能期求人民有木头和石头的品性？

还是期求正义在命运或时间中得不到伸张？

啊，自由！啊，你是我的伙伴！

这里也有火光，有霰弹和斧子的储存，以备必要的时候拿出来，

这里也压抑已久，却永远不会被摧毁，

这里也终会奋起反抗，杀气腾腾、慷慨激昂，

这里也要求着彻底的清算。

所以我要拿起笔向海的那边遥遥致敬，

我并不否认有血红可怕的降生和洗礼，

但是我记得所听见的小嗓子的啼哭，于是我无比信任地等待，不管要多久，

从今以后我要为一切土地维护那个遗留的事业，心怀悲哀但雄辩有力，

我带着爱意把这些话语送去巴黎，

猜想那里有些歌曲作者将会明白我的含义，

因为我猜想法兰西依然有音乐的潜流，滔滔汨汨，

啊，我已经听见乐器在拨动，响声很快就会淹没一切干扰的杂音，

啊，我觉得东风吹来了一首胜利和自由的进行曲，

它传到这里，使我欣喜得如痴如狂，

我要快快把它变作言辞，说明它的真意，

我还要为你唱一支歌，我的女人 [8] 。

我和我的全部 [9]

我和我的全部，永远在锻炼，

为了抵受冷和热，为了举枪能瞄准，为了航船，为了骑马，为了生育出众的孩子，

为了随时清晰地说话，为了在普通人中间感到亲切，

也为了在大地和海洋情势可怕时站住脚跟。

不为了做一个刺绣工，

（永远会有许多刺绣工，我也欢迎他们，）

却为追求事物的本质，并追求男子和女子的内在。

不为了雕出装饰品，

却为了用潇洒自如的刻刀凿出许多无上神明的头和四肢，为了合众国使他们得以行走和说话。

让我用自己的方式，

让别人去生成律法，我不要理会律法，

让别人去歌颂杰出的人并支持和平，我支持骚动和冲突。

我不歌颂杰出的人，我对公认最高明的人也当面指责。

（你是谁？是什么让你一生偷偷地内疚？

你要回避自己的一生？你要在翻拣和闲话中度过一生？

你是谁，念念叨叨地死记硬背，年份、页数、语言、往事，

至今也意识不到你没法儿恰当地说一个词儿？）

让别人去完成范例吧，我从来未完成范例，

我像大自然一样用无穷的律法来开始篇章，新鲜现代而持久。

我不把什么当作义务给予，

别人作为义务给予的，我作为活生生的冲动给予。

（我要把心的行动作为义务来给予吗？）

让别人去解决问题，我什么都不解决，我唤起无法回答的问题，
我看见并触摸的他们是谁，他们怎么样？

这些像我一样的人怎么样？他们用温柔的直接和迂回的路线吸引我贴近。

我呼吁世界不要轻信我朋友们的讲述，而要像我一样，聆听我的敌人，

我要求你永远拒绝那些要解说我的人，因为我也解说不了自己，
我要求不要因我建立任何理论或学派，
我要求你潇洒地离开，就像我做的那样潇洒地离开。

在我之后，远景！

啊，我看见生命并不短促，而是悠长得难以计量，
从此我在世界上行走，贞洁，自持，清早就起床，稳健地成长，
每小时都是未来几个世纪的精子，还属于更久以后的世纪。

我必须紧紧跟上空气、水、大地的这些不断的教诲，
我感受到我没有时间可以浪费。

流星的一年（1859—1860） [10]

流星的一年！沉思的一年！

我要用回顾的文字系定你的一些事情和征兆，

我要歌唱你的第16届总统任期的竞争，

我要歌唱一位高个子的白发老人，如何在弗吉尼亚登上绞刑架，

（我就在左右，咬紧牙关默默站着，观看，

我站在你身边，老人，当时你平静冷漠，只是年纪和没有愈合的伤口使你颤抖着，登上了绞刑架；）

我要在我丰富的歌曲中歌唱你各州的人口普查报告，那些人口和产品的报表，我要歌唱你的航船和运载的货物，

曼哈顿骄傲的黑船纷纷来了，有的满载移民，有的装着黄金从巴拿马地峡来，

我要歌唱这一切，我要对所有前来的人表示欢迎，

我也要歌唱你，英俊少年！年轻的英格兰王子，我欢迎你！

（你可曾记得你和贵族随从们经过曼哈顿的汹涌人群？

我站在人群中，只对你依依不舍地注目；）

我也不要忘了歌唱那条大船开进我海湾的奇观，

伟大东方号形体匀称而庄重，她以600英尺 [11] 的身长，开进我的海湾，

她迅速地行驶，被无数的小船包围，小船我也不忘歌唱；

不忘北方出现的不期而至的彗星，闪耀在天宇，

不忘奇异浩大的流星队伍，炫目而清晰，在我们头上笔直飞行，

（一瞬间，只有一瞬间，队伍在我们头上划过一簇簇超凡的光球，

然后离去了，沉没在黑夜中，不见了；）

对这些骤然来去的事情，我歌唱——我借着它们的微光来照亮并拼凑这些颂歌，

你的颂歌呀，啊，善恶杂陈的一年——预感不祥的一年！

彗星和流星的一年，短暂又奇异——看！这儿还有一个也同样短暂又奇异！

既然我匆匆地掠过你，很快要坠落不见，这首歌是什么呢？ 我除了是你的一颗流星还是什么？

因为前人

因为前人，
因为我的父系母系和以往各时代的积累，
因为那些倘若没有，就不会有今时此地之我的一切，因为埃及、
印度、腓尼基、希腊和罗马，
因为凯尔特人、斯堪的纳维亚人、阿尔比人和撒克逊人 [12]，
因为古时的海上冒险、法律、手工技艺、战争和旅行，
因为诗人、北欧诗人、萨迦、神话和神谕 [13]，
因为奴隶的售卖，因为狂热者，因为吟游诗人、十字军和修道士，
因为我们来到这个新大陆之前的那些旧大陆，
因为那些日益衰落的王国和国王，
因为那些日益衰落的宗教和神父，
因为从我们自己眼前的大海岸回望而去的小海岸，
因为向前奔去终于到达现在的数不清的年头，
你和我已经抵达—阿美利加已经抵达，正在创造今年，
今年！它推动着自己奔向数不清的未来岁月。

二

啊，但是这无关岁月—而是关于我，关于你，
我们触碰所有的法律并估量所有的前人，
我们是北欧诗人、传神谕的人、修道士和骑士，我们容纳了他们
还大有余地，
我们站在无始无终的时间之内，我们站在恶与善之内，一切围绕

我们转动，黑暗和光明同样多，
太阳和它的星系围绕我们转动，
它的太阳，它太阳的太阳，全都围绕我们转动。

至于我，（矛盾的、狂躁的，身处暴烈的日子中间，）
我有所有人的意念，我是所有人并信仰所有人，
我相信唯物论是真的，唯灵论是真的，什么我都不排斥。

（我忘了什么吗？忘了过去的任何东西吗？
到我这里来，不管是谁，不管是什么，直到我给你承认。）

我尊重亚述 [14]、中国、条顿 [15] 和希伯来人，
我接纳每一个理论、神话、神和半神，
我清楚从前的故事、圣书、族谱都是真的，没有例外，
我坚信过去的每一天都非得那样不可，
决不可能胜过它实际的样子。

而今天则一定是这样，阿美利加一定是这样，
今天和阿美利加决不可能胜过它们实际的样子。

三

以各州的名义，以你和我的名义：过去，
以各州的名义，以你和我的名义：现在的时间。

我知道过去伟大，未来也将会伟大，
我知道两者奇异地接合于现在的时间，
（为了我展现的他，为了平凡的普通人，如果你是普通人，这便

是为了你，)

今天我所在之处，你所在之处，就有一切时日、一切民族的中心。

民族和时日对于我们曾经衍生的、将要衍生的一切意义也尽在其间。

百老汇大街的庆祝游行 [16]

从大洋西边的日本来了

彬彬有礼、脸颊微黑、带两把佩剑的使节，

他们靠坐在敞篷四轮马车上，没有帽子，面无表情，今天驱车穿过曼哈顿。

自由啊 [17]！我不知别人是否看见我的所见，

在队伍中跟日本贵族们一起的，还有跑腿的人，

走在后面，流连在前面、周围，或在行列中前进，

但是我要给你唱一首亲身见闻的歌，自由。

当百万双脚的曼哈顿自由自在走下她的人行道，

当声如惊雷的礼炮用我喜爱的豪迈咆哮叫我抖擞，

当浑圆的炮口从我喜爱的浓烈硝烟中吐出它们的敬意，

当火光闪烁的礼炮使我精神大振，云霞在我的城市上空蒙了一层如纱如影的华盖，

当数不清的华丽杆子，码头上的密林，彩色缤纷，

当每一条盛装打扮的船都把她的旗帜升到最高，

当信号旗低垂而沿街的窗户挂下彩带，

当百老汇被行走和驻足的人完全占领，最是密密麻麻，

当房屋的正面万头攒动，当千万双眼睛同时盯住一个方向，

当来自岛国的客人们行进，当游行队伍前移到视线之内，

当传召令发下，当等候数千年的答案有了回应，

我也站起身，回应着，走下人行道，汇入人群，和大家一同注视。

神采飞扬的曼哈顿！

阿美利加的同志们！东方，终于到我们这里来了。

到我们，到我的城市中间，

我们高峻的大理石屋顶和美丽的铁构建筑分列两旁，中间的大街走着游行队伍，

今天地球另一端的人来了。

女创世者来了，

语言的巢穴、诗歌的传递者、远古的遗民，

脸色红润，思虑深沉，出神陶醉，激情炽热，

香气蒸腾，衣裳宽大而飘逸，

有黝黑的面容，有专注的灵魂和闪亮的眼睛，

梵天的子民来了。

看呀，我悦耳的歌！游行队伍中的这些那些都向我们闪现，

队伍随着移动而变化，像个神奇的万花筒在我们眼前移动变化。

因为不只有使节或来自岛屿的晒黑的日本人，

轻巧沉默的印度人出现了，甚至亚细亚大陆也出现了，

它的过去，它的死者，

在如夜如晨的朦胧中发生的奇观和无法索解的寓言，

包裹着的奥秘，古老而未知的蜜蜂，

北方，闷热的南方，东方的亚述，希伯来人，最古的古人，

巨大而荒凉的城市，滑行的此刻，所有这些那些都在庆祝的游行中。

地理学，全世界，都在其中，
大洋 [18]，成群的岛屿，波利尼西亚，更远的海岸，
今后你要面向的海岸——你呀，自由！你金色的西海岸和它遥遥相对，
那里的国家和它们的居民，千百万人一起奇妙地身临此地，
拥挤的集市，两侧或尽头都神像成行的庙宇，和尚、婆罗门和喇嘛，
官老爷、农民、商人、机械工和渔夫，
歌女和舞女、沉醉迷狂的人、宫禁里的皇帝，
孔夫子自己、大诗人和英雄豪杰、战士、各个种姓，所有人，
聚集成群，从四面八方涌来，从阿尔泰的山岭，
从西藏，从中国的四条蜿蜒长流的大江，
从南方的许多半岛和仿佛大陆般的岛屿，从马来西亚，
这些以及属于它们的一切都向我清楚显现，被我领会，
我也被它们领会，被它们友爱地拥抱，
最后如同在这里一样我歌咏他们所有人，自由！为了他们也为了你。

因为我也扬起了声音加入这游行的行列，
我是歌手，我在盛会之上发出洪大的歌声，
我歌咏我那西海上的世界，
我歌咏远方众多的海岛，密集如满天的星辰，
我歌咏那空前壮阔的新帝国，在灵视之中看见了它，
我歌咏女主人阿美利加，我歌咏一个更高的权威，
我歌咏一千座新兴的城市，将要在那些海岛群中拔地而起，
我的帆船和蒸汽船在群岛中间穿梭，
我的星条旗在风中拍动，
商路打开了，沉睡的几个世纪结束使命，民族再生，再次青春，
人生、事业都恢复了一目标我不知道——但是古老的亚洲一定会更新，

从这一天开始被世界包围。

三

你呀，世界的自由！

你将会千秋万代稳坐当中，

因为今天亚洲的贵族从一边来到你面前，

因为明天英国女王要从另一边派她的长子来见你。

迹象在倒转，地球被合围，

圆环已合拢，旅程已结束，

盒子盖只是微微打开着，香气却从整个盒子里喷涌而出。

年轻的自由！对待那可敬的亚洲、一切的母亲，

你从今以后要始终体贴而热情，因为你就是一切，

向那个越过群岛向你发来消息的远方母亲俯下你骄傲的头吧，

就这一次俯下你骄傲的头吧，年轻的自由。

那些孩子向西漫游了那么久吗？跨过那么宽广的地方吗？

自乐园 [19] 以来迷茫的世代向西闯荡了那么久吗？

多少个世纪为了你、为了某些原因，朝那个方向不断前行而不为人知？

时代都理由充分，它们已大功告成，现在它们也应该被掉转方向，从那边朝你行来，

自由 呀，时代现在也应该看在你的分儿上，顺从地向东挺进。

[1] 写《普遍性之歌》前，惠特曼经受了一些个人生活的考验，包括中风瘫痪和丧母之痛。此诗重申了他的信仰，也反映出他研读黑格尔哲学受到的影响。（说明：书中脚注除特别标明的之外，均为译者注。）

[2] “真实”者，指世间存在的各种殊相；“理想”者，指普遍性的事物共相。

[3] 希腊神话中，英雄忒修斯凭借阿里阿德涅交给他的线团，循着细线前行，走出迷宫。

[4] 本书出于声韵与音节字数的考量，统一使用“阿美利加”来翻译America，而不用美利坚或美国。

[5] “整体”的原文ensemble是超验主义的概念，这股思潮认为万物都包含宇宙的缩影。惠特曼受超验主义代表人物爱默生影响很深。

[6] 读者若觉得这五行突兀难解，可以查看乔万尼·巴蒂斯塔·提埃坡罗（Giovanni Battista Tiepolo）绘于18世纪的著名穹顶画《行星和大陆的寓言》中的美洲一幅，那里便有一个作为美洲化身的“女主人”。

[7] 此诗写于1860年，是美国南北战争（1861—1865）爆发前夕，当时的社会气氛已是山雨欲来（参见《流星的一年》）。惠特曼在诗中想象远在他出生之前的一个年份—法国大革命时期“革命法庭”活动到达高潮的1794年，那年是美利坚合众国成立的第18年。

[8] “我的女人”原文为法语ma femme，也表示“我的妻子”，这里指拟人化的民主理想。

[9] 此诗可说是惠特曼创作观的阐述，他将《草叶集》视为以文字表达的全部自己。

[10] 此诗写于1865年美国南北战争结束时。诗中回忆的总统竞选是1860年林肯对道格拉斯的宣战，林肯当选总统。被处死的老人是美国起义领袖、废奴主义者约翰·布朗，处决时间在1859年12月。年轻的英格兰王子指维多利亚女王的长子爱德华（后来的英王爱德华七世），1860年10月他18岁，到访纽约，惠特曼的日记中有记载。伟大东方号是著名的英国铁制蒸汽轮船，1860年首次航越大西洋，6月末抵达纽约。“预感不祥的一年”一语指当时战争已如箭在弦上的气氛。

[11] 一英尺约为25到34厘米。——编者注

[12] 这一行诗里全是古意盎然的名称。阿尔比恩（Albion）是大不列颠岛最古老的名称，阿尔比人（Alb）即阿尔比恩的居民。

[13] 北欧诗人原文为skald，在维京人时期，他们是斯堪的纳维亚（北欧）地区传诵英雄传奇的诗人，萨迦（saga）是北欧从前用来流传神话、史诗和英雄故事的文学类型。

[14] 亚述：兴起于两河流域的国家。公元前8世纪末，亚述帝国

逐步强大，先后征服了小亚细亚东部、埃及等地，亚述人在两河流域频繁活动约两千年，后失去霸主地位，不再有独立的国家。——编者注

[15] 条顿：古代日耳曼人的一个分支，公元前4世纪时分布在易北河下游的沿海地带，后来逐步和日耳曼其他民族融合，后世以条顿人泛指日耳曼人及其后裔。——编者注

[16] 此诗最初发表于1860年6月27日的《纽约时报》，纪念11天前在纽约市百老汇大街上欢迎访美日本使团的庆祝游行。

[17] 原文是Libertad，惠特曼习惯用这个西班牙语单词的大写来表示拟人化的自由。

[18] 当指太平洋。

[19] 即伊甸园，象征人类最初纯真原始的状态。

海流

出自晃荡不停的摇篮 [20]

出自晃荡不停的摇篮，

出自学舌鸟的喉咙、往复如梭的音乐，

出自九月的午夜，

荒芜的沙地和远处的田野上，起了床的孩子独自游荡，光着头，
光着脚，

沐浴在一阵阵洒落的光晕下，

俯临着影子们像是活的一样交缠扭摆的神秘游戏，

走出了荆棘和黑莓生长的灌木丛，

记忆中的那只鸟，在我耳边唱过歌，

记忆中悲伤的兄弟，让我听见一阵高低起伏的歌声，

从迟迟升起又胀鼓鼓的仿佛含着泪水的半个黄月亮底下，

从薄雾里最先响起的那些渴望和爱的乐音，

从我心中一千个永不停息的应答，

从自此苏醒的无数词句，

从那个比什么都更强大更悦耳的词语，

从词句如今又开始重返的故地，

就像一群飞鸟，啁啾、腾起、从头顶掠过，

匆匆被送到这里，趁着一切还没有被我忘却，

一个男人，由于这些泪水又成了小男孩，

扑倒在沙地上，面对海浪，

我，痛苦和欢乐的歌手、连接今天和未来的人，

接纳一切暗示来运用它们，但又迅速地跃过它们，为一件往事歌唱。

从前在鲍玛诺克 [21] ，
当空气中飘着丁香的芬芳，五月的草正在生长，
从亚拉巴马来了两个披着羽毛的客人，
双双落在海岸上的荆棘丛里，
他们的窝，有四只浅绿带褐色斑点的蛋，
每天那雄鸟在附近飞来飞去，
每天那雌鸟蹲在窝里，安安静静，眼睛发亮，
每天，我这好奇的男孩，从不走得太近，从不惊动他们，
小心地窥察着、吸收着、转译着。

闪呀！闪呀！闪呀！
倾注你的温暖，太阳！
我们晒太阳，双双做伴。

双双做伴！
风吹向南，风吹向北，
白天明亮，夜晚黑暗，
家乡，或者远离家乡的河流山脉，
只要我们相守，
就一直唱歌，忘记时光。

突然有一天，
上午雌鸟没有蹲在鸟巢里，
也许被捕杀了，她的伙伴不知道，
下午也没有回来，第二天也没有，
再也没有出现。

从此以后整个夏天在大海的声音中，
在黑夜里满月当空而天气较平静的时分，
在波涛哗哗汹涌的海上，
或者白天在丛丛荆棘之上，
我时常看见那只遗留的雄鸟飞过，
听见那来自亚拉巴马的孤独客声。

吹吧！吹吧！吹吧！

海风狂吹鲍玛诺克的海岸吧；
我等呀等，直到你把我的伙伴吹回来。

是的，当星光闪烁，
他彻夜站在长满青苔的木桩尖上，
几乎就在海浪的拍拍打打中，
孤单的歌手，奇异而催泪。
他呼唤他的伙伴，
他倾吐的心声，人类中只有我懂得。

是的，我懂得我的兄弟，
别人也许不懂，但我一直珍重每一粒乐音。
因为我不止一次懵懵懂懂地溜到海滩，
安静，避开月光，把自己藏在阴影里，
现在还记得那些模糊的形状、回响、种种声音和景象，
浪花破开的白手臂不知疲倦地挥舞着，
我，光脚的孩子，被风吹动着头发，
倾听了很久很久。

倾听来保存、来歌唱，时而转译乐音，
来追随你的歌声，兄弟。

抚慰！抚慰！抚慰！

后浪紧紧地抚慰着前浪，
又被下一个浪紧紧地拥抱、拍打，
但是我所爱的不抚慰我了，不抚慰了。

低垂的月亮，迟迟升起，
它那么迟缓——噢，我想它是重负着爱情，爱情。

啊，大海疯狂地扑向陆地，
怀着爱情，爱情。

啊，黑夜！我看见的莫不是我的爱侣在浪花里翻飞？
我在那白浪里看见的小黑点是什么？

嘹亮！嘹亮！嘹亮！

我嘹亮地呼唤你，我的爱侣！
我抛出我高亢清晰的声音越过波浪，
你一定知道在这里的是谁，是谁，
你一定知道我是谁，爱侣。

低垂的月亮！

你黄褐色脸盘上的暗点是什么？

啊，就是她的形状，我伙伴的形状！

月亮啊别再扣留她，还给我吧。

陆地！陆地！噢，陆地！

不管我转向何方，噢，我想你可以交还我的伙伴，只要你肯，
因为不管我望向何方，我都好像是依稀看见了她。

啊，上升的星星！

也许我渴望的那个也会升上天空，和你们一同升起。

啊，喉咙！啊，颤动的喉咙！

发出更清晰的声音越过空气！

穿透树林、大地，

我渴望的那个一定在某地切盼着听见你。

放声歌唱吧！

寂寞此地，黑夜之歌！

孤单爱恋之歌！死亡之歌！

在那迟缓的、消殒的黄月亮下面歌唱！

啊，在月亮下，在她几乎沉入大海的地方！

啊，不顾一切的绝望之歌。

但是轻些！压低！

轻些！让我只是呢喃吧，

你呀，喧嚣的大海，请你也停一停，
因为我相信我听见了伙伴正在什么地方回应着，
那么微弱，我得安静，安静地听，
但不能彻底安静，那样她可能不会立即来我这儿。

来这儿呀爱侣！

我在这儿！这儿！

我只用这刚能听见的歌声向你宣告我自己，
这轻柔的呼唤是给你的，我的爱，给你的。

不要上当去了别的地方，
那是风的呼啸，不是我的声音，
那是翻飞的、翻飞的浪花，
那些是树叶的影子。

噢，黑暗！噢，徒然！

噢，我多么苦闷多么哀伤。

啊，天空中月亮旁边的褐色光晕，低垂在海上！

啊，海中散乱的倒影！

啊，喉咙！啊，搏动的心！

我彻夜无效地唱着，无效。

啊，过往！啊，快活的日子！啊，欢乐的歌！

在空中，在树林，在田野上，
爱过！爱过！爱过！爱过！爱过！
但是我的伙伴不再，不再跟着我了！
我俩不再双双。

咏叹调沉寂了，
别的一切都还继续，星光闪闪，
风在吹，鸟的乐音在久久地回响，
凶猛的老母亲 [22] 不断发出她愤怒的呻吟，
在鲍玛诺克岸边沙沙作响的灰色海滩上，
半个黄月亮变大了，耷拉着，下垂着，几乎贴到大海的脸，
男孩心醉神迷，波浪戏弄着他的赤脚，空气撩拨着他的头发，
长久禁闭在心里的爱，现在自由了，现在终于轰然爆发了，
咏叹调的含义，耳朵、灵魂，迅速地将它储存，
奇异的眼泪淌下脸颊，
三者 [23] 在那里对话，各有各的言说，
低声部是狂野的老母亲在不断地叫着，
阴冷地应和着男孩的灵魂的提问节奏，嘶嘶吐出某个淹没的秘密，
回答那起步的诗人。
不是精灵就是鸟了！（男孩的灵魂说，）
你真是在对你的伙伴唱歌？还是其实是对我？
因为，那时是个孩子，我舌头的用处还在沉睡，现在却听见了你的话语，
现在我一瞬间知道了我为何而生，我觉醒了，
已经有一千名歌手、一千首歌，比你的歌更清晰、更嘹亮，也更哀伤，
一千种婉转的回声被我内心的生命振起，永不消亡。

哦，你这孤独的歌手，只身唱歌，投影出我的未来，
哦，孤独的我在倾听，我将会永远不息让你不被遗忘，
我将永远不会逃避，永远不会有震颤的回应、
有不得满足的爱的呼喊被我听而不闻，
我将永远不再是那一夜之前的平静的孩子，
在那下沉的黄月亮照临的海边，
使者在那里被唤醒，看见了火，甜蜜的内心地狱，未知的渴求，
我的天命。

啊，给我线索！（它潜伏在这黑夜的某个地方，）
啊，如果我可以得到那么多，再多给一些！

就一个词吧，（因为我能征服它，）
那个最终的词，超乎一切的词，
不着痕迹，送来了一—它是什么？—我在倾听；
你低语着的就是它吗，海浪，一直是它？
从你晶莹的浪沫和潮湿的沙中来的就是它？

大海对此回答，
没有延宕，没有匆忙，
一整夜都在对我低语，在天亮前已十分清楚，
喃喃对我说着那个低沉悦耳的词：死亡，
一再地说死亡，死亡，死亡，死亡，
嘶嘶发出的美妙音调，不像那鸟鸣也不像我这孩子的激动心跳，
却渐渐向我一个人贴近，在我脚边簌簌响动，
从那里平稳地爬上我的耳朵，轻柔地冲洗我的全身，
死亡，死亡，死亡，死亡，死亡。

这我没有忘记，
但对于我那幽暗的精灵和兄弟，
在鲍玛诺克的灰色海滩月光下给我唱的歌，
我将它和一千首应答的歌任意融合，
使我自己觉醒于那个时刻的歌，
海浪传来的那个词是开启它们的钥匙，
那钥匙关乎最甜蜜的歌和一切的歌，
那强大悦耳的词，悄悄爬上我的脚——

（或者像一个老婆婆晃动着摇篮，衣裳发出好闻的气味，在旁边
弯腰，）

大海给我的低语。

当我跟生命之海一同退潮

当我跟生命之海一同退潮，
当我在熟悉的海岸漫步，
当我行走在那里，涟漪不断冲洗着你，鲍玛诺克，
细浪沙沙涌上来，嘶哑地响动，
那里凶猛的老母亲不断哭叫着被风浪放逐的人，这秋日傍晚默想
的我，向南方凝望，
内心放电般流动的豪迈诗情一度将我抓住，
那个追踪脚下百千行 [24] 的精灵将我凭附，
沉渣积在海的边缘，代表地球上所有的水域和所有的陆地。

我被深深吸引，目光从南方转回，垂下，追随那些狭长的堆集，
谷糠、麦秆、碎木片、海草、海胶 [25]，
浮渣、闪亮岩石的鳞屑、咸莴苣的叶子—潮水的遗留，
几英里的行走，另一侧响着波浪破开的声音，
当时当刻，鲍玛诺克令我想起物我一致的古老观念，
你这鱼形的岛呀，你向我呈现过这些，
当我在熟悉的海岸漫步，
当我内心带电、行走着寻思题材的时候。

二

当我再走向不熟悉的海岸，
当我倾听那哀歌，遇难的男男女女的声音，

当我吸进向我扑来的不可触及的微风，
当神秘莫测的海洋对着我席卷而来，越来越近，
我也最多不过像是一片冲上来的碎片，
一些沙子和死去的叶，差可收集，
收集、糅合我自己于沙子和碎片之中。
啊，困顿、受阻、弯腰贴近地面，
我由于自己曾经胆敢张嘴而深感压迫，
现在已知道我发出过的所有吹嘘都对我反唇相讥，我从来不曾理解自己的身份和本质。
在我所有狂傲的诗歌面前真正的我从未被触碰，被表露，完全不可即，
退缩在远处，用戏仿祝贺的手势和鞠躬嘲弄着我，
对我写下的每个词遥遥发出一串串反讽的笑声，
默默指着这些歌，再指指下面的流沙。
我感受到我没有真的明白过什么，哪怕只是一样东西，这是谁也做不到的，
大自然在这里利用海的景象对我拨弄，射中我、刺痛我，
因为我曾经胆敢张嘴唱歌。

三

你们这两个海，我向你们逼近，
我们都一样喃喃地责备着卷起沙子和漂流物，不知原因，
这些小碎片确实代表你们和我和所有的人。

你这脆弱的海岸，布满一道道残渣，
你这鱼形的岛，我取用脚下的一切，
父亲 [26]，属于你的就属于我。

我也这样，鲍玛诺克，
我也有过破灭的泡沫，经过漫漫无边的漂流，被冲上你的岸滩，
我也只是一道漂浮的碎屑，
鱼形的岛，我也在你身上留下小小的残骸。

我扑向你的胸膛，父亲，
我紧紧地贴着你，让你不能松开我，
我牢牢抱住你直到你给我一个答案。

亲吻我，父亲，
用你的嘴唇抚慰我，就像我抚慰那些我爱的人，
当我拥抱着你，请用气息对我说我所羡慕的喃喃之中的秘密。

四

退潮吧，生命之海，（水流将会回来，）
不要停止你的呻吟，凶猛的老母亲，
不断地为被你放逐的人哭叫吧，但不要害怕我、拒绝我，
当我触摸你或向你收集，不要那么嘶哑而愤怒地对着我的脚沙沙涌上来。

我对你和所有人心怀温柔，
我为自己而收集，也为这个幽灵，它俯视我们前进的方向，追踪我和我的全部。

我和我的全部，散乱的堆集、小小的尸体，
浮沫，雪一般白，泡影，
（看，从我僵死的嘴唇终于流出渗出物，
看，那五光十色在闪亮，在滚动的，）

一团团麦秆、沙子、碎块，
因许多互相矛盾的情绪而浮游至此，
来自风暴、长久的沉寂、黑暗、汹涌，
默想着，思索着，一口气息、一滴咸泪、一抹液体或泥土，
全都一样出自无穷尽酝酿翻腾的过程，
一两朵疲软的花，已破败，也照样漂浮在浪头上，随波逐流，
大自然呜咽的哀歌也照样对我们播送，
云中的号角也照样在我们所来的地方吹响，
我们，捉摸不定，不知自己从何方来到这里，在你面前散开，
你在那高处或行或坐，
不管你是谁，我们也在你脚下零落。

泪水 [27]

泪水！泪水！泪水！

黑夜里，孤独时，泪水，

在白色海岸上滴落，滴落，被沙滩吮干，

泪水，一颗星星也不闪，处处幽暗而荒凉，

从蒙头人的眼睛里流出潮湿的泪水；

啊，那幽灵是谁？那幽暗中流泪的影子是谁？

那不形成形状的一团，弯着腰，蹲在沙滩上的是什么？

涌流的泪水，抽泣的泪水，挣扎，间杂着喘气的放声号哭；

啊，暴风雨，凝聚了，升腾了，在海滩一带横冲直撞！

啊，狂野阴森的黑夜暴雨，挟着风——啊，狠狠地喷射！

啊，白天里那么文静有礼的幽灵，面容平和，步子沉稳，

但在无人看见的黑夜，你肆意地飞驰——啊，海洋也搅乱，

迸裂出泪水！泪水！泪水！

给军舰鸟 [28]

你先在暴风雨之上一夜沉睡，
再抖擞巨大的翅膀腾空醒来，
（冲破了风暴？你越过它向上飞升，
安歇在天空，天空是推你摇篮的奴仆，）
如今蓝色的一点，远远地遨游太空，
迎着这里甲板上的光线我对你仰望，
（我是个斑点，茫茫世界中浮游的一个微粒。）

在远远的海上，
一夜惊涛将船只的残骸零散地搁在岸边以后，
如今重新出现快乐宁静的白天，
玫瑰色轻盈的黎明、闪耀的太阳，
一大片蔚蓝清澈的长空里，
你也重新出现了。
你天生是大风的手，（羽翼占满身体，）
能应付天空大地大海和飓风，
你驭风而行的船从不收帆，
接连数日、数周也不知疲倦、继续向前，穿过空间，在诸域旋
转，
黄昏时俯瞰过塞内加尔，早晨就到了阿美利加，
你在闪电和雷云中间游戏，
在这些之中，在你的体验中，你拥有我的灵魂，
何等的快乐！何等的快乐属于你！

在船上的舵轮旁

在船上的舵轮旁，
一个年轻舵手小心地操纵航向。

透过浓雾，海岸上哀哀响彻着
一口海洋钟——啊，是波浪摇动的一口警钟。

啊，你给了很好的提醒，你这口钟在暗礁旁鸣响，
鸣响，鸣响，警告船只不要误撞翻沉。

因为舵手啊，警惕的你在意那响亮的告诫，
拨转了船头，满载的货船张着灰色船帆顺应风向，加速离去，
雍容美丽的船带着她所有的珍宝加速离去，欢快又安全。

但是那只船，不朽的船啊！船上的船啊！
肉体的船，灵魂的船，一直航行，航行，航行。

在黑夜的海滩上

在黑夜的海滩上，
站着一个孩子和她的父亲，
观看着东方，秋季的天空。

在那幽暗的高处，
贪婪吞噬的云，埋葬云，一团团黑压压地张开，
阴沉而迅速地横扫天空压下来之际，
在东方依然余留的一带澄辉中间，
升起了大而静穆的众星之王朱庇特 [29]，
离它不远，略高一点的地方，
游动着纤巧的七姊妹星 [30]。
孩子握着父亲的手从海滩仰望，
那些埋葬云胜利地下降，顷刻间就要吞食一切，
她静静地哭了。
别哭，孩子，
别哭，我的宝贝，
让我用亲吻擦掉你的泪水，
那些贪婪吞噬的云的胜利不会长久，
它们不会长久地占有天空，它们吞食星星只是一个幻象，
朱庇特会出来的，耐心点，过天晚上再看，七姊妹星会出来的，
它们是不朽的，所有这些银色和金色的星星都会再次闪光，
大的星星和小的星星都会再次闪光，它们会长存，
巨大而不朽的恒星、长存而默想的卫星都会再次闪光。

那么，我的小心肝，你只为朱庇特难过吗？ 你只惦记被埋葬的星星？

有一点点什么，
（我用嘴唇抚慰着你，低声加一句，
我给你最初的一个暗示、难题和言外之意，）
有一点点什么甚至比星星更为不朽，
（许多埋葬，许多日日夜夜，正在过去，）
有一点点什么甚至比灿烂的朱庇特更能长存，
比太阳或任何旋转的卫星更长，
也长过光彩夺目的七姊妹星。

海水之下的世界

海水之下的世界，

海底的森林，千枝万叶，

海莴苣、大片的苔藓、奇异的花和种子、茂密的缠结、罅隙孔
穴、粉红色的草皮，

斑斓的彩色，淡灰和绿、紫、白、金，光线穿透海水的游戏，

无声的游泳者置身岩石、珊瑚、海胶、杂草、丛生植物中间，还有游泳者的食物，

懒惰的生物在那里悬浮觅食，或贴近海底慢慢地爬行，

抹香鲸上到海面喷出气体和水花，摆动尾鳍玩耍，

目光呆滞的鲨鱼、海象、海龟、毛茸茸的海豹，还有鱼，

那里有激情、战争、追逐、种群、海洋深处的景象、海里众生呼吸的浓稠空气，

从那里转换到这里的景象，转换到像我们一样行走此界的生物所呼吸的轻快空气，

再从我们这里转换到另种生物行走的其他界域。

独自在黑夜的海滩上

独自在黑夜的海滩上，
当老母亲来回摇晃着吟唱她那沙哑的歌，
当我看着明亮的群星闪烁，我想到万千宇宙和未来的钥匙 [31]。

一种茫茫的相似将万物勾连，
一切星球，长成的、未长成的，小的、大的，那些恒星、卫星、行星，
一切空间的距离，不管多宽广，
一切时间的距离，一切无生命的形态，
一切灵魂，一切活着的肉体，尽管它们从不相同，或处于从不相同的世界，
一切气体的、液体的、植物的、矿物的演变，游鱼、走兽，
一切民族、肤色、野蛮、文明、语言，
一切曾经存在或可能存在于这个星球，或任何星球上的个体，
一切生命和死亡，一切过去、现在、未来，
这种茫茫的相似贯通它们，历来就贯通着，
也会永远地贯通它们，并紧致地把持和包围它们。

给所有大海、所有船的歌

今天来一曲简短粗朴的宣叙调 [32] ，
关于航行四海的船，各有特殊的旗帜和信号旗，
关于船上无名的英雄——关于远远散开望不到边的海浪，
关于飞溅的浪花，还有呼啸或吹动的海风，
源于这些产生的一首歌，唱给各国的水手，一波波，如同潮水。

关于少壮和年老的船长，还有伙计，和所有无所畏惧的水手，
关于那极少一撮人，精挑细选，沉默寡言，从不为命运所惊讶，
从不因死亡而惶恐，
是你呀，老海洋，你静静地千里挑一，选择了他们，
大海你及时地拣选了族人，联合了各国，
声音沙哑的老保姆，他们受你哺育，象征着你，
像你一样无可屈服、桀骜不驯。

（不管在海上还是陆地，英雄们从来零零星星地出现，
这血统始终保有而从未丧失，虽然稀罕，却留着足够的种子。）

二

大海啊，招展你那些各国不同的旗帜！
招展各式各样的信号旗，始终让人看见！
但是请你在一切之上为你自己和人类的灵魂特别保留一面旗，
一个用精神织就而代表万国的徽号、人类昂扬超越死亡的标志，

代表一切勇敢的船长和一切无所畏惧的水手和伙计，
也纪念一切忠于职守而沉入海底的人，
这是他们的记忆，由一切无所畏惧的老少船长编织而成，
一面普世的信号旗，在一切时代轻灵地飘扬，俯临着所有勇敢的水手，
所有大海、所有船。

巡行巴尼加特 [33]

张狂又张狂的风暴，大海翻滚着巨浪，
咆哮不停的风，低声部永不间断地发出嗡嗡，
一阵阵恶魔般的笑声刺耳地鸣响，
浪、风、午夜，最野蛮的三位一体鞭打着，
那边黑影堆里乳白色的梳子 [34] 纷纷扫下来，
凶猛的雪片斜打着海滩的冰棱和沙子，
灭绝的东风穿过那里的幽暗扑袭着，
穿过锐利的旋风和飞澜警惕而坚定地前进，
（那远远的东西！是条翻沉的船？红色信号灯是否在闪烁？）
海滩的冰棱和沙子不知疲倦地漫游直到黎明，
坚定地、缓慢地，穿过无休无止的沙哑咆哮，
沿着被那些乳白色梳子扫出的午夜边缘，
一群迷蒙、怪异的形体，挣扎着，跟黑夜对抗，
那野蛮的三位一体在警觉地注视。

在海船后面

在海船后面，在呼呼的风后面，
在桅杆和绳索拉紧的灰白船帆后面，
底下，千万个波浪在奔走，高高抬着脖子，
不停地向着大船的航迹流动而去，
海洋的波浪们汨汨冒着水泡，惬意地东张西望，
波浪，起伏的波浪，形状不定，高高低低，你追我赶，
欢笑而轻快，跑着弧线，奔向旋转的急流，
那里是大船的航行和转向把海面破开的地方，
大大小小的波浪便在那汪洋中热切地流动，
在海船过处的航迹中，波浪在阳光下闪耀、游戏，
一支混杂的队伍，带着无数斑斓的泡沫和碎片，
追随着雍容疾驰的船，追随她的航迹。

[20] 这是惠特曼自传性的名篇，像歌剧（启迪惠特曼开创其自由体的艺术形式）一般层次繁复，大开大阖。诗中有几个独立又有所交融的声音，分别为成年时的诗人、学舌鸟和童年时的诗人，大海则以暗示向童年时的诗人发出话语。

[21] 鲍玛诺克：纽约州长岛的印第安语名称，惠特曼出生在那里，他对这个能唤起他童年回忆的名称情有独钟。

[22] 惠特曼常用老母亲来喻指大海。他写诗有时喜欢采用一些法文词，法文中“母亲”（la mère）与“大海”（la mer）同音。

[23] 三者指雄鸟、大海和孩子。

[24] 原文lines可能暗指诗行，惠特曼有多首涉及漫步的诗，这似乎是他获取灵感的一种方式。

[25] Sea-gluten（海胶）是惠特曼生造的复合词，可能指海中动物的黏稠分泌物或富含蛋白的动物组织。

[26] 父亲喻指生养了诗人的鲍玛诺克岛，与大海母亲相对，可能也兼指和诗人关系疏离的生身父亲。

[27] 英文tear既表示裂口（名词）、撕裂（动词），也表示眼

泪，此诗利用了词义的这个叠合来组织意象。

[28] 惠特曼依据法国史学家儒勒·米什莱的一首诗作的英译本而改写成此诗。早在尚未出版《草叶集》的年轻岁月，惠特曼已读过米什莱的著作，颇受其熏陶。

[29] 即木星。

[30] 即金牛座的昴宿星团。希腊神话中，七姊妹星是肩负天宇的阿特拉斯的七个女儿。

[31] “钥匙”（clef）一词为法文，意思是可以用它解开宇宙的奥秘。

[32] 宣叙调又译朗诵调，原指歌剧里介乎歌唱和说话之间的演唱方式，与咏叹调相比，宣叙调着重叙事，旋律简单。

[33] 巴尼加特是新泽西州的一个长达30英里的海湾，惠特曼晚年住在新泽西州肯顿，有时会到访此地。原诗为十四行商籁体，每行均以现在分词-ing形式来结尾；不计括号部分的问句，全诗始终没有出现陈述句的谓语动词，从头到尾用状语成分来描述情态，紧张感十足。

[34] Comb可以表示梳子，也可以表示鸡冠或蜂窝状的东西，这里暗喻浪头。

译后记

这本小册子分为两个部分，共十九首诗。惠特曼晚年亲自编订了《草叶集》（1891—1892）最终版，企鹅出版社从中摘选两个相邻而完整的子集《候鸟》《海流》组成了这个微型选本。

《候鸟》探索了不同类型的运动变化，有宇宙从缺陷趋于完美的进程，有美国向西的开拓，有自我身份的追寻，也有历史的波澜、文明的盛衰。这组诗并不包含惠特曼的代表作，但是它视野宏大，富于诗人早期作品的特色，自有动人之处。《海流》则喻示着诗人创作重心的转变：基调从开拓精神、唯物论和个人性走向了内省、唯灵论以及同物无虑的信仰。而自《草叶集》问世以来，恐怕《海流》就比《候鸟》更能抓住读者的心，它语调亲密，多用诗人童年记忆中的大海、沙滩、星月、飞鸟组织意象，探索那“勾连万物”的“茫茫相似”（《独自在黑夜的海滩上》）。诗与诗环环相扣，回味无穷，头两首《出自晃荡不停的摇篮》《当我跟生命之海一同退潮》早已成为经典，值得一读再读。

十几年前，由于成长和爱情的经历，我被惠特曼的一些诗深深打动，翻译过诗人最终收录在子集《芦笛》的一组十二首诗以及另一首自传性的名作##There Was a Child Went Forth$$(标题拙译为《有一个孩子脱颖而出》)。《草叶集》在我国已经有多个全译本，选译本更难计数，我本来以为自己不会再动翻译惠特曼的念头了。文学译本有时代性，此番企鹅出版社希望用新文字来呈现这位19世纪大诗人的风貌，我考虑后愿意尝试。翻译它，从准备到译成不过短短几个月，却重新燃烧起我对惠特曼的热情。译稿完成对于我大概不会是结束，而是一个新开始。

无论选择与否，我们都走在前人铺过的路上（见本书《因为前人》一诗）。我事先挑选了两个颇受好评的《草叶集》全译本作参考，工作之中也将它们展卷置于案头。我借鉴了这些译本的样式和语调，有时遇到特别优美灵巧的处理，自问无法更进一步或别开生面的时候，就沿用了前辈的译法。为此，我要郑重向这两位前辈译者——邹仲之先生和已故的赵萝蕤先生致以谢忱和敬意。然而，任何译本都只是一种诠释，原文才是译者的圣经。我对每首诗的主题、词义、句法、韵律都独立推敲，任何细节均不欲盲从前贤，务求从原著中得到肺腑之中的感情共鸣及理性体会才落笔。翻译有时像是跟作者对话，但这次翻译与其说是惠特曼和我的对话，不如说是四方（他、三位译

者)隔着时空的交谈,只不过我只记录了自己的心得。当下读来,我满意这份记录,但是选手并不能同时做裁判。本人在原诗理解和风格再现方面跟前辈有何差异,在文字取舍间可能有何得失,我不想自己举例,感兴趣的读者可以自行比较。盼望大家慷慨赐教,推动惠特曼中译的继续进步。

本书的编辑白嫻提了许多细致而宝贵的意见,令译稿得有寸进,也要向她道谢。

除了上述两个译本,此书的注释、译后记里对本书两组诗的阐释,还参考了Routledge出版社1998年版《惠特曼百科全书》、Norton出版社的英文《草叶集》,并其他几部英文传记和研究专著。

惠特曼自由奔放的诗篇给人潇洒的印象,却绝非随意散漫的创作:从他36岁时自费出版薄薄一册的《草叶集》首版开始,到72岁临终前发表极厚重的第九版《草叶集》定本,数十年之间,诗人屡次仔细修改自己的每首作品,使技法趋于成熟、内容趋于饱满,有手稿和不同版次为证。如果说诗在翻译中折损属于必然,那么我也努力追随了前人的脚步来减少折损,力求从形式和精神两方面趋近原作。惠特曼擅长以“你”呼唤读者,常令人在当下看见自己,肉体灵魂都感受到他的永在。希望我的工作没有辜负诗人的一片苦心。

BIRDS OF PASSAGE

Song of the Universal

Come said the Muse,
Sing me a song no poet yet has chanted,
Sing me the universal.

In this broad earth of ours,
Amid the measureless grossness and the slag,
Enclosed and safe within its central heart,
Nestles the seed perfection.

By every life a share or more or less,
None born but it is born, conceal'd or unconceal'd the seed is waiting.

Lo! keen-eyed towering science,
As from tall peaks the modern overlooking,
Successive absolute fiats issuing.
Yet again, lo! the soul, above all science,
For it has history gather'd like husks around the globe,

For it the entire star-myriads roll through the sky.

In spiral routes by long detours,
(As a much-tacking ship upon the sea,)
For it the partial to the permanent flowing;
For it the real to the ideal tends.

For it the mystic evolution,
Not the right only justified, what we call evil also justified.

Forth from their masks, no matter what,
From the huge festering trunk, from craft and guile and tears,
Health to emerge and joy, joy universal.
Out of the bulk, the morbid and the shallow,
Out of the bad majority, the varied countless frauds of men and states,
Electric, antiseptic yet, cleaving, suffusing all,
Only the good is universal.

Over the mountain-growths disease and sorrow,
An uncaught bird is ever hovering, hovering,
High in the purer, happier air.

From imperfection's murkiest cloud,
Darts always forth one ray of perfect light,
One flash of heaven's glory.

To fashion's, custom's discord,
To the mad Babel-din, the deafening orgies,
Soothing each lull a strain is heard, just heard,
From some far shore the final chorus sounding.

O the blest eyes, the happy hearts,
That see, that know the guiding thread so fine,
Along the mighty labyrinth.

And thou America,
For the scheme's culmination, its thought and its reality,
For these (not for thyself) thou has arrived.

Thou too surroundest all,
Embracing carrying welcoming all, thou too by pathways broad and new,
To the ideal tendest.

The measur'd faiths of other lands, the grandeurs of the past,
Are not for thee, but grandeurs of thine own,
Deific faiths and amplitudes, absorbing, comprehending all,
All eligible to all.

All, all for immortality,
Love like the light silently wrapping all,
Nature's amelioration blessing all,

The blossoms, fruits of ages, orchards divine and certain,
Forms, objects, growths, humanities, to spiritual images ripening.

Give me O God to sing that thought,
Give me, give him or her I love this quenchless faith,
In Thy ensemble, whatever else withheld withhold not from us,
Belief in plan of Thee enclosed in Time and Space,
Health, peace, salvation universal.

Is it a dream?
Nay but the lack of it the dream,
And failing it life's lore and wealth a dream,
And all the world a dream.

Pioneers! O Pioneers!

Come my tan-faced children,
Follow well in order, get your weapons ready,
Have you your pistols? have you your sharp-edged axes?
Pioneers! O pioneers!

For we cannot tarry here,
We must march my darlings, we must bear the brunt of danger,
We the youthful sinewy races, all the rest on us depend,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

O you youths, Western youths,
So impatient, full of action, full of manly pride and friendship,
Plain I see you Western youths, see you tramping with the foremost,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

Have the elder races halted?
Do they droop and end their lesson, wearied over there beyond the seas?
We take up the task eternal, and the burden and the lesson,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

All the past we leave behind,
We debouch upon a newer mightier world, varied world,
Fresh and strong the world we seize, world of labor and the march,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

We detachments steady throwing,
Down the edges, through the passes, up the mountains steep,
Conquering, holding, daring, venturing as we go the unknown ways,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

We primeval forests felling,
We the rivers stemming, vexing we and piercing deep the mines within,

We the surface broad surveying, we the virgin soil upheaving,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

Colorado men are we,
From the peaks gigantic, from the giant sierras and the high plateaus,

From the mine and from the gully, from the hunting trail we come,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

From Nebraska, from Arkansas,
Central inland race are we, from Missouri, with the continental blood intervein'd,

All the hands of comrades clasping, all the Southern, all the Northern,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

O resistless restless race!
O beloved race in all! O my breast aches with tender love for all!

O I mourn and yet exult, I am rapt with love for all,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Raise the mighty mother mistress,

Waving high the delicate mistress, over all the starry mistress,
(bend your heads all,)

Raise the fang'd and warlike mistress, stern, impassive, weapon'd mistress,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

See my children, resolute children,

By those swarms upon our rear we must never yield or falter,
Ages back in ghostly millions frowning there behind us urging,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

On and on the compact ranks,

With accessions ever waiting, with the places of the dead quickly fill'd,

Through the battle, through defeat, moving yet and never stopping,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

O to die advancing on!

Are there some of us to droop and die? has the hour come?

Then upon the march we fittest die, soon and sure the gap is fill'd,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

All the pulses of the world,

Falling in they beat for us, with the Western movement beat,
Holding single or together, steady moving to the front, all for us,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Life's involv'd and varied pageants,

All the forms and shows, all the workmen at their work,

All the seamen and the landmen, all the masters with their slaves,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

All the hapless silent lovers,

All the prisoners in the prisons, all the righteous and the wicked,

All the joyous, all the sorrowing, all the living, all the dying,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

I too with my soul and body,

We, a curious trio, picking, wandering on our way,

Through these shores amid the shadows, with the apparitions pressing,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Lo, the darting bowling orb!

Lo, the brother orbs around, all the clustering suns and planets,

All the dazzling days, all the mystic nights with dreams,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

These are of us, they are with us,

All for primal needed work, while the followers there in embryo wait behind,

We to-day's procession heading, we the route for travel clearing,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

O you daughters of the West!

O you young and elder daughters! O you mothers and you wives!

Never must you be divided, in our ranks you move united,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Minstrels latent on the prairies!

(Shrouded bards of other lands, you may rest, you have done your work,)

Soon I hear you coming warbling, soon you rise and tramp amid us,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Not for delectations sweet,

Not the cushion and the slipper, not the peaceful and the studious,

Not the riches safe and palling, not for us the tame enjoyment,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Do the feasters gluttonous feast?

Do the corpulent sleepers sleep? have they lock'd and bolted doors?

Still be ours the diet hard, and the blanket on the ground,

Pioneers! O pioneers!

Has the night descended?

Was the road of late so toilsome? did we stop discouraged nodding on our way?

Yet a passing hour I yield you in your tracks to pause oblivious,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

Till with sound of trumpet,

Far, far off the daybreak call — hark! how loud and clear I hear it wind,

Swift! to the head of the army! -swift! spring to your places,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

To You

Whoever you are, I fear you are walking the walks of dreams,

I fear these supposed realities are to melt from under your feet and hands,

Even now your features, joys, speech, house, trade, manners, troubles, follies, costume, crimes, dissipate away from you,

Your true soul and body appear before me,

They stand forth out of affairs, out of commerce, shops, work, farms, clothes, the house, buying, selling, eating, drinking, suffering, dying.

Whoever you are, now I place my hand upon you, that you be my poem,

I whisper with my lips close to your ear,

I have loved many women and men, but I love none better than you.

O I have been dilatory and dumb,

I should have made my way straight to you long ago,

I should have blabb'd nothing but you, I should have chanted nothing but you.

I will leave all and come and make the hymns of you,

None has understood you, but I understand you,

None has done justice to you, you have not done justice to yourself,

None but has found you imperfect, I only find no imperfection in you,

None but would subordinate you, I only am he who will never consent to subordinate you,

I only am he who places over you no master, owner, better,
God, beyond what waits intrinsically in yourself.

Painters have painted their swarming groups and the centre-figure of all,

From the head of the centre-figure spreading a nimbus of gold-color'd light,

But I paint myriads of heads, but paint no head without its nimbus of gold-color'd light,

From my hand from the brain of every man and woman it streams, effulgently flowing forever.

O I could sing such grandeurs and glories about you!

You have not known what you are, you have slumber'd upon yourself all your life,

Your eyelids have been the same as closed most of the time,

What you have done returns already in mockeries,

(Your thrift, knowledge, prayers, if they do not return in mockeries, what is their return?)

The mockeries are not you,

Underneath them and within them I see you lurk,

I pursue you where none else has pursued you,

Silence, the desk, the flippant expression, the night, the accustom'd routine, if these conceal you from others or from yourself, they do not conceal you from me,

The shaved face, the unsteady eye, the impure complexion, if these balk others they do not balk me,

The pert apparel, the deform'd attitude, drunkenness, greed, premature death, all these I part aside.

There is no endowment in man or woman that is not tallied in you,

There is no virtue, no beauty in man or woman, but as good is in you,

No pluck, no endurance in others, but as good is in you,

No pleasure waiting for others, but an equal pleasure waits for you.

As for me, I give nothing to any one except I give the like carefully to you,

I sing the songs of the glory of none, not God, sooner than I sing the songs of the glory of you.

Whoever you are! claim your own at any hazard!

These shows of the East and West are tame compared to you,

These immense meadows, these interminable rivers, you are immense and interminable as they,

These furies, elements, storms, motions of Nature, throes of apparent dissolution, you are he or she who is master or mistress over them,

Master or mistress in your own right over Nature, elements, pain, passion, dissolution.

The hobbles fall from your ankles, you find an unfailing sufficiency,

Old or young, male or female, rude, low, rejected by the rest, whatever you are promulges itself,

Through birth, life, death, burial, the means are provided, nothing is scanted,

Through angers, losses, ambition, ignorance, ennui, what you are picks its way.

France, the 18th Year of These States

A great year and place.

A harsh discordant natal scream out-sounding, to touch the mother's heart closer than any yet.

I walk'd the shores of my Eastern sea,

Heard over the waves the little voice,

Saw the divine infant where she woke mournfully wailing, amid the roar of cannon, curses, shouts, crash of falling buildings,

Was not so sick from the blood in the gutters running, nor from the single corpses, nor those in heaps, nor those borne away in the tumbrils,

Was not so desperate at the battues of death-was not so shock'd at the repeated fusillades of the guns.

Pale, silent, stern, what could I say to that long-accrued retribution?

Could I wish humanity different?

Could I wish the people made of wood and stone?

Or that there be no justice in destiny or time?

O Liberty! O mate for me!

Here too the blaze, the grape-shot and the axe, in reserve, to fetch them out in case of need,

Here too, though long repress, can never be destroy'd,

Here too could rise at last murdering and ecstatic,

Here too demanding full arrears of vengeance.

Hence I sign this salute over the sea,

And I do not deny that terrible red birth and baptism,

But remember the little voice that I heard wailing, and wait with perfect trust, no matter how long,

And from to-day sad and cogent I maintain the bequeath'd cause, as for all lands,

And I send these words to Paris with my love,

And I guess some chansonniers there will understand them,

For I guess there is latent music yet in France, floods of it,

O I hear already the bustle of instruments, they will soon be drowning all that would interrupt them,

O I think the east wind brings a triumphal and free march,

It reaches hither, it swells me to joyful madness,

I will run transpose it in words, to justify it,

I will yet sing a song for you ma femme.

Myself and Mine

Myself and mine gymnastic ever,

To stand the cold or heat, to take good aim with a gun, to sail a boat, to manage horses, to beget superb children,

To speak readily and clearly, to feel at home among common people,

And to hold our own in terrible positions on land and sea.

Not for an embroiderer,

(There will always be plenty of embroiderers, I welcome them also,)

But for the fibre of things and for inherent men and women.

Not to chisel ornaments,

But to chisel with free stroke the heads and limbs of plenteous supreme Gods, that the States may realize them walking and talking.

Let me have my own way,

Let others promulge the laws, I will make no account of the laws,

Let others praise eminent men and hold up peace, I hold up agitation and conflict.

I praise no eminent man, I rebuke to his face the one that was thought most worthy.

(Who are you? and what are you secretly guilty of all your life?

Will you turn aside all your life? will you grub and chatter all your life?

And who are you, blabbing by rote, years, pages, languages, reminiscences,

Unwitting to-day that you do not know how to speak properly

a single word?)

Let others finish specimens, I never finish specimens,

I start them by exhaustless laws as Nature does, fresh and modern continually.

I give nothing as duties,

What others give as duties I give as living impulses,

(Shall I give the heart's action as a duty?)

Let others dispose of questions, I dispose of nothing, I arouse unanswerable questions,

Who are they I see and touch, and what about them?

What about these likes of myself that draw me so close by tender directions and indirections?

I call to the world to distrust the accounts of my friends, but listen to my enemies, as I myself do,

I charge you forever reject those who would expound me, for I cannot expound myself,

I charge that there be no theory or school founded out of me,

I charge you to leave all free, as I have left all free.

After me, vista!

O I see life is not short, but immeasurably long,

I henceforth tread the world chaste, temperate, an early riser, a steady grower,

Every hour the semen of centuries, and still of centuries.

I must follow up these continual lessons of the air, water, earth,

I perceive I have no time to lose.

Year of Meteors (1859-60)

Year of meteors! brooding year!

I would bind in words retrospective some of your deeds and signs,

I would sing your contest for the 19th Presidentiad,

I would sing how an old man, tall, with white hair, mounted the scaffold in Virginia,

(I was at hand, silent I stood with teeth shut close, I watch'd,

I stood very near you old man when cool and indifferent, but trembling with age and your unheal'd wounds you mounted the scaffold ;)

I would sing in my copious song your census returns of the States,

The tables of population and products, I would sing of your ships and their cargoes,

The proud black ships of Manhattan arriving, some fill'd with immigrants, some from the isthmus with cargoes of gold,

Songs thereof would I sing, to all that hitherward comes would I welcome give,

And you would I sing, fair stripling! welcome to you from me, young prince of England!

(Remember you surging Manhattan's crowds as you pass'd with your cortege of nobles?

There in the crowds stood I, and singled you out with attachment;)

Nor forget I to sing of the wonder, the ship as she swam up my bay,

Well-shaped and stately the Great Eastern swam up my bay, she was 600 feet long,

Her moving swiftly surrounded by myriads of small craft I forget not to sing;

Nor the comet that came unannounced out of the north flaring in heaven,

Nor the strange huge meteor-procession dazzling and clear shooting over our heads,

(A moment, a moment long it sail'd its balls of unearthly light over our heads,

Then departed, dropt in the night, and was gone;)

Of such, and fitful as they, I sing — with gleams from them would I gleam and patch these chants,

Your chants, O year all mottled with evil and good-year of forebodings!

Year of comets and meteors transient and strange-lo! even here one equally transient and strange!

As I flit through you hastily, soon to fall and be gone, what is this chant,

What am I myself but one of your meteors?

With Antecedents

With antecedents,

With my fathers and mothers and the accumulations of past ages,

With all which, had it not been, I would not now be here, as I am,

With Egypt, India, Phenicia, Greece and Rome,

With the Kelt, the Scandinavian, the Alb and the Saxon,

With antique maritime ventures, laws, artisanship, wars and journeys,

With the poet, the skald, the saga, the myth, and the oracle,

With the sale of slaves, with enthusiasts, with the troubadour,
the crusader, and the monk,

With those old continents whence we have come to this new continent,

With the fading kingdoms and kings over there,

With the fading religions and priests,

With the small shores we look back to from our own large and present shores,

With countless years drawing themselves onward and arrived at these years,

You and me arrived-America arrived and making this year,

This year! sending itself ahead countless years to come.

O but it is not the years — it is I, it is You,

We touch all laws and tally all antecedents,

We are the skald, the oracle, the monk and the knight, we easily include them and more,

We stand amid time beginningless and endless, we stand amid evil and good,

All swings around us, there is as much darkness as light,

The very sun swings itself and its system of planets around us,

Its sun, and its again, all swing around us.

As for me, (torn, stormy, amid these vehement days,)

I have the idea of all, and am all and believe in all,

I believe materialism is true and spiritualism is true, I reject no part.

(Have I forgotten any part? any thing in the past?

Come to me whoever and whatever, till I give you recognition.)

I respect Assyria, China, Teutonia, and the Hebrews,

I adopt each theory, myth, god, and demi-god,

I see that the old accounts, bibles, genealogies, are true, without exception,

I assert that all past days were what they must have been,

And that they could no-how have been better than they were,

And that to-day is what it must be, and that America is,

And that to-day and America could no-how be better than they are.

In the name of these States and in your and my name, the Past,
And in the name of these States and in your and my name, the Present time.

I know that the past was great and the future will be great,
And I know that both curiously conjoint in the present time,
(For the sake of him I typify, for the common average man's sake, your sake if you are he,)

And that where I am or you are this present day, there is the centre of all days, all races,

And there is the meaning to us of all that has ever come of races and days, or ever will come.

A Broadway Pageant

Over the Western sea hither from Nippon come,
Courteous, the swart-cheek'd two-sworded envoys,
Leaning back in their open barouches, bare-headed, impassive,
Ride to-day through Manhattan.

Libertad! I do not know whether others behold what I behold,
In the procession along with the nobles of Nippon, the errand-bearers,

Bringing up the rear, hovering above, around, or in the ranks marching,

But I will sing you a song of what I behold Libertad.

When million-footed Manhattan unpent descends to her pavements,

When the thunder-cracking guns arouse me with the proud roar I love,

When the round-mouth'd guns out of the smoke and smell I love spit their salutes,

When the fire-flashing guns have fully alerted me, and heaven-clouds canopy my city with a delicate thin haze,

When gorgeous the countless straight stems, the forests at the wharves, thicken with colors,

When every ship richly drest carries her flag at the peak,

When pennants trail and street-festoons hang from the windows,

When Broadway is entirely given up to foot-passengers and foot-standers, when the mass is densest,

When the façades of the houses are alive with people, when eyes gaze riveted tens of thousands at a time,

When the guests from the islands advance, when the pageant moves forward visible,

When the summons is made, when the answer that waited thousands of years answers,

I too arising, answering, descend to the pavements, merge with the crowd, and gaze with them.

Superb-faced Manhattan!

Comrade Americanos! to us, then at last the Orient comes.

To us, my city,

Where our tall-topt marble and iron beauties range on opposite sides, to walk in the space between,

To-day our Antipodes comes.

The Originatress comes,

The nest of languages, the bequeather of poems, the race of eld, Florid with blood, pensive, rapt with musings, hot with passion,

Sultry with perfume, with ample and flowing garments,

With sunburnt visage, with intense soul and glittering eyes,

The race of Brahma comes.

See my cantabile! these and more are flashing to us from the procession,

As it moves changing, a kaleidoscope divine it moves changing before us.

For not the envoys nor the tann'd Japanee from his island only,

Lithe and silent the Hindoo appears, the Asiatic continent itself appears, the past, the dead,

The murky night-morning of wonder and fable inscrutable,

The envelop'd mysteries, the old and unknown hive-bees,

The north, the sweltering south, eastern Assyria, the Hebrews,
the ancient of ancients,

Vast desolated cities, the gliding present, all of these and more are in the pageant-procession.

Geography, the world, is in it,

The Great Sea, the brood of islands, Polynesia, the coast beyond,

The coast you henceforth are facing — you Libertad! from your Western golden shores,

The countries there with their populations, the millions en-masse are curiously here,

The swarming market-places, the temples with idols ranged along the sides or at the end, bonze, brahmin, and llama,

Mandarin, farmer, merchant, mechanic, and fisherman,

The singing-girl and the dancing-girl, the ecstatic persons, the secluded emperors,

Confucious himself, the great poets and heroes, the warriors,
the castes, all,

Trooping up, crowding from all directions, from the Altay mountains,

From Thibet, from the four winding and far-flowing rivers of China,

From the southern peninsulas and the demi-continental islands,
from Malaysia,

These and whatever belongs to them palpable show forth to me, and are seiz'd by me,

And I am seiz'd by them, and friendlily held by them,

Till as here them all I chant, Libertad! for themselves and for you.

For I too raising my voice join the ranks of this pageant,
I am the chanter, I chant aloud over the pageant,
I chant the world on my Western sea,
I chant copious the islands beyond, thick as stars in the sky,
I chant the new empire grander than any before, as in a vision
it comes to me,
I chant America the mistress, I chant a greater supremacy,
I chant projected a thousand blooming cities yet in time on those groups of sea-islands,
My sail-ships and steam-ships threading the archipelagoes,
My stars and stripes fluttering in the wind,
Commerce opening, the sleep of ages having done its work,
races reborn, refresh'd,
Lives, works resumed — the object I know not — but the old,
the Asiatic renew'd as it must be,
Commencing from this day surrounded by the world.

And you Libertad of the world!
You shall sit in the middle well-pois'd thousands and thousands of years,
As to-day from one side the nobles of Asia come to you,
As to-morrow from the other side the queen of England sends her eldest son to you.

The sign is reversing, the orb is enclosed,

The ring is circled, the journey is done,

The box-lid is but perceptibly open'd, nevertheless the perfume pours copiously out of the whole box.

Young Libertad! with the venerable Asia, the all-mother,

Be considerate with her now and ever hot Libertad, for you are all,

Bend your proud neck to the long-off mother now sending messages over the archipelagoes to you,

Bend your proud neck low for once, young Libertad.

Were the children straying westward so long? so wide the tramping?

Were the precedent dim ages debouching westward from Paradise so long?

Were the centuries steadily footing it that way, all the while unknown, for you, for reasons?

They are justified, they are accomplish'd, they shall now be turn'd the other way also, to travel toward you thence,

They shall now also march obediently eastward for your sake Libertad.

SEA-DRIFT

Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking

Out of the cradle endlessly rocking,

Out of the mocking-bird's throat, the musical shuttle,

Out of the Ninth-month midnight,

Over the sterile sands and the fields beyond, where the child leaving his bed wander'd alone, bareheaded, barefoot,

Down from the shower'd halo,

Up from the mystic play of shadows twining and twisting as if they were alive,

Out from the patches of briars and blackberries,

From the memories of the bird that chanted to me,

From your memories sad brother, from the fitful risings and fallings I heard,

From under that yellow half-moon late-risen and swollen as if with tears,

From those beginning notes of yearning and love there in the mist,

From the thousand responses of my heart never to cease,

From the myriad thence-arous'd words,

From the word stronger and more delicious than any,

From such as now they start the scene revisiting,

As a flock, twittering, rising, or overhead passing,

Borne hither, ere all eludes me, hurriedly,

A man, yet by these tears a little boy again,

Throwing myself on the sand, confronting the waves,

I, chanter of pains and joys, uniter of here and hereafter,

Taking all hints to use them, but swiftly leaping beyond them,
A reminiscence sing.

Once Paumanok,

When the lilac-scent was in the air and Fifth-month grass was growing,

Up this seashore in some briers,

Two feather'd guests from Alabama, two together,

And their nest, and four light-green eggs spotted with brown,

And every day the he-bird to and fro near at hand,

And every day the she-bird crouch'd on her nest, silent, with bright eyes,

And every day I, a curious boy, never too close, never disturbing them,

Cautiously peering, absorbing, translating.

Shine! shine! shine!

Pour down your warmth, great sun!

While we bask, we two together.

Two together!

Winds blow south, or winds blow north,

Day come white, or night come black,

Home, or rivers and mountains from home,

Singing all time, minding no time,

While we two keep together.

Till of a sudden,
May-be kill'd, unknown to her mate,
One forenoon the she-bird crouch'd not on the nest,
Nor return'd that afternoon, nor the next,
Nor ever appear'd again.

And thenceforward all summer in the sound of the sea,
And at night under the full of the moon in calmer weather,
Over the hoarse surging of the sea,
Or flitting from brier to brier by day,
I saw, I heard at intervals the remaining one, the he-bird,
The solitary guest from Alabama.

Blow! blow! blow!

Blow up sea-winds along Paumanok's shore;

I wait and I wait till you blow my mate to me.

Yes, when the stars glisten'd,
All night long on the prong of a moss-scallop'd stake,
Down almost amid the slapping waves,
Sat the lone singer wonderful causing tears.
He call'd on his mate,
He pour'd forth the meanings which I of all men know.

Yes my brother I know,
The rest might not, but I have treasur'd every note,
For more than once dimly down to the beach gliding,

Silent, avoiding the moonbeams, blending myself with the shadows,

Recalling now the obscure shapes, the echoes, the sounds and sights after their sorts,

The white arms out in the breakers tirelessly tossing,
I, with bare feet, a child, the wind wafting my hair,
Listen'd long and long.

Listen'd to keep, to sing, now translating the notes,
Following you my brother.

Soothe! soothe! soothe!

Close on its wave soothes the wave behind,

*And again another behind embracing and lapping, every one close,
But my love soothes not me, not me.*

Low hangs the moon, it rose late,

It is lagging-O I think it is heavy with love, with love.

O madly the sea pushes upon the land,

With love, with love.

O night! do I not see my love fluttering out among the breakers?

What is that little black thing I see there in the white?

Loud! loud! loud!

Loud I call to you, my love!

High and clear I shoot my voice over the waves,

Surely you must know who is here, is here,

You must know who I am, my love.

Low-hanging moon!

What is that dusky spot in your brown yellow?

O it is the shape, the shape of my mate!

O moon do not keep her from me any longer.

Land! land! O land!

Whichever way I turn, O I think you could give me my mate back again if you only would,

For I am almost sure I see her dimly whichever way I look.

O rising stars!

Perhaps the one I want so much will rise, will rise with some of you.

O throat! O trembling throat!

Sound clearer through the atmosphere!

Pierce the woods, the earth,

Somewhere listening to catch you must be the one I want.

Shake out carols!

Solitary here, the night's carols!

Carols of lonesome love! death's carols!

Carols under that lagging, yellow, waning moon!

O under that moon where she droops almost down into the sea!

O reckless despairing carols.

But soft! sink low!

Soft! let me just murmur,

And do you wait a moment you husky-nois'd sea,

For somewhere I believe I heard my mate responding to me,

So faint, I must be still, be still to listen,

But not altogether still, for then she might not come immediately to me.

Hither my love!

Here I am! here!

With this just-sustain'd note I announce myself to you,

This gentle call is for you my love, for you.

Do not be decoy'd elsewhere,

That is the whistle of the wind, it is not my voice,

That is the fluttering, the fluttering of the spray,

Those are the shadows of leaves.

O darkness! O in vain!

O I am very sick and sorrowful.

O brown halo in the sky near the moon, drooping upon the sea!

O troubled reflection in the sea!

O throat! O throbbing heart!

And I singing uselessly, uselessly all the night.

O past! O happy life! O songs of joy!

In the air, in the woods, over fields,

Loved! loved! loved! loved! loved!

But my mate no more, no more with me!

We two together no more.

The aria sinking,

All else continuing, the stars shining,

The winds blowing, the notes of the bird continuous echoing,

With angry moans the fierce old mother incessantly moaning,

On the sands of Paumanok's shore gray and rustling,

The yellow half-moon enlarged, sagging down, drooping, the face of the sea almost touching,

The boy ecstatic, with his bare feet the waves, with his hair the atmosphere dallying,

The love in the heart long pent, now loose, now at last tumultuously bursting,

The aria's meaning, the ears, the soul, swiftly depositing,

The strange tears down the cheeks coursing,

The colloquy there, the trio, each uttering,

The undertone, the savage old mother incessantly crying,
To the boy's soul's questions sullenly timing, some drown'd secret hissing,

To the outsetting bard.

Demon or bird! (said the boy's soul,)

Is it indeed toward your mate you sing? or is it really to me?

For I, that was a child, my tongue's use sleeping, now I have heard you,

Now in a moment I know what I am for, I awake,

And already a thousand singers, a thousand songs, clearer, louder and more sorrowful than yours,

A thousand warbling echoes have started to life within me, never to die.

O you singer solitary, singing by yourself, projecting me,

O solitary me listening, never more shall I cease perpetuating
you,

Never more shall I escape, never more the reverberations,

Never more the cries of unsatisfied love be absent from me,

Never again leave me to be the peaceful child I was before what there in the night,

By the sea under the yellow and sagging moon,

The messenger there arous'd, the fire, the sweet hell within,

The unknown want, the destiny of me.

O give me the clew! (it lurks in the night here somewhere,)

O if I am to have so much, let me have more!

A word then, (for I will conquer it,)

The word final, superior to all,

Subtle, sent up — what is it? — I listen;

Are you whispering it, and have been all the time, you sea-waves?

Is that it from your liquid rims and wet sands?

Whereto answering, the sea,

Delaying not, hurrying not,

Whisper'd me through the night, and very plainly before daybreak,

Lisp'd to me the low and delicious word death,

And again death, death, death, death,

Hissing melodious, neither like the bird nor like my arous'd child's heart,

But edging near as privately for me rustling at my feet,

Creeping thence steadily up to my ears and laving me softly all over,

Death, death, death, death, death.

Which I do not forget,

But fuse the song of my dusky demon and brother,

That he sang to me in the moonlight on Paumanok's gray beach,

With the thousand responsive songs at random,

My own songs awaked from that hour,

And with them the key, the word up from the waves,

The word of the sweetest song and all songs,

That strong and delicious word which, creeping to my feet,

(Or like some old crone rocking the cradle, swathed in sweet garments, bending aside,)

The sea whisper'd me.

As I Ebb'd with the Ocean of Life

As I ebb'd with the ocean of life,
As I wended the shores I know,
As I walk'd where the ripples continually wash you Paumanok,
Where they rustle up hoarse and sibilant,
Where the fierce old mother endlessly cries for her castaways,
I musing late in the autumn day, gazing off southward,
Held by this electric self out of the pride of which I utter poems,
Was seiz'd by the spirit that trails in the lines underfoot,
The rim, the sediment that stands for all the water and all the land of the globe.

Fascinated, my eyes reverting from the south, dropt, to follow those slender windrows,
Chaff, straw, splinters of wood, weeds, and the sea-gluten,
Scum, scales from shining rocks, leaves of salt-lettuce, left by the tide,
Miles walking, the sound of breaking waves the other side of me,
Paumanok there and then as I thought the old thought of likenesses,
These you presented to me you fish-shaped island,
As I wended the shores I know,
As I walk'd with that electric self seeking types.

As I wend to the shores I know not,
 As I list to the dirge, the voices of men and women wreck'd,
 As I inhale the impalpable breezes that set in upon me,
 As the ocean so mysterious rolls toward me closer and closer,
 I too but signify at the utmost a little wash'd-up drift,
 A few sands and dead leaves to gather,
 Gather, and merge myself as part of the sands and drift.

O baffled, balk'd, bent to the very earth,
 Oppress'd with myself that I have dared to open my mouth,
 Aware now that amid all that blab whose echoes recoil upon me I have not once had the least idea who or what I am,
 But that before all my arrogant poems the real Me stands yet untouch'd, untold, altogether unreach'd,
 Withdrawn far, mocking me with mock-congratulatory signs and bows,
 With peals of distant ironical laughter at every word I have written,
 Pointing in silence to these songs, and then to the sand beneath.
 I perceive I have not really understood any thing, not a single object, and that no man ever can,
 Nature here in sight of the sea taking advantage of me to dart upon me and sting me,
 Because I have dared to open my mouth to sing at all.

You oceans both, I close with you,
We murmur alike reproachfully rolling sands and drift,
knowing not why,
These little shreds indeed standing for you and me and all.

You friable shore with trails of debris,
You fish-shaped island, I take what is underfoot,
What is yours is mine my father.

I too Paumanok,
I too have bubbled up, floated the measureless float, and been wash'd on your shores,
I too am but a trail of drift and debris,
I too leave little wrecks upon you, you fish-shaped island.

I throw myself upon your breast my father,
I cling to you so that you cannot unloose me,
I hold you so firm till you answer me something.

Kiss me my father,
Touch me with your lips as I touch those I love, Breathe to me while I hold you close the secret of the murmuring I envy.

Ebb, ocean of life, (the flow will return,)
Cease not your moaning you fierce old mother,
Endlessly cry for your castaways, but fear not, deny not me,

Rustle not up so hoarse and angry against my feet as I touch you or gather from you.

I mean tenderly by you and all,

I gather for myself and for this phantom looking down where we lead, and following me and mine.

Me and mine, loose windrows, little corpses,

Froth, snowy white, and bubbles,

(See, from my dead lips the ooze exuding at last,

See, the prismatic colors glistening and rolling,)

Tufts of straw, sands, fragments,

Buoy'd hither from many moods, one contradicting another,

From the storm, the long calm, the darkness, the swell,

Musing, pondering, a breath, a briny tear, a dab of liquid or soil,

Up just as much out of fathomless workings fermented and thrown,

A limp blossom or two, torn, just as much over waves floating,
drifted at random,

Just as much for us that sobbing dirge of Nature,

Just as much whence we come that blare of the cloud-trumpets,

We, capricious, brought hither we know not whence, spread out before you,

You up there walking or sitting,

Whoever you are, we too lie in drifts at your feet.

Tears

Tears! tears! tears!

In the night, in solitude, tears,

On the white shore dripping, dripping, suck'd in by the sand,

Tears, not a star shining, all dark and desolate,

Moist tears from the eyes of a muffled head;

O who is that ghost? that form in the dark, with tears?

What shapeless lump is that, bent, crouch'd there on the sand?

Streaming tears, sobbing tears, throes, choked with wild cries;

O storm, embodied, rising, careering with swift steps along the beach!

O wild and dismal night storm, with wind — O belching and desperate!

O shade so sedate and decorous by day, with calm countenance and regulated pace,

But away at night as you fly, none looking — O then the unloosen'd ocean,

Of tears! tears! tears!

To the Man-of-War Bird

Thou who hast slept all night upon the storm,
Waking renew'd on thy prodigious pinions,
(Burst the wild storm? above it thou ascended'st,
And rested on the sky, thy slave that cradled thee,)
Now a blue point, far, far, in heaven floating,
As to the light emerging here on deck I watch thee, (Myself a speck, a point on the world's floating vast.)

Far, far at sea,

After the night's fierce drifts have strewn the shore with wrecks,

With re-appearing day as now so happy and serene,
The rosy and elastic dawn, the flashing sun,
The limpid spread of air cerulean,
Thou also re-appearest.

Thou born to match the gale, (thou art all wings,)
To cope with heaven and earth and sea and hurricane,
Thou ship of air that never furl'st thy sails,

Days, even weeks untired and onward, through spaces, realms gyrating,

At dusk that look'st on Senegal, at morn America,
That sport'st amid the lightning-flash and thunder-cloud,
In them, in thy experiences, had'st thou my soul,
What joys! what joys were thine!

Aboard at a Ship's Helm

Aboard at a ship's helm,
A young steersman steering with care.

Through fog on a sea-coast dolefully ringing,
An ocean-bell — O a warning bell, rock'd by the waves.

O you give good notice indeed, you bell by the sea-reefs ringing,
Ringing, ringing, to warn the ship from its wreck-place.

For as on the alert O steersman, you mind the loud admonition,
The bows turn, the freighted ship tacking speeds away under her gray sails,

The beautiful and noble ship with all her precious wealth speeds away gayly and safe.

But O the ship, the immortal ship! O ship aboard the ship!

Ship of the body, ship of the soul, voyaging, voyaging, voyaging.

On the Beach at Night

On the beach at night,
Stands a child with her father,
Watching the east, the autumn sky.

Up through the darkness,
While ravening clouds, the burial clouds, in black masses spreading,
Lower sullen and fast athwart and down the sky,
Amid a transparent clear belt of ether yet left in the east,
Ascends large and calm the lord-star Jupiter,
And nigh at hand, only a very little above,
Swim the delicate sisters the Pleiades.
From the beach the child holding the hand of her father,
Those burial-clouds that lower victorious soon to devour all,
Watching, silently weeps.

Weep not, child,
Weep not, my darling,
With these kisses let me remove your tears,
The ravening clouds shall not long be victorious,
They shall not long possess the sky, they devour the stars only in apparition,
Jupiter shall emerge, be patient, watch again another night, the Pleiades shall emerge,
They are immortal, all those stars both silvery and golden shall shine out again,
The great stars and the little ones shall shine out again, they endure,

The vast immortal suns and the long-enduring pensive moons shall again shine.

Then dearest child mournest thou only for Jupiter?
Considerest thou alone the burial of the stars?

Something there is,
(With my lips soothing thee, adding I whisper,
I give thee the first suggestion, the problem and indirection,)
Something there is more immortal even than the stars,
(Many the burials, many the days and nights, passing away,)
Something that shall endure longer even than lustrous Jupiter,
Longer than sun or any revolving satellite,
Or the radiant sisters the Pleiades.

The World Below the Brine

The world below the brine,

Forests at the bottom of the sea, the branches and leaves,

Sea-lettuce, vast lichens, strange flowers and seeds, the thick tangle, openings, and pink turf,

Different colors, pale gray and green, purple, white, and gold, the play of light through the water,

Dumb swimmers there among the rocks, coral, gluten, grass, rushes, and the aliment of the swimmers,

Sluggish existences grazing there suspended, or slowly crawling close to the bottom,

The sperm-whale at the surface blowing air and spray, or disporting with his flukes,

The leaden-eyed shark, the walrus, the turtle, the hairy sea-leopard, and the sting-ray,

Passions there, wars, pursuits, tribes, sight in those ocean-depths, breathing that thick-breathing air, as so many do,

The change thence to the sight here, and to the subtle air breathed by beings like us who walk this sphere,

The change onward from ours to that of beings who walk other spheres.

On the Beach at Night Alone

On the beach at night alone,

As the old mother sways her to and fro singing her husky song,

As I watch the bright stars shining, I think a thought of the clef of the universes and of the future.

A vast similitude interlocks all,

All spheres, grown, ungrown, small, large, suns, moons,
planets,

All distances of place however wide,

All distances of time, all inanimate forms,

All souls, all living bodies though they be ever so different, or in different worlds,

All gaseous, watery, vegetable, mineral processes, the fishes,
the brutes,

All nations, colors, barbarisms, civilizations, languages,

All identities that have existed or may exist on this globe, or any globe,

All lives and deaths, all of the past, present, future,

This vast similitude spans them, and always has spann'd,

And shall forever span them and compactly hold and enclose them.

Song for All Seas, All Ships

To-day a rude brief recitative,

Of ships sailing the seas, each with its special flag or ship-signal,

Of unnamed heroes in the ships — of waves spreading and spreading far as the eye can reach,

Of dashing spray, and the winds piping and blowing,

And out of these a chant for the sailors of all nations,

Fitful, like a surge.

Of sea-captains young or old, and the mates, and of all intrepid sailors,

Of the few, very choice, taciturn, whom fate can never surprise nor death dismay,

Pick'd sparingly without noise by thee old ocean, chosen by thee,

Thou sea that pickest and cullest the race in time, and unitest nations,

Suckled by thee, old husky nurse, embodying thee,

Indomitable, untamed as thee.

(Ever the heroes on water or on land, by ones or twos appearing, Ever the stock preserv'd and never lost, though rare, enough for seed preserv'd.)

Flaunt out O sea your separate flags of nations!

Flaunt out visible as ever the various ship-signals!

But do you reserve especially for yourself and for the soul of man one flag above all the rest,

A spiritual woven signal for all nations, emblem of man elate above death,

Token of all brave captains and all intrepid sailors and mates,

And all that went down doing their duty,

Reminiscent of them, twined from all intrepid captains young or old,

A pennant universal, subtly waving all time, o'er all brave sailors,

All seas, all ships.

Patrolling Barnegat

Wild, wild the storm, and the sea high running,

Steady the roar of the gale, with incessant undertone
muttering,

Shouts of demoniac laughter fitfully piercing and pealing,

Waves, air, midnight, their savagest trinity lashing,

Out in the shadows there milk-white combs careering,

On beachy slush and sand spirts of snow fierce slanting,

Where through the murk the easterly death-wind breasting,

Through cutting swirl and spray watchful and firm advancing,

(That in the distance! is that a wreck? is the red signal flaring?)

Slush and sand of the beach tireless till daylight wending,

Steadily, slowly, through hoarse roar never remitting,

Along the midnight edge by those milk-white combs careering,

A group of dim, weird forms, struggling, the night confronting,

That savage trinity warily watching.

After the Sea-Ship

After the sea-ship, after the whistling winds,
After the white-gray sails taut to their spars and ropes,
Below, a myriad myriad waves hastening, lifting up their necks,
Tending in ceaseless flow toward the track of the ship,
Waves of the ocean bubbling and gurgling, blithely prying,
Waves, undulating waves, liquid, uneven, emulous waves, Toward that whirling current, laughing and buoyant, with curves,

Where the great vessel sailing and tacking displaces the surface,

Larger and smaller waves in the spread of the ocean yearnfully flowing,

The wake of the sea-ship after she passes, flashing and frolicsome under the sun,

A motley procession with many a fleck of foam and many fragments,

Following the stately and rapid ship, in the wake following.

第一章 三英里十字标

这部传记的主人公，出自世人公认最古老的家族之一。因此，其名号之源起佚失不明，亦不足为奇。数百万年前，现今名为“西班牙”（Spain）的那个国家，在创世的混沌中躁动地翻腾不息。随着岁月流逝，植物出现了；根据自然规律，只要有植物的地方便会有兔子；而有兔子的地方，势必会有狗，这是上天的旨意。此事毋庸置疑，毫无争议。不过，说起为何捉兔子的狗被称作“西班牙猎犬”（Spaniel），疑难也就随之而来。有史学家提出，彼时迦太基人登陆西班牙，一千士兵齐声呼喊：“Span！Span！”因为每簇矮树中、每丛灌木里都有兔子飞蹿而出，陆地上热闹非凡，兔子遍地。而在迦太基语中，“span”即是“兔子”之意。因此，这块陆地便被称为“Hispania”，即“兔之乡”；而那些一看到兔子就撒腿开追的犬类，便被命名为西班牙猎犬，即猎兔犬。

我们中大多数人会满足于这种说法，不再深究。然而在真理的驱策下，有必要补充另一种截然不同的思路。有批学者声称，“Hispania”这个词与迦太基语中的“span”毫无关系，而是由巴斯克 [1] 语中的“españa”一词衍生而来，意为“边缘”或“边界”。若果真如此，就必须将这幅由兔子、灌木丛、狗与士兵构成的浪漫美好的图景从脑海中抹去，我们只能假定西班牙猎犬之所以得名，是因为西班牙被称为“españa”。第三派考古学者则坚持认为，正如一个男人会称呼自己的情妇“怪物”或“猴子”，西班牙人也会将自己最心爱的狗儿称作“弯弯”或“曲曲”（“españa”一词也包含这些意思）。但因为世人皆知西班牙猎犬的模样恰恰相反，所以这种猜测过于天马行空，不必当真。

略过上述乃至更多无须在此多言的理论，我们来到十世纪中叶的威尔士。那时西班牙猎犬这一品种已经出现，据说是好几个世纪前，由一个姓伊佛（Ebhör）或伊沃尔（Ivor）的西班牙家族引进，到了十世纪中叶俨然已是身价不菲的名犬。豪厄尔·达 [2] 在其《律法书》中记载道：“国王的西班牙猎犬价值一镑。”倘若我们回想一下一镑钱在公元九四八年能买到多少东西——多少妻妾、奴隶、马匹、公牛、火鸡和鹅——就会知道彼时西班牙猎犬已是价值连城、声名远扬了。它在国王身侧已有一席之地。其血统显赫历时之久，远胜于许多知名君主。当金雀花家族、都铎家族和斯图亚特家族还在别人家的田地里跟

在人后扶犁躬耕时，它已安闲自在地身居皇宫了；当霍华德家族、卡文迪什家族和拉塞尔家族 [3] 尚未从史密斯、琼斯和汤姆金斯 [4] 们当中脱颖而出时，西班牙猎犬家族早已卓尔不群。时节如流，从西班牙猎犬的主干上又陆续分出一些旁支。随着历史滚滚向前，西班牙猎犬在英国逐渐分化出至少七个不同的著名品种——克伦伯长毛垂耳狗、苏塞克斯猎狗、诺福克梗犬、黑色田野猎犬、可卡犬、爱尔兰水猎犬及英格兰水犬。它们皆源自同一种史前西班牙猎犬，特征却各不相同，因此享有的特权自然也不尽相同。至伊丽莎白女王在位时，菲利普·西德尼爵士 [5] 在其著作《世外桃源》 [6] 中称犬类中亦有贵族。“……灵缇、西班牙猎犬和猎犬，”他评述道，“第一类可视为犬中王公贵族，第二类可视为绅士，最后一类则是犬辈中的草莽。”

但倘若我们可以由此假设西班牙猎犬会像人类一样，以灵缇为尊，以猎犬为贱，那我们就不得不承认，犬类的高低贵贱比人类的尊卑来得更合情理——至少，凡是研究过西班牙猎犬俱乐部章程的人都会得出这一结论。在西班牙猎犬高贵庄严的外表上，缺陷与优点都一目了然。例如，浅色眼睛就不受欢迎，卷曲的耳朵就更糟糕了，天生的淡色鼻子或头顶上的冠毛 [7] 堪称致命缺陷。同样，西班牙猎犬的优点也有明确的界定：头部必须平滑；口鼻须上扬，但幅度不可过于突兀；头盖骨要相对圆润，发育良好，有足够的空间容纳睿智的大脑；眼睛须饱满有神，但不至于向外鼓出；脸部表情应大体上显得聪慧而温和。具备这些特征的西班牙猎犬备受青睐，作育种之用；而那些经年累月顶着冠毛、长着淡色鼻子的西班牙猎犬，则被剥夺了族群的种种特权和奖赏。日后，裁决者便将此奉为铁律，同时赏罚分明，以确保令行禁止。

然而，反观人类社会，我们会发现尊卑贵贱的标准是何等混乱——令人费解！没有哪个机构有权裁定人种孰优孰劣，“纹章院” [8] 或许是最接近西班牙猎犬俱乐部的组织了，至少在维护家族的正统性方面还下了些功夫。可当我们质问怎样才算出身高贵——眼睛的颜色应该是浅是深，耳朵应该是卷是直，头顶的鬃毛是否至关重要，我们的裁决者看的却只是纹章罢了。或许你一枚纹章也没有，那你便是无名之辈。可一旦你能证明自己持有十六枚四等分纹章 [9]，并有权佩戴冠状头饰，那么人们就会认为你不仅出身显赫，还是簪缨世族。因此在整个梅费尔 [10]，所有的松饼保温盘上都刻有蹲伏的狮子或跃起的美人鱼，无一例外。就连我们的亚麻布商都要在门上镶嵌皇室纹章，仿佛那样就可以证明他们的床单睡着足够安全。声称自己出身高贵的人比比皆是，人人都强调头衔的价值。可当我们追溯像波旁 [11]、哈布斯堡 [12] 还有霍亨索伦 [13] 那样的皇室，就不难发现，无论他们曾经头戴多少冠冕，身披多少四等分纹章，纹章上面又画着多少蹲伏或后足站立的狮子和豹子，他们如今都遭到罢黜，流亡在外，尊严尽失。

所有对弗勒希确切出生年份的考据都以失败告终，月份和日子自然更不必提。不过他很可能生于一八四二年初，而——还极有可能是特雷（Tray，公元一八一六年生）的直系后代。可惜，能证明特雷是一条纯正的红色可卡犬的各项特质，只在诗歌这一不可靠的媒介中尚有记载。米特福德博士曾因特雷“在田野上表现优异”，拒绝以二十几尼 [15] 的价格把他卖掉，我们完全有理由相信弗勒希正是这条“纯种老可卡犬”之子。唉！对于幼年弗勒希的大部分细致描绘，我们也只能仰赖于诗歌了。他的毛色是那种特有的深棕色，在阳光照射下会闪闪发光，变成“通体金黄”。他“淡褐色的温柔眼眸透着惊异”，耳朵犹如“流苏”，“纤细的脚”上“穗毛覆盖”，尾巴粗壮。抛去押韵的需要和诗歌语言的不准确性，以上特征无不符合西班牙猎犬俱乐部的认证标准。我们不能否认，弗勒希的确是一条纯种的红色可卡犬，——具有该犬种所有的完美特征。

出生后的头几个月，他住在雷丁附近一间名为“三英里十字标”的雇工小屋里。米特福德家穷困潦倒——克伦哈波克是仅有的仆人——连椅套也由米特福德小姐亲手缝制，用的是最廉价的布料；家里最重要的家具似乎是一张大桌子，最重要的房间是一间宽敞的温室。弗勒希不

可能享受到豪华的待遇，譬如防雨犬舍，散步的水泥道，伴随左右的女仆或男仆，而眼下，这些本应是他这种等级的狗理当享有的。不过他依然茁壮成长——他天性活泼，尽情享受青春和性别天然赋予他的大多数乐趣及某些特权。米特福德小姐确实常常足不出户。她必须连续数小时为父亲高声朗读，再陪他玩克里比奇牌戏 [16]。等他终于呼呼大睡后，她还得上在温室的桌前不停地写啊写啊写啊，设法付账和还债。但最终，期待已久的时刻总算到来。她会把纸张推到一旁，扣上帽子，拿起雨伞，带着她的狗儿们去田野散步。西班牙猎犬天生极通人性，而弗勒希，正如他的故事所证明的那样，对人类情绪更是有着超乎寻常的敏锐感知力。看见亲爱的女主人总算能呼吸新鲜空气，任由风吹乱她的银发，为她自然清爽的脸庞增添红润，抚平她宽大眉头上的皱纹，他开心得欢欣雀跃——那种狂野一半是受她的喜悦感染。她大步穿过高高的草丛，他则四处跳跃着，不断拨开绿色的帘幕。清凉的露珠和雨滴在他鼻子周围散成一道道七彩的雾气，地面忽硬忽软、忽热忽冷，硌着、挠着、搔着他脚底柔软的肉垫。林林总总的味道微妙地交织杂糅，刺激着他的鼻孔：泥土浓郁的气息，花朵香甜的味道，树叶和荆棘无可名状的气味，穿过道路时的酸味儿，进入豆田间的呛鼻味儿。猛然，风刮来一股味道，比任何气味都更刺激、更浓烈、更折磨人——那味道扯开他的大脑，激发了千般直觉，释放出万种回忆——那是野兔的味道，是狐狸的味道。他仿佛被湍流裹挟的鱼儿，遽然一闪，越奔越远。他忘记了女主人，忘记了一切人类。他听见黑皮肤的人影高喊着：“Span！Span！”他听见鞭子劈啪抽打的声音。他拼命跑啊冲啊。终于，魔咒的力量消退了，他停下来，满是困惑，难为情地摇着尾巴，慢慢地小跑着穿过田野，回到米特福德小姐身旁。她正站在那里一边高喊：“弗勒希！弗勒希！弗勒希！”一边挥舞着雨伞。但至少有那么一次，天性的召唤变得尤为不可抗拒——狩猎的号角激起他内心深处的本能，唤醒了一种更狂暴、更强烈的情绪。在一声欣喜若狂的野性呼唤中，他跨越了一切记忆，抹去草丛、树木、野兔和狐狸。爱在他眼中点燃了火炬，他听见了维纳斯狩猎的号角！就这样，在远未脱离幼犬期时，弗勒希就当了父亲。

在一八四二年，即使是男子有了这种行为，也必须让作传之人找个借口替他搪塞过去；倘若是女人，则任何借口都不顶用，必须将她的名字可耻地从书中彻底抹去。不过，狗的道德标准，无论更好或更糟，总之必定与我们人类的标准大相径庭。从这点来看，弗勒希的行为，不仅在今日无须遮遮掩掩，即便在当时也不会为世上最纯洁、最坚贞的群体所不容。这句话绝非空口无凭，证据便是，皮由兹博士 [17] 的长兄迫切地希望买下弗勒希。根据皮由兹博士的性格，我们可以推断其兄长可能的性格，并由此断定，无论幼时何等轻浮，弗勒希身上想必具备某种严谨稳重、前途无量的潜能，预示了其未来的优异性情。不过他可爱的天性还有另一项更加重要的证明，那就是尽管皮

由兹先生想买，米特福德小姐却拒绝出售。在赚钱这件事情上她已黔驴技穷，完全不知道下部悲剧该写什么，下部年鉴如何编制，甚至不得不咬咬牙暂时向朋友求助。对她而言，拒绝皮由兹博士兄长的那笔钱定非易事。曾经有人出价二十英镑买弗勒希的父亲，米特福德小姐大可以为弗勒希要价十到十五英镑。这可是个大数目，拿在手上是一笔可观的钱财。有了这十到十五英镑，她可以更换新椅套，重新在温室种满花草草，为自己添置衣柜和满满一柜子服饰——“整整四年，”她在一八四二年写道，“我都没有买过一顶软帽、一件斗篷、一条长裙，甚至一副手套。”

但卖掉弗勒希绝无可能。他是少数与金钱无关的事物之一。而在这些事物当中，有一类更为珍贵，它们是精神的象征，是无价之宝，是无私友谊最恰当的代表。弗勒希难道不正是这种事物？难道她不该秉着友谊的精神，把他送给一位挚友——如果一个人真能有幸结识这样一位——一位与其说是朋友，更像是女儿的挚友？这位朋友整个夏季都与世隔绝，待在温波尔街某宅邸后侧的卧室里。这位朋友不是别人，正是英国首屈一指的女诗人，才华横溢、命运多舛、受人爱戴的伊丽莎白·巴雷特 [18] 本人！每当米特福德小姐注视着在阳光下翻滚跳跃的弗勒希，每当她身处巴雷特小姐的伦敦住所，坐在那间笼罩于常春藤阴影下的幽暗卧室里的一张长沙发上，这想法便愈加频繁地从她脑海中闪过。没错，弗勒希配得上巴雷特小姐，巴雷特小姐也配得上弗勒希。这是巨大的牺牲，也是必要的牺牲。因此，大概是在一八四二年初夏的某一天，或许有人看见惹人注目的一人一犬沿温波尔街而行——一位矮小敦实、衣衫褴褛的年长女士，面色红润、满鬓苍白，用狗链牵着一只精力异常充沛、好奇心极重、血统绝对纯正的金色小可卡犬。他们几乎走完了整条街，一直到五十号门前才终于停住。米特福德小姐略带惶恐地敲响门铃。

哪怕是今天，依然没有人能不带惶恐地敲响温波尔街上那些宅邸的门铃。那是伦敦街道中最庄严肃穆、最没有人情味的一条。的确，当整个世界仿佛即将毁于一旦、文明的基石摇摇欲坠时，你只消去一趟温波尔街，漫步在那条林荫道上，看一眼那些房子，思索它们的整齐划一，去为那些如出一辙的窗帘惊叹，去欣赏那些端正匀称的黄铜门环，观察屠夫解牛、厨工买肉，暗自估算那些住户的收入并推想他们随后也不免顺应上帝的安排，走向人生必然的结局；你只消去温波尔街，深吸一口权贵们呼吸的宁静空气，就能满怀感激地长叹一声：纵使科林斯 [19] 陷落、墨西拿 [20] 震毁，多少王权随风而逝，多少古代帝国已化为灰烬，温波尔街却始终岿然不动。从温波尔街转入牛津街，一声祷告便从心头冉冉升起，涌上嘴边：但愿温波尔街的一砖一瓦都不会重砌，每幅窗帘都无须清洗，屠夫终日供应，厨工始终能买到里脊肉、腰腿肉、胸脯肉、羊排及牛肉，但愿这一切永不改变，直

到永远。因为只要温波尔街存在一天，文明便可存续。

纵然是现在，温波尔街管家们的举止仍然一板一眼，而在一八四二年的夏天，他们更是小心翼翼。当时穿戴制服的规矩远比现在严苛：擦拭银器时须系戴绿色粗呢围裙，开启大门时须穿条纹马甲及黑色燕尾服，诸如此类的礼节都要严格遵守。因此米特福德小姐和弗勒希很有可能在门口等了至少有三分半钟。不过终于，五十号的大门轰然洞开，米特福德小姐和弗勒希被请入室内。米特福德小姐是这里的常客，尽管早已见惯眼前的巴雷特宅邸，却依旧为之折服。可面对此景，弗勒希感受到的无疑是难以抗拒、无与伦比的震撼。直到这一刻，除了三英里十字标的那间雇工小屋，他从未踏足任何其他住宅。小屋的木板光秃秃的，垫子均已磨损，座椅都很廉价。而这里没有一样东西是光秃秃的，没有一样东西是磨损的，也没有一样东西是廉价的——这弗勒希一眼就能看出来。主人，巴雷特先生，是位富商，家中人丁兴旺，有不少已经成年的儿女，还有与之相称的众多仆役。他的住宅装潢符合十九世纪三十年代晚期的流行风尚，无疑还带着些许东方风韵。正因为对东方着迷，他才在什罗普郡建造了一栋宅邸，为其装点上摩尔式建筑 [21] 中常见的穹顶与新月标志。温波尔街不会容忍那种奢靡，但我们可以想见，在那些高大幽暗的房间里，必定摆满了铺有软垫的厢式凳子和桃花心木雕刻，桌脚弯曲盘绕，金银丝线细工饰品端放其上；匕首与刀剑挂在深酒红色的墙壁上；壁龛中摆着他从东印度带回来的奇珍异宝，地板上铺着厚实的名贵地毯。

不过，当米特福德小姐跟着男管家，弗勒希跟在米特福德小姐身后小步走着时，鼻中所闻比眼前所见更令他吃惊。从楼梯的通风井飘来阵阵温暖的香气，来自烹制的烤肉、浇在禽肉上的卤汁和文火炖的汤——对鼻孔而言，要是闻惯了克伦哈波克每餐给的少得可怜的炸薯条和肉末土豆散发出的乏善可陈的味道，这些香味几乎和食物本身一样令人沉醉。和食物香气掺杂在一起的，还有很多其他的味道——杉木、檀香木和桃花心木的味道，男人与女人身体的气息，男仆和女仆的气息，外套和长裤的味道，硬布裙和斗篷的味道，织锦窗帘的味道，丝绒窗帘的味道，煤渣和雾的味道，红酒和雪茄的味道。他经过的每一个房间——餐厅、起居室、图书室、卧室——都飘出自己特有的味道，它们交织在一起，混合成屋内的总体气味。要是他先踏出一只脚爪，再迈出另一只，脚掌便会陷入柔软厚重的地毯中，因其充满柔情蜜意的爱抚而难以抬起。最后，他们来到房子尽头一扇关闭的门前，轻叩一下，门就轻轻开了。

巴雷特小姐的卧房想必一片幽暗——一如往常，正像各方记载的那样。绿色锦缎窗帘本就会将光线遮去不少，而到了夏天，窗台花盆中的常春藤、红花菜豆、田旋花和旱金莲还纷纷冒出，让光线更加昏暗。一开始，在这片暗淡的绿色阴翳中，弗勒希只看见五个白色球体

在半空中神秘莫测地闪烁，其余便什么都辨认不出了。这次，又是屋内的气味率先震慑住了他。想象一位学者一步步踱下台阶，进入一座陵墓，发现自己身处地下墓穴之中，里面覆满霉菌、泥土黏滑，充斥着腐朽—久远的酸臭味，而他只能借着手中那盏摇晃不停的小灯发出的光芒，模糊地看见几座半毁的大理石半身像在半空中闪闪发光，就这么深一脚浅一脚地来回转变着方向，瞥一眼这里，瞧一眼那里—只有这样一位探险家在古城废墟之下踏入墓穴时的种种心境，方可与弗勒希在温波尔街初次踏入病患卧室，并被古龙水的味道拨乱了每根神经时那种混乱的情感相提并论。

弗勒希非常缓慢而轻悄地用鼻子不断嗅闻，用脚爪不停抓刨，逐渐分辨出几件家具的轮廓。窗旁的庞然大物或许是个衣橱，旁边那个想来必是斗柜。房间中央逐步显形的像是一张镶了边的桌子，接着，扶手椅和书桌模糊而怪异的形状也慢慢显露。但是每样东西都经过乔装打扮。衣橱顶部立着三尊白色半身像；斗柜上高高竖起一个书架，书架又盖着猩红色的美利奴羊毛织物；盥洗台上装了一圈冠状的搁架，搁架上又立着另外两尊半身像。房间内没有一件东西保持原貌，每样东西同时又是另一样东西，就连遮光帘也不是普通薄纱制成的，而采用了精心设计的彩绘织物 [1]，上面画着城堡、城门、树林，还有几个正在散步的农人。梳妆镜的反射把所有物体照得更加扭曲，以至于屋内仿佛有十尊诗人的半身像而不是五尊，有四张桌子而不是两张。冷不丁，弗勒希生出一种更可怕的困惑。透过墙上的洞，他猛地瞥见了另一条狗，双目炯炯闪烁，吐着舌头，正盯着自己看！他目瞪口呆地僵在那里，随后满怀敬畏地走向前。

弗勒希就这样一会儿进一会儿退，几乎没听到低声细语、喋喋不休的说话声，只当是远方的风呼呼地拂过树梢。他谨小慎微、如履薄冰地继续勘查，就如探险家在森林中前进时，将步伐轻抬轻放，不确定阴影处是否藏着一头狮子，或某段树根是不是条眼镜蛇。然而最后，他意识到有几个庞然大物在自己头顶上喧哗，由于先前那一小时已经被弄得神经衰弱，他颤抖着躲到一扇屏风后。说话声停止了。一扇门关上了。一时间，他愣住了，既困惑又紧张。随后，记忆仿若张牙舞爪的老虎朝他扑将过来。他觉得自己孤立寡与—被遗弃了。他冲到门边，门是关着的。他抓挠着，倾听着。他听见正在下楼的脚步声。他听得出，那是女主人熟悉的脚步。脚步声戛然而止。—慢—声音再度响起，继续下楼而去。米特福德小姐正缓慢地拖着沉重的步伐，不情不愿地走下楼。她离开了，他听见她的脚步声渐行渐远，他被恐慌攫住了。随着米特福德小姐一步一步走下台阶，一扇又一扇门在他面前关上，随之一起远去的还有自由、田野、野兔、草地，以及他热爱、尊敬的女主人—那为他洗澡，打他，即便自己食不果腹却仍与他分享盘中食物的可亲可爱的老妇人—同样关闭的还有他所知晓的

一切快乐、爱与人类的善意！不好！前门也砰的一声合上了！他孤零零的。她把他抛弃了。

接着，绝望与痛苦之浪将他淹没，不可挽回、冷酷无情的命运将他击倒，他仰首长啸。一个声音唤道：“弗勒希。”他没有听见。那声音又唤了一遍：“弗勒希。”他大吃一惊。他原以为自己遗世独立。他转过身。难道房间里还有什么活物跟他在一起？沙发上有东西吗？无论那是什么，他只奢望这东西能去把门打开，这样他还有可能冲出去追上米特福德小姐，然后发现一切不过是一场捉迷藏的游戏，就像他们从前在家里的温室玩的一样——弗勒希箭步奔向沙发。

“噢，弗勒希！”巴雷特小姐喊道。生平第一次，她面对面看到他的脸；生平第一次，弗勒希看到了那位躺在沙发上的女士。

他们俩都惊诧万分。浓密的鬃发从巴雷特小姐的脸颊两侧垂荡下来，明亮的大眼睛熠熠生辉，一张大嘴带着笑意。弗勒希的两片大耳朵从脸颊两边垂下来，眼睛同样又大又亮，嘴也很宽。他们长得有些相像。他们互相注视时，心里都觉察到：这是我！——随即又想到：可我们又是多么不同！她有一张体弱多病、苍白憔悴的脸，一直以来与空气、光线和自由隔绝。他则有着动物幼崽红润温热的脸，健康——充满活力。各不相同，却又像是从一个模子里铸出来似的，他俩能否彼此唤醒对方身上蛰伏的个性，使对方更加完整呢？原来她本可以是这样；而他——噢，不！他俩之间隔着一道世间最不可逾越的物种鸿沟。她会说话，他却不能。她是个女人，他却是条狗。就这样，他们凝望着对方，如此惺惺相惜，却又如此迥然相异。然后，弗勒希纵身一跃，跳上沙发，趴到此后将永远属于他的地盘——巴雷特小姐脚边的毯子上。

第二章 后面的房间

历史学家告诉我们，一八四二年的夏天只是一个平凡的夏天，然而对弗勒希来说，这个夏天是如此不同，他想必一定怀疑过这世界是否依然如故。那是一个在卧室里度过的夏天，是和巴雷特小姐一起度过的夏天，是在文明的心脏伦敦度过的夏天。起初，他除了那间卧室和里面的家具之外，看不到任何其他东西；但仅这些就够他大开眼界了。光是识别、区分并正确称呼他在那儿见到的这些各不相同的物件，就足以令他晕头转向。还没等他习惯那些桌子、半身像和盥洗台——他依然闻不惯古龙水的味道——他们就碰上一个难得的好天气：晴朗无风，暖而不热，干爽无尘，适合一个久卧病榻的人出去透透气。这一天来了，巴雷特小姐可以安心地进行大冒险，和姐妹一起出门购物。

叫好了马车，巴雷特小姐从沙发上起身，蒙上面纱，把自己包裹严实，走下楼梯。弗勒希当然跟着她一起去了。他一跃跳进马车，来到女主人身旁。他蜷缩在她的膝头，整个伦敦最壮观的盛况蓦地呈现在他面前，令他满眼惊奇。他们驶过牛津街。他看见几乎完全用玻璃盖成的房子，看见光彩夺目的饰带在窗前交叉着系在一起，窗沿上堆满了小丘似的粉红、紫色、黄色和玫瑰色的璀璨花朵。马车停了下来。他走进充满神秘感的拱廊商场，笼罩在彩色薄纱织成的云彩和罗网之中。上百万种从中国与阿拉伯远道而来的微弱、易散的芬芳钻入他的感官深处。柜台上长而亮泽的丝绸锦缎轻快地一闪而过，厚重的邦巴辛毛葛 [22] 缓缓卷动，色泽更为深沉。剪刀咔嚓作响，钱币闪闪发光，纸张折了又折，绳带系了又系。轻轻点头的羽饰，随风飘扬的饰带，仰首抬头的马儿，身披黄色制服的仆役，一晃而过的脸孔，一切都跳跃着，上上下下地舞蹈着。弗勒希沉浸在这包罗万象的感受中，满足地打盹、入眠、做梦，渐渐不省人事，直到被抱出车厢，温波尔街的大门再次在他身后合上。

翌日，见天气依旧宜人，巴雷特小姐勇敢地尝试了一项更为大胆的冒险——坐在巴思椅 [23] 上，让人推着她去温波尔街散步。弗勒希又一次陪她出门。他头一回听见自己的爪子在伦敦坚硬的人行道铺路石上嗒嗒作响。炎炎夏日里，伦敦街道散发出的所有气味头一回对他的鼻孔展开了猛烈进攻。他闻到排水沟里令人昏厥的臭味、铁栏杆腐蚀后发出的苦味、地下室里腾起的浓烈烟熏味——这些气味比他在雷丁周

边的田野中闻到过的任何气味都要复杂、腐败，它们相互抵触、混杂陈，超越了人类嗅觉可以辨别的范畴。因此尽管巴思椅不停前进，他却停下了脚步，惊愕地识别并细细品味这些气味，直到项圈被猛地一扯，被拽着继续前行。当他跟着巴雷特小姐的巴思椅在温波尔街上散步时，川流不息的人类躯体亦令他头晕目眩。硬衬裙在他头顶颼颼摆动，长裤刷过他的侧身，车轮时而擦着它的鼻尖碾过，驶过的货车携来极具破坏性的狂风，在他耳畔咆哮，掀动他脚掌周围的长毛。于是他惊惶地俯冲。幸运的是，项圈上的铁链拉住了他，巴雷特小姐把他紧紧抱在怀里，否则他说不定就冲出去出事了。

终于，带着每一根怦怦跳动的神经、每一种嗡嗡作响的感官，弗勒希总算来到了摄政公园。当他再次见到似乎阔别了多年的绿草、繁花和树林，昔日田野里狩猎的号角就响彻耳际，他立刻向前冲去，渴望像当年在家乡的田野里那般驰骋。然而，此刻却有某种沉重的力量卡在他颈部，使他向后踉跄跌倒。那儿难道不是树林和草丛吗？他问道。这些难道不是自由的信号吗？每次米特福德小姐出门散步时，他不都是径直向前冲吗？为什么在这里他却成了囚徒呢？他停下了脚步。在这儿，他观察到，团簇的花朵比老家的那些紧密得多，它们一株株整齐而僵硬地排列在窄小的地里，中间隔着一条条坚实的黑色步道。男士们头戴泛着光泽的高筒礼帽，脸色阴沉地在步道上来回走动。见到他们，他颤抖地靠近巴思椅，欣然接受了链条的庇护。于是，在对类似的散步习以为常之前，他脑中已经生成了一个全新的概念。通过拼凑各种现象，他得出一个结论：有花床的地方，就会有沥青步道；有花床和沥青步道的地方，就会有戴泛着光泽的高筒礼帽的男士们；有花床、沥青步道及戴泛着光泽的高筒礼帽的男士们的地方，狗就得用链条牵着。尽管公园大门告示上写的字他一个也不认识，却已无师自通地学会了一课——在摄政公园里，狗都必须用链条牵着。

从一八四二年夏天的种种奇妙体验中获得的核心知识，很快让他又新长了见识：犬类并不平等，而——是互不相同的。以前在三英里十字标，弗勒希不分轩輊地与小酒馆里的狗及乡绅的灵缇厮混，并不知道补锅匠的狗和自己有什么区别。而他孩子的母亲，虽美其名曰西班牙猎犬，也很可能只是条杂种狗，不是耳朵有所偏差，就是尾巴美中不足。然而，弗勒希很快便发现，伦敦的犬类严格地按照等级划分：有的狗拴了链条，有些则整天乱跑；有些坐马车出门透气，用紫色罐子喝水，有些却蓬头垢面、不戴项圈，在排水沟中苟——偷生。由此，弗勒希开始怀疑，或许狗也分三六九等，有些是高等的，另一些是低等的。偶尔，他会捕捉到人们对温波尔街上的狗评头论足的只言片语，由此证实了自己的猜测：“看见那条无赖没，绝对是杂种狗！……哎呀老天爷，这条西班牙猎犬真漂亮，绝对是英国血统最纯

正的之一！……可惜啊，他的耳朵要是能再卷一点儿就好了……看他的头顶还有顶髻！”

从男仆们站在邮筒旁或酒馆外交换赛马情报时说出的此类话语，还有他们或赞美或奚落的语调中，弗勒希在夏天结束前就明白了犬类之间也没有什么平等可言：有些狗尊贵，有些狗低贱。那么，他属于哪一类呢？弗勒希一回到家，就迫不及待地对着镜子仔细地审视起自己来。谢天谢地，他天生是条血统尊贵的狗！他的头部顺滑，眼睛凸出却不鼓起，脚周围覆盖着长毛，可以媲美温波尔街上血统最纯正的可卡猎犬。他满意地注意到自己喝水用的是紫色的水罐——那是他这个阶层的特权。他默默地低下脑袋，让链条扣住他的项圈——这是这一阶层必须付出的代价。差不多就在这时，巴雷特小姐注意到他瞪着镜子发愣，却做出了错误的判断。他是个哲学家，她思忖着，他准是在思索表象和现实之间的差别。事实正好相反，他其实是个贵族，正孤芳自赏呢！

可是夏日的好天气稍纵即逝。秋风渐起，巴雷特小姐又在自己的卧房安营扎寨，彻底过起了与世隔绝的生活。弗勒希的生活也同样发生了改变。在户外接受了一番教育之后，他如今又得在室内接受教育，而后者对弗勒希这种脾性的狗而言，无疑是史无前例的酷刑了。他唯有在巴雷特小姐的女仆威尔逊的陪伴下才能出门透气，出门时间往往又极短，马虎了事。其余时间他只能待在沙发上，蜷缩在巴雷特小姐脚边。这完全阻碍了他的本能，与他的天性背道而驰。去年，当伯克郡刮起阵阵秋风时，他还能在野地里奔跑，在收割后留下的麦茬堆间欢快地蹦跳；如今，当常春藤轻轻叩响窗玻璃时，巴雷特小姐就吩咐威尔逊去检查窗户有没有关紧。看到窗台花盆里栽种的红花菜豆和旱金莲的叶子渐渐变黄枯败，她把身上的印度披肩裹得更严实了。当十月的雨猛烈地敲打窗户，威尔逊便燃起壁炉，将煤炭堆得高高的。秋意渐浓，随后入冬，第一场雾染黄了空气。威尔逊和弗勒希甚至没法摸索着走到邮筒或药剂师那儿去。他们折回家后，发现房里一片昏暗，什么都看不清，只有那几尊惨白的半身像在衣橱上反射着黯淡的光。遮光帘上的农人和城堡都消失不见了，窗户玻璃上只能映出一片平淡无奇的黄色。弗勒希觉得自己和巴雷特小姐就像单独住在一个铺满垫褥、燃着炉火的洞穴里。屋外的车马络绎不绝，发出低沉模糊的回响；时不时会有嘶哑的叫声从下方的街道传来，“修旧椅子旧篮子喽”；有时又会传来阵阵管风琴的乐声，声音先是越来越近、越来越响，再一路远去、逐渐消失。但这些声音中没有一种意味着自由、行动或运动。无论是风雨交加的日子，还是富有自然气息的秋日，抑或是寒气逼人的隆冬，如今在弗勒希看来都同样毫无意义，他眼中只剩下温暖和静止，台灯的柔光，以及拉窗帘和拨捣炉火的动作。

然而，有时那纽带却几近断裂；他俩之间存在着理解上的鸿沟。有时他们会躺着互相凝视，脸上都写满了困惑。为什么，巴雷特小姐纳闷着，弗勒希会突然颤抖，发出呜咽的声音，猛地惊起并竖着耳朵听着什么。她什么也听不见，什么也看不到，房间里除了他俩别无他人。她完全猜不到原来是她姐妹养的查理王小猎犬福利刚从门外经过，或是某位仆役刚在地下室赏给那只古巴寻血犬卡蒂利内一根羊骨头。可是弗勒希对此一清二楚，他全都听见了，欲望与贪婪交替起伏，令他躁动难安。然而巴雷特小姐即使凭借诗人的卓越想象力，也无法猜透威尔逊那湿漉漉的雨伞对弗勒希而言意味着什么，不知道这会触发他怎样的回忆——他忆起森林和鸚鵡，还有哞哞叫着的野象；她也不可能知道，当凯尼恩先生被拉铃绳绊了个踉跄时，弗勒希听到的是黝黑的人影在山中咒骂，耳边萦绕的是一声声“Span！Span！”，在一阵含糊不清、融于血脉的狂怒中，他咬了这位先生。

同样的，弗勒希也琢磨不透巴雷特小姐的情绪。她竟可以手里拿着一根黑色的棍子，在一张白纸上来回划动，这么一躺就是好几个小时。她的眼睛里会突然盈满泪水，可这是为什么呢？“噢，我亲爱的霍恩先生，”她写道，“随后我的健康状况江河日下……接下来就被迫去托基 [24] 放逐自己了……那成了我终生的噩梦，它从我的生命中夺

走了太多，我在信中无法尽述；请您在任何情况下都不要提起。千万不要提及，亲爱的霍恩先生。”可房间里并没有什么声音或气味能惹哭巴雷特小姐啊。还有一次，巴雷特小姐依然挥舞着那根黑色棍子，却突然爆发出一阵笑声。她刚画好一张“简洁传神的弗勒希画像，滑稽得与我相像”。她在图下写道，可惜他“不完全是我的替身，因为他比我有用得更多”。她向弗勒希展示的那团黑色污迹有什么好笑的呢？他什么都闻不到，什么都听不见，屋子里除了他俩，并无他人。事实是他俩无法用言语交流，而这无疑引发了诸多误会。然而，这难道不也构成了他们之间一种特殊的亲密吗？“写作，”一次巴雷特小姐在一上午的艰辛创作后慨叹道，“写作，写作……”或许她确曾怀疑过：文字是否真的可以道尽一切？文字是否真能表达什么？文字难道不会摧毁那些超越文字的象征意义吗？至少有那么一次，巴雷特小姐似乎真这么认为。她当时正躺着，陷入沉思，完全忘了弗勒希的存在，心中的思绪是如此哀伤，以至于泪水滴落枕上。忽然间，有个毛茸茸的脑袋压在了她身上：大而明亮的双眼在她眼前闪烁。她一惊，那是弗勒希吗，还是牧羊的潘神？难道她不再是一个住在温波尔街上的病人，而成了阿卡狄亚 [25] 某片阴暗幽深树林中的希腊仙子？亲吻她嘴唇的，是那位蓄满虬髯的山神吗？在那一瞬间，她化身为林中仙子，弗勒希则变成了潘。太阳在燃烧，爱迸发出光芒。但假使弗勒希真能开口说话——他难道不是早该对爱尔兰的马铃薯病害发表一番真知灼见吗？

然而，他真的能像她一样书写吗？——值得高兴的是，这个问题完全是多余的，因为在不争的事实面前，我们必须承认，一八四二至一八四三年间的巴雷特小姐并非什么林中仙子，而是一个卧床不起的病人；弗勒希也绝非什么诗人，只是一条红色的可卡犬；而温波尔街也不是阿卡狄亚，只是温波尔街而已。

就这样，悠长的时光在宅邸后部的那间卧房里悄然而逝，没留下任何踪影，只有上下楼梯的脚步声、从远处传来前门关闭的声响、扫帚轻敲地板的嗒嗒声和邮差的敲门声反映着光阴的流逝。卧房内，煤炭烧得噼啪作响，光影滑过五尊惨白的半身像的眉头，滑过书架以及盖在书架上的红色美利奴羊毛织布。不过有时，上下楼梯的脚步声不

是经过门口，而是停在门外。眼见门把手转动，门居然打开了，有人进了房间。多神奇啊，家具竟然改头换面！声音和气味形成的奇妙漩涡立即开始旋转！它们卷过桌脚，又撞上衣橱尖锐的边缘！来人或许是威尔逊，端来一盘食物或一杯药；也有可能是巴雷特小姐的两位姐妹之一——阿拉贝尔或亨丽埃塔；也有可能是巴雷特小姐七位兄弟中的一个——查尔斯、塞缪尔、乔治、亨利、艾尔弗雷德、塞普蒂默斯或奥克塔维厄斯。而——每周都有那么一两次，弗勒希会预感有什么重要的事情即将发生。床会被仔细地改装成沙发的模样，扶手椅会被拉到床边，巴雷特小姐自己则会得体地披上印度披肩。有人会把盥洗用具全都藏到乔叟和荷马的半身像底下，弗勒希也会由人梳洗一番。大约到了下午两三点，门外会传来特定、清晰却不尽相同的敲门声。巴雷特小姐会突然涨红了脸，微笑着伸出手。接着有人便会走进来——来人或许是亲爱的米特福德小姐，她面色红润、精神抖擞、喋喋不休，怀里还会抱着一把天竺葵。或许是凯尼恩先生，他是一位身形敦实、衣着考究、善良可亲的绅士，总会随身带一本书来。也可能是詹姆森太太，她的相貌特征和凯尼恩先生正好相反——她的“面容极其苍白——有着清澈的浅色眼眸，薄薄的双唇毫无血色……窄窄的鼻子和下巴向外凸出”。每位访客的举止、气味、声调和口音都各具特色：米特福德小姐喜欢喋喋不休地唠叨，态度虽欠稳重，却实实在在；凯尼恩先生彬彬有礼，富有教养，由于缺了两颗门牙而有些口齿不清 [2]；詹姆森太太一颗牙都不少，她的动作就和她说话的方式一样干脆利落。

弗勒希蜷缩在巴雷特小姐脚边，任由各种各样的声音在他头上轻轻飘荡，就这样过了一小时又一小时。巴雷特小姐笑着、告诫着、惊叫着、叹息着，随即又笑了。终于，弗勒希如释重负地意识到，他终于得到了片刻的安宁——就连米特福德小姐也有住口的时候。难道已经晚上七点了吗？她从中午起就一直待在这儿了！她得赶快起身去赶火车。凯尼恩先生合上他的书——他一直在大声朗读——背对着炉火站起身来。詹姆森太太以一种迅速而生硬的动作，把每根手指塞进手套，一拉到底。接着，他们或是轻轻拍拍弗勒希，或是扯扯他的耳朵。道别仪式总是冗长得令人难以忍受，但最终，詹姆森太太、凯尼恩先生，甚至连米特福德小姐都站起身来，道别告辞。他们时而会想起什么，又忘记什么，再找到什么，最后走到门边，打开门——谢天谢地——终于走了。

巴雷特小姐脸色苍白，满脸倦容地陷进枕头堆里。弗勒希爬到她身旁，紧贴着她。感谢上帝，他们俩又能独处了。但访客们停留的时间太长了，已经到了晚餐时间。地下室开始升腾起食物的香味。威尔逊端着巴雷特小姐的晚餐盘来到门口，把餐盘放在主人身旁的桌上，掀起盖子。然而经过更衣、谈话等一番折腾，再加上室内的高温以及道别引发的种种骚乱，巴雷特小姐已经累得没有力气进食了。看见盘

中为她准备的晚餐，肥羊排、山鹑翅（或是鸡翅），她只能发出一声轻叹。当着威尔逊的面，她会用刀叉胡乱地戳弄几下。可门一旦关上，只剩下他俩，她就立刻做了个手势。她举起叉子，上面叉着一整个鸡翅膀。弗勒希跑向前。巴雷特小姐点点头。弗勒希动作温和、小心翼翼地将鸡翅扯下来，不让一点儿残渣掉到地上，然后整个吞进肚中，不留半点儿痕迹。另有半个沾满浓郁奶油的米布丁也以同样的方式消失得无影无踪。没有什么能比弗勒希的配合更干净利落。他一如既往地趴在巴雷特小姐的脚边，显然睡着了；恢复了精神的巴雷特小姐躺着休息，看上去刚吃完一顿丰盛的晚餐。楼梯上再次传来一阵脚步声，比其他脚步声都要沉重、从容、坚定，在楼梯口戛然而止。庄重的敲门声响起，听起来不像是在请求获准进入，而是在要求里面的人开门。门打开了，一个最阴郁、最威严的年长男士走了进来——正是巴雷特先生本人。他的目光立刻扫过餐盘。食物都吃光了吗？她服从他的命令了吗？是的，盘子空了。巴雷特先生重重地坐进女儿身旁的那把椅子，仿佛在肯定她的顺从。当那幽暗的躯体靠近弗勒希时，阵阵惊惧令他瑟瑟发抖、脊背发凉，就像野蛮人在雷声的怒吼中听见上帝的声音时，立刻颤抖着躲进花丛中。随后威尔逊吹了声口哨，弗勒希满怀愧疚地偷溜了出去，蹑手蹑脚地爬出房间，冲下楼梯，仿佛巴雷特先生能看穿他的心思，而这些心思又十恶不赦。一股令他畏惧的力量潜入了卧房，他无力与之抗衡。有一次他意外闯回房里，只见巴雷特先生双膝跪地，在女儿身边祈祷。

[22] 邦巴辛毛葛（bombazine），丝、棉纱和毛等织成的斜纹布，通常染黑用作悼念服装。

[23] 巴思椅（bath-chair），一种轮椅，供病人或伤残人士使用，有的带有篷盖或玻璃罩。

[24] 托基（Torquay），英国英格兰西南部德文郡的一个海滨城镇，气候温暖。

[25] 阿卡狄亚（Arcady），古希腊地名，在今伯罗奔尼撒半岛中部，以其居民过着田园牧歌式淳朴生活著称，引申为“世外桃源”。

第三章 蒙面人

在温波尔街宅邸深处的卧房里接受的这种教育，会对一条普通的狗产生深远影响。但弗勒希可不是什么普通的狗。他虽说精力充沛，却也喜欢沉思；他虽属于犬科，却对人类情绪极度敏感。对于这样一条狗，这间卧房内的氛围带来的影响非比寻常。所以，如果说他在变得敏感细腻的同时，弱化了自身一些更为严峻的品质，我们也不能怪罪于他。自然地，整日将希腊辞典枕于头下，他注定会变得不喜欢吠叫和咬人；他逐渐偏爱猫的安静，而不是狗的鲁莽好动。而与这两者相比，他又更偏好人情味儿。巴雷特小姐也竭尽全力来提高并培养他这方面的能力，让他精益求精。有一次，她从窗上取下一架竖琴，放在他身旁，问他是否觉得这架可以制造音乐的竖琴本身具有生命力。弗勒希经过一番凝视和聆听，似乎沉思和迟疑了片刻，最终认定答案为否。接着，她又会领着他一起站在镜子前，问他为什么会吠叫和颤抖。面朝他站着的那只小棕狗，不正是他自己吗？但什么才是“自己”呢？是人们看见的外表吗？还是他内心的本质呢？弗勒希同样琢磨起这个问题，却感到现实世界是如此复杂难懂，只好把身子贴近巴雷特小姐，热烈地亲吻她，内心的感情溢于言表——无论如何，至少这是真实的。

他此前从没思考过这些问题，情感上的困境刺激着他的神经。带着这样的情绪，他走下楼梯。因此如果他的行为举止中带有某种高傲和优越感，惹得那只凶恶的古巴寻血犬卡蒂利内怒从中来，扑上去狠狠咬了自己，那也不足为奇，而他只能哀号着奔上楼，向巴雷特小姐寻求安慰。弗勒希“不是什么英雄”，她总结道。但他为什么不是个英雄呢？难道她不应该对此承担部分责任吗？她为人率直公正，不会意识不到他是为了她才牺牲了自己的勇气，正如他早已为她牺牲了阳光与空气。诚然，这种神经质的敏感也有其缺点——当他扑到被拉铃绳绊倒的凯尼恩先生身上啃咬时，她感到满心歉疚；他整晚可怜的呜咽也令人讨厌，就因为他非要主人来喂，否则不肯进食，因此被罚不准到她床上去睡。然而她愿意承担过错，不嫌麻烦，因为弗勒希终究是爱她的。为了她，他拒绝了空气和阳光。“他值得被爱，不是吗？”她这样问霍恩先生。不论霍恩先生可能给出怎样的回答，巴雷特小姐都对自己的答案确信无疑。她爱弗勒希，弗勒希也值得她爱。

似乎没有任何东西能够摧毁他们之间的纽带——岁月仿佛只是把它

打磨得更为坚固、强韧，他们仿佛一生都将如此度过。从一八四二年到一八四三年，一八四三年又到了一八四四年，一八四四年又到了一八四五年。弗勒希已经不再是一条幼犬了，而是一条四五岁的成年犬，处于生命中的巅峰。而巴雷特小姐依旧躺在温波尔街的沙发上，弗勒希也依旧趴在她的脚边。巴雷特小姐过的是“笼中鸟”的生活。她有时会连续数周闭门不出，就算出门，每次顶多一两个小时，通常是乘马车去某家店铺，或是坐在轮椅上由人推去摄政公园。巴雷特一家从不离开伦敦城。巴雷特先生，他家的七兄弟、两姐妹，男管家，威尔逊及女仆们，卡蒂利内、福利，巴雷特小姐还有弗勒希，一直都生活在温波尔街五十号：在餐厅里用餐，在卧室里睡觉，在书房里抽烟，在厨房里烹饪，提热水壶，倒馊水桶——从一月到十二月，从不间断。椅罩稍微变得脏了些，地毯稍微变得旧了些，煤灰、泥巴、油烟、雾气，雪茄、红酒和肉的气味全都积聚在缝隙里、裂口中、布料表面、画框上，以及雕刻物件的旋涡纹饰里。巴雷特小姐卧室窗外的常春藤枝繁叶茂，长成的绿色帷帘也越积越厚。到了夏天，旱金莲和红花菜豆则在窗台上的花盆里竞相疯长。

不过，一八四五年一月初的一天夜里，邮差敲响了大门。信件如往常一样投进了信箱，威尔逊如往常一样下楼去取信。一切都如往常一样——其实邮差每天晚上都会来敲门，威尔逊每天晚上都会去取信，巴雷特小姐每天晚上都会收到一封信。可是今晚送来的信却不太一样，它十分不同寻常。还没等信封拆开，弗勒希就意识到了这点。他从巴雷特小姐取信的模样中看出了端倪，她把信转过来，盯着写下她名字的那刚健有力、龙飞凤舞的字迹。他从她手指难以描述的战栗中，从她撕开信封的迫不及待中，从她读信时聚精会神的表情中，看出了这封信与众不同。他注视着读信。在她读信时，他听见一个铃声，就像我们常在半睡半醒时从街上传来的喧闹声中辨认出某种为我们而响起的铃声。那声音虽然微弱却充满警惕，仿佛远方有人试图唤醒我们，警告我们发生了火灾或盗窃，或是某种将威胁到我们平静生活的灾难，让我们尚未醒来就感到警觉——同样的，在巴雷特小姐阅读那张沾了墨汁的小纸条时，一声警铃也传到了弗勒希的耳朵里，把他从睡梦中唤醒，警告他某种危险即将降临，他的安全将受到威胁，所以他不能入睡了。巴雷特小姐快速地读完那封信，又慢慢地再读了一遍，然后小心翼翼地吧信装回信封。她也一样不能入睡了。

几个夜晚之后，一封类似的信又赫然出现在威尔逊的托盘上。巴雷特小姐又一次快速读完了内容，再慢慢地看，看了一遍又一遍。接着她把信小心翼翼地收起来，没有和米特福德小姐长篇大论的信件一起收在抽屉里，而是单独收好。弗勒希长年累月地趴在巴雷特小姐脚旁的垫子上，他付出了昂贵的代价，才培养出这般敏锐的眼光，能洞悉别人察觉不到的蛛丝马迹。透过巴雷特小姐手指的抚触，他可以察

觉到，她现在只等待着一样东西——等邮差敲门，等托盘上出现那封信。起初，她会以规律的节奏轻轻地抚摸他；忽然——敲门声一响——她的手指就会猛地缩紧，把他牢牢钳住，直到威尔逊上楼。然后，她会取过信，把他松开，也彻底把他抛到脑后。

可是，他辩解道，只要巴雷特小姐的生活没有发生任何改变，这有什么可害怕的？确实没有任何改变。没有新的访客出现，凯尼恩先生照常来访，米特福德小姐照常来访，兄弟姐妹们照常出现；傍晚时分巴雷特先生也照常前来。他们什么都没有注意到，也毫不起疑。因此，当那封信连续几晚都没有出现，他便安慰自己，试着去相信敌人已经消失了。他想象那是个罩着长袍的男子，是个穿着斗篷、戴着兜帽的人，如窃贼那样一闪而过，经过时把门弄得咔嗒响，却发现此地禁卫森严，只好灰溜溜地悄悄走掉。弗勒希努力让自己相信危险已经解除，那名男子已经消失不见。结果那封信却再次出现。

随着信封出现得愈加频繁，甚至每晚都有，弗勒希才注意到巴雷特小姐身上有了细微的变化。弗勒希头一回见她如此坐立难安、心浮气躁。她读不进书也写不出东西。她站在窗边向外凝视。她焦虑地询问威尔逊天气如何——外面仍刮着东风吗？公园里是否有开春的迹象？噢，没呢，威尔逊回答，残酷的东风仍在肆虐。弗勒希感到，巴雷特小姐听了既如释重负又深感烦恼。她不停咳嗽，抱怨身体不适——但显然远不像往年刮东风时那么难受。待四下无人，她会把前一夜收到的信重读一遍。这是目前为止最长的一封，页数很多，排列紧凑，墨迹密密麻麻，零零散散地画了些细小突兀的象形文字。弗勒希从她脚边的位置能看到的只有这些，可他完全听不懂巴雷特小姐在轻声自语些什么，只感觉她读到最后一行并大声念出时（尽管他听不懂）——“您看两三个月后我能否与您相见？”——激动万分。

随后她提起笔，迅速又紧张地写了一页又一页。但巴雷特小姐写下的那些小小字符究竟意味着什么呢？“四月将至。倘若我们活得够久，其间还有五月和六月，或许，无论如何，我们可以……待暖和的天气让我恢复一丝生气，我愿意与您相见……但刚开始我会害怕您——尽管我在写下这些话时并不感到害怕。您是帕拉塞尔苏斯 [26]，我则是一名隐居者，我的神经早已在肢刑架上绷断了，如今只是软绵绵地悬挂着，只要听到一点儿脚步声、一下呼吸声，便会心悸颤抖。”

弗勒希看不懂她在他头顶上方一两英寸的地方写的什么，却像能读懂每个字的含义一般清楚地知道女主人挥笔时的烦躁是多么反常，也知道矛盾的欲望如何摄住了她的思绪——四月也许会来，也许不会来了；她也许可以立刻见到这个陌生的男人，也有可能永远也见不到他。弗勒希也和她一样，因一丁点儿脚步声和呼吸声而心悸颤抖着。日子冷酷无情地一天天过去。风卷起了遮光帘，阳光染白了半身像，

一只鸟儿在笼子里歌唱，有人沿着温波尔街叫卖鲜花。他心里清楚，所有这些声音都意味着四月即将到来，接着五月、六月也会来到——没有任何东西能够阻止那可怕的春天逐步逼近。到底有什么会随着春天一起到来呢？是某种骇人听闻的东西——某种恐怖——某种巴雷特小姐畏惧、弗勒希也同样畏惧的东西。现在他一听见脚步声便悚然惊起，然而那不过是亨丽埃塔。又传来了敲门声，但那只是凯尼恩先生。就这样，四月过去了，五月也过去了二十天。然后，就在五月二十一日那天，弗勒希知道那一天终于来临了。因为在五月二十一日这个星期二，巴雷特小姐对着镜子把自己上上下下打量个遍，仔仔细细地裹好印度披肩，吩咐威尔逊把扶手椅拉近一些，但不要太过近。她碰碰这个，又碰碰那个，然后便直挺挺地坐靠在枕头堆里。弗勒希全身紧绷地趴在她脚边。他们单独待在房间里，一起等待着。终于，马里波恩教堂的钟敲了两下；他们继续等待着。接着马里波恩教堂的钟又单独敲了一下——两点半到了一钟声慢慢停歇时，前门响起一声大胆的叩击声。巴雷特小姐顿时血色全无，纹丝不动地躺着。弗勒希也静静趴着。那可怕的、不可阻挡的脚步声上楼了。弗勒希知道，上来的正是那邪恶的午夜暗影——那个戴着兜帽的蒙面人。此刻，他的手正放在门上，门把转动，他就站在门口。

“勃朗宁先生到。”威尔逊通报。

弗勒希盯着巴雷特小姐，只见她突然两颊绯红，双目放光，红唇轻启。

“勃朗宁先生！”她叫道。

勃朗宁先生手里攥着自己的黄手套 [3]，眨着眼睛，穿着神气而体面，贸然迈开大步穿过房间。他握住巴雷特小姐的手，往摆在她沙发旁的那张椅子上坐。两人立刻交谈起来。

令弗勒希难以承受的是，他们谈话时，他深感孤独。曾经，他觉得自己仿佛和巴雷特小姐厮守在一个生了火的洞穴里。如今火已熄灭，洞穴里又黑又潮，而巴雷特小姐已置身洞外。他环顾四周，发觉一切都面目全非。书架、五尊半身像——它们不再是慈眉善目的神祇，满意地高坐其上——变得既陌生又严肃。他在巴雷特小姐的脚旁不停变换姿势，她却浑然不察。他哀哼着，两人却不闻不问。最后，他只好静静地趴着，全身紧绷，默默忍受痛苦。谈话还在继续，但不似其他谈话那般徐徐流动、涟漪荡漾。这谈话横冲直跃、激流猛进，时而戛然而止，时而又跳跃起来。弗勒希之前从没听过巴雷特小姐用那样的语调说话——如此富有活力、激情四射。他从未见过她的脸颊像此刻这般红润发亮，从未见过她的那双大眼睛像此刻这般熠熠生辉。钟响四声，他们两人仍讲个不停。接着四点半的钟声也响了，勃朗宁倏地跳了起来。他的每个动作都昭示着某种令人反感的魄力和令人不快的冒

失。一眨眼的工夫，他就把巴雷特小姐的手紧紧握在自己的手里，再拿上自己的帽子和手套，道了再会。他们听见他跑下楼梯的声音。门砰的一声在他身后关上。他就这么消失了。

但巴雷特小姐并没有倒靠在枕头堆里，像凯尼恩先生或米特福德小姐离开后那般萎靡。她依然笔直坐着，双眼依旧炽热，双颊也依旧光彩照人，似乎觉得勃朗宁先生还在身边。弗勒希碰了碰她，她吓了一跳，这才想起他来。她愉快地在他脑袋上轻轻拍了拍，随后面带微笑，用无比怪异的表情看着他——似乎希望他能开口说话——像是指望他也能感同身受。紧接着她又自嘲地笑了，仿佛觉得这个想法实在荒谬——弗勒希，可怜的弗勒希不可能体会她的心情。他也无法参透她所知道的一切。从未有过如此遥远而令人伤感的距离将他们隔开。他趴在那儿，遭人忽视，感觉自己根本就不存在似的。巴雷特小姐不再记得他的存在。

当天晚上，她连鸡骨头都啃得一干二净，连一丁点儿土豆残渣或鸡皮都没有扔给弗勒希。当巴雷特先生像往常一样进来探视时，他的迟钝令弗勒希感到不可思议。他坐在那个男人之前坐过的椅子上，头靠在那个男人靠过的靠垫上，却什么也没察觉。“难道你不知道，”弗勒希惊诧地想，“刚才谁坐在这把椅子上？难道你闻不出来吗？”对弗勒希而言，整个房间仍充斥着勃朗宁先生的气味。这气味从书架旁扫过，围绕着五尊苍白的半身像旋转，掀起一阵旋涡。可这位笨重的男士却坐在女儿身旁，完全沉浸在自己的世界里，对外界浑然不觉，不疑有他。弗勒希惊骇于他的迟钝，偷偷从他身旁溜出了房外。

尽管巴雷特小姐家人的后知后觉令人瞠目结舌，但随着时间一周周过去，他们也渐渐注意到巴雷特小姐身上的变化。她会走出自己的房间，到楼下客厅里坐坐。接着她还做了一件长久不曾做过的事——她竟然靠自己的双腿，和姐妹一起徒步走到了德文郡广场的大门口！她的朋友和家人无不为她的好转惊叹。但唯有弗勒希清楚她的力量源自何方——它来自那位坐在扶手椅里的黝黑男子。他来了一次又一次。起先每周只来访一次，接着是一周两次。他总是下午来下午走。巴雷特小姐总是单独约见他。即使有些日子他本人不现身，他的信也不会缺席。而他人离开之后，他送的花依然留在这儿。每天早晨只身一人时，巴雷特小姐就会给他写信。那个黝黑、整洁、鲁莽又精力充沛的男子，还有他的一头黑发，他红润的面庞，和那双黄手套，简直无处不在。如此一来，巴雷特小姐的身体自然会有起色，她当然可以开始走动了。连弗勒希都觉得自己已经不可能一动不动地趴着了。昔日的渴望再次被激发出来，他陷入了一种新的躁动，甚至入睡后沉浸于种种梦乡。自从离开三英里十字标后，他从未如此梦频——他梦见从高高的草丛里蹿出的野兔，尖叫着跃出的长尾野鸡，还有呼啸一声从麦茬堆中冲出的山鹑。他梦见自己在狩猎，正追着某只身上有斑点的西班牙

牙猎犬，可后者奔跑着逃脱了他的追捕。他一会儿在西班牙，一会儿在威尔士，一会儿在伯克郡，一会儿在手持警棍的摄政公园管理员面前狂奔。然后他睁开眼睛。眼前没有野兔，没有山鹑，没有啪啪作响的皮鞭，也没有高喊“Span！Span！”的黝黑男人，只有坐在扶手椅上的勃朗宁先生，正与躺在沙发上的巴雷特小姐聊天。

那个男人在的时候，睡觉是根本不可能的。弗勒希睁大眼睛趴着，聚精会神地倾听。这些轻言细语总是两点半到四点半之间在他的头顶碰撞交锋，有时甚至一周三次。尽管他对词意一无所知，但他凭借惊人的直觉准确地察觉到，那谈话的语气及声调在不断变化。刚开始，巴雷特小姐的声音显得勉强——具有某种不自然的活力，现在却带着他从未感觉到的温暖和自在。而——每次那个男人来时，总会有一些新的声音掺进他们的说话声中——他们时而发出怪异的吱吱声；时而又似一对疾飞的鸟从他头顶掠过；时而又发出咕咕咯咯的声响，像两只在巢中栖息的鸟儿。然后巴雷特小姐的声音再度响起，在空中翱翔盘旋，接着勃朗宁先生爆发出一连串尖锐刺耳的笑声，再后来只剩下一句嗡嗡絮语，含糊而微弱，仿佛两个声音已融为一体。可随着夏去秋来，弗勒希不胜恐慌地又注意到一种新的声调。那个男人的声音里出现了一种新的急迫感，一种新的压力和能量，弗勒希觉得这似乎让巴雷特小姐受到了惊吓。她的声音焦躁不安、犹豫不决，仿佛在畏缩、躲藏、抗辩，奄奄一息，仿佛在哀求着喘息和暂停，仿佛充满胆怯。然后，那个男人便沉默不语。

他们几乎完全没注意到弗勒希。在勃朗宁先生看来，他跟放在巴雷特小姐脚边的一段木头相差无几。有时在经过他旁边时，勃朗宁先生会突然飞速地挠挠他的头，力气很大，却不带感情。无论那搔头的动作有何意味，弗勒希对勃朗宁先生只感到极端厌恶。看到他那副西装革履、强健紧致、肌肉结实的模样，看到他用力攥紧黄手套的样子，弗勒希就恨得咬牙切齿。噢！这让他想在他的长裤上一口咬下去！然而他却不敢。一言以蔽之，一八四五年到一八四六年间的那个冬季是弗勒希此生最煎熬的时光。

冬去春来，弗勒希看不出这段交往有结束的迹象。然而这一切宛如一条河流，虽倒映着静立的树、吃草的牛群以及归巢的乌鸦，却仍不可避免地奔往瀑布。同样的，弗勒希也明白，这些日子也终将酿成大祸。关于变化的蛛丝马迹在空中萦绕，有时他感觉大规模的迁徙即将发生。家里总有一股莫名的骚动，仿佛是一次远行的前兆，但这真的可能吗？箱盒竟真的被拿出来掸灰，甚至难得一见地被纷纷打开，但立刻又被合上了。不，显然不是全家都要搬走。巴雷特小姐的兄弟姐妹们仍照常进出。每晚，在那个男人离开后，巴雷特先生仍在同一时间进来探视。那么，到底会发生什么事呢？因为随着一八四六年的夏天渐渐收尾，弗勒希相当确定变化就要发生。他可以从那连绵不绝

的谈话声中再次分辨出不同的语调。巴雷特小姐那原本像在哀求的、害怕的声音，现在已经不再闪烁其词，而是透露着一种弗勒希从未听到过的决心与胆量。如果巴雷特先生能听到她迎接那位僭越者时的声调，她招呼他时的笑声，还有被他紧握双手时的叹息，那该多好！可惜房间里除了他俩和弗勒希之外再无旁人。对弗勒希来说，这种变化是最令人恼怒的，因为巴雷特小姐不仅对勃朗宁先生的态度变了，对所有人的态度也都变了一尤其是对他自己。现在每当他凑上前亲近，她就颇不耐烦，总是用玩笑阻断他的热情，让他感觉昔日自己表达爱意的方式竟是那般微不足道、愚蠢做作。他的虚荣心遭到重创，妒火中烧。终于，七月来了，他决定强行夺回她的宠爱，甚至驱逐这个新来的家伙。如何一箭双雕他茫然不知，如何筹谋策划他也毫无头绪。但在七月八日那一天，他突然失控，扑向了勃朗宁先生，狠狠地咬了他一口！他的牙齿终于碰到了勃朗宁先生一尘不染的长裤布料！可是裤里的腿却像钢铁一般坚硬——相较之下，凯尼恩先生的腿简直软得像黄油。勃朗宁先生大手一挥，把他推开，继续讲话。无论是他还是巴雷特小姐，似乎都认为这次攻击不值一提。弗勒希矢尽援绝、铩羽而归，气喘吁吁地趴回自己的垫子上，怒不可遏又失望至极。然而，他错估了巴雷特小姐的眼力。待勃朗宁先生离开后，她把他唤到跟前，施以前所未有的最严厉的惩罚。她先是打他的耳朵——那也没什么，说来也怪，他还挺喜欢被打耳朵的，宁愿她再多打几下。但接下来她竟用冷静、确凿的语气说她以后再也不爱他了。一箭穿心。这么多年来，他们住在一起，分享一切，现在，只因为他一时糊涂，她就不再爱他了。随后，似乎为了更完整地展示她的驱逐令，她拿起勃朗宁先生送给她的花，往花瓶里插起来。弗勒希心想：她是故意的，这是个处心积虑、充满恶意的举动，为的是让他彻头彻尾地自惭形秽！“这朵玫瑰是他送的，”她好像在说，“这朵康乃馨也是。让我插一朵红色的在黄色的旁边，再插一朵黄色的在红色的旁边，然后将这枝绿叶放在这里……”待花儿一朵朵插好后，她后退一步，凝望着那一大丛娇艳欲滴的花——仿佛那戴着黄手套的男人就站在她眼前。可即使如此，即使在她插花的时候，她还是无法完全忽视弗勒希凝视她的目光。她不能不理睬“他脸上绝望的表情”，也无法不心生同情。“最后我终于说：‘弗勒希，如果你乖乖听话，现在可以过来道歉。’结果他立刻冲过来，全身颤抖地先亲了我的一只手，再亲了另一只，然后举起爪子让我握握，同时用哀求的眼神注视着我。你若看见了，一定也会像我一样原谅他。”她这是在对勃朗宁先生描述。而他当然答道：“噢，可怜的弗勒希。难道你认为我会因为他嫉妒的监视而不爱他、不尊敬他吗？他是因为同你亲近，才不愿再轻易亲近别人了啊！”要勃朗宁先生表现出宽宏大量并非难事，然而这轻易的宽宏大量或许正是扎在弗勒希身上最尖锐的一根芒刺。

几天后又发生了一件事，再次展示了曾经亲密无间的他们俩之间

如今产生了多大的隔阂，弗勒希再也指望不上获得巴雷特小姐的怜悯了。那天下午在勃朗宁先生离开后，巴雷特小姐决定和姐妹坐车去摄政公园。她们在公园大门外下车时，四轮马车的车门夹到了弗勒希的爪子，他“可怜兮兮地叫唤”，举起爪子给巴雷特小姐看，乞求同情。若是以前，他即便不这么做，也一定会受到百般呵护。可眼下，她的眼神里满是冷漠、嘲讽和批判。她嘲笑他，认定他在装模作样：“……他一踏上草地，立马拔腿狂奔，忘得一干二净。”她这么写道。她嘲弄地评论说：“弗勒希总喜欢夸大自己的不幸——他是拜伦派的——总爱扮演受害者 [27] 。”其实，沉浸在自己情感中的巴雷特小姐完全错怪了他。就算他的爪子被压断了，他还是会拔腿狂奔，因为那是对她嘲讽态度的回应——我要与你一刀两断——这便是他往前乱冲的含义。那一瞬间，花儿闻起来是苦的，草地灼烧着他的脚底，尘土充斥着他的鼻孔，令他幻灭。但他仍然继续奔跑——向前飞奔。“狗必须系狗链”——告示牌依旧在那儿，那位公园管理员还是头戴高帽、手持警棍，正执行这项规定。然而现在，“必须”这个词对他而言没有任何意义。爱的锁链已断，他现在想往哪里跑就往哪里跑。他可以去追山鹑，追西班牙猎犬，冲进大丽花丛里，踩烂鲜艳的红玫瑰与黄玫瑰。就让公园管理员挥舞他们的警棍吧——让他们把他打得脑浆四溅，让他肚破肠流地躺在巴雷特小姐的脚旁死掉——他一点儿都不在乎。自然，这些事儿都没发生。没人来追赶他，也没人注意到他。单独出巡的公园管理员忙着和一个保姆聊天。最后，他只好踱回巴雷特小姐身边，让她心不在焉地将狗链套在他的脖子上，带他回家。

经过这样的两次羞辱，不用说一条普通的狗，就连一个普通人，都可能从此一蹶不振。然而温软细腻的弗勒希却目光如炬，胸中的激情不仅能熊熊燃烧，也能默默阴燃。他决心与敌人面对面单挑，进行最后的决战，不容第三者介入，让双方自己分出个胜负。于是，到了七月二十一日，他在这个星期二的下午，溜下楼梯，伺机等在玄关。他没有等太久，很快便听见街上传来熟悉的脚步声，接着听见熟悉的叩门声。有人开门让勃朗宁先生进来。勃朗宁先生早已隐约感受到弗勒希正酝酿攻击，决定以柔克刚，当天带了一盒蛋糕来。见到弗勒希在玄关候着，勃朗宁先生明显是想亲善地抚摸他，或许还想好心地赏他一块蛋糕。真是够了！弗勒希异常凶狠地扑向敌人，牙齿再一次咬上勃朗宁的长裤。可惜在此紧要关头，昏了头的他忘了顶顶重要的一件事——保持安静。他叫了起来，在扑向勃朗宁先生的同时大声吠叫。结果吠声惊动全家，威尔逊闻声冲下楼梯，用力打他，将他制服。他在屈辱中被威尔逊牵走了。那真是莫大的耻辱——袭击勃朗宁先生，却被威尔逊揍了一顿。勃朗宁先生连一根手指头都没抬一下，拎着他的蛋糕，毫发无伤、气定神闲地走上楼梯，单独进入了卧房，弗勒希却被带走了。

他在厨房里被关了两个半小时禁闭，悲惨地和鹦鹉、甲虫、羊齿植物和锅盘共处一室，然后被召回巴雷特小姐房里。她躺在沙发上，姐妹阿拉贝尔坐在旁边。弗勒希自认有理，于是径直走向巴雷特小姐，可是她却不理睬他。他扭头看向阿拉贝尔，她只说了一句：“淘气的弗勒希，走开！”威尔逊也在房里——难缠的、毫不宽容的威尔逊，就是她向巴雷特小姐告的状。她于是揍了他，威尔逊说：“因为他该打！”接着又补充说她只是用手打。就是因为有她做证，弗勒希才成了罪人。巴雷特小姐认定那次袭击没头没脑，认定勃朗宁先生是宽容大度的好人，而弗勒希挨一个仆人的揍（没用鞭子），是因为“他该打”！这事就此定案，不必多费唇舌。巴雷特小姐已认定他有罪。“然后他趴在我脚旁的地板上，”她这样写道，“从眉毛底下抬眼偷瞄我。”但尽管弗勒希一个劲儿盯着巴雷特小姐看，她却怎么也不肯回看他一眼。就这样，她躺在沙发上，他趴在地板上。

被放逐的他趴在地毯上，情绪之纷乱有如身陷汹涌狂暴的漩涡。他的灵魂不是在岩石间冲撞、碎裂，就是好不容易找到一小块立足之地，艰难而缓慢地将自己拉出水面，爬回岸上，最后终于脱离了浩劫后的宇宙，俯瞰一个全然陌生的新世界。问题是，他这番经历到底算是哪个呢——是毁灭，还是新生？这是一个问题。他只能感知这两难困境的大致轮廓，因为他的挣扎是悄无声息的。弗勒希两次都欲倾全力，想要挫败敌人，但均以失败告终。为什么他会失败呢？他问自己。因为他爱巴雷特小姐。他抬眼注视躺在沙发上的她，见她表情严厉、一言不发，心里明白他必须爱她，直到永远。但事情并不简单，而是很复杂。倘若他咬了勃朗宁先生，便等于也咬了她。恨不是恨，恨也是爱。想到这里，弗勒希十分苦恼地甩甩耳朵，浑身不自在地在地板上翻了个身。勃朗宁先生就是巴雷特小姐，巴雷特小姐就是勃朗宁先生；爱即是恨，恨即是爱！他伸了个懒腰，哀鸣一声，从地板上抬起头来。时钟敲了八下，他已经在同一个地方整整趴了三个多小时，始终在痛苦挣扎、进退两难。

这时，就连严厉、冷漠无情的巴雷特小姐也放下了笔。“弗勒希坏透了！”她刚才在给勃朗宁先生的信中写道，“……如果人们都学弗勒希，像狗一样野蛮行事，那么他们也应该像狗一样为结果受惩罚！而你呢，你却如此和颜悦色地对待他！换作其他任何人，至少也会说几句‘狠话’。”其实真应该考虑买嘴套了，她心想。然后她抬起头，看见了弗勒希。这时，他脸上某种非同寻常的表情势必击中了她。她愣住了，放下笔。曾经，他用一个吻唤醒她，而她则把他想象成牧神潘；曾经，他吃的是鸡肉和浸满奶油的米布丁；曾经，他为了她放弃了阳光。于是，她把他叫到跟前，说自己原谅了他。

然而她因一念之仁原谅他，又将他抱回沙发上，仿佛在地板上忍受那些痛苦之后他并无任何长进，仍是过去的他，她完全没有意识到

他已幡然改变。这一切令弗勒希难以接受。不过此时他已精疲力竭，只好屈服。但几天后，他与巴雷特小姐之间发生了一件非比寻常的事，足以显示他感情深邃。那天勃朗宁先生离开之后，只剩下弗勒希与巴雷特小姐单独待在一块儿。平常他都会立刻跳到她脚旁的沙发上，但那天他却一反常态，没有要求钻进她怀里，却走向了那把椅子——现在被称作“勃朗宁先生的扶手椅”。通常那把椅子令他极度厌恶，因为上面仍保留着敌人的身姿留下的形状。可是那一刻，他却打赢了一仗，因为他心中突然充满宽容，不仅正视那把椅子，甚至“忽然陷入了狂喜”。巴雷特小姐全神贯注地观察着他不同寻常的表现。接着，她看见他将视线转向桌上。桌上仍摆放着勃朗宁先生送的那盒蛋糕。他在“提醒你你送的蛋糕仍留在桌上”。此刻蛋糕早就陈腐变质了，绝对不会引起任何食欲。弗勒希的意图非常明显——蛋糕新鲜时他不肯吃，因为那是敌人送的；现在蛋糕坏了，他倒愿意吃了，因为他已与对方化敌为友了，因为那是他将仇恨化成爱意的象征。没错，他表示自己现在愿意吃了。于是巴雷特小姐起身去拿蛋糕，递给他时顺便告诫了他一番。“我解释给他听，说这是你带给他吃的，他应该为过去的恶行感到惭愧，应该下定决心，从今以后好好爱你，不再咬你，这样我才能允许他接受你的好意。”弗勒希一边吞咽着已经受潮泡软的难吃糕饼——这玩意已经发霉发臭，一股酸味，招来苍蝇——一边用自己的语言信誓旦旦地重复她刚才说过的词：他发誓，从今以后会好好爱勃朗宁先生，再也不会咬他了。

他立即受到了奖赏——这奖赏不是走味的蛋糕，不是鸡翅，不是女主人的拥抱爱抚，也不是重新获准趴回巴雷特小姐脚旁的沙发。他的奖赏是精神上的，但奇怪的是，其效果却展现在肉体上。这几个月以来，仇恨一直压着他的灵魂，如同一根铁条，把一切自然的活力都压得腐朽、溃烂、死亡。如今，经过利刃的洗礼，完成了痛苦的手术，铁条被切除了，血液得以再度流通，神经又有了感觉，肌肉又重新长好，仿佛春天到来，万物复苏。弗勒希再次听见鸟鸣，感觉到树在发芽。当他趴在巴雷特小姐脚旁的沙发上，荣耀与欢愉在他的血管里流淌。他现在已站在他们一边，而不是与他们敌对；他们的希望、他们的心愿、他们的渴求，也都是他的了。现在弗勒希可以吠叫着应和勃朗宁先生了。他颈项上的毛会因勃朗宁简洁有力的话语而竖立：“我真希望一周七天全是星期二！”勃朗宁先生呼喊，“然后一个月全是星期二——一年——一辈子都是！”“我，”弗勒希重复他的话，“也想要一个月——一年——一辈子！你们想要的东西，就是我要的东西！我们是三个同谋者，要追逐最荣耀的使命；我们有同样的怜悯、同样的仇恨，我们反抗同样暗无天日的独裁暴政，也有同样的爱。”简言之，弗勒希将他所有的希望都寄托在同属于他们的光荣胜利上，尽管他对它只有模糊的感觉，却依然深信它必将来临。然而就在此时，弗勒希突如其来地整个跌入黑暗之中，一切来得毫无征兆，而——就发生在文明、

安全与友好的中心地带——那是九月一日，一个周二上午，他和巴雷特小姐及其姐妹就在维尔街的一家商店里。地牢的大门在他身后关上。他被偷走了。 [4]

第四章 白教堂 [28]

“今天早上，阿拉贝尔和我带着他，”巴雷特小姐写道，“坐马车去维尔街办点事。跟往常一样，他跟着我们进出店里。从店里出来上马车时，他还在我脚边。我转过身便唤道：‘弗勒希。’阿拉贝尔也四处找他。可弗勒希踪影全无！就在那一瞬间，他被人从车轮底下抓走了，你明白吗？”勃朗宁先生非常明白。巴雷特小姐忘了拴狗链，弗勒希就这样被偷走了。这便是一八四六年时温波尔街及附近街区的法则。

诚然，没有任何东西可以打破温波尔街表面的稳固和安宁。体弱多病者步履所及或巴思椅能被推到之处，放眼望去，皆是四层洋楼、大玻璃窗和桃花心木大门构成的赏心悦目的景致。哪怕乘坐双驾马车，只要马车夫小心谨慎，在下午的兜风行程中也不会越过礼仪与体面的边界。然而，如果你并非病弱之人，如果你不坐双驾马车，如果你——跟很多人一样——体格健全、充满活力——喜欢步行，那么你很可能会在距离温波尔街几步之遥的地方看到各种景象，听到各种用语，闻到各种味道，甚至开始疑虑温波尔街本身的安稳。在这一时期，当托马斯·比姆斯 [29] 先生打算到伦敦逛逛，见到的恰是此景。他感到惊讶，事实上他深受震动。威斯敏斯特区富丽堂皇的建筑鳞次栉比，然而其后便是破败的棚屋，人们成群地挤在屋内，屋子下方便是一群群牛——“每七英尺就挤着两个人”。他自感有责任把所见公之于众。然而一个人该如何不失文雅地描述一间位于牛棚之上、合住着两三个家庭的卧室，况——这牛棚甚至没有通风设备，牛就在卧室底下遭人挤奶、屠宰和烹食？当比姆斯先生尝试这么做时，他却发现，这项任务穷尽了英语语言中的所有词语。他还是认为自己有义务把下午散步经过伦敦最具贵族气派的几个教区时的见闻如实陈述。斑疹伤寒的感染概率是如此之高，富人不会知道自己面临何种危险。对于自己在威斯敏斯特、帕丁顿及马里波恩区的所见所闻，他根本做不到三缄其口。譬如，有一幢本来属于某位贵族的老宅邸，昔日的大理石壁炉台依然存在。房间皆由木头嵌板，楼梯扶栏上皆雕刻着花，然而地板已经腐烂，墙壁上沾满了污秽，成群的衣不蔽体的男男女女栖身于此，占据了古老的宴会厅。接着他继续往前走。这块儿某个有商业头脑的建筑商将一幢老宅夷平，取而代之的是一栋偷工减料的廉价公寓。雨沿着屋顶渗入室内，风则从墙缝中钻了进去。他看见有个孩子拿着个铁罐

在条鲜绿色的溪流里舀水，便问他这里的人喝不喝那溪里的水。是的，他们喝，还在里面洗澡，因为房东每周只肯供应两次水。这类景象之所以尤其令人吃惊，是因为在伦敦最安静、最文明的街区里——“最上流的教区也在所难免”——竟也能遇到此般场景。再比方说，就在巴雷特小姐卧室的后方，便是伦敦最不堪入目的贫民窟之一。肮脏败坏和体面富贵在那里交会。当然，还有些区域早已由穷人接管，无人干扰。在白教堂区，或托特纳姆考特路下面的那块三角地带，几个世纪以来，贫穷、罪恶与苦难一直在那里滋长繁衍、生生不息，无人干预。又好比圣贾尔斯区里大量密集的老房子，“俨然是罪犯的流放地，是一座不折不扣的贫民都市”。这流放地被称为“白嘴鸦”，称呼十分恰当，因为贫民们就是这般聚集在一起的。区内人挤人，户户相叠，仿佛黑压压地挤在树梢上的一群白嘴鸦。只不过这里的房子并非树木建成，甚至都不再是房子了。它们是由砖块砌成的牢房，由流满了脏污的巷道分隔开来。从早到晚，衣衫不整的各路人马在小巷里熙来攘往；入夜后，白天赴伦敦西区讨生活的盗贼、乞丐和娼妓又源源不断地涌回区内。警方对此束手无策。过路人只能加快脚步，不敢稍停，或许只会和比姆斯先生一样，在一堆旁征博引、托词规避和委婉客气的辞藻中悄悄暗示天下未必像理想中那样处处太平。霍乱有可能降临，而——即便有霍乱降临的征兆，也不至于这般躲闪。

但是对弗勒希，情况却很不一样。巴雷特小姐想到，弗勒希“并不知道我们可以把他赎回来”；他从来没有精通过人类社会的游戏法则。“这下他肯定要哭号一整个晚上，我很了解他。”九月一日星期

二的下午，巴雷特小姐在给勃朗宁写信时这样说道。就在巴雷特小姐给勃朗宁写信的同时，弗勒希正经历着他这辈子最恐怖的遭遇。他困惑极了，不明究竟，前一秒钟还在维尔街，置身于彩缎蕾丝之间，下一秒便整个儿地栽进布袋里，颠颠簸簸地被拎着迅速穿过几条街，最后终于被倒了出来——倒在这里！他发现自己在一片漆黑之中，又冷又湿。头晕脑涨过去之后，他渐渐分辨出自己身处一间低矮阴暗的房间——几把破椅子，一张破烂的床垫。接着有人捉住他的一条腿，把他紧紧拴在某样东西上。有什么东西趴在地板上——是人是兽，他辨别不出。巨大的靴子和曳地的长裙不断地进进出出，苍蝇嗡嗡地围着地上几片腐烂的臭肉。孩子们从黑暗的角落里爬出来，拧他的耳朵。他哀号一声，他的脑袋挨了重重的一击。他靠着墙蜷缩在只有几英寸的潮湿砖块上。这会儿，他能看见地板上挤满了形形色色的动物：一群狗你争我抢地嘶咬着一根腐臭的骨头，他们瘦得肋骨都快戳破肚皮了——他们饥不择食、又脏又病、毛发蓬乱。然而弗勒希看得出来，其实他们全都是血统最高贵的犬类，是系狗链的狗，是仆役养的狗——就像他自己一样。

他趴在那儿，连哼都不敢哼一声，一小时接着一小时过去了。渴是他最大的煎熬。他舔了一口身旁水桶里那深绿色的水，这一舔让他作起呕来，他宁愿渴死也不会再喝第二口。可是一只威风高贵的灵缇正贪婪地喝个不停。每次房门被踢开，他都抬头看：巴雷特小姐——是巴雷特小姐吗？她终于来了吗？但进来的是一个毛发浓密的恶棍，他把动物们全踢到旁边，踉踉跄跄地走到一把破椅子前，瘫坐了下去。然后夜色愈来愈浓，他几乎分辨不清地板上、床垫上、破椅子上都是些什么东西。有人将一小截蜡烛插在壁炉架上。外边的排水沟里燃着一团火。借着那团闪烁不定的微弱火光，弗勒希能看到从窗外经过的可怕脸庞不怀好意地睥睨着屋内。然后他们进到屋来，本来就满满当当的小房间愈加拥挤，他只好缩成一团，更加紧贴着墙趴着。这群可怕的怪物——有些衣衫褴褛，有些涂满胭脂、身插羽毛——要么蹲在地上，要么弓背围坐在桌旁。他们喝起酒来，不时恶言相向，拳脚相对。从扔到地板上的口袋里滚出更多的狗——小型宠物犬、塞特犬、指示犬……个个脖子都还套着项圈。还有一只巨大的凤头鹦鹉，一边振翅疾飞，从一个角落冲向另一个角落，一边尖叫着：“漂亮宝莉！漂亮宝莉！”那口音足以吓坏它的女主人，一位住在梅达韦尔区的寡妇。接下来女人们也打开了口袋，手镯、戒指和胸针倒了满桌，这些首饰跟弗勒希看巴雷特小姐及亨丽埃塔小姐戴的那些一样。那群牛鬼蛇神伸出爪子在首饰堆里乱抓，咒骂着，争吵着。狗儿乱吠，孩子们尖叫，色彩斑斓的凤头鹦鹉（温波尔街的一扇窗子里挂有鸟笼，弗勒希常在其中看到类似的一只鸟）也厉声叫着：“漂亮宝莉！漂亮宝莉！”一声急过一声，直到被一只忽然飞过来的拖鞋打中，它才住了口，狂乱地拍击着那对带有黄色斑点的鸽灰色大翅膀。于是蜡烛突然

一歪，倒了下来，房里一片漆黑。屋里也越来越热，那气味、那热度让人难以忍受。弗勒希的鼻子火烧火燎，皮毛抽搐起来。可是巴雷特小姐还是没有来。

巴雷特小姐躺在她位于温波尔街的沙发上。她很恼火，又很担忧，但并没有特别紧张。弗勒希当然会遭点罪，他会整夜哀号吠叫，不过只是几个小时的事情。泰勒先生会开个价，她只要照付，弗勒希就会被归还了。

九月二日星期三，白教堂区的贫民窟里晨曦微露。七零八落的玻璃窗渐渐变成灰色。光线爬上仰天躺在地板上的众多恶棍那毛发浓厚的脸上。弗勒希从遮蔽双眼的迷离之境中醒来，再一次面对现实。此刻眼前的一切便是现实——这个房间，这些恶棍，这群哀号着、乱咬着、被拴牢的狗，这片黑暗，这股潮湿。就在昨天，他还跟着高贵的女士们置身于彩缎环绕的商店里，可那是真的吗？温波尔街这个地方又真的存在吗？真有那么一个房间吗？那个房间里摆着盛满清水的紫色罐子，他曾经趴在那个房间的软垫上，还被赏过一块烤得恰好的鸡翅膀，他还出于嫉妒和愤怒咬了一位戴黄手套的男士，这样的房间真的有过吗？那样的生活与感情飘远了，消解了，变得虚幻起来。

在这里，光线穿过飞扬的尘土透进来，一个女人吃力地从一团麻袋里爬起来，跌跌撞撞地走出去拿啤酒。酗酒与咒骂再度开始。一个胖女人揪住弗勒希的两只耳朵，把他拎了起来，捅戳他的肋骨，拿他开了一个恶心的玩笑。她又把他扔回地上，引来众人爆笑。门被踢开又砰地关上。他每回都会抬头观望。是威尔逊吗？有没有可能是勃朗宁先生，或巴雷特小姐？但不是！只是另一个贼，另一个杀人犯。仅仅瞅一眼那些曳地的长裙，那些粗硬的靴子，他就愈加往角落里缩。有一次，有人朝他丢过来一根骨头，他试着去啃，但他的牙齿咬不动硬得像石头似的肉，那股恶臭也让他作呕。他更加口渴了，不得不舔舔从桶里洒出来的绿水。星期三慢慢过去，趴在破木地板上的他觉得越来越热，越来越渴，全身越来越酸痛，所有感受全都搅和在了一起。他对发生了什么也漠不关心，唯有门被打开时，他才会抬起头来看。可惜，每次都不是巴雷特小姐。

躺在温波尔街家里沙发上的巴雷特小姐愈加焦虑起来。显然事情进展多有不顺。泰勒答应过星期三下午到白教堂区去跟他的“社区”交涉。但星期三下午、星期三晚上都已过去，泰勒一直没有现身。她估摸这大概只是意味着价码抬高了一碰上这个节骨眼，实在很麻烦。然而，她当然还是要照付，“我不能没有弗勒希，你知道的。”她写信跟勃朗宁先生说，“我不能冒任何风险去讨价还价。”于是，她继续躺在沙发上一边写信给勃朗宁，一边竖着耳朵等待敲门声。但是只有威尔逊前来送信，前来送热水。上床睡觉时间都到了，弗勒希还没有归

来。

九月三日星期四，白教堂区东方欲晓。那扇门开了又关。趴在弗勒希身边哼唧了整个晚上的红色塞特犬被一个穿鼠皮背心的恶汉一把抱走了一命运会是如何呢？被宰杀和存活于此，哪一种更幸运？这般的苟活与那样死掉，哪一样更糟？喧嚣嘈杂、又饿又渴、臭气熏天——弗勒希想起自己曾经非常讨厌古龙水的味道——这一切迅速抹去了任何清醒的意念，驱走了所有的欲望。往昔的记忆碎片开始在他脑海里翻腾。那是年老的米特福德博士在田野里高声呼唤的声音吗？那是克伦哈波克在门口跟面包师傅说长道短吗？屋子里一阵嘎吱声，他还以为那是米特福德小姐捆扎一束天竺葵发出的声响。可那只是风——因为今天风雨交加——吹打着糊在破窗框上的牛皮纸；那只是阴沟里的醉鬼在胡言乱语；那只是角落里的老太婆一边在火上用平底锅烤鲱鱼，一边咕咕哝哝个不停。他被遗忘了，他被抛弃了。不会有人来救他，不会有人跟他说话——鸚鵡大叫着：“漂亮宝莉！漂亮宝莉！”而金丝雀没完没了地发出愚蠢的啁啾。

夜色再一次笼罩室内，托盘上竖起蜡烛，室外黯淡的光线闪烁不定。扛着布袋的凶恶之徒和涂脂抹粉的俗艳女人成群结队、拖拖拉拉地从门口进到屋里，纷纷栽倒在破床破桌上。又一个夜晚的黑暗降临在白教堂区。雨水持续而规律地从屋顶的一个漏洞滴下来，滴答滴答敲击着摆在下面接水的水桶。巴雷特小姐没有出现。

星期四，温波尔街晨光熹微，却不见弗勒希的踪影——也没有泰勒先生的消息。巴雷特小姐惊恐万分，四下打听。她把兄弟亨利叫来仔细盘问，这才发现被他给骗了。“魔头”泰勒前天晚上如约前来，并给出了条件：给“社区”六个几尼，再付他半个几尼。可是亨利没有告诉她，却禀报了巴雷特先生，结果当然是巴雷特先生吩咐亨利不许给钱，也不许向她透露这次会面。巴雷特小姐“极为恼怒”，恳求亨利立刻去找泰勒先生，付钱给他。亨利拒绝了，并“把爸爸搬出来做挡箭牌”。但这个时候把爸爸搬出来有什么用，她抗议道。他们在这里说爸爸如何如何的同时，弗勒希可能就被宰掉了。她下定决心，如果亨利不肯去，那她就自己去：“……如果他们不照我的话做，明天一早我就亲自去把弗勒希接回来。”她在信中如是告诉勃朗宁先生。

然而，巴雷特小姐发现此事说来容易做起来难。她去接弗勒希，就跟弗勒希回到她身边一样艰难，整条温波尔街都在跟她对着干。弗勒希被偷、泰勒索求赎金这件事现在已是尽人皆知。温波尔街坚决表明立场，反对白教堂区。失明的博伊德先生传话过来，表示他认为支付赎金将是“一桩可怕的罪行”。她的父亲及兄弟都联合起来反对她，——为了维护他们那个阶层的利益，出卖什么都在所不惜。可糟糕的是——尤其糟糕的是——勃朗宁先生凭借他的影响力、口才、学养和逻辑，

选择站在温波尔街，而不是弗勒希一边。他写道：倘若巴雷特小姐对泰勒屈服，不啻于对暴政屈服，对敲诈勒索者让步，她在助长邪恶压倒正义，助力恶行侵害无辜。倘若她满足了泰勒的要求，“……那些没有足够的钱支付赎金的穷困的狗主人，又该如何是好”？他的想象力大迸发，他想象如果泰勒哪怕只问他要五先令的赎金，他会怎么说。他会说：“‘你’必须对你那帮走狗的所作所为负责！我重申：‘你’别跟我说些什么砍狗头剁狗爪的废话。就像我实实在在地站在你眼前跟你说话一样，我将实实在在地穷毕生之力来打倒你，打倒你所代表的恶势力；我将实实在在地想尽办法揭发你和你的同谋共犯，送你们上绝路——我现在已经发现了‘你’，我再也不会放过……”如果勃朗宁先生有幸见到泰勒先生的话，他就准备这样当面回应泰勒。事实上，他意犹未尽，在同一个星期四下午赶上稍晚的邮车，又送来了第二封信，信里说：“……想到各阶层的压迫者在发现沉默弱者的秘密之后，是如何随心所欲、无所不用其极地操纵宰控他们时，真是让人毛骨悚然。”他并不是责备巴雷特小姐——对他而言，她所做的一切，没有一件不是完美的，没有一件是不可接受的。只是，他在星期五早晨继续写道：“……我认为这是令人惋惜的懦弱表现……”倘若她助长了泰勒的偷狗行为，便是在助长巴纳德·格雷戈里 [30] 盗取德行的行径。所以，对于那些被巴纳德·格雷戈里一类勒索之徒从名录上挑中，遭到恣意抹黑而刎颈自尽或逃亡国外的可怜虫，她也负有间接责任。“其实何必对世上最浅显易懂的道理发上这样一通陈词滥调呢？”就这样，勃朗宁先生每天在伦敦新十字区振振有词地写满两封信，并送过来。

虎穴去接他，哪怕罗伯特·勃朗宁因此而鄙夷她。

于是，星期六那天，她开始穿衣打扮，而勃朗宁先生的信就展开着摆在她面前的桌上。她读了他信上所言：“再说一句——在这整个事件当中，我所致力反对的是在这个父权世界里所有当家的丈夫、父兄及统治者制定的一切可憎的规矩。”所以，要是她去了白教堂区，那就是站到了罗伯特·勃朗宁的对立面，就是反对了那些当家的丈夫、父兄及统治者。然而，她继续穿衣打扮。马车房里有条狗在嚎，它被拴了起来，孤苦无助地被残酷的人们掌控。那狗似乎在嚎着提醒她：“别忘了弗勒希！”她穿上鞋子，披上披风，戴上帽子。她又瞥了一眼勃朗宁先生的那封信。“我将娶你为妻。”她读道。但那条狗嚎个不停。她离开房间下了楼。

亨利·巴雷特迎向她，表示她若真的去做她扬言要做的事，就很有可能遭人抢劫甚至被谋害。她吩咐威尔逊去叫马车。尽管威尔逊吓得浑身筛糠，但还是顺从地照做了。马车到了。巴雷特小姐让威尔逊上车。威尔逊虽然认定自己死期将至，仍然上了车。巴雷特小姐告诉车夫去肖尔迪奇区的曼宁街。待巴雷特小姐自己也登车后，马车出发了。他们很快便将大玻璃窗、桃花心木大门与地下室采光井的栅栏甩在身后，进入了一个巴雷特小姐闻所未闻、想所未想的世界。他们在一个卧室地板下方就是牛群的世界，那里的人家都睡在窗户破了的房间里；这是一个每周只供水两次的世界，一个罪恶与贫穷滋养着罪恶与贫穷的世界。他们已经来到了正派体面的马车夫一无所知的区域。马车停住，车夫去一家酒馆问路。“里面出来两三个男人，‘噢，我敢说你们是来找泰勒先生的！’”一辆马车载着两位淑女出现在这个神秘的世界，只会为了一桩事，而那桩事已经无人不晓，就是那邪恶至极的事。其中一个男人跑进一栋屋子，出来后表示泰勒先生：“不在家！”“问我愿不愿意下车。威尔逊在一边害怕得要命，哀求我千万别做这种傻事。”一大群男人和男孩紧紧包围了马车。“那你愿不愿意见泰勒太太？”那男人问。巴雷特小姐一丁点见泰勒太太的意愿都没有，可这会儿一个肥硕超群的女人已从那屋子里走了出来，“一辈子的心宽养出来的体胖”。她告诉巴雷特小姐，她丈夫外出不在，“可能几分钟就回来，也可能几个小时后才回来——问我愿不愿意下车等他”。威尔逊使劲拉她的外衣。想象一下在那个女人的家里等人！坐在被一大群男人和男孩包围的马车里已经够糟了。于是巴雷特小姐便坐在马车里与那位“硕大的女匪”谈判。泰勒先生手上有她的狗，她说，泰勒先生答应会归还她的狗，能否请泰勒先生当天一定把狗送回温波尔街。“噢，当然可以！”胖女人堆着一脸无比亲切的笑容答道。她相信泰勒先生正是为此事才出门的。她一边说，一边“轻松地愉快地左右摇晃着脑袋”。

就这样，马车掉头，离开了肖尔迪奇区的曼宁街。威尔逊认

为“我们简直是虎口脱险”，巴雷特小姐自己则忧虑万分。“显然帮派在那里势力庞大，这些社区、这些‘千奇百怪的人’……的存在早已根深蒂固。”她写道。她的脑海中思潮汹涌，眼前充斥着各种影像。原来温波尔街的另一边是这副模样——这些面孔，这些屋子。她在酒馆外的马车里所看到的東西，比过去五年躺在温波尔街后面卧房里看到的東西加起来都多。“那些男人的脸！”她感叹道。那些面孔烙印在她的眼球上，刺激着她的想象力，即便是“圣洁的大理石神灵”——书架上那几尊半身像——也从未让她产生这么多灵感。在这里生活着跟她一样的女子；当她躺在沙发上阅读、写作时，那群人却在这个世界里如此活着。然而马车此时已再度行驶在两排四层的房屋中间，两侧熟悉的大门与窗户回归视线——有棱有角的砖道，黄铜门环，整齐划一的窗帘。终于到温波尔街五十号了。威尔逊飞快地跳下车——可以想象她意识到自己平安无事该有多么如释重负，但巴雷特小姐却似乎迟疑了片刻。她仍然看得见“那些男人的面孔”。多年后，当她坐在意大利阳光灿烂的阳台上写作时，那些面孔还会再次浮现于她的眼前 [5]。它们将激发她的灵感，让她写下《奥罗拉·利》长诗中最生动的章节。不过男管家已经打开了前门，她走上楼再次回到了自己的房间。

事实上，纵然到了这最后关头，温波尔街的各方势力仍在奋力阻止弗勒希与巴雷特小姐团圆。星期六下午，她躺着等待泰勒到来，正如那肥硕超群的女人允诺的。他终于来了，却没有带狗。他传话说，只要巴雷特小姐当场付他六个几尼，他“以自己的名誉发誓”，必定直奔白教堂区去把狗接过来。泰勒这个“大魔头”的名誉到底值多少，巴雷特小姐不敢说，可是“似乎也没有其他法子”，弗勒希的性命可是危在旦夕。她数了六个几尼，派人送下去给等在楼下走廊里的泰勒。只不过倒霉的是，当泰勒在走廊里等待，置身于雨伞堆、雕刻品、厚毛地毯和其他珍贵物品之间时，艾尔弗雷德·巴雷特走了进来。眼见大

魔头泰勒居然登堂入室出现在自己家里，他不禁大发脾气，暴跳如雷。他咒骂泰勒是“诈骗犯、骗子、贼”！泰勒先生于是反唇相讥。更糟的是，泰勒竟发誓“就算狗儿正一心期盼救援，你们也永远别想再见到他了！”说完他便冲出了房子。也就是说，第二天一早，血迹斑斑的包裹便会送到。

巴雷特小姐又一次飞快地更衣，冲下了楼。威尔逊在哪儿？让她去叫马车。她打算立马回肖尔迪奇区。全家人都跑来劝阻她：天色已晚，她已筋疲力尽。就算一个健康的男人这么做都是在冒险，她这么做简直是疯狂。他们就是这么对她说的。她的兄弟姐妹全都围着她，吓唬她，阻止她，“大骂我‘疯了’，执拗又任性——我也像泰勒先生一样被他们冠上了无数头衔”。但她坚持自己的立场。最后，他们终于明白了她疯狂的程度，无论冒什么样的风险，他们都非让步不可。塞普蒂默斯保证，只要白白 [32] 肯回到自己的房间，并“控制好脾气”，他愿意亲自去见泰勒，付清赎金，把狗接回来。

九月五日，白教堂区的暮光渐渐没入漆黑的夜色。房门又一次被踢开，一个毛茸茸的男人一把揪住弗勒希的脖子，把他从角落里拎了出来。弗勒希抬头看见宿敌那张令人惊悚的脸，不知等待自己的是死亡还是自由。其实除了鬼魂般萦绕不去的记忆之外，他什么都不在乎了。那男人弯下腰。他粗壮的手指为什么要在他的喉咙下摸索呢？是一把刀，还是一条链子？弗勒希跌跌撞撞，被半遮着眼，摇摇晃晃地带到了户外。

在温波尔街，巴雷特小姐咽不下晚餐。弗勒希是死是活，她完全没数。八点钟，敲门声响起，是勃朗宁先生的信像往常一样送来了。但门打开，信被送进来时，有什么东西也冲了进来——是弗勒希。他直冲向自己的紫色水罐。罐子里的水加满了三次，他却依旧喝个不停。巴雷特小姐观望着那条失魂落魄、晕头转向的脏狗一刻不停地喝水。“他见到我远不如我想象的那样热忱。”她评论道。是的，此刻这个世界上他渴望的东西只有一样——洁净的水。

话说回来，巴雷特小姐只是瞥了那些男人几眼，那些脸便让她终生难忘。弗勒希却任由他们摆布了整整五天。此刻他再度趴在软垫上，清凉的水似乎是唯一有存在感、有真实性的东西了。他一直在喝水。卧房里昔日的神祇——书架、衣橱、半身像——似乎失去了存在感。这间卧室不再代表全世界，它只是一个庇护所，只是在毒蛇猛兽潜行的森林中由一棵颤巍巍的酸模树遮蔽的一小片幽谷，每一棵树后面都藏着一个伺机出击的凶手。当他茫然而疲惫不堪地趴在巴雷特小姐脚边的沙发上时，耳畔依然回响着被拴住的狗的号叫和饱受惊吓的鸟的尖叫。每当门一打开，他都吓了一跳，总以为会有个毛发浓重的男人带着刀进来——那不过是带了一本书来的凯尼恩先生，或是戴着黄手套的

勃朗宁先生。可现在，见到凯尼恩先生和勃朗宁先生，他就往回缩。他不再信任他们。在那些堆满笑容的友善面孔之后，隐藏着背叛、残忍与欺骗。他们的抚摸是空洞的。他甚至不敢跟威尔逊一起走着去邮筒寄信。不用狗链拖，他是绝对不动的。每当他们说：“可怜的弗勒希，是不是有坏人把你偷走了？”他便抬起头来悲鸣或哀号。一记鞭响会让他闪电一般冲向地下室通风井的台阶，逃到安全地带。在屋里的时候，他会在沙发上更接近巴雷特小姐。只有她一个人没有抛弃他。他对她仍葆有些许信念。渐渐地，她身上的存在感越来越强烈了。精疲力竭、浑身战栗、肮脏不堪、骨瘦如柴的他就趴在她脚边的沙发上。

时光荏苒，白教堂的记忆也渐渐褪色，紧贴着巴雷特小姐趴在沙发上的弗勒希比以往更能读懂她的心思。他们曾经被迫分离，如今再度聚首；事实上，他俩从未如此心灵相通过。她的每一举每一动也都传递给了他。她现在似乎无时无刻不在有所动作。一个包裹的送达甚至让她跳了起来。她打开包裹，用颤抖的双手拿出一双厚皮靴，然后立刻把它们藏进橱柜的角落里。然后她躺下来，仿佛什么事都没发生似的，尽管事实并非如此。只剩他俩独处时，她起身，从抽屉里拿出一条钻石项链。她还拿出装勃朗宁先生信件的那个盒子。她把那双皮靴、那条项链和那盒信全都放进一个绒毡制的箱子里，接着——似乎听见有人上楼——迅速把箱子推到床底下，匆忙躺下，用披肩把自己盖好。这些偷偷摸摸的迹象，弗勒希预感，肯定暗示着某种危机的临近。难道他们要一起远走高飞？莫非他们将一起逃离这个充斥着偷狗贼和暴君的可怕世界？噢，若果真如此，该有多好！他兴奋得颤抖呜咽起来，但巴雷特小姐轻声命令他保持安静，他立刻就安静了下来，她也异常安静。她的兄弟姐妹进门来的时候，她总是安安静静地躺在沙发上；她也躺着跟巴雷特先生说话，一如往常。

卧房内的生活也必须不惜一切代价地照常进行下去，然而一切都

不一样了。在弗勒希看来，就连每次拉开和关上遮光帘都像是在打信号。在那几尊半身像上移动的光影也在提醒、昭示着什么。房间里的每样东西似乎都意识到变化即将到来，都在准备迎接某件大事；可是一切又恭默守静、秘而不宣。兄弟姐妹们一如既往地进进出出，巴雷特先生一如既往地晚间来探视，一如既往地检查肉排是否吃完了，葡萄酒是否喝光了。有其他人在房间里的时候，巴雷特小姐一如既往地谈笑风生，丝毫不露有所隐瞒的蛛丝马迹。但那些人一旦离去，她会一边竖起耳朵留着神，一边匆匆忙忙、偷偷摸摸地拉出床底下的箱子，往里面装东西。这些紧张的迹象是确定无疑的。星期日，教堂的钟声响起。“那是什么钟声？”有人问。“是马里波恩教堂的钟声。”亨利埃塔小姐回答。弗勒希看见巴雷特小姐的脸色突然一片惨白。但其他人似乎什么都没有注意到。

就这样，星期一过去了，星期二、星期三、星期四也过去了。一如既往地吃喝、谈话和静卧于沙发上，这就像给他们覆盖了一块静默之毯。弗勒希在不安稳的睡梦中辗转反侧，他梦见他们在广袤的森林里，摸着黑一起蹲伏于蕨类植物和绿叶中，接着绿叶被拨开，他醒了过来。周围漆黑一片，可是在黑暗里，他看见威尔逊偷偷溜进房间，取出床底下的那个箱子，不声不响地拎了出去。那是九月十八日星期五的晚上。整个星期六早晨，他就那样趴在那儿，好像知道有条手帕随时会落地，有声低低的口哨随时会响起，这发出的可是生死攸关的信号。他看着巴雷特小姐自己穿好了衣服。四点差一刻，房门打开了，威尔逊走了进来。接着信号发出了一巴雷特小姐把他抱进怀里。她站了起来，走到门边。他俩驻足片刻，环顾房内：那是沙发，旁边摆着勃朗宁先生的扶手椅，那是几尊半身像和桌子。阳光透过常春藤的叶缝洒了进来，印有散步农人的遮光帘轻轻飘向窗外。一切都一如既往。一切似乎都等待着成千上万个类似的动作照旧进行，可是对巴雷特小姐和弗勒希来说，这却是最后一次。巴雷特小姐悄无声息地把门关上了。

他们悄无声息地溜下楼去，走过客厅、图书室、餐厅。每个房间看起来都习如往常，味道也和平日里并无二致；四下一片静谧，仿佛在炎热的九月午后沉睡着。卡蒂利内也趴在大厅的地毯上睡觉。他们走到前门，悄没声儿地转动门把手。一辆马车等在门外。

“去霍奇森旅馆。”巴雷特小姐说道。她的声音就像是耳语一般。弗勒希一动也不动地坐在她的膝盖上。世界上没有任何东西能让他打破此刻浩瀚无际的静默。

第五章 意大利

连续数小时、数天、数周，周遭似乎只剩黑暗与颠簸，只有乍现的光亮，随后进入漫长阴暗的隧道，被甩东甩西，又被仓促地拎到亮光下，看到巴雷特小姐靠近的脸颊，随后是纤细的树木、线条、铁轨和光影斑驳的高耸房屋——因为当时铁路运输有野蛮的规定，行程中狗必须关在狗箱里。然而弗勒希并不害怕，他们逃离了，他们把暴君和偷狗贼远远地甩在身后。尽情颠簸、尽情咔嚓吧，火车不断把他东摔西撞时，他喃喃自语道：“只要能让我们远离温波尔街和白教堂区就行。”最后，光线变得充足了，颠簸也停止了。他听见鸟儿在唱歌，树儿在风中叹息。抑或是水流的奔腾声吗？他终于睁开了眼睛，抖抖身上的毛皮。他看见了可以想见的最令人讶异的景象。巴雷特小姐身处湍急水流当中的一块岩石之上。树木向她探下身来，河水在她周围激荡。她危在旦夕。弗勒希纵身一跃，水花飞溅。他穿过河流，来到她身旁。“……他以彼得拉克的名义受洗了。”当他爬上石头到她身边时，巴雷特小姐如是言。原来他们来到了沃克吕兹 [33]，而她正栖身于彼得拉克之泉当中的岩石上。

随后是更多的颠簸，更多的咔嚓声，接下来他又一次在平稳的地面上站定了。黑暗被分开，光线倾泻而下，洒满他全身。这是一间阳光普照的巨大的空屋子，他站在房间的红色瓷砖上，发觉自己还活脱脱的，如梦初醒，又满怀困惑。他跑过来跑过去，这里嗅嗅，那里摸摸。这儿没有地毯和壁炉。这儿没有沙发，没有扶手椅，没有书架，也没有半身像。呛人的陌生气味刺激着他的鼻孔，让他打起喷嚏。光线极其强烈、澄澈，令他目眩神迷。他从未身处过这样的房间——如果这真是一个房间的话——如此坚硬、如此明亮、如此巨大，又如此空旷。巴雷特小姐坐在屋子中央一张桌子旁的椅子上，看上去比以往更加娇小。然后威尔逊带他出了门，他发现自己几乎啥也看不见，先是因为阳光，再是因为阴影。街道的一半仿佛燃烧般炙热，另一半却寒气逼人。路过的女人们身上裹着毛皮大衣，却又都打着阳伞遮阴。那条街异常干燥。尽管眼下已是十一月中旬，地面上却没有会弄湿他脚掌或黏结他脚毛的烂泥和水坑。这里没有地下室的采光井，也没有栏杆，更没有那浓烈的混杂气味，那气味总令他沿着温波尔街或牛津街散步时心有旁骛。话说回来，从尖锐的石头角落和干燥的黄色墙壁散发出来的新奇气味也异常刺鼻而古怪。接着，一股香甜得让人震惊的

气味从一幅舞动的黑色帘布后面传出来，像云朵般飘荡。他停住，抬起前爪，品味着；他尝试跟着气味往里走，从帘布下方往里钻。他一眼瞥见一个有低沉回响的、光影斑驳的大厅，大厅非常高，非常空旷。随后威尔逊惊恐地尖叫一声，利落地把他猛拉了回去。他们再度沿街道而行。街上的喧闹声震耳欲聋，仿佛所有人都在同一时刻高声吼叫。有别于伦敦那一成不变、催人入眠的嗡嗡声，这里咔嚓声、尖叫声、叮当声、吼嚷声、噼啪的鞭子声和当啷的铃铛声不绝于耳。弗勒希蹦这边跳那边，威尔逊也一样。为了避开运货马车、一头小牛、一队士兵和一群山羊，他们被迫上上下下人行道二十次。他感觉，和过去这么些年相比，自己反而更年轻、更敏捷了。他眼花缭乱却乐不可支，跌倒在红色地砖上，虽然以前他可以睡在温波尔街后面卧室的软枕头上，却从未睡得如此香甜。

不过没多久，弗勒希便意识到还有更深层次的差异，那便是比萨——他们如今居住的城市——有别于伦敦。两城的狗不相同。在伦敦，哪怕只是小跑到邮筒附近，他也不可避免地会碰到哈巴狗、寻回犬、斗牛犬、獒犬、柯利牧羊犬、纽芬兰犬、圣伯纳犬、猎狐犬或西班牙猎犬家族最著名的七种狗之一。他给每种狗都取了不同的名字，排了不同的等级。但是在比萨，尽管狗的数量大，却毫无等级之分。全都是——这可能吗？——杂种狗。他放眼望去，他们只是狗而已——灰狗、黄狗、斑纹狗、斑点狗，可无法从中辨认出哪只是西班牙猎犬、柯利牧羊犬、寻回犬或獒犬。难道犬业俱乐部在意大利毫无势力吗？难道西班牙猎犬俱乐部不为人知吗？难道这里没有法律规定冠毛是致命缺陷，有卷耳者为珍物，脚上的羽状毛必须予以保护，眉骨必须呈拱形——不可凸出？显然没有。弗勒希感觉自己像一位流亡在外的王子，是一群下里巴人中唯一的贵族。他是整个比萨城里唯一的纯种可卡犬。

弗勒希多年来一直被教导要将自己视为一条贵族狗。紫色水罐与狗链的法则深深浸透了他的灵魂。他失去了心理平衡一点儿也不足为奇。一个姓霍华德或卡文迪什的人落魄到泥屋里，混迹于一帮当地人当中，如果他时不时缅怀查茨沃斯 [34]，惆怅地怀念起夕阳照耀彩绘玻璃时的红地毯和饰满冠冕的长廊，这也情有可原。我们必须承认，弗勒希有势利的一面。很多年前米特福德小姐便已察觉到这一点。在伦敦，置身同级别以及更优秀的犬类当中，这个特性被压抑住了。如今再度抬头，他认为自己举世无双。他变得飞扬跋扈、放肆无礼。“弗勒希变成了一个十足的大王，想叫人开门的时候便吠个不停，让你心烦意乱。”勃朗宁夫人写道。“罗伯特，”她接着说，“宣称弗勒希认为他——我的丈夫——被创造出来是一门为他效劳的，看上去还真像是那么回事。”

“罗伯特”，“我的丈夫”——如果说弗勒希变了，那巴雷特小姐也一样。不仅仅是因为她现在自称勃朗宁夫人，还在阳光底下炫耀手上的

金戒指；她的变化和弗勒希的变化一样巨大。弗勒希一天能听到她说五十遍“罗伯特”和“我的丈夫”，而一语气当中的得意总让他颈毛倒竖、心跳加速。发生变化的不只是她的语言，她整个人都焕然一新了。比方说，以前她只能呷一小口波尔图葡萄酒，还抱怨头痛，现在却不同了，她能将基安蒂红葡萄酒一饮而尽——睡得更为香甜。餐桌上摆着的是一大串连枝带叶的橙子，而非一小颗去了皮、又酸又黄的果子。她不再坐带顶篷的四轮大马车去摄政公园，而是穿上厚靴子去攀岩。她不再乘着双驾马车辘辘地驶过牛津街，而是登上快散架的出租马车，一路颠簸到湖边欣赏山景。疲惫了，她不会挥手再叫另一辆马车，而是在石头上坐下观察蜥蜴。阳光普照时她满心欢喜，天寒地冻时她也欢喜满心。在滴水成冰的日子里，她会将从公爵森林里捡来的松枝丢进火里。他们一起坐在噼里啪啦的火苗前，闻着那股强烈的松香味儿。她总是不厌其烦地赞美意大利，批判英国。“……我们这些可怜的英国人，”她惊叹道，“需要学会享乐。他们需要经过阳光净化而非炉火的淬炼。”在意大利，太阳孕育了自由、生命与喜悦。你看不见任何男人打架，也听不见他们对骂；你也绝对看不到意大利人喝得烂醉——肖尔迪奇区“那群男人的脸”又浮现于她的眼前。她总是拿伦敦来跟比萨进行比较，说自己是多么地喜欢比萨。漂亮的女人可以独自行走于比萨街头。尊贵的女士们先倒空了自己的夜壶，再带着“无可否认的光鲜亮丽”去到宫廷。拥有铃声、杂种狗、骆驼、松树林的比萨，比拥有桃花心木大门及羊肩肉的温波尔街不知要好上多少倍。就这样，勃朗宁夫人每天一边将基安蒂红葡萄酒一饮而尽，再从橙子树枝上扯下一个橙子，一边赞美意大利，并为可怜、乏味、潮湿、阴霾、抑郁、昂贵、保守的英国悲叹。

诚然，威尔逊还将四平八稳的英式作派保持了一段时间。有关管家和地下室、前门与窗帘的记忆可没那么容易从心头抹去。“惊骇于维纳斯的有失体统”，她心有余悸地走出美术馆。后来，由于朋友的好意允许，她得以从门外瞥见大公爵宫廷的富丽堂皇，但她依然忠诚地坚持认为圣詹姆士教堂更胜一筹。“跟我们英国的宫廷比起来，”她报告说，“那地方……简直半零不落。”然而在她观赏的同时，一名大公爵侍卫绝佳的体格却吸引了她的注意。她的幻想被点燃，她的看法有点儿动摇，她的标准倾塌了。莉莉·威尔逊跟侍卫里吉先生陷入热恋[6]。

顾后的，接下来便一日比一日平易起来。就算在比萨，勃朗宁夫人也注意到：“……他每天都出去跟小狗们说意大利话。”现在到了佛罗伦萨，昔日束缚他的最后一副镣铐也从他身上脱落了。解放的那一刻降临在去卡施奈公园的那一天。当弗勒希冲过“翡翠般”的草地，惊起“野鸡四下飞蹿”时，他突然忆起摄政公园及其规定：狗必须系狗链。可现在“必须”在哪里呢？狗链又在哪里呢？公园管理员和警棍又去哪儿了？全都消失不见了！和腐朽贵族社会的偷狗贼、犬业俱乐部及西班牙猎犬俱乐部一起消失了！和四轮马车、双驾马车一起消失了！和白教堂、肖尔迪奇一起消失了！他驰骋，他飞奔，他的毛皮闪亮，他的眼睛放光。他现在是全世界的的朋友，每一条狗都是他的兄弟。在这个新世界里，他不需要狗链，也不需要保护。如果勃朗宁先生迟迟不肯出去散步——他跟弗勒希现在成了最好的朋友——他会大胆地叫唤他。“在他面前站起来，用无法想象的骄横腔调吠叫。”勃朗宁夫人有点气恼地观察着——因为眼下她和弗勒希的关系远不如往昔亲昵。她不再需要他的红色毛皮、明朗双目来弥补自己缺失的体验。她已在葡萄园及橄榄树丛中找到了属于自己的牧神潘，他还出现在夜幕下的松木篝火旁。就这样，如果勃朗宁先生磨磨蹭蹭，弗勒希便会站起来吠叫；可要是勃朗宁先生宁愿待在家里写作，也没关系。弗勒希现在很独立了。爬满墙的紫藤和金链花正在盛开，花园中的紫荆怒放欲燃，野郁金香缀满田野。他为什么要等呢？他自己就跑了。如今他是自己的主人了。“……他独自跑出去，一去就是几个小时。”勃朗宁夫人写道，“……他对佛罗伦萨的每一条街都了如指掌——凡事都要有自己的主张了。我不再因为他不在就担心受怕。”她补充道，面带微笑地回忆起在温波尔街的痛苦时刻，只因她一时疏忽在维尔街忘拴狗链了，那帮贼便躲在马腿下面，伺机把他偷走。在佛罗伦萨，人们不知畏惧为何物；这里没有偷狗贼，她或许还叹口气想到，这里也没有一制的父亲。

但是坦白地讲，但凡圭迪府邸的门开着便要往外窜的弗勒希，可不是为了要观赏名画、探索黝暗的教堂或仰望模糊的壁画。他是为了享受某样东西，为了找寻这些年来他久违的某样东西。曾经，维纳斯的号角吹起狂野的音乐，在伯克郡的大地萦绕，他爱过帕特里奇先生的狗，她还给他生过一个孩子。现在，他又听见同样的声音响彻佛罗伦萨狭窄的街巷，而一经过这么多年的沉寂，那声音变得更为紧迫，更为猛烈了。此刻，弗勒希理解了人类永远不会理解的东西——纯粹的爱，简单的爱，彻底的爱，在清醒时分不会带来无尽忧虑的爱，问心无愧，无怨无悔；来了又去，仿若那采花的蜜蜂来了又去。今天的花儿是玫瑰，明天的花儿是百合；此刻是沼泽地里的野蓟，下一刻是温室里矫揉造作的套袋兰花。如此博爱，如此无忧无虑，弗勒希将小巷深处有斑点的西班牙猎犬、斑纹狗和黄狗——拥入怀中——无论是谁，都没有关系。对弗勒希来说，全都一样。号角声起，随风飘送，飘到

哪里，他追随到哪里。爱是一切，有爱便足够了。没有人责备他的放浪。每当弗勒希深夜迟归，甚至翌日清晨返家，勃朗宁先生只是大笑着说：“对于像他这么体面的狗来说实在丢人！”当弗勒希扑倒在卧室地板上，在用人造大理石镶嵌的圭迪家族纹章上沉沉睡去时，勃朗宁夫人也笑了。

圭迪府邸内的房间都很空旷。所有在他与世隔绝的那段日子里被遮罩覆盖的家具全都消失了。床就是床，盥洗台就是盥洗台，每样东西都呈现本来的面目而非其他。巨大的客厅零零散散放了几把旧式乌木雕花椅，壁炉上方挂了一面镜子，两旁有丘比特举着灯。勃朗宁夫人自己也把印度披肩扔到一边。她戴着一顶用颜色鲜艳的丝绸制成的无边小帽，这是她丈夫喜欢的。她的头发梳成了新的发式。夕阳西下，遮光板拉起时，她穿着白色薄棉裙在阳台上踱步。她喜欢坐在那儿观望并聆听街上的人们。

迁居佛罗伦萨没多久，有一天夜晚街上沸反盈天、脚步杂沓，他们冲上阳台一看究竟。一大群人从下面奔涌而过。他们举着横幅，又叫又唱。每扇窗子里都探满人头，所有的阳台都挤满了人。窗子里的人朝街上的人抛撒鲜花和月桂叶，而街上的人——庄严的男人，快活的年轻女子——彼此亲吻，对着阳台上的人高举起他们的宝宝。勃朗宁先生和夫人倚在栏杆上，不停地鼓掌。一条又一条的横幅经过。火把的光把它们照亮。其中一条写着“解放”，另一条写着“意大利统一”，还有“纪念烈士”“庇护九世万岁”及“莱奥波尔多二世万岁”——长达三个半小时，横幅不断经过，人们不停欢呼，勃朗宁和夫人站在点了六支蜡烛的阳台上不停挥手。弗勒希也跟着挤在他俩中间，前脚搭在基石上，努力地跟着欢呼了好久。但是最终——他装不下去了——他打起了哈欠。“他终于坦白了，他认为那群人闹得过久了。”勃朗宁夫人观察到。疲惫和疑虑将他占据，他生出一股下流的欲望。这究竟在干啥？他自问。这位大公爵是何许人物，他又许诺了什么？他们为什么都激动得如此离谱？——因为每当有横幅经过，勃朗宁夫人便热情地挥手再挥手，不知何故，这令他有点儿恼怒。他觉得，如此殷勤地对待一位大公爵未免过于夸张了。接着，就在大公爵本人经过时，他留意到有一条小狗停在门口。趁勃朗宁夫人沉浸在反常的兴奋中，他赶紧抓住机会，溜下阳台跑了。他穿过横幅和群众，一路尾随着她。她则越跑越远，跑入了佛罗伦萨的中心地带。大呼小叫声愈来愈遥远，人群的欢呼声渐渐隐没于岑寂当中。火把的光亮也熄灭了，只剩下一两点星光在阿尔诺河的涟漪中闪烁，弗勒希便和那条斑点西班牙猎犬并肩趴在河畔，蜷缩着依偎在泥地上的一个旧篮子里。他们迷失于爱情中，一直到旭日东升。弗勒希直到第二天上午九点才回到家。勃朗宁夫人满怀嘲讽地跟他打招呼——她想着，他至少应该记得今天是她第一个结婚周年纪念日吧。不过她料想“他一定是找到乐子了”。的确如此。当

她从四万人的大游行、大公爵的种种许诺及横幅上迎风招展的愿望中生出无法言说的满足感时，弗勒希无比欢喜的却是门边的那条小狗。

毋庸置疑，勃朗宁夫人与弗勒希在各自的发现之旅中抵达了截然不同的目的地——她发现的是大公爵，他发现的则是斑点西班牙猎犬。然而不可否认的是，将他们俩维系在一起的纽带依然牢固。弗勒希摒弃了那些“必须”的陈规，在卡施奈公园那翡翠般的草地上自由自在地驰骋起来，惊起的野鸡掠过一道红光或金光。只是他刚开始这么做，就感到了一种牵制，让他再度回归到蛰居家中的状态。起初也没什么——只是一点儿蛛丝马迹——一八四九年的春天，勃朗宁夫人开始忙着做起针线活儿来了。可眼前这幅景象之中总有什么令弗勒希觉得蹊跷。她向来不事女红。他注意到威尔逊移动了一张床，她还在一个抽屉里放了许多白色的衣物。他从地砖上仰起头，凝神观看，一心倾听。又有什么事情即将发生吗？他焦虑地寻找皮箱与打包的迹象。是要再一次远走高飞，再一次逃离吗？可这一回要逃往哪里，又躲避什么呢？这儿没什么可怕的，他向勃朗宁夫人保证。在佛罗伦萨，他们俩谁都不用忧心忡忡，不用害怕泰勒先生，或看到被包在棕色纸袋里的狗头。他困惑不解，这种种变动的迹象，据他的解读，并不意味着逃亡。这些迹象，以一种极其神秘的方式，象征着某种期待。当他观望着勃朗宁夫人如此泰然自若、安静沉稳地端坐于她那张矮椅上飞针走线时，他体味出即将发生的事不可避免。这也令人畏惧。时间一周一周地过去，勃朗宁夫人几乎足不出户。她坐在那儿，看上去在期盼某件盛事。难道她准备跟某个像泰勒一样的恶棍正面交锋，孤绝而无助地任他拳打脚踢？想到这个，弗勒希感同身受地颤抖起来。她绝计没有逃离的意图，没有收拾好的箱盒，也没有迹象显示有谁准备离开这栋房子——反倒像是有什么人即将抵达。嫉妒而焦虑的弗勒希严密监视着每个新来的访客。现在来拜访的人很多——布莱格登小姐、兰多尔先生、哈蒂·霍斯默、利顿先生——来圭迪府邸的绅士淑女实在太多了。勃朗宁夫人日复一日地坐在扶手椅里安静地穿针引线。

然后，在三月初的一天，勃朗宁夫人一整天都没有在客厅现身。其他人进进出出，勃朗宁先生和威尔逊也进进出出。看到他们进出时如此心烦意乱，弗勒希自个儿躲到了沙发底下。大伙儿在楼梯上咚咚咚地上上下下，奔来奔去，压低嗓门用各种陌生的语调呼来唤去。他们在楼上的卧室里走动，他则愈来愈往沙发的暗影深处钻。他身体里每一根神经都能感应到某种变化正在发生——某件可怕的事情正在进行。多年前，他曾经这样等候过，等着神秘蒙面人上楼梯的脚步声。最终门打开了，巴雷特小姐高喊：“勃朗宁先生！”现在来的是谁？是哪一位神秘人？日长似岁，他彻底被遗忘，没有人进客厅来。他趴在客厅里，没有吃的也没有喝的；现在纵然有一千只长着斑点的西班牙

猎犬在门口嗅来嗅去，他也只会躲开她们。因为随着时间一小时一小时地过去，他越发强烈地感觉有外物强行入侵家里。他从沙发罩的荷叶边底下往外偷瞄。两个举着灯的丘比特、乌木柜、法式椅子看上去都像被戳得七零八落；他感觉为了给那个看不见的东西腾出空间，自己似乎也挤到了墙边。他看到过勃朗宁先生一次，但他不再是以前那个勃朗宁先生了；他也看到过威尔逊一次，可她也变了一就好像他们都看到了那个他感觉到的无形之物。他们的眼睛里闪耀着奇特的光芒。

终于，看上去红光满面、衣衫不整却得意扬扬的威尔逊把他抱在怀里上了楼。他们进入卧房。笼罩在阴影中的房间里传来一阵如小羊叫唤般微弱的声音——枕头上有东西在挥动，是个活物。勃朗宁夫人完全没依靠旁人，连前门都没打开，仅凭一己之力就从一个人变成了两个人。那可怕的东西就在她身边挥舞手臂，呜呜叫着。无法掩饰的愤怒、嫉妒以及强烈的嫌恶涌上弗勒希的心头，他用力挣脱了威尔逊的怀抱，冲下了楼。威尔逊和勃朗宁夫人唤他回去；她们用爱抚引诱他，给他吃好吃的东西，却一点儿用也没有。他试图躲开那令人厌恶的景象，那让人反感的存在，直往沙发的阴影中和黑暗的角落里钻。“……整整两个星期，他陷入了深深的忧郁之中，无论大家如何费尽心力哄他都没有用。”——就算千头万绪忙得无法分身，勃朗宁夫人也不得不注意到这一点。倘若我们把人类的时间换算成狗的时间——我们也必须如此——想象一分钟如何膨胀成一小时，一小时又如何膨胀成一天，那么以人类的时间计算，弗勒希的“严重抑郁症”持续了足足六个月，这一结论毫不夸张。许多男男女女在不到六个月的时间就能将自己的爱恨情仇抛到九霄云外了。

但弗勒希不再是温波尔街时代那条不懂世故、未经教化的狗了。他早已吸取了教训。威尔逊揍过他。他被迫吞咽过陈腐变质的蛋糕，而他本可以在其新鲜时享用的。他曾发誓去爱勃朗宁先生而不去咬他。当他趴在沙发底下时，所有这些往事在他的心头翻腾；他终于想通了。他再一次得到了奖赏。必须承认的是，刚开始那个奖赏不具有实体性，甚至让人难以接受。宝宝被放到弗勒希的背上，这边宝宝揪扯着他的耳朵，那边他得驮着宝宝走来走去。可他如此温文尔雅，哪怕耳朵被揪，也只是转过头去“亲亲那双肥嘟嘟的浅凹进去的小光脚”，以至于三个月后，那团无助弱小、只会乱扯和哭闹的小肉球竟然开始对他青睐有加，“总的来说”——勃朗宁夫人是这么说的——比起别人，更喜欢他。然后，令人感到奇妙的是，弗勒希发现自己也喜欢上了宝宝。难道他们俩没有共通之处吗？难道宝宝不是有很多地方像弗勒希吗？难道他们不是对很多事有一致的看法和品位吗？就比如，欣赏风景这件事。对弗勒希而言，所有风景都是索然无趣的。这么多年来，他从来没学会正眼看看山峦。他们带他去瓦隆布罗萨 [35] 时，那

里森林的壮美却只让他感到无聊至极。宝宝几个月大的时候，他们再次乘坐马车进行长途旅行。宝宝躺在保姆的大腿上，弗勒希则坐在勃朗宁夫人的膝盖上。马车走啊走啊走个不停，费劲地登上亚平宁山脉的高峰。勃朗宁夫人简直喜不自禁，几乎离不开窗口。即便穷尽所有的英语词汇，她也找不到合适的表达来抒发自己的千万感触。“……亚平宁山脉的景色毓秀，几近梦幻。其形其色千变万化，精彩纷呈；山势突变，峰峦各异。栗树林因自身之重朝万丈深谷倾落，湍急的激流劈刹、撕扯着岩石。层峦叠嶂，竞相攀越，仿佛是彼此挤压形成，尽力绽放色彩。”——亚平宁山脉之美催生诸词，这些词句竞相涌现，彼此倾轧，彼此吞没。然而宝宝和弗勒希却一点儿也没感受到这种激动，体会到这种心余力绌。他们俩都默不作声。弗勒希“把头从窗口收回来，不认为那值得一看……他对树木山川之类的极其不屑”。勃朗宁夫人如是总结。马车继续辘辘地行驶着。弗勒希睡着了，宝宝也睡着了。终于，窗外有了灯光与房舍，男男女女来来往往。他们进入了一个村落。弗勒希顿时醒了，全神贯注起来。“……他如饥似渴，弹眼落睛，东看看西瞅瞅，让你觉得他在做笔记或是准备做笔记。”让他兴奋的是人类的生活场景。至少从这点看来，若想打动弗勒希的感官，美必须先通过结晶作用化成绿色或蓝紫色的粉末，再由某种神圣的注射器注入弗勒希的鼻孔，渗入他鼻孔深处的毛细血管才行；随后产生的反应也不是以文字的形式出现，而是沉寂的狂喜。勃朗宁夫人目力之所及，是他鼻子之所闻；她笔触之所记，是他嗅吸之所得。

顿下来，所有人都各得其所。勃朗宁先生通常在一个房间里写作，勃朗宁太太则通常在另一个房间里写作，宝宝在儿童房里玩耍。而弗勒希则迷失于佛罗伦萨的大街小巷，享受气味的盛宴。他追随气味的指引，穿梭在大路与后街、广场与小巷之间，嗅闻着一种又一种味道：浓烈的、温和的、神秘的、美好的。他进进出出、上上下下——有人在打制铜器，有人在烘焙面包，女人们坐着梳理头发，鸟笼高高垒在堤道上，洒落在人行道上的葡萄酒留下深红的污渍，皮革、马具与大蒜各发其味，布匹被拍打着，藤叶在颤动，男人们坐下来喝酒吐痰掷骰子——他跑进跑出，或是鼻子贴着地面，畅饮所有的精华，或是抬头让鼻子在风中随气味共舞。他睡在被太阳晒热的地上——阳光让石头发臭味！他在隧道的阴影里探查——阴影让石头发酸味！他狼吞虎咽地吃下一整串一整串的熟葡萄，只因为那紫色的味道；意大利家庭主妇从阳台扔出来的硬山羊骨头或通心面之类的，他都会嚼嚼再吐出来——羊骨头和通心面的气味都是粗粝的、猩红的。他跟随令人沉迷的香甜气味，进入昏暗的大教堂里蓝紫色的迷宫中，一边嗅闻，一边企图舔舐镶有彩绘玻璃的墓穴上的金子。这并不意味着他的触觉就不灵敏了。他熟知佛罗伦萨大理石的光滑，还有沙砾与卵石的粗糙。帷幔陈旧的褶皱、光滑的石制手指和脚掌，都接受过他舌头的舔舐，以及他颤抖着的口鼻部的轻触。至于他无比敏感的肉垫，则清晰地拓印上了令人骄傲的拉丁语铭文。简言之，他对佛罗伦萨的熟悉程度，没有一个人类可与之抗衡，就连拉斯金 [37] 及乔治·艾略特 [38] 也无法企及。唯有不能说话的人方能领略弗勒希的感觉。他所有数不清的感觉，没有一样可用简陋的文字传达出来。

作传者虽然很乐意就此推断弗勒希的后半辈子是一场笔墨无法形容的快乐狂欢，并乐观地秉持这样一种观点：当小宝宝一天比一天多学会一个字，却因此日益远离感官知觉时，弗勒希将注定永远留在所有本质皆永葆至纯的天堂里，在这里万事万物皆以袒露的精神紧贴其赤诚的灵魂——可惜这并不是真的。弗勒希并没有活在这样的天堂里。只有在星际间遨游的神灵，像飞行距离远至冰雪极地与热带森林却从未见到过人类家园和人间袅袅烟火的鸟儿，或许——就我们所知——才能获得豁免，享受如此完满的幸福。可是弗勒希睡过人类的膝头，听过人类的声音，他的体内遍布属于人类的热情；他了解各种层次的嫉妒、愤怒和绝望。眼下正值盛夏，他饱受跳蚤之苦 [7]。太阳能催熟葡萄，同样也带来了跳蚤，这种讽刺显得十分残酷。“……在佛罗伦萨，萨沃纳罗拉 [39] 的殉道，”勃朗宁夫人写道，“并不比弗勒希在夏季受到的折磨惨烈多少。”跳蚤在佛罗伦萨房舍的每个角落里活蹦乱跳。它们从古老石头的每一条裂隙中，从陈旧帷幔的每一道皱褶里，从每一件斗篷、每一顶帽子和每一条毛毯里悄悄跃出。它们在弗勒希的皮毛里筑巢，一路啃咬到他皮毛的最深处。他又抓又搔，健康状况江河日下，变得阴郁、瘦弱而狂乱。米特福德小姐收到求救信。勃朗

宁夫人焦急地在信中询问：长跳蚤有何疗方？依然坐在三英里十字标的温室里写悲剧的米特福德小姐将笔放下，开始查阅老药方——要用什么样的五月花，什么种类的玫瑰花蕾。只是雷丁的跳蚤一掐就死了，佛罗伦萨的跳蚤却色泽鲜红、强壮有力。对它们来说，米特福德小姐的药粉大概只是鼻烟。绝望之下，勃朗宁先生和夫人只能跪在水桶旁，用上肥皂和刷子，竭尽全力清除这害虫，结果却徒劳无功。终于有一天，带弗勒希出去散步的勃朗宁先生注意到别人在指指点点，他听见有人指着弗勒希的鼻子低声说：“兽疥癣！”时至今日，“罗伯特已和我一样爱弗勒希”，带一位朋友下午出门散步，却听见他遭受这般侮辱，实在无法忍受。罗伯特，他太太写道，“对此忍无可忍”。现在只剩下一个办法了，但这一治疗方法与疾病本身一样极端。尽管弗勒希已变得十分亲民，对身份地位的象征物不再那么重视，但他依旧像菲利普·西德尼所宣称的那样，是一位天生的绅士。他的纯正血统不言自明；那一身毛皮对他而言，好比穷困潦倒的乡绅怀中那枚镌刻着家族纹章的金表——曾有万亩良田，如今缩水到只剩这小表一圈。勃朗宁此刻提议牺牲的正是他的皮毛。他把弗勒希唤到跟前，“抄起一把剪刀，把他全身上下剪得像头狮子”。

随着罗伯特·勃朗宁一刀一刀地剪，可卡犬的荣耀掉落于地，一个迥然不同、拙劣的动物模样从他的颈部渐渐生成。弗勒希觉得自己遭了阉割，受了轻贱，挨了羞辱。我现在是什么？他瞪着镜子思忖。镜子用一以贯之的残忍和坦率回答道：“你什么都不是。”他谁也不是。他显然不再是一条可卡犬了。然而当他对着镜子端详时，他的耳朵现在光秃秃的，不再卷曲，似乎在抽搐，就好像真理与欢笑这两位非凡的精灵在对着它们絮语似的。毕竟，什么也不是，不正是世界上最令人满足的状态吗？他又看了看。那是他的环状颈毛。戏仿那些自以为是的家伙的浮夸行径——从某种方面来看不也是一种经历吗？无论如何，不管他是如何解决这件事的，他毫无疑问摆脱了跳蚤的烦恼。他甩甩自己的颈毛，用他那无毛瘦弱的腿蹦跶起来，精神随之大振，仿若一位刚从病床上起身的大美人，发现自己已菊老荷枯、韶华不再，于是将衣裳和化妆品付之一炬，又想到自己再也不必对镜自怜，或为爱人情薄、情敌貌美而担惊受怕，便开怀大笑起来；或像一位穿了二十年浆硬了的绒面呢袍的牧师，把硬领子扔进垃圾桶里，再从橱柜里抽出伏尔泰的著作一般。就这样，弗勒希蹦蹦跳跳地跑走了，尽管被剪得像只秃狮子，却再也不必为跳蚤而苦恼了。“弗勒希，”勃朗宁夫人写信给她姐妹说，“非常有智慧。”或许当时她想到了希腊人所说的只有历经痛苦的磨炼才能获得快乐。他是真正的哲学家，虽然失去了皮毛，却不再受跳蚤之苦了。

可没过多久，弗勒希刚刚获得的哲学便受到了考验。一八五二年夏天，圭迪府邸内即将降临危机的种种迹象再度无声无息地聚集：抽

屉被拉开，绳头在箱子外晃荡……对狗而言，这份凶险就好比预示闪电的云之于牧羊人，预示战争的谣言之于政客。直指又一次变化、又一次旅行。但所为何来呢？皮箱被拖下来捆扎好，宝宝被保姆抱在怀里带出来，勃朗宁先生和夫人穿着旅行装束现身，出租马车停在门口。弗勒希达观地等在大厅。他们万事俱备之时，他也整装待发。现在所有人都坐进了马车，弗勒希轻盈地纵身一跃跟着跳上车。威尼斯、罗马或巴黎——他们这是要去哪儿呢？现在所有国家对他而言都毫无二致，四海之内皆兄弟。他已经吸取了教训。但当他终于从茫然中走出来时，却发现再多的哲学也不够用——他居然身处伦敦。

房子左右排列在以方方正正的砖头砌成的整洁道路的两旁。他脚下的人行道冰冷坚硬。从镶着黄铜门环的桃花心木大门里出来一位盛装淑女，身着一袭紫色毛绒拖地长裙，头别一顶缀饰着花朵的小花冠。她撩起大堆裙摆，带着倨傲的表情朝街上来回扫了两眼。马夫正弯腰将四轮大马车的踏脚放下。整条韦尔贝克街——这里正是韦尔贝克街——笼罩在豪华气派的红光中。这光不似意大利的光线那般澄澈凶猛，而是呈黄褐色，一因数以百万计的车轮不断碾过和数以百万计的马蹄不停践踏而尘土弥漫。伦敦正当盛季。人声鼎沸，嗡嗡声交织如云，会合而成的喧嚣覆盖住整个城市。一条威武的猎鹿犬由小侍童用链子牵着迎面走来。一位警察大摇大摆地踏着极有节奏的阔步经过，瞪着大牛眼左右察看。炖煮的味道、牛肉的味道、炙烤的味道、牛肉烧卷心菜的味道从上千个地下室里飘出来。一名穿制服的仆役将一封信投入邮箱。

为大都会的繁华所震慑，弗勒希踏上门阶的脚步踟蹰了片刻，威尔逊也顿住了。意大利的文明、宫廷、革命、大公爵和大公爵的侍卫们，此刻显得多么微不足道！当那名警察经过时，威尔逊不禁感谢上苍，还好她没嫁给里吉先生。接着，从街角一家酒馆里走出来一个邪恶的身影。一个男人不怀好意地睨视着。弗勒希一跃而上，冲进屋内。

希看来，伦敦的狗似乎都有一定的病态。众所周知，卡莱尔夫人 [40] 的狗尼禄从顶楼窗口跳了出去 [8]，企图自杀。据说，这是因为他无法承受住在切尼洛的压力。重返韦尔贝克街的弗勒希对此确实深信不疑。禁足，满满当当的小物什，晚上的蟑螂，白天的苍蝇，萦绕不去的羊膻味，餐具柜上永不缺席的香蕉——所有这些，再加上跟好几位穿着隆重却不常或根本不洗澡的男男女女耳鬓厮磨，都令他脾气暴躁、神经紧张。他经常在寄宿公寓的小衣橱下一趴就是几个小时。溜出门是不可能的，因为前门永远锁着；他必须等着谁给他系上狗链，带他出去。

只有两件事打破了他客居伦敦数周一成不变的单调生活。晚夏的一天，勃朗宁一家前往法汉姆拜访查尔斯·金斯利牧师 [41]。此时的意大利，土地早已赤裸坚硬得像块砖，跳蚤也开始肆虐，有气无力的狗儿拖着步子从一个阴影挪到另一个阴影里，甚至为碰上的某尊多纳泰罗 [42] 的雕像抬起的手臂投下的细条影子而心怀感激。可在法汉姆，这里的田野绿草如茵，池塘碧波荡漾，树林絮絮低语。草皮细软得脚掌踏上去都会弹起来似的。勃朗宁一家与金斯利一家共度了一整天。又一次，当弗勒希跟在他们身后踱步时，往昔的号角突然响起，旧日的狂喜再度现身——那是只野兔，还是只狐狸？弗勒希驰骋在萨里郡 [43] 的田野上，仿佛在三英里十字标那段旧日时光之后再没有这样痛快地跑过了。一只野鸡嗖地腾起，划出紫色和金色的光芒。他差一点儿就咬住野鸡的尾羽了，但恰在此刻，有人大喝一声。皮鞭猛然抽响。是查尔斯·金斯利牧师在厉声唤他跟上吗？反正，他停止了奔跑。法汉姆的树林没有遭到一丝破坏。

几天后，他正趴在韦尔贝克街的客厅里，勃朗宁夫人穿着散步的衣服走了进来，把他从小衣橱底下唤出来。她将狗链套在他的项圈上。自一八四六年九月以来，他们第一次一起走向温波尔街。等来到五十号门前，他们如往昔一样停下了脚步。他们如往昔一样静静地等待。男管家如往昔一样应门缓慢。过了好些时候门终于打开。蜷在地垫上的是卡蒂利内吗？那只有牙的老狗打了个哈欠，伸了个懒腰，对他们视若无睹。就像当年离家下楼时一样，他们悄无声息、偷偷摸摸地爬上楼。勃朗宁夫人轻手轻脚地打开一扇又一扇房门，似乎害怕会在里面看到什么，从一间房走到另一间。她看着看着就神情忧伤起来。“……那些房间在我看来，”她写道，“不知道怎么回事，又小又阴暗，家具既不合适，也不方便。”常春藤依然轻叩着后面卧房的窗玻璃，彩绘遮光帘依然遮蔽着光线。什么都没有改变。这么多年来仿佛什么都没有发生过似的。就这样，她从一个房间走到另一个房间，悲伤地回忆着。但还没等她结束探视，弗勒希就万分焦虑起来。万一巴雷特先生忽然进来，发现了他们该怎么办？万一他眉头一皱，转动钥匙，把他们永远锁在后面的卧室里该怎么办？勃朗宁夫人终于把所有

的房门都关好，再一次悄没声儿地下了楼。没错，她说，在她看来，这栋房子需要好好打扫。

自那之后，弗勒希心中唯有一个愿望——永远离开伦敦，永远离开英国。直到发现自己身处穿越海峡、驶往法国的轮船甲板，他才快活起来。那是一趟波涛汹涌的航行。横穿海峡花费了八个小时。随着轮船颠簸摇晃，弗勒希那些骚动不安的混杂记忆也在他的心头翻来滚去——身穿紫色毛绒裙的淑女，拎着大包小包、衣衫褴褛的男人，摄政公园，在骑马侍卫簇拥下浩荡而过的维多利亚女王，翠绿的英国草地，恶臭的英国人行道——他躺在甲板上任这一幕幕场景滑过脑海。他抬起头，看见一位严肃、高大的男士倚栏而立。

“卡莱尔先生！”他听见勃朗宁夫人喊道，就在那一瞬间——可别忘了这次横渡很是艰险——弗勒希狂吐起来。水手们拎着手桶和拖把冲了过去。“……可怜的狗儿，他被特别下令驱逐下了甲板。”勃朗宁夫人说。因为甲板仍属英国领地，而狗是不可以在甲板上呕吐的。这便是他对故国海岸的最后致意。

第六章 结局

弗勒希现在老了。英格兰之旅以及由此激发的种种回忆毫无疑问使他身心俱疲。大家都注意到，自从返回后，他总是宁可待在阴影里，而不是阳光下，即便佛罗伦萨的阴影热过温波尔街的阳光。他在雕像下面伸展四肢趴着，在喷泉出水口下方蜷着，只为享受几滴不时溅在毛皮上的水珠，他就这样趴着打上好几个小时的盹。年轻的狗儿会来到他近旁，他会给他们讲白教堂和温波尔街的故事，他会描绘苜蓿的气味和牛津街的味道，他会将记忆中一场接一场的革命生动演绎——大公爵们上位又垮台，可左边巷子里那只带斑点的西班牙猎犬——她却生生不息，始终都在，他会这么说。接着，脾气暴躁的兰多尔先生会急匆匆走过，假装愤怒地对他挥挥拳头；好心的艾莎·布莱格登小姐会停下来，从手提袋里掏出一块甘甜的饼干。市场里的农妇在菜篮子的阴影处用树叶给他铺了张床，还时不时给他扔串葡萄。整个佛罗伦萨——不论身份高贵还是平凡，不论是人还是狗——都认识他，喜欢他。

可他却渐渐变得老态龙钟了，连喷泉下面都懒得去趴了——因为鹅卵石地面对他这身老骨头来说太硬了——而是趴在勃朗宁夫人卧室的地板上，那块用人造大理石镶成的圭迪家族的纹章特别平滑；或者躲在客厅桌子底下的阴影里。从伦敦返回后没多久，一天他摊开四足趴在那儿很快就睡沉了。他深陷于年老者那种无梦的酣睡中。事实上今天他睡得比往日更沉，在他熟睡之际，黑暗仿佛在他周围变得更为浓稠。倘若他真能梦到什么，也很可能是梦见自己睡在原始森林的最深处，远离所有的阳光，与人类的声响隔绝——虽然他偶尔会梦见自己听见某只睡梦中的鸟儿正发出喃喃的啁啾，或是风儿拂过枝头时一只沉思的小猴儿发出柔声的轻笑。

树枝被猛然分开，光线涌入——到处洒落着一道道炫目的光束。猴儿们吱吱唧唧，鸟儿惊起，高声啼警。他腾地起身，睡意全消。他的周围泛起一场惊天动地的骚乱。他原是躺在客厅一张普通桌子的桌脚中间睡着了，现在却被众多翻腾的裙摆和起伏的裤脚包围，连桌子本身都开始剧烈地左右摇晃。他不知道该往哪个方向跑。究竟发生了什么？天知道这桌子到底中了什么邪。他抬高嗓音长号一声以示询问。

可弗勒希的问题没有得到满意的答案。仅能在此罗列几项最单调乏味的事实。简言之，似乎在十九世纪初，布莱辛顿伯爵夫人从一位

魔术师那儿购买了一个水晶球，但伯爵夫人“从来不明白它的用途”。事实上，除了水晶本身之外，她从没在那个球里看到过任何别的东西。然而，在她去世后，她的私人物件被拍卖，于是这个球落到了那些“眼力更深邃，目光更澄澈”的人手里，这些人在球里看到了水晶之外的东西。至于这位买家是否为斯坦厄普大人，“目光更澄澈”的人是不是他，无从查证。但可以确定的是，到了一八五二年，斯坦厄普大人确实拥有一个水晶球，而——他可以在球里看到“太阳的精灵”。显而易见的是，热情好客的贵族当然不会独享此等景观，斯坦厄普大人就习惯在午宴时展示他的水晶球，邀请朋友也来看看太阳的精灵。球内的景象拥有某种令人愉悦的奇特性质——但乔利先生对此免疫。水晶球开始风靡一时。幸运的是，一位伦敦的眼镜制造商很快发现自己能够制造出同样的水晶球，尽管他既不是埃及人，也不是魔术师。可想而知，英国产的水晶价格不菲。因此，在十九世纪五十年代初，很多人都开始痴迷水晶球。然而，“绝大多数人，”斯坦厄普大人说，“会使用水晶球，却没有承认这件事的道德勇气。”精灵在伦敦的流行程度变得如此明目张胆，以至于触发了某种警报。斯坦利大人向爱德华·利顿 [44] 爵士提议，“政府应当指派调查委员尽可能深入地发掘事实真相”。不知即将成立官方调查委员会的传言是否使精灵们大为警惕，也不知精灵是否也跟肉身一样，倾向于在幽闭空间内大量繁殖，但毋庸置疑的是，精灵开始显现不安分的迹象，并——成群结队地逃出水晶球，在桌腿里重寻安身之所。——不论动机为何，总之这个策略是成功的。水晶球价格昂贵，而桌子却几乎人人有之。因此，一八五二年冬天勃朗宁夫人回到意大利时，发现精灵已先行抵达；佛罗伦萨的桌子差不多全都被精灵占领了，无一幸免。“从公使馆人员到英籍药剂师，”她写道，“大家都在‘伺候’桌子……无处不是。人们围坐在桌旁，可不是为了玩惠斯特牌。”不，那是在破译桌腿传达的信息。比如，如果被问及某个孩子的岁数，桌子便会“极智慧地用桌腿敲击地面表达自己，并根据字母表的次序一一作答”。既然一张桌子能说出你的孩子已经四岁了，那么它岂非无所不能？旋转桌在商店里做起了广告。墙上贴满宣传神奇的“里窝那 [45] 的发现”的海报。到一八五四年，这股潮流蔓延速度如此之快，“美国有四十万个家庭表示……曾经亲身享受过与精灵沟通的乐趣”。而在英国则有消息称，爱德华·布尔沃-利顿爵士进口了“数个美国敲击精灵”到内布沃思，结果喜人——当小阿瑟·拉塞尔在用早餐时看见“一个身着破旧旧晨衣、相貌怪异的老绅士”瞪着他时，他被告知布尔沃-利顿爵士相信自己可以隐身了 [9]。

勃朗宁夫人首次在午餐会上朝斯坦厄普大人的水晶球里探望时，什么都没看见——只不过看出它的确是个极能象征那个时代精神的东西。太阳的精灵也的确告诉她，她就要去罗马了；但由于她并不打算去罗马，她违背了太阳精灵的话。“话说回来，”她坦诚地补充说，“我喜欢不可思议。”如果不爱冒险，那就不是她了。她曾经冒着生命危

险前去曼宁街，在距离温波尔街不到半小时车程的地方，发现了一个她想象之外的世界。所以，为什么佛罗伦萨附近就不应该存在这样一个须臾可至的世界呢——一个更好、更美丽的世界，死者在那儿栖身，徒劳地想触及我们的世界？无论如何，她愿意冒这个险。于是她也在桌旁就座。在座的有利顿先生——那位隐身老先生的聪明儿子，弗雷德里克·坦尼森先生，鲍尔斯先生，以及维拉里先生——他们每个人都坐在桌旁。待桌腿踢够了后，他们继续坐在桌旁喝着茶吃着奶油草莓侃侃而谈，而“佛罗伦萨隐入紫色群山，群星闪耀”。“……我们讲述了何等奇妙的故事，我们发誓见到了何等的奇迹！噢，艾莎，我们这群人全是信徒，只有罗伯特除外……”随后，胡子花白又耳背的柯卡普先生突然冲了进来。他特意过来只为宣告：“神灵世界的确存在——未来之国度也一样。我承认。我终于确信了。”向来自诩“离无神论者仅一步之遥”的柯卡普先生之所以改变了信仰，仅仅是因为他尽管耳聋，却听见了“三声响亮的叩击，令他惊跳起来”！勃朗宁夫人还怎能跟桌子保持距离呢？“要知道我是个沉溺于幻想的人，期望敲遍现实世界的每一扇门，只为逃离。”她写道。因此，她召集那些信徒来圭迪府邸。他们坐在那儿把手放在客厅的桌子上，试图逃离。

弗勒希在极度的忧惧中惊起。裙裾和裤腿翻滚在他四周。桌子靠一条腿立着。可是无论围坐桌旁的那些绅士淑女听见或看到了什么，弗勒希却什么也没听见，什么也没看见。的确，桌子单腿站立着，但只要你用力压住一边，任何一张桌子都能如此。他自己就曾经掀翻过桌子，还为此被臭骂。不过，勃朗宁夫人此刻大眼圆睁瞪视着，似乎看见外面有什么不可思议的东西。弗勒希冲向阳台，四下张望。是不是又有一位大公爵在横幅和火把的簇拥下骑马经过？弗勒希看到的只有街角的老丐妇，她蜷伏在自己的一篮甜瓜旁。可勃朗宁夫人显然看见了什么，看见了某样非常美妙的东西。就像以前在温波尔街时，有一次她无端抽泣起来，他瞧不出其中的缘由；还有一次她举起一张满是涂鸦的纸开怀大笑。但这次不一样，她此刻表情当中的某种东西吓到了他。这个房间，这张桌子，这些裙裾和裤腿里的某种东西，是他极其不喜欢的。

数个星期过去了，勃朗宁夫人越发全心沉溺于窥视隐形之物。遇上晴朗的大热天，她不去看蜥蜴在石头里爬进爬出，而是在桌前坐下；遇到满天星斗的黑夜，她并不读书或在纸上书写，而是趁勃朗宁先生外出时召唤威尔逊。威尔逊打着哈欠来了。接着，她们会一起坐在桌旁，一直等到那件主要用来遮阴的家具开始踢地板，勃朗宁夫人宣告说，这是在告诉威尔逊她马上就要生病了。威尔逊回答说自己只是很困。但没多久，不依不饶、正直——非常英派的威尔逊尖叫着陷入了晕厥，勃朗宁夫人满屋子乱转，忙着找“卫生醋”。在弗勒希看来，如此虚度一个宁静的晚上让人无比心塞，坐着读书岂不更好。

毋庸置疑，这些悬疑，无法形容的难闻气味，桌腿踢地，人的尖叫和醋味儿，全都令弗勒希神经紧张。小宝宝佩尼尼祈祷“请让弗勒希的毛再长回来”，这完全没问题，这个愿望弗勒希可以理解。可是像那样非要有臭烘烘、粗鄙长相的人在场，以及让那张明明只是桃花心木做的结实桌子做出古怪动作的祈祷方式，却触怒了他，也同样触怒了他那位强壮睿智、衣衫考究的男主人。然而，对弗勒希来说，比任何气味、任何古怪动作都要糟糕得多的，是勃朗宁夫人凝视窗外时脸上的表情。她似乎看见了什么美妙的事物，而其实那里什么也没有。弗勒希就活生生地站在她跟前，她的视线却穿透他，好像他不存在似的。这是她给予他的最残酷的表情，比她当初看到他咬了勃朗宁先生的腿时所表现出的冷漠与愤怒更残忍，比那次在摄政公园看见他的爪子被门夹住时发出的嘲讽的笑声更伤人。有些时刻，他还真有点儿怀念温波尔街和那里的桌子。至少温波尔街五十号的桌子从来没有单腿站立过。那张周围箍了一道铁圈，搁着她心爱装饰品的小桌总是默默地纹丝不动。在那些远远逝去的日子里，他只要一跳上巴雷特小姐的沙发，她就会立马清醒过来，注视着他。而如今，他再一次跳上她的沙发，她对他却置若罔闻。她在写作，完全忽视了他。她继续写道——“同时，应灵媒的要求，精灵之手从桌上拿起一个花环，把它戴到我的头上。做此事的那只手若以人手的尺寸来看，非常巨大，白皙如雪，非常美丽。它离我很近，就和此刻我正在写字的手一样近，我看得一清二楚。”弗勒希用力抓抓她。她的目光依旧穿透他，好似他不存在。他跳下沙发，冲下楼梯，跑到街上去了。

这是个酷热的午后。街角那位年老的女乞丐趴在她的甜瓜上睡着了。阳光似乎在空气中嗡嗡作响。弗勒希贴着街道阴凉的一侧，沿早就熟稔于心的道路，小跑着往集市而去。整个广场到处都是遮阳篷、货摊和鲜艳的太阳伞，色彩斑斓。卖东西的妇人坐在一篮篮水果旁，鸽子扑扇着翅膀，钟声轰鸣，鞭子抽得啪啪响。佛罗伦萨那些五颜六色的杂种狗跑进跑出，嗅嗅刨刨。无处不是繁忙如蜂巢，热闹似火炉。弗勒希搜寻着阴影，投身于老朋友卡特琳娜身侧，在她大篮子的阴影里趴了下来。一个插着红色和黄色花朵的棕色罐子在旁边投下另一片阴影。一座雕像矗立于他们的上方，右臂向外伸展，使阴影的颜色变成更深的紫色。弗勒希趴在这块阴凉处，看着年轻的狗狗忙活自己的事。他们龇牙低吼，拉扯嘶咬，伸着懒腰打着滚，纵情享受着青春年少的快乐。他们互相追逐，进进出出，猛绕圈子，就像当年他在巷子里追逐那只有斑点的西班牙猎犬。他的思绪一度回到了雷丁——想起了帕特里奇先生的那条西班牙猎犬，想起了自己的初恋，想起了年少的痴狂与纯真。没错，他也曾经风华正茂。他并不嫉妒正享受当下的他们。他已经知道这个世界是个生活的好地方。他现在与世无争了。集市上的妇人挠了挠他的耳根。以前她经常因为他偷葡萄或做其他小小的坏事而打他，可现在他老了，她也老了。他看着她的甜瓜，她挠着

他的耳朵；她织着她的毛衣，他打着他的盹。苍蝇围着切开露出果肉的粉色大甜瓜嗡嗡个不停。

阳光炙烤着百合花的叶子和绿白相间的太阳伞，散发着宜人的气息。大理石雕像慢慢升温，变得如香槟般新鲜。弗勒希趴在那儿，让阳光烤着皮毛，直透裸露的肌肤。等烤完一边，他翻了个身，再继续烤另一边。市场里的人始终叽叽喳喳个不停，讨价还价；妇人来来往往，不时停下来用手指捏一捏蔬菜和水果。嗡嗡作响的人声不绝于耳，弗勒希就爱听这声音。不一会儿，他便在百合花的阴影里睡着了。他睡着了，就像狗在做梦时那样。眼下他的腿抽搐起来——他是梦到自己在西班牙猎兔吗？当兔子从灌木丛中飞蹿而出，他是不是正沿着炽热的山坡向上奔跑，而黝黑的男人大喊着：“Span！Span！”然后他又一动不动地趴着。接着他吠了起来，又快又轻，连着叫了好几声。或许他听见雷丁的米特福德博士正在催促他的灵缇前去狩猎。后来他又温顺地摇摇尾巴。他是听见米特福德小姐喊道“坏狗！坏狗！”，遂夹着尾巴回到站在芜菁田里猛挥雨伞的米特福德小姐身旁了吗？接下来他趴着打了一会儿鼾，陷入老者愉悦的沉睡当中。突然，他身上的每一块肌肉都开始抽搐。他猛地被吓醒了。他以为自己身处何方，白教堂区的坏蛋之中？是不是又有一把刀架在他的脖子上？

无论如何，他在惊恐中从梦里醒来。他匆匆飞奔而去，仿佛在冲向安全地带，仿佛在搜寻庇护之所。集市上的妇人们大笑起来，拿烂葡萄丢他，唤他回来，但他没有理会。他穿过街道，差点被运货马车碾压到——站着驾车的男人诅咒他，抄起皮鞭想抽他。光着半截身子的小孩在他飞逃而过时朝他扔鹅卵石，嚷嚷着“疯狗！疯狗！”^[46]。他们的母亲跑到门口，惊慌地把孩子们拉回家。那么他疯掉了？是不是太阳把他的脑袋烤坏了？还是他再一次听见了维纳斯狩猎的号角？抑或是某个美国敲击精灵——那些住在桌腿里的精灵之一，最终附身于他？不管是何原因，他抄近路穿过一条又一条街道，直抵圭迪府邸的大门口。他直接蹿上楼，径直冲进客厅。

勃朗宁夫人正躺在沙发上看书。他冲进去时，她抬起头来，吓了一跳。不，不是精灵——只是弗勒希罢了。她笑了。接着，当他跃上沙发，把脸贴上她的脸时，她曾经写过的一首诗突然浮现于脑海：

你看此狗。就在昨日

忘记他存在于斯的我沉入冥想

直到思绪联翩招来泪珠串串

泪湿双颊的我倚枕而卧
一个如福纳斯 [47] 般毛茸茸的脑袋，径直
突然探近我的脸——两只清澈的
金色大眼让我的眼睛一亮——一片垂耳
轻抚我的双颊，将泪痕擦干！
我先是讶异，仿若那阿卡狄亚人，
惊艳于暮色树林里的似羊之神；
可是，当蓄满虬髯的脸庞再贴近，
我的泪一扫而光，我知道那是弗勒希，
从惊讶与悲伤中脱身——感恩真正的潘神
虽是低等生物，却是他引我上爱的高峰。

多年以前的某一天，她在温波尔街写下这首诗，当时的她很不快乐。而如今她是幸福的。她日渐苍老，弗勒希亦是如此。她弯下腰，与他依偎了一会儿。她脸上的宽嘴、大眼，再加上浓密鬃发，依旧与他怪异地相似。尽管她与弗勒希各不相同，却又像是从一个模子里铸出来的，或许他俩彼此唤醒了对方身上蛰伏的个性，使对方更加完整了。然而她是个女人，他却是条狗。勃朗宁夫人接着看书。随后，她又看了看弗勒希。可他却没有回应。他身上发生了一种异乎寻常的变化。“弗勒希！”她叫道。但他阒然无声。他曾经活过，现在他死了 [10]。仅此而已。说来也怪，客厅里的桌子静立着，纹丝未动。

[1] 彩绘织物——巴雷特小姐说：“我在打开的窗户前挂了一块透明的遮光帘。”她补充道，“爸爸取笑我说像糖果店的后窗，然而当阳光点燃城堡，他显然有所触动。”有人认为城堡及其他图样皆绘制在一片薄金属上，也有人认为那是一幅绣工精细的薄纱帘，但尚无确切定论。

[2] 凯尼恩先生由于缺了两颗门牙而有些口齿不清。——这里有夸大及臆测的成分。米特福德小姐为始作俑者。据称她在与霍恩先生的对话中曾说过：“你要知道，我们那位亲爱的朋友，除了自己的家人和一两位朋友外，从不见外人。她高度评价某某先生的‘朗读’技巧和出色品位，常请他为自己大声朗读新诗。……于是某某先生便站在壁炉前的地毯上，举起手稿，抬高音量，而我们亲爱的朋友则裹着印度披肩躺在沙发上，又厚又密的深色长发遮住低垂的头，全神贯注。现在，亲爱的某某先生掉了一颗门牙——其实不是门牙，而是门牙旁边的一颗牙——你看，这让发音出了问题。……一种讨喜的口齿不清、音节含混，所以‘silence’和‘ilence’听起来真的并无二致。……”毫无疑问，这位某某先生便是凯尼恩先生，因为维多利亚时代的人们对牙齿相关的话题出奇地敏感，因此必须隐去其名。只不过此事牵涉英国文学中更重要的问题。长久以来，巴雷特小姐被指耳朵有毛病。米特福德小姐则认为，凯尼恩先生牙齿的问题更值得诟病。但另一方面，巴雷特小姐本人却坚称自己作诗押韵跟他牙齿的缺失或她听力的低下，都没有关系。她写道：“我对韵文主题的重视，远甚于押韵的正确性，因此冷酷地决定孤注一掷，尝试多项实验。”因此她才会“冷酷地”把“angels”和“candles”、“heaven”和“unbelieving”、“islands”和“silence”当成同一个韵脚。当然，此事还待学者们定夺。然而任何一位研究过勃朗宁夫人性格及行为的人，想必都会认为无论对于艺术还是爱情，她都是一位刻意打破规则的人，因此才成为促成现代诗发展的“同谋共犯”。

[3] 黄手套——据奥尔夫人的《勃朗宁生平》记载，他戴柠檬黄的手套。布里德尔·福克斯夫人曾在一八三五至一八三六年见过他，她说过：“那时的他修长黝黑，非常帅气，而——容我在此暗示——有一点点纨绔子弟的味道，特别喜欢穿戴柠檬黄小山羊皮手套之类的东西。”

[4] “他被偷走了。”——事实上，弗勒希被偷了三次，但为求结构紧凑，这里将三次浓缩为一次。巴雷特小姐付给偷狗贼的赎金合计为二十英镑。

[5] 多年后，当她坐在意大利阳光灿烂的阳台上写作时，那些面孔还会再次浮现于她的眼前。——长诗《奥罗拉·利》中的人物皆为虚构，想必当勃朗宁夫人写这首诗时，部分最生动的诗行描写的就是伦敦的一个贫民窟（尽管对于一个艺术家而言，它自然是扭曲的，更何况她只是坐在一辆四轮马车上见过一次，威尔逊还拽着她的衣角）。显然，勃朗宁夫人对人类生活的满满好奇心，单靠卧室盥洗台上的荷马、乔叟半身像是满足不了的。

[6] 莉莉·威尔逊跟侍卫里吉先生陷入热恋。——莉莉·威尔逊的一生鲜为人知，亟须传记作者给予一注。勃朗宁夫妇信札中所提及的人物，除主要人物外，没有谁比威尔逊更能激发好奇心并心生困惑了。她的教名为莉莉，姓威尔逊。这就是我们知道的跟她的出身和成长背景相关的一切了。她可能是霍普恩德附近一位农场主的女儿，因为举止端庄、围裙洁净而受到巴雷特府邸厨师的赏识，得以来到府邸当差。那时候巴雷

特夫人找了个借口进到那个房间观察，认为她相当不错，于是指派她担任伊丽莎白小姐的女仆。又或者因为她是个伦敦佬，或是来自苏格兰——都有可能。无论如何，一八四六年时，她在服侍巴雷特小姐，而——是个“报酬不菲的仆人”——年薪十六英镑。由于她几乎跟弗勒希一样沉默寡言，所以她的性格几乎不为人知；又由于巴雷特小姐从未为她写过诗，她的面目远不如弗勒希清晰。不过从信札当中的各种暗示判断，显然她从一开始便属于严肃端庄到非人性化地步的英国女仆类型，在当时是英国地下室用人区的荣耀。同样显而易见的是，威尔逊对于权力及仪典也严格遵守。她极端尊敬“那个房间”；她肯定是第一个坚持下级仆役和上级仆役必须在不同的地方吃布丁的人。所有这些都隐匿在她用手打弗勒希后说的那句话当中——“因为他该打”。自不待言的是，如此推崇传统，势必催生对反传统的极端恐惧，因此当威尔逊面对曼宁街的下层社会时，她比巴雷特小姐更为惊悚，更为确定那些偷狗贼都是杀人犯。与此同时，她战胜恐惧，陪同巴雷特小姐登上马车的英雄行为，显示出对女主人的忠诚在她心中是多么地根深蒂固。巴雷特小姐去哪儿，威尔逊一定跟着去哪儿。私奔事件发生时，她成功地践行了这一原则。巴雷特小姐曾对威尔逊的勇气有所怀疑，但她的疑虑毫无根据。“威尔逊，”她写道——这些是她以巴雷特小姐的身份写给勃朗宁先生的最后一些文字——“对我不能再好了，而我……却指责她‘胆小’，怕她会胆怯！我开始认为胆小的人一旦受到适当的激励，会比谁都更勇猛。”顺便说一句，此处值得我们花费一秒钟关注一下仆役极不稳定的生活状态。如果威尔逊不跟巴雷特小姐走，就巴雷特小姐所知，肯定会“在日落前流落街头”，只怀揣着几个先令，或许还是从十六英镑年薪里攒下来的积蓄。接下来她将遭遇何种命运？由于十九世纪四十年代的英国小说鲜少讨论小姐贴身女仆的生活，传记作者的探照灯又从未探寻至如此低的阶层，这个问题恐怕永远无解。但威尔逊决定冒险，宣称将“跟随我到天涯海角”。她抛弃了地下室，抛弃了“那个房间”，还抛弃了温波尔街所代表的整个世界——这个世界对威尔逊意味着一切文明礼教，一切正确思想和体面生活——投身异国他乡的道德败坏与反宗教。再没有比观察威尔逊到了意大利之后，在英国式的礼教和与生俱来的热情之间所进行的挣扎更有趣的事了。她嘲笑意大利的宫廷，因意大利的名画而震惊。然而，“惊骇于维纳斯的有失体统”的她，却难得地没有忘记一项事实：任何女人脱光衣服之后，都是赤裸的。或许她曾经想过：就连我，每天也免不了得赤裸两三秒钟吧。所以，“她觉得自己应该再尝试一次，或许那令人心烦的端庄会消逝，谁知道呢”？它显然是迅速消失了！没多久，她不仅喜欢上意大利，还和大公爵的贴身侍卫里吉先生坠入爱河。这些侍卫都是既高尚又有道德的男士，一有人身高达六英尺。她戴起了订婚戒指，打发了一位来自伦敦的追求者，又开始学习意大利语。然而好景不长，待拨云散雾之后，我们看到威尔逊被抛弃了——“背信弃义的里吉解除了和威尔逊的婚约”。从中作梗的似乎是里吉的兄弟，他是普拉托的男子服饰用品批发商。里吉辞去大公爵贴身侍卫一职，采纳了兄弟的建议，在普拉托做起了男子服饰用品的零售买卖。或许是因为他的新工作需要一位对男子服饰用品有一业知识的妻子，或许是因为普拉托有个女孩具备了这类一业知识，可以肯定的是，他不再经常写信给威尔逊，尽管他本应该写。到底这位既高尚又有道德的男士干了什么坏事，令勃朗宁夫人在一八五〇年慨叹道：“（威尔逊）已经完全想开了，多亏她头脑清楚、个性稳健。她怎么能再继续爱这样的男人呢？”——里吉为何在如此短的时间里便被贬为“这样的男人”，我们无从猜测。被里吉抛弃的威尔逊与勃朗宁一家关系愈来愈密切。她不仅担任贴身女仆，还烘烤蛋糕、缝制衣裳，并——成为宝宝佩尼尼的慈爱保姆；宝宝就此认定她属于家庭成员之一，不叫她别的，而是直呼其名莉莉。一八五五年，威尔逊嫁于勃朗宁家的男仆——罗马尼奥利，“一位心地善良的好人”；两人共同照料勃朗宁宅邸一段时间。然而，一八五九年，罗伯特·勃朗宁“接下兰多尔监护人一职”，这个职位责任重大，一顾虑甚多，因为兰多尔的种种习惯让人头疼。“完全不懂得克制自己，”勃朗宁夫人写道，“却极善猜忌。”在种种状况下，威尔逊被指派做“他的保姆”，“除他的配额所余之外”，再领年薪二十二英镑。后来她的薪水一直加到了三十英镑，因为“老狮子”兰多尔“冲动如老虎”，他若对晚餐不满意，二话不说便把盘子扔出窗外或摔在地上；又常怀疑仆人偷偷打开桌子抽屉。担任他的保姆，诚如勃朗宁夫人所说：“须冒若千危险，换作是我，宁愿躲得远远的。”但对见识过巴雷特先生及各种精灵

的威尔逊来说，几个扔出窗外或摔在地上的盘子不过是小菜一碟——诸如此类的危险充斥着日常工作。

[7] 他饱受跳蚤之苦。——显然十九世纪中叶的意大利因其跳蚤而闻名。事实上，这些跳蚤让他们打破了不可逾越的传统。比方说，一八五八年在罗马，纳撒尼尔·霍桑去跟布雷默小姐喝茶时：“我们谈到跳蚤——这种小昆虫在罗马无孔不入，入侵每个人的私生活，如此司空见惯，在所难免，以至于大家聊起蚤患之苦毫不避讳。可怜了娇小的布雷默小姐，替我们倒茶时就因一只跳蚤而不堪其扰……”

[8] 尼禄从顶楼窗口跳了出去。——据卡莱尔所说，尼禄（1849-1860）是条“毛发浓密的小古巴犬（可能是马耳他狗或是杂种狗），毛色主要为白色，是一条情深意重、充满活力的小狗，除此之外优点甚少，而——几乎毫无训练”。关于它的一生资料丰富，却不适用于此。只需提及它曾被偷，它的脖子上被绑了一张支票带回给卡莱尔，那金额足够买一匹马；而——“我把它抛进阿伯道尔的海里不止两三次，它一点儿都不喜欢”。一八五〇年，它从图书室的窗口跳出去，避开了通风井栏杆的尖顶，“啪嗒”一声摔在人行道上。“那是早餐后，”卡莱尔夫人说，“它一直站在敞开的窗户旁看小鸟……我躺在床上，突然听见伊丽莎白在松木隔板后面尖叫：噢，上帝！噢，尼禄！然后像狂风般冲下楼梯，跑出门外，来到街上……我穿着睡衣跟着冲出去找她……卡莱尔先生从卧室里下来，下巴上满是肥皂泡泡，问道：‘尼禄出什么事了？’——‘噢，先生，它肯定四条腿全摔断了！它刚从你的窗口跳出去！’——‘上帝保佑！’卡莱尔先生说完后便转身回去继续把胡子刮完。”然而，尼禄一根骨头都没摔断，活得好好的。后来他被一辆屠夫的运货马车碾过，终于在一八六〇年二月一日因那次车祸的后遗症去世，被埋在切尼洛花园内的一块小石碑下面。

它是否真的想自杀，还是诚如卡莱尔夫人暗示的，只是想跃起捉鸟而已，或许值得我们写一篇相当有意思的犬类心理学论文。有人认为拜伦的狗因为同情拜伦，也跟着他一起发了疯；还有人认为尼禄是因为卡莱尔先生的缘故，罹患不可救药的抑郁症。关于狗与时代精神的关系——譬如我们是否能形容某条狗是伊丽莎白时期的，或奥古斯都时期的，或维多利亚时期的——以及狗主人之诗作和哲学思想对他们的狗所造成的影响，这些主题值得大书特书，在此篇幅有限，无法深谈。我们只能说，尼禄跳楼的动机扑朔迷离。

[9] 布尔沃-利顿爵士相信自己可以隐身了。——休·杰克逊夫人在《维多利亚时代的童年》中写道：“阿瑟·拉塞尔爵士告诉我，多年以前，他还是个小孩子的时候，他母亲带他去内布沃思。第二天早晨他在大餐厅里吃早饭，一个身着破旧晨衣、相貌怪异的老绅士走了进来，缓缓绕餐桌而行，轮流瞪视每一位客人。他听见母亲的邻座对其耳语：‘不必理会，他以为自己可以隐身。’那便是利顿爵士本尊。”（第十七至第十八页）

[10] 现在他死了。——弗勒希当然是死了，但是他死亡的日期及方式都不为人知。唯一相关的记载是：“弗勒希寿终正寝，葬于圭迪府邸地穴。”勃朗宁夫人葬于佛罗伦萨的英国公墓，罗伯特·勃朗宁则葬于威斯敏斯特教堂。因此，弗勒希至今仍躺在勃朗宁夫妇曾经生活过的那幢宅邸之下。

Chapter 1 THREE MILE CROSS

It is universally admitted that the family from which the subject of this memoir claims descent is one of the greatest antiquity. Therefore it is not strange that the origin of the name itself is lost in obscurity. Many million years ago the country which is now called Spain seethed uneasily in the ferment of creation. Ages passed; vegetation appeared; where there is vegetation the law of Nature has decreed that there shall be rabbits; where there are rabbits, Providence has ordained there shall be dogs. There is nothing in this that calls for question or comment. But when we ask why the dog that caught the rabbit was called a Spaniel, then doubts and difficulties begin. Some historians say that when the Carthaginians landed in Spain the common soldiers shouted with one accord 'Span! Span!' - for rabbits darted from every scrub, from every bush. The land was alive with rabbits. And span in the Carthaginian tongue signifies Rab-bit. Thus the land was called Hispania, or Rabbit-land, and the dogs, which were almost instantly perceived in full pur-suit of the rabbits, were called Spaniels or rabbit dogs.

There many of us would be content to let the matter rest; but truth compels us to add that there is another school of thought which thinks differently. The word Hispania, these scholars say, has nothing whatever to do with the Carthagin-ian word span. Hispania derives from the Basque word españa, signifying an edge or boundary. If that is so, rabbits, bushes, dogs, soldiers - the whole of that romantic and pleasant picture, must be dismissed from the mind; and we must simply suppose that the Spaniel is called a spaniel because Spain is called España. As for the third school of antiquaries which maintains that just as a lover calls his mistress monster or monkey, so the Spaniards called their favourite dogs crooked or cragged (the word españa can be made to take these meanings) because a spaniel is notoriously the opposite - that is too fanciful a conjecture to be seriously entertained.

Passing over these theories, and many more which need not detain us here, we reach Wales in the middle of the tenth century. The spaniel is already there, brought, some say, by the Spanish clan of Ebhor or Ivor many centuries previously; and certainly by the middle of the tenth century a dog of high repute and value. 'The Spaniel of the King is a pound in value,' Howel Dha laid it down in his Book of Laws. And when we remember what the pound could buy in the year AD 948 - how many wives, slaves, horses, oxen, turkeys and geese - it is plain that the spaniel was already a dog of value and reputation. He had his place already by the King's side. His family was held in honour before those of many famous monarchs. He was taking his ease in palaces when the Plantagenets and the Tudors and the Stuarts were following other people's ploughs through other people's mud. Long before the Howards, the Cavendishes or the Russells had risen above the common ruck of Smiths, Joneses and Tomkins, the spaniel family was a family distinguished and apart. And as the centuries took their way, minor branches broke off from the parent stem. By degrees, as English history pursues its course, there came into existence at least seven famous Spaniel families - the Clumber, the Sussex, the Norfolk, the Black Field, the Cocker, the Irish Water and the English Water, all deriving from the original spaniel of prehistoric days but showing distinct characteristics, and therefore no doubt claiming privileges as distinct. That there was an aristocracy of dogs by the time Queen Elizabeth was on the throne Sir Philip Sidney bears witness: '..... greyhounds, Spaniels and Hounds', he observes, 'whereof the first might seem the Lords, the second the Gentlemen, and the last the Yeomen of dogs', he writes in the Arcadia.

But if we are thus led to assume that the Spaniels followed human example, and looked up to Greyhounds as their superiors and considered Hounds beneath them, we have to admit that their aristocracy was founded on better reasons than ours. Such at least must be the conclusion of anyone who studies the laws of the Spaniel Club. By that august body it is plainly laid down what constitute the vices of a spaniel, and what constitute its virtues. Light eyes, for example, are undesirable; curled ears are still worse; to be born with a light nose or a topknot is nothing less than fatal. The merits of the spaniel are equally clearly defined. His head must be smooth, rising without a too-decided stoop from the muzzle; the skull must be comparatively rounded and well developed with plenty of room for brain power; the eyes must be full but not gozzled; the general expression must be one of intelligence and gentleness. The spaniel that exhibits these points is encouraged and bred from; the span-iel who persists in perpetuating topknots and light noses is cut off from the privileges and emoluments of his kind. Thus the judges lay down the law and, laying down the law, impose penalties and privileges which ensure that the law shall be obeyed.

But, if we now turn to human society, what chaos and confusion meet the eye! No Club has any such jurisdiction upon the breed of man. The Heralds' College is the nearest approach we have to the Spaniel Club. It at least makes some attempt to preserve the purity of the human family. But when we ask what constitutes noble birth - should our eyes be light or dark, our ears curled or straight, are topknots fatal, our judges merely refer us to our coats of arms. You have none perhaps. Then you are nobody. But once make good your claim to sixteen quarterings, prove your right to a coronet, and then they say you are not only born, but nobly born into the bargain. Hence it is that not a muffineer in all Mayfair lacks its lion couchant or its mermaid rampant. Even our linendrapers mount the Royal Arms above their doors, as though that were proof that their sheets are safe to sleep in. Everywhere rank is claimed and its virtues are asserted. Yet when we come to survey the Royal Houses of Bourbon, Hapsburg and Hohenzollern, decorated with how many coronets and quarterings, couchant and rampant with how many lions and leopards, and find them now in exile, deposed from authority, judged unworthy of respect, we can but shake our heads and admit that the Judges of the Spaniel Club judged better. Such is the lesson that is enforced directly we turn from these high matters to consider the early life of Flush in the family of the Mitfords.

About the end of the eighteenth century a family of the famous spaniel breed was living near Reading in the house of a certain Dr Midford or Mitford. That gentleman, in conformity with the canons of the Heralds' College, chose to spell his name with a t, and thus claimed descent from the Northumberland family of the Mitfords of Bertram Castle. His wife was a Miss Russell, and sprang, if remotely, still decidedly from the ducal house of Bedford. But the mating of Dr Mitford's ancestors had been carried on with such wanton disregard for principles that no bench of judges could have admitted his claim to be well bred or have allowed him to perpetuate his kind. His eyes were light; his ears were curled; his head exhibited the fatal topknot. In other words, he was utterly selfish, recklessly extravagant, worldly, insincere and addicted to gambling. He wasted his own fortune, his wife's fortune, and his daughter's earnings. He deserted them in his prosperity and sponged upon them in his infirmity. Two points he had in his favour indeed, great personal beauty - he was like an Apollo until gluttony and intemperance changed Apollo into Bacchus - and he was genuinely devoted to dogs. But there can be no doubt that, had there been a Man Club corresponding to the Spaniel Club in existence, no spelling of Mitford with a t instead of with a d, no calling cousins with the Mitfords of Bertram Castle, would have availed to protect him from contumely and contempt, from all the penalties of outlawry and ostracism, from being branded as a mongrel man unfitted to carry on his kind. But he was a human being. Nothing therefore prevented him from marrying a lady of birth and breeding, from living for over eighty years, from having in his possession several generations of greyhounds and spaniels and from begetting a daughter.

All researches have failed to fix with any certainty the exact year of Flush's birth, let alone the month or the day; but it is likely that he was born some time early in the year 1842. It is also probable that he was directly descended from Tray (c. 1816), whose points, preserved unfortunately only in the untrustworthy medium of poetry, prove him to have been a red cocker spaniel of merit. There is every reason to think that Flush was the son of that 'real old cocking spaniel' for whom Dr Mitford refused twenty guineas 'on account of his excellence in the field'. It is to poetry, alas, that we have to trust for our most detailed description of Flush himself as a young dog. He was of that particular shade of dark brown which in sunshine flashes 'all over into gold'. His eyes were 'startled eyes of hazel bland'. His ears were 'tasselled'; his 'slender feet' were 'canopied in fringes' and his tail was broad. Making allowance for the exigencies of rhyme and the inaccuracies of poetic diction, there is nothing here but what would meet with the approval of the Spaniel Club. We cannot doubt that Flush was a pure-bred Cocker of the red variety marked by all the characteristic excellences of his kind.

The first months of his life were passed at Three Mile Cross, a working man's cottage near Reading. Since the Mitfords had fallen on evil days - Kerenhappock was the only servant - the chair-covers were made by Miss Mitford herself and of the cheapest material; the most important article of furniture seems to have been a large table; the most important room a large greenhouse - it is unlikely that Flush was surrounded by any of those luxuries, rain-proof kennels, cement walks, a maid or boy attached to his person, that would now be accorded a dog of his rank. But he thrived; he enjoyed with all the vivacity of his temperament most of the pleasures and some of the licences natural to his youth and sex. Miss Mitford, it is true, was much confined to the cottage. She had to read aloud to her father hour after hour; then to play cribbage; then, when at last he slumbered, to write and write and write at the table in the greenhouse in the attempt to pay their bills and settle their debts. But at last the longed-for moment would come. She thrust her papers aside, clapped a hat on her head, took her umbrella and set off for a walk across the fields with her dogs. Spaniels are by nature sympathetic; Flush, as his story proves, had an even excessive appreciation of human emotions. The sight of his dear mistress snuffing the fresh air at last, letting it ruffle her white hair and redden the natural freshness of her face, while the lines on her huge brow smoothed themselves out, excited him to gambols whose wildness was half sympathy with her own delight. As she strode through the long grass, so he leapt hither and thither, parting its green curtain. The cool globes of dew or rain broke in showers of iridescent spray about his nose; the earth, here hard, here soft, here hot, here cold, stung, teased and tickled the soft pads of his feet. Then what a variety of smells interwoven in subtlest combination thrilled his nostrils; strong smells of earth, sweet smells of flowers; nameless smells of leaf and bramble; sour smells as they crossed the road; pungent smells as they entered bean-fields. But suddenly down the wind came tearing a smell sharper, stronger, more lacerating than any - a smell that ripped across his brain stirring a thousand instincts, releasing a million memories - the smell of hare, the smell of fox. Off he flashed like a fish drawn in a rush through water further and further. He forgot his mistress; he forgot all human kind. He heard dark men cry 'Span! Span!' He heard whips crack. He raced; he rushed. At last he stopped bewildered; the incantation faded; very slowly, wagging his tail sheepishly, he trotted back across the fields to where Miss Mitford stood shouting 'Flush! Flush! Flush!' and waving her umbrella. And once at least the call was even more imperious; the hunting horn roused deeper instincts, summoned wilder and stronger emotions that transcended memory and obliterated grass, trees, hare, rabbit, fox in one wild shout of ecstasy. Love blazed her torch in his eyes; he heard the hunting horn of Venus. Before he was well out of his puppyhood, Flush was a father.

Such conduct in a man even, in the year 1842, would have called for some excuse from a biographer; in a woman no excuse could have availed; her name must have been blotted in ignominy from the page. But the moral code of dogs, whether better or worse, is certainly different from ours, and there was nothing in Flush's conduct in this respect that requires a veil now, or unfitted him for the society of the purest and the chastest in the land then. There is evidence, that is to say, that the elder brother of Dr Pusey was anxious to buy him. Deducing from the known character of Dr Pusey the probable character of his brother, there must have been something serious, solid, promising well for future excellence whatever might be the levity of the present in Flush even as a puppy. But a much more significant testimony to the attractive nature of his gifts is that, even though Mr Pusey wished to buy him, Miss Mitford refused to sell him. As she was at her wits' end for money, scarcely knew indeed what tragedy to spin, what annual to edit, and was reduced to the repulsive expedient of asking her friends for help, it must have gone hard with her to refuse the sum offered by the elder brother of Dr Pusey. Twenty pounds had been offered for Flush's father. Miss Mitford might well have asked ten or fifteen for Flush. Ten or fifteen pounds was a princely sum, a magnificent sum to have at her disposal. With ten or fifteen pounds she might have re-covered her chairs, she might have re-stocked her greenhouse, she might have bought herself an entire wardrobe, and 'I have not bought a bonnet, a cloak, a gown, hardly a pair of gloves', she wrote in 1842, 'for four years'.

But to sell Flush was unthinkable. He was of the rare order of objects that cannot be associated with money. Was he not of the still rarer kind that, because they typify what is spiritual, what is beyond price, become a fitting token of the disinterestedness of friendship; may be offered in that spirit to a friend, if one is lucky enough to have one, who is more like a daughter than a friend; to a friend who lies secluded all through the summer months in a back bedroom in Wimpole Street, to a friend who is no other than England's foremost poetess, the brilliant, the doomed, the adored Elizabeth Barrett herself? Such were the thoughts that came more and more frequently to Miss Mitford as she watched Flush rolling and scampering in the sunshine; as she sat by the couch of Miss Barrett in her dark, ivy-shaded London bedroom. Yes; Flush was worthy of Miss Barrett; Miss Barrett was worthy of Flush. The sacrifice was a great one; but the sacrifice must be made. Thus, one day, probably in the early summer of the year 1842, a remarkable couple might have been seen taking their way down Wimpole Street - a very short, stout, shabby, elderly lady, with a bright red face and bright white hair, who led by the chain a very spirited, very inquisitive, very well-bred golden cocker spaniel puppy. They walked almost the whole length of the street until at last they paused at No.50. Not without trepidation, Miss Mitford rang the bell.

Even now perhaps nobody rings the bell of a house in Wimpole Street without trepidation. It is the most august of London streets, the most impersonal. Indeed, when the world seems tumbling to ruin, and civilisation rocks on its foundations, one has only to go to Wimpole Street; to pace that avenue; to survey those houses; to consider their uniformity; to marvel at the window curtains and their consistency; to admire the brass knockers and their regularity; to observe butchers tendering joints and cooks receiving them; to reckon the incomes of the inhabitants and infer their consequent submission to the laws of God and man - one has only to go to Wimpole Street and drink deep of the peace breathed by authority in order to heave a sigh of thankfulness that, while Corinth has fallen and Messina has tumbled, while crowns have blown down the wind and old Empires have gone up in flames, Wimpole Street has remained unmoved, and, turning from Wimpole Street into Oxford Street, a prayer rises in the heart and bursts from the lips that not a brick of Wimpole Street may be re-pointed, not a curtain washed, not a butcher fail to tender or a cook to receive the sirloin, the haunch, the breast, the ribs of mutton and beef for ever and ever, for as long as Wimpole Street remains, civilisation is secure.

The butlers of Wimpole Street move ponderously even to-day; in the summer of 1842 they were more deliberate still. The laws of livery were then more stringent; the ritual of the green baize apron for cleaning silver; of the striped waistcoat and swallow-tail black coat for opening the hall door, was more closely observed. It is likely then that Miss Mitford and Flush were kept waiting at least three minutes and a half on the door-step. At last, however, the door of number fifty was flung wide; Miss Mitford and Flush were ushered in. Miss Mitford was a frequent visitor; there was nothing to surprise, though something to subdue her, in the sight of the Barrett family mansion. But the effect upon Flush must have been overwhelming in the extreme. Until this moment he had set foot in no house but the working man's cottage at Three Mile Cross. The boards there were bare; the mats were frayed; the chairs were cheap. Here there was nothing bare, nothing frayed, nothing cheap - that Flush could see at a glance. Mr Barrett, the owner, was a rich merchant; he had a large family of grown-up sons and daughters, and a retinue, proportionately large, of servants. His house was furnished in the fashion of the late 'thirties, with some tincture, no doubt, of that Eastern fantasy which had led him when he built a house in Shropshire to adorn it with the domes and crescents of Moorish architecture. Here in Wimpole Street such extravagance would not be allowed; but we may suppose that the high dark rooms were full of ottomans and carved mahogany; tables were twisted; filigree ornaments stood upon them; daggers and swords hung upon wine-dark walls; curious objects brought from his East Indian property stood in recesses, and thick rich carpets clothed the floors.

But as Flush trotted up behind Miss Mitford, who was behind the butler, he was more astonished by what he smelt than by what he saw. Up the funnel of the staircase came warm whiffs of joints roasting, of fowls basting, of soups simmering - ravishing almost as food itself to nostrils used to the meagre savour of Kerenhappock's penurious fries and hashes. Mixing with the smell of food were further smells - smells of cedarwood and sandalwood and mahogany; scents of male bodies and female bodies; of men servants and maid servants; of coats and trousers; of crinolines and mantles; of curtains of tapestry, of curtains of plush; of coal dust and fog; of wine and cigars. Each room as he passed it - dining-room, drawing-room, library, bedroom - wafted out its own contribution to the general stew; while, as he set down first one paw and then another, each was caressed and retained by the sensuality of rich pile carpets closing amorously over it. At length they reached a closed door at the back of the house. A gentle tap was given; gently the door was opened.

Miss Barrett's bedroom - for such it was - must by all accounts have been dark. The light, normally obscured by a curtain of green damask, was in summer further dimmed by the ivy, the scarlet runners, the convolvuluses and the nasturtiums which grew in the window-box. At first Flush could distinguish nothing in the pale greenish gloom but five white globes glimmering mysteriously in mid-air. But again it was the smell of the room that overpowered him. Only a scholar who has descended step by step into a mausoleum and there finds himself in a crypt, crusted with fungus, slimy with mould, exuding sour smells of decay and antiquity, while half-obliterated marble busts gleam in mid-air and all is dimly seen by the light of the small swinging lamp which he holds, and dips and turns, glancing now here, now there - only the sensations of such an explorer into the buried vaults of a ruined city can compare with the riot of emotions that flooded Flush's nerves as he stood for the first time in an invalid's bedroom, in Wimpole Street, and smelt eau-de-Cologne.

Very slowly, very dimly, with much sniffing and pawing, Flush by degrees distinguished the outlines of several articles of furniture. That huge object by the window was perhaps a wardrobe. Next to it stood, conceivably, a chest of drawers. In the middle of the room swam up to the surface what seemed to be a table with a ring round it; and then the vague amorphous shapes of armchair and table emerged. But everything was disguised. On top of the wardrobe stood three white busts; the chest of drawers was surmounted by a bookcase; the bookcase was pasted over with crimson merino; the washing-table had a coronal of shelves upon it; on top of the shelves that were on top of the washing-table stood two more busts. Nothing in the room was itself; everything was something else. Even the window-blind was not a simple muslin blind; it was a painted fabric with a design of castles and gateways and groves of trees, and there were several peasants taking a walk. Looking-glasses further distorted these already distorted objects so that there seemed to be ten busts of ten poets instead of five; four tables instead of two. And suddenly there was a more terrifying confusion still. Suddenly Flush saw staring back at him from a hole in the wall another dog with bright eyes flashing, and tongue lolling! He paused amazed. He advanced in awe.

Thus advancing, thus withdrawing, Flush scarcely heard, save as the distant drone of wind among the tree-tops, the murmur and patter of voices talking. He pursued his investigations, cautiously, nervously, as an explorer in a forest softly advances his foot, uncertain whether that shadow is a lion, or that root a cobra. At last, however, he was aware of huge objects in commotion over him; and, unstrung as he was by the experiences of the past hour, he hid himself, trembling, behind a screen. The voices ceased. A door shut. For one instant he paused, bewildered, unstrung. Then with a pounce as of clawed tigers memory fell upon him. He felt himself alone - deserted. He rushed to the door. It was shut. He pawed, he listened. He heard footsteps descending. He knew them for the familiar footsteps of his mistress. They stopped. But no - on they went, down they went. Miss Mitford was slowly, was heavily, was reluctantly descending the stairs. And as she went, as he heard her footsteps fade, panic seized upon him. Door after door shut in his face as Miss Mitford went downstairs; they shut on freedom; on fields; on hares; on grass; on his adored, his venerated mistress - on the dear old woman who had washed him and beaten him and fed him from her own plate when she had none too much to eat herself - on all he had known of happiness and love and human goodness! There! The front door slammed. He was alone. She had deserted him.

Then such a wave of despair and anguish overwhelmed him, the irrevocableness and implacability of fate so smote him, that he lifted up his head and howled aloud. A voice said 'Flush'. He did not hear it. 'Flush', it repeated a second time. He started. He had thought himself alone. He turned. Was there something alive in the room with him? Was there something on the sofa? In the wild hope that this being, whatever it was, might open the door, that he might still rush after Miss Mitford and find her - that this was some game of hide-and-seek such as they used to play in the greenhouse at home - Flush darted to the sofa.

'Oh, Flush!' said Miss Barrett. For the first time she looked him in the face. For the first time Flush looked at the lady lying on the sofa.

Each was surprised. Heavy curls hung down on either side of Miss Barrett's face; large bright eyes shone out; a large mouth smiled. Heavy ears hung down on either side of Flush's face; his eyes, too, were large and bright: his mouth was wide. There was a likeness between them. As they gazed at each other each felt: Here am I - and then each felt: But how different! Hers was the pale worn face of an invalid, cut off from air, light, freedom. His was the warm ruddy face of a young animal; instinct with health and energy. Broken asunder, yet made in the same mould, could it be that each completed what was dormant in the other? She might have been - all that; and he - But no. Between them lay the widest gulf that can separate one being from another. She spoke. He was dumb. She was woman; he was dog. Thus closely united, thus immensely divided, they gazed at each other. Then with one bound Flush sprang on to the sofa and laid himself where he was to lie for ever after - on the rug at Miss Barrett's feet.

Chapter 2 THE BACK BEDROOM

The summer of 1842 was, historians tell us, not much different from other summers, yet to Flush it was so different that he must have doubted if the world itself were the same. It was a summer spent in a bedroom; a summer spent with Miss Barrett. It was a summer spent in London, spent in the heart of civilisation. At first he saw nothing but the bedroom and its furniture, but that alone was surprising enough. To identify, distinguish and call by their right names all the different articles he saw there was confusing enough. And he had scarcely accustomed himself to the tables, to the busts, to the washing-stands - the smell of eau-de-Cologne still affected his nostrils disagreeably, when there came one of those rare days which are fine but not windy, warm but not baking, dry but not dusty, when an invalid can take the air. The day came when Miss Barrett could safely risk the huge adventure of going shopping with her sister.

The carriage was ordered; Miss Barrett rose from her sofa; veiled and muffled, she descended the stairs. Flush of course went with her. He leapt into the carriage by her side. Couched on her lap, the whole pomp of London at its most splendid burst on his astonished eyes. They drove along Oxford Street. He saw houses made almost entirely of glass. He saw windows laced across with glittering streamers; heaped with gleaming mounds of pink, purple, yellow, rose. The carriage stopped. He entered mysterious arcades filmed with clouds and webs of tinted gauze. A million airs from China, from Arabia, wafted their frail incense into the remotest fibres of his senses. Swiftly over the counters flashed yards of gleaming silk; more darkly, more slowly rolled the ponderous bombazine. Scissors snipped; coins sparkled. Paper was folded; string tied. What with nodding plumes, waving streamers, tossing horses, yellow liveries, passing faces, leaping, dancing up, down, Flush, satiated with the multiplicity of his sensations, slept, drowsed, dreamt and knew no more until he was lifted out of the carriage and the door of Wimpole Street shut on him again.

And next day, as the fine weather continued, Miss Barrett ventured upon an even more daring exploit - she had her-self drawn up Wimpole Street in a bath-chair. Again Flush went with her. For the first time he heard his nails click upon the hard paving-stones of London. For the first time the whole battery of a London street on a hot summer' s day assaulted his nostrils. He smelt the swooning smells that lie in the gutters; the bitter smells that corrode iron railings; the fuming, heady smells that rise from basements - smells more complex, corrupt, violently contrasted and com-pounded than any he had smelt in the fields near Reading; smells that lay far beyond the range of the human nose; so that while the chair went on, he stopped, amazed; defining, savouring, until a jerk at his collar dragged him on. And also, as he trotted up Wimpole Street behind Miss Barrett' s chair he was dazed by the passage of human bodies. Petti-coats swished at his head; trousers brushed his flanks; sometimes a wheel whizzed an inch from his nose; the wind of destruction roared in his ears and fanned the feathers of his paws as a van passed. Then he plunged in terror. Mer-cifully the chain tugged at his collar; Miss Barrett held him tight, or he would have rushed to destruction.

At last, with every nerve throbbing and every sense sing-ing, he reached Regent's Park. And then when he saw once more, after years of absence it seemed, grass,flowers and trees, the old hunting cry of the fields hallooed in his ears and he dashed forward to run as he had run in the fields at home. But now a heavy weight jerked at his throat; he was thrown back on his haunches. Were there not trees and grass? he asked. Were these not the signals of freedom? Had he not always leapt forward directly Miss Mitford started on her walk? Why was he a prisoner here? He paused. Here, he observed, the flowers were massed far more thickly than at home; they stood, plant by plant, rigidly in narrow plots. The plots were intersected by hard black paths. Men in shiny top-hats marched ominously up and down the paths. At the sight of them he shuddered closer to the chair. He gladly accepted the protection of the chain. Thus before many of these walks were over a new conception had entered his brain. Setting one thing beside another, he had arrived at a conclusion. Where there are flower-beds there are asphalt paths; where there are flower-beds and asphalt paths, there are men in shiny top-hats; where there are flower-beds and asphalt paths and men in shiny top-hats, dogs must be led on chains. Without being able to decipher a word of the placard at the Gate, he had learnt his lesson - in Regent' s Park dogs must be led on chains.

And to this nucleus of knowledge, born from the strange experiences of the summer of 1842, soon adhered another; dogs are not equal, but different. At Three Mile Cross Flush had mixed impartially with tap-room dogs and the Squire' s greyhounds; he had known no difference between the tinker' s dog and himself. Indeed it is probable that the mother of his child, though by courtesy called Spaniel, was nothing but a mongrel, eared in one way, tailed in another. But the dogs of London, Flush soon discovered, are strictly divided into different classes. Some are chained dogs; some run wild. Some take their airings in carriages and drink from purple jars; others are unkempt and uncollared and pick up a living in the gutter. Dogs therefore, Flush began to suspect, differ; some are high, others low; and his suspicions were confirmed by snatches of talk held in passing with the dogs of Wimpole Street. 'See that scallywag? A mere mongrel! By gad, that' s a fine Spaniel. One of the best blood in Britain! Pity his ears aren' t a shade more curly There' s a topknot for you!'

From such phrases, from the accent of praise or derision in which they were spoken, at the pillar-box or outside the public-house where the footmen were exchanging racing tips, Flush knew before the summer had passed that there is no equality among dogs: some dogs are high dogs; some are low. Which, then, was he? No sooner had Flush got home than he examined himself carefully in the looking-glass. Heaven be praised, he was a dog of birth and breeding! His head was smooth; his eyes were prominent but not gozzled; his feet were feathered; he was the equal of the best-bred cocker in Wimpole Street. He noted with approval the purple jar from which he drank - such are the privileges of rank; he bent his head quietly to have the chain fixed to his collar - such are its penalties. When about this time Miss Barrett observed him staring in the glass, she was mistaken. He was a philosopher, she thought, meditating the difference between appearance and reality. On the con-trary, he was an aristocrat considering his points.

But the fine summer days were soon over; the autumn winds began to blow; and Miss Barrett settled down to a life of complete seclusion in her bedroom. Flush' s life was also changed. His outdoor education was supplemented by that of the bedroom, and this, to a dog of Flush' s tempera-ment, was the most drastic that could have been invented. His only airings, and these were brief and perfunctory, were taken in the company of Wilson, Miss Barrett' s maid. For the rest of the day he kept his station on the sofa at Miss Barrett' s feet. All his natural instincts were thwarted and contradicted. When the autumn winds had blown last year in Berkshire he had run in wild scampering across the stub-ble; now at the sound of the ivy tapping on the pane Miss Barrett asked Wilson to see to the fastenings of the window. When the leaves of the scarlet runners and nasturtiums in the window-box yellowed and fell she drew her Indian shawl more closely round her. When the October rain lashed the window Wilson lit the fire and heaped up the coals. Autumn deepened into winter and the first fogs jaundiced the air. Wilson and Flush could scarcely grope their way to the pillar-box or to the chemist. When they came back, nothing could be seen in the room but the pale busts glimmering wanly on the tops of the wardrobes; the peasants and the castle had vanished on the blind; blank yellow filled the pane. Flush felt that he and Miss Barrett lived alone together in a cushioned and firelit cave. The traffic droned on per-petually outside with muffled reverberations; now and again a voice went calling hoarsely, 'Old chairs and baskets to mend', down the street: sometimes there was a jangle of organ music, coming nearer and louder; going further and fading away. But none of these sounds meant freedom, or action, or exercise. The wind and the rain, the wild days of autumn and the cold days of mid-winter, all alike meant nothing to Flush except warmth and stillness; the lighting of lamps, the drawing of curtains and the poking of the fire.

At first the strain was too great to be borne. He could not help dancing round the room on a windy autumn day when the partridges must be scattering over the stubble. He thought he heard guns on the breeze. He could not help running to the door with his hackles raised when a dog barked outside. And yet when Miss Barrett called him back, when she laid her hand on his collar, he could not deny that another feeling, urgent, contradictory, disagreeable - he did not know what to call it or why he obeyed it - restrained him. He lay still at her feet. To resign, to control, to suppress the most violent instincts of his nature - that was the prime lesson of the bedroom school, and it was one of such por-tentous difficulty that many scholars have learnt Greek with less - many battles have been won that cost their generals not half such pain. But then, Miss Barrett was the teacher. Between them, Flush felt more and more strongly, as the weeks wore on, was a bond, an uncomfortable yet thrilling tightness; so that if his pleasure was her pain, then his pleasure was pleasure no longer but three parts pain. The truth of this was proved every day. Somebody opened the door and whistled him to come. Why should he not go out? He longed for air and exercise; his limbs were cramped with lying on the sofa. He had never grown altogether used to the smell of eau-de-Cologne. But no - though the door stood open, he would not leave Miss Barrett. He hesitated half-way to the door and then went back to the sofa. 'Flushie', wrote Miss Barrett, 'is my friend - my companion - and loves me better than he loves the sunshine without.' She could not go out. She was chained to the sofa. 'A bird in a cage would have as good a story', she wrote, as she had. And Flush, to whom the whole world was free, chose to forfeit all the smells of Wimpole Street in order to lie by her side.

And yet sometimes the tie would almost break; there were vast gaps in their understanding. Sometimes they would lie and stare at each other in blank bewilderment. Why, Miss Barrett wondered, did Flush tremble suddenly, and whimper and start and listen? She could hear nothing; she could see nothing; there was nobody in the room with them. She could not guess that Folly, her sister's little King Charles, had passed the door; or that Catiline the Cuba bloodhound had been given a mutton-bone by a footman in the basement. But Flush knew; he heard; he was ravaged by the alternate rages of lust and greed. Then with all her poet's imagination Miss Barrett could not divine what Wilson's wet umbrella meant to Flush; what memories it recalled, of forests and parrots and wild trumpeting elephants; nor did she know, when Mr Kenyon stumbled over the bell-pull, that Flush heard dark men cursing in the mountains; the cry, 'Span! Span!' rang in his ears, and it was in some muffled, ancestral rage that he bit him.

Flush was equally at a loss to account for Miss Barrett's emotions. There she would lie hour after hour passing her hand over a white page with a black stick; and her eyes would suddenly fill with tears; but why? 'Ah, my dear Mr Horne', she was writing. 'And then came the failure in my health and then the enforced exile to Torquay which gave a nightmare to my life for ever, and robbed it of more than I can speak of here; do not speak of that any-where. Do not speak of that, dear Mr Horne.' But there was no sound in the room, no smell to make Miss Barrett cry. Then again Miss Barrett, still agitating her stick, burst out laughing. She had drawn 'a very neat and characteristic portrait of Flush, humorously made rather like myself', and she had written under it that it 'only fails of being an excel-lent substitute for mine through being more worthy than I can be counted'. What was there to laugh at in the black smudge that she held out for Flush to look at? He could smell nothing; he could hear nothing. There was nobody in the room with them. The fact was that they could not com-municate with words, and it was a fact that led undoubtedly to much misunderstanding. Yet did it not lead also to a peculiar intimacy? 'Writing', Miss Barrett once exclaimed after a morning's toil, 'writing, writing ' After all, she may have thought, do words say everything? Can words say anything? Do not words destroy the symbol that lies beyond the reach of words? Once at least Miss Barrett seems to have found it so. She was lying, thinking; she had forgotten Flush altogether, and her thoughts were so sad that the tears fell upon the pillow. Then suddenly a hairy head was pressed against her; large bright eyes shone in hers; and she started. Was it Flush, or was it Pan? Was she no longer an invalid in Wimpole Street, but a Greek nymph in some dim grove in Arcady? And did the bearded god himself press his lips to hers? For a moment she was transformed; she was a nymph and Flush was Pan. The sun burnt and love blazed. But suppose Flush had been able to speak - would he not have said something sensible about the potato disease in Ireland?

So, too, Flush felt strange stirrings at work within him. When he saw Miss Barrett's thin hands delicately lifting some silver box or pearl ornament from the ringed table, his own furry paws seemed to contract and he longed that they should fine themselves to ten separate fingers. When he heard her low voice syllabbling innumerable sounds, he longed for the day when his own rough roar would issue like hers in the little simple sounds that had such mysterious meaning. And when he watched the same fingers for ever crossing a white page with a straight stick, he longed for the time when he too should blacken paper as she did.

And yet, had he been able to write as she did? - The ques-tion is superfluous happily, for truth compels us to say that in the year 1842-43 Miss Barrett was not a nymph but an invalid; Flush was not a poet but a red cocker spaniel; and Wimpole Street was not Arcady but Wimpole Street.

So the long hours went by in the back bedroom with nothing to mark them but the sound of steps passing on the stairs; and the distant sound of the front door shutting, and the sound of a broom tapping, and the sound of the post-man knocking. In the room coals clicked; the lights and shadows shifted themselves over the brows of the five pale busts, over the bookcase and its red merino. But sometimes the step on the stair did not pass the door; it stopped out-side. The handle was seen to spin round; the door actually opened; somebody came in. Then how strangely the furniture changed its look! What extraordinary eddies of sound and smell were at once set in circulation! How they washed round the legs of tables and impinged on the sharp edges of the wardrobe! Probably it was Wilson, with a tray of food or a glass of medicine; or it might be one of Miss Barrett's two sisters - Arabel or Henrietta; or it might be one of Miss Barrett's seven brothers - Charles, Samuel, George, Henry, Alfred, Septimus or Octavius. But once or twice a week Flush was aware that something more important was about to happen. The bed would be carefully disguised as a sofa. The armchair would be drawn up beside it; Miss Barrett herself would be wrapped becomingly in Indian shawls; the toilet things would be scrupulously hidden under the busts of Chaucer and Homer; Flush himself would be combed and brushed. At about two or three in the afternoon there was a peculiar, distinct and different tap at the door. Miss Barrett flushed, smiled and stretched out her hand. Then in would come - perhaps dear Miss Mitford, rosy and shiny and chattering, with a bunch of geraniums. Or it might be Mr Kenyon, a stout, well-groomed elderly gentleman, radiating benevolence, provided with a book. Or it might be Mrs Jameson, a lady who was the very opposite of Mr Kenyon to look at - a lady with 'a very light complexion - pale, lucid eyes; thin colourless lips a nose and chin projective without breadth'. Each had his or her own manner, smell, tone and accent. Miss Mitford burred and chattered, was fly-away yet substantial; Mr Kenyon was urbane and cultured and mumbled slightly because he had lost two front teeth; Mrs Jameson had lost none of her teeth, and moved as sharply and precisely as she spoke.

Lying couched at Miss Barrett's feet, Flush let the voices ripple over him, hour by hour. On and on they went. Miss Barrett laughed, expostulated, exclaimed, sighed too, and laughed again. At last, greatly to Flush's relief, little silences came - even in the flow of Miss Mitford's conversation. Could it be seven already? She had been there since midday! She must really run to catch her train. Mr Kenyon shut his book - he had been reading aloud - and stood with his back to the fire; Mrs Jameson with a sharp, angular movement pressed each finger of her glove sharp down. And Flush was patted by this one and had his ear pulled by another. The routine of leave-taking was intolerably prolonged; but at last Mrs Jameson, Mr Kenyon, and even Miss Mitford had risen, had said good-bye, had remembered something, had lost something, had found something, had reached the door, had opened it, and were - Heaven be praised - gone at last.

Miss Barrett sank back very white, very tired on her pillows. Flush crept closer to her. Mercifully they were alone again. But the visitor had stayed so long that it was almost dinner-time. Smells began to rise from the basement. Wilson was at the door with Miss Barrett's dinner on a tray. It was set down on the table beside her and the covers lifted. But what with the dressing and the talking, what with the heat of the room and the agitation of the farewells, Miss Barrett was too tired to eat. She gave a little sigh when she saw the plump mutton chop, or the wing of partridge or chicken that had been sent up for her dinner. So long as Wilson was in the room she fiddled about with her knife and fork. But directly the door was shut and they were alone, she made a sign. She held up her fork. A whole chicken's wing was impaled upon it. Flush advanced. Miss Barrett nodded. Very gently, very cleverly, without spilling a crumb, Flush removed the wing; swallowed it down and left no trace behind. Half a rice pudding clotted with thick cream went the same way. Nothing could have been neater, more effective than Flush's co-operation. He was lying couched as usual at Miss Barrett's feet, apparently asleep, Miss Barrett was lying rested and restored, apparently having made an excellent dinner, when once more a step that was heavier, more deliberate and firmer than any other, stopped on the stair; solemnly a knock sounded that was no tap of enquiry but a demand for admittance; the door opened and in came the blackest, the most formidable of elderly men - Mr Barrett himself. His eye at once sought the tray. Had the meal been eaten? Had his commands been obeyed? Yes, the plates were empty. Signifying his approval of his daughter's obedience, Mr Barrett lowered himself heavily into the chair by her side. As that dark body approached him, shivers of terror and horror ran down Flush's spine. So a savage couched in flowers shudders when the thunder growls and he hears the voice of God. Then Wilson whistled; and Flush, slinking guiltily, as if Mr Barrett could read his thoughts and those thoughts were evil, crept out of the room and rushed down-stairs. A force had entered the bedroom which he dreaded; a force that he was powerless to withstand. Once he burst in unexpectedly. Mr Barrett was on his knees praying by his daughter's side.

Chapter 3 THE HOODED MAN

Such an education as this, in the back bedroom at Wimpole Street, would have told upon an ordinary dog. And Flush was not an ordinary dog. He was high-spirited, yet reflective; canine, but highly sensitive to human emotions also. Upon such a dog the atmosphere of the bedroom told with peculiar force. We cannot blame him if his sensibility was cultivated rather to the detriment of his sterner qualities. Naturally, lying with his head pillowed on a Greek lexicon, he came to dislike barking and biting; he came to prefer the silence of the cat to the robustness of the dog; and human sympathy to either. Miss Barrett, too, did her best to refine and educate his powers still further. Once she took a harp from the window and asked him, as she laid it by his side, whether he thought that the harp, which made music, was itself alive? He looked and listened; pondered, it seemed, for a moment in doubt and then decided that it was not. Then she would make him stand with her in front of the looking-glass and ask him why he barked and trembled. Was not the little brown dog opposite himself? But what is 'oneself'? Is it the thing people see? Or is it the thing one is? So Flush pondered that question too, and, unable to solve the problem of reality, pressed closer to Miss Barrett and kissed her 'expressively'. That was real at any rate.

Fresh from such problems, with such emotional dilemmas agitating his nervous system, he went downstairs, and we cannot be surprised if there was something - a touch of the supercilious, of the superior - in his bearing that roused the rage of Catiline, the savage Cuba bloodhound, so that he set upon him and bit him and sent him howling upstairs to Miss Barrett for sympathy. Flush 'is no hero', she concluded; but why was he no hero? Was it not partly on her account? She was too just not to realise that it was for her that he had sacrificed his courage, as it was for her that he had sacrificed the sun and the air. This nervous sensibility had its drawbacks, no doubt - she was full of apologies when he flew at Mr Kenyon and bit him for stumbling over the bell-pull; it was annoying when he moaned piteously all night because he was not allowed to sleep on her bed - when he refused to eat unless she fed him; but she took the blame and bore the inconvenience because, after all, Flush loved her. He had refused the air and the sun for her sake. 'He is worth loving, is he not?' she asked of Mr Horne. And whatever answer Mr Horne might give, Miss Barrett was positive of her own. She loved Flush, and Flush was worthy of her love.

It seemed as if nothing were to break that tie - as if the years were merely to compact and cement it; and as if those years were to be all the years of their natural lives. Eighteen-forty-two turned into eighteen-forty-three; eighteen-forty-three into eighteen-forty-four; eighteen-forty-four into eighteen-forty-five. Flush was no longer a puppy; he was a dog of four or five; he was a dog in the full prime of life - and still Miss Barrett lay on her sofa in Wimpole Street and still Flush lay on the sofa at her feet. Miss Barrett's life was the life of 'a bird in its cage'. She sometimes kept to the house for weeks at a time, and when she left it, it was only for an hour or two, to drive to a shop in a carriage, or to be wheeled to Regent's Park in a bath-chair. The Barretts never left London. Mr Barrett, the seven brothers, the two sisters, the butler, Wilson and the maids, Catiline, Folly, Miss Barrett and Flush all went on living at 50 Wimpole Street, eating in the dining-room, sleeping in the bedrooms, smoking in the study, cooking in the kitchen, carrying hot-water cans and emptying the slops from January to December. The chair-covers became slightly soiled; the carpets slightly worn; coal dust, mud, soot, fog, vapours of cigar smoke and wine and meat accumulated in crevices, in cracks, in fabrics, on the tops of picture-frames, in the scrolls of carvings. And the ivy that hung over Miss Barrett's bedroom window flourished; its green curtain became thicker and thicker, and in summer the nasturtiums and the scarlet runners rioted together in the window-box.

But one night early in January 1845 the postman knocked. Letters fell into the box as usual. Wilson went downstairs to fetch the letters as usual. Everything was as usual - every night the postman knocked, every night Wilson fetched the letters, every night there was a letter for Miss Barrett. But to-night the letter was not the same letter; it was a different letter. Flush saw that, even before the envelope was broken. He knew it from the way that Miss Barrett took it; turned it; looked at the vigorous, jagged writing of her name. He knew it from the indescribable tremor in her fingers, from the impetuosity with which they tore the flap open, from the absorption with which she read. He watched her read. And as she read he heard, as when we are half asleep we hear through the clamour of the street some bell ringing and know that it is addressed to us, alarmingly yet faintly, as if someone far away were trying to rouse us with the warning of fire, or burglary, or some menace against our peace and we start in alarm before we wake - so Flush, as Miss Barrett read the little blotted sheet, heard a bell rousing him from his sleep; warning him of some danger; menacing his safety and bidding him sleep no more. Miss Barrett read the letter quickly; she read the letter slowly; she returned it carefully to its envelope. She too slept no more.

Again, a few nights later, there was the same letter on Wilson's tray. Again it was read quickly, read slowly, read over and over again. Then it was put away carefully, not in the drawer with the voluminous sheets of Miss Mitford's letters, but by itself. Now Flush paid the full price of long years of accumulated sensibility lying couched on cushions at Miss Barrett's feet. He could read signs that nobody else could even see. He could tell by the touch of Miss Barrett's fingers that she was waiting for one thing only - for the postman's knock, for the letter on the tray. She would be stroking him perhaps with a light, regular movement; suddenly - there was the rap - her fingers constricted; he would be held in a vice while Wilson came upstairs. Then she took the letter and he was loosed and forgotten.

Yet, he argued, what was there to be afraid of, so long as there was no change in Miss Barrett's life? And there was no change. No new visitors came. Mr Kenyon came as usual; Miss Mitford came as usual. The brothers and sisters came; and in the evening Mr Barrett came. They noticed nothing; they suspected nothing. So he would quieten him-self and try to believe, when a few nights passed without the envelope, that the enemy had gone. A man in a cloak, he imagined, a cowed and hooded figure, had passed, like a burglar, rattling the door, and finding it guarded, had slunk away defeated. The danger, Flush tried to make himself believe, was over. The man had gone. And then the letter came again.

As the envelopes came more and more regularly, night after night, Flush began to notice signs of change in Miss Barrett herself. For the first time in Flush's experience she was irritable and restless. She could not read and she could not write. She stood at the window and looked out. She questioned Wilson anxiously about the weather - was the wind still in the east? Was there any sign of spring in the Park yet? Oh no, Wilson replied; the wind was a cruel east wind still. And Miss Barrett, Flush felt, was at once relieved and annoyed. She coughed. She complained of feeling ill - but not so ill as she usually felt when the wind was in the east. And then, when she was alone, she read over again last night's letter. It was the longest she had yet had. There were many pages, closely covered, darkly blotted, scattered with strange little abrupt hieroglyphics. So much Flush could see, from his station at her feet. But he could make no sense of the words that Miss Barrett was murmuring to herself. Only he could trace her agitation when she came to the end of the page and read aloud (though unintelligibly), 'Do you think I shall see you in two months, three months?'

Then she took up her pen and passed it rapidly and nervously over sheet after sheet. But what did they mean - the little words that Miss Barrett wrote? 'April is coming. There will be both a May and a June if we live to see such things, and perhaps, after all, we may I will indeed see you when the warm weather has revived me a little But I shall be afraid of you at first - though I am not, in writing thus. You are Paracelsus and I am a recluse, with nerves that have been broken on the rack, and now hang loosely, quivering at a step and breath.'

Flush could not read what she was writing an inch or two above his head. But he knew just as well as if he could read every word, how strangely his mistress was agitated as she wrote; what contrary desires shook her - that April might come; that April might not come; that she might see this unknown man at once, that she might never see him at all. Flush, too, quivered as she did at a step, at a breath. And remorselessly the days went on. The wind blew out the blind. The sun whitened the busts. A bird sang in the mews. Men went crying fresh flowers to sell down Wimpole Street. All these sounds meant, he knew, that April was coming and May and June - nothing could stop the approach of that dreadful spring. For what was coming with the spring? Some terror - some horror - something that Miss Barrett dreaded, and that Flush dreaded too. He started now at the sound of a step. But it was only Henrietta. Then there was a knock. It was only Mr Kenyon. So April passed; and the first twenty days of May. And then, on the 21st of May, Flush knew that the day itself had come. For on Tuesday, the 21st of May, Miss Barrett looked searchingly in the glass; arrayed herself exquisitely in her Indian shawls; bade Wilson draw the armchair close, but not too close; touched this, that and the other; and then sat upright among her pillows. Flush couched himself taut at her feet. They waited, alone together. At last, Marylebone Church clock struck two; they waited. Then Marylebone Church clock struck a single stroke - It was half-past two; and as the single stroke died away, a rap sounded boldly on the front door. Miss Barrett turned pale; she lay very still. Flush lay still too. Upstairs came the dreaded, the inexorable footfall; upstairs, Flush knew, came the cowed and sinister figure of midnight - the hooded man. Now his hand was on the door. The handle spun. There he stood.

'Mr Browning', said Wilson.

Flush, watching Miss Barrett, saw the colour rush into her face; saw her eyes brighten and her lips open.

'Mr Browning!' she exclaimed.

Twisting his yellow gloves in his hands, blinking his eyes, well groomed, masterly, abrupt, Mr Browning strode across the room. He seized Miss Barrett's hand, and sank into the chair by the sofa at her side. Instantly they began to talk.

What was horrible to Flush, as they talked, was his loneli-ness. Once he had felt that he and Miss Barrett were together, in a firelit cave. Now the cave was no longer firelit; it was dark and damp; Miss Barrett was outside. He looked round him. Everything had changed. The bookcase, the five busts - they were no longer friendly deities presiding approvingly-they were hostile, severe. He shifted his position at Miss Barrett's feet. She took no notice. He whined. They did not hear him. At last he lay still in tense and silent agony. The talk went on; but it did not flow and ripple as talk usually flowed and rippled. It leapt and jerked. It stopped and leapt again. Flush had never heard that sound in Miss Barrett's voice before - that vigour, that excitement. Her cheeks were bright as he had never seen them bright; her great eyes blazed as he had never seen them blaze. The clock struck four; and still they talked. Then it struck half-past four. At that Mr Browning jumped up. A horrid decision, a dreadful boldness marked every move-ment. In another moment he had wrung Miss Barrett's hand in his; he had taken his hat and gloves; he had said good-bye. They heard him running down the stairs. Smartly the door banged behind him. He was gone.

But Miss Barrett did not sink back in her pillows as she sank back when Mr Kenyon or Miss Mitford left her. Now she still sat upright; her eyes still burnt; her cheeks still glowed; she seemed still to feel that Mr Browning was with her. Flush touched her. She recalled him with a start. She patted him lightly, joyfully, on the head. And smiling, she gave him the oddest look - as if she wished that he could talk - as if she expected him too to feel what she felt. And then she laughed, pityingly; as if it were absurd - Flush, poor Flush could feel nothing of what she felt. He could know nothing of what she knew. Never had such wastes of dismal distance separated them. He lay there ignored; he might not have been there, he felt. Miss Barrett no longer remembered his existence.

And that night she ate her chicken to the bone. Not a scrap of potato or of skin was thrown to Flush. When Mr Barrett came as usual, Flush marvelled at his obtuseness. He sat himself down in the very chair that the man had sat in. His head pressed the same cushions that the man's had pressed, and yet he noticed nothing. 'Don't you know', Flush marvelled, 'who's been sitting in that chair? Can't you smell him?' For to Flush the whole room still reeked of Mr Brown-ing's presence. The air dashed past the bookcase, and eddied and curled round the heads of the five pale busts. But the heavy man sat by his daughter in entire self-absorption. He noticed nothing. He suspected nothing. Aghast at his obtuseness, Flush slipped past him out of the room.

But in spite of their astonishing blindness, even Miss Barrett's family began to notice, as the weeks passed, a change in Miss Barrett. She left her room and went down to sit in the drawing-room. Then she did what she had not done for many a long day - she actually walked on her own feet as far as the gate at Devonshire Place with her sister. Her friends, her family, were amazed at her improvement. But only Flush knew where her strength came from - it came from the dark man in the armchair. He came again and again and again. First it was once a week; then it was twice a week. He came always in the afternoon and left in the afternoon. Miss Barrett always saw him alone. And on the days when he did not come, his letters came. And when he himself was gone, his flowers were there. And in the mornings when she was alone, Miss Barrett wrote to him. That dark, taut, abrupt, vigorous man, with his black hair, his red cheeks and his yellow gloves, was everywhere. Naturally, Miss Barrett was better; of course she could walk. Flush himself felt that it was impossible to lie still. Old long-ings revived; a new restlessness possessed him. Even his sleep was full of dreams. He dreamt as he had not dreamt since the old days at Three Mile Cross - of hares starting from the long grass; of pheasants rocketing up with long tails streaming, of partridges rising with a whirr from the stubble. He dreamt that he was hunting, that he was chasing some spotted spaniel, who fled, who escaped him. He was in Spain; he was in Wales; he was in Berkshire; he was flying before park-keepers' truncheons in Regent' s Park. Then he opened his eyes. There were no hares, and no partridges; no whips cracking and no black men crying 'Span! Span!' There was only Mr Browning in the armchair talking to Miss Barrett on the sofa.

Sleep became impossible while that man was there. Flush lay with his eyes wide open, listening. Though he could make no sense of the little words that hurtled over his head from two-thirty to four-thirty sometimes three times a week, he could detect with terrible accuracy that the tone of the words was changing. Miss Barrett' s voice had been forced and unnaturally lively at first. Now it had gained a warmth and an ease that he had never heard in it before. And every time the man came, some new sound came into their voices - now they made a grotesque chattering; now they skimmed over him like birds flying widely; now they cooed and clucked, as if they were two birds settled in a nest; and then Miss Barrett' s voice, rising again, went soar-ing and circling in the air; and then Mr Browning' s voice barked out its sharp, harsh clapper of laughter; and then there was only a murmur, a quiet humming sound as the two voices joined together. But as the summer turned to autumn Flush noted, with horrid apprehension, another note. There was a new urgency, a new pressure and energy in the man' s voice, at which Miss Barrett, Flush felt, took fright. Her voice fluttered; hesitated; seemed to falter and fade and plead and gasp, as if she were begging for a rest, for a pause, as if she were afraid. Then the man was silent.

Of him they took but little notice. He might have been a log of wood lying there at Miss Barrett's feet for all the attention Mr Browning paid him. Sometimes he scrubbed his head in a brisk, spasmodic way, energetically, without sentiment, as he passed him. Whatever that scrub might mean, Flush felt nothing but an intense dislike for Mr Browning. The very sight of him, so well tailored, so tight, so muscular, screwing his yellow gloves in his hand, set his teeth on edge. Oh! to let them meet sharply, completely in the stuff of his trousers! And yet he dared not. Taking it all in all, that winter - 1845-6 - was the most distressing that Flush had ever known.

The winter passed; and spring came round again. Flush could see no end to the affair; and yet just as a river, though it reflects still trees and grazing cows and rooks returning to the tree-tops, moves inevitably to a waterfall, so those days, Flush knew, were moving to catastrophe. Rumours of change hovered in the air. Sometimes he thought that some vast exodus impended. There was that indefinable stir in the house which precedes - could it be possible? - a journey. Boxes were actually dusted, were, incredible as it might seem, opened. Then they were shut again. No, it was not the family that was going to move. The brothers and sisters still went in and out as usual. Mr Barrett paid his nightly visit, after the man had gone, at his accustomed hour. What was it, then, that was going to happen? for as the summer of 1846 wore on, Flush was positive that a change was coming. He could hear it again in the altered sound of the eternal voices. Miss Barrett's voice, that had been pleading and afraid, lost its faltering note. It rang out with a determination and a boldness that Flush had never heard in it before. If only Mr Barrett could hear the tone in which she welcomed this usurper, the laugh with which she greeted him, the exclamation with which he took her hand in his! But nobody was in the room with them except Flush. To him the change was of the most galling nature. It was not merely that Miss Barrett was changing towards Mr Browning - she was changing in every relation - in her feeling towards Flush himself. She treated his advances more brusquely; she cut short his endearments laughingly; she made him feel that there was something petty, silly, affected, in his old affectionate ways. His vanity was exacerbated. His jealousy was inflamed. At last, when July came, he determined to make one violent attempt to regain her favour, and perhaps to oust the newcomer. How to accomplish this double purpose he did not know, and could not plan. But suddenly on the 8th of July his feelings overcame him. He flung himself on Mr Browning and bit him savagely. At last his teeth met in the immaculate cloth of Mr Browning' s trousers! But the limb inside was hard as iron - Mr Kenyon' s leg had been butter in comparison. Mr Browning brushed him off with a flick of his hand and went on talking. Neither he nor Miss Barrett seemed to think the attack worthy of attention. Completely foiled, worsted, without a shaft left in his sheath, Flush sank back on his cushions panting with rage and disappointment. But he had misjudged Miss Barrett' s insight. When Mr Browning was gone, she called him to her and in flicted upon him the worst punishment he had ever known. First she slapped his ears - that was nothing; oddly enough the slap was rather to his liking; he would have welcomed another. But then she said in her sober, certain tones that she would never love him again. That shaft went to his heart. All these years they had lived together, shared everything together, and now, for one moment' s failure, she would never love him again. Then, as if to make her dis-missal complete, she took the flowers that Mr Browning had brought her and began to put them in water in a vase. It was an act, Flush thought, of calculated and deliberate mal-ice; an act designed to make him feel his own insignificance completely. 'This rose is from him', she seemed to say, 'and this carnation. Let the red shine by the yellow; and the yel-low by the red. And let the green leaf lie there -' And, setting one flower with another, she stood back to gaze at them as if he were before her - the man in the yellow gloves - a mass of brilliant flowers. But even so, even as she pressed the leaves and flowers together, she could not altogether ignore the fixity with which Flush gazed at her. She could not deny that 'expression of quite despair on his face'. She could not but relent. 'At last I said, "If you are good, Flush, you may come and say that you are sorry" ',on which he dashed across the room and, trembling all over, kissed first one of my hands and then another, and put up his paws to be shaken, and looked into my face with such beseeching eyes that you would certainly have forgiven him just as I did.' That was her account of the matter to Mr Browning; and he of course replied: 'Oh, poor Flush, do you think I do not love and respect him for his jealous supervision - his slowness to know another, having once known you?' It was easy enough for Mr Browning to be magnanimous, but that easy magnanimity was perhaps the sharpest thorn that pressed into Flush' s side.

Another incident a few days later showed how widely they were separated, who had been so close, how little Flush could now count on Miss Barrett for sympathy. After Mr Browning had gone one afternoon Miss Barrett decided to drive to Regent's Park with her sister. As they got out at the Park gate the door of the four-wheeler shut on Flush's paw. He 'cried piteously' and held it up to Miss Bar-rett for sympathy. In other days sympathy in abundance would have been lavished upon him for less. But now a detached, a mocking, a critical expression came into her eyes. She laughed at him. She thought he was sham-ming: ' no sooner had he touched the grass than he began to run without a thought of it', she wrote. And she com-mented sarcastically, 'Flush always makes the most of his misfortunes - he is of the Byronic school - il se pose en vic-time '. But here Miss Barrett, absorbed in her own emotions, misjudged him completely. If his paw had been broken, still he would have bounded. That dash was his answer to her mockery; I have done with you - that was the meaning he flashed at her as he ran. The flowers smelt bitter to him; the grass burnt his paws; the dust filled his nostrils with disillusion. But he raced - he scampered. 'Dogs must be led on chains' - there was the usual placard; there were the park-keepers with their top-hats and their truncheons to enforce it. But 'must' no longer had any meaning for him. The chain of love was broken. He would run where he liked; chase partridges; chase spaniels; splash into the middle of dahlia beds; break brilliant, blowing red and yellow roses. Let the park-keepers throw their truncheons if they chose. Let them dash his brains out. Let him fall dead, disembow-elled, at Miss Barrett's feet. He cared nothing. But naturally nothing of the kind happened. Nobody pursued him; nobody noticed him. The solitary park-keeper was talking to a nursemaid. At last he returned to Miss Barrett and she absent-mindedly slipped the chain over his neck, and led him home.

After two such humiliations the spirit of an ordinary dog, the spirit even of an ordinary human being, might well have been broken. But Flush, for all his softness and silkiness, had eyes that blazed; had passions that leapt not merely in bright flame but sunk and smouldered. He resolved to meet his enemy face to face and alone. No third person should interrupt this final conflict. It should be fought out by the principals themselves. On the afternoon of Tuesday, the 21st of July, therefore, he slipped downstairs and waited in the hall. He had not long to wait. Soon he heard the tramp of the familiar footstep in the street; he heard the familiar rap on the door. Mr Browning was admitted. Vaguely aware of the impending attack and determined to meet it in the most conciliatory of spirits, Mr Browning had come provided with a parcel of cakes. There was Flush waiting in the hall. Mr Browning made, evidently, some well-meant attempt to caress him; perhaps he even went so far as to offer him a cake. The gesture was enough. Flush sprang upon his enemy with unparalleled violence. His teeth once more met in Mr Browning's trousers. But unfortunately in the excitement of the moment he forgot what was most essential - silence. He barked; he flung himself on Mr Browning, barking loudly. The sound was sufficient to alarm the household. Wilson rushed downstairs. Wilson beat him soundly. Wilson over-powered him completely. Wilson led him in ignominy away. Ignominy it was - to have attacked Mr Browning, to have been beaten by Wilson. Mr Browning had not lifted a finger. Taking his cakes with him, Mr Browning proceeded unhurt, unmoved, in perfect composure, upstairs, alone to the bed-room. Flush was led away.

After two and a half hours of miserable confinement with parrots and beetles, ferns and saucepans, in the kitchen, Flush was summoned to Miss Barrett's presence. She was lying on the sofa with her sister Arabella beside her. Con-scious of the rightness of his cause, Flush went straight to her. But she refused to look at him. He turned to Arabella. She merely said, 'Naughty Flush, go away'. Wilson was there - the formidable, the implacable Wilson. It was to her that Miss Barrett turned for information. She had beaten him, Wilson said, 'because it was right'. And, she added, she had only beaten him with her hand. It was upon her evidence that Flush was convicted. The attack, Miss Barrett assumed, had been unprovoked; she credited Mr Browning with all virtue, with all generosity; Flush had been beaten off by a servant, without a whip, because 'it was right'. There was no more to be said. Miss Barrett decided against him. 'So he lay down on the floor at my feet,' she wrote, 'looking from under his eyebrows at me.' But though Flush might look, Miss Barrett refused even to meet his eyes. There she lay on the sofa; there Flush lay on the floor.

And as he lay there, exiled, on the carpet, he went through one of those whirlpools of tumultuous emotion in which the soul is either dashed upon the rocks and splintered or, find-ing some tuft of foothold, slowly and painfully pulls itself up, regains dry land, and at last emerges on top of a ruined universe to survey a world created afresh on a different plan. Which was it to be - destruction or reconstruction? That was the question. The outlines only of his dilemma can be traced here; for his debate was silent. Twice Flush had done his utmost to kill his enemy; twice he had failed. And why had he failed, he asked himself? Because he loved Miss Barrett. Looking up at her from under his eyebrows as she lay, severe and silent on the sofa, he knew that he must love her for ever. Things are not simple but complex. If he bit Mr Browning he bit her too. Hatred is not hatred; hatred is also love. Here Flush shook his ears in an agony of perplex-ity. He turned uneasily on the floor. Mr Browning was Miss Barrett - Miss Barrett was Mr Browning; love is hatred and hatred is love. He stretched himself, whined and raised his head from the floor. The clock struck eight. For three hours and more he had been lying there, tossed from the horn of one dilemma to another.

Even Miss Barrett, severe, cold, implacable as she was, laid down her pen. 'Wicked Flush!' she had been writing to Mr Browning, '..... if people like Flush, choose to behave like dogs savagely, they must take the consequences indeed, as dogs usually do! And you, so good and gentle to him! Anyone but you would have said "hasty words" at least.' Really it would be a good plan, she thought, to buy a muz-zle. And then she looked up and saw Flush. Something unusual in his look must have struck her. She paused. She laid down her pen. Once he had roused her with a kiss, and she had thought that he was Pan. He had eaten chicken and rice pudding soaked in cream. He had given up the sunshine for her sake. She called him to her and said she forgave him.

But to be forgiven, as if for a passing whim, to be taken back again on to the sofa as if he had learnt nothing in his anguish on the floor, as if he were the same dog when in fact he differed totally, was impossible. For the moment, exhausted as he was, Flush submitted. A few days later, however, a remarkable scene took place between him and Miss Barrett which showed the depths of his emotions. Mr Browning had been and gone; Flush was alone with Miss Barrett. Normally he would have leapt on to the sofa at her feet. But now, instead of jumping up as usual and claiming her caress, Flush went to what was now called 'Mr Brown-ing' s armchair'. Usually the chair was abhorrent to him; it still held the shape of his enemy. But now, such was the battle he had won, such was the charity that suffused him, that he not only looked at the chair but, as he looked, 'suddenly fell into a rapture'. Miss Barrett, watching him intently, observed this extraordinary portent. Next she saw him turn his eyes towards a table. On that table still lay the packet of Mr Browning's cakes. He 'reminded me that the cakes you left were on the table'. They were now old cakes, stale cakes, cakes bereft of any carnal seduction. Flush's meaning was plain. He had refused to eat the cakes when they were fresh, because they were offered by an enemy. He would eat them now that they were stale, because they were offered by an enemy turned to friend, because they were symbols of hatred turned to love. Yes, he signified, he would eat them now. So Miss Barrett rose and took the cakes in her hand. And as she gave them to him she admonished him, 'So I explained to him that you had brought them for him, and that he ought to be properly ashamed therefore for his past wickedness, and make up his mind to love you and not bite you for the future - and he was allowed to profit from your goodness to him'. As he swallowed down the faded flakes of that distasteful pastry - it was mouldy, it was fly-blown, it was sour - Flush solemnly repeated, in his own language, the words she had used - he swore to love Mr Browning and not bite him for the future.

He was instantly rewarded - not by stale cakes, not by chicken's wings, not by the caresses that were now his, nor by the permission to lie once more on the sofa at Miss Bar-rett's feet. He was rewarded, spiritually; yet the effects were curiously physical. Like an iron bar corroding and festering and killing all natural life beneath it, hatred had lain all these months across his soul. Now, by the cutting of sharp knives and painful surgery, the iron had been excised. Now the blood ran once more; the nerves shot and tingled; flesh formed; Nature rejoiced, as in spring. Flush heard the birds sing again; he felt the leaves growing on the trees; as he lay on the sofa at Miss Barrett's feet, glory and delight coursed through his veins. He was with them, not against them, now; their hopes, their wishes, their desires were his. Flush could have barked in sympathy with Mr Browning now. The short, sharp words raised the hackles on his neck. 'I need a week of Tuesdays,' Mr Browning cried, 'then a month - a year - a life!' I, Flush echoed him, need a month-a year-a life! I need all the things that you both need. We are all three conspirators in the most glorious of causes. We are joined in sympathy. We are joined in hatred. We are joined in defiance of black and beetling tyranny. We are joined in love. - In short, all Flush' s hopes now were set upon some dimly apprehended but none the less certainly emerging triumph, upon some glorious victory that was to be theirs in common, when suddenly, without a word of warning, in the midst of civilisation, security and friendship - he was in a shop in Vere Street with Miss Barrett and her sister: it was the morning of Tuesday the 1st of September - Flush was tumbled head over heels into darkness. The doors of a dungeon shut upon him. He was stolen.

Chapter 4 WHITECHAPEL

'This morning Arabel and I, and he with us,' Miss Barrett wrote, 'went in a cab to Vere Street where we had a little business, and he followed us as usual into a shop and out of it again, and was at my heels when I stepped up into the carriage. Having turned, I said "Flush", and Arabel looked round for Flush - there was no Flush! He had been caught up in that moment, from under the wheels, do you under-stand?' Mr Browning understood perfectly well. Miss Barrett had forgotten the chain; therefore Flush was stolen. Such, in the year 1846, was the law of Wimpole Street and its neighbourhood.

Nothing, it is true, could exceed the apparent solidity and security of Wimpole Street itself. As far as an invalid could walk or a bath-chair could trundle nothing met the eye but an agreeable prospect of four-storeyed houses, plate-glass windows and mahogany doors. Even a carriage and pair, in the course of an afternoon's airing, need not, if the coach-man were discreet, leave the limits of decorum and respectability. But if you were not an invalid, if you did not possess a carriage and pair, if you were - and many people were - active and able-bodied and fond of walking, then you might see sights and hear language and smell smells, not a stone's-throw from Wimpole Street, that threw doubts upon the solidity even of Wimpole Street itself. So Mr Thomas Beames found when about this time he took it into his head to go walking about London. He was surprised; indeed he was shocked. Splendid buildings raised them-selves in Westminster, yet just behind them were ruined sheds in which human beings lived herded together above herds of cows - 'two in each seven feet of space'. He felt that he ought to tell people what he had seen. Yet how could one describe politely a bedroom in which two or three families lived above a cow-shed, when the cow-shed had no ventilation, when the cows were milked and killed and eaten under the bedroom? That was a task, as Mr Beames found when he came to attempt it, that taxed all the resources of the English language. And yet he felt that he ought to describe what he had seen in the course of an afternoon's walk through some of the most aristocratic parishes in London. The risk of typhus was so great. The rich could not know what dangers they were running. He could not altogether hold his tongue when he found what he did find in West-minster and Paddington and Marylebone. For instance, here was an old mansion formerly belonging to some great noble-man. Relics of marble mantelpieces remained. The rooms were panelled and the banisters were carved, and yet the floors were rotten, the walls dripped with filth; hordes of half-naked men and women had taken up their lodging in the old banqueting-halls. Then he walked on. Here an enter-prising builder had pulled down the old family mansion. He had run up a jerry-built tenement house in its place. The rain dripped through the roof and the wind blew through the walls. He saw a child dipping a can into a bright-green stream and asked if they drank that water. Yes, and washed in it too, for the landlord only allowed water to be turned on twice a week. Such sights were the more surprising, because one might come upon them in the most sedate and civilised quarters of London - 'the most aristocratic par-ishes have their share'. Behind Miss Barrett's bedroom, for instance, was one of the worst slums in London. Mixed up with that respectability was this squalor. But there were certain quarters, of course, which had long been given over to the poor and were left undisturbed. In Whitechapel, or in a triangular space of ground at the bot-tom of the Tottenham Court Road, poverty and vice and misery had bred and seethed and propagated their kind for centuries without interference. A dense mass of aged build-ings in St Giles' s was 'wellnigh a penal settlement, a pauper metropolis in itself'. Aptly enough, where the poor conglom-erated thus, the settlement was called a Rookery. For there human beings swarmed on top of each other as rooks swarm and blacken tree-tops. Only the buildings here were not trees; they were hardly any longer buildings. They were cells of brick intersected by lanes which ran with filth. All day the lanes buzzed with half-dressed human beings; at night there poured back again into the stream the thieves, beggars and prostitutes who had been plying their trade all day in the West End. The police could do nothing. No single way-farer could do anything except hurry through as fast as he could and perhaps drop a hint, as Mr Beames did, with many quotations, evasions and euphemisms, that all was not quite as it should be. Cholera would come, and perhaps the hint that cholera would give would not be quite so evasive.

But in the summer of 1846 that hint had not yet been given; and the only safe course for those who lived in Wim-pole Street and its neighbourhood was to keep strictly within the respectable area and to lead your dog on a chain. If one forgot, as Miss Barrett forgot, one paid the penalty, as Miss Barrett was now to pay it. The terms upon which Wimpole Street lived cheek by jowl with St Giles' s were well known. St Giles' s stole what St Giles' s could; Wimpole Street paid what Wimpole Street must. Thus Arabel at once 'began to comfort me by showing how certain it was that I should recover him for ten pounds at most'. Ten pounds, it was reckoned, was about the price that Mr Taylor would ask for a cocker spaniel. Mr Taylor was the head of the gang. As soon as a lady in Wimpole Street lost her dog she went to Mr Taylor; he named his price, and it was paid; or if not, a brown paper parcel was delivered in Wimpole Street a few days later containing the head and paws of the dog. Such, at least, had been the experience of a lady in the neighbour-hood who had tried to make terms with Mr Taylor. But Miss Barrett of course intended to pay. Therefore when she got home she told her brother Henry, and Henry went to see Mr Taylor that afternoon. He found him 'smoking a cigar in a room with pictures' - Mr Taylor was said to make an income of two or three thousand a year out of the dogs of Wimpole Street - and Mr Taylor promised that he would confer with his 'Society' and that the dog would be returned next day. Vexatious as it was, and especially annoying at a moment when Miss Barrett needed all her money, such were the inevitable consequences of forgetting in 1846 to keep one' s dog on a chain.

But for Flush things were very different. Flush, Miss Bar-rett reflected, 'doesn' t know that we can recover him'; Flush had never mastered the principles of human society. 'All this night he will howl and lament, I know perfectly', Miss Bar-rett wrote to Mr Browning on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 1st September. But while Miss Barrett wrote to Mr Brown-ing, Flush was going through the most terrible experience of his life. He was bewildered in the extreme. One moment he was in Vere Street, among ribbons and laces; the next he was tumbled head over heels into a bag; jolted rapidly across streets, and at length was tumbled out - here. He found himself in complete darkness. He found himself in chillness and dampness. As his giddiness left him he made out a few shapes in a low dark room - broken chairs, a tumbled mat-tress. Then he was seized and tied tightly by the leg to some obstacle. Something sprawled on the floor - whether beast or human being, he could not tell. Great boots and draggled skirts kept stumbling in and out. Flies buzzed on scraps of old meat that were decaying on the floor. Children crawled out from dark corners and pinched his ears. He whined, and a heavy hand beat him over the head. He cowered down on the few inches of damp brick against the wall. Now he could see that the floor was crowded with animals of different kinds. Dogs tore and worried a festering bone that they had got between them. Their ribs stood out from their coats - they were half famished, dirty, diseased, uncombed, unbrushed; yet all of them, Flush could see, were dogs of the highest breeding, chained dogs, footmen's dogs, like himself.

He lay, not daring even to whimper, hour after hour. Thirst was his worst suffering; but one sip of the thick green-ish water that stood in a pail near him disgusted him; he would rather die than drink another. Yet a majestic grey-hound was drinking greedily. Whenever the door was kicked open he looked up. Miss Barrett - was it Miss Bar-rett? Had she come at last? But it was only a hairy ruffian, who kicked them all aside and stumbled to a broken chair upon which he flung himself. Then gradually the darkness thickened. He could scarcely make out what shapes those were, on the floor, on the mattress, on the broken chairs. A stump of candle was stuck on the ledge over the fireplace. A flare burnt in the gutter outside. By its flickering, coarse light Flush could see terrible faces passing outside, leering at the window. Then in they came, until the small crowded room became so crowded that he had to shrink back and lie even closer against the wall. These horrible monsters - some were ragged, others were flaring with paint and feathers - squatted on the floor; hunched themselves over the table. They began to drink; they cursed and struck each other. Out tumbled, from the bags that were dropped on the floor, more dogs - lapdogs, setters, pointers, with their collars still on them; and a giant cockatoo that flustered and fluttered its way from corner to corner, shrieking 'Pretty Poll', 'Pretty Poll', with an accent that would have terrified its mistress, a widow in Maida Vale. Then the women's bags were opened, and out were tossed on to the table bracelets and rings and brooches such as Flush had seen Miss Barrett wear and Miss Henrietta. The demons pawed and clawed them; cursed and quarrelled over them. The dogs barked. The children shrieked, and the splendid cockatoo - such a bird as Flush had often seen pendant in a Wimpole Street window - shrieked 'Pretty Poll! Pretty Poll!' faster and faster until a slipper was thrown at it and it flapped its great yellow-stained dove-grey wings in frenzy. Then the candle toppled over and fell. The room was dark. It grew steadily hotter and hotter; the smell, the heat, were unbearable, Flush' s nose burnt; his coat twitched. And still Miss Barrett did not come.

Miss Barrett lay on her sofa in Wimpole Street. She was vexed; she was worried, but she was not seriously alarmed. Of course Flush would suffer; he would whine and bark all night; but it was only a question of a few hours. Mr Taylor would name his sum; she would pay it; Flush would be returned.

The morning of Wednesday the 2nd September dawned in the rookeries of Whitechapel. The broken windows grad-ually became smeared with grey. Light fell upon the hairy faces of ruffians lying sprawled upon the floor. Flush woke from a trance that had veiled his eyes and once more real-ised the truth. This was now the truth - this room, these ruffians, these whining, snapping, tightly tethered dogs, this murk, this dampness. Could it be true that he had been in a shop, with ladies, among ribbons, only yesterday? Was there such a place as Wimpole Street? Was there a room where fresh water sparkled in a purple jar; had he lain on cushions; had he been given a chicken' s wing nicely roasted; and had he been torn with rage and jealousy and bitten a man with yellow gloves? The whole of that life and its emo-tions floated away, dissolved, became unreal.

Here, as the dusty light filtered in, a woman heaved her-self off a sack and staggered out to fetch beer. The drinking and the cursing began again. A fat woman held him up by his ears and pinched his ribs, and some odious joke was made about him - there was a roar of laughter as she threw him on the floor again. The door was kicked open and banged to. Whenever that happened he looked up. Was it Wilson? Could it possibly be Mr Browning? Or Miss Bar-rett? But no - it was only another thief, another murderer; he cowered back at the mere sight of those draggled skirts, of those hard, horny boots. Once he tried to gnaw a bone that was hurled his way. But his teeth could not meet in stony flesh and the rank smell disgusted him. His thirst increased and he was forced to lap a little of the green water that had been spilt from the pail. But as Wednesday wore on and he became hotter and more parched and still more sore, lying on the broken boards, one thing merged in another. He scarcely noticed what was happening. It was only when the door opened that he raised his head and looked. No, it was not Miss Barrett.

Miss Barrett, lying on the sofa in Wimpole Street, was becoming anxious. There was some hitch in the proceedings. Taylor had promised that he would go down to Whitechapel on Wednesday afternoon and confer with 'the Society'. Yet Wednesday afternoon, Wednesday evening passed and still Taylor did not come. This could only mean, she supposed, that the price was going to be raised - which was inconvenient enough at the moment. Still, of course, she would have to pay it. 'I must have my Flush, you know', she wrote to Mr Browning. 'I can't run any risk and bargain and haggle.' So she lay on the sofa writing to Mr Browning and listening for a knock at the door. But Wilson came up with the letters; Wilson came up with the hot water. It was time for bed and Flush had not come.

Thursday the 3rd of September dawned in Whitechapel. The door opened and shut. The red setter who had been whining all night beside Flush on the floor was hauled off by a ruffian in a moleskin vest - to what fate? Was it better to be killed or to stay here? Which was worse - this life or that death? The racket, the hunger and the thirst, the reek-ing smells of the place - and once, Flush remembered, he had detested the scent of eau-de-Cologne - were fast obliterating any clear image, any single desire. Fragments of old memories began turning in his head. Was that the voice of old Dr Mitford shouting in the field? Was that Kerenhap-poch gossiping with the baker at the door? There was a rattling in the room and he thought he heard Miss Mitford tying up a bunch of geraniums. But it was only the wind - for it was stormy to-day - battering at the brown paper in the broken window pane. It was only some drunken voice raving in the gutter. It was only the old hag in the corner mumbling on and on and on as she fried a herring in a pan over a fire. He had been forgotten and deserted. No help was coming. No voice spoke to him - the parrots cried 'Pretty Poll, Pretty Poll', and the canaries kept up their senseless cheeping and chirping.

Then again evening darkened the room; the candle was stuck in its saucer; the coarse light flared outside; hordes of sinister men with bags on their backs, of garish women with painted faces, began to shuffle in at the door and to fling themselves down on the broken beds and tables. Another night had folded its blackness over Whitechapel. And the rain dripped steadily through a hole in the roof and drummed into a pail that had been stood to catch it. Miss Barrett had not come.

Thursday dawned in Wimpole Street. There was no sign of Flush - no message from Taylor. Miss Barrett was very much alarmed. She made enquiries. She summoned her brother Henry, and cross-examined him. She found out that he had tricked her. 'The arch fiend' Taylor had come according to his promise the night before. He had stated his terms - six guineas for the Society and half a guinea for himself. But Henry, instead of telling her, had told Mr Barrett, with the result, of course, that Mr Barrett had ordered him not to pay, and to conceal the visit from his sister. Miss Barrett was 'very vexed and angry'. She bade her brother to go at once to Mr Taylor and pay the money. Henry refused and 'talked of Papa'. But it was no use talking of Papa, she protested. While they talked of Papa, Flush would be killed. She made up her mind. If Henry would not go, she would go herself: '..... if people won't do as I choose, I shall go down to-morrow morning, and bring Flush back with me', she wrote to Mr Browning.

But Miss Barrett now found that it was easier to say this than to do it. It was almost as difficult for her to go to Flush as for Flush to come to her. All Wimpole Street was against her. The news that Flush was stolen and that Taylor demanded a ransom was now public property. Wimpole Street was determined to make a stand against Whitechapel. Blind Mr Boyd sent word that in his opinion it would be 'an awful sin' to pay the ransom. Her father and her brother were in league against her and were capable of any treachery in the interests of their class. But worst of all - far worse - Mr Browning himself threw all his weight, all his eloquence, all his learning, all his logic, on the side of Wimpole Street and against Flush. If Miss Barrett gave way to Taylor, he wrote, she was giving way to tyranny; she was giving way to blackmailers; she was increasing the power of evil over right, of wickedness over innocence. If she gave Taylor his demand, '..... how will the poor owners fare who have not money enough for their dogs' redemption'? His imagination took fire; he imagined what he would say if Taylor asked him even for five shillings; he would say, 'You are responsible for the proceedings of your gang, and you I mark - don't talk nonsense to me about cutting off heads or paws. Be as sure as that I stand here and tell you, I will spend my whole life in putting you down, the nuisance you declare yourself - and by every imaginable means I will be the death of you and as many of your accomplices as I can discover - but you I have discovered and will never lose sight of ' So Mr Browning would have replied to Taylor if he had had the good fortune to meet that gentleman. For indeed, he went on, catching a later post with a second letter that same Thursday afternoon, ' it is horrible to fancy how all the oppressors in their several ranks may, if they choose, twitch back to them by the heartstrings after various modes the weak and silent whose secret they have found out'. He did not blame Miss Barrett - nothing she did could be anything but perfectly right, perfectly acceptable to him. Still, he continued on Friday morning, 'I think it lamentable weakness ' If she encouraged Taylor who stole dogs, she encouraged Mr Barnard Gregory who stole characters. Indirectly, she was responsible for all the wretches who cut their throats or fly the country because some blackmailer like Barnard Gregory took down a directory and blasted their characters. 'But why write all this string of truisms about the plainest thing in the world?' So Mr Browning stormed and vociferated from New Cross twice daily. Lying on her sofa, Miss Barrett read the letters. How easy it would have been to yield - how easy it would have been to say, 'Your good opinion is worth more to me than a hundred cocker spaniels'. How easy it would have been to sink back on her pillows and sigh, 'I am a weak woman; I know nothing of law and justice; decide for me'. She had only to refuse to pay the ransom; she had only to defy Taylor and his Society. And if Flush were killed, if the dreadful parcel came and she opened it and out dropped his head and paws, there was Robert Browning by her side to assure her that she had done right and earned his respect. But Miss Barrett was not to be intimidated. Miss Barrett took up her pen and refuted Robert Browning. It was all very well, she said, to quote Donne; to cite the case of Gregory; to invent spirited replies to Mr Taylor - she would have done the same had Taylor struck her; had Gregory defamed her; - would that they had! But what would Mr Browning have done if the banditti had stolen her; had her in their power; threatened to cut off her ears and send them by post to New Cross? Whatever he would have done, her mind was made up. Flush was helpless. Her duty was to him. 'But Flush, poor Flush, who has loved me so faithfully; have I a right to sacrifice him in his innocence, for the sake of any Mr Taylor' s guilt in the world?' Whatever Mr Browning might say, she was going to rescue Flush, even if she went down into the jaws of Whitechapel to fetch him, even if Robert Browning despised her for doing so.

On Saturday, therefore, with Mr Browning's letter lying open on the table before her, she began to dress. She read his 'one word more - in all this, I labour against the ex-crable policy of the world's husbands, fathers, brothers and domineerers in general'. So, if she went to Whitechapel she was siding against Robert Browning, and in favour of fathers, brothers and domineerers in general. Still, she went on dressing. A dog howled in the mews. It was tied up, help-less in the power of cruel men. It seemed to her to cry as it howled: 'Think of Flush'. She put on her shoes, her cloak, her hat. She glanced at Mr Browning' s letter once more. 'I am about to marry you', she read. Still the dog howled. She left her room and went downstairs.

Henry Barrett met her and told her that in his opinion she might well be robbed and murdered if she did what she threatened. She told Wilson to call a cab. All trembling but submissive, Wilson obeyed. The cab came. Miss Barrett told Wilson to get in. Wilson, though convinced that death awaited her, got in. Miss Barrett told the cab-man to drive to Manning Street, Shoreditch. Miss Barrett got in herself and off they drove. Soon they were beyond plate-glass win-dows, the mahogany doors and the area railings. They were in a world that Miss Barrett had never seen, had never guessed at. They were in a world where cows are herded under bedroom floors, where whole families sleep in rooms with broken windows; in a world where water is turned on only twice a week, in a world where vice and poverty breed vice and poverty. They had come to a region unknown to respectable cab-drivers. The cab stopped; the driver asked his way at a public-house. 'Out came two or three men. "Oh, you want to find Mr Taylor, I daresay!" ' In this mysterious world a cab with two ladies could only come upon one errand, and that errand was already known. It was sinister in the extreme. One of the men ran into a house, and came out saying that Mr Taylor ' "wasn' t at home! but wouldn' t I get out?" Wilson, in an aside of terror, entreated me not to think of such a thing.' A gang of men and boys pressed round the cab. 'Then wouldn't I see Mrs Taylor?' the man asked. Miss Barrett had no wish whatever to see Mrs Taylor; but now an immense fat woman came out of the house, 'fat enough to have had an easy conscience all her life', and informed Miss Barrett that her husband was out: 'might be in in a few minutes, or in so many hours - wouldn't I like to get out and wait?' Wilson tugged at her gown. Imagine waiting in the house of that woman! It was bad enough to sit in the cab with the gang of men and boys pressing round them. So Miss Barrett parleyed with the 'immense feminine bandit' from the cab. Mr Taylor had her dog, she said; Mr Taylor had promised to restore her dog; would Mr Taylor bring back her dog to Wimpole Street for certain that very day? 'Oh yes, certainly,' said the fat woman with the most gracious of smiles. She did believe that Taylor had left home precisely on that business. And she 'poised her head to right and left with the most easy grace'.

So the cab turned round and left Manning Street, Shoreditch. Wilson was of opinion that 'we had escaped with our lives barely'. Miss Barrett herself had been alarmed. 'Plain enough it was that the gang was strong there. The Society, the "Fancy" had their roots in the ground', she wrote. Her mind teemed with thoughts, her eyes were full of pictures. This, then, was what lay on the other side of Wimpole Street - these faces, these houses. She had seen more while she sat in the cab at the public-house than she had seen during the five years that she had lain in the back bedroom at Wimpole Street. 'The faces of those men!' she exclaimed. They were branded on her eyeballs. They stimulated her imagination as 'the divine marble presences', the busts on the bookcase, had never stimulated it. Here lived women like herself; while she lay on her sofa, reading, writing, they lived thus. But the cab was now trundling along between four-storeyed houses again. Here was the familiar avenue of doors and windows: the pointed brick, the brass knockers, the regular curtains. Here was Wimpole Street and No.50. Wilson sprang out - with what relief to find herself in safety can be imagined. But Miss Barrett perhaps hesitated a moment. She still saw 'the faces of those men'. They were to come before her again years later when she sat writing on a sunny balcony in Italy. They were to inspire the most vivid passages in Aurora Leigh. But now the butler had opened the door, and she went upstairs to her room again.

Saturday was the fifth day of Flush' s imprisonment. Almost exhausted, almost hopeless, he lay panting in his dark corner of the teeming floor. Doors slammed and banged. Rough voices cried. Women screamed. Parrots chattered as they had never chattered to widows in Maida Vale, but now evil old women merely cursed at them. Insects crawled in his fur, but he was too weak, too indifferent to shake his coat. All Flush' s past life and its many scenes - Reading, the greenhouse, Miss Mitford, Mr Kenyon, the bookcases, the busts, the peasants on the blind - had faded like snow flakes dissolved in a cauldron. If he still held to hope, it was to something nameless and formless; the featureless face of someone he still called 'Miss Barrett'. She still existed; all the rest of the world was gone; but she still existed, though such gulfs lay between them that it was impossible, almost, that she should reach him still. Darkness began to fall again, such darkness as seemed almost able to crush out his last hope - Miss Barrett.

In truth, the forces of Wimpole Street were still, even at this last moment, battling to keep Flush and Miss Barrett apart. On Saturday afternoon she lay and waited for Taylor to come, as the immensely fat woman had promised. At last he came, but he had not brought the dog. He sent up a message - Let Miss Barrett pay him six guineas on the spot, and he would go straight to Whitechapel and fetch the dog 'on his word of honour'. What 'the archfiend' Taylor' s word of honour might be worth, Miss Barrett could not say; but 'there seemed no other way for it'; Flush' s life was at stake; she counted out the guineas and sent them down to Taylor in the passage. But as ill luck would have it, as Taylor waited in the passage among the umbrellas, the engravings, the pile carpet and other valuable objects, Alfred Barrett came in. The sight of the arch fiend actually in the house made him lose his temper. He burst into a rage. He called him 'a swindler, and a liar and a thief'. Thereupon Mr Taylor cursed him back. What was far worse, he swore that 'as he hoped to be saved, we should never see our dog again', and rushed out of the house. Next morning, then, the blood-stained parcel would arrive.

Miss Barrett flung on her clothes again and rushed down-stairs. Where was Wilson? Let her call a cab. She was going back to Shoreditch instantly. Her family came running to prevent her. It was getting dark. She was exhausted already. The adventure was risky enough for a man in health. For her it was madness. So they told her. Her brothers, her sisters, all came round her threatening her, dissuading her, 'crying out against me for being "quite mad" and obstinate and wilful - I was called as many names as Mr Taylor'. But she stood her ground. At last they realised the extent of her folly. Whatever the risk might be they must give way to her. Septimus promised if Ba would return to her room 'and be in good humour' he would go to Taylor's himself and pay the money and bring back the dog.

So the dusk of the 5th of September faded into the black-ness of night in Whitechapel. The door of the room was once more kicked open. A hairy man hauled Flush by the scruff of his neck out of his corner. Looking up into the hideous face of his old enemy, Flush did not know whether he was being taken to be killed or to be freed. Save for one phan-tom memory, he did not care. The man stooped. What were those great fingers fumbling at his throat for? Was it a knife or a chain? Stumbling, half blinded, on legs that staggered, Flush was led out into the open air.

In Wimpole Street Miss Barrett could not eat her dinner. Was Flush dead, or was Flush alive? She did not know. At eight o'clock there was a rap on the door; it was the usual letter from Mr Browning. But as the door opened to admit the letter, something rushed in also; - Flush. He made straight for his purple jar. It was filled three times over; and still he drank. Miss Barrett watched the dazed, bewildered dirty dog, drinking. 'He was not so enthusiastic about see-ing me as I expected', she remarked. No, there was only one thing in the world he wanted - clean water.

After all, Miss Barrett had but glanced at the faces of those men and she remembered them all her life. Flush had been at their mercy in their midst for five whole days. Now as he lay on cushions once more, cold water was the only thing that seemed to have any substance, any reality. He drank continually. The old gods of the bedroom - the book-case, the wardrobe, the busts - seemed to have lost their substance. This room was no longer the whole world; it was only a shelter. It was only a dell arched over by one trem-bling dock-leaf in a forest where wild beasts prowled and venomous snakes coiled; where behind every tree lurked a murderer ready to pounce. As he lay dazed and exhausted on the sofa at Miss Barrett's feet the howls of tethered dogs, the screams of birds in terror still sounded in his ears. When the door opened he started, expecting a hairy man with a knife - it was only Mr Kenyon with a book; it was only Mr Browning with his yellow gloves. But he shrank away from Mr Kenyon and Mr Browning now. He trusted them no longer. Behind those smiling, friendly faces was treach-ery and cruelty and deceit. Their caresses were hollow. He dreaded even walking with Wilson to the pillar-box. He would not stir without his chain. When they said, 'Poor Flush, did the naughty men take you away?' he put up his head and moaned and yelled. A whip cracking sent him bolting down the area-steps into safety. Indoors he crept closer to Miss Barrett on the sofa. She alone had not des-erted him. He still kept some faith in her. Gradually some substance returned to her. Exhausted, trembling, dirty and very thin, he lay on the sofa at her feet.

As the days passed and the memory of Whitechapel grew fainter, Flush, lying close to Miss Barrett on the sofa, read her feelings more clearly than ever before. They had been parted; now they were together. Indeed they had never been so much akin. Every start she gave, every movement she made, passed through him too. And she seemed now to be perpetually starting and moving. The delivery of a parcel even made her jump. She opened the parcel; with trembling fingers she took out a pair of thick boots. She hid them instantly in the corner of the cupboard. Then she lay down as if nothing had happened; yet something had happened. When they were alone she rose and took a diamond necklace from a drawer. She took out the box that held Mr Brown-ing's letters. She laid the boots, the necklace and the letters all in a carpet-box together and then - as if she heard a step on the stair - she pushed the box under the bed and lay down hastily, covering herself with her shawl again. Such signs of secrecy and stealth must herald, Flush felt, some approaching crisis. Were they about to fly together? Were they about to escape together from this awful world of dog-stealers and tyrants? Oh that it were possible! He trem-bled and whined with excitement; but in her low voice Miss Barrett bade him be quiet, and instantly he was quiet. She was very quiet too. She lay perfectly still on the sofa directly any of her brothers or sisters came in; she lay and talked to Mr Barrett as she always lay and talked to Mr Barrett.

But on Saturday, the 12th of September, Miss Barrett did what Flush had never known her do before. She dressed herself as if to go out directly after breakfast. Moreover, as he watched her dress, Flush knew perfectly well from the expression on her face that he was not to go with her. She was bound on secret business of her own. At ten Wilson came into the room. She also was dressed as if for a walk. They went out together; and Flush lay on the sofa and waited for their return. An hour or so later Miss Barrett came back alone. She did not look at him - she seemed to look at nothing. She drew off her gloves and for a moment he saw a gold band shine on one of the fingers of her left hand. Then he saw her slip the ring from her hand and hide it in the darkness of a drawer. Then she laid herself down as usual on the sofa. He lay by her side scarcely daring to breathe, for whatever had happened, it was something that must at all costs be concealed.

At all costs the life of the bedroom must go on as usual. Yet everything was different. The very movement of the blind as it drew in and out seemed to Flush like a signal. And as the lights and shadows passed over the busts they too seemed to be hinting and beckoning. Everything in the room seemed to be aware of change; to be prepared for some event. And yet all was silent; all was concealed. The brothers and sisters came in and out as usual; Mr Barrett came as usual in the evening. He looked as usual to see that the chop was finished, the wine drunk. Miss Barrett talked and laughed and gave no sign when anyone was in the room that she was hiding anything. Yet when they were alone she pulled out the box from under the bed and filled it hastily, stealthily, listening as she did so. And the signs of strain were unmistakable. On Sunday the church bells were ring-ing. 'What bells are those?' somebody asked. 'Marylebone Church bells', said Miss Henrietta. Miss Barrett, Flush saw, went deadly white. But nobody else seemed to notice anything.

So Monday passed, and Tuesday and Wednesday and Thursday. Over them all lay a blanket of silence, of eating and talking and lying still on the sofa as usual. Flush, toss-ing in uneasy sleep, dreamt that they were couched together under ferns and leaves in the darkness, in a vast forest; then the leaves were parted and he woke. It was dark; but he saw Wilson come stealthily into the room, and take the box from beneath the bed and quietly carry it outside. This was on Friday night, the 18th of September. All Saturday morning he lay as one lies who knows that at any moment now a handkerchief may drop, a low whistle may sound and the signal will be given for death or for life. He watched Miss Barrett dress herself. At a quarter to four the door opened and Wilson came in. Then the signal was given - Miss Bar-rett lifted him in her arms. She rose and walked to the door. For a moment they stood looking round the room. There was the sofa and by it Mr Browning' s armchair. There were the busts and the tables. The sunfiltered through the ivy leaves and the blind with peasants walking blew gently out. All was as usual. All seemed to expect a million more such movements to come to them; but to Miss Barrett and Flush this was the last. Very quietly Miss Barrett shut the door.

Very quietly they slipped downstairs, past the drawing-room, the library, the dining-room. All looked as they usually looked; smelt as they usually smelt; all were quiet as if sleeping in the hot September afternoon. On the mat in the hall Catiline lay sleeping too. They gained the front door and very quietly turned the handle. A cab was waiting outside.

'To Hodgson's', said Miss Barrett. She spoke almost in a whisper. Flush sat on her knee very still. Not for anything in the whole world would he have broken that tremendous silence.

Chapter 5 ITALY

Hours, days, weeks, it seemed of darkness and rattling; of sudden lights; and then long tunnels of gloom; of being flung this way and that; of being hastily lifted into the light and seeing Miss Barrett' s face close, and thin trees and lines and rails and high light-specked houses - for it was the bar-barous custom of railways in those days to make dogs travel in boxes - followed. Yet Flush was not afraid; they were escaping; they were leaving tyrants and dog-stealers behind them. Rattle, grind; grind, rattle as much as you like, he murmured, as the train flung him this way and that; only let us leave Wimpole Street and Whitechapel behind us. At last the light broadened; the rattling stopped. He heard birds singing and the sigh of trees in the wind. Or was it the rush of water? Opening his eyes at last, shaking his coat at last, he saw - the most astonishing sight conceivable. There was Miss Barrett on a rock in the midst of rushing waters. Trees bent over her; the river raced round her. She must be in peril. With one bound Flush splashed through the stream and reached her. ' he is baptized in Petrarch' s name', said Miss Barrett as he clambered up on to the rock by her side. For they were at Vaucluse; she had perched herself upon a stone in the middle of Petrarch' s fountain.

Then there was more rattling and more grinding; and then again he was stood down on a stable floor; the darkness opened; light poured over him; he found himself alive, awake, bewildered, standing on reddish tiles in a vast bare room flooded with sunshine. He ran hither and thither smelling and touching. There was no carpet and no fire-place. There were no sofas, no armchairs, no bookcases, no busts. Pungent and unfamiliar smells tickled his nostrils and made him sneeze. The light, in finitely sharp and clear, dazzled his eyes. He had never been in a room - if this were indeed a room - that was so hard, so bright, so big, so empty. Miss Barrett looked smaller than ever sitting on a chair by a table in the midst. Then Wilson took him out of doors. He found himself almost blinded, first by the sun, then by the shadow. One half of the street was burning hot; the other bitterly cold. Women went by wrapped in furs, yet they carried parasols to shade their heads. And the street was dry as bone. Though it was now the middle of November there was neither mud nor puddle to wet his paws or clot their feathers. There were no areas and no railings. There was none of that heady confusion of smells that made a walk down Wimpole Street or Oxford Street so distracting. On the other hand, the strange new smells that came from sharp stone corners, from dry yellow walls, were extraordinarily pungent and queer. Then from behind a black swinging curtain came an astonishing sweet smell, wafted in clouds; he stopped, his paws raised, to savour it; he made to follow it inside; he pushed in beneath the curtain. He had one glimpse of a booming light-sprinkled hall, very high and hollow; and then Wilson with a cry of horror, jerked him smartly back. They went on down the street again. The noise of the street was deafening. Everybody seemed to be shouting shrilly at the same moment. Instead of the solid and soporific hum of London there was a rattling and a crying, a jingling and a shouting, a cracking of whips and a jangling of bells. Flush leapt and jumped this way and that, and so did Wilson. They were forced on and off the pavement twenty times, to avoid a cart, a bullock, a troop of soldiers, a drove of goats. He felt younger, spryer than he had done these many years. Dazzled, yet exhilarated, he sank on the reddish tiles and slept more soundly than he had ever slept in the back bedroom at Wimpole Street upon pillows.

But soon Flush became aware of the more profound differences that distinguish Pisa - for it was in Pisa that they were now settled - from London. The dogs were different. In London he could scarcely trot round to the pillar-box without meeting some pug dog, retriever, bulldog, mastiff, collie, Newfoundland, St Bernard, fox terrier or one of the seven famous families of the Spaniel tribe. To each he gave a different name, and to each a different rank. But here in Pisa, though dogs abounded, there were no ranks; all - could it be possible? - were mongrels. As far as he could see, they were dogs merely-grey dogs, yellow dogs, brindled dogs, spotted dogs; but it was impossible to detect a single spaniel, collie, retriever or mastiff among them. Had the Kennel Club, then, no jurisdiction in Italy? Was the Spaniel Club unknown? Was there no law which decreed death to the topknot, which cherished the curled ear, protected the feathered foot, and insisted absolutely that the brow must be domed but not pointed? Apparently not. Flush felt himself like a prince in exile. He was the sole aristocrat among a crowd of canaille. He was the only pure-bred cocker spaniel in the whole of Pisa.

For many years now Flush had been taught to consider himself an aristocrat. The law of the purple jar and of the chain had sunk deep into his soul. It is scarcely surprising that he was thrown off his balance. A Howard or a Caven-dish set down among a swarm of natives in mud huts can hardly be blamed if now and again he remembers Chats-worth and muses regretfully over red carpets and galleries daubed with coronets as the sunset blazes down through painted windows. There was an element, it must be admitted, of the snob in Flush; Miss Mitford had detected it years ago; and the sentiment, subdued in London among equals and superiors, returned to him now that he felt himself unique. He became overbearing and impudent. 'Flush has grown an absolute monarch and barks one distracted when he wants a door opened', Mrs Browning wrote. 'Robert', she continued, 'declares that the said Flush considers him, my husband, to be created for the especial purpose of doing him service, and really it looks rather like it.'

'Robert', 'my husband' - if Flush had changed, so had Miss Barrett. It was not merely that she called herself Mrs Browning now; that she flashed the gold ring on her hand in the sun; she was changed, as much as Flush was changed. Flush heard her say 'Robert', 'my husband', fifty times a day, and always with a ring of pride that made his hackles rise and his heart jump. But it was not her language only that had changed. She was a different person altogether. Now, for instance, instead of sipping a thimbleful of port and complaining of the headache, she tossed off a tumbler of Chianti and slept the sounder. There was a flowering branch of oranges on the dinner-table instead of one denuded, sour, yellow fruit. Then instead of driving in a barouche landau to Regent's Park she pulled on her thick boots and scrambled over rocks. Instead of sitting in a carriage and rumbling along Oxford Street, they rattled off in a ramshackle fly to the borders of a lake and looked at mountains; and when she was tired she did not hail another cab; she sat on a stone and watched the lizards. She delighted in the sun; she delighted in the cold. She threw pine logs from the Duke's forest on to the fire if it froze. They sat together in the crackling blaze and snuffed up the sharp, aromatic scent. She was never tired of praising Italy at the expense of England. '..... our poor English', she exclaimed, 'want educating into glad-ness. They want refining not in the fire but in the sunshine.' Here in Italy was freedom and life and the joy that the sun breeds. One never saw menfighting, or heard them swear-ing; one never saw the Italians drunk; - 'the faces of those men' in Shoreditch came again before her eyes. She was always comparing Pisa with London and saying how much she preferred Pisa. In the streets of Pisa pretty women could walk alone; great ladies first emptied their own slops and then went to Court 'in a blaze of undeniable glory'. Pisa with all its bells, its mongrels, its camels, its pine woods, was infinitely preferable to Wimpole Street and its mahog-any doors and its shoulders of mutton. So Mrs Browning every day, as she tossed off her Chianti and broke another orange from the branch, praised Italy and lamented poor, dull, damp, sunless, joyless, expensive, conventional England.

Wilson, it is true, for a time maintained her British bal-ance. The memory of butlers and basements, of front doors and curtains, was not obliterated from her mind without an effort. She still had the conscience to walk out of a picture gallery 'struck back by the indecency of the Venus'. And later, when she was allowed, by the kindness of a friend, to peep through a door at the glories of the Grand Ducal Court, she still loyally upheld the superior glory of St James' s. 'It was all very shabby', she reported, 'in com-parison with our English Court.' But even as she gazed, the superb figure of one of the Grand Duke' s bodyguard caught her eye. Her fancy was fired; her judgement reeled; her standards toppled. Lily Wilson fell passionately in love with Signor Righi, the guardsman.

And just as Mrs Browning was exploring her new free-dom and delighting in the discoveries she made, so Flush too was making his discoveries and exploring his freedom. Before they left Pisa - in the spring of 1847 they moved on to Florence - Flush had faced the curious and at first upset-ting truth that the laws of the Kennel Club are not universal. He had brought himself to face the fact that light topknots are not necessarily fatal. He had revised his code accordingly. He had acted, at first with some hesitation, upon his new conception of canine society. He was becoming daily more and more democratic. Even in Pisa, Mrs Browning noticed, ' he goes out every day and speaks Italian to the little dogs'. Now in Florence the last threads of his old fetters fell from him. The moment of liberation came one day in the Cascine. As he raced over the grass 'like emeralds' with 'the pheasants all alive and flying', Flush suddenly bethought him of Regent's Park and its proclamation: Dogs must be led on chains. Where was 'must' now? Where were chains now? Where were park-keepers and truncheons? Gone, with the dog-stealers and Kennel Clubs and Spaniel Clubs of a corrupt aristocracy! Gone with four-wheelers and hansom cabs! with Whitechapel and Shoreditch! He ran, he raced; his coat flashed; his eyes blazed. He was the friend of all the world now. All dogs were his brothers. He had no need of a chain in this new world; he had no need of protection. If Mr Browning was late in going for his walk - he and Flush were the best of friends now - Flush boldly summoned him. He 'stands up before him and barks in the most imperi-ous manner possible', Mrs Browning observed with some irritation - for her relations with Flush were far less emotional now than in the old days; she no longer needed his red fur and his bright eyes to give her what her own experi-ence lacked; she had found Pan for herself among the vineyards and the olive trees; he was there too beside the pinefire of an evening. So if Mr Browning loitered, Flush stood up and barked; but if Mr Browning preferred to stay at home and write, it did not matter. Flush was independent now. The wistarias and the laburnum were flowering over walls; the judas trees were burning bright in the gardens; the wild tulips were sprinkled in the fields. Why should he wait? Off he ran by himself. He was his own master now. '..... he goes out by himself, and stays hours together', Mrs Browning wrote; '..... knows every street in Florence - will have his own way in everything. I am never frightened at his absence', she added, remembering with a smile those hours of agony in Wimpole Street and the gang waiting to snatch him up under the horses' feet if she forgot his chain in Vere Street. Fear was unknown in Florence; there were no dog-stealers here and, she may have sighed, there were no fathers.

But, to speak candidly, it was not to stare at pictures, to penetrate into dark churches and look up at dim frescoes, that Flush scampered off when the door of Casa Guidi was left open. It was to enjoy something, it was in search of something denied him all these years. Once the hunting horn of Venus had blown its wild music over the Berkshire fields; he had loved Mr Partridge's dog; she had borne him a child. Now he heard the same voice pealing down the narrow streets of Florence, but more imperiously, more impetuously, after all these years of silence. Now Flush knew what men can never know - love pure, love simple, love entire; love that brings no train of care in its wake; that has no shame; no remorse; that is here, that is gone, as the bee on the flower is here and is gone. To-day the flower is a rose, to-morrow a lily; now it is the wild thistle on the moor, now the pouched and portentous orchid of the conservatory. So variously, so carelessly Flush embraced the spotted spaniel down the alley, and the brindled dog and the yellow dog - it did not matter which. To Flush it was all the same. He followed the horn wherever the horn blew and the wind wafted it. Love was all; love was enough. No one blamed him for his escapades. Mr Browning merely laughed - 'Quite dis-graceful for a respectable dog like him' - when Flush returned very late at night or early the next morning. And 9780

Mrs Browning laughed too, as Flush flung himself down on the bedroom floor and slept soundly upon the arms of the Guidi family inlaid in scagliola.

For at Casa Guidi the rooms were bare. All those draped objects of his cloistered and secluded days had vanished. The bed was a bed; the wash-stand was a wash-stand. Every-thing was itself and not another thing. The drawing-room was large and sprinkled with a few old carved chairs of ebony. Over the fire hung a mirror with two cupids to hold the lights. Mrs Browning herself had discarded her Indian shawls. She wore a cap made of some thin bright silk that her husband liked. Her hair was brushed in a new way. And when the sun had gone down and the shutters had been raised she paced the balcony dressed in thin white muslin. She loved to sit there looking, listening, watching the people in the street.

They had not been long in Florence before one night there was such a shouting and trampling in the street that they ran to the balcony to see what was happening. A vast crowd was surging underneath. They were carrying banners and shouting and singing. All the windows were full of faces; all the balconies were full of figures. The people in the win-dows were tossing flowers and laurel leaves on to the people in the street; and the people in the street - grave men, gay young women - were kissing each other and raising their babies to the people in the balconies. Mr and Mrs Browning leant over the balustrade and clapped and clapped. Banner after banner passed. The torches flashed their light on them. 'Liberty' was written on one; 'The Union of Italy' on another; and 'The Memory of the Martyrs' and 'Viva Pio Nono' and 'Viva Leopoldo Secondo' - for three and a half hours the banners went by and the people cheered and Mr and Mrs Browning stood with six candles burning on the balcony, waving and waving. For some time Flush too, stretched between them with his paws over the sill, did his best to rejoice. But at last - he could not conceal it - he yawned. 'He confessed at last that he thought they were rather long about it', Mrs Browning observed. A weariness, a doubt, a ribaldry possessed him. What was it all for? he asked himself. Who was this Grand Duke and what had he promised? Why were they all so absurdly excited? - for the ardour of Mrs Browning, waving and waving, as the banners passed, somehow annoyed him. Such enthusiasm for a Grand Duke was somehow exaggerated, he felt. And then, as the Grand Duke passed, he became aware that a little dog had stopped at the door. Seizing his chance when Mrs Browning was more than usually enthusiastic, he slipped down from the balcony and made off. Through the banners and the crowds he followed her. She fled further and further into the heart of Florence. Far away sounded the shouting; the cheers of the people died down into silence. The lights of the torches were extinguished. Only a star or two shone in the ripples of the Arno where Flush lay with the spotted spaniel by his side, couched in the shell of an old basket on the mud. There tranced in love they lay till the sun rose in the sky. Flush did not return until nine next morning, and Mrs Browning greeted him rather ironically - he might at least, she thought, have remembered that it was the first anniversary of her wedding day. But she supposed 'he had been very much amused'. It was true. While she had found an inexplicable satisfaction in the trampling of forty thousand people, in the promises of Grand Dukes and the windy aspirations of banners, Flush in finitely preferred the little dog at the door.

It cannot be doubted that Mrs Browning and Flush were reaching different conclusions in their voyages of discovery - she a Grand Duke, he a spotted spaniel; - and yet the tie which bound them together was undeniably still binding. No sooner had Flush abolished 'must' and raced free through the emerald grass of the Cascine gardens where the pheasants fluttered red and gold, than he felt a check. Once more he was thrown back on his haunches. At first it was nothing - a hint merely - only that Mrs Browning in the spring of 1849 became busy with her needle. And yet there was something in the sight that gave Flush pause. She was not used to sew. He noted that Wilson moved a bed and that she opened a drawer to put white clothes inside it. Raising his head from the tiled floor, he looked, he listened attentively. Was something once more about to happen? He looked anxiously for signs of trunks and packing. Was there to be another flight, another escape? But an escape to what, from what? There is nothing to be afraid of here, he assured Mrs Browning. They need neither of them worry themselves in Florence about Mr Taylor and dogs' heads wrapped up in brown paper parcels. Yet he was puzzled. The signs of change, as he read them, did not signify escape. They signified, much more mysteriously, expectance. Something, he felt, as he watched Mrs Browning so composedly, yet silently and steadfastly, stitching in her low chair, was coming that was inevitable; yet to be dreaded. As the weeks went on, Mrs Browning scarcely left the house. She seemed, as she sat there, to anticipate some tremendous event. Was she about to encounter somebody, like the ruffian Taylor, and let him rain blows on her alone and unaided? Flush quivered with apprehension at the thought. Certainly she had no intention of running away. No boxes were packed. There was no sign that anybody was about to leave the house - rather there were signs that somebody was coming. In his jealous anxiety Flush scrutinised each new-comer. There were many now - Miss Blagden, Mr Landor, Hattie Hosmer, Mr Lytton - ever so many ladies and gentlemen now came to Casa Guidi. Day after day Mrs Browning sat there in her armchair quietly stitching.

Then one day early in March Mrs Browning did not appear in the sitting-room at all. Other people came in and out; Mr Browning and Wilson came in and out; and they came in and out so distractedly that Flush hid himself under the sofa. People were trampling up and down stairs, running and calling in low whispers and muted unfamiliar voices. They were moving upstairs in the bedroom. He crept further and further under the shadow of the sofa. He knew in every fibre of his body that some change was taking place - some awful event was happening. So he had waited, years ago, for the step of the hooded man on the staircase. And at last the door had opened and Miss Barrett had cried 'Mr Browning!' Who was coming now? What hooded man? As the day wore on, he was left completely alone; nobody came into the drawing-room. He lay in the drawing-room without food or drink; a thousand spotted spaniels might have sniffed at the door and he would have shrunk away from them. For as the hours passed he had an overwhelming sense that something was thrusting its way into the house from outside. He peeped out from beneath the flounces. The cupids holding the lights, the ebony chests, the French chairs, all looked thrust asunder; he himself felt as if he were being pushed up against the wall to make room for some-thing that he could not see. Once he saw Mr Browning, but he was not the same Mr Browning; once Wilson, but she was changed too - as if they were both seeing the invisible presence that he felt. Their eyes were oddly glazed.

At last Wilson, looking very flushed and untidy but triumphant, took him in her arms and carried him upstairs. They entered the bedroom. There was a faint bleating in the shadowed room - something waved on the pillow. It was a live animal. Independently of them all, without the street door being opened, out of herself in the room, alone, Mrs Browning had become two people. The horrid thing waved and mewed by her side. Torn with rage and jealousy and some deep disgust that he could not hide, Flush struggled himself free and rushed downstairs. Wilson and Mrs Brown-ing called him back; they tempted him with caresses; they offered him titbits; but it was useless. He cowered away from the disgusting sight, the repulsive presence, wherever there was a shadowy sofa or a dark corner. ' for a whole fort-night he fell into deep melancholy and was proof against all attentions lavished on him' - so Mrs Browning, in the midst of all her other distractions, was forced to notice. And when we take, as we must, human minutes and hours and drop them into a dog' s mind and see how the minutes swell into hours and the hours into days, we shall not exaggerate if we conclude that Flush' s 'deep melancholy' lasted six full months by the human clock. Many men and women have forgotten their hates and their loves in less.

But Flush was no longer the unschooled, untrained dog of Wimpole Street days. He had learnt his lesson. Wilson had struck him. He had been forced to swallow cakes that were stale when he might have eaten them fresh; he had sworn to love and not to bite. All this churned in his mind as he lay under the sofa; and at last he issued out. Again he was rewarded. At first, it must be admitted, the reward was insubstantial if not positively disagreeable. The baby was set on his back and Flush had to trot about with the baby pulling his ears. But he submitted with such grace, only turning round, when his ears were pulled, 'to kiss the little bare, dimpled feet', that, before three months had passed, this helpless, weak, puling, muling lump had somehow come to prefer him, 'on the whole' - so Mrs Browning said - to other people. And then, strangely enough, Flush found that he returned the baby's affection. Did they not share some-thing in common - did not the baby somehow resemble Flush in many ways? Did they not hold the same views, the same tastes? For instance, in the matter of scenery. To Flush all scenery was insipid. He had never, all these years, learnt to focus his eyes upon mountains. When they took him to Vallombrosa all the splendours of its woods had merely bored him. Now again, when the baby was a few months old, they went on another of those long expeditions in a travelling carriage. The baby lay on his nurse's lap; Flush sat on Mrs Browning's knee. The carriage went on and on and on, painfully climbing the heights of the Apennines. Mrs Browning was almost beside herself with delight. She could scarcely tear herself from the window. She could not find words enough in the whole of the English language to express what she felt. '..... the exquisite, almost visionary scenery of the Apennines, the wonderful variety of shape and colour, the sudden transitions and vital individuality of those mountains, the chestnut forests dropping by their own weight into the deep ravines, the rocks cloven and clawed by the living torrents, and the hills, hill above hill, piling up their grand existences as if they did it themselves, chang-ing colour in the effort' - the beauty of the Apennines brought words to birth in such numbers that they positively crushed each other out of existence. But the baby and Flush felt none of this stimulus, none of this inadequacy. Both were silent. Flush drew 'in his head from the window and didn't consider it worth looking at He has a supreme contempt for trees and hills or anything of that kind', Mrs Browning concluded. The carriage rumbled on. Flush slept and the baby slept. Then at last there were lights and houses and men and women passing the windows. They had entered a village. Instantly Flush was all attention. '..... his eyes were starting out of his head with eagerness; he looked east, he looked west, you would conclude that he was taking notes or preparing them.' It was the human scene that stirred him. Beauty, so it seems at least, had to be crystallised into a green or violet powder and puffed by some celestial syringe down the fringed channels that lay behind his nostrils before it touched Flush' s senses; and then it issued not in words, but in a silent rapture. Where Mrs Browning saw, he smelt; where she wrote, he snuffed.

Here, then, the biographer must perforce come to a pause Where two or three thousand words are insufficient for wha we see - and Mrs Browning had to admit herself beaten by the Apennines: 'Of these things I cannot give you any idea' she admitted - there are no more than two words and one-half for what we smell. The human nose is practically non-existent. The greatest poets in the world have smel nothing but roses on the one hand, and dung on the other. The in finite gradations that lie between are unrecorded. Ye it was in the world of smell that Flush mostly lived. Love was chiefly smell; form and colour were smell; music and architecture, law, politics and science were smell. To him religion itself was smell. To describe his simplest experienc with the daily chop or biscuit is beyond our power. Not even Mr Swinburne could have said what the smell of Wimpol Street meant to Flush on a hot afternoon in June. As fo describing the smell of a spaniel mixed with the smell o torches, laurels, incense, banners, wax candles and a gar land of rose leaves crushed by a satin heel that has been laid up in camphor, perhaps Shakespeare, had he paused in th middle of writing Antony and Cleopatra - But Shakespeare did not pause. Confessing our inadequacy, then, we can but note that to Flush Italy, in these the fullest, the freest, the happiest years of his life, meant mainly a succession of smells. Love, it must be supposed, was gradually losing its appeal. Smell remained. Now that they were established in Casa Guidi again, all had their avocations. Mr Browning wrote regularly in one room; Mrs Browning wrote regularly in another. The baby played in the nursery. But Flush wan-dered off into the streets of Florence to enjoy the rapture of smell. He threaded his path through main streets and back streets, through squares and alleys, by smell. He nosed his way from smell to smell; the rough, the smooth, the dark, the golden. He went in and out, up and down, where they beat brass, where they bake bread, where the women sit combing their hair, where the bird-cages are piled high on the causeway, where the wine spills itself in dark red stains on the pavement, where leather smells and harness and gar-lic, where cloth is beaten, where vine leaves tremble, where men sit and drink and spit and dice - he ran in and out, always with his nose to the ground, drinking in the essence; or with his nose in the air vibrating with the aroma. He slept in this hot patch of sun-how sun made the stone reek! he sought that tunnel of shade - how acid shade made the stone smell! He devoured whole bunches of ripe grapes largely because of their purple smell; he chewed and spat out what-ever tough relic of goat or macaroni the Italian housewife had thrown from the balcony - goat and macaroni were raucous smells, crimson smells. He followed the swoon-ing sweetness of incense into the violet intricacies of dark cathedrals; and, sniffing, tried to lap the gold on the window-stained tomb. Nor was his sense of touch much less acute. He knew Florence in its marmoreal smoothness and in its gritty and cobbled roughness. Hoary folds of drapery, smooth fingers and feet of stone received the lick of his tongue, the quiver of his shivering snout. Upon the infinitely sensitive pads of his feet he took the clear stamp of proud Latin inscriptions. In short, he knew Florence as no human being has ever known it; as Ruskin never knew it or George Eliot either. He knew it as only the dumb know. Not a single one of his myriad sensations ever submitted itself to the deformity of words.

But though it would be pleasant for the biographer to infer that Flush's life in late middle age was an orgy of pleasure transcending all description; to maintain that while the baby day by day picked up a new word and thus removed sensation a little further beyond reach, Flush was fated to remain for ever in a Paradise where essences exist in their utmost purity, and the naked soul of things presses on the naked nerve - it would not be true. Flush lived in no such Paradise. The spirit, ranging from star to star, the bird whose furthest flight over polar snows or tropical forests never brings it within sight of human houses and their curl-ing wood-smoke, may, for anything we know, enjoy such immunity, such integrity of bliss. But Flush had lain upon human knees and heard men's voices. His flesh was veined with human passions; he knew all grades of jealousy, anger and despair. Now in summer he was scourged by fleas. With a cruel irony the sun that ripened the grapes brought also the fleas. '..... Savonarola's martyrdom here in Florence', wrote Mrs Browning, 'is scarcely worse than Flush's in the summer.' Fleas leapt to life in every corner of the Florentine houses; they skipped and hopped out of every cranny of the old stone; out of every fold of old tapestry; out of every cloak, hat and blanket. They nested in Flush's fur. They bit their way into the thickest of his coat. He scratched and tore. His health suffered; he became morose, thin and feverish. Miss Mitford was appealed to. What remedy was there, Mrs Browning wrote anxiously, for fleas? Miss Mitford, still sitting in her greenhouse at Three Mile Cross, still writing tragedies, put down her pen and looked up her old prescriptions - what May flower had taken, what Rosebud. But the fleas of Reading die at a pinch. The fleas of Florence are red and virile. To them Miss Mitford's powders might well have been snuff. In despair Mr and Mrs Browning went down on their knees beside a pail of water and did their best to exorcise the pest with soap and scrubbing-brush. It was in vain. At last one day Mr Browning, taking Flush for a walk, noticed that people pointed; he heard a man lay a finger to his nose and whisper 'La roгна' (mange). As by this time 'Robert is as fond of Flush as I am', to take his walk of an afternoon with a friend and to hear him thus stigmatised was intolerable. Robert, his wife wrote, 'wouldn't bear it any longer'. Only one remedy remained, but it was a remedy that was almost as drastic as the disease itself. However democratic Flush had become and careless of the signs of rank, he still remained what Philip Sidney had called him, a gentleman by birth. He carried his pedigree on his back. His coat meant to him what a gold watch inscribed with the family arms means to an impoverished squire whose broad acres have shrunk to that single circle. It was the coat that Mr Browning now proposed to sacrifice. He called Flush to him and, 'taking a pair of scissors, clipped him all over into the likeness of a lion'.

As Robert Browning snipped, as the insignia of a cocker spaniel fell to the floor, as the travesty of quite a different animal rose round his neck, Flush felt himself emasculated, diminished, ashamed. What am I now? he thought, gazing into the glass. And the glass replied with the brutal sincerity of glasses, 'You are nothing'. He was nobody. Certainly he was no longer a cocker spaniel. But as he gazed, his ears bald now, and uncurled, seemed to twitch. It was as if the potent spirits of truth and laughter were whispering in them. To be nothing - is that not, after all, the most satisfactory state in the whole world? He looked again. There was his ruff. To caricature the pomposity of those who claim that they are something - was that not in its way a career? Anyhow, settle the matter as he might, there could be no doubt that he was free from fleas. He shook his ruff. He danced on his nude, attenuated legs. His spirits rose. So might a great beauty, rising from a bed of sickness and find-ing her face eternally disfigured, make a bonfire of clothes and cosmetics, and laugh with joy to think that she need never look in the glass again or dread a lover' s coolness or a rival' s beauty. So might a clergyman, cased for twenty years in starch and broadcloth, cast his collar into the dust-bin and snatch the works of Voltaire from the cupboard. So Flush scampered off clipped all over into the likeness of a lion, but free from fleas. 'Flush', Mrs Browning wrote to her sister, 'is wise.' She was thinking perhaps of the Greeks saying that happiness is only to be reached through suffer-ing. The true philosopher is he who has lost his coat but is free from fleas.

But Flush had not long to wait before his newly won philosophy was put to the test. Again in the summer of 1852 there were signs at Casa Guidi of one of those crises which, gath-ering soundlessly as a drawer opens or as a piece of string is left dangling from a box, are to a dog as menacing as the clouds which foretell lightning to a shepherd or as the rumours which foretell war to a statesman. Another change was indicated, another journey. Well, what of that? Trunks were hauled down and corded. The baby was carried out in his nurse' s arms. Mr and Mrs Browning appeared, dressed for travelling. There was a cab at the door. Flush waited philosophically in the hall. When they were ready he was ready. Now that they were all seated in the carriage, with one bound Flush sprang lightly in after them. To Venice, to Rome, to Paris - where were they going? All countries were equal to him now; all men were his brothers. He had learnt that lesson for himself. But when finally he emerged from obscurity he had need of all his philosophy - he was in London.

Houses spread to right and left in sharp avenues of regu-lar brick. The pavement was cold and hard beneath his feet. And there, issuing from a mahogany door with a brass knocker, was a lady bountifully apparelled in flowing robes of purple plush. A light wreath starred with flowers rested on her hair. Gathering her draperies about her, she glanced disdainfully up and down the street while a footman, stoop-ing, let down the step of the barouche landau. All Welbeck Street - for Welbeck Street it was - was wrapped in a splen-dour of red light - a light not clear and fierce like the Italian light, but tawny and troubled with the dust of a million wheels, with the trampling of a million hooves. The London season was at its height. A pall of sound, a cloud of inter-woven humming, fell over the city in one confluent growl. By came a majestic deer-hound led on a chain by a page. A policeman, swinging past with rhythmical stride, cast his bull's-eye from side to side. Odours of stew, odours of beef, odours of basting, odours of beef and cabbage rose from a thousand basements. A flunkey in livery dropped a letter into a box.

Overcome by the magnificence of the metropolis, Flush paused for a moment with his foot on the door-step. Wilson paused too. How paltry it seemed now, the civilisation of Italy, its Courts and its revolutions, its Grand Dukes and their bodyguards! She thanked God, as the policeman passed, that she had not married Signor Righi after all. And then a sinister figure issued from the public-house at the corner. A man leered. With one spring Flush bolted indoors.

For some weeks now he was closely confined to a lodging-house sitting-room in Welbeck Street. For confinement was still necessary. The cholera had come, and it is true that the cholera had done something to improve the condition of the Rookeries; but not enough, for still dogs were stolen and the dogs of Wimpole Street had still to be led on chains. Flush went into society, of course. He met dogs at the pillar-box and outside the public-house; they welcomed him back with the inherent good breeding of their kind. Just as an English peer who has lived a lifetime in the East and contracted some of the habits of the natives - rumour hints indeed that he has turned Moslem and had a son by a Chinese washerwoman - finds, when he takes his place at Court, that old friends are ready enough to overlook these aberrations and he is asked to Chatsworth, though no mention is made of his wife and it is taken for granted that he will join the family at prayers - so the pointers and setters of Wimpole Street welcomed Flush among them and over-looked the condition of his coat. But there was a certain morbidity, it seemed to Flush now, among the dogs of London. It was common knowledge that Mrs Carlyle's dog Nero had leapt from a top storey window with the intention of committing suicide. He had found the strain of life in Cheyne Row intolerable, it was said. Indeed Flush could well believe it now that he was back again in Welbeck Street. The confinement, the crowd of little objects, the blackbeetles by night, the bluebottles by day, the lingering odours of mutton, the perpetual presence on the sideboard of bananas - all this, together with the proximity of several men and women, heavily dressed and not often or indeed completely washed, wrought on his temper and strained his nerves. He lay for hours under the lodging-house chiffoier. It was impossible to run out of doors. The front door was always locked. He had to wait for somebody to lead him on a chain.

Two incidents alone broke the monotony of the weeks he spent in London. One day late that summer the Brownings went to visit the Rev. Charles Kingsley at Farnham. In Italy the earth would have been bare and hard as brick. Fleas would have been rampant. Languidly one would have dragged oneself from shadow to shadow, grateful even for the bar of shade cast by the raised arm of one of Donatello's statues. But here at Farnham there were fields of green grass; there were pools of blue water; there were woods that murmured, and turf so fine that the paws bounced as they touched it. The Brownings and the Kingsleys spent the day together. And once more, as Flush trotted behind them, the old trumpets blew; the old ecstasy returned - was it hare or was it fox? Flush tore over the heaths of Surrey as he had not run since the old days at Three Mile Cross. A pheasant went rocketing up in a spurt of purple and gold. He had almost shut his teeth on the tail feathers when a voice rang out. A whip cracked. Was it the Rev. Charles Kingsley who called him sharply to heel? At any rate he ran no more. The woods of Farnham were strictly preserved.

A few days later he was lying in the sitting-room at Welbeck Street, when Mrs Browning came in dressed for walking and called him from under the chiffoier. She slipped the chain on to his collar and, for the first time since September 1846, they walked up Wimpole Street together. When they came to the door of No.50 they stopped as of old. Just as of old they waited. The butler just as of old was very slow in coming. At length the door opened. Could that be Catiline lying couched on the mat? The old toothless dog yawned and stretched himself and took no notice. Upstairs they crept as stealthily, as silently as once before they had come down. Very quietly, opening the doors as if she were afraid of what she might see there, Mrs Browning went from room to room. A gloom descended upon her as she looked. ' they seemed to me', she wrote, 'smaller and darker, somehow, and the furniture wanted fitness and conveni-ence.' The ivy was still tapping on the back bedroom window-pane. The painted blind still obscured the houses. Nothing had been changed. Nothing had happened all these years. So she went from room to room, sadly remembering. But long before she had finished her inspection, Flush was in a fever of anxiety. Suppose Mr Barrett were to come in and find them? Suppose that with one frown he turned the key and locked them in the back bedroom for ever? At last Mrs Browning shut the doors and went downstairs again very quietly. Yes, she said, it seemed to her that the house wanted cleaning.

After that, Flush had only one wish left in him - to leave London, to leave England for ever. He was not happy until he found himself on the deck of the Channel steamer crossing to France. It was a rough passage. The crossing took eight hours. As the steamer tossed and wallowed, Flush turned over in his mind a tumult of mixed memories - of ladies in purple plush, of ragged men with bags; of Regent's Park, and Queen Victoria sweeping past with outriders; of the greenness of English grass and the rankness of English pavements - all this passed through his mind as he lay on deck; and, looking up, he caught sight of a stern, tall man leaning over the rail.

'Mr Carlyle!' he heard Mrs Browning exclaim; whereupon - the crossing, it must be remembered, was a bad one - Flush was violently sick. Sailors came running with pails and mops. '..... he was ordered off the deck on purpose, poor dog', said Mrs Browning. For the deck was still English; dogs must not be sick on decks. Such was his last salute to the shores of his native land.

Chapter 6 THE END

Flush was growing an old dog now. The journey to England and all the memories it revived had undoubtedly tired him. It was noticed that he sought the shade rather than the sun on his return, though the shade of Florence was hotter than the sun of Wimpole Street. Stretched beneath a statue, couched under the lip of a fountain for the sake of the few drops that spurted now and again on to his coat, he would lie dozing by the hour. The young dogs would come about him. To them he would tell his stories of Whitechapel and Wimpole Street; he would describe the smell of clover and the smell of Oxford Street; he would rehearse his memories of one revolution and another - how Grand Dukes had come and Grand Dukes had gone; but the spotted spaniel down the alley on the left - she goes on for ever, he would say. Then violent Mr Landor would hurry by and shake his fist at him in mock fury; kind Miss Isa Blagden would pause and take a sugared biscuit from her reticule. The peasant women in the market-place made him a bed of leaves in the shadow of their baskets and tossed him a bunch of grapes now and then. He was known, he was liked by all Florence - gentle and simple, dogs and men.

But he was growing an old dog now, and he tended more and more to lie not even under the fountain - for the cobbles were too hard for his old bones - but in Mrs Browning's bedroom where the arms of the Guidi family made a smooth patch of scagliola on the floor, or in the drawing-room under the shadow of the drawing-room table. One day shortly after his return from London he was stretched there fast asleep. The deep and dreamless sleep of old age was heavy on him. Indeed to-day his sleep was deeper even than usual, for as he slept the darkness seemed to thicken round him. If he dreamt at all, he dreamt that he was sleeping in the heart of a primeval forest, shut from the light of the sun, shut from the voices of mankind, though now and again as he slept he dreamt that he heard the sleepy chirp of a dreaming bird, or, as the wind tossed the branches, the mellow chuckle of a brooding monkey.

Then suddenly the branches parted; the light broke in - here, there, in dazzling shafts. Monkeys chattered; birds rose crying and calling in alarm. He started to his feet wide awake. An astonishing commotion was all round him. He had fallen asleep between the bare legs of an ordinary drawing-room table. Now he was hemmed in by the billowing of skirts and the heaving of trousers. The table itself, moreover, was swaying violently from side to side. He did not know which way to run. What on earth was happening? What in Heaven's name possessed the drawing-room table? He lifted up his voice in a prolonged howl of interrogation.

To Flush's question no satisfactory answer can here be given. A few facts, and those of the baldest, are all that can be supplied. Briefly, then, it would appear that early in the nineteenth century the Countess of Blessington had bought a crystal ball from a magician. Her Ladyship 'never could understand the use of it'; indeed she had never been able to see anything in the ball except crystal. After her death, however, there was a sale of her effects and the ball came into the possession of others who 'looked deeper, or with purer eyes', and saw other things in the ball besides crystal. Whether Lord Stanhope was the purchaser, whether it was he who looked 'with purer eyes', is not stated. But certainly by the year 1852 Lord Stanhope was in possession of a crystal ball and Lord Stanhope had only to look into it to see among other things 'the spirits of the sun'. Obviously this was not a sight that a hospitable nobleman could keep to himself, and Lord Stanhope was in the habit of displaying his ball at luncheon parties and of inviting his friends to see the spirits of the sun also. There was something strangely delightful - except indeed to Mr Chorley - in the spectacle; balls became the rage; and luckily a London optician soon discovered that he could make them, without being either an Egyptian or a magician, though naturally the price of English crystal was high. Thus many people in the early 'fifties became possessed of balls, though 'many persons', Lord Stanhope said, 'use the balls, without the moral courage to confess it'. The prevalence of spirits in London indeed became so marked that some alarm was felt; and Lord Stanley suggested to Sir Edward Lytton 'that the Government should appoint a committee of investigation so as to get as far as possible at the facts'. Whether the rumour of an approaching Government committee alarmed the spirits, or whether spirits, like bodies, tend to multiply in close confinement, there can be no doubt that the spirits began to show signs of restlessness, and, escaping in vast numbers, took up their residence in the legs of tables. What-ever the motive, the policy was successful. Crystal balls were expensive; almost everybody owns a table. Thus when Mrs Browning returned to Italy in the winter of 1852 she found that the spirits had preceded her; the tables of Florence were almost universally infected. 'From the Legation to the English chemists', she wrote, 'people are "serving tables" everywhere. When people gather round a table it isn't to play whist.' No, it was to decipher messages conveyed by the legs of tables. Thus if asked the age of a child, the table 'expresses itself intelligently by knocking with its legs, responses according to the alphabet'. And if a table could tell you that your own child was four years old, what limit was there to its capacity? Spinning tables were advertised in shops. The walls were placarded with advertisements of wonders 'scoperte a Livorno'. By the year 1854, so rapidly did the movement spread, 'four hundred thousand families in America had given their names as actually in enjoyment of spiritual intercourse'. And from England the news came that Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton had imported 'several of the American rapping spirits' to Knebworth, with the happy result - so little Arthur Russell was informed when he beheld a 'strange-looking old gentleman in a shabby dressing-gown' staring at him at breakfast - that Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton believed himself invisible.

When Mrs Browning first looked into Lord Stanhope's crystal ball at a luncheon party she saw nothing - except indeed that it was a remarkable sign of the times. The spirit of the sun indeed told her that she was about to go to Rome; but as she was not about to go to Rome, she contradicted the spirits of the sun. 'But', she added, with truth, 'I love the marvellous.' She was nothing if not adventurous. She had gone to Manning Street at the risk of her life. She had discovered a world that she had never dreamt of within half an hour's drive from Wimpole Street. Why should there not be another world only half a moment's flight from Florence - a better world, a more beautiful world, where the dead live, trying in vain to reach us? At any rate she would take the risk. And so she sat herself down at the table too. And Mr Lytton, the brilliant son of an invisible father, came; and Mr Frederick Tennyson, and Mr Powers and M. Villari - they all sat at the table, and then when the table had done kicking, they sat on drinking tea and eating strawberries and cream, with 'Florence dissolv-ing in the purple of the hills and the stars looking on', talking and talking: ' what stories we told, and what miracles we swore to! Oh, we are believers here, Isa, except Robert ' Then in burst deaf Mr Kirkup with his bleak white beard. He had come round simply to exclaim, 'There is a spiritual world - there is a future state. I confess it. I am convinced at last.' And when Mr Kirkup, whose creed had always been 'the next thing to atheism', was converted merely because, in spite of his deafness, he had heard 'three taps so loud that they made him leap', how could Mrs Browning keep her hands off the table? 'You know I am rather a visionary and inclined to knock round at all the doors of the present world to try to get out', she wrote. So she summoned the faithful to Casa Guidi; and there they sat with their hands on the drawing-room table, trying to get out.

Flush started up in the wildest apprehension. The skirts and the trousers were billowing round him; the table was standing on one leg. But whatever the ladies and gentlemen round the table could hear and see, Flush could hear and see nothing. True, the table was standing on one leg, but so tables will if you lean hard on one side. He had upset tables himself and been well scolded for it. But now there was Mrs Browning with her great eyes wide open staring as if she saw something marvellous outside. Flush rushed to the balcony and looked over. Was there another Grand Duke riding by with banners and torches? Flush could see nothing but an old beggar woman crouched at the corner of the street over her basket of melons. Yet clearly Mrs Browning saw something; clearly she saw something that was very wonderful. So in the old Wimpole Street days she had wept once without any reason that he could see; and again she had laughed, holding up a blotted scrawl. But this was different. There was something in her look now that frightened him. There was something in the room, or in the table, or in the petticoats and trousers, that he disliked exceedingly.

As the weeks passed, this preoccupation of Mrs Brown-ing's with the invisible grew upon her. It might be a fine hot day, but instead of watching the lizards slide in and out of the stones, she would sit at the table; it might be a dark starry night, but instead of reading in her book, or passing her hand over paper, she would call, if Mr Browning were out, for Wilson, and Wilson would come yawning. Then they would sit at the table together until that article of furniture, whose chief function it was to provide shade, kicked on the floor, and Mrs Browning exclaimed that it was telling Wilson that she would soon be ill. Wilson replied that she was only sleepy. But soon Wilson herself, the implacable, the upright, the British, screamed and went into a faint, and Mrs Browning was rushing hither and thither to find 'the hygienic vinegar'. That, to Flush, was a highly unpleasant way of spending a quiet evening. Better far to sit and read one's book.

Undoubtedly the suspense, the intangible but disagreeable odour, the kicks and the screams and the vinegar, told upon Flush's nerves. It was all very well for the baby, Penini, to pray 'that Flush's hair may grow'; that was an aspiration that Flush could understand. But this form of prayer which required the presence of evil-smelling, seedy-looking men and the antics of a piece of apparently solid mahogany, angered him much as they angered that robust, sensible, well-dressed man, his master. But far worse than any smell to Flush, far worse than any antics, was the look on Mrs Browning's face when she gazed out of the window as if she were seeing something that was wonderful when there was nothing. Flush stood himself in front of her. She looked through him as if he were not there. That was the cruellest look she had ever given him. It was worse than her cold anger when he bit Mr Browning in the leg; worse than her sardonic laughter when the door shut upon his paw in Regent's Park. There were moments indeed when he regretted Wimpole Street and its tables. The tables at No.50 had never tilted upon one leg. The little table with the ring round it that held her precious ornaments had always stood perfectly still. In those far-off days he had only to leap on her sofa and Miss Barrett started wide-awake and looked at him. Now, once more, he leapt on to her sofa. But she did not notice him. She was writing. She paid no attention to him. She went on writing - 'also, at the request of the medium, the spiritual hands took from the table a garland which lay there, and placed it upon my head. The particular hand which did this was of the largest human size, as white as snow, and very beautiful. It was as near to me as this hand I write with, and I saw it as distinctly.' Flush pawed her sharply. She looked through him as if he were invisible. He leapt off the sofa and ran downstairs into the street.

It was a blazing hot afternoon. The old beggar woman at the corner had fallen asleep over her melons. The sun seemed droning in the sky. Keeping to the shady side of the street, Flush trotted along the well-known ways to the market-place. The whole square was brilliant with awnings and stalls and bright umbrellas. The market women were sitting beside baskets of fruit; pigeons were fluttering, bells were pealing, whips were cracking. The many-coloured mon-grels of Florence were running in and out sniffing and pawing. All was as brisk as a bee-hive and as hot as an oven. Flush sought the shade. He flung himself down beside his friend Catterina, under the shadow of her great basket. A brown jar of red and yellow flowers cast a shadow beside it. Above them a statue, holding his right arm outstretched, deepened the shade to violet. Flush lay there in the cool, watching the young dogs busy with their own affairs. They were snarling and biting, stretching and tumbling, in all the abandonment of youthful joy. They were chasing each other in and out, round and round, as he had once chased the spotted spaniel in the alley. His thoughts turned to Reading for a moment - to Mr Partridge's spaniel, to his first love, to the ecstasies, the innocences of youth. Well, he had had his day. He did not grudge them theirs. He had found the world a pleasant place to live in. He had no quarrel with it now. The market woman scratched him behind the ear. She had often cuffed him for stealing a grape, or for some other misdemeanour; but he was old now; and she was old. He guarded her melons and she scratched his ear. So she knitted and he dozed. The flies buzzed on the great pink melon that had been sliced open to show its flesh.

The sun burnt deliciously through the lily leaves, and through the green and white umbrella. The marble statue tempered its heat to a champagne freshness. Flush lay and let it burn through his fur to the naked skin. And when he was roasted on one side he turned over and let the sun roast the other. All the time the market people were chattering and bargaining; market women were passing; they were stopping and fingering the vegetables and the fruit. There was a perpetual buzz and hum of human voices such as Flush loved to listen to. After a time he drowsed off under the shadow of the lilies. He slept as dogs sleep when they are dreaming. Now his legs twitched - was he dreaming that he hunted rabbits in Spain? Was he coursing up a hot hill-side with dark men shouting 'Span! Span!' as the rabbits darted from the brushwood? Then he lay still again. And now he yelped, quickly, softly, many times in succession. Perhaps he heard Dr Mitford egging his greyhounds on to the hunt at Reading. Then his tail wagged sheepishly. Did he hear old Miss Mitford cry 'Bad dog! Bad dog!' as he slunk back to her, where she stood among the turnips wav-ing her umbrella? And then he lay for a time snoring, wrapt in the deep sleep of happy old age. Suddenly every muscle in his body twitched. He woke with a violent start. Where did he think he was? In Whitechapel among the ruffians? Was the knife at his throat again?

Whatever it was, he woke from his dream in a state of terror. He made off as if he were flying to safety, as if he were seeking refuge. The market women laughed and pelted him with rotten grapes and called him back. He took no notice. Cart-wheels almost crushed him as he darted through the streets - the men standing up to drive cursed him and flicked him with their whips. Half-naked children threw pebbles at him and shouted 'Matta! Matta! ' as he fled past. Their mothers ran to the door and caught them back in alarm. Had he then gone mad? Had the sun turned his brain? Or had he once more heard the hunting horn of Venus? Or had one of the American rapping spirits, one of the spirits that live in table legs, got possession of him at last? Whatever it was, he went in a bee-line up one street and down another until he reached the door of Casa Guidi. He made his way straight upstairs and went straight into the drawing-room.

Mrs Browning was lying, reading, on the sofa. She looked up, startled, as he came in. No, it was not a spirit - it was only Flush. She laughed. Then, as he leapt on to the sofa and thrust his face into hers, the words of her own poem came into her mind:

You see this dog. It was but yesterday
I mused forgetful of his presence here
Till thought on thought drew downward tear on tear,
When from the pillow, where wet-cheeked I lay,
A head as hairy as Faunus, thrust its way
Right sudden against my face, - two golden-clear
Great eyes astonished mine, - a drooping ear
Did flap me on either cheek to dry the spray!

I started first, as some Arcadian,
Amazed by goatly god in twilight grove;
But, as the bearded vision closelier ran
My tears off, I knew Flush, and rose above
Surprise and sadness, - thanking the true Pan,
Who, by low creatures, leads to heights of love.

She had written that poem one day years ago in Wimpole Street when she was very unhappy. Now she was happy. She was growing old now and so was Flush. She bent down over him for a moment. Her face with its wide mouth and its great eyes and its heavy curls was still oddly like his. Broken asunder, yet made in the same mould, each, perhaps, completed what was dormant in the other. But she was woman; he was dog. Mrs Browning went on reading. Then she looked at Flush again. But he did not look at her. An extra-ordinary change had come over him. 'Flush!' she cried. But he was silent. He had been alive; he was now dead. That was all. The drawing-room table, strangely enough, stood perfectly still.

Notes

P. 13. 'painted fabric'. Miss Barrett says, 'I had a transparent blind put up in my open window'. She adds, 'papa insults me with the analogy of a back window in a confectioner's shop, but is obviously moved when the sunshine lights up the castle, notwithstanding'. Some hold that the castle, etc., was painted on a thin metallic substance; others that it was a muslin blind richly embroidered. There seems no certain way of settling the matter.

P. 26. 'Mr Kenyon mumbled slightly because he had lost two front teeth.' There are elements of exaggeration and conjecture here. Miss Mitford is the authority. She is reported to have said in conversation with Mr Horne, 'Our dear friend, you are aware, never sees anybody but the members of her own family, and one or two others. She has a high opinion of the skill in reading as well as the fine taste, of Mr -, and she gets him to read her new poems aloud to her So Mr - stands upon the hearth-rug, and uplifts the MS, and his voice, while our dear friend lies folded up in Indian shawls upon her sofa, with her long black tresses streaming over her bent-down head, all attention. Now, dear Mr - has lost a front tooth - not quite a front one, but a side front one - and this, you see, causes a defective utterance an amiable indistinctness, a vague softening of syllables into each other, so that silence and silence would really sound very like one another ' There can be little doubt that Mr - was Mr Kenyon; the blank was necessitated by the peculiar delicacy of the Victorians with regard to teeth. But more important questions affecting English literature are involved. Miss Barrett has long been accused of a defective ear. Miss Mitford maintains that Mr Kenyon should rather be accused of defective teeth. On the other hand, Miss Barrett herself maintained that her rhymes had nothing to do with his lack of teeth or with her lack of ear. 'A great deal of attention', she wrote, ' - far more than it would have taken to rhyme with complete accuracy - have I given to the subject of rhymes and have determined in cold blood to hazard some experiments.' Hence she rhymed 'angels' with 'candles', 'heaven' with 'unbelieving', and 'islands' with 'silence' - in cold blood. It is of course for the professors to decide; but anybody who has studied Mrs Browning's character and her actions will be inclined to take the view that she was a wilful breaker of rules whether of art or of love, and so to convict her of some complicity in the development of modern poetry.

P. 35. 'yellow gloves'. It is recorded in Mrs Orr's Life of Browning that he wore lemon-coloured gloves. Mrs Bridell-Fox, meeting him in 1835-6, says, 'he was then slim and dark, and very handsome, and may I hint it - just a trifle of a dandy, addicted to lemon-coloured kid gloves and such things'.

P. 48. 'He was stolen.' As a matter of fact, Flush was stolen three times; but the unities seem to require that the three stealings shall be compressed into one. The total sum paid by Miss Barrett to the dog-stealers was £20.

P. 63. 'The faces of those men were to come back to her on a sunny balcony in Italy.' Readers of Aurora Leigh - but since such persons are non-existent it must be explained that Mrs Browning wrote a poem of this name, one of the most vivid passages in which (though it suffers from distortion natural to an artist who sees the object once only from a four-wheeler, with Wilson tugging at her skirts) is the description of a London slum. Clearly Mrs Browning possessed a fund of curiosity as to human life which was by no means satisfied by the busts of Homer and Chaucer on the washing-stand in the bedroom.

P. 76. 'Lily Wilson fell in love with Signor Righi, the guardsman.' The life of Lily Wilson is extremely obscure and thus cries aloud for the services of a biographer. No human figure in the Browning letters, save the principals, more excites our curiosity and baffles it. Her Christian name was Lily, her surname Wilson. That is all we know of her birth and upbringing. Whether she was the daughter of a farmer in the neighbourhood of Hope End, and became favourably known to the Barrett cook by the decency of her demeanour and the cleanliness of her apron, so much so that when she came up to the great house on some errand, Mrs Barrett made an excuse to come into the room just then and thought so well of her that she appointed her to be Miss Elizabeth's maid; or whether she was a Cockney; or whether she was from Scotland - it is impossible to say. At any rate she was in service with Miss Barrett in the year 1846. She was 'an expensive servant' - her wages were £16 a year. Since she spoke almost as seldom as Flush, the outlines of her character are little known; and since Miss Barrett never wrote a poem about her, her appearance is far less familiar than his. Yet it is clear from indications in the letters that she was in the beginning one of those demure, almost inhumanly correct British maids who were at that time the glory of the British basement. It is obvious that Wilson was a stickler for rights and ceremonies. Wilson undoubtedly revered 'the room'; Wilson would have been the first to insist that under servants must eat their pudding in one place, upper servants in another. All this is implicit in the remark she made when she beat Flush with her hand 'because it is right'. Such respect for convention, it need hardly be said, breeds extreme horror of any breach of it; so that when Wilson was confronted with the lower orders in Manning Street she was far more alarmed, and far more certain that the dog-stealers were murderers, than Miss Barrett was. At the same time the heroic way in which she overcame her terror and went with Miss Barrett in the cab shows how deeply the other convention of loyalty to her mistress was ingrained in her. Where Miss Barrett went, Wilson must go too. This principle was triumphantly demonstrated by her conduct at the time of the elopement. Miss Barrett had been doubtful of Wilson's courage; but her doubts were unfounded. 'Wilson', she wrote - and these were the last words she ever wrote to Mr Brown - 'as Miss Barrett - 'has been perfect to me. And I calling her "timid" and afraid of her timidity! I begin to think that none are so bold as the timid, when they are fairly roused.' It is worth, parenthetically, dwelling for a second on the extreme precariousness of a servant's life. If Wilson had not gone with Miss Barrett, she would have been, as Miss Barrett knew, 'turned into the street before sunset', with only a few shillings, presumably, saved from her sixteen pounds a year. And what then would have been her fate? Since English fiction in the 'forties scarcely deals with the lives of ladies' maids, and biography had not then cast its search-light so low, the question must remain a question. But Wilson took the plunge. She declared that she would 'go anywhere in the world with me'. She left the basement, the room, the whole of that world of Wimpole Street, which to Wilson meant all civilisation, all right thinking and decent living, for the wild debauchery and irreligion of a foreign land. Nothing is more curious than to observe the conflict that took place in Italy between Wilson's English gentility and her natural passions. She derided the Italian Court; she was shocked by Italian pictures. But, though 'she was struck back by the indecency of the Venus', Wilson, greatly to her credit, seems to have bethought her that women are naked when they take their clothes off. Even I myself, she may have thought, am naked for two or three seconds daily. And so 'She thinks she shall try again, and the troublesome modesty may subside, who knows?' That it did subside rapidly is plain. Soon she not merely approved of Italy; she had fallen in love with Signor Righi of the Grand Ducal body-guard- 'all highly respectable and moral men, and some six feet high' -was wearing an engagement ring; was dismissing a London suitor; and was learning to speak Italian. Then the clouds descend again; when they lift they show us Wilson deserted - 'the faithless Righi had backed out of his engagement to Wilson'. Suspicion attaches to his brother, a wholesale haberdasher at Prato. When Righi resigned from the Ducal bodyguard, he became, on his brother's advice, a retail haberdasher at Prato. Whether his position required a knowledge of haberdashery in his wife, whether one of the girls of Prato could supply it, it is certain that he did not write to Wilson as often as he should have done. But what conduct it was on the part of this highly respectable and moral man that led Mrs Browning to exclaim in 1850, '[Wilson]is over it completely, which does the greatest credit to her good sense and rectitude of character. How could she continue to love such a man?' - why Righi had shrunk to 'such a man' in so short a time, it is impossible to say. Deserted by Righi, Wilson became more and more attached to the Browning family. She discharged not only the duties of a lady's maid, but cooked knead cakes, made dresses, and became a devoted nurse to Penini, the baby; so that in time the baby himself exalted her to the rank of the family, where she justly belonged, and refused to call her anything but Lily. In 1855 Wilson married Romagnoli, the Brownings' manservant, 'a good tender-hearted man'; and for some time the two kept house for the Brownings. But in 1859 Robert Browning 'accepted office as Landor's guardian', an office of great delicacy and responsibility, for Landor's habits were difficult; 'of restraint he has not a grain', Mrs Browning wrote, 'and of suspiciousness many grains'. In these circumstances Wilson was appointed 'his duenna' with a salary of twenty-two pounds a year 'besides what is left of his rations'. Later her wages were increased to thirty pounds, for to act as duenna to 'an old lion' who has 'the impulses of a tiger', throws his plate out of the window or dashes it on the ground if he dislikes his dinner, and suspects servants of opening desks, entailed, as Mrs Browning observed, 'certain risks, and I for one would rather not meet them'. But to Wilson, who had known Mr Barrett and the spirits, a few plates more or less flying out of the window or dashed upon the floor was a matter of little consequence - such risks were all in the day's work.

That day, so far as it is still visible to us, was certainly a strange one. Whether it began or not in some remote English village, it ended in Venice in the Palazzo Rezzonico. There at least she was still living in the year 1897, a widow, in the house of the little boy whom she had nursed and loved - Mr Barrett Browning. A very strange day it had been, she may have thought, as she sat in the red Venetian sunset, an old woman, dreaming. Her friends, married to farm hands, still stumbled up the English lanes to fetch a pint of beer. And she had eloped with Miss Barrett to Italy; she had seen all kinds of queer things - revolutions, guardsmen, spirits; Mr Landor throwing his plate out of the window. Then Mrs Brown-ing had died - there can have been no lack of thoughts in Wilson's old head as she sat at the window of the Palazzo Rezzonico in the evening. But nothing can be more vain than to pretend that we can guess what they were, for she was typical of the great army of her kind - the inscrutable, the all-but-silent, the all-but-invisible servant maids of history. 'A more honest, true and affectionate heart than Wilson's cannot be found' - her mistress's words may serve her for epitaph.

P. 88 'he was scourged by fleas'. It appears that Italy was famous for its fleas in the middle of the nineteenth century. Indeed, they served to break down conventions that were otherwise insurmountable. For example, when Nathaniel Hawthorne went to tea with Miss Bremer in Rome (1858) , 'we spoke of fleas-insects that, in Rome, come home to everybody's business and bosom, and are so common and inevitable, that no delicacy is felt about alluding to the sufferings they inflict. Poor little Miss Bremer was tormented with one while turning out our tea '

P. 93. 'Nero had leapt from a top storey window.' Nero (c .1849-60) was, according to Carlyle, 'A little Cuban (Maltese? and otherwise mongrel) shock, mostly white - a most affectionate, lively little dog, otherwise of small merit, and little or no training'. Material for a life of him abounds, but this is not the occasion to make use of it. It is enough to say that he was stolen; that he brought Carlyle a cheque to buy a horse with tied round his neck; that 'twice or thrice I flung him into the sea[at Aberdour], which he didn't at all like'; that in 1850 he sprang from the library window, and, clearing the area spikes, fell 'plash' on to the pavement. 'It was after breakfast,' Mrs Carlyle says, 'and he had been standing at the open window, watching the birds Lying in my bed, I heard thro' the deal partition Elizabeth scream: Oh God! oh Nero! and rush downstairs like a strong wind out at the street door then I sprang to meet her in my night-shift Mr C. came down from his bedroom with his chin all over soap and asked, "Has anything happened to Nero?" - "Oh, sir, he must have broken all his legs, he leapt out at your window!" - "God bless me!" said Mr C. and returned to finish his shaving.' No bones were broken, however, and he survived, to be run over by a butcher's cart, and to die at last from the effects of the accident on 1st February 1860. He is buried at the top of the garden at Cheyne Row under a small stone tablet.

Whether he wished to kill himself, or whether, as Mrs Carlyle insinuates, he was merely jumping after birds, might be the occasion for an extremely interesting treatise on canine psychology. Some hold that Byron's dog went mad in sympathy with Byron; others that Nero was driven to desperate melancholy by associating with Mr Carlyle. The whole question of dogs' relation to the spirit of the age, whether it is possible to call one dog Elizabethan, another Augustan, another Victorian, together with the influence upon dogs of the poetry and philosophy of their masters, deserves a fuller discussion than can here be given it. For the present, Nero's motives must remain obscure.

P. 99. 'Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton believed himself invisible.' Mrs Huth Jackson in A Victorian Childhood says: 'Lord Arthur Russell told me, many years later, that when a small boy he was taken to Knebworth by his mother. Next morning he was in the big hall having breakfast when a strange-looking old gentleman in a shabby dressing-gown came in and walked slowly round the table staring at each of the guests in turn. He heard his mother's neighbour whisper to her, "Do not take any notice, he thinks he is invisible" .It was Lord Lytton himself (pp.17-18) .

P. 106. 'he was now dead'. It is certain that Flush died; but the date and manner of his death are unknown. The only reference consists in the statement that 'Flush lived to a good old age and is buried in the vaults of Casa Guidi'. Mrs Browning was buried in the English Cemetery at Florence, Robert Browning in Westminster Abbey. Flush still lies, therefore, beneath the house in which, once upon a time, the Brownings lived.

序章 德国医生马丁·赫斯利乌斯

虽然受过医学和外科学的严格训练，但我却从未有过实践经验。尽管如此，我对这两门学科的研究却一直没有中断，对其一直抱有浓厚的兴趣。刚刚进入医生这一光荣的职业却旋即退出，究其原因，既非我懒惰，也不是一时心血来潮。罪魁祸首是一把解剖刀，它造成的轻微划伤却让我付出了两根手指的代价。截肢是立即进行的，更令人痛苦的是，我的健康也毁了。因为从那以后，我总是感觉不舒服，从未在同一个地方待过十二个月以上。

四处闲逛的时候，我认识了马丁·赫斯利乌斯医生。他是一个和我一样的漂泊客。和我一样，他也是一名医生。和我一样，他也热衷于自己的职业。和我不一样的是，他闲逛是出于自愿。按照我们英格兰人对富有的判断，他那个人，如果不能称之为富有的话，那么至少也达到了我们先辈常说的“宽展得很”了。我初次见到他的时候，他年纪已经挺大，差不多比我年长三十有五。

邂逅马丁·赫斯利乌斯医生，让我有一种得遇良主的感觉。他知识渊博，对病情的掌握具有一种直觉。他恰恰是一个能让我这样的年轻发烧友充满敬畏和喜悦的人。我的钦佩之情经受住了时间的考验，甚至生死离别也无法令其动摇。我确信其理由十分充分。

我担任他的医学秘书将近二十年，精心保管着他留下的大量文件，做着整理、索引和装订的工作。其间，我发现他对一些病例的治疗颇为奇怪。他以两种截然不同的文字风格写作。首先，以一个聪明的外行人的口吻，描述自己的所见所闻，按照这种叙事风格，描写那些病人，直至他们要么穿过厅门，重见天日，要么跨过黑暗之门，走向死亡；然后笔锋一转，以高超的技艺，使出浑身解数，运用天才的独创性，开始进行分析、诊断和说明的工作。

时不时会有某个病例引发我的兴趣，那种兴趣与专家的特有兴趣大不相同，是一名外行的读者觉得有趣或者恐怖的地方。我稍许做了一些修改，主要是文字上的，当然也改了名字，于是就有了下面的故事。讲述人是马丁·赫斯利乌斯医生。我是在大量的病情记录中找到这个故事的，那是大约六十四年前，他在一次英格兰之旅中记录下的。

故事与他的一位朋友——莱顿 [1] 的范·洛教授的一系列通信有关。这位教授并不是医生，而是一名化学家，也是一个喜欢历史、玄

学和医学的人，并且还在他年轻的时候写过一出戏剧。

因此，如果这番叙述的价值不如医疗记录那么高的话，那么就必须以一种能让不懂医学的读者感兴趣的方式来写。

附在备忘录里的这些信件，似乎是在范·洛教授去世后的一八一九年寄回给赫斯利乌斯医生的。一些信件是用英语写的，一些是用法语写的，但是大多数用的都是德语。虽然我意识到，自己的翻译远远谈不上优美，但我却是一名忠实的译者。尽管我时不时会省略掉一些段落，缩短一些句子，掩饰掉某些名字，但我绝没有添油加醋。

第一章 赫斯利乌斯医生讲述他是如何遇见牧师詹宁斯先生的

牧师詹宁斯先生又高又瘦。他正值中年，整洁的衣着完全是那种高教会派 [2] 的老旧风格。他生来就带有一丝威严，但是一点儿也不拘谨。他的相貌虽然称不上英俊，长相却很匀称；面色极其和善，也带有几分腼腆。

一天晚上，我在玛丽·海杜克小姐的家里遇见了他。他脸上流露出的谦虚和慈爱的表情非常令人着迷。

我们的聚会是小范围的，他十分惬意地同大家聊着天。相比起发表高见，他似乎更乐于倾听；但是，只要他一开口，总是一语中的，恰如其分。他是玛丽小姐的最爱。玛丽小姐似乎在很多问题上都要向他请教，认为他是世界上最幸福美满的人。但是，她对他其实几乎一无所知。

牧师詹宁斯先生是个单身男人，手头据说有六万英镑的积蓄。他为人仁慈，非常渴望献身于神圣的宗教事业。虽然他在别的地方都还过得去，但是，一回到沃里克郡他自己的教区，真正开始投身那份神圣的职业，从事实际的工作，他的健康状况就让他无以为继，并且情况还十分奇怪。玛丽小姐如是说着。

毫无疑问的是，詹宁斯先生的健康问题，大体上说，是一种突如其来、神秘莫测的行为。有时候，他正在肯利斯那座古老、优美的教堂里主持宗教仪式时，就会突然发病。也许是因为他的心脏，也许是大脑。但是，那样反复发作了三四次，甚至更多回，每次都是当仪式举行了一段时间后，他突然间停了下来，沉默片刻后，显然无法再度开始。他独自陷入了无声的祷告，双手高举，双眼朝天，然后变得面如死灰。在一种奇怪的、夹杂着羞愧和恐惧的不安中，他颤抖着走下讲坛，步入法衣室，没有做出任何解释，就把会众留在了原地。这一切发生的时候，他的助理牧师并不在场。现在，他每次只要去肯利斯，总是会留心安排一位牧师同自己一同工作。这样万一他突然无法履职，有人就可以迅速顶替他。

詹宁斯先生的身体彻底垮了之后，便从教区逃了出来，回到伦敦，待在皮卡迪利大街后一条黑暗的街道里，住进了一间窄屋。玛丽

小姐说，他的身体一直以来都很棒。对此我有着自己的看法。有关好坏的程度当然见仁见智。我们可以拭目以待。

詹宁斯先生是一个十足的绅士。不过人们总是能从他身上察觉到一些奇怪的地方，或是多少对这奇怪的感觉有点儿模棱两可的印象。有一件事儿肯定是对此的有力佐证。我觉得人们要么就彻底忘了那件事儿，要么就肯定清晰地记着。反正我是记着的，仿如昨日一般。詹宁斯先生会斜着眼看地毯，紧盯着不放，似乎那边有某样东西在移动一样。当然，他也并不总是如此，而是时不时发作一番。不过，正如我所说的那样，这总是令他的举止显得颇有一些怪异。他那在地板上漂移的目光中，既带着一丝胆怯，又流露出几分焦虑。

一名医学哲学家，正如你们恭维我的那样，会借助自己挖掘出的病例来阐述各种理论，并花更多的时间，亲自观察，精心审视。因此，相比一般的医生，这样得出的判断无疑要缜密许多。我还会不自觉地养成注意观察的习惯。这种习惯时刻伴随着我，我也随时都会找机会操练一番。有些人会说，甚至连一些毫不相关、毫无价值的事情我也不肯放过。

这场令人愉快的晚间聚会上，我初次相识的这位牧师，瘦削、胆小、和善，但却是一位矜持的绅士。他的身上，可能就具有吸引我的那种特质。当然，我观察到的，要比我在这里写的多得多。但是，有关技术的环节，都被放到一篇严谨的科学论文中去了。

我想说的是，我在此谈到医学，目的是希望有一天，人们能对这门学科有一种更为广义的理解。相比通常的物理治疗所起的作用，那种感受会全面得多。我相信，整个自然世界只是精神世界的最终表现形式，只有在精神世界中，自然世界才拥有生命力。我认为，人在本质上是一种精神，而精神也是一种条理分明的物质，但是在材质特点方面，与我们熟知的物质截然不同，就像光或者电那样。从纯粹字面的意思上来说，肉体只不过是一具躯壳。因此，死亡并不意味着生命的终结，而只是让人脱离了肉体的羁绊——这一过程，始于我们所称的死亡。最迟在几天以后，在复活“奇迹”展现的一刻，终成大道。

持这些立场的人可能会看到这种观点在医学上的实例。然而，这些事实的存在普遍未得到承认。这里也绝不是展示证据、讨论结果的适当场合。

出于习惯，我开始小心翼翼地偷偷观察詹宁斯先生——我想，他也觉察到了这一点——我明显发现，他也同样小心谨慎地观察着我。玛丽小姐在介绍我的时候，碰巧称我为赫斯利乌斯医生。我发现，他扫视我的目光变得更加明显，然后陷入了几分钟的沉思。

之后，我一边在房间的另一头与一位绅士攀谈，一边发现他更沉

着地注视着我，而我当时也确信我很了解他对我的兴趣所在。再之后，我发现他找机会和玛丽小姐聊起天来。一如既往，人们在这种时刻，总是能清晰地觉察到，自己成了远处一问一答的话题。

稍后，这位高个儿牧师朝我走来。没过一会儿，我们就聊了起来。当两个人都喜欢读书，对于书籍和各地的风土人情都略知一二，又有过跋山涉水的经历，同时还乐意交谈一番的时候，要是还找不到话题，简直就是一桩咄咄怪事了。他向我走来，还与我相谈甚欢，原因并不是偶然的。他懂德语，并且读过我写的有关玄医学的论文。相比起字面上所写的，那些论文深层次的含义更值得玩味。

这人彬彬有礼，性格温顺，略带几分羞涩，显然是一个博览群书、颇有想法的人。他在我们中间走来走去，谈天说地，但并不是完全地敞开心扉。我已经开始怀疑，他是那种把所有大事小事都深深藏在心底的人，不仅对全世界都有所保留，甚至对他最亲爱的朋友也是如此。但是，他的内心深处却在小心地权衡，是否要对我网开一面。

他还没有意识到我看透了他的想法。我也尽量只字不提，以免触动他那敏感的神经，怀疑我洞悉了他的观点，或者猜到了他对我的打算。

我们聊了一阵无关紧要的话题，但是最终他说：

“赫斯利乌斯医生，我对您的一些论文很感兴趣，那些您称为玄医学的论文——十到十二年前，我读过德文版的——现在翻译过来了吗？”

“没有，我敢肯定没有——不然我会有所耳闻的。我想，应该是要事先征得我的同意的。”

“几个月前，我拜托了本地的出版商，帮我找找德文原版的，可他们告诉我已经绝版了。”

“确实是，已经绝版好些年了。但是，身为作者，听到您还没有忘记拙作，还是深感荣幸的。”我笑着继续说道，“您在这十到十二年的时间里，没有那本书都过得好好的，但是我猜您一定是在脑子里又想起了那个话题，或者近来发生了什么事，让您对它又产生了兴趣。”

詹宁斯先生听了这番话，旋即露出疑问的眼神，突然感到一阵尴尬，就好像一位年轻的小姐那样脸红起来，看上去傻傻的。他垂下双眼，两手不安地交叉在一起，看起来怪怪的。有那么一刻，甚至可以说有点儿愧疚。

为了尽量让他摆脱这份局促，我表现出若无其事的样子，然后继续说道：“我也总是碰到这种重拾兴趣的事，一本书接着另一本，经

常会徒劳无功地把我带回到二十年前。但是，如果你依旧还有兴趣的话，我会很乐意奉送上一本。我身边还有两三本存货——如果您愿意接受，我将不胜荣幸。”

“您真是太好了，”他说，一时之间又轻松自在起来，“我几乎已经绝望了——真不知道该如何感谢您。”

“千万别那么说。实在是太微不足道了，我简直有点儿羞于启齿。您要是再表示感谢，羞愧之下，我唯有将书付之一炬了。”

詹宁斯先生大笑起来。他问我住在伦敦的什么地方，又海阔天空地聊了一阵后，便起身告辞了。

第二章 医生和玛丽小姐的问与答

“玛丽小姐，我非常喜欢那位牧师。”他刚一走，我就说道，“他饱读诗书，游历甚广，有自己的想法，还遭遇过磨难，应该是个多才多艺的好伙伴。”

“他当然是，而且更重要的是，他还是一个真正的好人，”她说，“无论是对于我的学校还是我在道尔布里奇的小事业，他的建议都价值连城。要知道，只要他认为自己能帮上忙，总会劳心竭力，克服重重困难施以援手。他脾气真好，还那么地通情达理。”

“听到你说他有乐于助人的美德，真是令人欣慰。我只能证明他是一个和蔼可亲的伙伴。除了你刚刚告诉我的以外，我想，我还能同你说说他的两三件事。”我说。

“真的吗？”

“当然。首先，他未婚。”

“没错，请继续。”

“他一直在写东西。嗯，他过去在写，但是他也许搁笔有两三年了吧。那本书是关于某些比较深奥的话题的——也许是神学。”

“确实如你所说，他之前一直在写一本书。我不太确定是关于什么内容的，但是肯定是些我不太关心的东西，很有可能你是对的。而现在，他确实停了下来。”

“还有，虽然今晚在这里，他只喝了一点点咖啡，但他是喜欢喝茶的，至少在过去极为喜欢。”

“噢，简直太对了。”

“他过去喝的是绿茶，喝很多，对吧？”我继续问道。

“嗯，确实很奇怪。过去，为了绿茶的事情，我们总会差点吵起来。”

“但是，现在他已经完全戒掉了。”我说。

“的确如此。”

“那么，还有一件事。你认识他的父亲或是母亲吗？”

“他的双亲我都认识。他的父亲去世才十年，他们就葬在道尔布里奇附近。我们对他们都很了解。”她回答道。

“那么，要么是他的母亲，要么是他的父亲——我想父亲更有可能，见到过幽灵。”我说。

“噢，赫斯利乌斯，你真的是魔法师吧？”

“魔法师不魔法师的先放一边，我说的对吗？”我开心地问道。

“当然对啦。见到幽灵的是他父亲。他是一个沉默寡语、异想天开的人，常常缠着我父亲讲他做的那些梦。他最后讲过一个关于幽灵的故事。那是一个奇怪的故事，他说那个幽灵是他亲眼所见的，还能和他对答如流。我对这个故事记忆犹新，因为我特别害怕他。他是在去世前很多年说的这个故事，我还很小的时候。他总是默不作声，神情忧郁，常常喜欢在黄昏时分来我们家串门。他来的时候，我常常一个人待在客厅里。过去，我总是幻想，他的周围全是幽灵。”

我笑着点点头。

“好吧，既然你已经认定我是个魔法师，我想该是说晚安的时候了。”我说。

“但是，你究竟是怎么发现的？”

“当然是占星术，就像吉卜赛人那样。”我回答道。于是，我们愉快地互道了晚安。

第二天一早，我给詹宁斯先生寄去了他一直想要的那本小书，还附上了一张便条。晚上回来的时候，我发现他拜访过我的住所，留下了一张卡片。他问我是否在家，还问什么时候最有可能找到我。

他是打算敞开心扉，如同人们说的，咨询我的“专业意见”了吗？我希望如此。我已经构想出了一种关于他的理论。我在告辞前与玛丽小姐的问答，也证实了这一点。而我却更想从他自己的嘴里得到确认。但是，我该做些什么，才能秉持一贯的优雅风度，邀请他吐露心声呢？什么也不做。我倒是认为，他自己会深思熟虑一番的。无论如何，尊敬的范·洛，我是不会令自己难以接近的。我打算明天就回访他。去求见他，完全是一种礼节，是对他的彬彬有礼的一种回应。也许我会有所收获。无论有还是没有，收获或大或小，尊敬的范·洛，我都会告诉你的。

第三章 赫斯利乌斯医生在拉丁文书中找到了一些东西

好吧，我去布兰克大街拜访过了。

仆人在门口稍一打听，便告诉我，詹宁斯先生和一位绅士正有事忙着呢，那是从他的教区肯利斯来的一位牧师。为了保留自己的一点儿特权，也为了能再次拜访，我只是暗示自己改日还会再来。我转身刚要走，那位仆人就向我表示歉意，问我是不是赫斯利乌斯医生。他十分专注地看着我。作为教养还不错的仆人，通常是不会这么看人的。知道了我的身份后，他说：“那么，先生，请允许我向詹宁斯先生通报一声。我敢肯定他想要见您。”

过了一会儿，仆人回来了，带来了詹宁斯先生的口信。他请我去他的书房，那实际上是他后部的客厅。他答应几分钟后就来见我。

这真的是一间书房——几乎称得上是图书馆了。房间很高，有两扇细长的窗户，配有深黑色的窗帘。房间比我预想的要大得多，书堆得到处都是，从地板一直堆到了天花板。上层的地毯——凭我踩上去的感觉，有两三层——是土耳其地毯。脚步落下去，悄然无声。书架突出在外，使得窗户都显得非常幽深，尤其是那几扇窄窗。房间虽然非常舒适，甚至能用奢华来形容，但是显然有些阴暗，再加上那份寂静，简直可以称得上是令人压抑了。然而，也许是因为我产生了一些联想。在我的头脑中，已经把一些奇怪的想法和詹宁斯先生联系起来了。我带着一种特别的不祥的预感，走进这幢非常安静的屋子，步入这间极其寂静的房间。那份黑暗，以及各类书籍庄重的封皮，更是加深了这份忧郁的感觉。除了墙上两扇窄窄的玻璃以外，书堆得到处都是。

我在等着詹宁斯先生的到来。为了打发时间，我瞄了瞄他书橱里堆放的书。我的目光落到了书橱下面的一堆书上。那些书放在地板上，背面朝上，是斯维登堡的一整套拉丁文原版《属天的奥秘》。那是一套非常精致的对开本，装帧极为考究，深受神学风格的影响，纯羊皮封面上烫印着金色的字母，书边也是胭脂红色的。这套书里插着一些纸质书签。我拾起那些书，一本接一本放到桌上，把书翻到插有书签的地方。我读起了肃穆的拉丁术语，文中用铅笔画出了许多句子。在此我摘录一些，并翻译成了英语。

“当人的内在视觉，即他的灵魂的视觉打开的那一刻，生命的另一种形式就出现了，那是肉眼无从可见的。”

“拥有了内在视觉，我就得以看见另一种形式的生命，要比我看到的这个世界的东西清晰许多。从这个角度考虑，显然外部视觉脱胎于内在视觉，而内在视觉则来源于更加内在的视觉，如此等等。”

“每个人至少都有两种邪灵在侧。”

“恶鬼在旁的人同样也能流利地讲话，但是声音刺耳，听来让人不快。他们有时候也会出现说话不畅的情况，因为那时正有某样东西悄悄潜伏在内，令想法产生了分歧。”

“附身于人的邪灵确实来自地狱，但是附上人身之后，他们就脱离了地狱。这时他们所在的地方，位于天堂和地狱之间，称为灵界——邪灵附在人身上的时候，就处在灵界之中。此时他们免受地狱的一切折磨，而是分享宿主的全部所思所想。因此，该人的一颦一笑，邪灵都能一一体会。但是，他们返回地狱之后，又回归到了以前的状态。”

“邪灵觉察到自己附身于人时，此时他们还只是与人分离的灵。而如果他们可以飘入那人的肉体，他们就会千方百计地摧毁他，因为他们对人抱有无穷的敌意。”

“因此，当他们认识到我是肉身的主人后，就会不断地试图除灭我，不仅要除灭我的肉身，更要除灭掉我的灵魂。因为，对于地狱里的一切生命，消灭人类或灵魂都是他们的乐趣所在。但是，我主一直保护着我。因此，与灵共生的人是何等危险啊，除非他的信仰无比坚定。”

“精心防护，不让附体的灵知道他们已经与人合体实在是太重要了，因为如果他们知道了这一点，就会和他对话，其意图就是为了摧毁他。”

“地狱的乐趣就是对人作恶，让他快速而永远地灭亡。”

页面底部的一长串注释吸引了我的目光，那是詹宁斯先生干净的手笔，是用十分尖细的铅笔写就的。我期望看到他的评价，便读了一两句，但是随即停了下来，因为写的内容完全不是那些，而是以这样的文字开头的，“Deus misereatur mei [3]”。我意识到了这段文字的私密性，于是挪开双眼，合上书，把全套书都放到原先的地方，除了一本之外。那本书吸引了我的注意。我就像一个勤奋好学、惯于独处的人那样，完全沉浸在了书中，浑然不知外物，也不记得自己究竟身处何处。

我读到的那部分，用斯维登堡的术语来说，是有关“代表物”和“对

应物”的内容。正在读的这一段，主要说的是，当邪灵为其地狱伙伴之外的人所见时，他们就以“对应物”的形式出现，呈现出野兽的模样。那是他们可怕、残暴的一面，代表了他们的特殊欲望和生命。这一段很长，特别列举了一些野兽的形式。

[3] Deus misereatur mei, 拉丁文，愿上帝怜悯我。——译者注

第四章 四目同读

我一边读，一边用铅笔盒的一端沿着文字移动，突然某样东西迫使我抬起了目光。

我的正前方是刚才提到过的一面镜子，我在镜子里看到了我那位朋友高大的身影。詹宁斯先生弓着背，俯身在我的肩膀上，读着我正在埋头苦读的那一页，脸色阴沉而激动，我几乎都认不出他了。

我转身站了起来。他也站直了身子，努力挤出一丝笑容，说道：

“我走进来，向您问好，但是没能把您从书中唤醒。所以我禁不住好奇，就从您肩膀上偷看了，恐怕是有些失礼。您应该不是第一次看那些文章了。毫无疑问，您在很久以前研究过斯维登堡？”

“噢，太对了！我欠斯维登堡的实在是太多了。您一定会记得，《玄医学》那本小书里也能找到他的影子。”

虽然我的朋友装出一副高兴的样子，但是他的脸上闪过一丝红晕，我能觉察到他内心里极大的不安。

“我简直不够资格，我对斯维登堡知之甚少。两周前，我才拿到那些书。”他回答道，“我认为，它们会让一个孤独的人感到神经紧张——嗯，从我读过的一点点来判断——我不是说它们把我也弄得紧张了。”他笑道，“我非常感激这本书。您拿到我的便条了？”

我尽量表示赞同，但也少许保留了一点意见。

“读您的书，我是彻彻底底读进去了，”他接着说道，“我一眼就看出来，那本书的内涵要比写出来的丰富得多。您认识哈利医生吗？”他问道，显得有些突然。

顺便说一下，笔者认为，此处提到的这位医生是英格兰有史以来最杰出的医生之一。

我认识他，和他通过信，并且在我访问英格兰期间，受到他的热情款待，得到了他极大的帮助。

“我觉得，他是我此生遇见过的最大的傻瓜。”詹宁斯先生说道。

这是我第一次听到他说别人的坏话，如此高贵的名字竟会配上这样的字眼，着实让我大吃一惊。

“真的吗？在什么方面？”我问道。

“他的专业上。”他回答道。

我笑了起来。

“我的意思是，”他说，“在我看来，他的决定，有半数都是盲目做出的——我指的是，他看待万物，有一半都是暗淡悲观的——而另一半则无比光明、充满活力。最糟的是，他似乎是故意的。我简直无法理解——我是说，他不应该这样——他行医的时候，我和他打过交道，但是我觉得，在这层意义上，他只不过是个思想上的瘫子，智力上的活死人。也许在某个时候，我会和您详细说说。”他带着一点儿激动说道，“您在英格兰多待几个月吧。如果在您逗留期间我不在城里，能允许我给您写信吗？”

“荣幸之至。”我向他保证道。

“您真是太好了。我对哈利实在是太不满意了。”

“他有点儿倾向于唯物主义学派。”我说。

“一个彻头彻尾的唯物主义者。”他纠正我道，“您无法想象，那种事情会让更了解底细的人多么担心啊。请您不要告诉任何人——任何您认识的我的朋友——我所郁闷的事情。比方说，现在没有人知道——甚至玛丽小姐也不知道——我去找哈利医生，或是任何其他医生看过病。所以请不要提起此事。如果我有任何发作的征兆，请允许我给您写信。如果我在城里的话，还能跟您谈一谈。”

我满脑子都是猜测。不知不觉中，我发现自己正凝重地盯着他，因为他的目光垂下了片刻，然后他说：

“我觉得您大概在想，我还是现在就告诉您吧，不然您会乱猜的，但是您还是放弃吧。就算用尽整个余生，您也永远猜不到。”

他微笑着摇摇头。冬日的阳光下，突然飘过一片乌云。他像是忍受着痛苦一样，咬着牙齿吸了一口气。

“很抱歉，您曾经找机会咨询过我的同行的意见。但是，只要您愿意，我随时随地都听候您的吩咐。不用我提醒您，信心无比重要。”

然后，他又聊了很多其他的事情，氛围要轻松愉快很多。过了一会儿，我就起身告辞了。

第五章 赫斯利乌斯被召唤到了里士满

我们欢快地告别，但是他高兴不起来，我也是。人脸——这一强大的心灵的器官——一定具有某种表达形式。虽然我经常见到各种各样的脸，并且拥有医生的坚强神经，但是这张脸却深深搅乱了我的心神。看一眼詹宁斯先生就让我焦躁不安。它具有一种凄凉的力量，令我浮想联翩。我不得不改变了晚间的计划，去了歌剧院。我觉得，自己需要换换脑子。

有两三天的时间，我没有听到他的消息，也没有收到他的信息，直到他给我送来了一张便条，读来满心欢喜，充满希望。他说，一段时间以来，他已经好多了——实际上，是很不错——他要做一个小试验，到他的教区去上一个多月，试试看一点点工作是否会让他不舒服。对于他的康复，现在他几乎打算这么称呼了，洋溢着一股强烈的宗教感激之情。

一两天后，我见到了玛丽小姐，她又说了一遍他在便条里告知的事情，告诉我他实际上是在沃里克郡，继续履行他在肯利斯的牧师职责。她还补充说道：“我禁不住认为，他真的是完全健康的，除了神经过敏和胡思乱想，其实什么事也没有。我们都会神经紧张，但是我觉得，对付那种缺点，一点点的辛勤工作就是最好的灵丹妙药，他下定决心去试试看。他要是过了一年多也不回来，我一点儿也不会奇怪的。”

尽管她信心十足，但是仅仅两天之后，我就收到了这张便条，那是从他皮卡迪利大街附近的房子里发出的，还有落款日期：

尊敬的先生，我无比失望地回来了。如果我觉得能够见您，我会写信请您来拜访的。此刻，我的心情太低落了。实际上，甚至连想说的话都说不出来。请不要和朋友们提到我的名字。我无法见任何人。上帝保佑，不久之后，您会听到我的消息的。我打算去什罗浦郡跑一趟，那里有一些我的亲戚。上帝保佑您！愿我回来以后，相比起现在，我们能更加愉快地相见。

此后大约一周，我在玛丽小姐自家的宅邸碰到了她。她说，最后一个留在城里的人，也要动身前往布莱顿了，因为伦敦的好季节马上就要过去了。她告诉我她从詹宁斯先生的侄女玛莎那里听说了他在什

罗浦郡。他侄女的信里没有多说什么，只是提到他情绪低落、神经紧张。那些字眼，健康的人们觉得只不过是轻描淡写，而暗中却隐藏着怎样的痛苦啊！

将近五周过去，我都没有接到詹宁斯先生的任何消息。最终，我收到了他的一张便条。他写道：

我到了乡下，呼吸着不同的空气，看着不同的风景，感受着不同的人，所有的东西都不一样了——所有东西都有了改变——除了我以外。作为地球上最犹豫不决的生物，我已经下定决心，要完全向您坦露我的病情。如果您时间允许，请今天、明天或是后天就来找我。但是请一定要越快越好。您不知道我有多么需要帮助。我在里士满有一幢安静的房子，现在我就在这里。也许您可以赶过来吃晚餐，或是午餐，甚至是喝茶也可以。您会毫不费力地找到我的。只要您方便，带信来的布兰克大街的仆人随时都会把马车停到您的大门口。我也随时恭候您的大驾。您也许会说我不应该一个人独处。我什么都试过了。来看我吧。

我叫来了仆人，决定今晚就去。于是我就真的去了。

我想，他要是待在寄宿处，或者旅馆里，应该会觉得好很多。此时，我乘坐的马车正穿过两排低矮阴郁的榆树林，前往一幢相当老式的砖式房屋。那些树木的叶子遮住了屋子，超过了房顶的高度，几乎把屋子包围了。这是一种不合常理的选择，因为没有什么比这更沉闷和寂静的了。他在城里待了一两天，因为某种无法忍受的原因，搬来了这里。也许是因为这里家具齐全，还是他自己的房子，来这里便能摆脱思绪上的困扰，也不会有选择上的困难。

太阳已经落山了，西边的天空反射出的红光照亮了四周的景色。我们都很熟悉这种景致。大厅显得非常黑暗，但是，走到后面的客厅之后，因为有窗户是朝着西面的，于是我又沐浴在了同样的微光之下。

我坐了下来，望着窗外枝繁叶茂的风景。在壮丽而凄凉的光线中，万物都闪烁着柔和的光芒，而那一丝光芒，也正在一点点地褪去。房间的几个角落已经全黑了，所有的东西都变得昏暗起来。不知不觉中，我的心绪也随着那份阴暗而变动着，做好了面对真正邪恶的准备。我独自等待着他的到来，很快就如愿了。与前厅相通的那扇门打开了，在红彤彤的暮色中，詹宁斯先生高大的身影隐约可见。他迈着隐秘的步骤，不声不响地走进了房间。

我们握了握手，靠窗坐在椅子上。那里还足够亮，能让我们看见彼此的脸庞。他坐在我旁边，把手放在我的手臂上，没有半点儿开场白，直接讲起了自己的故事。

第六章 詹宁斯先生是如何遇到自己的同伴的

我们身前，是西方的落日余晖，是荒凉的里士满森林壮丽的一面。我们身后，我们身旁，是一点点暗淡下去的房间。那道昏暗、古怪的光辉落在患者石头一样冰冷的脸上——他的脸庞依旧和蔼温柔，但是有点儿不一样了——似乎陷了进去。光辉触碰到的地方，突然间仿佛变幻出了某种光线，尽管十分暗淡。那缕光线还来不及发生一丝变化，就融化在了那片黑暗之中。四周同样无声无息：没有远方马车的车轮滚滚，没有一声狗吠，也没有来历不明的口哨声。有的只是一个生病的单身汉的屋中那份压抑的寂静。

受害人僵硬的脸庞涨得通红，在黑色背景的映衬下，仿佛沙尔肯的肖像画一般。虽然对于细节内幕尚一无所知，但是我从他的那张脸上，很轻易猜到了问题的实质。

“事情开始于，”他说道，“十月十五日，三年十一个星期零两天以前——我对日期记得清清楚楚，因为此后每一天都是煎熬。如果我的讲述中有所遗漏，请您告诉我。”

“大约四年前，我开始着手从事一项工作，耗费了我大量的思绪，也让我阅读了很多东西。那是关于古人的宗教玄学的问题。”

“明白，”我说，“基于一定事实，有着成套思想体系的异教是一种宗教现实，与象征性的崇拜是大不相同的。那是一个非常有趣，范围很广的研究领域。”

“没错，但是对于心智是不利的——我指的是，基督徒的心智。异教在本质上自成一体，总体而言是邪恶的。他们的宗教包括了他们的艺术，还有他们的行为举止。痴迷于这项课题的研究是一件丢脸的事，当然也会带来报应。上帝啊，请宽恕我。”

“我写了大量的东西，夜里很晚还在写。我一直在思考我的研究，走路也想，无论走到什么地方，都在想。我彻底陷了进去。您要记住，所有与此相关的物质概念，或多或少都有美丽的一面，而这门课题本身就非常有趣。而那时的我，则对此毫不担心。”

他重重地叹了一口气。

“我相信，所有认认真真投入写作的人都会对某样东西——用我

朋友的话说——上瘾：茶、咖啡，或是烟草。我猜，从事这种职业的人，每小时都必须补充物质的消耗，不然就会变得心不在焉。思维也一样，会渐渐脱离肉体，除非经常能得到某种真情实感的提醒。无论如何，我觉得有那种需要，我也开始尝试物质上的补充。陪伴我的是茶——一开始是普通的红茶，通常的喝法，不是很浓：但是我喝了很多，并且越喝越浓。我也从未有过不舒服的感觉。我开始尝试喝一点儿绿茶。我发现效果更好，让我耳清目明，思绪敏捷。于是，我渐渐喝得频繁了，但是还没有超出消遣的程度。我在这个地方写了很多东西，就在这间房间里，这里很安静。那时，我会熬夜到很晚。一边工作，一边时不时抿上一口茶——绿茶——于是便习惯成自然。我在桌上放了一把小水壶，就挂在灯上。从夜里十一点到凌晨两三点间，我都要沏上两回茶。那之后，我才上床睡觉。我通常每天都会进城。我并非修道士。虽然我要在图书馆里待上一两个小时，搜寻权威的说法，寻找启发我研究的闪光点，但是我知道自己在精神上并没有处于病态。我还是像往常那样时常与朋友相见，喜欢与他们交往。总体而言，我觉得，生活从未如此快乐。

“我认识了一个人，他有一些不同寻常的旧书，是德意志出版的中世纪拉丁文的版本。得知获准一睹书的真容，我高兴万分。这位好心人的书都在城里，而且是非常偏远的地方。我在那儿待得比预定时间要长。一出来后，看到附近没有出租马车，我就想去乘公共马车，因为这间屋子附近常常有公共马车驶过。马车驶过一幢旧房子的时候，天已经比现在还黑了。我注意到，那幢房子的大门口，两旁各有四棵杨树。除了我之外的最后一名乘客也下了车。马车一路跑得更快了。当时已经是黄昏。我倚靠在车门这边的角落里，愉快地细细回味着。

“公共马车内已经近乎全黑了。我看了看正对面的那个角落。紧挨着马匹后部的地方，有两个小圆点，似乎是一道红色光线的反光。它们大约间隔两英寸 [4]，大概有开游艇人外套上的小铜纽扣那么大。百无聊赖之下，我不禁琢磨起那到底是什么小玩意儿。那道虽然昏暗，但却颜色深红的光线究竟从何而来？到底是什么东西在反射光芒——玻璃珠？纽扣？还是玩具的装饰物？我们一路摇摇晃晃地行驶着，还剩下大约一英里 [5] 的路。我还没有解开这个谜团。接下来，那个东西变得更加奇怪了。因为那两个光点突然猛地一动，距离地板越来越近，但还是保持着彼此的相对距离和水平位置。然后，它们忽然升高到与我的座位相同的高度，我一下子看不见它们了。

“我的好奇心现在是真的被点燃了。我还来不及细想，那两个昏暗的光点又出现了，再一次一同出现在靠近地板的地方。然后又消失了，然后又回到我一开始看到它们的角落里。

“于是，我双眼一边紧紧地盯着它们，一边从我这一侧不动声色地慢慢挪过去。到了那一端后，我看见那些小红点还在。

“公共马车内几乎没有一点儿亮光。天近乎全黑了。我身子向前倾了倾，以便能更好地搞清楚那些小圆点到底是什么。随着我的移动，它们的位置也发生了一些变化。现在，我能察觉到那里有一个黑影了。片刻后，我看见了一只黑色小猴的轮廓，还算比较清楚。它正模仿着我的动作，把脸伸向前。那两个小圆点是它的双眼。我现在还能隐约地看见，它正露出牙齿，咧嘴朝我笑着。

“我往后退了退，不知道它会不会跳过来。我猜，一定是哪位乘客把这难看的宠物忘在车上了。我想试试看它脾气如何，但又不愿意用手指去冒险，便把伞轻轻地朝它戳去。它一动不动——伞戳到它身上了——伞穿了过去。穿过它的身体时，来来回回都没有遇到一丝的阻力。

“我的那种恐惧，无法向您形容半分。当我弄明白那东西是一种幻觉之后，我不禁为自己担心害怕起来。这种惊骇让我魂不守舍，我凝视着那畜生的双眼，甚至片刻也无法脱离。我目不转睛地看着，那东西朝后跳了跳，退回到了角落里。而我在慌乱之间，发现自己已经靠在了车门口，于是探出头去，深深呼吸着外边的空气，眼睛盯着驶过的灯光和树木。重新触到现实的感觉让我高兴不已。

“我叫停马车，走了下去。在付钱的时候，我能察觉到车夫看我的眼神怪怪的。我敢说，自己的表情和举止一定有些不同寻常，因为我以前从未有过如此怪异的感觉。”

第七章 历程：第一阶段

“公共马车继续向前驶去，把我一个人留在了马路上。我仔细地朝四周打量，想搞清楚那只猴子是不是还跟着我，结果一无所获。我不由得如释重负。我无法形容，刚才遭受的打击有多大。而我觉得，重拾自我的欣喜让自己多少摆脱了那种情绪。”

“马车还没驶到这幢房子前，我就提前下了车，现在还有两三百步的距离。人行小路旁有一堵砖墙，墙内是一道紫杉树篱，或是那一类的深色常绿植物。树篱里面还有一排硕大的乔木，你在来的路上应该注意到了。”

“砖墙大约有我肩膀那么高。我抬起双眼，正好看见了那只猴子。它在墙头上，弯着腰，四肢着地，边走边爬，紧紧地跟着我。我停了下来，带着恐惧和憎恨的情绪看着它。我一停，它也停了下来，坐在墙上，长长的双手搁在膝盖上，也看着我。灯光昏暗，只能看见那只猴子的轮廓。可天又黑得不够彻底，无法让它眼中那道怪异的光芒尽情释放。然而，我依旧能清晰地看见那道雾蒙蒙的红光。那只猴子没有露出牙齿，也没有表现出任何愤怒的迹象，它似乎厌烦了，闷闷不乐地一直盯着我看。”

“我退到了马路中间，那是一种无意识的后退，我就站在那里，看着它。它一动不动。”

“我本能地决定试试看别的招数——什么都行。我转过身，迈着轻快的步伐朝镇上走去，同时一直斜眼观察着那只畜生的动向。它飞快地沿着墙头爬着，与我的速度完全一致。”

“马路快转弯的地方，围墙到底了。它跃下墙头，结结实实地蹦上一两下，便来到我的脚边，继续紧跟着我，我加快了脚步也没有用。它在我的左侧，就在我的腿旁，每时每刻我都担心自己会一脚踩到它。”

“马路上空旷无人，安静异常。天在一点点地黑下去。我惊慌失措地停住脚步，向着另外一个方向转身——我指的是，朝着这幢房子的方向，和我刚才行走的方向相反。我站定之后，那只猴子朝后退了一段距离，我估计，大约有五六码 [6] 远，一动不动地看着我。”

“我比刚才说的还要激动。和大家一样，我当然也听说过‘幽灵幻

觉’的说法。那是你们医生用来形容类似这样的情况的。我思考了一下自己的处境，正视自己面对的不幸。

“我读到过，这种病情有时候是暂时的，有时候则很顽固。据说有的病例中，幽灵的外表起初人畜无害。而渐渐地，它变成了可怕的模样，令人无法忍受，最终把受害人折磨得精疲力竭。我孤孤单单地静静站在原地，陪伴我的只有那只野兽。我试图安慰自己，一遍又一遍地向自己保证，‘那个东西纯粹是一种病，一种有名的身体疾病，和天花或是神经痛无疑是一样的。医生们的看法一致，在原理上也得到了证明。我肯定不是傻瓜。我一直熬夜到太晚，而且消化也不正常。上帝助我，一定会没事的。这只不过是神经消化不良的症状’。我相信这些吗？一个字也不信。不过是和其他可怜人的想法一样罢了。他们也曾遭遇过这种恶魔般的境遇，深陷其中，欲罢不能。我只能说自己的学识违背了我的信仰，我只不过是在欺骗自己、徒增勇气而已。

“现在，我朝家的方向走去。离家只有几百码了。我强迫自己听天由命，但是还没有从那种令人作呕的震惊中摆脱出来，还处在初逢厄运的慌乱之中。

“我打定主意，当晚就待在家里。那个畜生靠近了我。我不禁想，是不是因为朝着家的方向前进，它就产生了某种急切的情绪。有时，筋疲力尽的马或狗朝家走去时，也会出现这样的情况。

“我害怕到镇上去，我担心被人看到、认出来。我意识到，自己的一举一动中有一种抑制不住的焦虑。此外，我还害怕生活习惯上出现任何剧烈的变化，例如去到某个娱乐场所，或者为了让自己疲劳一些而离家散步。它一直在大厅门口等着我，直到我迈上台阶。大门一开，它就和我一起走了进去。

“那天夜里，我一口茶也没有喝。我抽了雪茄，喝了一点儿白兰地和水。我的想法是，自己应该尽情进行物质享受，过上一阵随心所欲的生活，就像这样，强迫自己养成一种新的习惯。我来到这间客厅，就坐在这个位置上。然后，那只猴子爬上了一张小桌子，当时是放在那里的。它看上去头昏眼花、无精打采。它动来动去，让我有一股抑制不住的不安，迫使自己一直盯着它。它的眼睛半睁半闭，但是还能看得出双眼的光芒。它不停地看着我。随时随地，一直清醒地看着我，片刻也不停息。

“我就不再详细讲述那一晚的遭遇了。我会接着形容第一年的情况，其实基本一样。我会讲讲这只猴子白天的样子。您刚刚已经听到了，在夜里，它有很多怪异之处。这只猴子不大，全身通黑。它只有一个特点——具有某种恶意——无法名状的恶意。第一年里，它看起来郁郁寡欢，总是病恹恹的。但是，在那份具有敌意的慵懒之下，总

潜伏着一股强烈的恶意和警戒。在那段时间里，它什么也没有做，也没有给我惹一点儿麻烦，仿佛计划好的一般，只是持续不断地看着我。它的眼睛一刻也不曾离开我。自从它出现之后，除了睡梦中以外，我的视线里始终有它，无论白天黑夜，无论天明天暗，除了它每次会无缘由地离开几周之外。

“在完全黑暗的情况下，它也像白天一样清晰可见。我不仅仅指它的双眼。它笼罩在一层光晕之中，让浑身上下都能看得清清楚楚。那道光晕仿佛是一团红色的余烬，它走到哪里，光晕就跟到哪里。

“它暂时离开我的时候，总是在夜里，在黑暗之中，每次都如出一辙。它一开始变得很不自在，然后狂怒不已。之后它会向我扑来，齙着牙，浑身颤抖，爪子攥得紧紧的。与此同时，壁炉里出现了火光。我从来也不生火。在点火的房间里，我睡不着。它离烟囱越来越近，似乎因为愤怒而发抖。当那份怒火累积到最高点的时候，它跳进壁炉里，爬上烟囱，消失不见了。

“这一幕刚刚发生的时候，我有一种如释重负的感觉。现在，我重获新生了。一个白天过去了，一个晚上过去了，它没有回来。然后是一整周……一周……又一周。赫斯利乌斯医生，我跪倒在地，感谢上帝，跪着祈祷。整一个月就这样无忧无虑地过去了，但是突然之间，它又和我在一起了。”

第八章 第二阶段

“它伴随着我的左右。阴沉的外表下原来那股懒散的恶意，现在却活跃起来。其他方面则一点儿未变。从它的活动和外观上就能明显感觉出这股新生的力量，这股力量很快也表露出了其他的地方。

“你要知道，在一段时间里，这种变化只是表现为它更加活跃，恐吓的氛围更浓，就仿佛它一直在盘算着某种凶残的计划一样。它的眼睛，和以前一样，从未离开过我。”

“现在它在这里吗？”我问道。

“不在，”他回答道，“确切地说，它离开已有两周零一天了——十五天。有的时候，离开的时间会长达近乎两个月，有一次整整三个月。通常都会超过两周的时间，虽然也有可能只过一天它就回来了。我上次见到它，是十五天以前了。现在，它随时都可能回来。”

“它回来的时候，”我问道，“有什么异象吗？”

“没有，一点儿也没有。”他说，“它只是又来到我的身边。眼神离开书本，或是一转头的工夫，我就看见它了。它同往常一样看着我。然后就和从前一样，只要它在，就一直看着我。此前，我从未向任何人讲过这么多，这么详细。”

我感受到了他的激动，他看起来面无人色，不停地用手帕擦着前额。我表示，他也许是累了，并告诉他，我会很乐意第二天上午再来拜访，但是他说：

“不，如果您不介意现在听完的话，我已经说了这么多了，我愿意再努一把力。我和哈利医生谈的时候，我不愿像现在这样畅所欲言。您是一位哲学医生。您认可幽灵的存在。如果这样东西是真实的——”

他停了下来，带着疑问的神情激动地看着我。

“将来我们可以详细地讨论讨论，非常详细。我会把我的想法原原本本地告诉你。”我顿了一顿，回答道。

“好的，非常好。如果这东西是真实的，我想说，它正在逐步占据上风，一点一点地，把我的心灵拉进地狱。他谈到了视神经的问

题。噢，好吧——还有其他的负责沟通的神经的问题。愿全能的上帝帮助我！您会听到的。

“我告诉过您，它行动的能力增强了。它的恶意，在某种程度上，变得具有攻击性了。大约两年前，我和主教间一直悬而未决的问题终于搞定，我去了自己在沃里克郡的教区，渴望实现自己的职业抱负。对于后来发生的事情，我没有做好准备，尽管自那以后，我一直认为自己可能会理解类似的事。我这么说是因为——”

他的话语开始变得更加吃力，更加勉强，还时常叹气，有时候似乎就要坚持不下去了。但是，此时他的态度并不激动，而更像是一名意志消沉的病人，已经完全自暴自弃了。

“好吧，但是我会首先和您谈谈我的教区，肯利斯。

“我离开此地，前往道尔布里奇的时候，它也在我旁边，是我旅途中无声的同伴。我住进牧师住宅后，它依旧跟着我。当我开始履行职责的时候，另外一个变化发生了。那个东西展现出了可怕的决心，千方百计地想要阻挠我。它和我一起在教堂里，一起在读经台上，一起在布道坛上，一起在领圣餐的围栏之内。最后，它终于发作了。我正在带领会众朗读的时候，它一下跳到书上，蹲坐在那里，令我无法看见书页。这样的事情发生了不止一次。

“我一度离开了道尔布里奇。我把自己交到哈利医生手里，对他言听计从。他很关心我的病情。我想，他很感兴趣。他似乎取得了成功。有将近三个月的时间，那东西都没有回来。我不禁想，自己已经安全了。在完全取得他的同意后，我回到了道尔布里奇。

“我是乘马车去的。一路上精神很好，不只很好，我非常开心，心情也很愉快。我觉得，自己已经从可怕的幻觉中解脱出来，要回归到渴望从事的工作中去了。那是一个阳光明媚的美丽傍晚，万物都显得欢乐、安详，我高兴极了。我记得，自己朝窗外看去，想在树影之间找到肯利斯教堂的尖顶，据说人们最早能在这个地方看见它。区分教区边界的一条小溪，恰好在那个地方从涵洞下穿过马路。它就在路边出现了，路边竖立着一块石头，石头上刻有古老的碑文。经过这个地点之后，我把脑袋缩回来，坐了下来。马车的角落里，坐着那只猴子。

“一时之间，我感到头晕目眩，然后又因为绝望和恐惧而感到愤怒。我叫停马车夫，下了车，坐在路边，默默地向上帝祈祷，请求宽恕。随之而来的是绝望的顺从。我的同伴跟着我再度走进牧师的住宅。它对我的迫害再度发生了。在一段短时间的抗争后，我屈服了，不久就离开了那个地方。

“我和您说过，”他说，“在此之前，那只畜生就已经表现得有些攻

击性了。我再详细解释一下。每当我祈祷，甚至是冥想祈祷的时候，似乎有一股强烈的怒火驱使着它。那股怒火越积越强，直到最终，会以一种可怕的方式打断我。您也许会问，一个无声的非物质幻影是如何做到这点的？就像这样，每当我开始冥想祈祷的时候，它就一直待在我的面前，越来越近，越来越近。

“它常常在桌子上、椅背上、壁炉架上蹦蹦跳跳，一边盯着我不放，一边慢慢地左右摇摆。它的动作具有一种说不清的力量，可以驱散思想，让人把注意力集中在那单调的动作上，直到渐渐忘了刚才的打算，直到所有想法最终都烟消云散——除非我已经开始祈祷，摆脱了那种强迫，而此时我的脑子仿佛已经迷失了一般。它还有其他的方法，”他重重地叹了一口气，“比如像这样，我双眼闭着祈祷的时候，它会越靠越近，越靠越近，于是我便看见它了。我知道这根本无法解释，但是我确实看见它了，虽然我两眼紧闭。它就这样让我的思想出现动摇，可以说，它压倒了我，迫使我放弃跪拜，站起身来。如果曾经亲身经历过，你就会了解绝望是怎么一回事了。”

第九章 第三阶段

“赫斯利乌斯医生，我发觉，我说的每一个字您都听进去了。我不用请您再特别留意我接下来要说的话。他们谈到了视神经的问题，还有幽灵幻觉的现象，仿佛视觉器官是本人唯一受到影响的地方——我知道远不止如此。我那悲惨的病情，在两年的时间里不断发展。但是，就像食物在唇间温柔地下咽，终究还是会面对牙齿的咀嚼。就像卷进研磨机曲柄里的，一开始只是小拇指的指尖，然后会带进去一只手掌，一条胳膊，最后是整个身体。因此，哪怕可怜的凡人最初被抓住的只是最纤细的神经，也会被地狱的庞大势力一点点吞噬，直到他变得和我一模一样。一点儿没错，医生，和我一模一样。我和您交谈片刻，是为了祈求获得解脱。我觉得，我是在为不可能的事而祈祷，而我的祈求也终将一无所获。”

他显然越来越激动，我试图让他平静下来，告诉他不应该失去希望。

我们交谈的时候，夜幕已经降临了。朦胧的月色洒满了窗外，我说道：

“也许你更愿意点起蜡烛？你看，这种光线，有点儿奇怪。我希望，我在做诊断的时候，你能尽可能地和平时一样。我能说诊断吗——当然换个别的说法我也没有意见。”

“对我来说，所有的光线都是一样的，”他说，“除了在我读书写字的时候。长夜与否，我也不在乎。我还想告诉您，大约一年前发生的事。那东西开始和我说话了。”

“说话！你是什么意思——像人一样说话，是吗？”

“是的。逐字逐句，发音清楚，条理分明，但是有一点很奇怪。和人类的嗓音不一样，声音不是通过耳朵传来的——而是像在我的脑海中唱歌一样。

“这种能力，和我说话的技能，会是毁灭我的根源所在。它不让我祈祷，用可怕的亵渎神灵的话语打断我。我不敢再继续，没法儿再继续。噢！医生，人类的技能、思想和祈祷对我毫无用处！”

“你必须向我保证，尊敬的先生，不要再胡思乱想，而仅仅向我

描述事实。最重要的是，你要记住，就算那个东西让你不堪其扰，似乎觉得它是真实存在的独立生命，具有独立意志，然而它还是没有能力伤害到你，除非上天赋予了它那样的能力：它能否进入你的感官主要取决于你的身体状况——上帝在上，这是你值得信赖和宽慰的地方：我们都是同样的肉体凡躯。在你的病情中，只不过是你的‘外壳’，肉体的屏障，那道屏风，有点儿失修了，光线和声音都能透过来。我们必须开始新的征程，先生——鼓起勇气。今晚，我会详细思考一下你的整个病情。”

“您真是太好了，先生。您觉得我还值得治疗，并没有完全放弃我。但是，先生，您不知道，它对我的影响越来越大：向我发号施令，简直就是一个暴君。我变得越来越无助。愿上帝解救我！”

“它向你发号施令？当然你是指通过语言？”

“是的，是的。它总是怂恿我去犯罪，去伤害别人，或者伤害我自己。要知道，医生，情况非常危急，这是真的。几周以前，我在什罗浦郡的时候，”现在，詹宁斯先生的语速越来越快，声音还有一些颤抖，一只手抓住我的手臂，看着我的脸，“一天，我和一群朋友出去散步——我的迫害者，您知道，当时也在我的身边。我落在了其他人的后面，要知道，迪河附近的乡间风景非常美丽。我们走的小路恰好位于一座煤矿附近，树林边缘有一口垂直的竖井，据说有一百五十英尺 [7] 深。我的侄女还在身后跟着我——当然，对于我痛苦的根源，她一无所知。然而，她知道我病了，行动不快。她就留了下来，以免我落单。我们俩一起慢慢地走走停停，陪伴我的那只畜生不断地怂恿我跳进那口竖井里。现在我可以告诉您——噢，先生，想想有多么可怕吧！——把我从可怕的死亡中拯救出来的唯一原因，是我担心如果那个可怜的女孩亲眼看见这一幕，会对她打击过大。我让她继续朝前走，到她的朋友们那里去。我说我没法儿再向前走了。她找了些借口。我越是催她，她越不肯走。她看上去又惊又怕。我猜想，一定是我的模样或是我的行为让她感到担忧。她坚持不肯离开，这实际上救了我一命。先生，您一定无法理解，一个活人怎么会沦为撒旦的奴隶呢？”他说着，伴随着可怕的呻吟和颤抖。

他讲到这里停顿了下来，于是我说：“不过你还是得救了。这是上帝的意志。我主庇佑着你没有受到任何其他异端的支配：因此，对未来要有信心。”

[7] 1英尺≈0.3米。——编者注

第十章 家

离开之前，我帮他点亮了蜡烛，让整个房间变得欢快一些，看起来像是有人居住的样子。我告诉他，他必须把自己的病情纯粹当成是与身体有关的原因，尽管是难以察觉的身体原因。我告诉他，他刚才描述的被解救的经过，就是得到上帝关爱的最好证明。而我痛苦地发现，他似乎把那特殊的一幕理解为自己已经走到了为神灵摒弃的地步。我坚持认为，这样的说法是毫无根据的。不仅如此，他在什罗浦郡远足时，神秘地摆脱了自杀的念头，这一事实更是与他的理解大相径庭。首先，尽管他并不打算让侄女一直在自己身旁，但是她却一直陪伴在他的左右。其次，在她面前实施那个可怕的建议，让他在心灵深处产生了无法抗拒的厌恶情绪。

随着我对詹宁斯先生一点一滴地娓娓道来，他不禁流下了眼泪，似乎感到备受安慰。我要求他答应我一件事，任何时候，只要那只猴子一回来，就立即通知我前来。我再三保证，在我彻底搞清楚他的病情前，不会在别的问题上浪费一点儿时间和精力，明天他就会知道结果的。然后，我才告辞。

走进马车车厢之前，我告诉仆人，他主人的状况很不好。他应该特别注意经常去他的房间查看查看。为了完全不受打扰，我自己也做了一番安排。

我只是去了一下住处，就带着一张旅行用的写字台和一个旅行袋，乘坐一辆出租马车，去了一个叫作“号角”的小旅馆，离镇上大约有两英里远。这是一所非常安静舒适的屋子，墙壁十分厚实。我下定决心，要在那舒适的客厅里，不受打扰，专心致志，把晚上几小时的时间都用来处理詹宁斯先生的病情，也许还需要加上第二天上午的不少时光。

（此处赫斯利乌斯医生详细记录了他对本病例的看法，以及他开出的生活习惯、膳食结构和药物方面的系列处方。这十分奇特——有些人也许会说太过神秘。但是，总体而言，我能遇到的那类读者，多半对此是不感兴趣的。因此也就没有必要在此一五一十地如数照抄了。这一整封信都是在他临时藏身的小旅馆里写的。而后一封信的落款地址，是他在镇上的住所。）

我是在前一天晚上九点半离开小镇，前往小旅馆的，直到第二天

下午一点钟，才回到镇上的房间。我在桌上发现了一封詹宁斯先生的亲笔信，并不是通过邮局寄来的。询问之后，我得知那是詹宁斯先生的仆人送来的。当他知道我直到今天才会回来，并且没有人知道我的地址之后，似乎很不自在。他说，自己主人的命令是，没有得到答复前不得回去。

我打开信，读了起来：

尊敬的赫斯利乌斯医生，它来了。您离开还不到一小时，它就回来了。它说话了。对于发生的事情，它了如指掌。它全都知道，也知道您。它发狂了，穷凶极恶地大肆辱骂。我给您寄的这封信，它对每一个字都心知肚明——每一个字。因为我承诺过，所以才写了这封信，但是我担心写得语无伦次、不清不楚。我不停地被打断，心情烦躁不安。

您的永远诚挚的，
罗伯特·林德·詹宁斯

“信是什么时候送来的？”我问道。

“大约昨天夜里十一点。那个人又来了，今天已经来了三次了。上一次大约是一小时以前。”

听到这样的回答后，我几分钟内就跳上了前往里士满的马车去见詹宁斯先生，口袋里装着我写的关于他病情的笔记。

如你所知，对于詹宁斯先生的病情，我丝毫没有丧失希望。我在《玄医学》一书中写下的原则，是适用于所有病例的。他自己记住了那些原则，并采取了一些实践，虽然方法上错误甚多。我打算认真地实践一场。我对此很有兴趣，并渴望在“敌人”真正出现的时候，亲自对他检查一番。

我驱车来到那幢阴暗的房子，跑上台阶，叩响了大门。没过多久，门就开了。开门的是一位身着黑色丝绸的高个儿女子。她看上去一脸病容，似乎一直在哭。她行了个屈膝礼，听到我的问题后，却没有回答。她转过脸去，向两名正在下楼的男子伸出了手。她就这样默默地把我交给了他们，然后她匆忙穿过一扇侧门，并把门关上了。

我立刻和离大厅最近的那名男子搭话，但是走近之后，我震惊地发现，他的两只手上全是鲜血。

我退后了几步。那名正在下楼的男子，只是用低沉的嗓音说道：“仆人来了，先生。”

那名仆人在楼梯上停了下来，一看到我就不知所措、哑口无言。他用一块手绢搓着自己的双手，手绢上浸满了鲜血。

“琼斯，那是什么？发生了什么事？”我问道，疑虑之情涌上心头，不禁毛骨悚然。

那人叫我前去大厅。我立刻走到他的身边。他皱着眉，眯着眼，脸色苍白地和我讲述着我已经猜到一半的可怕遭遇。

他的主人自杀了。

我和他一起走进楼上的房间——那里的一幕令我无法启齿。他用剃刀割开了自己的喉咙。伤口令人不寒而栗。两人已经把他放到床上，整理好了他的四肢。地板上的一大摊血迹表明，悲剧是在床和窗户之间的地方发生的。床铺的四周铺着地毯，梳妆台下面也铺着，但地板上的其他地方却没有，因为他说过他不喜欢在卧室里铺地毯。这间房间本就阴暗，现在又平添了几分可怕的成分。这幢房子原本就被一棵棵大榆树遮住了阳光。现在，一根粗枝的阴影正缓慢地在那可怖的地板上移动着。

我向仆人示意，我们一起下了楼。我关上大厅的门，进入一间老式的镶板房间。站在那里，我听完了仆人讲述的故事。可讲的并不多。

“先生，从您昨晚离开时的言谈和神色来看，我断定您认为我的主人病得很重。我想，也许您是担心他突然发作，或是别的什么事情。所以我完全遵从了您的指示。他熬夜到很晚，一直到三点过后。他并不是在写东西，也没有看书。他一直在自言自语，但那也不是什么稀奇事了。大约在那个时候，我帮他脱了衣服，给他换上了拖鞋和睡袍。大约半小时后，我轻手轻脚地走了回去。他赤身裸体地躺在床上，床边的桌子上点着一对蜡烛。我进去的时候，他正倚着胳膊肘，看着床的另一边。我问他想要些什么，他回答说不用。

“先生，我不知道那是否就是您对我说的，还是他有些不同寻常的地方。但是昨晚，我对他感到不安，非同寻常的不安。

“又过了半小时，也许还要久一点儿，我又一次起身。我没有听见他像刚才那样讲话。我把门打开了一点儿。两支蜡烛都熄灭了，这不同往常。我有一支放在卧室的蜡烛，我让光线稍稍照进去，轻轻地环顾四周。我看见他坐在梳妆台旁边的椅子上，衣服又都穿好了。他转过身来看着我。我觉得奇怪的是，他竟然穿衣服起床，然后灭掉蜡烛，那样坐在黑暗里。但是我只是又问了一遍，有什么我可以做的。他说，不用。听起来相当刺耳。我问他，是否需要点蜡烛，他说，‘随你的便，琼斯’。于是我点亮了蜡烛，在房间里踱来踱去。他说：‘和我说实话，琼斯。你为什么又来了，是听见有人在咒骂吗？’没有，先生。’我说，搞不清楚他是什么意思。

“‘没有，’他跟着我说道，‘当然没有。’我对他说，‘您到床上去不

好吗，先生？现在才五点钟’。他什么也没有回答，只是说，‘很可能会的。晚安，琼斯’。于是我就走了，先生。但是还不到一小时，我又去了。门关得紧紧的。他听见了我的声音，问我想要做什么。我想那声音是从床上传来的。他希望我不要再去打搅他。我躺下睡了一会儿。我再次起来的时候，大约是六点多钟不到七点的样子。门还是关得紧紧的，他没有作声。我想他大概是睡着了，就不想再去打搅他了。九点钟的时候，我才又去看了看。他的习惯是希望叫我来的时候，会打铃。我并没有叫醒他的专门时间。我轻轻地拍了拍门，没有回音。我离开了好一会儿，以为他一定是在休息。直到十一点，我才真的担心起他来——因为在我的印象里，他最迟也没有睡到过十点半以后。没有一点儿回音。我又是敲门，又是叫嚷，但还是没有回音。因为推不开门，我便从马厩叫来了汤姆斯。我们合力打开了门，于是发现了他那副令人震惊的样子。”

琼斯没有什么可说的了。可怜的詹宁斯先生非常和蔼可亲。所有人都很喜欢他。我看得出，那名仆人被深深触动了。

于是，我垂头丧气、焦虑不安地走出那座可怕的房子，也走出了那片黑暗的榆树林树荫。我希望自己今生再也不要看见这里了。我给你写信的时候，仿佛觉得自己还处在一个可怕而单调的梦境中，半梦半醒。因为怀疑和恐惧，我的记忆里容不下那幅画面。然而，我知道那些都是真的。这是一个有关毒药如何发挥作用的故事。那种毒药激发了心灵和神经的相互作用，并使得区分外部和内部感官功能的组织麻痹。就这样，我们发现了奇怪的“同床伴侣”，凡人和不朽者过早地相识了。

结论 致蒙受痛苦者

尊敬的范·洛，你曾经承受过那种病情的折磨，与我刚刚描述的相仿。你两次抱怨说，那个东西又回来了。

是谁，在上帝的指引下，治好了你？你卑微的仆人，马丁·赫斯利乌斯。请让我引用一位杰出的法国外科老医生在三百年前所说的无比虔诚的话：“治疗的是我，而治愈你的是上帝。”

来吧，朋友，打起精神。我来告诉你一个事实。

正如我在书里揭示的那样，我遇见、治疗过五十七个这类的视觉病例。我毫无差别地称呼它们为“理想化”“早熟性”与“精神性”的问题。

还有另外一类的病情，虽然通常会和我描述的那些相混淆，实际上被称为“幽灵幻觉”。在我看来，后者的治愈方法，并不比鼻炎或者轻微消化不良要复杂。

正是那些位居第一类的疑难杂症考验着我们的思维敏捷程度。我碰到过五十七个这类的病例，不多也不少。而我治疗失败的情况有多少呢？一个也没有。

只要稍有耐心，并对医生抱有合理的信任，任何患者都无须承受死亡的折磨。这简直就是小菜一碟，并且是完全可以做到的。只要具备这些简单的条件，我认为治愈是理所当然的事情。

你要记住，我甚至还没有开始着手治疗詹宁斯先生的病情。我拥有充分的把握，可以在十八个月的时间里，完全治愈他，当然或许会延长到两年。有些病例迅速得以痊愈，而另一些则要费时费力许多。任何一位聪明的医生，只要他用心思考、勤勉努力，就一定能实现完美的治愈。

你知道我写过一篇短文《大脑的基本功能》。在文中，我通过无数的事实证明了，如我所想的那样，动脉和静脉的循环在构造上通过神经的可能性是极高的。如此考虑的话，在这个系统中，大脑就是心脏。因此，液体通过一种类型的神经传播，改变成其他形态通过另一种神经返回。这种液体在本质上是精神性的，虽然并不是无形的，但是如同我之前所说的，最多就像光或电的情况那样。

由于各种滥服滥用，例如习惯性服用绿茶这种药剂，这种液体在质量上可能会受到影响，在平衡方面更是频繁遭到破坏。这种液体的存在，令我们与灵魂有了共处之处。它是在大部分大脑或神经上发现的一种充血，与内部感官相连，毫无必要地形成一个暴露的表面，脱离肉体的灵魂可以在其上运行：于是就或多或少地建立起一种有效的沟通渠道。在这种大脑循环和心脏循环之间存在一种密切的相互作用。外部视觉的核心，或者说重要因素，是眼睛。内部视觉的核心是神经组织和大脑，就位于眉毛的周围和上部。我只是用冰镇古龙水外敷，就驱散了你的幻影。效果有多棒，你还记得吗？然而，病例的治疗可以依样画葫芦的情况是极少的，也不是都能够快速见效的。神经液体对于寒冷具有强烈的排斥作用。持续的时间足够长，它甚至能导致永久性失去知觉的情况，我们称为麻痹。时间再久一点儿，会发生肌肉和感官的瘫痪。

我再说一遍，我毫不怀疑，自己应该首先让詹宁斯先生无意间开启的内在的眼睛变得暗淡，并最终把它完全封闭。因震颤性谵妄打开的相同感官，当大脑以及心脏出现过度活跃症状，并伴随着惊人的神经充血现象时，就会再度完全关闭，并且因为身体状况的明显改变而彻底停止。只要持续在身体上采用一个简单的方法，就能产生这样的结果——必然会出现这样的结果——我从未失败过。

可怜的詹宁斯先生自杀了。但是，这一灾难是另一种完全不同的疾病造成的，可以说，那种疾病将自身投射于另一种已经确认的病痛之上。他的病情明显表现为并发症，真正压垮他的疾病，是遗传性自杀癖。我不能称呼可怜的詹宁斯先生为我的病人，因为我甚至还没有开始对他的治疗。并且我确信，他也没有给予我充分的、毫无保留的信任。只要病人不站在疾病那一边，治愈就是一桩水到渠成的事情。

Prologue MARTIN HESSELIUS, THE GERMAN PHYSICIAN

Though carefully educated in medicine and surgery, I have never practised either. The study of each continues, never-theless, to interest me profoundly. Neither idleness nor caprice caused my secession from the honourable calling which I had just entered. The cause was a very trifling scratch inflicted by a dissecting knife. This trifle cost me the loss of two fingers, amputated promptly, and the more painful loss of my health, for I have never been quite well since, and have seldom been twelve months together in the same place.

In my wanderings I became acquainted with Dr Martin Hesselius, a wanderer like myself, like me a physician, and like me an enthusiast in his profession. Unlike me in this, that his wanderings were voluntary, and he a man, if not of fortune, as we estimate fortune in England, at least in what our forefathers used to term 'easy circumstances.' He was an old man when I first saw him; nearly five-and-thirty years my senior.

In Dr Martin Hesselius, I found my master. His know-ledge was immense, his grasp of a case was an intuition. He was the very man to inspire a young enthusiast, like me, with awe and delight. My admiration has stood the test of time and survived the separation of death. I am sure it was well-founded.

For nearly twenty years I acted as his medical secretary. His immense collection of papers he has left in my care, to be arranged, indexed and bound. His treatment of some of these cases is curious. He writes in two distinct characters. He describes what he saw and heard as an intelligent layman might, and when in this style of narrative he had seen the patient either through his own hall-door, to the light of day, or through the gates of darkness to the caverns of the dead, he returns upon the narrative, and in the terms of his art, and with all the force and originality of genius, proceeds to the work of analysis, diagnosis and illustration.

Here and there a case strikes me as of a kind to amuse or horrify a lay reader with an interest quite different from the peculiar one which it may possess for an expert. With slight modifications, chiefly of language, and of course a change of names, I copy the following. The narrator is Dr Martin Hesselius. I find it among the voluminous notes of cases which he made during a tour in England about sixty-four years ago.

It is related in a series of letters to his friend Professor Van Loo of Leyden. The professor was not a physician, but a chemist, and a man who read history and metaphysics and medicine, and had, in his day, written a play.

The narrative is therefore, if somewhat less valuable as a medical record, necessarily written in a manner more likely to interest an unlearned reader.

These letters, from a memorandum attached, appear to have been returned on the death of the professor, in 1819, to Dr Hesselius. They are written, some in English, some in French, but the greater part in German. I am a faithful, though I am conscious, by no means a graceful translator, and although here and there, I omit some passages, and shorten others and disguise names, I have interpolated nothing.

Chapter I DR HESSELIUS RELATES HOW HE MET THE REV. MR JENNINGS

The Rev. Mr Jennings is tall and thin. He is middle-aged, and dresses with a natty, old-fashioned, high-church precision. He is naturally a little stately, but not at all stiff. His features, without being handsome, are well formed, and their expression extremely kind, but also shy.

I met him one evening at Lady Mary Heyduke's. The modesty and benevolence of his countenance are extremely prepossessing.

We were but a small party, and he joined agreeably enough in the conversation. He seems to enjoy listening very much more than contributing to the talk; but what he says is always to the purpose and well said. He is a great favourite of Lady Mary's, who it seems, consults him upon many things, and thinks him the most happy and blessed person on earth. Little knows she about him.

The Rev. Mr Jennings is a bachelor, and has, they say, sixty thousand pounds in the funds. He is a charitable man. He is most anxious to be actively employed in his sacred profession, and yet though always tolerably well elsewhere, when he goes down to his vicarage in Warwickshire, to engage in the actual duties of his sacred calling his health soon fails him, and in a very strange way. So says Lady Mary.

There is no doubt that Mr Jennings' health does break down in, generally a sudden and mysterious way, sometimes in the very act of officiating in his old and pretty church at Kenlis. It may be his heart, it may be his brain. But so it has happened three or four times, or oftener, that after proceeding a certain way in the service, he has on a sudden stopped short, and after a silence, apparently quite unable to resume, he has fallen into solitary, inaudible prayer, his hands and eyes uplifted, and then pale as death, and in the agitation of a strange shame and horror, descended trembling, and got into the vestry-room, leaving his congregation, without explanation, to themselves. This occurred when his curate was absent. When he goes down to Kenlis, now, he always takes care to provide a clergyman to share his duty, and to supply his place on the instant should he become thus suddenly incapacitated.

When Mr Jennings breaks down quite, and beats a retreat from the vicarage, and returns to London, where, in a dark street off Piccadilly, he inhabits a very narrow house, Lady Mary says that he is always perfectly well. I have my own opinion about that. There are degrees of course. We shall see.

Mr Jennings is a perfectly gentleman-like man. People, however, remark something odd. There is an impression a little ambiguous. One thing which certainly contributes to it, people I think don't remember; or, perhaps, distinctly remark. But I did, almost immediately. Mr Jennings has a way of looking sidelong upon the carpet, as if his eye followed the movements of something there. Tis, of course, is not always. It occurs only now and then. But often enough to give a certain oddity, as I have said to his manner, and in this glance travelling along the floor there is something both shy and anxious.

A medical philosopher, as you are good enough to call me, elaborating theories by the aid of cases sought out by himself, and by him watched and scrutinized with more time at command, and consequently infinitely more minute-ness than the ordinary practitioner can afford, falls insensibly into habits of observation, which accompany him everywhere, and are exercised, as some people would say, impertinently, upon every subject that presents itself with the least likelihood of rewarding inquiry.

There was a promise of this kind in the slight, timid, kindly, but reserved gentleman, whom I met for the first time at this agreeable little evening gathering. I observed, of course, more than I here set down; but I reserve all that borders on the technical for a strictly scientific paper.

I may remark, that when I here speak of medical science, I do so, as I hope some day to see it more generally understood, in a much more comprehensive sense than its generally material treatment would warrant. I believe the entire natural world is but the ultimate expression of that spiritual world from which, and in which alone, it has its life. I believe that the essential man is a spirit, that the spirit is an organized substance, but as different in point of material from what we ordinarily understand by matter, as light or electricity is; that the material body is, in the most literal sense, a vesture, and death consequently no interruption of the living man's existence, but simply his extrication from the natural body - a process which commences at the moment of what we term death, and the completion of which, at furthest a few days later, is the resurrection 'in power.'

The person who weighs the consequences of these positions will probably see their practical bearing upon medical science. This is, however, by no means the proper place for displaying the proofs and discussing the consequences of this too generally unrecognized state of facts.

In pursuance of my habit, I was covertly observing Mr Jennings, with all my caution - I think he perceived it - and I saw plainly that he was as cautiously observing me. Lady Mary happening to address me by my name, as Dr Hesse-lius, I saw that he glanced at me more sharply, and then became thoughtful for a few minutes.

After this, as I conversed with a gentleman at the other end of the room, I saw him look at me more steadily, and with an interest which I thought I understood. I then saw him take an opportunity of chatting with Lady Mary, and was, as one always is, perfectly aware of being the subject of a distant inquiry and answer.

This tall clergyman approached me by-and-by: and in a little time we had got into conversation. When two people, who like reading, and know books and places, having travelled, wish to converse, it is very strange if they can't find topics. It was not accident that brought him near me, and led him into conversation. He knew German, and had read my Essays on Metaphysical Medicine which suggest more than they actually say.

This courteous man, gentle, shy, plainly a man of thought and reading, who moving and talking among us, was not altogether of us, and whom I already suspected of leading a life whose transactions and alarms were carefully concealed, with an impenetrable reserve from, not only the world, but his best beloved friends - was cautiously weighing in his own mind the idea of taking a certain step with regard to me.

I penetrated his thoughts without his being aware of it, and was careful to say nothing which could betray to his sensitive vigilance my suspicions respecting his position, or my surmises about his plans respecting myself.

We chatted upon indifferent subjects for a time; but at last he said:

'I was very much interested by some papers of yours, Dr Hesselius, upon what you term Metaphysical Medicine - I read them in German, ten or twelve years ago-have they been translated?'

'No, I'm sure they have not - I should have heard. They would have asked my leave, I think.'

'I asked the publishers here, a few months ago, to get the book for me in the original German; but they tell me it is out of print.'

'So it is, and has been for some years; but it flatters me as an author to find that you have not forgotten my little book, although,' I added, laughing, 'ten or twelve years is a considerable time to have managed without it; but I suppose you have been turning the subject over again in your mind, or something has happened lately to revive your interest in it.'

At this remark, accompanied by a glance of inquiry, a sudden embarrassment disturbed Mr Jennings, analogous to that which makes a young lady blush and look foolish. He dropped his eyes, and folded his hands together uneasily, and looked oddly, and you would have said, guiltily for a moment.

I helped him out of his awkwardness in the best way, by appearing not to observe it, and going straight on, I said: 'Those revivals of interest in a subject happen to me often; one book suggests another, and often sends me back on a wild-goose chase over an interval of twenty years. But if you still care to possess a copy, I shall be only too happy to provide you; I have still got two or three by me - and if you allow me to present one I shall be very much honoured.'

'You are very good indeed,' he said, quite at his ease again, in a moment: 'I almost despaired - I don't know how to thank you.'

'Pray don't say a word; the thing is really so little worth that I am only ashamed of having offered it, and if you thank me any more I shall throw it into the fire in a fit of modesty.'

Mr Jennings laughed. He inquired where I was staying in London, and after a little more conversation on a variety of subjects, he took his departure.

Chapter II THE DOCTOR QUESTIONS LADY MARY, AND SHE ANSWERS

'I like your vicar so much, Lady Mary,' said I, so soon as he was gone. 'He has read, travelled, and thought, and having also suffered, he ought to be an accomplished companion.'

'So he is, and, better still, he is a really good man,' said she. 'His advice is invaluable about my schools, and all my little undertakings at Dawlbridge, and he's so painstaking, he takes so much trouble - you have no idea - wherever he thinks he can be of use: he's so good-natured and so sensible.'

'It is pleasant to hear so good an account of his neighbourly virtues. I can only testify to his being an agreeable and gentle companion, and in addition to what you have told me, I think I can tell you two or three things about him,' said I.

'Really!'

'Yes, to begin with, he's unmarried.'

'Yes, that's right, - go on.'

'He has been writing, that is he was, but for two or three years perhaps, he has not gone on with his work, and the book was upon some rather abstract subject - perhaps theology.'

'Well, he was writing a book, as you say; I'm not quite sure what it was about, but only that it was nothing that I cared for, very likely you are right, and he certainly did stop - yes.'

'And although he only drank a little coffee here to-night, he likes tea, at least, did like it, extravagantly.'

'Yes, that's quite true.'

'He drank green tea, a good deal, didn't he?' I pursued.

'Well, that's very odd! Green tea was a subject on which we used almost to quarrel.'

'But he has quite given that up,' said I.

‘So he has.’

‘And, now, one more fact. His mother or his father, did you know them?’

‘Yes, both; his father is only ten years dead, and their place is near Dawlbridge. We knew them very well,’ she answered.

‘Well, either his mother or his father - I should rather think his father, saw a ghost,’ said I.

‘Well, you really are a conjurer, Dr Hesselius.’

‘Conjurer or no, haven’t I said right?’ I answered merrily.

‘You certainly have, and it was his father: he was a silent, whimsical man, and he used to bore my father about his dreams, and at last he told him a story about a ghost he had seen and talked with, and a very odd story it was. I remember it particularly, because I was so afraid of him. This story was long before he died - when I was quite a child - and his ways were so silent and moping, and he used to drop in, sometimes, in the dusk, when I was alone in the drawing-room, and I used to fancy there were ghosts about him.’

I smiled and nodded.

‘And now having established my character as a conjurer I think I must say good-night,’ said I.

‘But how*did* you find it out?’

‘By the planets of course, as the gipsies do,’ I answered, and so, gaily, we said good-night.

Next morning I sent the little book he had been inquiring after, and a note to Mr Jennings, and on returning late that evening, I found that he had called, at my lodgings, and left his card. He asked whether I was at home, and asked at what hour he would be most likely to find me.

Does he intend opening his case, and consulting me ‘professionally,’ as they say? I hope so. I have already conceived a theory about him. It is supported by Lady Mary’s answers to my parting questions. I should like much to ascertain from his own lips. But what can I do consistently with good breeding to invite a confession? Nothing. I rather think he meditates one. At all events, my dear Van L. , I shan't make myself difficult of access; I mean to return his visit to-morrow. It will be only civil in return for his politeness, to ask to see him. Perhaps something may come of it. Whether much, little, or nothing, my dear Van L. ,you shall hear.

Chapter III DR HESSELIUS PICKS UP SOMETHING IN LATIN BOOKS

Well, I have called at Blank-street.

On inquiring at the door, the servant told me that Mr Jennings was engaged very particularly with a gentleman, a clergyman from Kenlis, his parish in the country. Intend-ing to reserve my privilege and to call again, I merely intimated that I should try another time, and had turned to go, when the servant begged my pardon, and asked me, looking at me a little more attentively than well-bred persons of his order usually do, whether I was Dr Hesselius; and, on learning that I was, he said, 'Perhaps then, sir, you would allow me to mention it to Mr Jennings, for I am sure he wishes to see you.'

The servant returned in a moment, with a message from Mr Jennings, asking me to go into his study, which was in effect his back drawing-room, promising to be with me in a very few minutes.

This was really a study - almost a library. The room was lofty, with two tall slender windows, and rich dark curtains. It was much larger than I had expected, and stored with books on every side, from the floor to the ceiling. The upper carpet - for to my tread it felt that there were two or three - was a Turkey carpet. My steps fell noiselessly. The book-cases standing out, placed the windows, particularly narrow ones, in deep recesses. The effect of the room was, although extremely comfortable, and even luxurious, decidedly gloomy, and aided by the silence, almost oppres-sive. Perhaps, however, I ought to have allowed something for association. My mind had connected peculiar ideas with Mr Jennings. I stepped into this perfectly silent room, of a very silent house, with a peculiar foreboding; and its dark-ness, and solemn clothing of books, for except where two narrow looking-glasses were set in the wall, they were every-where, helped this sombre feeling.

While awaiting Mr Jennings'arrival, I amused myself by looking into some of the books with which his shelves were laden. Not among these, but immediately under them, with their backs upward, on the floor, I lighted upon a complete set of Swedenborg's Arcana Cælestia, in the original Latin, a very fine folio set, bound in the natty livery which the-ology affects, pure vellum, namely, gold letters, and carmine edges. There were paper markers in several of these volumes, I raised and placed them, one after the other, upon the table, and opening where these papers were placed, I read in the solemn Latin phraseology, a series of sentences indicated by a pencilled line at the margin. Of these I copy here a few, translating them into English.

'When man's interior sight is opened, which is that of his spirit, then there appear the things of another life, which cannot possibly be made visible to the bodily sight. '.....

'By the internal sight it has been granted me to see the things that are in the other life, more clearly than I see those that are in the world. From these considerations, it is evident that external vision exists from interior vision, and this from a vision still more interior, and so on. '.....

'There are with every man at least two evil spirits. '.....

'With wicked genii there is also a fluent speech, but harsh and grating. There is also among them a speech which is not fluent, wherein the dissent of the thoughts is perceived as something secretly creeping along within it. '.....

'The evil spirits associated with man are, indeed, from the hells, but when with man they are not then in hell, but are taken out thence. The place where they then are is in the midst between heaven and hell, and is called the world of spirits - when the evil spirits who are with man, are in that world, they are not in any infernal torment, but in every thought and affection of the man, and so, in all that the man himself enjoys. But when they are remitted into their hell, they return to their former state. '.....

'If evil spirits could perceive that they were associated with man, and yet that they were spirits separate from him, and if they could flow in into the things of his body, they would attempt by a thousand means to destroy him; for they hate man with a deadly hatred. '.....

'Knowing, therefore, that I was a man in the body, they were continually striving to destroy me, not as to the body only, but especially as to the soul; for to destroy any man or spirit is the very delight of the life of all who are in hell; but I have been continually protected by the Lord. Hence it appears how dangerous it is for man to be in a living consort with spirits, unless he be in the good of faith. '.....

'Nothing is more carefully guarded from the knowledge of associate spirits than their being thus conjoint with a man, for if they knew it they would speak to him, with the intention to destroy him. '.....

'The delight of hell is to do evil to man, and to hasten his eternal ruin.'

A long note, written with a very sharp and fine pencil, in Mr Jennings' neat hand, at the foot of the page, caught my eye. Expecting his criticism upon the text, I read a word or two, and stopped, for it was something quite different, and began with these words, Deus misereatur mei - 'May God compassionate me. 'Thus warned of its private nature, I averted my eyes, and shut the book, replacing all the volumes as I had found them, except one which interested me, and in which, as men studious and solitary in their habits will do, I grew so absorbed as to take no cognizance of the outer world, nor to remember where I was.

I was reading some pages which refer to 'representatives' and 'correspondents,' in the technical language of Sweden-borg, and had arrived at a passage, the substance of which is, that evil spirits, when seen by other eyes than those of their infernal associates, present themselves, by 'correspond-ence,' in the shape of the beast (fera) which represents their particular lust and life, in aspect direful and atrocious. This is a long passage, and particularizes a number of those bes-tial forms.

Chapter IV FOUR EYES WERE READING THE PASSAGE

I was running the head of my pencil-case along the line as I read it, and something caused me to raise my eyes.

Directly before me was one of the mirrors I have mentioned, in which I saw reflected the tall shape of my friend Mr Jennings leaning over my shoulder, and reading the page at which I was busy, and with a face so dark and wild that I should hardly have known him.

I turned and rose. He stood erect also, and with an effort laughed a little, saying:

'I came in and asked you how you did, but without succeeding in awaking you from your book; so I could not restrain my curiosity, and very impertinently, I'm afraid, peeped over your shoulder. This is not your first time of looking into those pages. You have looked into Swedenborg, no doubt, long ago?'

'Oh dear, yes! I owe Swedenborg a great deal; you will discover traces of him in the little book on Metaphysical Medicine, which you were so good as to remember.'

Although my friend affected a gaiety of manner, there was a slight flush in his face, and I could perceive that he was inwardly much perturbed.

'I'm scarcely yet qualified, I know so little of Swedenborg. I've only had them a fortnight,' he answered, 'and I think they are rather likely to make a solitary man nervous - that is, judging from the very little I have read - I don't say that they have made me so,' he laughed; 'and I'm so very much obliged for the book. I hope you got my note?'

I made all proper acknowledgments and modest disclaimers.

'I never read a book that I go with, so entirely, as that of yours,' he continued. 'I saw at once there is more in it than is quite unfolded. Do you know Dr Harley?' he asked, rather abruptly.

In passing, the editor remarks that the physician here named was one of the most eminent who had ever practised in England.

I did, having had letters to him, and had experienced from him great courtesy and considerable assistance during my visit to England.

'I think that man one of the very greatest fools I ever met in my life,' said Mr Jennings.

This was the first time I had ever heard him say a sharp thing of anybody, and such a term applied to so high a name a little startled me.

'Really! and in what way?' I asked.

'In his profession,' he answered.

I smiled.

'I mean this,' he said: 'he seems to me, one half, blind - I mean one half of all he looks at is dark - preternaturally bright and vivid all the rest; and the worst of it is, it seems wilful. I can't get him - I mean he won't - I've had some experience of him as a physician, but I look on him as, in that sense, no better than a paralytic mind, an intellect half dead, I'll tell you - I know I shall some time - all about it,' he said, with a little agitation. 'You stay some months longer in England. If I should be out of town during your stay for a little time, would you allow me to trouble you with a letter?'

'I should be only too happy,' I assured him.

'Very good of you. I am so utterly dissatisfied with Harley.'

'A little leaning to the materialistic school,' I said.

'Amere materialist,' he corrected me; 'you can't think how that sort of thing worries one who knows better. You won't tell any one - any of my friends you know - that I am hip-pish; now, for instance, no one knows - not even Lady Mary - that I have seen Dr Harley, or any other doctor. So pray don't mention it; and, if I should have any threatening of an attack, you'll kindly let me write, or, should I be in town, have a little talk with you.'

I was full of conjecture, and unconsciously I found I had fixed my eyes gravely on him, for he lowered his for a moment, and he said:

'I see you think I might as well tell you now, or else you are forming a conjecture; but you may as well give it up. If you were guessing all the rest of your life, you will never hit on it.'

He shook his head smiling, and over that wintry sunshine a black cloud suddenly came down, and he drew his breath in, through his teeth as men do in pain.

'Sorry, of course, to learn that you apprehend occasion to consult any of us; but, command me when and how you like, and I need not assure you that your confidence is sacred.'

He then talked of quite other things, and in a comparatively cheerful way and after a little time, I took my leave.

Chapter V DOCTOR HESSELIUS IS SUMMONED TO RICHMOND

We parted cheerfully, but he was not cheerful, nor was I. There are certain expressions of that powerful organ of spirit - the human face - which, although I have seen them often, and possess a doctor's nerve, yet disturb me profoundly. One look of Mr Jennings haunted me. It had seized my imagination with so dismal a power that I changed my plans for the evening, and went to the opera, feeling that I wanted a change of ideas.

I heard nothing of or from him for two or three days, when a note in his hand reached me. It was cheerful, and full of hope. He said that he had been for some little time so much better - quite well, in fact - that he was going to make a little experiment, and run down for a month or so to his parish, to try whether a little work might not quite set him up. There was in it a fervent religious expression of gratitude for his restoration, as he now almost hoped he might call it.

A day or two later I saw Lady Mary, who repeated what his note had announced, and told me that he was actually in Warwickshire, having resumed his clerical duties at Ken-lis; and she added, 'I begin to think that he is really perfectly well, and that there never was anything the matter, more than nerves and fancy; we are all nervous, but I fancy there is nothing like a little hard work for that kind of weakness, and he has made up his mind to try it. I should not be surprised if he did not come back for a year.'

Notwithstanding all this confidence, only two days later I had this note, dated from his house off Piccadilly:

Dear Sir.- I have returned disappointed. If I should feel at all able to see you, I shall write to ask you kindly to call. At present I am too low, and, in fact, simply unable to say all I wish to say. Pray don't mention my name to my friends. I can see no one. By-and-by, please God, you shall hear from me. I mean to take a run into Shropshire, where some of my people are. God bless you! May we, on my return, meet more happily than I can now write.

About a week after this I saw Lady Mary at her own house, the last person, she said, left in town, and just on the wing for Brighton, for the London season was quite over. She told me that she had heard from Mr Jennings' niece, Martha, in Shropshire. There was nothing to be gathered from her letter, more than that he was low and nervous. In those words, of which healthy people think so lightly, what a world of suffering is sometimes hidden!

Nearly five weeks passed without any further news of Mr Jennings. At the end of that time I received a note from him. He wrote:

I have been in the country, and have had change of air, change of scene, change of faces, change of everything and in everything - but myself. I have made up my mind, so far as the most irresolute creature on earth can do it, to tell my case fully to you. If your engagements will permit, pray come to me to-day, to-morrow, or the next day; but, pray defer as little as possible. You know not how much I need help. I have a quiet house at Richmond, where I now am. Perhaps you can manage to come to dinner, or to luncheon, or even to tea. You shall have no trouble in finding me out. The servant at Blank street, who takes this note, will have a carriage at your door at any hour you please; and I am always to be found. You will say that I ought not to be alone. I have tried everything. Come and see.

I called up the servant, and decided on going out the same evening, which accordingly I did.

He would have been much better in a lodging-house, or hotel, I thought, as I drove up through a short double row of sombre elms to a very old-fashioned brick house, darkened by the foliage of these trees, which over-topped, and nearly surrounded it. It was a perverse choice, for nothing could be imagined more triste and silent. The house, I found, belonged to him. He had stayed for a day or two in town, and, finding it for some cause insupportable, had come out here, probably because being furnished and his own, he was relieved of the thought and delay of selection, by coming here.

The sun had already set, and the red reflected light of the western sky illuminated the scene with the peculiar effect with which we are all familiar. The hall seemed very dark, but, getting to the back drawing-room, whose windows command the west, I was again in the same dusky light.

I sat down, looking out upon the richly-wooded landscape that glowed in the grand and melancholy light which was every moment fading. The corners of the room were already dark; all was growing dim, and the gloom was insensibly toning my mind, already prepared for what was sinister. I was waiting alone for his arrival, which soon took place. The door communicating with the front room opened, and the tall figure of Mr Jennings, faintly seen in the ruddy twilight, came, with quiet stealthy steps, into the room.

We shook hands, and, taking a chair to the window, where there was still light enough to enable us to see each other's faces, he sat down beside me, and, placing his hand upon my arm, with scarcely a word of preface began his narrative.

Chapter VI HOW MR JENNINGS MET HIS COMPANION

The faint glow of the west, the pomp of the then lonely woods of Richmond, were before us, behind and about us the darkening room, and on the stony face of the sufferer - for the character of his face, though still gentle and sweet, was changed - rested that dim, odd glow which seems to descend and produce, where it touches, lights, sudden though faint, which are lost, almost without gradation, in darkness. The silence, too, was utter; not a distant wheel, or bark, or whistle from without; and within the depressing stillness of an invalid bachelor's house.

I guessed well the nature, though not even vaguely the particulars of the revelations I was about to receive, from that fixed face of suffering that so oddly flushed stood out, like a portrait of Schalken's, before its background of darkness.

'It began,' he said, 'on the 15th of October, three years and eleven weeks ago, and two days - I keep very accurate count, for every day is torment. If I leave anywhere a chasm in my narrative tell me.

'About four years ago I began a work, which had cost me very much thought and reading. It was upon the religious metaphysics of the ancients.'

'I know,' said I; 'the actual religion of educated and think-ing paganism, quite apart from symbolic worship?A wide and very interesting field.'

'Yes; but not good for the mind - the Christian mind, I mean. Paganism is all bound together in essential unity, and, with evil sympathy, their religion involves their art, and both their manners, and the subject is a degrading fas-cination and the nemesis sure. God forgive me!

'I wrote a great deal; I wrote late at night. I was always thinking on the subject, walking about, wherever I was, everywhere. It thoroughly infected me. You are to remember that all the material ideas connected with it were more or less of the beautiful, the subject itself delightfully interest-ing, and I, then, without a care.'

He sighed heavily.

'I believe that every one who sets about writing in earnest does his work, as a friend of mine phrased it, on something - tea, or coffee, or tobacco. I suppose there is a material waste that must be hourly supplied in such occupations, or that we should grow too abstracted, and the mind, as it were, pass out of the body, unless it were reminded often of the connection by actual sensation. At all events, I felt the want, and I supplied it. Tea was my companion - at first the ordin-ary black tea, made in the usual way, not too strong: but I drank a good deal, and increased its strength as I went on. I never experienced an uncomfortable symptom from it. I began to take a little green tea. I found the effect pleasanter, it cleared and intensified the power of thought so. I had come to take it frequently, but not stronger than one might take it for pleasure. I wrote a great deal out here, it was so quiet, and in this room. I used to sit up very late, and it became a habit with me to sip my tea - green tea - every now and then as my work proceeded. I had a little kettle on my table, that swung over a lamp, and made tea two or three times between eleven o'clock and two or three in the morning, my hours of going to bed. I used to go into town every day. I was not a monk, and, although I spent an hour or two in a library, hunting up authorities and looking out lights upon my theme, I was in no morbid state as far as I can judge. I met my friends pretty much as usual, and enjoyed their society, and, on the whole, existence had never been, I think, so pleasant before.

'I had met with a man who had some odd old books, Ger-man editions in mediæval Latin, and I was only too happy to be permitted access to them. This obliging person's books were in the City, a very out-of-the-way part of it. I had rather out-stayed my intended hour, and, on coming out, seeing no cab near, I was tempted to get into the omnibus which used to drive past this house. It was darker than this by the time the bus had reached an old house, you may have remarked, with four poplars at each side of the door, and there the last passenger but myself got out. We drove along rather faster. It was twilight now. I leaned back in my corner next the door ruminating pleasantly.

‘The interior of the omnibus was nearly dark. I had observed in the corner opposite to me at the other side, and at the end next the horses, two small circular reflections, as it seemed to me of a reddish light. They were about two inches apart, and about the size of those small brass buttons that yachting men used to put upon their jackets. I began to speculate, as listless men will, upon this trifle, as it seemed. From what centre did that faint but deep red light come, and from what - glass beads, buttons, toy decorations - was it reflected? We were lumbering along gently, having nearly a mile still to go. I had not solved the puzzle, and it became in another minute more odd, for these two luminous points, with a sudden jerk, descended nearer the floor, keeping still their relative distance and horizontal position, and then, as suddenly, they rose to the level of the seat on which I was sitting, and I saw them no more.

‘My curiosity was now really excited, and, before I had time to think, I saw again these two dull lamps, again together near the floor; again they disappeared, and again in their old corner I saw them.

‘So, keeping my eyes upon them, I edged quietly up my own side, towards the end at which I still saw these tiny discs of red.

‘There was very little light in the bus. It was nearly dark. I leaned forward to aid my endeavour to discover what these little circles really were. They shifted their position a little as I did so. I began now to perceive an outline of something black, and I soon saw with tolerable distinctness the outline of a small black monkey, pushing its face forward in mim-icry to meet mine; those were its eyes, and I now dimly saw its teeth grinning at me.

‘I drew back, not knowing whether it might not meditate a spring. I fancied that one of the passengers had forgot this ugly pet, and wishing to ascertain something of its temper, though not caring to trust my fingers to it, I poked my umbrella softly towards it. It remained immovable - up to it - through it! For through it, and back and forward, it passed, without the slightest resistance.

‘I can't, in the least, convey to you the kind of horror that I felt. When I had ascertained that the thing was an illusion, as I then supposed, there came a misgiving about myself and a terror that fascinated me in impotence to remove my gaze from the eyes of the brute for some moments. As I looked, it made a little skip back, quite into the corner, and I, in a panic, found myself at the door, having put my head out, drawing deep breaths of the outer air, and staring at the lights and trees we were passing, too glad to reassure myself of reality.

'I stopped the 'bus and got out. I perceived the man look oddly at me as I paid him. I daresay there was something unusual in my looks and manner, for I had never felt so strangely before.'

Chapter VII THE JOURNEY: FIRST STAGE

‘When the omnibus drove on, and I was alone upon the road, I looked carefully round to ascertain whether the monkey had followed me. To my indescribable relief I saw it nowhere. I can't describe easily what a shock I had received, and my sense of genuine gratitude on finding myself, as I supposed, quite rid of it.

‘I had got out a little before we reached this house, two or three hundred steps. A brick wall runs along the foot-path, and inside the wall is a hedge of yew or some dark evergreen of that kind, and within that again the row of fine trees which you may have remarked as you came.

‘This brick wall is about as high as my shoulder, and happening to raise my eyes I saw the monkey, with that stooping gait, on all fours, walking or creeping, close beside me on top of the wall. I stopped, looking at it with a feeling of loathing and horror. As I stopped so did it. It sat up on the wall with its long hands on its knees looking at me. There was not light enough to see it much more than in outline, nor was it dark enough to bring the peculiar light of its eyes into strong relief. I still saw, however, that red foggy light plainly enough. It did not show its teeth, nor exhibit any sign of irritation, but seemed jaded and sulky, and was observing me steadily.

‘I drew back into the middle of the road. It was an uncon-scious recoil, and there I stood, still looking at it, it did not move.

‘With an instinctive determination to try something - anything, I turned about and walked briskly towards town with a skance look, all the time, watching the movements of the beast. It crept swiftly along the wall, at exactly my pace.

‘Where the wall ends, near the turn of the road, it came down and with a wiry spring or two brought itself close to my feet, and continued to keep up with me, as I quickened my pace. It was at my left side, so close to my leg that I felt every moment as if I should tread upon it.

"The road was quite deserted and silent, and it was darker every moment. I stopped dismayed and bewildered, turning as I did so, the other way - I mean, towards this house, away from which I had been walking. When I stood still, the monkey drew back to a distance of, I suppose, about five or six yards, and remained stationary, watching me.

"I had been more agitated than I have said. I had read, of course, as every one has, something about "spectral illusions," as you physicians term the phenomena of such cases. I considered my situation, and looked my misfortune in the face.

"These affections, I had read, are sometimes transitory and sometimes obstinate. I had read of cases in which the appearance, at first harmless, had, step by step, degenerated into something direful and insupportable, and ended by wearing its victim out. Still as I stood there, but for my bestial companion, quite alone, I tried to comfort myself by repeating again and again the assurance, "the thing is purely disease, a well-known physical affection, as distinctly as small-pox or neuralgia. Doctors are all agreed on that, philosophy demonstrates it. I must not be a fool. I've been sitting up too late, and I daresay my digestion is quite wrong, and with God's help, I shall be all right, and this is but a symptom of nervous dyspepsia." Did I believe all this? Not one word of it, no more than any other miserable being ever did who is once seized and riveted in this satanic captivity. Against my convictions, I might say my knowledge, I was simply bullying myself into a false courage.

"I now walked homeward. I had only a few hundred yards to go. I had forced myself into a sort of resignation, but I had not got over the sickening shock and the flurry of the first certainty of my misfortune.

"I made up my mind to pass the night at home. The brute moved close beside me, and I fancied there was the sort of anxious drawing toward the house, which one sees in tired horses or dogs, sometimes as they come toward home.

"I was afraid to go into town, I was afraid of any one's seeing and recognizing me. I was conscious of an irrepressible agitation in my manner. Also, I was afraid of any violent change in my habits, such as going to a place of amusement, or walking from home in order to fatigue myself. At the hall door it waited till I mounted the steps, and when the door was opened entered with me.

'I drank no tea that night. I got cigars and some brandy-and-water. My idea was that I should act upon my material system, and by living for a while in sensation apart from thought, send myself forcibly, as it it were, into a new groove. I came up here to this drawing-room. I sat just here. The monkey then got upon a small table that then stood there. It looked dazed and languid. An irrepressible uneasiness as to its movements kept my eyes always upon it. Its eyes were half closed, but I could see them glow. It was looking steadily at me. In all situations, at all hours, it is awake and looking at me. That never changes.

'I shall not continue in detail my narrative of this particular night. I shall describe, rather, the phenomena of the first year, which never varied, essentially. I shall describe the monkey as it appeared in daylight. In the dark, as you shall presently hear, there are peculiarities. It is a small monkey, perfectly black. It had only one peculiarity - a character of malignity - unfathomable malignity. During the first year it looked sullen and sick. But this character of intense malice and vigilance was always underlying that surly languor. During all that time it acted as if on a plan of giving me as little trouble as was consistent with watching me. Its eyes were never off me. I have never lost sight of it, except in my sleep, light or dark, day or night, since it came here, excepting when it withdraws for some weeks at a time, unaccountably.

'In total dark it is visible as in daylight. I do not mean merely its eyes. It is all visible distinctly in a halo that resembles a glow of red embers, and which accompanies it in all its movements.

'When it leaves me for a time, it is always at night, in the dark, and in the same way. It grows at first uneasy, and then furious, and then advances towards me, grinning and shaking its paws clenched, and, at the same time, there comes the appearance of fire in the grate. I never have any fire. I can't sleep in the room where there is any, and it draws nearer and nearer to the chimney, quivering, it seems, with rage, and when its fury rises to the highest pitch, it springs into the grate, and up the chimney, and I see it no more.

'When first this happened I thought I was released. I was a new man. A day passed - a night - and no return, and a blessed week - a week - another week. I was always on my knees, Dr Hesselius, always, thanking God and praying. A whole month passed of liberty, but on a sudden, it was with me again.'

Chapter VIII THE SECOND STAGE

'It was with me, and the malice which before was torpid under a sullen exterior, was now active. It was perfectly unchanged in every other respect. This new energy was apparent in its activity and its looks, and soon in other ways.

'For a time, you will understand, the change was shown only in an increased vivacity, and an air of menace, as if it was always brooding over some atrocious plan. Its eyes, as before, were never off me.'

'Is it here now?' I asked.

'No,' he replied, 'it has been absent exactly a fortnight and a day - fifteen days. It has sometimes been away so long as nearly two months, once for three. Its absence always exceeds a fortnight, although it may be but by a single day. Fifteen days having past since I saw it last, it may return now at any moment.'

'Is its return,' I asked, 'accompanied by any peculiar manifestation?'

'Nothing - no,' he said. 'It is simply with me again. On lifting my eyes from a book, or turning my head, I see it, as usual, looking at me, and then it remains, as before, for its appointed time. I have never told so much and so minutely before to any one.'

I perceived that he was agitated, and looking like death, and he repeatedly applied his handkerchief to his forehead; I suggested that he might be tired, and told him that I would call, with pleasure, in the morning, but he said:

'No, if you don't mind hearing it all now. I have got so far, and I should prefer making one effort of it. When I spoke to Dr Harley, I had nothing like so much to tell. You are a philosophic physician. You give spirit its proper rank. If this thing is real -'

He paused, looking at me with agitated inquiry.

'We can discuss it by-and-by, and very fully. I will give you all I think,' I answered, after an interval.

'Well - very well. If it is anything real, I say, it is prevail-ing, little by little, and drawing me more interiorly into hell. Optic nerves, he talked of. Ah! well - there are other nerves of communication. May God Almighty help me! You shall hear.

'Its power of action, I tell you, had increased. Its malice became, in a way aggressive. About two years ago, some questions that were pending between me and the bishop having been settled, I went down to my parish in Warwick-shire, anxious to find occupation in my profession. I was not prepared for what happened, although I have since thought I might have apprehended something like it. The reason of my saying so, is this -'

He was beginning to speak with a great deal more effort and reluctance, and sighed often, and seemed at times nearly overcome. But at this time his manner was not agitated. It was more like that of a sinking patient, who has given him-self up.

'Yes, but I will first tell you about Kenlis, my parish.

'It was with me when I left this place for Dawlbridge. It was my silent travelling companion, and it remained with me at the vicarage. When I entered on the discharge of my duties, another change took place. The thing exhibited an atrocious determination to thwart me. It was with me in the church - in the reading-desk - in the pulpit - within the communion rails. At last, it reached this extremity, that while I was reading to the congregation, it would spring upon the open book and squat there, so that I was unable to see the page. This happened more than once.

'I left Dawlbridge for a time. I placed myself in Dr Har-ley's hands. I did everything he told me. He gave my case a great deal of thought. It interested him, I think. He seemed successful. For nearly three months I was perfectly free from a return. I began to think I was safe. With his full assent I returned to Dawlbridge.

'I travelled in a chaise. I was in good spirits. I was more - I was happy and grateful. I was returning, as I thought delivered from a dreadful hallucination, to the scene of duties which I longed to enter upon. It was a beautiful sunny evening, everything looked serene and cheerful, and I was delighted. I remember looking out of the window to see the spire of my church at Kenlis among the trees, at the point where one has the earliest view of it. It is exactly where the little stream that bounds the parish passes under the road by a culvert, and where it emerges at the road-side, a stone with an old inscription is placed. As we passed this point, I drew my head in and sat down, and in the corner of the chaise was the monkey.

‘For a moment I felt faint, and then quite wild with des-pair and horror. I called to the driver, and got out, and sat down at the road-side, and prayed to God silently for mercy. A despairing resignation supervened. My companion was with me as I re-entered the vicarage. The same persecution followed. After a short struggle I submitted, and soon I left the place.

‘I told you,’ he said, ‘that the beast has before this become in certain ways aggressive. I will explain a little. It seemed to be actuated by intense and increasing fury, whenever I said my prayers, or even meditated prayer. It amounted at last to a dreadful interruption. You will ask, how could a silent immaterial phantom effect that? It was thus, whenever I meditated praying; it was always before me, and nearer and nearer.

‘It used to spring on a table, on the back of a chair, on the chimney-piece, and slowly to swing itself from side to side, looking at me all the time. There is in its motion an indefin-able power to dissipate thought, and to contract one's attention to that monotony, till the ideas shrink, as it were, to a point, and at last to nothing - and unless I had started up, and shook off the catalepsy I have felt as if my mind were on the point of losing itself. There are other ways,’ he sighed heavily; ‘thus, for instance, while I pray with my eyes closed, it comes closer and closer, and I see it. I know it is not to be accounted for physically, but I do actually see it, though my lids are closed, and so it rocks my mind, as it were, and overpowers me, and I am obliged to rise from my knees. If you had ever yourself known this, you would be acquainted with desperation.’

Chapter IX THE THIRD STAGE

'I see, Dr Hesselius, that you don't lose one word of my statement. I need not ask you to listen specially to what I am now going to tell you. They talk of the optic nerves, and of spectral illusions, as if the organ of sight was the only point assailable by the influences that have fastened upon me - I know better. For two years in my direful case that limitation prevailed. But as food is taken in softly at the lips, and then brought under the teeth, as the tip of the little finger caught in a mill crank will draw in the hand, and the arm, and the whole body, so the miserable mortal who has been once caught firmly by the end of the finest fibre of his nerve, is drawn in and in, by the enormous machinery of hell, until he is as I am. Yes, Doctor, as I am, for while I talk to you, and implore relief, I feel that my prayer is for the impossible, and my pleading with the inexorable.'

I endeavoured to calm his visibly increasing agitation, and told him that he must not despair.

While we talked the night had overtaken us. The filmy moonlight was wide over the scene which the window commanded, and I said:

'Perhaps you would prefer having candles. This light, you know, is odd. I should wish you, as much as possible, under your usual conditions while I make my diagnosis, shall I call it - otherwise I don't care.'

'All lights are the same to me,' he said: 'except when I read or write, I care not if night were perpetual. I am going to tell you what happened about a year ago. The thing began to speak to me.'

'Speak! How do you mean - speak as a man does, do you mean?'

'Yes; speak in words and consecutive sentences, with perfect coherence and articulation; but there is a peculiarity. It is not like the tone of a human voice. It is not by my ears it reaches me - it comes like a singing through my head.'

'This faculty, the power of speaking to me, will be my undoing. It won't let me pray, it interrupts me with dreadful blasphemies. I dare not go on, I could not. Oh! Doctor, can the skill, and thought, and prayers of man avail me nothing!'

'You must promise me, my dear sir, not to trouble yourself with unnecessarily exciting thoughts; confine yourself strictly to the narrative of facts; and recollect, above all, that even if the thing that infests you be all you seem to suppose, a reality with an actual independent life and will, yet it can have no power to hurt you, unless it be given from above: its access to your senses depends mainly upon your physical condition - this is, under God, your comfort and reliance: we are all alike environed. It is only that in your case, the "paries," the veil of the flesh, the screen, is a little out of repair, and sights and sounds are transmitted. We must enter on a new course, sir - be encouraged. I'll give to-night to the careful consideration of the whole case.'

'You are very good, sir; you think it worth trying, you don't give me quite up; but, sir, you don't know, it is gaining such an influence over me: it orders me about, it is such a tyrant, and I'm growing so helpless. May God deliver me!'

'It orders you about - of course you mean by speech?'

'Yes, yes; it is always urging me to crimes, to injure others, or myself. You see, Doctor, the situation is urgent, it is indeed. When I was in Shropshire, a few weeks ago' (Mr Jennings was speaking rapidly and trembling now, holding my arm with one hand, and looking in my face), 'I went out one day with a party of friends for a walk: my persecutor, I tell you, was with me at the time. I lagged behind the rest: the country near the Dee, you know, is beautiful. Our path happened to lie near a coal mine, and at the verge of the wood is a perpendicular shaft, they say, a hundred and fifty feet deep. My niece had remained behind with me - she knows, of course, nothing of the nature of my sufferings. She knew, however, that I had been ill, and was low, and she remained to prevent my being quite alone. As we loitered slowly on together the brute that accompanied me was urging me to throw myself down the shaft. I tell you now - oh, sir, think of it! - the one consideration that saved me from that hideous death was the fear lest the shock of witnessing the occurrence should be too much for the poor girl. I asked her to go on and take her walk with her friends, saying that I could go no further. She made excuses, and the more I urged her the firmer she became. She looked doubtful and frightened. I suppose there was something in my looks or manner that alarmed her; but she would not go, and that literally saved me. You had no idea, sir, that a living man could be made so abject a slave of Satan,' he said, with a ghastly groan and a shudder.

Tere was a pause here, and I said, 'You were preserved nevertheless. It was the act of God. You are in his hands and in the power of no other being: be therefore confident for the future.'

Chapter X HOME

I made him have candles lighted, and saw the room looking cheery and inhabited before I left him. I told him that he must regard his illness strictly as one dependent on physical, though subtle physical, causes. I told him that he had evidence of God's care and love in the deliverance which he had just described, and that I had perceived with pain that he seemed to regard its peculiar features as indicating that he had been delivered over to spiritual reprobation. Than such a conclusion nothing could be, I insisted, less warranted; and not only so, but more contrary to facts, as disclosed in his mysterious deliverance from that murderous influence during his Shropshire excursion. First, his niece had been retained by his side without his intending to keep her near him; and, secondly, there had been infused into his mind an irresistible repugnance to execute the dreadful suggestion in her presence.

As I reasoned this point with him, Mr Jennings wept. He seemed comforted. One promise I exacted, which was that should the monkey at any time return, I should be sent for immediately; and, repeating my assurance that I would give neither time nor thought to any other subject until I had thoroughly investigated his case, and that to-morrow he should hear the result, I took my leave.

Before getting into the carriage I told the servant that his master was far from well, and that he should make a point of frequently looking into his room.

My own arrangements I made with a view to being quite secure from interruption.

I merely called at my lodgings, and with a travelling-desk and carpet-bag, set off in a hackney-carriage for an inn about two miles out of town, called The Horns, a very quiet and comfortable house, with good thick walls. And there I resolved, without the possibility of intrusion or distraction, to devote some hours of the night, in my comfortable sitting-room, to Mr Jennings' case, and so much of the morning as it might require.

(There occurs here a careful note of Dr Hesselius' opinion upon the case and of the habits, dietary, and medicines which he prescribed. It is curious - some persons would say mystical. But on the whole I doubt whether it would sufficiently interest a reader of the kind I am likely to meet with, to warrant its being here reprinted. The whole letter was plainly written at the inn where he had hid himself for the occasion. The next letter is dated from his town lodgings.)

I left town for the inn where I slept last night at half-past nine, and did not arrive at my room in town until one o'clock this afternoon. I found a letter in Mr Jennings' hand upon my table. It had not come by post, and, on inquiry, I learned that Mr Jennings' servant had brought it, and on learning that I was not to return until to-day, and that no one could tell him my address, he seemed very uncomfortable, and said that his orders from his master were that he was not to return without an answer.

I opened the letter, and read:

'Dear Dr Hesselius. It is here. You had not been an hour gone when it returned. It is speaking. It knows all that has happened. It knows everything - it knows you, and is frantic and atrocious. It reviles. I send you this. It knows every word I have written - I write. This I promised, and I therefore write, but I fear very confused, very incoherently. I am so interrupted, disturbed.

'Ever yours, sincerely yours,

'ROBERT LYNDER JENNINGS.'

'When did this come?' I asked.

'About eleven last night: the man was here again, and has been here three times to-day. The last time is about an hour since.'

Thus answered, and with the notes I had made upon his case in my pocket, I was in a few minutes driving towards Richmond, to see Mr Jennings.

I by no means, as you perceive, despaired of Mr Jennings' case. He had himself remembered and applied, though quite in a mistaken way, the principle which I lay down in my Metaphysical Medicine, and which governs all such cases. I was about to apply it in earnest. I was profoundly interested, and very anxious to see and examine him while the 'enemy' was actually present.

I drove up to the sombre house, and ran up the steps, and knocked. The door, in a little time, was opened by a tall woman in black silk. She looked ill, and as if she had been crying. She curtsied, and heard my question, but she did not answer. She turned her face away, extending her hand towards two men who were coming down-stairs; and thus having, as it were, tacitly made me over to them, she passed through a side-door hastily and shut it.

The man who was nearest the hall, I at once accosted, but being now close to him, I was shocked to see that both his hands were covered with blood.

I drew back a little, and the man passing down-stairs merely said in a low tone, 'Here's the servant, sir.'

The servant had stopped on the stairs, confounded and dumb at seeing me. He was rubbing his hands in a hand-kerchief, and it was steeped in blood.

'Jones, what is it, what has happened?' I asked, while a sickening suspicion overpowered me.

The man asked me to come up to the lobby. I was beside him in a moment, and frowning and pallid, with contracted eyes, he told me the horror which I already half guessed.

His master had made away with himself.

I went upstairs with him to the room - what I saw there I won't tell you. He had cut his throat with his razor. It was a frightful gash. The two men had laid him on the bed and composed his limbs. It had happened, as the immense pool of blood on the floor declared, at some distance between the bed and the window. There was carpet round his bed, and a carpet under his dressing-table, but none on the rest of the floor, for the man said he did not like a carpet on his bedroom. In this sombre, and now terrible room, one of the great elms that darkened the house was slowly moving the shadow of one of its great boughs upon this dreadful floor.

I beckoned to the servant and we went down-stairs together. I turned off the hall into an old-fashioned panelled room, and there standing, I heard all the servant had to tell. It was not a great deal.

'I concluded, sir, from your words, and looks, sir, as you left last night, that you thought my master seriously ill. I thought it might be that you were afraid of a ft, or some-thing. So I attended very close to your directions. He sat up late, till past three o'clock. He was not writing or reading. He was talking a great deal to himself, but that was nothing unusual. At about that hour I assisted him to undress, and left him in his slippers and dressing-gown. I went back softly in about half an hour. He was in his bed, quite undressed, and a pair of candles lighted on the table beside his bed. He was leaning on his elbow and looking out at the other side of the bed when I came in. I asked him if he wanted any-thing, and he said no.

"I don't know whether it was what you said to me, sir, or something a little unusual about him, but I was uneasy, uncommon uneasy about him last night.

"In another half hour, or it might be a little more, I went up again. I did not hear him talking as before. I opened the door a little. The candles were both out, which was not usual. I had a bedroom candle, and I let the light in, a little bit, looking softly round. I saw him sitting in that chair beside the dressing-table with his clothes on again. He turned round and looked at me. I thought it strange he should get up and dress, and put out the candles to sit in the dark, that way. But I only asked him again if I could do anything for him. He said, no, rather sharp, I thought. I asked if I might light the candles, and he said, "Do as you like, Jones." So I lighted them, and I lingered about the room, and he said, "Tell me truth, Jones, why did you come again - you did not hear any one cursing?" "No, sir," I said, wondering what he could mean.

"No," said he, after me, "of course, no;" and I said to him, "Wouldn't it be well, sir, you went to bed? It's just five o'clock," and he said nothing but, "Very likely; good-night, Jones." So I went, sir, but in less than an hour I came again. The door was fast, and he heard me, and called as I thought from the bed to know what I wanted, and he desired me not to disturb him again. I lay down and slept for a little. It must have been between six and seven when I went up again. The door was still fast, and he made no answer, so I did not like to disturb him, and thinking he was asleep, I left him till nine. It was his custom to ring when he wished me to come, and I had no particular hour for calling him. I tapped very gently, and getting no answer, I stayed away a good while, supposing he was getting some rest then. It was not till eleven o'clock I grew really uncomfortable about him - for at the latest he was never, that I could remember, later than half-past ten. I got no answer. I knocked and called, and still no answer. So not being able to force the door, I called Thomas from the stables, and together we forced it, and found him in the shocking way you saw.'

Jones had no more to tell. Poor Mr Jennings was very gentle, and very kind. All his people were fond of him. I could see that the servant was very much moved.

So, dejected and agitated, I passed from that terrible house, and its dark canopy of elms, and I hope I shall never see it more. While I write to you I feel like a man who has but half waked from a frightful and monotonous dream. My memory rejects the picture with incredulity and horror. Yet I know it is true. It is the story of the process of a poison, a poison which excites the reciprocal action of spirit and nerve, and paralyses the tissue that separates those cognate functions of the senses, the external and the interior. Thus we find strange bed-fellows, and the mortal and immortal prematurely make acquaintance.

Conclusion A WORD FOR THOSE WHO SUFFER

My dear Van L., you have suffered from an affection similar to that which I have just described. You twice complained of a return of it.

Who, under God, cured you? Your humble servant, Martin Hesselius. Let me rather adopt the more emphasized piety of a certain good old French surgeon of three hundred years ago: 'I treated, and God cured you.'

Come, my friend, you are not to be hippish. Let me tell you a fact.

I have met with, and treated, as my book shows, fifty-seven cases of this kind of vision, which I term indifferently 'sublimated,' 'precocious,' and 'interior.'

There is another class of affections which are truly termed - though commonly confounded with those which I describe - spectral illusions. These latter I look upon as being no less simply curable than a cold in the head or a trifling dyspepsia.

It is those which rank in the first category that test our promptitude of thought. Fifty-seven such cases have I encountered, neither more nor less. And in how many of these have I failed? In no one single instance.

There is no one affliction of mortality more easily and certainly reducible, with a little patience, and a rational confidence in the physician. With these simple conditions, I look upon the cure as absolutely certain.

You are to remember that I had not even commenced to treat Mr Jennings' case. I have not any doubt that I should have cured him perfectly in eighteen months, or possibly it might have extended to two years. Some cases are very rapidly curable, others extremely tedious. Every intelligent physician who will give thought and diligence to the task, will effect a cure.

You know my tract on The Cardinal Functions of the Brain. I there, by the evidence of innumerable facts, prove, as I think, the high probability of a circulation arterial and venous in its mechanism, through the nerves. Of this system, thus considered, the brain is the heart. The fluid, which is propagated hence through one class of nerves, returns in an altered state through another, and the nature of that fluid is spiritual, though not immaterial, any more than, as I before remarked, light or electricity are so.

By various abuses, among which the habitual use of such agents as green tea is one, this fluid may be affected as to its quality, but it is more frequently disturbed as to equilibrium. This fluid being that which we have in common with spirits, a congestion found upon the masses of brain or nerve, connected with the interior sense, forms a surface unduly exposed, on which disembodied spirits may operate: communication is thus more or less effectually established. Between this brain circulation and the heart circulation there is an intimate sympathy. The seat, or rather the instrument of exterior vision, is the eye. The seat of interior vision is the nervous tissue and brain, immediately about and above the eyebrow. You remember how effectually I dissipated your pictures by the simple application of iced eau-de-cologne. Few cases, however, can be treated exactly alike with anything like rapid success. Cold acts powerfully as a repellent of the nervous fluid. Long enough continued it will even produce that permanent insensibility which we call numbness, and a little longer, muscular as well as sensational paralysis.

I have not, I repeat, the slightest doubt that I should have first dimmed and ultimately sealed that inner eye which Mr Jennings had inadvertently opened. The same senses are opened in delirium tremens, and entirely shut up again when the over-action of the cerebral heart, and the prodigious nervous congestions that attend it, are terminated by a decided change in the state of the body. It is by acting steadily upon the body, by a simple process, that this result is produced - and inevitably produced - I have never yet failed.

Poor Mr Jennings made away with himself. But that catastrophe was the result of a totally different malady, which, as it were, projected itself upon that disease which was established. His case was in the distinctive manner a complication, and the complaint under which he really succumbed, was hereditary suicidal mania. Poor Mr Jennings I cannot call a patient of mine, for I had not even begun to treat his case, and he had not yet given me, I am convinced, his full and unreserved confidence. If the patient do not array himself on the side of the disease, his cure is certain.

迪德里克·尼克博克曾经是纽约的一位老绅士，对该州的荷兰殖民历史及其原住民后裔的风俗掌故很有研究兴趣。但是他做研究不靠书本，书本上也没有多少他感兴趣的东西，倒是发现坊间百姓，特别是那些老太太，知道很多民间逸事，这对真实的历史无疑是无价之宝，所以他就走街串巷，民间采风。每当他在亭亭如盖的梧桐下碰上一家地道的荷兰人，住着矮顶农舍，过着怡然自得、与世隔绝的日子，就喜出望外，仿佛得到一部印着哥特文字的珍稀卷帙，如饥似渴地研究起来。

他研究的是荷兰总督执政该州的那段历史，几年以后，书出版了。对于书中的文学特色，仁者见仁，智者见智，时至今日，依然不敢恭维。它的主要亮点在于严谨和精确，虽然刚开始面世时，受到些质疑，但是现在完全立住脚了，被所有历史馆藏收录，成为公认的史学经典。

这本书出版不久，老绅士就死了。斯人已逝，说句他的一生应该干点更大的事，不至于有失恭敬。然而，人各有志，他还是太由着自己的性子了。即使现在他的书在邻居看来不时会惹是生非，不时令朋友不快（对这些朋友，他很尊重，很热爱），但大家想起他的错误与愚蠢，感到更多的是“悲伤而不是愤怒”，以至于人们开始怀疑他的初衷根本就不是有意伤害或冒犯。现在不管批评家如何评论他，老百姓对他还是好评如潮，特别是一些面点师，为了永远纪念他，一度把他的肖像印在新年蛋糕上，这几乎算得上是与把他的肖像印在滑铁卢奖牌或安妮女王的硬币上同样的荣幸了。

下面的故事就是在迪德里克·尼克博克的遗稿里发现的。

悄悄爬进坟墓——

——卡特赖特 [1]

凡是在哈德孙河上航行过的人，一定记得卡茨基尔山脉，那是阿巴拉契亚山系的一支断脉。远远望去，溯河向西，巍峨峻拔，傲视周围的乡村。季节轮转，天气无常，甚至一天中的每一个时辰，山色与山形都会变幻。于是，整个山脉在远近乡村的主妇看来，是完美的晴雨表。天气晴朗，披上紫蓝衣裳的崇山峻岭倒映在璀璨的夜空；有时，万里无云，唯有山顶氤氲弥漫，在残阳余晖中，犹如荣耀的冠冕，光芒四射。

在仙山脚下，可以望见一座村子，炊烟袅袅，掩映在树丛中的木瓦屋顶泛着微光；高地的浅蓝和近处的葱翠交相辉映。这是一个非常古老的小村庄，由该省早期一些荷兰殖民者创建，也就是大约在虔诚的彼得·斯特伊弗桑特（愿他安息！）执政之初。几年前，这里还可以看到一些早期原住民的屋子。这些屋子都是用荷兰运来的小黄砖建的，都装着格子窗，正面是三角墙，顶部有风信鸡。

就在这个村子里，就在其中的一间屋子里（说老实话，这种房子都经年饱受风侵雨蚀，全是破败不堪的样子），许多年来（当时整个乡村还是大不列颠的一个省），一直住着一个单纯而善良的人，名叫瑞普·凡·温克尔。瑞普·凡·温克尔是凡·温克尔斯的后裔。在彼得·斯特伊弗桑特统治下的骑士时代，凡·温克尔斯威武勇猛，还同彼得·斯特伊弗桑特一道参加了围攻克里斯蒂娜堡的战斗。然而，瑞普·凡·温克尔一点儿也没有遗传祖先骁勇善战的性格。我注意到他是一个单纯善良的男人，一个心肠很好的邻居，一个在妻子面前言听计从的丈夫。后一种情况造就他脾气温顺，人缘很好，因为大凡在家里被悍妇管束的丈夫，出门在外，往往都会体贴入微、讨人欢喜，他们的性格，在家庭烈火的熔炉里被打磨得温文尔雅。看来，培养人们忍耐和坚毅的品格，枕边风抵得上世间所有的布道。所以，从某种意义上讲，摊上一个凶悍的妻子还是不幸中的万幸。以此类推，瑞普·凡·温克尔应该算得上是三生有幸了。

事实正是如此，村子里所有贤妻良母都特别喜欢他，通常女人都喜欢好脾气的男人。凡是出现家庭争吵，她们都一边倒站在瑞普·凡·温克尔的一边。晚上扎堆儿闲聊家长里短时，也都一股脑儿地把所有罪过全部推到凡·温克尔夫人身上。就连村里的孩子们在他走过时，都欢呼雀跃。瑞普跟孩子们一起玩耍，帮他们做玩具，教他们放风筝、打弹珠，给他们讲很长很长的幽灵、女巫和印第安人的故事。一见他为了躲避悍妻而在村子里晃荡，孩子们就蜂拥而至，有的扯住

他衣服的下摆，有的爬到他背上，跟他玩着千奇百怪的恶作剧，他却从不生气，就连附近的狗都没有朝他叫的。

可是，瑞普这人有一个大毛病，那就是，他对各种有利可图的劳动都无可救药地厌恶透顶。这完全不是他这个人不够勤奋或者没有恒心。因为他可以带上一根同鞑靼人的长矛一样又长又重的钓鱼竿，坐在一块潮湿的石头上，一钓就是一整天，而不会有丝毫的怨言，即使没有一条鱼儿咬钩，他也不会觉得扫兴。他经常是一连几小时扛着猎枪，步履艰难地穿过森林，穿过沼泽地，爬上山冈，越过山谷，就是为了打几只松鼠或几只野鸽。邻居需要帮忙时，他从来都是二话不说，即使需要付出最艰苦的劳动，诸如给印第安玉米剥皮，或者建石头围墙之类的乡下趣事，他总是冲锋在前的。村里的妇女们也总喜欢找他跑跑腿，让他做一些连她们自己不体贴的丈夫都不干的各种小零活儿。也就是说，瑞普对外人的事情百般殷勤，对自家的事情从不过问。对于如何尽家里的义务，把自家地里的活儿干得利利落落，他觉得比登天还难。

事实上，他跟别人说过，在自家地里干活儿，是白费工夫。他家的那块地，小得可怜，整个村子，就没有哪块地比这还小。那块地怎么种也种不好，他再怎么努力都没用。他家的栅栏一而再再而三地倒塌；他家的牛不是跑得没影儿，就是钻进了卷心菜的菜地里；田里的杂草一定是他家的长得最快；只要他一想外出做点活儿，还没等出门，天就下起雨来。就这样，他的祖传家产在他手上日复一日地缩水。他的田地，今天少一亩，明天少一亩，最后就只剩下一小块土地用来种植印度玉米和土豆了。可是，这块地算得上是附近一带种得最为糟糕的一块地呀。

瑞普的几个孩子同他本人一样，穿得破破烂烂，整天到处撒野，像是没有爹妈的孩子。他儿子小瑞普，跟他就像是一个模子刻出来的捣蛋鬼，穿着他父亲的旧衣服，各种脾气秉性相较他父亲有过之而无不及。经常看到他就像一匹小马驹，屁颠儿地跟在母亲身后，穿着一条他父亲不穿了灯笼裤，费力地用一只手提拎着，就像一位贵妇在雨天提着裙裾走路一样。

可是，瑞普·凡·温克尔整天乐呵呵的，看上去傻傻的，很讨人喜欢。他把日子过得轻轻松松，管它是白面包还是黑面包，怎么省事怎么吃，宁可只有一便士挨饿，也不为了一英镑干活儿。按他的性格，就是开开心心吹着口哨过日子。可他妻子就是没完没了、絮絮不休地在他耳边唠叨着，说他游手好闲；说他缺心少肺；说一家人都要毁在他的身上了。从清晨，到中午，再到夜晚，她的舌头就嚼个不停，无论瑞普说什么或者做什么，都会招来一顿机关枪般的训斥。对付这类训斥，瑞普都准备好了统一的回复，而且因为使用得过于频

繁，已逐渐成了习惯——耸耸肩，摇摇头，抬眼望天，一声不吭。可是，这又会招来妻子新一轮的连珠炮，最后，他只好偃旗息鼓，走到外边去——这是给怕老婆的男人们唯一的退路。

在家里，跟瑞普形影不离的就只有他的那条狼狗——沃尔夫。沃尔夫跟他的主人一样，对凡·温克尔夫人怕得要命，因为凡·温克尔夫人认为她丈夫和狗简直是懒到一块儿了。她甚至双眼充满邪恶地看着它，认为沃尔夫就是把主人引入歧途的祸根。的确是那么回事儿，从符合爱犬要求的精神层面来说，沃尔夫勇敢无比，就像曾经在野外森林中生活过一样——可是，有什么勇气能够经得住一个爱嚼舌头的妇女所带来的喋喋不休、令人困扰的恐惧呢？只要沃尔夫一进到家，它的毛发就耷拉了下去，它的尾巴就垂到地面上或者夹在两腿之间。它在屋子里窜来窜去，活像是要上绞刑架的样子，时不时斜着眼睛，瞅瞅凡·温克尔夫人。只要看到她拿起扫帚柄或者长柄勺做出哪怕是一丁点儿挥舞的动作，沃尔夫就狂叫不止，夺门而逃。

瑞普·凡·温克尔的婚姻车轮滚滚向前，可生活却度日如年。尖酸刻薄的性子，绝不会因为天增岁月而柔软温和。而那尖刻的舌头，是唯一锐利的工具，经过不断使用，不钝反利。有好一阵子，只要被赶出家门，瑞普就到一个由村里的贤达、智者及闲人常年聚集的俱乐部里寻求慰藉。俱乐部在一个小客栈前面的条凳上召开会议，小客栈上挂着乔治三世陛下的那幅脸色红润的画像。大家就坐在树荫底下，度过漫漫、懒散的夏日。他们无精打采，闲扯村子里的事情，要么就讲着无聊乏味的故事，没完没了，让人昏昏欲睡。但是，碰巧有旧报纸从途经此地的旅行者那里落入他们手中时，他们便会围绕报纸内容展开深刻讨论，即便是政治家花钱来听，也很值得。当衣冠楚楚、满腹经纶的小个子德里克·凡·布默尔，这位连词典里最难的词语都难不倒的小学教师，不紧不慢读报的时候，大家便开始侧耳倾听，那是多么庄严的场景哪！他们在对发生在几个月内的公共事件发表真知灼见时，又是多么的贤明呀！

这个小团体的意见完全受尼古拉斯·维德的控制。尼古拉斯既是村长，也是店主。他从早到晚都坐在小客栈门口，只有在为了躲避太阳，且还要保证自己能始终待在那棵大树的树荫底下时，才会稍微移动一下。这样，邻居们完全可以根据他移动的位置来确定每天的具体时间，那准确度可与日晷相媲美。的确，很难听到他开口说什么，他只是一个劲儿地抽烟斗。可是，拥护他的人（因为凡是大人物都有拥护者）都很懂他，也知道怎样去揣摩他的心思。当读给他听或者讲给他听的东西让他不快时，你就会注意到他抱着烟斗吸个不停，并且短促地、频繁地、愤怒地吐着烟雾。但在他感到满意的时候，便会慢条斯理、心平气和地把烟吸进去，再吐出一缕缕轻盈、平和的烟雾。有时，他会从嘴里抽出烟斗，让香气在鼻子周围缭绕升腾。与此同时，

他还会严肃地点点头，表示完全同意。

可即便是如此固若金汤的堡垒，不幸的瑞普最终还是被他那凶悍的妻子寻到了踪迹。她会突然闯进来把整个聚会搅得不得安宁，还把在场的所有人一个个骂得一文不值。就连那个令人敬畏的大人物尼古拉斯·维德，碰到这位使人不寒而栗的悍妇口无遮拦的舌根时，也一样在劫难逃。她公然指控就是他让自己的男人染上了游手好闲的恶习。

可怜的瑞普，最后几乎到了绝望的境地。要逃避农活儿，还有妻子的谩骂，唯一的选择就是手持猎枪，进入森林游荡。在森林里，他有时会坐在树下，与沃尔夫一起分享行囊中的食物。他很同情沃尔夫，把沃尔夫看成同病相怜的伙伴。“可怜的沃尔夫，”他经常会说，“汝之女主人，让汝之生活牛马莫如了。请勿把心伤，伙伴。只要老朽一息尚存，汝将永远有一友人相伴相依。”沃尔夫总会摇摇尾巴，满怀期望地看着主人的脸庞。假如狗能够感受到他人对自己的同情，我深信它会用整个身心来回报这种情感的。

在一个秋高气爽的日子里，在一段长时间的闲逛后，瑞普不知不觉地爬到了卡茨基尔山脉其中一处最高的地方。他到这里是做他最喜欢的事情——打松鼠。在这里，周围一片静谧，猎枪响起时，枪声在孤寂的山谷里回荡来回荡去。傍晚时分，他气喘吁吁，精疲力竭，一屁股坐到一个绿色的小山包上，山包上覆盖着草本植被，这是悬崖边缘的顶端。从树与树之间的空隙处，他可以俯瞰到延绵数英里 [2] 满是葱茏树木的乡村。他还能看到远处高贵的哈德孙河，在他的身下，远远地，远远地，流淌着，平静却庄严。一块紫色的云印在了河面上，间或有零零星星缓缓行驶的小帆船，静静地卧在犹如明镜的河面上，最后隐没于蓝色的高地之间。

在小山的另一边，他俯视着幽深的山谷，那里一片荒凉寂寞，高低不平，谷底到处都是从悬空的悬崖上撒落下来的碎片，夕阳反射的光线是几乎照不到这里的。有一阵子，瑞普趴在地上，看着这里的景色，陷入了沉思。夜幕渐渐降临，卡茨基尔山脉开始把长长的蓝色的阴影投进山谷。他意识到，天就要黑下来了，回到村子还需要走很长很长的路。可是，一想到回家要面对凡·温克尔夫人所带来的恐惧，瑞普长长地叹了一口气。

正要下山的时候，他听到从远处传来的一个声音大喊着：“瑞普·凡·温克尔！瑞普·凡·温克尔！”他环顾四周，但什么也没能看到，只有一只乌鸦形只影单地飞到山的那边去了。他想，一定是他的想象给他带来幻觉了。他转过身去，又开始准备下山。这时，他听到同样的叫声在寂静的夜空里回响：“瑞普·凡·温克尔！瑞普·凡·温克尔！”——与此同时，沃尔夫弓起了脊背，发出低沉的吼

叫，偷偷地躲到主人身边，胆怯地朝山谷望去。瑞普这时感到，一种无可名状的恐惧向他整个身子袭来。他急切地朝着相同的方向望去，察觉到有一个奇怪的人影正在缓慢而吃力地往岩石上爬，他背着的东西太重，把他的背都压弯了。他非常吃惊，居然在这个偏僻且人迹罕至的地方看到有人出现。但他猜想，那很可能是附近的某个人需要他的帮助，于是他加快了脚步，准备下去伸出援手。

在离那个人更近了一些时，这个陌生人奇特的外表让瑞普倍感吃惊。他身材矮小，体形宽阔，年岁老迈，头发浓密，胡子灰白；一身古荷兰式装束，棉布短上衣紧紧勒在腰上，下身套了好几层马裤，最外面的那件马裤有着足够大的容量，马裤上镶着两排扣子，扣子往下一直到两侧和膝盖的隆起处。他肩上扛着装酒的小木桶，里面似乎装满了烈酒。他示意瑞普走过去给他帮帮忙。尽管面对这个刚刚认识的人他还有点儿胆怯，半信半疑，可瑞普还是像平常那样，很乐意地照办了。他们稍事休息了一下，就接着攀上一条狭窄的沟壑，这里显然是山溪干涸后留下的河床。再往上爬时，瑞普不时听见连绵不断的、轰隆隆的声音，就像远处的雷鸣。那声音似乎是从深谷中，或者是从高大的岩石的裂缝里传来。崎岖的山路朝着深谷延伸开去。他停留了片刻，继而猜想，那一定是那些转瞬即逝的雷阵雨发出的轰隆声，在山间这样的海拔高度上，这样的雷阵雨非常常见。他们继续前行，穿过峡谷，二人来到了一个像圆形剧场的山坳里。山坳周围，都是垂直的悬崖。悬崖边缘高悬着枝繁叶茂的树木，只能偶尔从缝隙间看到蔚蓝的天空和闪着光芒的夜云。在整个过程中，瑞普同他的伙伴只是默默地、艰辛前行着。尽管瑞普对于要把一小木桶烈酒扛到这荒山上的做法感到惊奇不已，但在这未知的事物中有一种奇怪和不可理解的东西被激发出来，让人心生敬畏，也倍感陌生。

一走进圆形剧场，让人感到好奇的新事情便出现了。就在中间的一块平地上，一帮看上去模样古怪的人正在玩着九柱地滚球。他们个个穿着稀奇古怪的服装——一些人穿着短短的紧身上衣，另一些人穿着皮带上别着长刀的坎肩，大多数人的马裤都宽大无比，跟那个领路长者穿的式样相似。他们的面容也非同寻常。有一个人脑袋很大，脸很宽，眼睛小小的，像猪一样。另一个人的脸看上去好像就只长了鼻子，他头上戴着白色的锥形帽，上面还插了个公鸡的红尾巴。他们都留着胡须，形状各异，颜色也各异。其中一个人似乎是指挥官，他矮胖胖的，年纪很大，有绅士风度，看上去饱经风霜。他身着花边紧身上衣，皮带和挂剑的饰带都很宽大，帽子上面装饰着羽毛，脚穿红色的长筒袜和饰有玫瑰花的高跟鞋。这一大群人，让瑞普想起了村子牧师多米尼·凡·沙伊克家客厅里挂着的那幅佛拉芒古画中的人物。那幅画是在殖民时期从荷兰带回来的。

让瑞普感觉最为奇怪的是，尽管这些人看起来是在自娱自乐，可

他们始终表情严肃，极尽神秘不语之能事，而且这也是他曾见过的最扫兴的娱乐的人群了。没有什么声音可以打破这里的宁静，有的只是一次次击球的声音。每次滚球的声音都会顺着山脉回响，就像轰隆隆的雷鸣。

当瑞普和他的同伴走近时，所有人突然停止了游戏，并带着雕塑般呆呆的眼神凝视着他，他们面容古怪、粗野，神情呆滞，看得他的心怦怦直跳，双膝像筛糠一样战栗不已。就在这时，他的伙伴把酒桶里的酒倒进了大酒壶里，并示意他招待这些人。他战战兢兢地照办。他们不声不响地把酒一饮而尽，接着又玩起球来。

渐渐地，瑞普的敬畏之情和忧虑之感都消失了。他甚至在没有人盯住自己的时候，大胆地尝了尝那酒。他觉得那酒尝起来有荷兰制杜松子酒的味道。他天生是个好酒之徒，很快就经不住诱惑又过去喝了一口。一种味道激发出另一种新的味道，他一次又一次地走过去，以至于到最后迷失了所有的感官。他的双眼恍惚起来——脑袋慢慢地不听使唤耷拉下来，人也陷入了深度睡眠。

等他一觉醒来时，发现自己躺在一个绿色的小山包上。当初他正是在这里看到那个来自峡谷里的老人。他揉了揉眼睛——这是一个阳光灿烂的早晨。鸟儿在树丛中欢跳啁啾，老鹰在空中盘旋，并迎着纯净的山风翱翔。“毫无疑问，”瑞普想了想说，“我并没有整夜都睡在这里。”他回忆了一下自己睡前发生的事情：那个背着一小木桶酒的怪人，还有山谷——岩石中那个荒凉隐蔽之地，那群愁眉苦脸的玩九柱地滚球的人们，那只酒壶……“啊哈！那只酒壶！那只邪恶的酒壶！”瑞普心里说道，“我该找个什么借口向凡·温克尔夫人道歉呢？”

他环顾四周，想要寻找自己的那支枪，可是，在先前放置那支油光闪亮、光洁猎枪的地方，放着一把旧火枪：枪管锈迹斑斑，枪机已经脱落，枪托已被虫蛀。他此刻满腹狐疑，认为山里的那帮表情冷峻的戏子把他捉弄了一番，并在他喝醉酒之后，把他的枪给劫走了。沃尔夫也不见了踪影，它或许是在追松鼠或鹧鸪时迷路了吧。瑞普一路边吹哨子，边喊着沃尔夫的名字——但一切都枉然。山里的回声重复着他的口哨和喊声，却依旧不见狗的影子。

他决定再次回到昨晚那伙人玩耍的地方，只要碰到其中的任何一个，就向他索要自己的狗和枪。当他起身准备走时，发现身上的关节变得非常僵硬，而且要做一些平常的活动也变得力不从心。“这些山路不适合我走了，”瑞普思忖道，“如果这场闹剧让我落下一身的风湿病，继而使我卧床不起，那凡·温克尔夫人可是得跟我度过一段‘美好时光’了。”他有些吃力地向山下走去，找到了前一天晚上与同伴一起往上爬的那条冲沟，但让他吃惊的是，一条山溪此刻正泛着泡沫沿着冲沟流淌，冲过一块又一块岩石，让整个山谷回荡着潺潺流水声。他

想办法尽量爬到冲沟的侧边，不无艰辛地穿过由白桦树、黄樟树和金缕梅树组成的灌木丛，不时还被那些树间盘绕纠缠的野葡萄藤绊倒或缠住，卷曲的藤条在他前进的路上布下了天罗地网。

终于，他来到了山谷穿过悬崖的地方，到达了圆形剧场——先前的空旷地带已经没有了踪影。无数的岩石形成了一堵高高的、坚不可摧的墙。溪水的急流从墙面上翻腾而下，泛着一片片羽毛状的泡沫，落入又阔又深的水潭，水潭在周围森林阴影的掩映下黯然无光。就是在这儿，可怜的瑞普被迫停了下来。他又唤了一次狗的名字，吹了声口哨——只有一群闲散的乌鸦用呱呱的叫声回应着。它们在悬崖边上向阳的那棵枯树周围盘旋，高高在上，似乎在鄙视和嘲笑这位可怜男子的困惑与烦恼。

这可怎么办呢？上午慢慢地过去了。瑞普对早餐的渴望让他更加饥肠辘辘。他舍不得自己的狗和枪，惧怕见到妻子。可在这群山里头挨饿，也不是个事儿呀！他摇了摇头，扛起了锈迹斑斑的火枪，带着满腹的忧愁和焦虑，踏上了回家的路。

走回村庄的路上，他遇到很多人，可一个也不认识。这让他有点儿吃惊，他原以为自己认识周围乡村里的每一个人。他们的衣着也同他以往所看到的不一样。村里的人也是个都用同样吃惊的目光盯着他瞧。而所有人在与他对视的时候，都会无一例外地摸一下下巴。看到他们一而再再而三地重复这个动作，瑞普也情不自禁地做了起来。让他万分惊讶的是自己的胡须，竟然有一英尺 [3] 长了！

这时，他已经来到村边。一群陌生的孩子跟在他后面跑个不停，一边大声叫嚣，一边指着他那灰白的胡须。还有那些狗，也没有哪一只他所认得的老相识。当他经过时，所有的狗都朝他叫了起来。就连村子本身都变了——比以往更大，人也更多。一排又一排从未见过的房屋，那些他一直很熟悉并经常光顾的房子已经不知去向了。门牌上面贴着的都是陌生的名字，窗边出现的都是陌生的面孔——一切都是陌生的。他心里感到非常不安。他开始怀疑自己周围的世界是不是都着魔了。这确实是他前天才离开的土生土长的村子呀！卡茨基尔山脉就矗立在那里，远处流淌着银色的哈德孙河，每一座小山和每一个山谷都在原处没有动，瑞普充满了困惑，痛苦不堪。“昨晚那个酒壶，”他心里想，“把我可怜的脑袋瓜弄糊涂了！”

费了不少气力，他才找到回家的路。他不敢吭声，非常畏惧地走近自己的家，每一刻都希望听到凡·温克尔夫人那刺耳的叫声。可是他发现，自家的房子已经年久失修了——屋顶已经坍塌，窗户均已破碎，门板也已脱落。一只看上去就像沃尔夫一样，并且饿得半死的狗在房子周围躲躲闪闪。瑞普直呼其名，但那只恶狗却咆哮了起来，龇着牙走开了。这可真是杀人不见血的一招。“我的爱犬呀，”可怜的瑞

普长吁短叹地说，“把我都忘得一干二净了！”

他走进自己的屋子。说实话，以往那屋子总是由凡·温克尔夫人打理得利利落落的，现在空空如也，没有人住，显然是遭人遗弃了。这份苍凉让他所有的惧内情绪荡然无存。他大声呼喊妻子和几个孩子的名字，有那么一会儿，这孤寂的房间回荡着他的声音，但紧接着，一切又归于沉寂。

他疾跑出去，来到以往常去的地方——那个村子里的小客栈，但它也不见了。取而代之的是一座摇摇欲坠的大木屋，开着几扇大窗户，有些已经破裂，用一些旧帽子和旧衬裙修补着，门的上方印着“乔纳森·杜立特尔联合旅店”的字样。昔日的那棵给这个荷兰小客栈带来一片荫蔽的大树已经没有了，现在矗立着一根高大裸露的柱子，顶部挂着个好似红色睡帽的玩意儿。那东西下面飘着一面旗子，旗子上面是奇怪的星星和条纹的组合。这一切都很怪异，也很让人费解。不过，瑞普认出了指示牌上肤色红润的乔治三世的面容，他曾在这张脸的下面平静地抽了那么多的烟斗，但即使是这个，也大大地改变了模样。原本的大衣颜色从红色变成了蓝色和黄色，手上握着的是剑，而不是权杖，头上戴着一顶三角帽，三角帽下面印着大字：GENERAL WASHINGTON（华盛顿将军）。

就像往常一样，门口依旧围着一群人，但这些人瑞普一个也想不起。就连他们的性子似乎也都发生了变化。瞧他们说话的语气，一个个都很急于争个是非曲直，争先恐后地喧闹不已，没有了昔日的那份平和与安宁。他找了找贤明之士尼古拉斯·维德，但没有找到。尼古拉斯·维德有一张大脸和双下巴，他总是叼着长长的烟斗，喷出团团的烟雾，并不跟人闲聊。他也找了找小学老师凡·布默尔，但同样没有找到。凡·布默尔喜欢拿着旧报纸，慢慢品读其中的内容。取代他们的，是一个精瘦的，看上去很有脾气的家伙，他口袋里装满了传单，正在激情满怀地神侃什么公民的权利，选举，议会议员，自由，邦克山战役，七六年的英雄们 [4]，以及那些完全令人摸不着头脑的行话术语，弄得凡·温克尔一头雾水。

蓄着灰白的长须、扛着生锈的猎枪、穿着破烂衣服、身后还跟着一群妇孺的瑞普，很快引起了旅店政治家们的注意。他们满是一副好奇地将他团团围住，从头到脚打量了一番。演讲者急急忙忙地走到瑞普跟前，把他稍稍拉到一边问他到底投哪一边的票。瑞普傻乎乎的，茫然瞪着双眼。另一位忙来忙去的小矮个子拉着他的胳膊，踮起脚，凑近他的耳朵，问他是支持联邦政府还是民主党人。对这个问题瑞普同样听不懂。这时，一位头上戴着尖尖的三角帽，非常世故，也自以为是了不起的年长绅士，从人群那边走了过来。他在经过人群时，用胳膊肘把他们拨到左右两边。直挺挺地站到了凡·温克尔跟前。他一只手叉

着腰，另一只手拄着拐杖。那双锐利的眼睛和尖尖的帽子似乎刺进了瑞普的灵魂。他语气严峻，逼问瑞普为什么扛着枪，身后还带着一群人来选举，是不是要在村子里搞暴动。“呜呼，各位先生，”瑞普带着沮丧，大声说道，“我是个安分守己的穷苦人，土生土长的本地人，是国王的忠实臣民——愿上帝护佑他！”

这时，从围观的人群中爆发出一片呼喊：“是个托利党！是个托利党！是个间谍！是个难民！去他的！让他滚！”那个戴着三角帽，自以为了不得的男人费了好大的劲儿才让一切恢复了秩序。他慎重地紧锁起眉头，再次质问这位不明身份的“罪犯”到这里来是干什么的，来找谁的。可怜的瑞普，他谦卑地向他保证，自己毫无恶意，只是来此寻找曾经的邻居，他们以前常在这客栈附近相聚。

“那好，他们是哪些人？叫什么名字？”

瑞普思考了片刻，然后问：“尼古拉斯·维德在哪里？”

有好一阵子，大家都沉默不语。这时，一位长者用细声细气的声音回答说，“尼古拉斯·维德呀？唉，他过世了呀，过世十八年啦！教堂的墓地上，有一块木制的墓碑，上面写有他的身世，可那块墓碑也腐烂了，不知去向了。”

“布罗姆·达彻在哪儿呢？”

“哦，他在战争一开始就参军啦。有人说，他在进攻哈德孙河西岸的斯托尼波因特时阵亡了，又有人说他在安东尼碧山的山脚下，在一次暴风骤雨中溺亡了——我不知道哪个是真，哪个是假——反正他再也没有回来。”

“那小学老师凡·布默尔在哪里呢？”

“他也去参军了——还当上了国民军的大将，现在在议会当议员呢。”

听到自己的家，自己的朋友们，都发生了这样令他难过的变化，发现自己在这个世界上变得孤孤单单的，瑞普的心都碎了——他得到的每一个答复都让他感到莫名其妙，时间怎么会有那么大的跨度，他们所谈及的一切词汇竟然是那么难以理解——战争呀，国会呀，斯东尼角呀，等等，他都无法理解了。他再也没有勇气打听别的朋友的情况，唯有绝望地大声叫了起来：“难道这儿就没有人认识瑞普·凡·温克尔的吗？”

“噢，你是说瑞普·凡·温克尔吗？”两三个人大声说道，“当然认识啦！那就是瑞普·凡·温克尔——在那边——正靠在那棵树上呢。”

瑞普向那边瞧了瞧，注意到自己上山时，有个人跟他长得一模一样：不用说跟他一样懒散，穿得也跟他一样破破烂烂！这可怜的人儿现在已经完全糊涂。他都怀疑起自己到底是个什么了，怀疑起自己到底是本人呢，还是别的什么人。他正犯迷糊，那个戴着三角帽的人过来询问起他到底是谁——姓甚名谁？

“鬼知道呢，”他不知所措地叫道，“我不是我自己了，我是别的什么人了，那边的那个人是我了吧。不不不，那是别的什么人附着我的身体吧。可昨晚我还是我自己呀，我只不过是在山上睡了一觉而已，他们就把我的枪给换掉了，结果什么都变了，我自己也变了，这下好，我连自己姓甚名谁也说不出，我是谁呀！”

这个时候，旁边看热闹的人开始你看看我，我看看你，点点头，意味深长地使着眼色，用手指头轻轻地敲敲自己的前额。接着他们还相互耳语着要把枪夺下来，免得这老家伙会闹出什么乱子来——听到这话，那个戴三角帽、自认为了不起的家伙便匆匆溜之大吉。就在这千钧一发之际，一位年轻貌美的女子从人群中挤了过来，也想看看这个白胡子老头儿。她怀里抱着一个胖乎乎的孩子，那孩子看到瑞普的那般模样，惊恐万分，开始哭了起来。“嘘，别说话，瑞普，”她叫道，“嘘，别哭，小傻瓜，这老头儿不会把你怎么样的。”这小孩儿的名字，母亲的那副神态和她说话的语气，都在他脑子里唤起了一连串的回忆。“你到底姓甚名谁呀，漂亮的姑娘？”他问道。

“我是裘迪斯·嘉尔顿尼尔呀。”

“令尊姓甚名谁呢？”

“甭提了，那可是可怜的人啦，他叫瑞普·凡·温克尔，可是，自他带着枪离家出走已经二十年了，那之后他就杳无音讯了——他的狗自个儿回家了——可是，他到底是开枪自杀了，还是被印第安人给抓走了，谁也不知道。我那时只是个小姑娘。”

瑞普还想问最后一个问题，但他问的时候已经结结巴巴了——

“那令堂在哪里呢？”

“哦，她也过世了，不过这还是不久以前的事儿——在跟一个新英格兰小贩发火的时候，血管爆裂了。”

听到这个消息，至少让他得到一丝安慰。这个老实人再也无法抑制住自己的心情了，他一把搂住女儿和女儿怀里的孩子。“我就是你的父亲呀！”他大叫道，“那时风华正茂的瑞普·凡·温克尔变成了现在年老体衰的瑞普·凡·温克尔。难道就没有人认识我这个可怜的瑞普·凡·温克尔了吗？”

所有的人都站住了，一个个带着惊愕的表情。这时候，一位年迈

的妇女摇摇晃晃地走出人群。她一手遮住额头，瞅了瞅他的脸，大声叫道，“果真是他！他就是瑞普·凡·温克尔！就是他本人！老邻居你又回来啦！欢迎啊！——哎呀，那么长的二十年，你都到哪儿去了呀？”

瑞普很快又讲了一遍自己的经历，因为那整整二十年，对他来说只是一个晚上的事儿。听到他的经历，邻居们个个都瞪大了眼睛。有几个人相互使眼色，显出挖苦的表情。那个戴着三角帽、自以为了不起的男子在惊恐过后回过身来，嘴唇紧闭，摇了摇头——看到他的这个举动，在场的所有人都摇了摇头。

这个时候，大家看到老彼得·范德尔敦克从大路上慢慢走了过来。因此，大家决定去征求他的意见。他是与他同名的那位历史学家的后裔。那位历史学家曾经记述过本省早期的历史。彼得是村子里年事最高的居民，对附近一带所有的神奇事件和各种传奇都了如指掌。他立刻记起了瑞普，断定他讲的事情完全可信。这下，大家才满意了。彼得确切地告诉大家，那是从他的那位历史学家先辈传下来的事实——也就是说，卡茨基尔山脉总是有各种稀奇古怪的人光顾。他确切地告诉大家，伟大的英国航海家兼探险家亨德里克·哈德孙第一个发现了这条河流和附近这一带地区。于是，每隔二十年，他都要率领他的“半月号”船的全体船员，来这一带守夜一次。这样，他就可以重访他曾冒险过的每个地方，严密守护以他的名字命名的河流和大城市。他确切地告诉大家说，他父亲曾经看到过他们身着旧时的荷兰人服饰，在山中的一个山坳里玩九柱地滚球，还说他自己在一个夏日的午后，也曾听到过他们滚球的声音，就像远处轰隆隆的雷鸣。

长话短说吧——那群人后来散开了，都去忙乎他们更加关心的选举的事情了。瑞普的女儿把他带回去一起生活。她屋子里的家具齐全，居住舒适。她丈夫是个农民，身躯魁梧，整天乐呵呵的。瑞普记起来了，他就是过去曾经爬到他背上的那些调皮捣蛋鬼中的一个。至于瑞普的儿子兼继承人——也就是大家看到的，跟他父亲是一个模子倒出来、正靠着那棵树站着的那一位——在田里给人做农活。但他显现出了从父亲那里继承过来的性情：对别人的事情百般殷勤，对自己的事情从不上心。

现在，瑞普又开始像以前那样过日子了。不久，他又找到了很多以前的老朋友，不过这些人都已经饱经沧桑。瑞普更喜欢同年轻的一代交朋友，很快便得到了年轻人的爱戴。因为在家无事可做，而且也到了可以不受惩罚而到处闲逛逍遥的年纪，他再一次坐在了摆在小客栈门口的那张条凳上。人们把他奉为村子里德高望重的长者之一，把他奉为“大战之前”的那个旧时代的编年史。过了好一阵子，瑞普才能在同大家闲聊时跟得上趟儿，也才弄清楚了在他一觉睡去的二十年间

所发生的奇奇怪怪的事件：如何发生了革命战争，美国如何摆脱了古老的英格兰的奴役，他如何从一个乔治三世陛下的臣民摇身变成了美国自由的公民，等等。事实上，瑞普对政治毫无兴趣。美利坚合众国同大英帝国之间的变迁没有给他留下什么印象。不过，有一种专制统治的重压曾让他长期呻吟，那就是“妇人的专政”。让他开心的是，那样的专政结束了——他已经脱离婚姻的桎梏，开始扬眉吐气了，他可以随着自己的意愿而自由进出，可以不再为凡·温克尔夫人的暴政感到恐惧。不过，只要有人提到凡·温克尔夫人的名字，他还是会摇摇头，耸耸肩，抬抬眼。这样的神态既可以看作是他对自己命运的屈服，也可以表示他对获得解放的欢欣。

后来，瑞普经常把自己的经历讲给每一位到“杜立特尔先生旅店”住宿的新客人。起初，人们注意到，每次在他讲起自己的经历时，总有些细节会有所变化，大抵是因为他才从沉睡中醒来没多久的缘故。最后，他讲的故事才跟我所讲的一模一样，附近一带的男男女女，大人小孩，没有谁对这个故事不是了然于心的。有些人却总假装怀疑这个故事的真实性。他们还坚持认为，瑞普的脑子以前就有毛病，坚信这就是他脑海中众多奇思怪想中的一个。然而，旧时的荷兰居民，几乎全都相信这个故事是真实的。即使到今天，每当他们在夏天午后听到从卡茨基尔山脉传来的雷声时，还是会说，那是亨德里克·哈德孙和他的船员们正在玩九柱地滚球的声音。对于附近一带所有惧内的丈夫们来说，每当日子实在过不下去的时候，都巴望着能从瑞普·凡·温克尔的酒壶里，喝上一口让人一醉不醒的美酒。

附言

读者会怀疑上面这个故事是尼克博克先生从有关腓特烈皇帝和基普霍塞尔山的，一个不起眼的德国迷信故事中得到启发而写成的。可是，这里附在故事后面的注释表明，那是绝对的事实。尼克博克先生一向以忠实著称，下面是他的叙述：

“瑞普·凡·温克尔的故事在许多人看来，似乎难以置信，可我完全相信它的真实性。因为我知道，在我们古老的荷兰殖民地附近，经常发生一些不可思议的事件，出现一些不可思议的现象。的确，我也听说过在沿哈德孙河各个村子里所发生的比这还要稀奇古怪的故事。

所有这些故事都得到充分证实，因而是毋庸置疑的。我甚至亲自同瑞普·凡·温克尔谈过话。我最后一次见到他时，他已是一位德高望重的老人了。在其他每一个问题上，他都极尽理性，并且始终如一。在我看来，凡是本着良心行事的人，没有谁会对这件事情有相左的意见了——还有，我还看到就这件事情还在一位法官面前颁发过一个证

书，上面还有法官亲笔签的‘十’字。因此，这个故事是不容怀疑的。”

又及

下面是基于尼克博克先生的备忘录而写的游记：

卡茨基尔山脉一向是个充满神奇传说的区域。印第安人把卡茨基尔山脉看成是精灵的住处。这些精灵影响着天气，让阳光普照或阴云笼罩在这个景观的上空，为人们带来或好或坏的狩猎季节。他们由一个年长的女精灵统管。据说她就是这些精灵的母亲，就住在卡茨基尔山脉的最高峰，把守着白天和黑夜之门，并在恰当的時刻开启和关闭。她把新的月亮挂上天空，把旧的月亮碎成一颗颗星星。干旱时，如果把她关照好，她就会从蜘蛛网和晨露中编织出轻盈的夏日云彩，并从山巅将这云彩送走，一片接着一片，就像一片片弹过的棉花一样，让它们飘浮在空中。直到后来，它们被太阳的热融化，形成柔和细腻的雨水，让草儿生长，让水果成熟，让玉米一小时就长出一英寸。可是，如果她不高兴，她就孕育出墨水一样黑的乌云，坐在乌云中间，就像一只大腹便便的蜘蛛坐在蜘蛛网中间。当这样的乌云发作时——灾难就降临到山谷上了！

旧时，根据印第安人的传说，曾经有一种神灵一直在卡茨基尔山最为荒凉的幽深之处到处游荡。这种神灵喜欢恶作剧，以给红种的印第安人制造各种灾祸和烦恼为乐事。有时，他装扮成一头熊，有时又装扮成一只豹，有时会装扮成一只鹿，弄得那个眼花缭乱的猎人在盘根错节的森林里、在崎岖不平的岩石间疲于奔命地追踪他。然后，他又忽然一跃而起，大喊两声“嗨！嗨！”，让站在悬崖边或汹涌澎湃的河流边的猎人大惊失色。

这位神灵最喜欢的住处今天仍然可见，就是卡茨基尔山脉中最偏僻处的一块大石或一处悬崖。这里被攀附着开了花的葡萄藤挡住，附近遍地都是野花。因此，这里也叫“花园石”。它脚下的不远处是一个小湖。那是孤独的麻鸦经常出没的地方，一条条水蛇爬到睡莲的叶子上晒着太阳。这是最让印第安人充满敬畏的地方，即便是最勇敢的狩猎者也不会在此区域内追杀猎物。然而，从前有一个猎人迷了路，走进花园石，发现树杈上挂着很多葫芦，他抓了其中一个葫芦就走，但在离开时，他匆匆忙忙，竟把葫芦掉进了岩石中。这时候，一股巨大的水流喷涌向前，将他卷走，并冲下悬崖，顷刻间他粉身碎骨。那溪水再次流入哈德孙河，永不停息地流到今天。这条河同人们所知道的卡特斯基尔河是同一条河流。

——米德尔顿 [5]

我常有机会谈论坚忍力。正是运用这种坚忍力，让妇女们完胜了势不可当的命运逆转。那些让一个男人精神崩溃并从此一蹶不振的灾难，似乎最能激发起温柔女性身上所聚集的全部能量，并让她们展现出品格上的无畏和崇高，这种品格有时会到达高尚的境地。当踏在人生的康庄大道上时，一直是孱弱、事事依赖他人、一丁点儿不顺就发脾气她，突然精神力量猛增，给遭遇不幸的丈夫以安慰和支持，并以永不退缩的坚毅，承受着逆境所带来的最为猛烈的打击。看到这样一位温存而娇柔的女子，还有什么比这更令人感动的呢！

正如长时间把橡树周围那优美的叶子盘绕，并被橡树高高地托起面向阳光的蔓藤，当橡树这种耐寒的植物被雷电劈裂时，它仍然会用爱抚的卷须盘绕着它，并将它那碎裂的大树枝紧紧地连在一起。同样，经由上帝的绝妙安排，在丈夫快乐时仅仅是附属物、仅仅是装饰

品的女人，在丈夫遭受突然的灾难打击时，就应成为他的支柱，成为他的安慰，机智地帮他绕过他天性中的崎岖不平，温柔地托起他那低垂的头，用整个身心紧紧地贴近那颗破碎的心。

我曾给一位朋友道贺，他的家庭兴旺发达，家庭成员间被最强有力的爱编织在了一起。“我希望你交上好运，”他说，带着满腔热情，“最好的运气莫过于拥有妻子和孩子了。假如你成功了，他们会在那儿，与你一同分享；假如你失败了，他们还在那儿，给你带来安慰。”的确，我观察到，一个遭到不幸的已婚男子，比起一个单身男子，更容易重新恢复常人的生活。一部分原因是由于那些无助的人，他至爱的人，生活之必需都依靠他，因他才得以生存，他因此而更受刺激，必须加以努力。但主要原因是，他的精神在家人的关爱下得以舒缓、得以缓解，他的自尊就得以维持——因为他发现，尽管外面是无边的黑暗，是无尽的羞辱，可在家里，有一个充满着爱的小天地，而自己就是这小天地里的君主。单身男子则是另一番景象，他们自暴自弃，轻视自己，自觉孤立无助、遭人摒弃，他们的内心世界已成为废墟，犹如无人居住而遭人遗弃的宅邸，期待着住客的到来。

这些感悟让我想起了一则家庭小故事，是我曾亲眼目睹的一件事。我的挚交莱斯利娶了一位中产阶级家庭的才貌双全的女子。这个女孩没有什么财产，但我朋友却很富有。他很高兴，期盼着让女孩尽情追求优雅的生活，期盼着她能培养那些高雅的情趣和爱好，以传递出女性特有的魅力。“她的生活，”他说，“将会过得像童话一般。”

正是他们性格上的差异，使他们的结合非常和谐。他是那种追求浪漫又不失庄重的人，而她则充满活力，是十足的乐天派。我常注意到，有她做伴时，他凝视她的眼神中带着无声的狂喜，她身上那股明快的精气神儿也使她成为大家的开心果。我还发现，当掌声响起时，她的视线会转向他，好像只有在那里，她才寻求到了赞同和认可。倚靠在他的手臂上时，她那苗条的身材同他那伟岸魁梧的体形形成鲜明的对比。她仰望他时，那种亲切而信任的神情，似乎唤起一股强烈的自豪感，还有时刻被珍视的柔情。而他也非常愿意担起这份甜蜜的责任，成为她永久的依靠。没有一对夫妇能像他们这样，从婚姻之初仿佛就踏上了铺满鲜花的大道，无比般配，且幸福的婚姻之路前景乐观。

可是，我的那位朋友非常不幸，他把自己大把的财产都拿去做了投机生意。结婚不到几个月，突如其来的灾难就接踵而至，他的财产被席卷一空，他发现自己几乎沦为穷光蛋了。有一阵子，他对自己的境遇守口如瓶，带着憔悴的面容和一颗破碎的心四处游荡。他的生活不过是无尽的痛苦，让他更难以忍受的是，他还得在妻子面前强装笑脸，因为，他是万万不能够把这个消息告诉妻子，让她崩溃的。然

而，那双温存而敏锐的眼睛，是不会看不出他的境遇不佳。她注意到了他表情的变化，注意到了他克制着的叹息。尽管他强装着开心快乐，可这背后的闷闷不乐和郁郁寡欢，都逃不过她的双眼。她调动起自己所有的精力和温柔的甜言蜜语，一定要让他再次幸福地生活起来。可她这样做，只会像把利剑更深地刺进了他的灵魂——他越发觉得有理由更爱她，便越会为自己即将给她带来的不幸而更受煎熬。他思忖道，要不了多久，笑容就会从那张脸上消失，歌声就会从那唇间慢慢减弱，那双眼睛的光泽会被忧伤浇灭，而此刻在那个胸膛里轻松跳动着的心，也会如同他自己的心一般，因人世间的种种忧虑和苦难而不堪重负。

终于有一天，他找到了我，以一种最深的绝望的语气，把他境遇的来龙去脉告诉了我。听完他的话，我问，“你妻子知道这一切吗？”听到这个问题，他突然痛哭流涕。“看在上帝的份儿上！”他哭丧着脸说，“要是你对我还有一丁点儿怜悯之心，就甭提我妻子了——就是想到她，我才快要发疯的呀！”

“为什么不告诉她呢？”我说，“她迟早会知道的。你是不可能长时间瞒着她的。要是从别人口里得到这个消息，她会更震惊，更受不了的，不如你亲自告诉她。因为，从所爱之人的口中说出来的话，是可以软化最严酷的消息的。另外，你不仅剥夺自己从她的关心中所获得的安慰，你还危及了能够把两颗心联系在一起的唯一纽带，那可是一种对思想和情感都不做任何隐瞒的小团体。她会很快察觉到，有什么东西在暗地里让你魂不守舍，真正的爱情里是容不下有任何隐瞒的；要是知道爱人对自己隐瞒了伤心之事，她会觉得自己受到了轻视和伤害，然后更加生气的。”

“唉，可是老朋友！想想看，我跟她说她丈夫已成乞丐了，那会给她的前途带来多大的打击，会给她的灵魂带来怎样的重创！那样的话，她就要放弃优雅的生活、快乐的社交活动；就要同我一道，陷入贫困的境地，变得默默无闻！如果我告诉她，我已把她从原来的那种有可能一直光鲜亮丽（众目聚焦的对象，众人仰慕的对象）的生活圈子中拉下马，她怎么忍受得了那份贫寒！她在富足优雅的生活环境中长大，她怎么受得了被人忽视的滋味！她一直是人们的偶像。唉，这会让她心碎的！这会让她心碎的呀！”

看到他口若悬河地诉说着自己的痛苦，我只是在一旁默不作声地听着，因为痛苦是可以通过言语的释放得以缓解的。当他激动的情绪慢慢平息，重新陷于忧郁的沉默中时，我温和地重提原来的话题，催促他当即把自己的现状告诉妻子。他痛不欲生，但却很肯定地，摇了摇头。

“可是，那你是怎样隐瞒着不告诉她的呢？她有必要知道这件

事。只有这样，你才能够逐渐采取适当的措施，改变你的境况。你得改变自己的生活方式——而且，”看到他脸上掠过一阵痛苦的神情，“别让这种事儿折磨你了。我相信你不是那种四处炫耀幸福的人。况且，你还有那么多朋友，他们那么热情，不会因为你住得不如以前富丽堂皇就小瞧了你呀。不过当然，跟玛丽一起寻求幸福的生活，也不见得非得有宫殿才可以。”

“我是可以跟她过幸福日子的，”他一个劲儿地抽搐着，“哪怕是住在一间茅屋里！我可以和她一起堕入贫困，甚至一起走向坟墓！我可以的！我可以的！上帝保佑她吧！上帝保佑她吧！”他哭号着，一阵悲伤与柔情涌上心头。

“你就信了我吧，朋友，”我说着，走到他身边，热情地握住他的手，“信了我吧，她会对你一如既往的。哎，还有——对她来说，这将是让她永远感到自豪，永远感到欣慰的事儿呢。那会唤起她天性中潜在的活力与炽热的同情心，因为她会很高兴地证明，她爱的就是你这个人。在每一个真诚女人的内心深处，都有一束天堂之火。这一束火，在有着旺盛生命力的光天化日之下是处在休眠状态的。但在出现逆境的黑夜里，它会燃烧起来，放射出万丈光芒。没有男人知道自己心目中的妻子到底是什么样子——没有男人知道服侍自己的天使到底是什么样子——直到这个男人同他的妻子一道，历经了人世间各种烈火的试炼。”

在说这些时，我的态度非常诚挚，而言语中那些比喻的话引发了莱斯利激动的畅想，他很快陷入遐思之中。我了解身边这位听众。趁我说的话还有效果，我劝他回家，把自己心中的伤心事向妻子一吐为快。

我必须承认，尽管我说了这么多，但对结果还是有些担心的。谁能指望一个一辈子都在享乐的人会坚忍不拔呢？他妻子一直很快乐，当如果突然发现眼前是一条低微、卑贱、黑暗的下坡路时，她很可能会奋起反抗，或许会一直待在让他们如痴如醉的阳光灿烂的地带不愿离去。另外，时尚的生活被摧毁了不说，接下来又是没完没了的，令人烦心的种种屈辱。这对于其他阶层的人来说，是难以理解的。次日早上我见到莱斯利不免担忧。他告诉了我最终的结果。

“她怎么承受这一切的？”

“就像天使那样！一切对她来说，似乎更像是一种宽慰，因为她张开双臂搂住了我的脖子，还问我是不是这一切让我最近郁郁寡欢的。可是，我可怜的人儿，”他接着说，“她并没认识到我们必须经受的变化呀。她对贫穷只有抽象的概念——她只是在诗歌里读到过什么是贫穷，而那里的贫穷都是同爱情联系在一起的。她至今都没尝过穷

困的滋味——她还不知道，如果没有惯常的各种便利，没有惯常的高雅生活，那到底是什么滋味。当我们实实在在地去经受可悲的忧虑，为满足低微的需求，蒙受琐碎的羞辱时，迎来的才是真正的考验。”

“不过，”我说，“既然你已闯过最难的一关，也就是向她摊牌了，那你越早让世人知道这个秘密越好。让他人知道你的秘密，或许会令你难为情，但这只是一次性的痛苦，而且不久就会过去的。如果不这样做的话，你想着想着，白天里的每个时辰都会很痛苦。束缚一个一文不名之人手脚的，与其说是贫穷，不如说是虚伪。这是一场心高气傲同一文不名之间的斗争——维持虚假外表的做法，必须尽快终止。如果你有勇气展露贫穷，你就可以消除贫穷带给你的无以复加的剧痛。”关于这一点，我发现莱斯利已有充分的思想准备。他本人并没有虚荣心，至于他妻子，她只是很急于去顺应他们命运改变之后的生活。

几天后，傍晚时分，他来看我。他卖掉了自己的住宅，在离城几英里的乡下买了一间小屋。在这之前，他整天忙着处理家具。新住处需要的家当不多，而且都是最简单的那种。原先住宅里所有的豪华家具全都卖掉了，只留下了他妻子的竖琴。他说，那架竖琴，与他对妻子的念想紧密联系在一起——那是他们爱情的小插曲——因为他们求爱时最甜蜜的时刻就包括他俯在琴上，聆听她美妙声音的时刻。一个宠溺妻子的丈夫所表现出的浪漫殷勤，让我都忍不住为之一笑。

他现在要回乡下的小屋了，他妻子一整天都在那儿指挥如何布置和安排家当。我对这个家庭故事如何进展有着强烈的兴趣，加之那天晚上天气很好，于是就提出与他一同前往。

劳累了一天，他已十分疲乏。当我们走出城时，他陷入一阵阴郁的沉思。

“我可怜的玛丽！”终于，他脱口而出，深深叹了口气。

“她怎么啦？”我问道，“出了什么事儿吗？”

“怎么了，”他说，飞快地瞥了我一眼，很不耐烦，“落入如此卑微的境地，被囚在简陋的小屋里，被迫几乎像仆人一样为那可怜的住所劳心费力，难道能什么事儿也没有吗？”

“那她埋怨过你们生活的变化吗？”

“埋怨？！她一直就是除了高兴还是高兴，除了快乐就是快乐。说实在的，我认识她那么久了，她的情绪似乎从来没有这样好过——她对我是一往情深，温柔体贴！”

“多让人钦佩的女子呀！”我大声叫道，“老朋友，你还说自己穷呢。你以前有这么富吗？你以前压根儿就没认识到自己所拥有的这个

女人的优秀品质，那可是无尽的珍宝。”

“哎呀，老朋友呀，如果我现在已经结束了与她在小屋子里的第一次会面，我想我确实会感到舒服的。但这是她亲身体验穷苦的第一天，是别人把她送到我们简陋的住处的。一整天，她就一直在忙于安排和布置屋内那些可怜的家当。她第一次体会到了家务事会让人身心疲惫，她第一次环顾了没有高档家居用品，几乎没有任何便利用品的家到底是个什么样子。或许她现在坐下来，精疲力竭、无精打采，正沉思着未来等着她的穷苦生活呢。”

这样的画面，一定程度上确是有可能出现的，对此我无可否认。所以，我们默默地继续前行。

我们从大路转到一条向上去的狭窄小巷，巷子掩映在茂密的林木当中，这里完全是隐秘的。这时，我们看见了他们的小屋。对于多数田园诗人来说，这小屋真是足够简陋的，可是，它有着令人愉快的乡村面貌。一棵野葡萄藤叶子繁茂，把小屋的一端覆盖住了，有好几棵树在小屋上方优雅地伸展着树枝。我注意到门的附近和前面的草地上有几盆花，它们都被打理得很有品位。一扇小边门通往人行道。人行道蜿蜒曲折，穿过灌木丛，一直通到小屋的门。快要走近时，我们听到音乐的声音。莱斯利抓住我的手臂，我们驻足倾听。是玛丽唱歌的声音，那声音纯朴但极为动人，那是她丈夫特别喜欢的一支小曲。

我感觉到，莱斯利的手在我手臂上颤抖。他移步向前，想听得更清楚，他的脚步在铺着砾石的路上发出了声响。一张光鲜而美丽的脸庞在窗前向外张望，接着便消失了，轻盈的脚步声传来了，玛丽轻快地走上前来迎接我们。她穿着乡下人的那种白色连衣裙，十分漂亮。几朵野花盘在她的秀发上；她面目清新、活力四射，面带灿烂的微笑——我还没有看到过她那么可爱的容颜。

“亲爱的乔治，”她大声说，“很高兴你来了。我一直在期盼着你，期盼着你；我一直在沿着小巷跑来跑去，我一直想得到你的消息。我在小屋后面的一棵漂亮的树下摆了一张桌子，我还一直在采摘最好吃的草莓，因为我知道你很喜欢草莓，我们还有那么好的奶油。这儿的一切都那么甜蜜，一切都那么宁静，啊！”她说，一下扑进他的怀里，高兴地仰望着他的脸，“噢，我们就是那么幸福！”

可怜的莱斯利再也无法控制住自己——他把妻子拥抱在怀里，他用双臂抱住她，一遍又一遍地吻她，他说不出话来，泪水充满了他的双眼。他经常肯定地告诉我，尽管他从一开始就非常富足，而且他的确也一直生活得很幸福。然而，他却从来没有体验过如那一刻的精彩与幸福。

伦敦古迹

我在漫步

千真万确，
心同圭多·沃克斯，提着黑暗的灯笼，
偷偷给这座城市放火；
跑到乡下，我被认为神出鬼没，
或者是罗宾·古德菲洛 [6]。

——弗莱彻

我有那么点儿热衷于搜寻古物，喜欢跑遍整个伦敦，探寻古时的遗迹。这些遗迹多深藏于伦敦的某个角落，掩埋于乃至消失在由砖块和泥浆构成的一片荒芜之中。不过，从环绕它们的那个司空见惯、平淡无奇的世界里，却可以领略其诗情画意和浪漫情趣。近来夏日，在漫游伦敦的过程中，我对这种情形感触至深，因为只有在夏季去探寻伦敦才最便利。此时的伦敦，没有烟，没有雾，没有冬日的雨水和泥浆。有好一阵子，我一直是在逆行于舰队街的人流中，艰难地行进。暖和的天气早已让我神经紧张，让我对每一次的震动、每一次的碰撞、每一种刺耳的声音，都异常敏感。我的身体疲惫不堪，精神萎靡不振，挣扎着挤过那熙熙攘攘、忙忙碌碌的人群，让我失去了好心情。我感到一阵绝望，便从人群中挤了过去，冲进一条小巷子，穿过几个不起眼的拐角，来到一个古雅而宁静的院子里。院子中央有一片草地，榆树低垂，喷泉喷着水，闪闪发光，让草地始终保持着青翠。一个手上捧着书的学生坐在一块石凳上，一边看书，一边若有所思地望着两三个负责照看婴孩、身材苗条的保姆们的一举一动。

我就像一个在贫瘠得令人窒息的沙漠中突然找到绿洲的阿拉伯人。渐渐地，这个地方的宁静和凉爽让我心绪安宁，精神焕发。我继续前行，来到了附近一座非常古老的教堂。低矮的撒克逊式门额宏伟而富丽。教堂的内部呈圆形，顶部高耸，灯光从高处照下来。教堂四

周，是古时的纪念碑，上面是一个个身穿盔甲大理石武士雕像。有的武士虔诚地把双手交叉在胸前，另一些则紧握剑柄圆头——即使是在墓中，他们也要气势汹汹，满怀敌意！还有几位交叉着双腿，他们看上去是心怀信仰，曾参加过十字军东征，去往圣地的士兵。

我，实际上是在“骑士圣殿”的教堂里，它竟出乎意料地置身于肮脏喧闹的市中心。于我这个精通世故的人来说，突然离开忙碌、追求金钱生活的人生道路，端坐于唯有暮色、尘埃和被人遗忘的阴暗的坟墓之间时，让我坚信，我定能获得更为深刻的教益。

这显然是一座公共大厦。因为我就是来探访古迹的，所以尽管迈着迟疑的步子，我还是贸然走了进去。如此闯入，既没人阻止，也没人非难。我继续前行，直至来到一个大厅。大厅那高耸的顶部呈拱形，走廊是橡木制成的，都是清一色的哥特式风格。大厅的一端是一个巨大的壁炉，壁炉的两边都放着高背长椅。大厅的另一端是一个高台，或许是讲坛，那是至尊的席位。高台的上方是一个男子的画像，男子身着古代服饰：一袭长袍，白色的拉夫领，令人肃然起敬的灰白胡须。

整个建筑有一种修道院式的宁静和隐秘感。而令这个建筑有着神秘魅力的另一个地方在于：自我跨过门槛后，还没碰到过一个人。

受到眼前这种寂寥的刺激，我在一个大弓形窗的凹处坐了下来。一大片金色的阳光透过彩色玻璃窗户射进来，被分割成了小方格，投射在地上。柔和的夏日微风从一扇开着的窗户轻拂入内。此时，我把头依靠在手上，把胳膊撑在一张旧橡木桌上，然后就这个问题陷入了沉思：这座大厦在古代最有可能做何种用途呢？很显然，它起初一直是用来做修道院的。也许是从前建起来为了推广学术的一种学院机构。这里的僧侣都很有耐心，在修道院那无垠的孤寂中，他们一页页地，一卷卷地，不断增添内容，精心打造自己的作品，尽量使它有着与自己所居的建筑群相匹敌的魅力。

当我坐着冥思苦想时，大厅上端的拱门内，一个有饰板的小门打开了。一帮头发灰白、身着长长的黑色斗篷的老人逐一走了出来。他们一言不发，穿过大厅，往前行进。在经过时，一个个面色苍白地看了看我，然后穿过大厅下端的另一扇门，消失了。

我对他们的外表感到异常惊奇。他们那黑色的斗篷，他们那古风十足的神态，与这栋庄严而神秘建筑的风格非常相称。他们就像是那些我一直在冥思苦想的古代幽灵，像放电影一样，从我眼前飘过。我本着浪漫主义的精神，用这些幻象来取悦自己，着手去探寻那个我为自己所描绘的，存于黑暗中的国度。这个国度恰巧存在于现实世界的正中心。

我漫步着，穿过了迷宫般的内部庭院、走廊和破旧的修道院。许多大型建筑物都会有各种建于不同时期、风格各异的扩建部分和附属建筑物。在一个开阔地带，有很多显然就住在这座建筑物中的男孩子在玩着游戏。无论我去哪里，都能注意到那些身穿黑色斗篷、头发灰白、异常神秘的老人。他们时而独自漫步，时而凑在一起说说话，看上去俨然成了停留于此，随处可见的鬼魂。这时，我突然回想起自己读过的古时候某些大学的情况。这些大学，给学生教授的是司法占星术、泥土占卜、招魂术和其他被禁止的神奇科学。难道这就是那样的一种机构？难道那些身穿黑色斗篷的老人，真正的身份其实是传授这些黑暗艺术的教授们吗？

当这些猜测正掠过我的脑海时，我的目光刚好瞥过一个房间的內部。房间里挂满了各种奇怪、做工粗糙的物品，有野蛮人的作战工具；奇怪的玩偶和填充的鳄鱼标本；瓶装的蛇和怪物装饰着的壁炉架；还有，在一张老式床的高台上，一个咧嘴笑着的人的头骨，两侧各有一只风干的猫。

我向前走去，更仔细地看了看这个神秘的房间。房间似乎非常适合做巫师的实验室。这时，我看到一双眼睛正从一个阴暗的角落盯着我看，不免大吃一惊。原来是一个个头很小、全身干瘪的老头儿，他的脸颊瘦削，双眼明亮，突出的眉毛灰白、坚硬。我起初还以为是一只神奇的保存良好的木乃伊。结果它开始到处走动，我才注意到“它”是活的。这是另一位身着黑色斗篷的老头儿。在我端详那古怪的面相、过时的装束，还有环绕在他周围的那些可怕而又凶险的各种物品时，我开始说服自己：我这是碰到大法师了——正是他管辖着这个有魔力的男信徒组织。

看到我在门前停了下来，他起身请我进去。我以从未有过的胆量，应邀而入，因为，我怎么能确保，他不会挥一挥法杖，把我变成某种怪物呢？或者把我收进他壁炉台上的某只瓶子里？可是，他的一切都证明了他绝不是个巫师。他很单纯，话很多，这很快消除了我先前认为的，一直笼罩在这栋古老的建筑及同样古老的居民周围的所有魔法和神秘气息。

看上去我是进入了一个古老的，庇护老迈商人和衰落房主的核心，同该中心相连的是一所男孩子数量有限的学校。它建在一座古修

道院上，两个多世纪以来多少还保留了修道院的氛围和特征。先前在大厅里从我面前经过的那些身穿斗篷的，被我视为魔术师的老人其实是靠养老金生活的人。他们刚从礼拜堂做完早礼拜回来。

约翰·哈勒姆，也就是先前那位被我当成大法师的古董收藏家，在这个地方已经生活了六年，还用他一生收集到的圣物和珍品给这个作为他晚年最后归宿的地方做了装饰。根据他自己的说法，他好歹也算得上是个旅游家，曾在法国待过，还差点儿去了荷兰。他很后悔荷兰之旅未曾成行，“要是去成了，他很可能早就聊起去过那儿的事儿了”——可以很明显地看出，他是那种很单纯的游客。

他在观念很有贵族气。据我观察，他跟那些普通的靠养老金生活的人拒不往来。他主要交往的人包括：一位讲拉丁语和希腊语的盲人，而对这两种语言，哈勒姆是一窍不通的；另一位是一个穷困潦倒的绅士，他早就把他父亲遗留的四万英镑挥霍掉了，还把妻子的嫁妆钱一万英镑挥霍光了。个头小小的哈勒姆似乎觉得，能够挥霍掉这么大的两笔巨款，确实是无可辩驳地显示出了崇高的精神和高贵的出身。

附笔：

这个让读者如痴如醉的旧时风景如画的遗迹，就是现在的“查特豪斯慈善机构”，原先叫“加尔都西修道院”。它是于一六六一年由托马斯·萨顿爵士在一个古老的女修道院旧址上建造起来的，是经个人慷慨解囊而着手建造的高贵慈善机构之一。尽管置身于伦敦的现代变革与创新之中，但它一直保持着远古时代的古怪与圣洁。这里八十位身体衰弱的男子，曾过着富裕的日子。如今，他们的晚年却要由他人来提供衣食、燃料，领用年度津贴。他们像昔日的僧侣那样一起在大厅里就餐。大厅曾是早先修道院的食堂。该建筑还有个附属机构，是一所招收了四十四名男生的学校。

斯托——他的著作我在探讨这个问题时参考过——在谈到这些头发灰白、靠养老金生活的人的各种义务时，说：“关涉到医院事务的任何事情，他们是不允许干预的。他们只需专心侍奉上帝，只需对提供给他们的一切心存感激而不要嘀咕，不要私下抱怨，不要嫉恨。任何人都不得携带武器，不得留长发，不得穿彩色的靴子，不得穿骑马时用的靴刺，不得在帽子上装饰羽毛，不得凶神恶煞，不得穿奇装异服，只得穿着像病人一样的衣服。”“说实在话，”斯托补充道，“真正幸福的就是这样一些人，他们从人世间的一切忧愁和烦恼中解脱出来，然后就像这些老人那样，固定地住在一个这么好的地方，毫无后顾之忧之忧，只有宁静的心灵来侍奉上帝，在兄弟般的情谊中生活。”

破碎的心

我从未听说

有什么真正的爱情

可以不为忧虑所吞食，

忧虑，犹如毛虫

蛀蚀着春天最甜蜜的图书——玫瑰的叶子。

——米德尔顿

从早期情感伤痛中活过来的人，或者在享乐至上、冷漠无情的环境中长大的人，通常的做法便是嘲笑所有的爱情故事，把富于浪漫激情的各种故事仅仅看成是小说家们和诗人们虚构的作品。我对人性的种种考察，让我有了不同的见解。这些考察让我相信，就算性格的表象可能会因人世间的烦恼而变得冷漠，因社交中的圆滑塑造而徒留一张笑脸，但在最冰冷的内心深处，仍然潜伏着随时都有可能爆发的烈火。一旦被触发，烈火就会肆虐，有时还会带来凄惨的后果。真的，我笃信盲神，并充分理解他的教义——我要承认吗？——我相信会有破碎的心，相信会有死于失恋的可能！可我并不认为这对于男性来说，是致命的疾病；但我坚信，这会使许多可爱的女子渐渐枯萎，早早地进入坟墓。

男人是追逐利益、野心勃勃的动物。他们的天性使得他们勇猛地闯入人世间的斗争和喧嚣之中。爱，仅仅是他们早年生活的点缀，抑或是在幕间休息时用管乐器演奏的一首歌。男人追名逐利，试图在世人的思想中占有一席之地，试图统领自己的同胞。可是，女人的一生就是一部感情史，心即是她的世界：就是在那里，她雄心勃勃地要得到绝对控制权；就是在那里，她贪婪地寻觅着深藏的珍宝。她对冒险会不遗余力，并在情感交流中寄托自己的整个灵魂，而一旦触礁，她便无可救药，因为那颗心碎了。

对于男人而言，失恋也许会引起某种刻骨铭心的剧痛：它伤害了脉脉的柔情，它毁灭了幸福的前景。但他是一个有活力的个体，他会

在各种纷繁事务中把各种念想抛到九霄云外，或者一头扎进快乐的洪流中。再或者，如果失恋之地带给他痛苦的回忆，他会随自己意愿迁往另一个住地，他会乘上清晨的翅膀，“飞往海角天涯，寻求那份安宁”。

但相比而言，女人过的是一种固定的、隐蔽的、冥想的生活。更多时候，她往往离不开自己的思想，离不开自己的感情。如果她的思想和感情被转化成悲伤的代言人，她从何处得到慰藉！她命中注定要被男人追求，要被男人俘虏。如果在爱中得不到幸福，她的心就像被攻破的、被洗劫的、被抛弃的堡垒，惨遭劫掠，最后剩下的就只有凄凉和孤寂。

有多少明亮的眼睛最终黯淡无光，有多少柔软的面颊最终没有血色，有多少优美的身段逐渐消失入墓。可是没有谁能说得清到底是什么摧毁了她们的美丽。就像鸽子要把翅膀搭在身体的一侧，遮住和掩盖射中它命脉的飞箭一样，女人天性也是要向世人隐瞒受伤的情感带来的剧痛。细腻的女子，总是爱得羞涩，爱得无声。即便当幸运降临时，她也几乎是只字不提。但当不幸降临时，她便将痛苦埋藏于内心深处。在那里，她让厄运在自己安宁的废墟间萎缩、消退。对她来说，心中的渴望已经远去，生存的巨大魅力已经结束。她无视一切令人欢愉的运动，尽管这些运动使人精神振奋，加快脉搏跳动，使生命潮汐在血管里健康地涌动着。她的那份宁静已被打破——忧郁的梦魇破坏了清新甜蜜的睡眠——“干涸的悲伤吸干了她的鲜血”，直到她那衰弱的躯干在最轻微的外部伤害下垮掉。假如你过一段时间去找她，你就发现朋友因她过早走进坟墓而哭泣。你大惑不解：一个不久前还容光焕发、光鲜美丽的人儿，怎么那么快就坠落到“黑暗与蠕虫”为伍的阴间。有人会告诉你，那是由于冬日严寒，某种不经意的小病，要了她的小命——但是，谁又知晓先前就耗掉了她体力、使她轻易成为掠夺者猎物的心理疾病？

她就像一棵娇嫩的树，代表着小树林的荣耀和美丽；它姿态婀娜，枝繁叶茂，但心里却遭受着蠕虫的叮咬。在它最应该充满活力、繁茂之时，却突然枯萎了。我们看到它的枝头低垂到了地面；看到它一片树叶接着一片树叶地凋零。直到消耗殆尽、慢慢消亡，在寂静的森林中轰然倒下。而当我们重温这美丽的废墟时，我们再怎么努力也无法追忆起究竟是什么狂风暴雨将它摧毁。

我见过许多女人自我轻视，自我毁灭，并渐渐从这世上消失，就好像她们早早地被蒸发到了天国。我不止一次地想，我可以通过对耗掉她们生命的各种衰微症状（如感冒、衰弱、疲倦、忧郁等）的研究，来追踪她们死亡的痕迹，直至我找到她们失恋的首发症状。可是，最近有人给我讲起同样的事例。这件事在事件发生的国度尽人皆

知，我在这里就只讲讲是如何发生的。

大家一定记得爱尔兰爱国人士——年轻的艾某某 [7] 的悲惨故事。他的故事太感人了，让人难以忘记。在爱尔兰动乱期间，他被指控犯有叛国罪，受到了审判和谴责，继而被处以绞刑。他的命运引起公众深深的同情。他是那么年轻、聪明，那么大方、勇敢，一个年轻人受人青睐的种种美德，均在他身上有所体现。在接受审判时，他的表现是那样高尚、无畏。他用崇高而激愤的方式击退了他人对他叛国罪的指控。那是一场维护名誉的雄辩，也是在受到谴责的无望时刻，对下一代人发出的可悲的呼吁。所有这些，都深深扎进每一个慷慨之人的心胸，就连他的敌人也痛恨那条规定处死他的严苛政策。

但是有一颗心，它的痛苦是无法描述的。在先前快乐、幸运的日子里，他赢得了一位美丽可爱的姑娘的芳心。姑娘是已故著名爱尔兰律师的女儿。她爱着他，像所有年轻女孩初恋之时那样无私，充满热情。当他与世俗的行为准则格格不入时，当他遭受厄运，耻辱和危险黑压压地笼罩着他的名声时，她却正因为他所遭受的苦难而爱得更加热烈。倘若此时，他的命运甚至都能够唤起敌人的同情……那个全部灵魂都被他音容笑貌所占据的她，从头到尾又将忍受何种极度的痛苦！请那些人说说，到底是谁让他们突然阴阳两隔？就像一个人坐在坟墓的门槛上，眼看着另一个被关进了寒冷而寂寞的世界，从此，一切可爱的事物，所有亲爱的人儿，都将永远地诀别。

紧接着，看看这是怎样一个恐怖的坟墓！那么可怕，那么不光彩！没有任何回忆可以用来抚慰这样分离的痛苦；也没有温柔而忧郁的环境，使分别稍显亲切；没有任何东西可以把悲伤融化成犹如天堂露水般幸福的泪珠，使人在痛苦的焦灼时刻，恢复往日的心情。

她不幸的恋情还引得父亲的不快，恼怒的父亲早已将她赶出家门，这一切使现在寡居的她更显凄凉。假若朋友们的同情之心和仁慈之举能触动这个被恐怖经历所震惊、被恐惧所裹挟的灵魂的话，她应该也就不再需要什么安慰了，因为爱尔兰人是一个思维敏捷、慷慨大方的民族。很多富有又显赫的家庭都对她关怀备至，她被介绍进社交圈子，他们让她参加各种娱乐活动，以消除她内心的悲痛，让她同先前那悲剧的爱情故事一刀两断。但一切都是徒然。在遭受如此打击之后，她的灵魂已经被灼烧甚至焦化；而她幸福的温床也随之被毁，再也不会发芽或开花。她从来没有拒绝去光顾娱乐的场所，但她还是像原先那样，形单影孤，置身于深深的孤独中。她会四下里走走，却总处于悲伤的遐想之中，很显然，她对周围的世界失去感觉。她内心深处，满满的都是忧伤。她用内心的忧伤嘲笑着朋友给予的所有甜言蜜语，“不听行法术的声音，虽用极灵的咒语、也是不听” [8]。

向我讲述她故事的人曾在一个化装舞会上碰到过她。没有比在这

样的场合遇见她，更能显示出她早先曾有过的痛苦是多么触目惊心、令人心碎。他看到她像幽灵一样，四处游荡，孤独、悲伤，而环绕周围的却是欢乐的景象。他看到她穿着欢乐的服装，脸色是那么苍白，那么愁苦，就好像她曾徒然努力去欺骗那颗可怜的心，让它把伤悲短暂地遗忘。心不在焉地信步穿过一个个富丽堂皇的房间和眼花缭乱的人群后，她就在管弦乐队的台阶上坐了下来。有一阵子，她茫然地四下张望，这说明她对眼前花哨的场面没有了感觉。带着一颗病弱的心，她开始反复无常地哼起了哀伤的小调。她的声音本来很甜美，但在这个场合，它是那么简朴，那么动人。它吐露出了一颗悲戚的灵魂，让周围的人听得鸦雀无声，把周围的每个人软化得眼含热泪。

在一个以热情著称的国度，如此真诚而又温柔的故事，不可能不激起人们浓厚的兴趣。她完全赢得了一位勇敢军官的心。军官向她求爱，并认为一个对死者如此忠贞的人，对生者不可能不一往情深。她谢绝了军官的求婚，她的全部心思不可动摇地专注于昔日情人的记忆里。可是，那位军官却紧追不舍。他所寻求的不是她的柔情，而是她的尊重。她心里清楚，他很富有，也知道自己穷困，且要依赖他人才能生存。现下她要靠好心的朋友接济才能维持生活，这境况帮了他的忙。总之，他同她终于成功牵手，尽管明确地知道：她的心不可改变地属于另一个男人。

那位军官带着她去了意大利的西西里岛，希望换一个环境会让她慢慢忘记昔日的悲痛。她和蔼可亲，是一个模范的妻子，她也在努力成为快乐生活的人。可是，没有什么医治得了那份早已进入她灵魂的，默默地、吞噬着她生命的悲哀。她在缓慢却是无望的消瘦中日渐衰弱，最后走进了坟墓，成了破碎之心的牺牲品。

就是为了她，著名的爱尔兰诗人托马斯·穆尔 [9] 写下了如下诗行：

她远离了那片土地，那个她年轻英雄的长眠之地，

周围爱恋她的人无不哀叹；

但很冷漠地，她避开他们的注视而独自哭泣，

因为她的心留在了躺着那英雄的地底。

她唱着可爱家乡的平原上那豪放的歌曲，

他热爱的每个音符震撼人心——

哎，喜欢听她歌曲的人们，

很少想到这是被怎样撕碎着的歌者的心！

他为了爱人而活；为了祖国献身而死。

这乃是伴随他生命的一切——

他祖国的眼泪不会很快干涸，

他爱的人儿亦不会在他身后久留！

啊！给她造一座阳光永驻的坟墓吧，

因为阳光预示着灿烂一天的开始；

阳光将照耀她的睡姿，那仿佛是来自西方的微笑，

仿佛是来自她至爱的悲伤之岛的微笑！

Rip Van Winkle

The following Tale was found among the papers of the late Diedrich Knickerbocker, an old gentleman of New York, who was very curious in the Dutch history of the province, and the manners of the descendants from its primitive settlers. His historical researches, however, did not lie so much among books, as among men; for the former are lamentably scanty on his favourite topics; whereas he found the old burghers, and still more, their wives, rich in that legendary lore so invaluable to true history. Whenever, therefore, he happened upon a genuine Dutch family, snugly shut up in its low roofed farm house, under a spreading sycamore, he looked upon it as a little clasped volume of black letter, and studied it with the zeal of a bookworm.

The result of all these researches was a history of the province, during the reign of the Dutch governors, which he published some years since. There have been various opinions as to the literary character of his work and, to tell the truth, it is not a whit better than it should be. Its chief merit is its scrupulous accuracy, which indeed was a little questioned on its first appearance, but has since been completely established; and it is now admitted into all historical collections as a book of unquestionable authority.

The old gentleman died shortly after the publication of his work, and now that he is dead and gone, it cannot do much harm to his memory to say that his time might have been much better employed in weightier labours. He, however, was apt to ride his hobby his own way; and though it did now and then kick up the dust a little in the eyes of his neighbours, and grieve the spirit of some friends for whom he felt the truest deference and affection; yet his errors and follies are remembered 'more in sorrow than in anger,' and it begins to be suspected that he never intended to injure or offend. But however his memory may be appreciated by critics, it is still held dear by many folk whose good opinion is well worth having; particularly by certain biscuit bakers, who have gone so far as to imprint his likeness on their new year cakes, and have thus given him a chance for immortality, almost equal to being stamped on a Waterloo medal, or a Queen Anne's farthing.

CARTWRIGHT.

Whoever has made a voyage up the Hudson must remember the Kaatskill mountains. They are a dismembered branch of the great Appalachian family, and are seen away to the west of the river swelling up to noble height and lording it over the surrounding country. Every change of season, every change of weather, indeed every hour of the day, produces some change in the magical hues and shapes of these moun-tains, and they are regarded by all the good wives far and near as perfect barometers. When the weather is fair and settled they are clothed in blue and purple, and print their bold outlines on the clear evening sky; but sometimes, when the rest of the landscape is cloudless, they will gather a hood of grey vapours about their summits, which, in the last rays of the setting sun, will glow and light up like a crown of glory.

At the foot of these fairy mountains the voyager may have descried the light smoke curling up from a village, whose shingle roofs gleam among the trees, just where the blue tints of the upland melt away into the fresh green of the nearer landscape. It is a little village of great antiquity, having been founded by some of the Dutch colonists in the early times of the province, just about the beginning of the government of the good Peter Stuyvesant, (may he rest in peace!) and there were some of the houses of the original settlers standing within a few years; built of small yellow bricks brought from Holland, having latticed windows and gable fronts, surmounted with weathercocks.

In that same village, and in one of these very houses (which to tell the precise truth was sadly time worn and weather beaten) there lived many years since, while the country was yet a province of Great Britain, a simple good natured fellow of the name of Rip Van Winkle. He was a descendant of the Van Winkles who figured so gallantly in the chivalrous days of Peter Stuyvesant, and accompanied him to the siege of Fort Christina. He inherited, however, but little of the martial character of his ancestors. I have observed that he was a simple good natured man; he was moreover a kind neighbour, and an obedient, henpecked husband. Indeed to the latter circumstance might be owing that meekness of spirit which gained him such universal popularity; for those men are most apt to be obsequious and conciliating abroad, who are under the discipline of shrews at home. Their tempers doubtless are rendered pliant and malleable in the fiery furnace of domestic tribulation, and a curtain lecture is worth all the sermons in the world for teaching the virtues of patience and long suffering. A termagant wife may therefore in some respects be considered a tolerable blessing - and if so, Rip Van Winkle was thrice blessed.

Certain it is that he was a great favourite among all the good wives of the village, who as usual with the amiable sex, took his part in all family squabbles, and never failed, whenever they talked those matters over in their evening gossipings, to lay all the blame on Dame Van Winkle. The children of the village too would shout with joy whenever he approached. He assisted at their sports, made their play things, taught them to fly kites and shoot marbles, and told them long stories of ghosts, witches and Indians. Whenever he went dodging about the village he was surrounded by a troop of them hanging on his skirts, clambering on his back and playing a thousand tricks on him with impunity; and not a dog would bark at him throughout the neighbourhood.

The great error in Rip's composition was an insuperable aversion to all kinds of profitable labour. It could not be from the want of assiduity or perseverance; for he would sit on a wet rock, with a rod as long and heavy as a Tartar's lance, and fish all day without a murmur, even though he should not be encouraged by a single nibble. He would carry a fowling piece on his shoulder for hours together, trudging through woods, and swamps and up hill and down dale, to shoot a few squirrels or wild pigeons; he would never refuse to assist a neighbour even in the roughest toil, and was a foremost man at all country frolicks for husking Indian corn, or building stone fences; the women of the village too used to employ him to run their errands and to do such little odd jobs as their less obliging husbands would not do for them - in a word Rip was ready to attend to any body's business but his own; but as to doing family duty, and keeping his farm in order, he found it impossible.

In fact he declared it was of no use to work on his farm; it was the most pestilent little piece of ground in the whole country; every thing about it went wrong and would go wrong in spite of him. His fences were continually falling to pieces; his cow would either go astray or get among the cabbages, weeds were sure to grow quicker in his fields than any where else; the rain always made a point of setting in just as he had some outdoor work to do. So that though his patrimonial estate had dwindled away under his management, acre by acre until there was little more left than a mere patch of Indian corn and potatoes, yet it was the worst conditioned farm in the neighbourhood.

His children too were as ragged and wild as if they belonged to nobody. His son Rip, an urchin begotten in his own likeness, promised to inherit the habits with the old clothes of his father. He was generally seen trooping like a colt at his mother's heels, equipped in a pair of his father's cast off galligaskins, which he had much ado to hold up with one hand, as a fine lady does her train in bad weather.

Rip Van Winkle, however, was one of those happy mortals of foolish, well oiled dispositions, who take the world easy, eat white bread or brown, whichever can be got with least thought or trouble, and would rather starve on a penny than work for a pound. If left to himself, he would have whistled life away in perfect contentment, but his wife kept continually dinning in his ears about his idleness, his carelessness and the ruin he was bringing on his family. Morning noon and night her tongue was incessantly going, and every thing he said or did was sure to produce a torrent of household eloquence. Rip had but one way of replying to all lectures of the kind, and that by frequent use had grown into a habit. He shrugged his shoulders, shook his head, cast up his eyes, but said nothing. This, however, always provoked a fresh volley from his wife, so that he was fain to draw off his forces and take to the outside of the house - the only side which in truth belongs to a henpecked husband.

Rip's sole domestic adherent was his dog Wolf who was as much henpecked as his master, for Dame Van Winkle regarded them as companions in idleness, and even looked upon Wolf with an evil eye as the cause of his master's going so often astray. True it is, in all points of spirit befitting an honourable dog, he was as courageous an animal as ever scoured the woods - but what courage can withstand the ever during and all besetting terrors of a woman's tongue? The moment Wolf entered the house his crest fell, his tail drooped to the ground or curled between his legs, he sneaked about with a gallows air, casting many a sidelong glance at Dame Van Winkle, and at the least flourish of a broomstick or ladle he would fly to the door with yelping precipitation.

Times grew worse and worse with Rip Van Winkle as years of matrimony rolled on; a tart temper never mellows with age, and a sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use. For a long while he used to console himself when driven from home, by frequenting a kind of perpetual club of the sages, philosophers and other idle personages of the village which held its sessions on a bench before a small inn, designated by a rubicund portrait of his majesty George the Third. Here they used to sit in the shade, through a long lazy summer's day, talking listlessly over village gossip, or telling endless sleepy stories about nothing. But it would have been worth any statesman's money to have heard the profound discussions that some-times took place, when by chance an old newspaper fell into their hands from some passing traveller. How solemnly they would listen to the contents as drawled out by Derrick Van Bummel the schoolmaster, a dapper, learned little man, who was not to be daunted by the most gigantic word in the dictionary; and how sagely they would deliberate upon public events some months after they had taken place.

The opinions of this junto were completely controlled by Nicholas Vedder, a patriarch of the village, and landlord of the inn, at the door of which he took his seat from morning till night, just moving sufficiently to avoid the sun and keep in the shade of a large tree; so that the neighbours could tell the hour by his movements as accurately as by a sun dial. It is true he was rarely heard to speak, but smoked his pipe incessantly. His adherents, however (for every great man has his adherents), perfectly understood him and knew how to gather his opinions. When any thing that was read or related displeased him, he was observed to smoke his pipe vehemently and to send forth short, frequent and angry puffs; but when pleased he would inhale the smoke slowly and tranquilly and emit it in light and placid clouds, and sometimes taking the pipe from his mouth and letting the fragrant vapour curl about his nose, would gravely nod his head in token of perfect approbation.

From even this strong hold the unlucky Rip was at length routed by his termagant wife who would suddenly break in upon the tranquility of the assemblage and call the members all to naught; nor was that august personage Nicholaus Ved-der himself sacred from the daring tongue of this terrible virago, who charged him outright with encouraging her husband in habits of idleness.

Poor Rip was at last reduced almost to despair; and his only alternative to escape from the labour of the farm and the clamour of his wife, was to take gun in hand and stroll away into the woods. Here he would sometimes seat himself at the foot of a tree and share the contents of his wallet with Wolf, with whom he sympathised as a fellow sufferer in per-secution. 'Poor Wolf,' he would say, 'thy mistress leads thee a dog's life of it, but never mind my lad, whilst I live thou shalt never want a friend to stand by thee!' Wolf would wag his tail, look wistfully in his master's face, and if dogs can feel pity I verily believe he reciprocated the sentiment with all his heart.

In a long ramble of the kind on a fine autumnal day, Rip had unconsciously scrambled to one of the highest parts of the Kaatskill mountains. He was after his favourite sport of squirrel shooting and the still solitudes had echoed and re-echoed with the reports of his gun. Panting and fatigued he threw himself, late in the afternoon, on a green knoll, covered with mountain herbage, that crowned the brow of a precipice. From an opening between the trees he could overlook all the lower country for many a mile of rich wood-land. He saw at a distance the lordly Hudson, far, far below him, moving on its silent but majestic course, with the reflection of a purple cloud, or the sail of a lagging bark here and there sleeping on its glassy bosom, and at last losing itself in the blue highlands.

On the other side he looked down into a deep mountain glen, wild, lonely and shagged, the bottom filled with fragments from the impending cliffs and scarcely lighted by the reflected rays of the setting sun. For some time Rip lay musing on this scene, evening was gradually advancing, the mountains began to throw their long blue shadows over the valleys, he saw that it would be dark, long before he could reach the village, and he heaved a heavy sigh when he thought of encountering the terrors of Dame Van Winkle.

As he was about to descend he heard a voice from a distance hallooing 'Rip Van Winkle! Rip Van Winkle!' He looked around, but could see nothing but a crow winging its solitary flight across the mountain. He thought his fancy must have deceived him and turned again to descend, when he heard the same cry ring through the still evening air: 'Rip Van Winkle! Rip Van Winkle!' - at the same time Wolf bristled up his back and giving a low growl, skulked to his master's side, looking fearfully down into the glen. Rip now felt a vague apprehension stealing over him; he looked anxiously in the same direction and perceived a strange figure slowly toiling up the rocks and bending under the weight of something he carried on his back. He was surprised to see any human being in this lonely and unfrequented place, but supposing it to be some one of the neighbourhood in need of his assistance he hastened down to yield it.

On nearer approach he was still more surprised at the singularity of the stranger's appearance. He was a short, square built old fellow, with thick bushy hair and a grizzled beard. His dress was of the antique Dutch fashion, a cloth jerkin strapped round the waist, several pair of breeches, the outer one of ample volume decorated with rows of buttons down the sides and bunches at the knees. He bore on his shoulder a stout keg that seemed full of liquor, and made signs for Rip to approach and assist him with the load. Though rather shy and distrustful of this new acquaintance Rip complied with his usual alacrity, and mutually relieving each other they clambered up a narrow gully apparently the dry bed of a mountain torrent. As they ascended Rip every now and then heard long rolling peals like distant thunder, that seemed to issue out of a deep ravine or rather cleft between lofty rocks, toward which their rugged path conducted. He paused for an instant, but supposing it to be the muttering of one of those transient thunder showers which often take place in mountain heights, he proceeded. Passing through the ravine they came to a hollow like a small amphi-theatre, surrounded by perpendicular precipices, over the brinks of which impending trees shot their branches, so that you only caught glimpses of the azure sky and the bright evening cloud. During the whole time Rip and his companion had laboured on in silence, for though the former marvelled greatly what could be the object of carrying a keg of liquor up this wild mountain, yet there was something strange and incomprehensible about the unknown, that inspired awe and checked familiarity.

On entering the amphitheatre new objects of wonder pre-sented themselves. On a level spot in the centre was a company of odd looking personages playing at ninepins. They were dressed in a quaint outlandish fashion - some wore short doublets, others jerkins with long knives in their belts and most of them had enormous breeches of similar style with that of the guide's. Their visages too were peculiar. One had a large head, broad face and small piggish eyes. The face of another seemed to consist entirely of nose, and was surmounted by a white sugarloaf hat, set off with a little red cock's tail. They all had beards of various shapes and colours. There was one who seemed to be the Com-mander. He was a stout old gentleman, with a weatherbeaten countenance. He wore a laced doublet, broad belt and hanger, high crowned hat and feather, red stockings and high heel'd shoes with roses in them. The whole group reminded Rip of the figures in an old Flemish painting, in the parlour of Dominie Van Schaick the village parson, and which had been brought over from Holland at the time of the settlement.

What seemed particularly odd to Rip was, that though these folks were evidently amusing themselves, yet they maintained the gravest faces, the most mysterious silence, and were, withal, the most melancholy party of pleasure he had ever witnessed. Nothing interrupted the stillness of the scene, but the noise of the balls, which, whenever they were rolled, echoed along the mountains like rumbling peals of thunder.

As Rip and his companion approached them they suddenly desisted from their play and stared at him with such fixed statue like gaze, and such strange uncouth, lack lustre countenances, that his heart turned within him, and his knees smote together. His companion now emptied the contents of the keg into large flagons and made signs to him to wait upon the company. He obeyed with fear and trembling; they quaffed the liquor in profound silence and then returned to their game.

By degree Rip's awe and apprehension subsided. He even ventured, when no eye was fixed upon him, to taste the beverage, which he found had much of the flavour of excellent hollands. He was naturally a thirsty soul and was soon tempted to repeat the draught. One taste provoked another, and he reiterated his visits to the flagon so often that at length his senses were overpowered, his eyes swam in his head - his head gradually declined and he fell into a deep sleep.

On awaking he found himself on the green knoll from whence he had first seen the old man of the glen. He rubbed his eyes - it was a bright, sunny morning. The birds were hopping and twittering among the bushes, and the eagle was wheeling aloft and breasting the pure mountain breeze. 'Surely,' thought Rip, 'I have not slept here all night. He recalled the occurrences before he fell asleep. The strange man with a keg of liquor - the mountain ravine - the wild retreat among the rocks - the woe begone party at ninepins - the flagon - 'ah! that flagon! that wicked flagon!' thought Rip - 'what excuse shall I make to Dame Van Winkle?'

He looked round for his gun, but in place of the clean well oiled fowling piece he found an old firelock lying by him, the barrel encrusted with rust; the lock falling off and the stock worm eaten. He now suspected that the grave roysters of the mountain had put a trick upon him, and having dosed him with liquor, had robbed him of his gun. Wolf too had disappeared, but he might have strayed away after a squirrel or partridge. He whistled after him and shouted his name - but all in vain; the echoes repeated his whistle and shout, but no dog was to be seen.

He determined to revisit the scene of the last evening's gambol, and if he met with any of the party, to demand his dog and gun. As he arose to walk he found himself stiff in the joints and wanting in his usual activity. 'These mountain beds do not agree with me,' thought Rip, 'and if this frolick should lay me up with a fit of the rheumatism, I shall have a blessed time with Dame Van Winkle.' With some difficulty he got down into the glen; he found the gully up which he and his companion had ascended the preceding evening, but to his astonishment a mountain stream was now foam-ing down it; leaping from rock to rock, and filling the glen with babbling murmurs. He, however, made shift to scam-ble up its sides working his toilsome way through thickets of birch, sassafras and witch hazel, and sometimes tripped up or entangled by the wild grape vines that twisted their coils and tendrils from tree to tree, and spread a kind of net work in his path.

At length he reached to where the ravine had opened through the cliffs, to the amphitheatre - but no traces of such opening remained. The rocks presented a high impene-trable wall over which the torrent came tumbling in a sheet of feathery foam, and fell into a broad deep basin black from the shadows of the surrounding forest. Here then poor Rip was brought to a stand. He again called and whistled after his dog - he was only answered by the cawing of a flock of idle crows, sporting high in air about a dry tree that over-hung a sunny precipice; and who, secure in their elevation seemed to look down and scoff at the poor man's perplexities.

What was to be done?The morning was passing away and Rip felt famished for want of his breakfast. He grieved to give up his dog and gun; he dreaded to meet his wife; but it would not do to starve among the mountains. He shook his head, shouldered the rusty fire lock and with a heart full of trouble and anxiety, turned his steps homeward.

As he approached the village he met a number of people, but none whom he knew, which somewhat surprised him, for he had thought himself acquainted with every one in the country round. Their dress too was of a different fashion from that to which he was accustomed. They all stared at him with equal marks of surprise, and whenever they cast their eyes upon him, invariably stroked their chins. The constant recurrence of this gesture induced Rip involuntar-ily to do the same, when to his astonishment he found his beard had grown a foot long!

He had now entered the skirts of the village. A troop of strange children ran at his heels, hooting after him and pointing at his grey beard. The dogs too, not one of which he recognized for an old acquaintance, barked at him as he passed. The very village was altered - it was larger and more populous. There were rows of houses which he had never seen before, and those which had been his familiar haunts had disappeared. Strange names were over the doors - strange faces at the windows - every thing was strange. His mind now misgave him; he began to doubt whether both he and the world around him were not bewitched. Surely this was his native village which he had left but the day before. There stood the Kaatskill mountains - there ran the silver Hudson at a distance - there was every hill and dale precisely as it had always been - Rip was sorely perplexed - 'That flagon last night,' thought he, 'has addled my poor head sadly!'

It was with some difficulty that he found the way to his own house, which he approached with silent awe, expecting every moment to hear the shrill voice of Dame Van Winkle. He found the house gone to decay - the roof fallen in, the windows shattered and the doors off the hinges. A half starved dog that looked like Wolf was skulking about it. Rip called him by name but the cur snarled, shewed his teeth and passed on. This was an unkind cut indeed - 'My very dog,' sighed poor Rip, 'has forgotten me!'

He entered the house, which, to tell the truth, Dame Van Winkle had always kept in neat order. It was empty, forlorn and apparently abandoned. This desolateness overcame all his connubial fears - he called loudly for his wife and children - the lonely chambers rung for a moment with his voice, and then all again was silence.

He now hurried forth and hastened to his old resort, the village inn - but it too was gone. A large, rickety wooden building stood in its place, with great gaping windows, some of them broken, and mended with old hats and petticoats, and over the door was printed 'The Union Hotel, by Jonathan Doolittle.' Instead of the great tree, that used to shelter the quiet little Dutch inn of yore, there now was reared a tall naked pole with something on top that looked like a red night cap, and from it was fluttering a flag on which was a singular assemblage of stars and stripes - all this was strange and incomprehensible. He recognized on the sign, however, the ruby face of King George under which he had smoked so many a peaceful pipe, but even this was singularly metamorphosed. The red coat was changed for one of blue and buff; a sword was held in the hand instead of a sceptre; the head was decorated with a cocked hat, and underneath was printed in large characters GEN-ERAL WASHINGTON.

There was as usual a crowd of folk about the door; but none that Rip recollected. The very character of the people seemed changed. There was a busy, bustling disputatious tone about it, instead of the accustomed phlegm and drowsy tranquility. He looked in vain for the sage Nicholas Vedder with his broad face, double chin and fair long pipe, uttering clouds of tobacco smoke instead of idle speeches. Or Van Bummel the schoolmaster doling forth the contents of an ancient newspaper. In place of these a lean bilious looking fellow with his pockets full of hand bills, was haranguing vehemently about rights of citizens - elections - members of Congress - liberty - Bunker's hill - heroes of seventy six - and other words which were a perfect babylonish jar-gon to the bewildered Van Winkle.

The appearance of Rip with his long grizzled beard, his rusty fowling piece his uncouth dress and an army of women and children at his heels soon attracted the attention of the tavern politicians. They crowded around him eying him from head to foot, with great curiosity. The orator hustled up to him, and drawing him partly aside, enquired 'on which side he voted?' - Rip stared in vacant stupidity. Another short but busy little fellow, pulled him by the arm and rising on tiptoe, enquired in his ear 'whether he was Federal or Democrat?' - Rip was equally at a loss to comprehend the question - when a knowing, self important old gentleman, in a sharp cocked hat, made his way through the crowd, putting them to the right and left with his elbows as he passed, and planting himself before Van Winkle, with one arm akimbo, the other resting on his cane, his keen eyes and sharp hat penetrating as it were into his very soul, demanded in an austere tone - 'what brought him to the election with a gun on his shoulder and a mob at his heels, and whether he meant to breed a riot in the village?' - 'Alas gentlemen,' cried Rip, somewhat dismayed, 'I am a poor quiet man, a native of the place, and a loyal subject of the King - God bless him!'

Here a general shout burst from the bystanders - 'A tory! a tory! a spy! a Refugee! hustle him! away with him!' - It was with great difficulty that the self important man in the cocked hat restored order; and having assumed a ten fold austerity of brow demanded again of the unknown culprit, what he came there for and whom he was seeking. The poor man humbly assured him that he meant no harm; but merely came there in search of some of his neighbours, who used to keep about the tavern.

'Well - who are they? - name them.'

Rip bethought himself a moment and enquired, 'Where's Nicholaus Vedder?'

There was a silence for a little while, when an old man replied, in a thin, piping voice, 'Nicholaus Vedder? why he is dead and gone these eighteen years! There was a wooden tombstone in the church yard that used to tell all about him, but that's rotted and gone too.'

'Where's Brom Dutcher?'

'Oh he went off to the army in the beginning of the war; some say he was killed at the storming of Stoney Point - others say he was drowned in a squall at the foot of Antony's Nose - I don't know - he never came back again.'

'Where's Van Bummel the schoolmaster?'

'He went off to the wars too - was a great militia general, and is now in Congress.'

Rip's heart died away at hearing of these sad changes in his home and friends, and finding himself thus alone in the world - every answer puzzled him too by treating of such enormous lapses of time and of matters which he could not understand - war - Congress, Stoney Point - he had no courage to ask after any more friends, but cried out in despair, 'Does nobody here know Rip Van Winkle?'

'Oh. Rip Van Winkle?' exclaimed two or three - 'oh to be sure! - that's Rip Van Winkle - yonder - leaning against the tree.'

Rip looked and beheld a precise counterpart of himself, as he went up the mountain: apparently as lazy and certainly as ragged! The poor fellow was now completely confounded. He doubted his own identity, and whether he was himself or another man. In the midst of his bewilderment the man in the cocked hat demanded who he was, - what was his name?

'God knows,' exclaimed he, at his wit's end, 'I'm not myself. - I'm somebody else - that's me yonder - no - that's somebody else got into my shoes - I was myself last night; but I fell asleep on the mountain - and they've changed my gun - and every thing's changed - and I'm changed - and I can't tell what's my name, or who I am!

The bystanders began now to look at each other, nod, wink significantly and tap their fingers against their fore-heads. There was a whisper also about securing the gun, and keeping the old fellow from doing mischief - at the very suggestion of which, the self important man in the cocked hat retired with some precipitation. At this critical moment a fresh likely looking woman pressed through the throng to get a peep at the greybearded man. She had a chubby child in her arms, which frightened at his looks began to cry. 'Hush Rip,' cried she, 'hush you little fool, the old man won't hurt you. The name of the child, the air of the mother, the tone of her voice all awakened a train of recollections in his mind. 'What is your name my good woman?' asked he.

'Judith Gardenier.'

'And your father's name?'

'Ah, poor man, Rip Van Winkle was his name, but it's twenty years since he went away from home with his gun and never has been heard of since - his dog came home without him - but whether he shot himself, or was carried away by the Indians no body can tell. I was then but a little girl.'

Rip had but one question more to ask, but he put it with a faltering voice -

'Where's your mother?' -

Oh she too had died but a short time since - she broke a blood vessel in a fit of passion at a New England pedlar. -

There was a drop of comfort at least in this intelligence. The honest man could contain himself no longer - he caught his daughter and her child in his arms. - 'I am your father!' cried he - 'Young Rip Van Winkle once - old Rip Van Win-kle now! - does nobody know poor Rip Van Winkle!'

All stood amazed, until an old woman tottering out from among the crowd put her hand to her brow and peering under it in his face for a moment exclaimed - 'Sure enough! - it is Rip Van Winkle - it is himself - welcome home again old neighbour - why, where have you been these twenty long years?'

Rip's story was soon told, for the whole twenty years had been to him but as one night. The neighbours stared when they heard it; some were seen to wink at each other and put their tongues in their cheeks, and the self important man in the cocked hat, who when the alarm was over had returned to the field, screwed down the corners of his mouth and shook his head - upon which there was a general shak-ing of the head throughout the assemblage.

It was determined, however, to take the opinion of old Peter Vanderdonk, who was seen slowly advancing up the road. He was a descendant of the historian of that name, who wrote one of the earliest accounts of the province. Peter was the most ancient inhabitant of the village and well versed in all the wonderful events and traditions of the neighbourhood. He recollected Rip at once, and corroborated his story in the most satisfactory manner. He assured the company that it was a fact handed down from his ancestor the historian, that the Kaatskill mountains had always been haunted by strange beings. That it was affirmed that the great Hendrick Hudson, the first discoverer of the river and country, kept a kind of vigil there every twenty years, with his crew of the Half Moon - being permitted in this way to revisit the scenes of his enterprize and keep a guard-ian eye upon the river and the great city called by his name. That his father had once seen them in their old Dutch dresses playing at ninepins in a hollow of the mountain; and that he himself had heard one summer afternoon the sound of their balls, like distant peals of thunder.

To make a long story short - the company broke up, and returned to the more important concerns of the election. Rip's daughter took him home to live with her; she had a snug well furnished house, and a stout cheery farmer for a husband whom Rip recollected for one of the urchins that used to climb upon his back. As to Rip's son and heir, who was the ditto of himself seen leaning against the tree; he was employed to work on the farm; but evinced an hereditary disposition to attend to any thing else but his business.

Rip now resumed his old walks and habits; he soon found many of his former cronies, though all rather the worse for the wear and tear of time; and preferred making friends among the rising generation, with whom he soon grew into great favour. Having nothing to do at home, and being arrived at that happy age when a man can be idle, with impunity, he took his place once more on the bench at the inn door and was revered as one of the patriarchs of the village and a chronicle of the old times 'before the war.' It was some time before he could get into the regular track of gossip, or could be made to comprehend the strange events that had taken place during his torpor. How that there had been a revolutionary war - that the country had thrown off the yoke of Old England and that instead of being a subject of his majesty George the Third, he was now a free citizen of the United States. Rip in fact was no politician; the changes of states and empires made but little impression on him; but there was one species of despotism under which he had long groaned and that was petticoat government. Happily that was at an end - he had got his neck out of the yoke of matrimony, and could go in and out whenever he pleased without dreading the tyranny of Dame Van Winkle. Whenever her name was mentioned, however, he shook his head, shrugged his shoulders and cast up his eyes; which might pass either for an expression of resignation to his fate or joy at his deliverance.

He used to tell his story to every stranger that arrived at Mr Doolittle's Hotel. He was observed at first to vary on some points, every time he told it, which was doubtless owing to his having so recently awaked. It at last settled down precisely to the tale I have related and not a man woman or child in the neighbourhood but knew it by heart. Some always pretended to doubt the reality of it, and insisted that Rip had been out of his head, and that this was one point on which he always remained flighty. The old Dutch inhabitants, however, almost universally gave it full credit - Even to this day they never hear a thunder storm of a summer afternoon about the Kaatskill, but they say Hendrick Hudson and his crew are at their game of nine-pins; and it is a common wish of all henpecked husbands in the neighbourhood, when life hangs heavy on their hands, that they might have a quieting draught out of Rip Van Winkle's flagon.

NOTE

The foregoing tale one would suspect had been suggested to Mr Knickerbocker by a little German superstition about the emperor

Frederick der 【斜体】Rothbart【/斜体】and the Kypphauser Mountain; the subjoined note, however, which he had appended to the tale, shews that it is an absolute fact, nar-rated with his usual fidelity. -

'The story of Rip Van Winkle may seem incredible to many, but nevertheless I give it my full belief, for I know the vicinity of our old Dutch settlements to have been very subject to marvellous events and appearances. Indeed I have heard many stranger stories than this, in the villages along the Hudson; all of which were too well authenti-cated to admit of a doubt. I have even talked with Rip Van Winkle myself, who when last I saw him was a very vener-able old man and so perfectly rational and consistent on every other point, that I think no conscientious per-son could refuse to take this into the bargain - nay I have seen a certificate on the subject taken before a country just-ice and signed with a cross in the justice's own hand writing. The story therefore is beyond the possibility of doubt. D.K.'

The following are travelling notes from a memorandum book of Mr Knickerbocker.

The Kaatsberg or Catskill mountains have always been a region full of fable. The Indians considered them the abode of spirits who influenced the weather, spreading sunshine or clouds over the landscape and sending good or bad hunt-ing seasons. They were ruled by an old squaw spirit, said to be their mother. She dwelt on the highest peak of the Cats-kills and had charge of the doors of day and night to open and shut them at the proper hour. She hung up the new moons in the skies and cut up the old ones into stars. In times of drought, if properly propitiated, she would spin light summer clouds out of cobwebs and morning dew, and send them off, from the crest of the mountain, flake after flake, like flakes of carded cotton to float in the air: until, dissolved by the heat of the sun, they would fall in gentle showers, causing the grass to spring, the fruits to ripen and the corn to grow an inch an hour. If displeased, however, she would brew up clouds black as ink, sitting in the midst of them like a bottle bellied spider in the midst of its web; and when these clouds broke - woe betide the valleys!

In old times say the Indian traditions, there was a kind of Manitou or Spirit, who kept about the wildest recesses of the Catskill mountains, and took a mischievous pleasure in wreaking all kinds of evils and vexations upon the red men. Sometimes he would assume the form of a bear a panther or a deer, lead the bewildered hunter a weary chase through tangled forests and among rugged rocks; and then spring off with a loud ho! ho! leaving him aghast on the brink of a beetling precipice or raging torrent.

The favorite abode of this Manitou is still shewn. It is a great rock or cliff in the loneliest part of the mountains, and, from the fowering vines which clamber about it, and the wild fowers which abound in its neighborhood, is known by the name of the Garden Rock. Near the foot of it is a small lake the haunt of the solitary bittern, with water snakes basking in the sun on the leaves of the pond lillies which lie on the surface. This place was held in great awe by the Indians, insomuch that the boldest hunter would not pursue his game within its precincts. Once upon a time, however, a hunter who had lost his way, penetrated to the garden rock where he beheld a number of gourds placed in the crotches of trees. One of these he seized and made of with it, but in the hurry of his retreat he let it fall among the rocks, when a great stream gushed forth which washed him away and swept him down precipices where he was dashed to pieces, and the stream made its way to the Hudson and continues to flow to the present day; being the identical stream known by the name of the Kaaters-kill.

Te Wife

The treasures of the deep are not so precious
As are the conceal' d comforts of a man
Lock' d up in woman's love. I scent the air
Of blessings, when I come but near the house.
What a delicious breath marriage sends forth,
The violet bed's not sweeter!

MIDDLETON.

I have often had occasion to remark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirits of a man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character, that at times it approaches to sublimity. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness while treading the pros-perous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force, to be the comforter and supporter of her husband under misfor-tune, and abiding, with unshrinking firmness, the bitterest blasts of adversity.

As the vine which has long twined its graceful foliage about the oak, and been lifted by it into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunderbolt, cling round it with its caressing tendrils and bind up its shattered boughs; so is it beautifully ordered by providence, that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sud-den calamity, winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature; tenderly supporting the drooping head, and binding up the broken heart.

I was once congratulating a friend, who had around him a blooming family knit together in the strongest affection. 'I can wish you no better lot,' said he, with enthusiasm, 'than to have a wife and children. If you are prosperous, there they are to share your prosperity; and if otherwise, there they are to comfort you. - 'And indeed I have observed that a married man falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one; partly because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for sub-sistence; but chiefly because his spirits are soothed and relieved by domestic endearments, and his self respect kept alive by finding, that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch. Whereas a single man is apt to run to waste and self neglect; to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall to ruin like some deserted mansion for want of an inhabitant.

These observations call to mind a little domestic story, of which I was once a witness. My intimate friend Leslie had married a beautiful and accomplished girl, who had been brought up in the midst of fashionable life. She had, it is true, no fortune, but that of my friend was ample and he delighted in the anticipation of indulging her in every elegant pursuit; and administering to those delicate tastes and fancies, that spread a kind of witchery about the sex - 'her life,' said he, 'shall be like a fairy tale.'

The very difference in their characters produced an harmonious combination. He was of a romantic and somewhat serious cast; she was all life and gladness. I have often noticed the mute rapture with which he would gaze upon her in company, of which her sprightly powers made her the delight; and how in the midst of applause, her eye would still turn to him, as if there alone she sought favour and acceptance. When leaning on his arm her slender form contrasted finely with his tall, manly person. The fond confiding air with which she looked up to him, seemed to call forth a flush of triumphant pride and cherishing tenderness; as if he doted on his lovely burthen, for its very helplessness. - Never did a couple set forward on the flowery path of early and well suited marriage, with a fairer prospect of felicity.

It was the misfortune of my friend, however, to have embarked his property in large speculations, and he had not been married many months, when, by a succession of sudden disasters, it was swept from him, and he found himself reduced almost to penury. For a time he kept his situation to himself and went about with a haggard countenance and a breaking heart. His life was but a protracted agony, and what rendered it more insupportable was the necessity of keeping up a smile in the presence of his wife; for he could not bring himself to overwhelm her with the news. She saw, however, with the quick eyes of affection, that all was not well with him. She marked his altered looks and stifled sighs, and was not to be deceived by his sickly and vapid attempts at cheerfulness. She tasked all her sprightly powers and tender blandishments to win him back to happiness; but she only drove the arrow deeper into his soul - the more he saw cause to love her the more torturing was the thought that he was soon to make her wretched. A little while, thought he, and the smile will vanish from that cheek - the song will die away from those lips - the lustre of those eyes will be quenched with sorrow; and the happy heart which now beats lightly in that bosom, will be weighed down like mine by the cares and miseries of the world.

At length he came to me, one day, and related his whole situation in a tone of the deepest despair. When I had heard him through I enquired, 'Does your wife know all this?' - at the question he burst into an agony of tears - 'For God's sake!' cried he, 'if you have any pity on me don't mention my wife - it is the thought of her that drives me almost to madness!'

'And why not?' said I, 'she must know it sooner or later: you cannot keep it long from her, and the intelligence may break upon her in a more startling manner than if imparted by yourself; for the accents of those we love soften the harsh-est tidings. Besides you are depriving yourself of the comforts of her sympathy and not merely that, but also endangering the only bond that can keep hearts together, an unreserved community of thought and feeling. She will soon perceive that something is secretly preying upon your mind, and true love will not brook reserve: it feels under-valued and outraged when even the sorrows of those it loves are concealed from it.'

'Oh but my friend! to think what a blow I am to give to all her future prospects - how I am to strike her very soul to the earth, by telling her that her husband is a beggar! - That she is to forego all the elegancies of life - all the pleasures of society - to shrink with me into indigence and obscurity! - To tell her that I have dragged her down from the sphere in which she might have continued to move in constant brightness - the light of every eye - the admiration of every heart!—How can she bear poverty! - she has been brought up in all the refinements of opulence. - How can she bear neglect! - she has been the idol of society - oh, it will break her heart! - it will break her heart! -'

I saw his grief was eloquent and I let it have its flow, for sorrow relieves itself by words. When his paroxysm had sub-sided and he had relapsed into moody silence, I resumed the subject gently, and urged him to break his situation at once to his wife. He shook his head mournfully, but positively.

'But how are you to keep it from her? It is necessary she should know it, that you may take the steps proper to the alteration of your circumstances. You must change your style of living - nay,' observing a pang to pass across his countenance- 'don't let that afflict you. I am sure you have never placed your happiness in outward shew - you have yet friends, warm friends, who will not think the worse of you for being less splendidly lodged; - and surely it does not require a palace to be happy with Mary -'

'I could be happy with her,' cried he convulsively, 'in a hovel! - I could go down with her into poverty and the dust! - I could - I could—God bless her! - God bless her! -' cried he, bursting into a transport of grief and tenderness.

'And believe me my friend,' said I stepping up and grasping him warmly by the hand - 'believe me, she can be the same with you. Aye, more - it will be a source of pride and triumph to her - it will call forth all the latent energies and fervent sympathies of her nature; for she will rejoice to prove that she loves you for yourself. There is in every true woman's heart a spark of heavenly fire which lies dormant in the broad daylight of prosperity; but which kindles up, and beams and blazes in the dark hour of adversity. No man knows what the wife of his bosom is - no man knows what a ministering angel she is - until he has gone with her through the fiery trials of this world.'

There was something in the earnestness of my manner, and the figurative style of my language that caught the excited imagination of Leslie. I knew the auditor I had to deal with; and following up the impression I had made, I finished by persuading him to go home and unburthen his sad heart to his wife.

I must confess, notwithstanding all I had said, I felt some little solicitude for the result. Who can calculate on the fortitude of one whose whole life has been a round of pleasures? - Her gay spirits might revolt at the dark down-ward path of low humility suddenly pointed out before her, and might cling to the sunny regions in which they had hitherto revelled. Besides, ruin in fashionable life is accompanied by so many galling mortifications to which in other ranks it is a stranger - in short, I could not meet Leslie the next morning without trepidation. He had made the disclosure.

- 'And how did she bear it?'

'Like an angel! It seemed rather to be a relief to her mind, for she threw her arms round my neck, and asked if this was all that had lately made me unhappy - but, poor girl,' - added he, 'she cannot realize the change we must undergo. She has no idea of poverty but in the abstract - she has only read of it in poetry, where it is allied to love. She feels as yet no privation - she suffers no loss of accustomed conveniences nor elegancies. When we come practically to experience its sordid cares, its paltry wants, its petty humiliations - then will be the real trial.'

'But,' said I, 'now that you have got over the severest task, that of breaking it to her, the sooner you let the world into the secret the better. The disclosure may be mortifying, but then it is a single misery and soon over, whereas you otherwise suffer it in anticipation, every hour in the day. It is not poverty so much as pretence, that harrasses a ruined man. The struggle between a proud mind and an empty purse - the keeping up a hollow shew that must soon come to an end. Have the courage to appear poor and you disarm poverty of its sharpest sting.' - On this point I found Leslie perfectly prepared. He had no false pride himself, and as to his wife she was only anxious to conform to their altered fortunes.

Some days afterwards he called upon me in the evening. He had disposed of his dwelling house and taken a small cottage in the country, a few miles from town. He had been busied all day in sending out furniture. The new establishment required few articles, and those of the simplest kind. All the splendid furniture of his late residence had been sold excepting his wife's Harp. That, he said, was too closely associated with the idea of herself - it belonged to the little story of their loves - for some of the sweetest moments of their courtship were those when he had leant over that instrument and listened to the melting tones of her voice. - I could not but smile at this instance of romantic gallantry in a doting husband.

He was now going out to the cottage, where his wife had been all day, superintending its arrangement. My feelings had become strongly interested in the progress of this family story and as it was a fine evening I offered to accom-pany him.

He was wearied with the fatigues of the day, and as we walked out, fell into a fit of gloomy musing.

‘Poor Mary!’ at length broke with a heavy sigh from his lips.

‘And what of her,’ asked I, ‘has any thing happened to her?’

‘What,’ said he, darting an impatient glance, ‘is it nothing to be reduced to this paltry situation - to be caged in a miserable cottage - to be obliged to toil almost in the menial concerns of her wretched habitation?’

‘Has she then repined at the change?’

‘Repined! - she has been nothing but sweetness and good humour. Indeed she seems in better spirits than I have ever known her - she has been to me all love and tenderness and comfort!’

‘Admirable girl!’ exclaimed I. ‘You call yourself poor my friend; you never were so rich - you never knew the bound-less treasures of excellence you possessed in that woman.’

‘Oh, but my friend - if this first meeting at the cottage were over - I think I could then be comfortable. But this is her first day of real experience. She has been introduced into our humble dwelling. She has been employed all day in arranging its miserable equipments. She has for the first time known the fatigues of domestic employment - She has for the first time looked around her on a home destitute of every thing elegant, - almost of every thing convenient, and may now be sitting down exhausted and spiritless, brooding over a prospect of future poverty.’

There was a degree of probability in this picture that I could not gainsay - so we walked on in silence.

After turning from the main road up a narrow lane so thickly shaded by forest trees as to give it a complete air of seclusion, we came in sight of the cottage. It was humble enough in its appearance for the most pastoral poet; and yet it had a pleasing rural look. A wild vine had over run one end with a profusion of foliage - a few trees threw their branches gracefully over it, and I observed several pots of flowers tastefully disposed about the door and on the grass plot in front. A small wicket gate opened upon a foot path that wound through some shrubbery to the door. Just as we approached we heard the sound of music. - Leslie grasped my arm - we paused and listened. It was Mary's voice sing-ing, in a style of the most touching simplicity, a little air of which her husband was peculiarly fond.

I felt Leslie's hand tremble on my arm. He stepped for-ward to hear more distinctly - His step made a noise on the gravel walk - a bright beautiful face glanced out at the window and vanished - a light footstep was heard, and Mary came tripping forth to meet us. She was in a pretty, rural dress of white; a few wild flowers were twisted in her fline hair; a fresh bloom was on her cheek; her whole coun-tenance beamed with smiles - I had never seen her look so lovely.

'My dear George,' cried she, 'I am so glad you are come - I' ve been watching and watching for you; and running down the lane, and looking out for you. I' ve set out a table under a beautiful tree behind the cottage - and I' ve been gathering some of the most delicious strawberries, for I know you are fond of them - and we have such excellent cream - and every thing is so sweet and still here - Oh!' said she, putting her arm within his, and looking up brightly in his face - 'oh, we shall be so happy!'

Poor Leslie was overcome - He caught her to his bosom - he folded his arms round her - he kissed her again and again - he could not speak, but the tears gushed into his eyes - And he has often assured me that though the world has since gone prosperously with him, and his life has, indeed, been a happy one; yet never has he experienced a moment of more exquisite felicity.

FLETCHER.

I am somewhat of an antiquity hunter and am fond of exploring London in quest of the reliques of old times. These are principally to be found in the depths of the city, swallowed up and almost lost in a wilderness of brick and mortar; but deriving poetical and romantic interest from the commonplace prosaic world around them. I was struck with an instance of the kind in the course of a recent sum-mer ramble into the city; for the city is only to be explored to advantage in summer time; when free from the smoke and fog, and rain and mud of winter. I had been buffeting for some time against the current of population setting through Fleet Street. The warm weather had unstrung my nerves and made me sensitive to every jar and jostle and discordant sound. The flesh was weary, the spirit faint and I was getting out of humor with the bustling busy throng through which I had to struggle, when in a fit of desperation I tore my way through the crowd, plunged into a bye lane, and after passing through several obscure nooks and angles emerged into a quaint and quiet court with a grass plot in the centre overhung by elms, and kept perpetually fresh and green by a fountain with its sparkling jet of water. A student with book in hand was seated on a stone bench, partly read-ing, partly meditating on the movements of two or three trim nursery maids with their infant charges.

I was like an Arab who had suddenly come upon an oasis amid the panting sterility of the desert. By degrees the quiet and coolness of the place soothed my nerves and refreshed my spirit. I pursued my walk and came, hard by, to a very ancient chapel with a low browed saxon portal of massive and rich architecture. The interior was circular and lofty, and lighted from above. Around were monumental tombs of ancient date, on which were extended the marble effigies of warriors in armour. Some had the hands devoutly crossed upon the breast; others grasped the pummel of the sword - menacing hostility even in the tomb! - while the crossed legs of several indicated soldiers of the Faith who had been on crusades to the Holy Land.

I was in fact, in the chapel of the Knights Templars, strangely situated in the very centre of sordid traffic; and I do not know a more impressive lesson for the man of the world than thus suddenly to turn aside from the high way of busy money seeking life, and sit down among these shadowy sepulchres, where all is twilight, dust and forget-fulness.

In a subsequent tour of observation I encountered another of these reliques of a 'foregone world' locked up in the heart of the city. I had been wandering for some time through dull monotonous streets, destitute of any thing to strike the eye or excite the imagination, when I beheld before me a gothic gate way of mouldering antiquity. It opened into a spacious quadrangle forming the court yard of a stately gothic pile the portal of which stood 'invitingly open.'

It was apparently a public edifice, and as I was antiquity hunting I ventured in, though with dubious steps. Meeting no one either to oppose or rebuke my intrusion I continued on until I found myself in a great hall with a lofty arched roof and oaken gallery, all of gothic architecture. At one end of the hall was an enormous fireplace with wooden set-tles on each side; at the other end was a raised platform or dais, the seat of state, above which was the portrait of a man in antique garb, with a long robe, a ruff and a venerable grey beard.

The whole establishment had an air of monastic quiet and seclusion, and what gave it a mysterious charm was, that I had not met with a human being since I had passed the threshold.

Encouraged by this loneliness I seated myself in a recess of a large bow window which admitted a broad flood of yellow sunshine, checquered here and there by tints from panes of colored glass; while an open casement let in the soft summer air. Here leaning my head on my hand and my arm on an old oaken table I indulged in a sort of reverie about what might have been the ancient uses of this edi-fice. It had evidently been of monastic origin; perhaps one of those collegiate establishments built of yore for the pro-motion of learning, where the patient monk, in the ample solitude of the cloister, added page to page and volume to volume, emulating in the productions of his brain the mag-nitude of the pile he inhabited.

As I was seated in this musing mood a small panneled door in an arch at the upper end of the hall was opened and a number of grey headed old men, clad in long black cloaks, came forth one by one; proceeding in that manner through the hall, without uttering a word, each turning a pale face on me as he passed, and disappearing through a door at the lower end.

I was singularly struck with their appearance; their black cloaks and antiquated air comported with the style of this most venerable and mysterious pile. It was as if the ghosts of the departed years about which I had been musing were passing in review before me. Pleasing myself with such fan-cies, I set out, in the spirit of Romance, to explore what I pictured to myself a realm of shadows, existing in the very centre of substantial realities.

My ramble led me through a labyrinth of interior courts and corridors and delapidated cloisters, for the main edifice had many additions and dependencies, built at various times and in various styles; in one open space a number of boys who evidently belonged to the establishment, were at their sports; but every where I observed those mysterious old grey men in black mantles, sometimes sauntering alone; some-times conversing in groups: they appeared to be the pervading genii of the place. I now called to mind what I had read of certain colleges in old times where judicial astrology, geomancy, necromancy and other forbidden and magical sciences were taught. Was this an establishment of the kind - and were these black cloaked old men really professors of the black art?

These surmises were passing through my mind as my eye glanced into a chamber, hung round with all kinds of strange and uncouth objects: implements of savage warfare; strange idols and stuffed alligators; bottled serpents and monsters decorated the mantelpiece; while on the high tester of an old fashioned bedstead grinned a human skull, flanked on each side by a dried cat.

I approached to regard more narrowly this mystic chamber, which seemed a fitting laboratory for a necromancer, when I was startled at beholding a human countenance staring at me from a dusky corner. It was that of a small, shrivelled old man, with thin cheeks, bright eyes, and grey wiry projecting eyebrows. I at first doubted whether it were not a mummy curiously preserved, but it moved and I saw that it was alive. It was another of these black cloaked old men, and, as I regarded his quaint physiognomy, his obsolete garb, and the hideous and sinister objects by which he was surrounded, I began to persuade myself that I had come upon the Arch Mago, who ruled over this magical fraternity.

Seeing me pausing before the door he rose and invited me to enter. I obeyed, with singular hardihood, for how did I know whether a wave of his wand might not metamorphose me into some strange monster, or conjure me into one of the bottles on his mantelpiece. He proved, however, to be any thing but a conjuror, and his simple garrulity soon dispelled all the magic and mystery with which I had enveloped this antiquated pile and its no less antiquated inhabitants.

It appeared that I had made my way into the centre of an ancient asylum for superannuated tradesmen and decayed householders, with which was connected a school for a limited number of boys. It was founded upwards of two centuries since on an old monastic establishment, and retained somewhat of the conventual air and character. The shadowy line of old men in black mantles who had passed before me in the hall, and whom I had elevated into magi, turned out to be the pensioners returning from morning service in the chapel.

John Hallum the little collector of curiosities whom I had made the arch magician, had been for six years a resident of the place, and had decorated this final nestling place of his old age with reliques and rarities picked up in the course of his life. According to his own account he had been somewhat of a traveller; having been once in France and very near making a visit to Holland. He regretted not having visited the latter country, 'as then he might have said he had been there.' - He was evidently a traveller of the simple kind.

He was aristocratical too in his notions; keeping aloof, as I found, from the ordinary run of pensioners. His chief associates were a blind man who spoke Latin and Greek, of both which languages Hallum was profoundly ignorant; and a broken down gentleman who had run through a fortune of forty thousand pounds left him by his father, and ten thousand pounds, the marriage portion of his wife. Little Hallum seemed to consider it an indubitable sign of gentle blood as well as of lofty spirit to be able to squander such enormous sums.

P. S. The picturesque remnant of old times into which I have thus beguiled the reader is what is called the Charter House, originally the Chartreuse. It was founded in 1611 on the remains of an ancient convent by Sir Thomas Sutton, being one of those noble charities set on foot by individual munificence, and kept up with the quaintness and sanctity of ancient times amidst the modern changes and innovations of London. Here eighty broken down men, who have seen better days, are provided, in their old age, with food, clothing, fuel and a yearly allowance for private expenses. They dine together as did the monks of old, in the hall which had been the refectory of the original convent. Attached to the establishment is a school for forty four boys.

Stow, whose work I have consulted on the subject; speaking of the obligations of the grey headed pensioners, says, "They are not to intermeddle with any business touching the affairs of the hospital; but to attend only to the service of God, and take thankfully what is provided for them, without muttering, murmuring or grudging. None to wear weapon, long hair, colored boots, spurs or colored shoes; feathers in their hats, or any ruffian like or unseemly apparel, but such as becomes hospital men to wear." 'And in truth,' adds Stow, 'happy are they that are so taken from the cares and sorrows of the world, and fixed in so good a place as these old men are; having nothing to care for, but the good of their souls, to serve God and to live in brotherly love.'

Te Broken Heart

I never heard

Of any true affection but'twas nipt
With care, that, like the caterpillar, eats
The leaves of the spring's sweetest book, the rose.

MIDDLETON.

It is a common practice with those who have outlived the susceptibility of early feeling, or have been brought up in the gay heartlessness of dissipated life, to laugh at all love stories, and to treat the tales of romantic passion as mere fictions of novelists and poets. My observations on human nature have induced me to think otherwise. They have convinced me, that however the surface of the character may be chilled and frozen by the cares of the world, or cultivated into mere smiles by the arts of society, still there are dormant fires lurking in the depths of the coldest bosom, which, when once enkindled, become impetuous and are sometimes desolating in their effects. Indeed, I am a true believer in the blind deity, and go to the - Shall I confess it? - I believe in broken hearts and the possibility of dying of disappointed love! - I do not, however, extend to his doctrines, consider it a malady often fatal to my own sex; but I firmly believe that it withers down many a lovely woman into an early grave.

Man is the creature of interest and ambition. His nature leads him forth into the struggle and bustle of the world. Love is but the embellishment of his early life, or a song piped in the intervals of the acts. He seeks for fame, for fortune, for space in the world's thought, and dominion over his fellow men. But a woman's whole life is a history of the affections. The heart is her world: it is there her ambition strives for empire: it is there her avarice seeks for hidden treasures. She sends forth her sympathies on adventure; she embarks her whole soul in the traffic of affection, and if shipwrecked her case is hopeless, for it is a bankruptcy of the heart.

To a man the disappointment of love may occasion some bitter pangs - it wounds some feelings of tenderness - it blasts some prospects of felicity; but he is an active being - he may dissipate his thoughts in the whirl of varied occupation; or may plunge into the tide of pleasure. Or if the scene of disappointment be too full of painful associations, he can shift his abode at will, and, taking as it were the wings of the morning, can 'fly to the uttermost parts of the earth and be at rest.'

But woman's is comparatively a fixed, a secluded, and a meditative life. She is more the companion of her own thoughts and feelings; and if they are turned to ministers of sorrow, where shall she look for consolation! Her lot is to be wooed and won; and if unhappy in her love, her heart is like some fortress that has been captured, and sacked, and abandoned and left desolate.

How many bright eyes grow dim - how many soft cheeks grow pale - how many lovely forms fade away into the tomb, and none can tell the cause that blighted their loveliness. As the dove will clasp its wings to its side, and cover and conceal the arrow that is preying on its vitals; so is it the nature of woman to hide from the world the pangs of wounded affection. The love of a delicate female is always shy and silent. Even when fortunate, she scarcely breathes it to herself; but when otherwise, she buries it in the recesses of her bosom, and there lets it cower and brood among the ruins of her peace. With her the desire of the heart has failed. The great charm of existence is at an end. She neglects all the cheerful exercises which gladden the spirits, quicken the pulses and send the tide of life in healthful currents through the veins. Her rest is broken - the sweet refreshment of sleep is poisoned by melancholy dreams - 'dry sorrow drinks her blood,' until her enfeebled frame sinks under the slightest external injury. Look for her, after a little while, and you find friendship weeping over her untimely grave, and wondering that one, who but lately glowed with all the radiance of health and beauty, should so speedily be brought down to 'darkness and the worm.' You will be told of some wintry chill, some casual indisposition that laid her low - but no one knows of the mental malady which previously sapped her strength and made her so easy a prey to the spoiler.

She is like some tender tree, the pride and beauty of the grove; graceful in its form; bright in its foliage, but with the worm preying at its heart. We find it suddenly withering when it should be most fresh and luxuriant. We see it drooping its branches to the earth and shedding leaf by leaf; until wasted and perished away, it falls even in the stillness of the forest; and as we muse over the beautiful ruin, we strive in vain to recollect the blast or thunderbolt that could have smitten it with decay.

I have seen many instances of women running to waste and self neglect, and disappearing gradually from the earth, almost as if they had been exhaled to heaven; and have repeatedly fancied that I could trace their deaths through the various declensions of consumption, cold, debility, languor, melancholy, until I reached the first symptom of disappointed love. But an instance of the kind was lately told to me; the circumstances are well known in the country where they happened, and I shall but give them in the manner in which they were related.

Every one must recollect the tragical story of young E—the Irish patriot; it was too touching to be soon forgotten. During the troubles in Ireland he was tried, condemned and executed on a charge of treason. His fate made a deep impression on public sympathy. He was so young - so intelligent - so generous - so brave - so every thing that we are apt to like in a young man. His conduct under trial too was so lofty and intrepid. The noble indignation with which he repelled the charge of treason against his country - the eloquent vindication of his name, his pathetic appeal to posterity in the hopeless hour of condemnation - all these entered deeply into every generous bosom, and even his enemies lamented the stern policy that dictated his execution.

But there was one heart, whose anguish it would be impossible to describe. In happier days and fairer fortunes he had won the affections of a beautiful and interesting girl, the daughter of a late celebrated Irish Barrister. She loved him with the disinterested fervour of a woman's first and early love. When every worldly maxim arrayed itself against him; when blasted in fortune, and disgrace and danger darkened around his name, she loved him the more ardently for his very sufferings. If then his fate could awaken the sympathy even of his foes, what must have been the agony of her whose whole soul was occupied by his image! Let those tell who have had the portals of the tomb suddenly closed between them, and the being they most loved on earth - who have sat at its threshold, as one shut out in a cold and lonely world, from whence all that was most lovely and loving had departed.

But then the horrors of such a grave! so frightful - so dishonoured! - There was nothing for memory to dwell on that could soothe the pang of separation - none of those tender though melancholy circumstances which endear the parting scene - nothing to melt sorrow into those blessed tears, sent like the dews of heaven, to revive the heart in the parching hour of anguish.

To render her widowed situation more desolate, she had incurred her father's displeasure by her unfortunate attachment, and was an exile from the paternal roof. But could the sympathy and kind offices of friends have reached a spirit so shocked and driven in by horror, she would have experienced no want of consolation, for the Irish are a people of quick and generous sensibilities. The most delicate and cherishing attentions were paid her by families of wealth and distinction. She was led into society; and they tried by all kinds of occupations and amusements to dissipate her grief and wean her from the tragical story of her loves. But it was all in vain. There are some strokes of calamity which scathe and scorch the soul; which penetrate to the vital seat of happiness, and blast it, never again to put forth bud or blossom. She never objected to frequent the haunts of pleasure, but was as much alone there, as in the depths of solitude; walking about in a sad reverie, apparently unconscious of the world around her. She carried with her an inward woe that mocked at all the blandishments of friendship, and 'heeded not the song of the charmer, charm he never so wisely.'

The person who told me her story had seen her at a masquerade. There can be no exhibition of far gone wretchedness more striking and painful than to meet it in such a scene. To find it wandering like a spectre, lonely and joyless, where all around is gay - To see it dressed out in the trappings of mirth, and looking so wan and woe begone, as if it had tried in vain to cheat the poor heart into a momentary forgetfulness of sorrow. After strolling through the splendid rooms and giddy crowd with an air of utter abstraction, she sat herself down on the steps of an orchestra, and looking about for some time with a vacant air that shewed her insensibility to the garish scene, she began, with the capriciousness of a sickly heart, to warble a little plaintive air. She had an exquisite voice; but on this occasion it was so simple, so touching, it breathed forth such a soul of wretchedness, that she drew a crowd mute and silent around her, and melted every one into tears.

The story of one so true and tender could not but excite great interest in a country remarkable for enthusiasm. It completely won the heart of a brave officer, who paid his addresses to her, and thought that one so true to the dead, could not but prove affectionate to the living. She declined his attentions, for her thoughts were irrevocably engrossed by the memory of her former lover. He, however, persisted in his suit. He solicited not her tenderness, but her esteem. He was assisted by her conviction of his worth, and her sense of her own destitute and dependent situation, for she was existing on the kindness of friends - In a word he at length succeeded in gaining her hand, though with the solemn assurance that her heart was unalterably another's.

He took her with him to Sicily, hoping that a change of scene might wear out the remembrance of early woes. She was an amiable and exemplary wife, and made an effort to be a happy one; but nothing could cure the silent and devouring melancholy that had entered into her very soul. She wasted away in a slow but hopeless decline, and at length sunk into the grave, the victim of a broken heart.

It was on her that Moore the distinguished Irish poet composed the following lines.

She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps,

And lovers around her are sighing;

But coldly she turns from their gaze and weeps,

For her heart in his grave is lying.

She sings the wild song of her dear native plains,

Every note which he lov'd awaking -

Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,

How the heart of the minstrel is breaking!

He had liv'd for his love, for his country he died;
Tey were all that to life had entwin'd him -
Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried,
Nor long will his love stay behind him!
Oh! make her a grave where the sunbeams rest,
Wen they promise a glorious morrow;
Tey'll shine o'er her sleep, like a smile from the west,
From her own lov'd island of sorrow!

黑桃皇后主大祸临头。

——最新详梦书

在阴雨连绵的日子，
他们常常聚集
在一起；
押上宝——上帝饶恕！
他们的赌注
从五十到一百卢布，
有人赌赢了，
有人用粉笔
勾去输掉的数字。
在阴雨连绵的日子，
他们聚集在一起，
干的就是这件事。

一天，有些人聚集在近卫军骑兵纳鲁莫夫家里打牌。漫长的冬夜不知不觉过尽了，大家坐下来吃夜宵的时候已经是早上四点多钟。那些赌赢的人都吃得津津有味，另一些人却失魂落魄地坐在空餐具跟前。但香槟酒送来了，谈话又活跃起来，于是大家又在一起聊天。

“你打得怎么样，舒林？”主人问道。

“输了，跟以前一样。只能承认我运气不好：我没有加过赌注，从来不急躁，谁也不能把我搞糊涂，可我总是输！”

“你一次也没有着魔过吗？你一次也没有押过那张总能赢钱的牌吗？……你的倔强真叫我吃惊。”

“可你瞧瞧赫尔曼！”一个客人指着年轻的工兵军官说，“他从来没有摸过牌，从来没有叫过一次加倍，可总是陪我们坐到五点钟，一直瞧着我们打牌！”

“我对打牌很感兴趣，”赫尔曼说，“可是我不能为了非分之财，把少不了要用的钱拿去做赌注。”

“赫尔曼是德国人：他很节俭，就是这么回事！”托木斯基说，“如果说还有什么人使我摸不透，那就是我的祖母安娜·费多托夫娜伯爵夫人了。”

“怎么？你在说什么？”客人们都提高声音问道。

“我搞不懂，”托木斯基继续说，“为什么我祖母不再赌钱了！”

“一个八十岁的老太太不再赌钱，这有什么好奇怪的？”纳鲁莫夫问。

“这么说，您对她一点儿也不了解？”

“不了解！是的，一点儿也不了解！”

“噢，那么您听我说：

“您知道，我祖母六十年前去過巴黎，在那里她可是个风流人物。好多人都跟在她后面跑，想看看这个莫斯科的维纳斯 [1]；黎塞留 [2] 热烈追求过她，祖母肯定地说，由于她心肠太硬，几乎弄得他开枪自杀。

“那时太太们都流行打法拉翁 [3]。有一次，她在宫廷里和奥尔良公爵打赌，输了很多钱。祖母回到家里，从脸上揭下美人斑 [4]，脱下箍骨裙，对祖父说了她输钱的事，要他把钱付掉。

“我记得，祖父本来是祖母的管家。他怕她，就像怕火一样；可是一听到她输掉这么一笔惊人的数目，不禁大怒，他拿来账册，向她证明，半年来他们已经花掉五十万，还说在巴黎他们没有像莫斯科乡下或萨拉托夫乡下那样的财产，因此干脆拒绝替她还钱。祖母打了他一记耳光，单独躺下睡觉，表示不喜欢他。

“第二天，祖母吩咐仆人把祖父叫来，指望这种家庭的处罚能对他起作用，结果发现祖父仍毫不动摇。她有生以来第一次不得不对他讲道理；她想让他感到于心有愧，就好言好语地对他说，债务也有各

种各样，欠公爵的债和欠马车匠的债是不一样的。有什么用！祖父造反了。不行，没什么可说的！祖母简直走投无路。

“她有一个要好的朋友，是个相当有名的人物。你们都听说过圣热尔曼伯爵 [5]，他的奇事是那么多，大家都在纷纷传说。你们都知道，他自称是“终身漂泊的犹太人” [6]、长命水和点金石的发明者，等等。大家都笑他，说他到处招摇撞骗，卡萨诺瓦则在回忆录中说他是个奸细；不过，尽管圣热尔曼是个很神秘的人，却仪表堂堂，在社交界中很讨人喜欢。祖母至今还迷恋着他，要是有人说他坏话，她就会生气。祖母知道圣热尔曼有办法搞到大量金钱。她决定去找他帮忙。她给他写了一张便条，请他立即到她这儿来。

“这个老怪人立刻就来了，正看到祖母愁眉不展、十分痛苦。她用最恶毒的语言描绘了一通丈夫的野蛮，最后对他说，她只能在他的友谊和盛情厚意上面寄托她的全部希望了。

“圣热尔曼沉吟了一会儿。

“我可以为您筹措这笔钱，’他说，‘不过，我知道，在您还清这笔钱之前，您一定不会安心，而我则不想让您愁上加愁。我有一个办法，可以让您去翻本。’可是，亲爱的伯爵，’祖母回答，‘我跟您说，我根本没有钱。’这事不需要用钱，’圣热尔曼说，‘请您听我说完。’这时他向她公开了一个秘密，要是能知道这个秘密，我们当中每一个人都肯付出极昂贵的代价……”

年轻的赌徒们更注意听了。托木斯基吸起烟来，他深深地吸了一口，又说下去。

“当天晚上祖母到凡尔赛去，在皇后那里打牌 [7]。奥尔良公爵坐庄；祖母稍稍对他表示了一下歉意，说没有把欠款带来。为了替自己辩解，她还编造了一个小小的故事，接着便坐在他对面下注。她挑出三张牌，一张接一张下注：三张牌都替她赢了钱，这一来祖母便完全翻了本。”

“这是偶然的！”一个客人说。

“神话！”赫尔曼说。

“这牌大概玩弄了什么手法？”第三个接着说。

“我不认为这样。”托木斯基一本正经地说。

“真是怪事！”纳鲁莫夫说，“你有一个祖母，她能连续猜中三张牌，可你至今还没有向她学到这个秘诀。”

“是啊，有什么办法！”托木斯基回答，“她有四个儿子，我父亲是其中一个：四个人都是不顾死活的赌徒，可是她没有向任何一个公开

过这个秘密；虽然这样做对他们并没有坏处，对我也是这样。我叔父伊凡·伊里奇伯爵曾向我说过一件事，他用人格担保这是真的。已故的恰普利茨基，就是挥霍了万贯家财，死于穷困潦倒的那个，年轻的时候，有一次记得是输给佐里奇近三十万。他完全绝望了。祖母对年轻人的胡闹一向是很严厉的，可这一次她倒有点儿可怜恰普利茨基。她给他三张牌，让他一张一张押，并要他保证以后永远不再赌博。恰普利茨基到赢他钱的人那里去了。他们坐下来赌钱。恰普利茨基在第一张牌上押了五万，一下子就赢了；他押了两次加倍，翻了本，还赢了钱……

“然而该睡觉了，已经六点差一刻。”

其实，天已经大亮。这些年轻人喝完了杯里的酒，便各自回去了。

“您好像更喜欢那些使女。”

“有什么办法，太太？她们更鲜艳。”

——社交界的闲谈 [8]

某某老伯爵夫人坐在梳妆室的镜子前面。她身边有三个使女。一个拿着胭脂盒，一个端着发针匣，还有一个捧着一顶饰有红带子的高包发帽。伯爵夫人早已人老色衰，她丝毫不想再打扮自己的姿容，但她还保留着年轻时的习惯，严格模仿七十年代的流行式样，像六十年前一样，煞费苦心地打扮，花那么多时间。靠窗口的地方有一位小姐坐在那儿刺绣，那是她的养女。

“您好，祖母 [9]，”一个青年军官走进来，对她说，“您好，丽莎小姐。祖母，我有一件事要求您。”

“什么事，保罗 [10]？”

“请允许我向您介绍一个朋友，礼拜五我想把他带到舞会上来见您。”

“你把他直接带到舞会上来见我，那时候你就可以向我介绍了。你昨天去过某某人那里吗？”

“那还用说！快活极了，跳舞一直跳到早晨五点钟。叶烈茨卡娅多漂亮啊！”

“咳，我亲爱的！她有什么漂亮啊？她的祖母达丽亚·彼得罗夫娜公爵夫人也像她那样吗？……顺便说一句：我想，达丽亚·彼得罗夫娜

公爵夫人，她也很老了吧？”

“什么很老了？”托木斯基心不在焉地回答，“她过世七年了。”

小姐抬起头，对年轻人暗示了一下。他这才想起来，他们是对老伯爵夫人隐瞒了她这位同年女友的死讯的，于是他咬了咬嘴唇。可是伯爵夫人听到这个新闻却一点儿也不在乎。

“过世啦！”她说，“我一点儿也不知道！我们一起被封为宫中女官，我们一起觐见时，女皇……”

伯爵夫人又对她的孙子讲起自己的趣事，这件事她说过有一百遍了。

“好吧，保罗，”后来她说，“现在你扶我起来。丽桑卡 [11]，我的鼻烟壶在哪儿？”

接着，伯爵夫人带着几个使女到屏风后面去更衣。托木斯基和小姐留在房间里。

“您要介绍的人是谁？”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜轻声问道。

“纳鲁莫夫。您认识他吗？”

“不！他是不是军人？”

“是军人。”

“是工兵军官吗？”

“不！是骑兵。您为什么以为他是个工兵军官？”

小姐痴痴地笑起来，一个字也没有回答。

“保罗！”伯爵夫人在屏风后面叫道，“给我送一本新的小说来，不过不要现代的。”

“那要什么样的，祖母？”

“要这样的小说，里面的主人公并不掐死父亲或母亲，里面没有淹死的尸体。我最怕溺死的人了！”

“如今可没有这样的小说。您不想要俄国小说吗？”

“有俄国小说吗？……送来吧，亲爱的，请送来吧！”

“再见，祖母，我有事……再见，丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜！您为什么以为纳鲁莫夫是工兵军官？”

托木斯基走出梳妆室。

房间里只剩下丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜一个人，她放下手工，望着窗

外。不一会儿从街对面一个屋角里转出一个年轻军官来。她脸上泛起一片红晕。她又拿起手工，低头伏在绣布上。这时伯爵夫人换好衣服进来了。

“丽桑卡，”她说，“吩咐套上马车，我们出去玩玩。”

丽桑卡从绣架旁站起来，收拾着手工。

“你怎么了，我的孩子！是聋了还是怎么的！”伯爵夫人提高嗓门儿，“吩咐快点套上马车。”

“马上就去！”小姐轻声回答，立即跑到前厅去。

一个仆人走进来，把巴维尔·亚历山大罗维奇公爵送来的几本书交给伯爵夫人。

“很好！很感谢。”伯爵夫人说，“丽桑卡，丽桑卡！你到底跑到哪儿去了？”

“换衣服。”

“你还来得及的，我的孩子。坐在这儿。翻开第一卷，念给我听……”

小姐拿起一本书，读了几行。

“大声点！”伯爵夫人说，“你怎么啦，我的孩子？嗓子哑了还是怎么的？……等一等，把脚凳挪给我，再近点……好！”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜又读了两页。伯爵夫人打了个呵欠。

“别读了，”她说，“真是一派胡言！把它送还巴维尔公爵，要谢谢他……可马车怎么啦？”

“马车准备好了。”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜探头看看街上，说。

“你怎么还不换衣服？”伯爵夫人说，“老是叫人等你！我的孩子，这可叫人受不了。”

丽莎赶紧跑到她的房间去。还不到两分钟，伯爵夫人便死命地打起铃来。三个使女一起从一扇门里冲进来，侍仆则从另一扇门跑进来。

“你们怎么都叫不应呀？”伯爵夫人对他们说，“告诉丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜，说我在等她。”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜穿着晨衣、戴着帽子走进来。

“终于来了，我的孩子！”伯爵夫人说，“怎么穿这身衣服？这是干吗？……向谁卖俏？……今天天气怎么样？看样子有风吧。”

“一点儿风也没有，夫人！天气很好！”侍仆回答。

“你们总是瞎说一气！把通风窗打开。一点儿也不错，有风！还很冷呢！卸掉马车吧！丽桑卡，我们不去了，用不着打扮了。”

“我过的就是这种日子！”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜想。

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜确实是个极其不幸的人。但丁说过，别人的面包是苦的，别人的台阶是难登的。除了这个显贵老太婆的苦命养女，还有谁了解寄人篱下的生活是多么痛苦呢？某某伯爵夫人的心肠并不坏，这是不消多说的，但她是个养尊处优的女人，因而非常任性，她和那些在自己有生之年既不再谈恋爱又和现时的社会格格不入的老年人一样怪吝，一样养成了冷酷的利己主义的习惯。她参加上流社会的一切娱乐活动，出席舞会。在舞会上，她搽了胭脂，穿着老式服装，坐在角落里，就像舞厅里的一件丑陋而不可缺少的装饰品；来客都走到她跟前，向她深深鞠躬，好像在履行一种明文规定的仪式，此后就没人理她了。她遵守严格的礼节，在家里接待全城的名人，可是认不出任何人的面孔。无数的婢仆在她的前厅和下房里养得肥肥胖胖的，连头发也白了，他们想干什么就干什么，争相盗窃这个行将就木的老太婆的财产。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜是家里最倒霉的人。她给伯爵夫人倒茶，常常因此而受一顿训斥，说她糖放多了；她为伯爵夫人朗读小说，凡是作者的错误，都要怪她读错；她陪伯爵夫人出去散步，遇到天气不好或道路不平，她也要负责。她有规定的薪资，却从来没有拿到那么多；然而对她的装束却很挑剔，要求她穿得和极少数有钱人一样好。在交际场所里，她是个极可怜的角色。大家都认识她，可谁也不把她放在眼里。在舞会上，只有舞伴 [12] 不够的时候才轮得到她跳；每当太太小姐们需要到梳妆室去理理衣装的时候，都要把她拉去帮忙。她懂得自爱，深深明白自己的处境，总是注意着自己周围的人，迫切希望有人来解救她；但是那些青年人，为了维持浅薄的虚荣心，从不轻举妄动，并不对她表示垂怜，虽然丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜比他们死死缠住不放的那些厚颜无耻而又冷若冰霜的姑娘可爱一百倍。多少次她悄悄离开无聊而豪华的客厅，跑到她那简陋的房间里痛哭一场。她的房间里只有一扇裱着花纸的屏风，一个五斗橱，一面小镜子，和一张油漆过的床。一支脂油蜡烛在铜烛台上幽暗地燃烧着。

有一次——那是在这部小说开头所描写的那个晚上的两天以后，我们刚才谈到的那幕情景之前一个礼拜——丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜坐在窗下刺绣，无意中朝街上看了一眼，看见一个青年工兵军官，一动不动地站在那儿，注视着她的窗口。她低下头，重新做起手中的针线活；过了五分钟，她又朝街上看了看，青年军官仍旧站在那儿。她一向不和过路的军官调情，便不再朝街上看，埋头绣了近两个钟头。吃

中饭了，她站起来收拾绣架，无意中瞧了瞧街上，又看见那个军官。她觉得这事很蹊跷。饭后她怀着有些不安的心情走到窗边，但那个军官已经不在，于是她把他忘记了……

大约过了两天，她和伯爵夫人一起出门，刚登上马车，她又看到他了。他就站在大门口，竖起海龙皮领子，遮着脸，一双黑眼睛在帽檐底下闪闪发亮。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜不知为什么感到害怕，坐上马车，心还在莫名其妙地怦怦跳着。

回到家里，她走近窗口——那军官站在原来的地方，一双眼睛直盯着她。她从窗口走开，不知道这究竟是怎么回事，心里老想着这个问题，同时，一种从未有过的感情也使她激动不已。

从这个时候起，那青年人每天都在固定时间出现在她的窗下，从不间断。他们之间无形中产生了一种默契。她一坐下来做针线，就感到他在近旁，就抬起头看看他，停留在他身上的目光也一天比一天长久。为此青年人似乎很感激她：她那少女的敏锐目光看到，当他们的目光相遇时，每一次他那苍白的脸颊都会立即红起来。过了一个礼拜，她对他微笑了一下……

当托木斯基请求伯爵夫人允许他把朋友带来拜访她的时候，这可怜姑娘的心便怦怦跳起来了。可是当她得知纳鲁莫夫不是工兵军官，而是近卫军骑兵的时候，她很后悔，因为她不慎提了这么个问题，把自己心头的秘密泄露给轻浮的托木斯基了。

赫尔曼是个俄国化的德国人的儿子，父亲给他留下了一笔小小的资产。赫尔曼坚信一个人必须保持独立，他连父亲遗产的利息也不敢动用，只靠薪俸过活，丝毫不敢放纵自己。不过他是个性格内向而且自尊心很强的人，伙伴们难得有机会嘲笑他的过分节俭。他怀着强烈的欲望和狂热的幻想，但是坚强的意志使他避免了一般青年人常常陷入的迷误。譬如说，他嗜赌如命，却从来不打牌，因为他考虑到他的财产不允许他（正如他所说的）“为了非分之财，把少不了要用的钱拿去做赌注”——然而，他却整夜整夜地坐在牌桌旁边，狂热地注视着变化无常的牌局。

三张牌的奇闻使他强烈地幻想起来，他整夜都在想着这件事。第二天傍晚，他在彼得堡边散步边想：“要是老伯爵夫人肯向我公开这个秘密，或者告诉我这三张必胜的牌，那该有多好啊！为什么不去碰碰运气呢？……到她那里去，做自我介绍，博得她的宠爱，或者做她的情人，但这需要一段时间，而她已经八十七岁了，也许再过一个礼拜，也许再过两天，她就会死去！……可这个奇闻本身呢？……是不是可信？……不！俭省、节制和勤劳，这才是三张可靠的牌，只有这三张牌才能使我的资产增加两倍，增加六倍，才能给我安宁和独

立！”

他这样思忖着，不觉来到彼得堡一条主要大街的一座老式房屋前面。街上车水马龙，马车一辆接一辆向这个灯火辉煌的大门口驶去。从这些马车里时时露出妙龄美女的秀足、铿锵作响的长靴、条纹袜子和外交官的软底鞋。皮大衣和斗篷不时从傲慢的司阍 [13] 身边闪过。赫尔曼停住脚步。

“这是谁家的公馆？”他问一个站在拐角上的岗警。

“是某某伯爵夫人的公馆。”岗警回答。

赫尔曼浑身战栗起来。他脑海里又浮现出那个令人惊异的奇闻。他在公馆旁边踱来踱去，心里想着这座公馆的女主人和她那奇妙的本事。他很晚才回到自己那简陋的房间，久久不能入眠，等到一睡着，便梦见纸牌、绿色桌子、一沓沓钞票和一堆堆金币。他押下一张张纸牌，一次次毫不犹豫地折着牌角，不断地赢钱，不断地把金币搂到自己面前，把钞票装入衣袋。他醒来的时候已经很迟，因失去这虚幻的财富，他长叹了一口气，接着又上街去闲逛，又一次来到某某伯爵夫人的公馆门前。仿佛有一种神秘的力量把他吸引到这个地方。他停住脚步，举目望着这座公馆的窗口。在一个窗口里，他看见一个黑头发的头，低垂着，大概在看书或工作。头稍稍抬起来了。赫尔曼看见了一个艳丽的脸蛋和一对黑眼睛。这一刻决定了他的命运。

三

我的安琪儿，您每次给我写四页信，

比我读起来还快。 [14]

——通信

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜刚刚脱下大衣和帽子，伯爵夫人就派人来找她，又吩咐准备马车。她们走出去乘车。就在两个仆人把老太太扶上马车送进车门里边的那一刻，丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜发现那个工兵军官就在车轮旁边；他抓住她的手，她惊呆了，还没有回过神来，年轻人已经走掉了，她手里留下一封信。她把信藏在手套里，一路上昏昏沉沉，什么也没听见，什么也没看见。伯爵夫人有个习惯，坐在马车里不时要问点什么：她们碰到的是什么人？这座桥叫什么桥？那边招牌上写的是什麼？这一回丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜总是随口回答，每一次都是牛头不对马嘴，伯爵夫人因此大为生气。

“你怎么啦，我的孩子！你是昏了头还是怎么的？你是没有听见我的话还是没有听懂？……荣耀归于上帝，我话还说得清楚，也没有

老糊涂！”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜没听进她的话。一回到家里，她就奔进自己的房间，从手套里取出信来，信没有封口。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜一口气把它读完。这是一封向她表白爱情的信，写得情意绵绵、彬彬有礼，都是一字不差地从德国小说里抄来的。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜因为不懂德文，所以非常高兴。

然而，这封信却使她坐立不安。她有生以来第一次和一个年轻男子建立秘密而亲近的关系。他这种大胆的行为使她害怕。她责备自己行为太不谨慎，不知道怎么办好：是不是别再坐在窗口？是不是应该不理睬他，冷淡他，让他以后别再追求下去？要不要给他写封信？要不要冷淡而斩钉截铁地回绝他？她没有人好商量，她既没有小姐妹，也没有人能给予指导。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜决定给他写一封回信。

她在写字台前面坐下，拿起笔和纸，沉思起来。她开了几次头，又把信撕了：一会儿觉得语气太宽容，一会儿又觉得太生硬。她终于写出几句话，自己觉得还满意。她写道：“我相信您的心意是真诚的，并不想用轻率的举动来侮辱我；但我们的结识不应当采取这种方式。现将来信退回，并希望今后不至于让我怪您对我尊重。”

第二天，丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜看见赫尔曼走过来，便从绣架旁边站起来，走到大厅里，打开气窗，把信扔到街上，希望青年军官能迅速捡去。赫尔曼跑过来，捡起信，走进一家食品店。拆开信封，他看到自己的信和丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜的答复。这是他预料中的事，回家之后，他便一心一意地策划起求爱的事来了。

三天后，一个年纪轻轻、眼睛灵活的女裁缝从时装店里给丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜送来一张纸条。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜以为是来付债的，忐忑不安地把纸条打开，但立即就认出是赫尔曼的笔迹。

“亲爱的，您搞错了，”她说，“这张条子不是给我的。”

“不，确实是给您的！”那大胆的姑娘并不掩饰神秘的微笑，回答说，“请您看一看！”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜把纸条迅速地看了一遍。赫尔曼要求和她约会。

“不可能！”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜说，赫尔曼竟迫不及待地提出这种要求，并且采用这种办法，这使她大为吃惊。“这张纸条真的不是写给我的！”说着她把信撕成了碎片。

“既然信不是写给您的，那您干吗把它撕掉？”女裁缝说，“我可以把它送还发信的人啊！”

“您请便，亲爱的！”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜说，由于女裁缝点穿她的秘密，她的脸唰地红了起来。“以后再别给我送纸条来。请您对那个叫您送纸条的人说，他应该感到羞耻……”

可是赫尔曼并不罢休。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜每天都收到他通过各种办法送来的信。信的内容已经不是从德文翻译过来的了。赫尔曼热情洋溢地给她写了这些信，使用的语言都是他自己所特有的：他在信中表达了他的坚定不移的愿望，倾吐了自己理不清的无法遏制的幻想。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜已经不想把信退回去了，这些信使她陶醉。她开始给他写回信，她的信也写得越来越长，越来越情意缠绵。有一天，她终于从窗口扔给他如下的一封信：

今天某国公使将举行舞会。伯爵夫人将到那里去。我们在那里要待到两点钟。现在您有机会和我单独见面了。伯爵夫人一走，她的仆人就会走开，门廊里只剩下一个看门人，但他通常也会回自己的房间去。您可以在十一点半来。直接上楼梯。您要是在前厅里遇到人，就问伯爵夫人在不在家。他们会告诉您不在——那就没有办法，您只好回去。但是您大概不会遇到任何人。使女们都一起待在她们的房间里。您穿过前厅往左拐，一直走到伯爵夫人的卧室。在卧室的屏风后面，您会看见两扇小门：右边通书房，伯爵夫人从来不到那里去；左边走廊，那里有一座狭小的螺旋梯，上面就是我的房间。

赫尔曼浑身绷紧，抖嗦得像一只等待猎物的老虎，焦急地等待着约定时间的到来。晚上十点钟，他已经来到伯爵夫人的公馆门前。天气坏极了，风呼呼地吼着，潮湿的雪一大片一大片飘落下来，街灯发出昏黄的光线，街上空荡荡的。驾着由一匹瘦马拉的马车的车夫偶尔伸长脖子看看有没有晚归的乘客。赫尔曼只穿着常礼服站在那儿，既没有感觉到狂风，也没有感觉到暴雪。伯爵夫人的马车终于备好了。赫尔曼看见几个仆人扶出一个裹着貂皮大衣的驼背老太婆，接着，她的养女披着一件单薄的斗篷，头戴鲜花闪现了一下。车门啪的一声关上了。马车吃力地从松软的雪地上驶出去。看门人关上门。窗子里的灯光熄灭了。赫尔曼便在这座空公馆周围走来走去，他走近街灯，看看表——表上指着十一点二十分。他就站在街灯下，注视着表上的指针，等待过完这几分钟。到了十一点半，赫尔曼走上伯爵夫人公馆门前的台阶，走进灯火通明的门廊。看门人不在。赫尔曼登上楼梯，打开通前厅的门，看见一个仆人坐在灯下一把肮脏的老式圈椅上睡觉。赫尔曼轻轻地然而毫不犹豫地从他身旁走过去。大厅和客厅都很昏暗。只有前厅里的灯光微弱地照到这两个厅堂。赫尔曼走进卧室。摆满古老神像的神龛前面点着一盏金色的神灯。几件褪色的缎面圈椅和镀金剥落的带羽绒靠垫沙发对称地靠在裱着中国糊墙纸的墙边，显得凄清冷落。墙上挂着勒布朗夫人 [15] 在巴黎画的两幅肖像。其中一幅

画着一个约莫四十岁的男人，他脸色红润、身体肥胖，穿着浅绿色制服，佩戴着勋章；另一幅画着一个年轻美女，她长着高鼻子，两鬓的头发往后梳，扑粉的头发上戴着一朵玫瑰花。所有的角落里都摆满牧女瓷像、著名的勒鲁瓦 [16] 制造的台钟、小盒子、赌博用的轮盘、扇子和上世纪末与蒙哥利菲哀尔 [17] 气球及梅斯梅尔 [18] 催眠术同时发明的妇女的玩具。赫尔曼走到屏风后面。屏风后面有一张小铁床，右边是一扇通往书房的门，左边另一扇门通往走廊。赫尔曼把左边的门打开，看见一座狭小的螺旋梯，从这里可以通向那苦命的养女的房间……但他转过身来走进漆黑的书房。

时间过得真慢。屋子里静悄悄的。客厅里的钟敲了十二下，所有房间里的钟都先后敲了十二下——过后屋子里又沉寂下来。赫尔曼站着，靠在没生火的炉子上。他一点儿都不焦急，心脏平静地跳动着，像所有为了某种需要而决心去冒险的人一样。时钟相继敲过一点和两点，这时他听到远处马车的辘辘声。他不由得激动起来。马车驶到门口，停下来。他听见放下踏板的声音。公馆里奔忙起来。仆人们奔跑着，喊叫着，屋子里点亮了灯。三个老使女跑进卧室，接着伯爵夫人有气无力地走进来，落坐在高背躺椅上。赫尔曼从隙缝里看到丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜从他身边走过。他听见她登上楼梯的急促脚步声。他似乎感到于心有愧，但一会儿便完全平静了。他的心肠变得像石头一样硬。

伯爵夫人开始对着镜子卸妆。使女们从她头上摘下插玫瑰花的帽子；从她那银白头发剪得极短的头上拿下扑粉的假发，别针一根根像下雨似的落在她的身旁；绣着银线的黄色衣裙落到她浮肿的脚上。赫尔曼亲眼看到了她那副打扮所掩盖的令人恶心的秘密。最后伯爵夫人身上只剩下一件睡衣，头上戴着压发帽——这种打扮还比较适合她那耄耋的年龄，因此看起来就不那么可怕和丑陋了。

就像一般老年人那样，伯爵夫人也患有失眠症。她卸好妆，就坐在靠窗口的高背躺椅上，打发掉使女。蜡烛拿走了，房间里又只剩下一盏灯。伯爵夫人坐在那里，脸色蜡黄，耷拉下来的嘴唇微微抖动着，全身不停地左右摆动。她那混浊的眼睛显得十分呆滞，望着她，真可以认为，这个可怕的老太婆的摆动并不是出于她的意志，而是她身上一种潜在的电流在起作用。

突然，这张死气沉沉的面孔大大变了样。嘴唇停止抖动，眼睛紧张地活动起来。伯爵夫人面前站着一个陌生男人。

“请您不要害怕，看在上帝面上，请不要害怕！”他很清楚地轻声说，“我并不要害您，我只是来请求您的恩典。”

老太婆默默地瞧着他，好像没有听见他在说什么。赫尔曼以为她

耳背，因此弯下腰在她耳边把刚才说的话重说了一遍。老太婆还是不吭声。

“您可以使我获得一生的幸福，”赫尔曼继续说，“这在您是不费吹灰之力的，我知道您能一连猜中三张牌……”

赫尔曼没再说下去。伯爵夫人似乎明白了他的要求，她仿佛在考虑用什么恰当的话来回答他。

“这是个玩笑，”她终于说，“我可以向您发誓！这是个玩笑！”

“这没有什么好开玩笑的，”赫尔曼愤愤地回答道，“您该记得恰普利茨基吧，是您帮助他翻本的。”

伯爵夫人显然很紧张。她的神色反映出内心强烈的激荡，但她很快又陷入先前那种麻木状态。

“您能告诉我这三张必胜的牌吗？”赫尔曼又问。

伯爵夫人沉默不语，赫尔曼又继续说：

“您在替谁保守这个秘密呢？替您的孙子吗？他们就算不掌握这个秘密也够有钱的了。他们根本不知道金钱的价值。您这三张牌帮助不了那些挥金如土的人。那些不会爱惜父辈遗产的人，他们即使像魔鬼那样使尽力气，也不得不死于贫困。我不是一个爱挥霍金钱的人，我懂得金钱的价值。我不会把这三张牌白白糟蹋掉的。告诉我吧！……”

他停住话头，浑身颤抖着等待她的回答。伯爵夫人还是默不作声。赫尔曼跪了下来。

“要是您的心曾经感受过爱的情感，”他说，“要是您还记得爱的欢乐，要是您哪怕只有一次在刚生下的儿子哇哇哭闹的时候微笑了一下，要是您的胸中曾经激荡过人类的感情，那么我就用妻子、情人、母亲，总之，一个人的生命中可能有的一切神圣的感情恳求您，不要拒绝我的请求！——向我公开您的秘密吧！您还要它干什么？……也许，它会造成骇人听闻的罪恶，会使人失去一生的幸福，要和魔鬼订下什么协议……您想想看吧：您已经老了，活不了多久，我愿用我的灵魂承受您的罪孽。您只要向我公开您的秘密。您想想看，一个人的幸福就掌握在您的手心里，不仅是我，还有我的儿子、孙子、曾孙都要感戴您的大恩大德，把您的恩德看成圣物一般……”

老太婆一个字也没有回答。

赫尔曼站起来。

“老妖婆！”他咬咬牙说，“我只好强迫你回答了……”

说着，他从口袋里拔出手枪。

伯爵夫人一看到手枪，情绪又强烈激动起来。她摇摇头，举起一只手，好像要挡住他的射击……接着她便往后倒下去……一动不动了。

“别胡闹，”赫尔曼抓住她的手，说，“我最后问您一次，您想不想把三张牌告诉我？”

伯爵夫人没有回答。赫尔曼发现，她已经死了。

一八××年五月七日。

一个没有道德准则和毫无信念的人。 [19]

——通信

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜坐在房间里，还穿着参加舞会的衣服，深深地沉思着。她一回到家里，便急忙把那个不情愿服侍她的睡意蒙眬的使女打发走。她对使女说，她可以自己脱衣服，便战战兢兢地走进自己的房间，心里既想在那里遇到赫尔曼，又希望见不到他。她一眼就断定他没有来，因此感谢命运为他们的幽会设置了障碍。她坐下来，衣服也不脱，便想起在这么短的时间内就使她如此迷恋的一切情形。自从她第一次在窗口看见这个年轻人以来，还不到三个礼拜，她已经和他通了信，而他也已经得到她的同意，准备在夜间和她幽会！她只是从几封他签过名的信里了解到他的名字；在这个晚上以前，她从来没有和他谈过话，没有听见他的声音，从来也没有听说过他的事……真是怪事！就在这个夜晚的舞会上，托木斯基很生年轻的波利娜公爵小姐的气。因为她一反常态，不和他撒娇调情，他便邀请丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜跳那没完没了的玛祖卡舞，对波利娜表示冷淡，想借此对她进行报复。整个晚上，托木斯基老是和丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜开玩笑，取笑她对那个工兵军官的痴情，对她说，他知道的事比她所能设想的要多得多。他开的玩笑中有几次都击中她的要害，因此丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜有好几次都想到，他一定知道她的秘密。

“这些事情您是听谁说的？”她笑着问他。

“听您的一个熟人的朋友说的，”托木斯基回答，“那是一个很出色的人。”

“这个出色的人到底是谁呀？”

“他叫赫尔曼。”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜什么也没有回答，但她的手脚却冷得像冰一样……

“这个赫尔曼，”托木斯基继续说，“有一张典型的小说中人物的面孔：他的侧面像拿破仑，灵魂像摩非斯特 [20]。我认为，至少有三样罪恶他应该于心有愧。您的脸色怎么这样苍白！……”

“我头痛……赫尔曼对您说了些什么？您说他到底是怎样一个人呢？”

“赫尔曼对他那位朋友很不满意。他说，换了他，他一定采取另一种办法……我甚至认为，赫尔曼正在打您的主意，至少他听到朋友心醉神迷的向往时，心里很不平静。”

“他究竟在哪儿看见过我？”

“也许是在教堂里，或者是散步的时候！……天知道！也许是在您的房间里，那时您正在睡觉，他……”

走过来三个淑女，问他“遗忘还是惋惜” [21]，打断了丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜极想继续下去的谈话。

托木斯基选中的小姐就是那位波利娜公爵小姐。她和他多跳了一圈，又在自己座椅前面多转了一转，在这段时间里，她和他又言归于好了。托木斯基回到座位上的时候，已经不再想起赫尔曼和丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜很想恢复刚才那场中断的谈话，但玛祖卡舞已经结束，接着老伯爵夫人也走了。

托木斯基的话不过是跳玛祖卡舞时随便说说的，却深深印入这个好幻想的年轻姑娘心里。托木斯基随便描绘的肖像正和她心中想象的不谋而合；由于听了一段最新的故事，这张已显得很俗气的面孔不由得使她感到惴惴不安，也使她耽于幻想。她坐着，交叉着两条赤裸的手臂，还插着鲜花的头低垂在袒露的胸前……突然，门打开了，赫尔曼走进房间。她浑身战栗起来……

“您刚才到底在哪里？”她惊惧地轻声问道。

“在老伯爵夫人的卧室里，”赫尔曼回答，“我刚刚从她那里来。伯爵夫人死了。”

“我的天！……您在说什么？……”

“看样子，是我把她吓死的。”赫尔曼继续说。

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜瞥了他一眼，心里不由得想起托木斯基说过的话：“至少有三样罪恶他应该于心有愧！”赫尔曼坐在她身边的窗台上，把经过情形一一告诉她。

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜惊恐地听完他的话。原来，这些热情洋溢的信件，这些火焰般炽烈的要求，这种无礼而又纠缠不清的追求，统统都不是出于爱情！金钱——这才是他心中渴望得到的东西！能够满足他的欲望，使他得到幸福的并不是她！这可怜的养女不过是一个杀害她老恩人的凶手和强盗的盲目帮凶！……她后悔莫及，难过得痛哭起来。赫尔曼默默地瞧着她。他也心痛如绞，但无论是这可怜姑娘的眼泪，还是她那痛苦的样子所表现出来的惊人魅力，都不能触动他的铁石心肠。想到老太婆的死，他并没有受到良心的谴责。只有一点使他感到恼恨：那个秘密他再也搞不到手了，本来他是指望靠它发财的。

“您是个魔鬼！”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜终于对他说。

“我并不想害死她，”赫尔曼回答，“我的手枪没有装子弹。”

他们都默不作声。

早晨来临了。丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜吹灭快燃尽的蜡烛，淡淡的曙光已照临她的房间。她擦干满是泪痕的眼睛，举目望着赫尔曼：他坐在窗台上，抄着手，凶狠地皱着眉头。那样子竟和拿破仑的肖像一模一样。这两个人这样相像，连丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜都感到吃惊。

“您怎么走出这座公馆？”丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜终于说，“我本来想带您从秘密楼梯走出去，但要从伯爵夫人的卧室旁边走过，我害怕。”

“请您告诉我怎么找到这座秘密楼梯，我自己走出去。”

丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜站起来，从柜子里拿出钥匙，交给赫尔曼，并且详细告诉他出门的路径。赫尔曼握了握她那冰冷的、毫无反应的手，吻了吻她低垂着的头，走出去。

他从螺旋梯走下去，又一次走进伯爵夫人的卧室。死去的老太婆仍旧坐着，已经僵硬了；她的脸显得很安详。赫尔曼站在她面前，久久地望着她，似乎想再看看这件可怕的事情是不是属实。最后，他走进书房，摸到糊墙纸后面的暗门，走下漆黑的楼梯。一种奇怪的感觉使他兴奋起来。他想，也许在六十年前，有那么一个年轻的幸运儿，穿着绣花长袍，梳着仙鹤式 [\[22\]](#) 头发，把三角帽拿在手里，紧贴在胸口上，也在这个时刻，同样从这座楼梯偷偷溜进这间卧室，这个年轻人早已在坟墓里腐烂，而这个年过古稀的情妇的心今天才停止跳动……

赫尔曼在楼梯下面找到一扇门，他用那把钥匙开了锁，走进过道，从那儿走到大街上。

这天晚上，已故的冯·V男爵夫人向我显灵。她全身穿着白色衣服，对我说：“您好，顾问先生！”

——斯维登堡 [23]

在那命中注定的夜晚之后的第三天，上午九点钟，赫尔曼动身到某某修道院去，人们将在那里为已故的伯爵夫人举行葬礼。他虽然一点儿不后悔，但也不能完全压下良心的呼声，这声音一再对他说：你是杀害老太太的凶手！他没有多少虔诚的信仰，却有很多迷信。他相信死去的伯爵夫人会给他的一生带来很多危害，因此决定亲自去参加葬礼，以便祈求她的宽恕。

教堂里挤得水泄不通。赫尔曼费了好大力气才从人群中挤过去。灵柩停放在富丽堂皇的灵台上，上面张着天鹅绒的帐幔。死者两手放在胸前，安卧在灵柩里，头上戴着镶花边的帽子，身上穿着白缎衣裙。家属侍立在她的四周。仆人穿着黑袍，肩上佩戴着标有纹章的绶带，手里捧着蜡烛；儿子、孙子、曾孙等亲属都穿着重孝服。谁也没有哭，流泪也许是一种虚情假意 [24] 的表现。伯爵夫人已到耄耋之年，她的死决不会使任何人感到震惊，而且她的亲属早就认为她活得太久了。一个年轻的主教致了悼词。他朴素而又动人地讲到这位年高德劭的女信徒的平静辞世，说她数十年如一日默默地进行了感人至深的修行，如今才能像一个基督徒那样告别人世。“司死亡的天使接纳了她这位通宵怀着美好意愿、等待新郎半夜来临的信徒。” [25] 演讲者说。仪式在充满悲伤气氛的礼节中完成了。亲属们首先向遗体告别。然后是无数的客人向前移步，他们都是专程前来哀悼这位长期参加他们的浮华玩乐的老太太的。接下去是全体婢仆，最后上前行礼的是一个和死者同年的老太太。她由两个年轻的使女搀扶着。她已经无法深深地鞠躬，只是独自掉下几滴老泪，吻了吻夫人冰冷的手。老太太离去之后，赫尔曼决定到灵柩跟前去。他深深地鞠了一躬，在撒满松枝的冰冷的地板上俯伏了几分钟。最后他稍稍抬起身子，脸色白得像那个死者，登上灵台的台阶，俯下身子……这时，他似乎感到死去的伯爵夫人眯起一只眼睛，带着嘲笑看了他一眼。赫尔曼急忙往后退，他踩空了一脚，咕咚一声仰面朝天跌倒在地上。人们把他扶起来。就在这同一时刻，丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜也昏倒了，被人抬到教堂门前的台阶上。这件事把肃穆的丧礼扰乱了几分钟。来客中掀起了一阵低沉的窃窃私语，死者的近亲，一个瘦削的宫中侍从官对站在身旁的英国人咬了咬耳朵，告诉他这个年轻的军官是她的私生子，对此那个英国人只冷冷地回答了一声：噢！ [26]

一整天，赫尔曼的心情都非常懊丧。他在一家僻静的饭馆吃饭，一反平常的习惯，喝了许多酒，想要借此压下内心的烦恼。但是喝了酒，他更加心烦意乱。他回到家里，衣服也不脱，一头扑倒在床上，

立即沉沉睡去。他醒来的时候已是深夜，月光照亮了他的房间。他看了看表，两点三刻。他睡意尽失，坐在床上，想着老伯爵夫人的丧礼。

这时有个人在街上朝他的窗户看了看，立即走开了。赫尔曼一点儿都没注意他。过了一会儿，他听见前房的开门声。赫尔曼以为是他的勤务兵照常在外面喝醉了酒，夜游回来了。但是他听见一阵陌生的脚步声，有个人在走路，鞋子发出轻轻的沙沙声。门打开了，走进一个穿白衣服的妇人。赫尔曼以为是他的老奶妈，对她在这个时刻到他这里来感到奇怪。但穿白衣服的妇人突然飘然来到他面前——赫尔曼定睛一看，竟是伯爵夫人！

“我是违反本意到你这儿来的。”她用坚定的声音说，“我是奉命来满足你的要求的。三、七、王牌A，这三张牌会使你连续赢钱，但是有一个条件：一昼夜之内只能押一张牌，从此一辈子再也不赌博。你吓死我，我可以宽恕你，但是你要和我的养女丽莎维塔·伊凡诺夫娜结婚……”

说完她便轻轻转过身子，向房门走去，随着鞋子的沙沙声隐没了。赫尔曼听到门廊的门砰的一声关上，接着又看见有人朝他的窗口瞧了一眼。

赫尔曼好久都不能回过神来。他走进另一个房间。勤务兵睡在地上，赫尔曼费了好大工夫才把他叫醒。勤务兵像平日那样烂醉如泥，从他那里是问不出什么名堂来的。门廊的门锁得好好的。赫尔曼回到自己的房间里，点起蜡烛，把刚才看到的幻象记了下来。

“等一等再分牌！”

“您竟敢对我说等一等？”

“大人，我说了，等一等再分牌！”

两种固执的念头不可能同时存在于一个人的脑子里，正像物理学上两个物体不可能同时占据同一个空间一样。三、七、王牌A——三张牌立即把赫尔曼脑子里的死者太太的影子挤走了。三、七、王牌A——三张牌一直萦绕在他的脑子里，并且一直在他的嘴里默念着。看见年轻姑娘，他就说：“她多么秀丽呀！……像红心三一样。”有人问他：“现在几点钟？”他就回答：“差五分七点。”看见大腹便便的男人，他都觉得像个A。三、七、王牌A——三张牌一起跟着他进入梦境，它们都变成各种各样的形状：三点在他面前像一朵艳丽的石榴

花，七点像一座哥特式建筑的大门，A是一只硕大无朋的蜘蛛。他的思想全部集中到一点——怎样利用他这个极其宝贵的秘密。他想到辞职和旅行。他想到巴黎公开的赌场里去，从诱人的命运女神那里索取一笔财富。一个偶然的机会使他避免了这次远途奔波。

莫斯科组织了一个由有钱的赌徒组成的团体，为首的是名声很大的切卡林斯基，此人一生都在牌桌旁边度过，早就积攒了百万财富，他赢钱时收人家的期票，输钱时给人家现钞。长期的赌博生涯使他取信于众多的牌友，而宽敞的住宅、出色的厨师、亲切和愉快的态度则使他博得公众的尊敬。他来到了彼得堡。青年们蜂拥而来，为了赌牌忘记了舞会，宁可放弃追逐女人的乐趣，也不辜负法拉翁的诱惑。纳鲁莫夫把赫尔曼带到他那里去。

他们走过一长串富丽堂皇的房间，房间里有许多彬彬有礼的仆役。几个将军和三级文官在那里打惠斯特 [27]，青年人斜靠在花缎沙发上，吃着冰激凌，抽着烟斗。客厅里，主人坐在一张周围挤着二十来个赌徒的长桌后面分牌。他是个约莫六十岁的老人，外表极其体面，一头银发，饱满而容光焕发的脸显得十分善良，眼睛灵活有神，常带笑意。纳鲁莫夫向他介绍了赫尔曼。切卡林斯基友好地握了握他的手，请他不必拘礼，说完便继续分牌。

牌局持续了好久。牌桌上摊着三十几张牌。切卡林斯基每分完一次牌都要停一停，让赌家安排一下赌注，他自己也好记下输掉的钱，礼貌周到地听听赌家的要求，更加殷勤地打开赌家心不在焉多折的牌角。一圈牌终于打完了。切卡林斯基洗了牌，准备再次分牌。

“让我押一张牌。”赫尔曼从一个也在那里赌钱的胖绅士背后伸出手来，说。切卡林斯基微微一笑，默默地点头表示遵命。纳鲁莫夫笑着祝贺赫尔曼开了长期的赌戒，并祝愿他旗开得胜。

“就这样！”赫尔曼用粉笔在牌上写下赌注的数目，说。

“请问多少？”庄家眯起眼睛问道，“对不起，先生，我看不清楚。”

“四万七。”赫尔曼回答。

听到这个数目，所有的头一下子都转过来，所有的眼睛都注视着赫尔曼。“他疯了！”纳鲁莫夫心里想。

“请允许我告诉您，”切卡林斯基仍旧笑容满面地说，“您下的注太大了，我们这儿还没有人下过超出二百七十五的注呢。”

“怎么？”赫尔曼不以为然地说，“您不想赢我的牌？”

切卡林斯基仍旧彬彬有礼地点头表示遵命。

“不过我有一事奉告，”他说，“我虽然有幸得到诸位的信任，但没有现钱我不能分牌。我当然相信您的话，但还是请您把钱放在纸牌上，这是赌钱的规矩，同时也是为了计算的方便。”

赫尔曼从口袋里掏出一张支票来交给切卡林斯基，切卡林斯基瞟了瞟手中的支票，把它放在赫尔曼的牌上。

他开始分牌。右边出了九点，左边出了三点。

“赢了！”赫尔曼翻出自己的牌。

赌徒们掀起一阵轻声的议论。切卡林斯基皱了皱眉头，脸上随即恢复了笑容。

“您要现钱吗？”他问赫尔曼。

“费神了。”

切卡林斯基从口袋里掏出几张支票，立即把账结清了。赫尔曼收下钱，离开牌桌。纳鲁莫夫看傻了。赫尔曼喝下一杯柠檬汁，回家了。

第二天晚上，他又到切卡林斯基那里去。主人在发牌。赫尔曼走到牌桌旁，赌徒们立即给他让出一个座位。切卡林斯基亲切地对他点点头。

赫尔曼等到新的一圈开始，押下牌，把四万七千卢布和昨天赢的钱一起放在纸牌上。

切卡林斯基开始分牌。右边出了杰克，左边出了七点。

赫尔曼翻开自己押的七点。

大家惊叫了一声。切卡林斯基显然慌了神。他数了九万四千交给赫尔曼。赫尔曼冷静自若地接过钱，立即走开了。

次日晚上，赫尔曼又来到牌桌旁。大家都在等他。那几个将军和三等文官都放下惠斯特不打，来看这场不同寻常的赌博。年轻的军官们都从沙发上霍地站起来，所有的仆役都集中在客厅里。大家把赫尔曼团团围住。其他赌徒都不押牌，焦急地等着看赫尔曼这场赌博的结果。赫尔曼站在牌桌旁，准备独自和这位脸色煞白但仍微露笑容的切卡林斯基决一胜负。两个人各自拆开一副牌。切卡林斯基洗洗牌。赫尔曼拿出一张牌，押在桌上，把一沓支票放在纸牌上。这简直像一场决斗。赌场上鸦雀无声。

切卡林斯基开始分牌，他的手在颤抖。右边出了皇后。左边出了王牌。

“王牌赢了！”赫尔曼说着，翻开自己的牌。

“您的皇后输了。”切卡林斯基亲切地说。

赫尔曼浑身一震，果然，他押的牌不是A，而是黑桃皇后。他不相信自己的眼睛，不明白自己怎么会拿错牌。

这时他觉得那个黑桃皇后正眯缝着眼睛对他冷笑了一下。这个不同寻常的相似场面使他感到恐怖……

“老太婆！”他惊叫起来。

切卡林斯基把赢得的支票拿过去。赫尔曼呆若木鸡地站着，他从牌桌旁走开的时候，大厅里掀起了一阵闹哄哄的说话声。“赌得真痛快！”赌徒们说。切卡林斯基又洗好了牌，赌博照常进行下去。

结局

赫尔曼疯了。他住进奥布霍夫医院十七号病房，不能回答任何问题，只会非常快地念叨着：“三、七、王牌！三、七、皇后！……”

The Queen of Spades

THE QUEEN OF SPADES BETOKENS THE EVIL EYE Modern Guide to Fortune-Telling

When bleak was the weather

They would meet together

For cards-God forgive them!

Some would win, others lost,

And they chalked up the cost

In bleak autumn weather

When they met together.

There was a card party in the rooms of Narumov, an officer of the Horse Guards. The long winter night had passed unnoticed and it was after four in the morning when the company sat down to supper. Those who had won enjoyed their food; the others sat absent-mindedly in front of empty plates. But when the champagne appeared conversation became more lively and general.

‘How did you fare, Surin?’ Narumov asked.

‘Oh I lost, as usual. I must confess, I have no luck: I stick to mirandole, never get excited, never lose my head, and yet I never win.’

‘Do you mean to tell me you were not once tempted to back the red the whole evening? Your self-control amazes me.’

‘But look at Hermann,’ exclaimed one of the party, pointing to a young officer of the Engineers. ‘Never held a card in his hands, never made a bet in his life, and yet he sits up till five in the morning watching us play.

'Cards interest me very much,' said Hermann, 'but I am not in a position to risk the necessary in the hope of acquiring the superfluous.'

'Hermann is a German: he's careful, that's what that is!' remarked Tomsy. 'But if there is one person I can't understand it is my grandmother, Countess Anna Fedotovna.'

'Why is that?' the guests cried.

'I cannot conceive how it is that my grandmother does not play.'

'But surely there is nothing surprising in an old lady in the eighties not wanting to gamble?' said Narumov.

'Then you don't know about her?'

'No, nothing, absolutely nothing!'

'Well, listen then. I must tell you that some sixty years ago my grandmother went to Paris and was quite the rage there. People would run after her to catch a glimpse of la Vénus moscovite ; Richelieu was at her beck and call, and grandmamma maintains that he very nearly blew his brains out because of her cruelty to him. In those days ladies used to play faro. One evening at the Court she lost a very considerable sum to the Duke of Orleans. When she got home she told my grandfather of her loss while removing the beauty spots from her face and untying her farthingale, and commanded him to pay her debt. My grandfather, so far as I remember, acted as a sort of major-domo to my grandmother. He feared her like fire; however, when he heard of such a frightful gambling loss he almost went out of his mind, fetched the bills they owed and pointed out to her that in six months they had spent half a million roubles and that in Paris they had neither their Moscow nor their Saratov estates upon which to draw, and flatly refused to pay. Grandmamma gave him a box on the ear and retired to bed without him as a sign of her displeasure. The following morning she sent for her husband, hoping that the simple punishment had had its effect, but she found him as obdurate as ever. For the first time in her life she went so far as to reason with him and explain, thinking to rouse his conscience and arguing with condescension, that there were debts and debts, and that a prince was different from a coach-builder. But it was not a bit of good - grandfather just would not hear of it. "Once and for all, no!" Grandmamma did not know what to do. Among her close acquaintances was a very remarkable man. You have heard of Count Saint- Germain, about whom so many marvellous stories are told. You know that he posed as the Wandering Jew and claimed to have discovered the elixir of life and the philosopher's stone, and so on. People laughed at him as a charlatan, and Casanova in his Memoirs says that he was a spy. Be that as it may, Saint- Germain, in spite of the mystery that surrounded him, had a most dignified appearance and was a very amiable person in society. Grandmamma is still to this day quite devoted to his memory and gets angry if anyone speaks of him with disrespect. Grandmamma knew that Saint- Germain had plenty of money at his disposal. She decided to appeal to him, and wrote a note asking him to come and see her immediately. The eccentric old man came at once and found her in terrible distress. She described in the blackest colours her husband's inhumanity, and ended by declaring that she laid all her hopes on his friendship and kindness. Saint- Germain pondered. "I could oblige you with the sum you want," he said, "but I know that you would not be easy until you had repaid me, and I should not like to involve you in fresh trouble. There is another way out - you could win it back."

‘ "But, my dear count," answered grandmamma, "I tell you I have no money at all."

‘ "That does not matter," Saint- Germain replied. "Listen now to what I am going to tell you."

‘And he revealed to her a secret which all of us would give a great deal to know ...'

The young gamblers redoubled their attention. Tomsy lit his pipe, puffed away for a moment and continued:

‘That very evening grandmamma appeared at Versailles, at the jeu de la reine . The Duke of Orleans kept the bank. Grandmamma lightly excused herself for not having brought the money to pay off her debt, inventing some little story by way of explanation, and began to play against him. She selected three cards and played them one after the other: all three won, and grandmamma retrieved her loss completely.'

'Luck!' said one of the party.

'A fairy tale!' remarked Hermann.

'Marked cards, perhaps,' put in a third.

'I don't think so,' replied Tomsy impressively.

'What!' said Narumov. 'You have a grandmother who knows how to hit upon three lucky cards in succession, and you haven't learnt her secret yet?'

'That's the deuce of it!' Tomsy replied. 'She had four sons, one of whom was my father; all four were desperate gamblers, and yet she did not reveal her secret to a single one of them, though it would not have been a bad thing for them, or for me either. But listen to what my uncle, Count Ivan Ilyich, used to say, assuring me on his word of honour that it was true. Tchaplitsky - you know him, he died a pauper after squandering millions - as a young man once lost three hundred thousand roubles, to Zorich, if I remember rightly. He was in despair. Grandmamma was always very severe on the follies of young men, but somehow she took pity on Tchaplitsky. She gave him three cards, which he was to play one after the other, at the same time exacting from him a promise that he would never afterwards touch a card so long as he lived. Tchaplitsky went to Zorich's; they sat down to play. Tchaplitsky staked fifty thousand on his first card and won; doubled his stake and won; did the same again, won back his loss and ended up in pocket ...

'But, I say, it's time to go to bed: it is a quarter to six already.'

And indeed dawn was breaking. The young men emptied their glasses and went home.

'Il paraît que monsieur est décidément pour les suivantes.'

'Que voulez- vous, madame? Elles sont plus fraîches.'

From a society conversation

The old Countess X was seated before the lookingglass in her dressing- room. Three maids were standing round her. One held a pot of rouge, another a box of hairpins, and the third a tall cap with flame- coloured ribbons. The countess had not the slightest pretensions to beauty - it had faded long ago - but she still preserved all the habits of her youth, followed strictly the fashion of the seventies, and gave as much time and care to her toilette as she had sixty years before. A young girl whom she had brought up sat at an embroidery-frame by the window.

'Good morning, grand'maman!' said a young officer, coming into the room. 'Bonjour, Mademoiselle Lise. Grand'maman , I have a favour to ask of you.'

'What is it, Paul?'

'I want you to let me introduce to you a friend of mine and bring him to your ball on Friday.'

'Bring him straight to the ball and introduce him to me then. Were you at the princess's last night?'

'Of course I was! It was most enjoyable: we danced until five in the morning. Mademoiselle Yeletsky looked enchanting!'

'Come, my dear! What is there enchanting about her? She isn't a patch on her grandmother, Princess Daria Petrovna. By the way, I expect PrinPrincess Daria Petrovna must have aged considerably?'

'How do you mean, aged?' Tomsky replied absentmindedly. 'She's been dead for the last seven years.'

The girl at the window raised her head and made a sign to the young man. He remembered that they concealed the deaths of her contemporaries from the old countess, and bit his lip. But the countess heard the news with the utmost indifference.

'Dead! I didn't know,' she said. 'We were maids of honour together, and as we were being presented to the Empress ...'

And for the hundredth time the countess repeated the story to her grandson.

'Well, Paul,' she said at the end; 'now help me to my feet. Lise , where is my snuff- box?'

And the countess went with her maids behind the screen to finish dressing. Tomsky was left à deux with the young girl.

'Who is it you want to introduce?' Lizaveta Ivanovna asked softly.

'Narumov. Do you know him?'

'No. Is he in the army?'

'Yes.'

'In the Engineers?'

'No, Horse Guards. What made you think he was in the Engineers?'

The girl laughed and made no answer. 'Paul!' the countess called from behind the screen. 'Send me a new novel to read, only pray not one of those modern ones.'

'How do you mean, grand'maman ? '

'I want a book in which the hero does not strangle either his father or his mother, and where there are no drowned corpses. I have a horror of drowned persons.'

'There aren't any novels of that sort nowadays. Wouldn't you like something in Russian?'

'Are there any Russian novels? ... Send me something, my dear fellow, please send me something!'

'Excuse me, grand'maman : I must hurry ... Good- bye, Lizaveta Ivanovna! I wonder, what made you think Narumov was in the Engineers?'

And Tomsy departed from the dressing- room.

Lizaveta Ivanovna was left alone. She abandoned her work and began to look out of the window. Soon, round the corner of a house on the other side of the street, a young officer appeared. Colour flooded her cheeks; she took up her work again, bending her head over her embroidery- frame. At that moment the countess came in, having finished dressing.

'Order the carriage, Lise,' she said, 'and let us go for a drive.'

Lizaveta Ivanovna rose from her embroidery- frame and began putting away her work.

'What is the matter with you, my child, are you deaf?' the countess cried. 'Be quick and order the carriage.'

'I will go at once,' the young girl answered quietly, and ran into the ante- room.

A servant came in and handed the countess a parcel of books from Prince Paul Alexandrovich.

'Good! Tell him I am much obliged,' said the countess. 'Lise, Lise , where are you off to?'

'To dress.'

'There is plenty of time, my dear. Sit down here. Open the first volume and read to me.'

The girl took the book and read a few lines.

'Louder!' said the countess. 'What is the matter with you, my dear? Have you lost your voice, or what? Wait a minute ... Give me that footstool. A little closer. That will do!'

Lizaveta Ivanovna read two more pages. The countess yawned.

'Throw that book away,' she said. 'What nonsense it is! Send it back to Prince Paul with my thanks ... What about the carriage?'

'The carriage is ready,' said Lizaveta Ivanovna, glancing out into the street.

'How is it you are not dressed?' the countess said. 'You always keep people waiting. It really is intolerable!'

Liza ran to her room. Hardly two minutes passed before the countess started ringing with all her might. Three maids rushed in at one door and a footman at the other.

'Why is it you don't come when you are called?' the countess said to them. 'Tell Lizaveta Ivanovna I am waiting.'

Lizaveta Ivanovna returned, wearing a hat and a pelisse.

'At last, my dear!' said the countess. 'Why the finery? What is it for? ... For whose benefit? ... And what is the weather like? Windy, isn't it?'

'No, your ladyship,' the footman answered, 'there is no wind at all.'

'You say anything that comes into your head! Open the window. Just as I thought: there is a wind, and a very cold one too!

Dismiss the carriage . Lise, my child, we won't go out - you need not have dressed up after all.'

'And this is my life!' Lizaveta Ivanovna thought to herself.

Indeed, Lizaveta Ivanovna was a most unfortunate creature. 'Another's bread is bitter to the taste,' says Dante, 'and his staircase hard to climb'; and who should know the bitterness of dependence better than a poor orphan brought up by an old lady of quality? The countess was certainly not bad- hearted but she had all the caprices of a woman spoiled by society, she was stingy and coldly selfish, like all old people who have done with love and are out of touch with life around them. She took part in all the vanities of the fashionable world, dragged herself to balls, where she sat in a corner, rouged and attired after some bygone mode, like a misshapen but indispensable ornament of the ball- room. On their arrival the guests all went up to her and bowed low, as though in accordance with an old- established rite, and after that no one took any more notice of her. She received the whole town at her house, observing the strictest etiquette and not recognizing the faces of any of her guests. Her numerous servants, grown fat and grey in her entrance hall and the maids' quarters, did what they liked and vied with each other in robbing the decrepit old woman. Lizaveta Ivanovna was the household martyr. She poured out tea and was reprimanded for using too much sugar; she read novels aloud to the countess and was blamed for all the author's mistakes; she accompanied the countess on her drives and was answerable for the weather and the state of the roads. She was supposed to receive a salary, which was never paid in full and yet she was expected to be as well dressed as every one else - that is, as very few indeed. In society she played the most pitiable role. Everybody knew her and nobody gave her any thought. At balls she danced only when someone was short of a partner, and the ladies would take her by the arm each time they wanted to go to the cloak- room to rearrange some detail of their toilette. She was sensitive and felt her position keenly, and looked about impatiently for a deliverer to come; but the young men, calculating in their empty- headed frivolity, honoured her with scant attention though Lizaveta Ivanovna was a hundred times more charming than the cold, brazen- faced heiresses they ran after. Many a time she crept away from the tedious, glittering drawing- room to go and weep in her humble little attic with its wall- paper screen, chest of drawers, small looking- glass and painted wooden bedstead, and where a tallow- candle burned dimly in a brass candle stick.

One morning, two days after the card party described at the beginning of this story and a week before the scene we have just witnessed - one morning Lizaveta Ivanovna, sitting at her embroidery- frame by the window, happened to glance out into the street and see a young Engineers officer standing stock- still gazing at her window. She lowered her head and went on with her work. Five minutes afterwards she looked out again - the young officer was still on the same spot. Not being in the habit of coquetting with passing officers, she looked out no more and went on sewing for a couple of hours without raising her head. Luncheon was announced. She got up to put away her embroidery- frame and, glancing casually into the street, saw the officer again. This seemed to her somewhat strange. After luncheon she went to the window with a certain feeling of uneasiness, but the officer was no longer there, and she forgot about him ...

A day or so later, just as she was stepping into the carriage with the countess, she saw him again. He was standing right by the front door, his face hidden by his beaver collar; his dark eyes sparkled beneath his fur cap. Lizaveta Ivanovna felt alarmed, though she did not know why, and seated herself in the carriage, inexplicably agitated.

On returning home she ran to the window - the officer was standing in his accustomed place, his eyes fixed on her. She drew back, consumed with curiosity and excited by a feeling quite new to her.

Since then not a day had passed without the young man appearing at a certain hour beneath the windows of their house, and between him and her a sort of mute acquaintance was established. Sitting at her work she would sense his approach, and lifting her head she looked at him longer and longer every day. The young man seemed to be grateful to her for looking out: with the keen eyes of youth she saw the quick flush of his pale cheeks every time their glances met. By the end of a week she had smiled at him

...

When Tomsy asked the countess's permission to introduce a friend of his the poor girl's heart beat violently. But hearing that Narumov was in the Horse Guards, not the Engineers, she regretted the indiscreet question by which she had betrayed her secret to the irresponsible Tomskey.

Hermann was the son of a German who had settled in Russia and who left him some small capital sum. Being firmly convinced that it was essential for him to make certain of his independence, Hermann did not touch even the interest on his income but lived on his pay, denying himself the slightest extravagance. But since he was reserved and ambitious his companions rarely had any opportunity for making fun of his extreme parsimony. He had strong passions and an ardent imagination, but strength of character preserved him from the customary mistakes of youth. Thus, for instance, though a gambler at heart he never touched cards, having decided that his means did not allow him (as he put it) 'to risk the necessary in the hope of acquiring the superfluous'. And yet he spent night after night at the card tables, watching with feverish anxiety the vicissitudes of the game.

The story of the three cards had made a powerful impression upon his imagination and it haunted his mind all night. 'Supposing,' he thought to himself the following evening as he wandered about Petersburg, 'supposing the old countess were to reveal her secret to me? Or tell me the three winning cards! Why shouldn't I try my luck? ... Get introduced to her, win her favour - become her lover, perhaps. But all that would take time, and she is eighty- seven. She might be dead next week, or the day after tomorrow even! ... And the story itself? Is it likely? No, economy, moderation and hard work are my three winning cards. With them I can treble my capital - increase it sevenfold and obtain for myself leisure and independence!' Musing thus, he found himself in one of the main streets of Petersburg, in front of a house of old- fashioned architecture. The street was lined with carriages which followed one another up to the lighted porch. Out of the carriages stepped now the shapely little foot of a young beauty, now a military boot with clinking spur, or a diplomat's striped stockings and buckled shoes. Fur coats and cloaks passed in rapid procession before the majestic- looking concierge. Hermann stopped.

'Whose house is that?' he asked a watchman in his box at the corner.

'The Countess X's,' the man told him. It was Tomsy's grandmother.

Hermann started. The strange story of the three cards came into his mind again. He began walking up and down past the house, thinking of its owner and her wonderful secret. It was late when he returned to his humble lodgings; he could not get to sleep for a long time, and when sleep did come he dreamed of cards, a green baize table, stacks of bank- notes and piles of gold. He played card after card, resolutely turning down the corners, winning all the time. He raked in the gold and stuffed his pockets with bank- notes. Waking late in the morning, he sighed over the loss of his fantastic wealth, and then, sallying forth to wander about the town again, once more found himself outside the countess's house. It was as though some supernatural force drew him there. He stopped and looked up at the windows. In one of them he saw a dark head bent over a book or some needlework. The head was raised. Hermann caught sight of a rosy face and a pair of black eyes. That moment decided his fate.

Vous m'écrivez, mon ange, des lettres de quatre pages plus vite que je ne puis les lire.

From a correspondence

Lizaveta Ivanovna had scarcely taken off her hat and mantle before the countess sent for her and again ordered the carriage. They went out to take their seats. Just as the two footmen were lifting the old lady and helping her through the carriage door Lizaveta Ivanovna saw her Engineers officer standing by the wheel. He seized her hand; before she had recovered from her alarm the young man had disappeared, leaving a letter between her fingers. She hid it in her glove, and for the rest of the drive neither saw nor heard anything. It was the countess's habit when they were out in the carriage to ask a constant stream of questions: 'Who was that we met?' - 'What bridge is this?' - 'What does that signboard say?' This time Lizaveta Ivanovna returned such random and irrelevant answers that the countess grew angry with her.

'What is the matter with you, my dear? Have you taken leave of your senses? Don't you hear me or understand what I say? ... I speak distinctly enough, thank heaven, and am not in my dotage yet!'

Lizaveta Ivanovna paid no attention to her. When they returned home she ran up to her room and drew the letter out of her glove: it was unsealed. She read it. The letter contained a declaration of love: it was tender, respectful and had been copied word for word from a German novel. But Lizaveta Ivanovna did not know any German and she was delighted with it.

For all that, the letter troubled her greatly. For the first time in her life she was embarking upon secret and intimate relations with a young man. His boldness appalled her. She reproached herself for her imprudent behaviour, and did not know what to do: ought she to give up sitting at the window and by a show of indifference damp the young man's inclination to pursue her further? Should she return his letter to him? Or answer it coldly and firmly? There was nobody to whom she could turn for advice: she had neither female friend nor preceptor. Lizaveta Ivanovna decided to reply to the letter.

She sat down at her little writing- table, took pen and paper - and began to ponder. Several times she made a start and then tore the paper across: what she had written seemed to her either too indulgent or too harsh. At last she succeeded in composing a few lines with which she felt satisfied. 'I am sure', she wrote, 'that your intentions are honourable and that you had no wish to hurt me by any thoughtless conduct; but our acquaintance ought not to have begun in this manner. I return you your letter, and hope that in future I shall have no cause to complain of being shown a lack of respect which is undeserved.'

Next day, as soon as she saw Hermann approaching, Lizaveta Ivanovna got up from her embroideryframe, went into the drawing-room, opened the little ventilating window and threw the letter into the street, trusting to the young officer's alertness. Hermann ran forward, picked the letter up and went into a confectioner's shop. Breaking the seal, he found his own letter and Lizaveta Ivanovna's reply. It was just what he had expected and he returned home engrossed in his plot.

Three days after this a sharp-eyed young person brought Lizaveta Ivanovna a note from a milliner's establishment. Lizaveta Ivanovna opened it uneasily, fearing it was a demand for money, and suddenly recognized Hermann's handwriting.

'You have made a mistake, my dear,' she said. 'This note is not for me.'

'Oh yes it is for you!' retorted the girl boldly, not troubling to conceal a knowing smile. 'Please read it.'

Lizaveta Ivanovna glanced at the letter. In it Hermann wanted her to meet him.

'Impossible!' she cried, alarmed at the request, at its coming so soon, and at the means employed to transmit it. 'I am sure this was not addressed to me.' And she tore the letter into fragments.

'If the letter was not for you, why did you tear it up?' said the girl. 'I would have returned it to the sender.'

'Be good enough, my dear,' said Lizaveta Ivanovna, flushing crimson at her remark, 'not to bring me any more letters. And tell the person who sent you that he ought to be ashamed ...'

But Hermann did not give in. Every day Lizaveta Ivanovna received a letter from him by one means or another. They were no longer translated from the German. Hermann wrote them inspired by passion and in a style which was his own: they reflected both his inexorable desire and the disorder of an unbridled imagination. Lizaveta Ivanovna no longer thought of returning them: she drank them in eagerly and took to answering - and the notes she sent grew longer and more affectionate every hour. At last she threw out of the window to him the following letter:

There is a ball tonight at the Embassy. The countess will be there. We shall stay until about two o'clock. Here is an opportunity for you to see me alone. As soon as the countess is away the servants are sure to go to their quarters, leaving the concierge in the hall but he usually retires to his lodge. Come at half past eleven. Walk straight up the stairs. If you meet anyone in the ante-room, ask if the countess is at home. They will say 'No', but there will be no help for it - you will have to go away. But probably you will not meet anyone. The maids all sit together in the one room. Turn to the left out of the ante-room and keep straight on until you reach the countess's bedroom. In the bedroom, behind a screen, you will find two small doors: the one on the right leads into the study where the countess never goes; and the other on the left opens into a passage with a narrow winding staircase up to my room.

Hermann waited for the appointed hour like a tiger trembling for its prey. By ten o'clock in the evening he was already standing outside the countess's house. It was a frightful night: the wind howled, wet snow fell in big flakes; the street-lamps burned dimly; the streets were deserted. From time to time a sledge drawn by a sorry-looking hack passed by, the driver on the watch for a belated fare. Hermann stood there without his great-coat, feeling neither the wind nor the snow. At last the countess's carriage was brought round. Hermann saw the old woman wrapped in sables being lifted into the vehicle by two footmen; then Liza in a light cloak, with natural flowers in her hair, flitted by. The carriage doors banged. The vehicle rolled heavily over the wet snow. The concierge closed the street-door. The lights in the windows went out. Hermann started to walk to and fro outside the deserted house; he went up to a street-lamp and glanced at his watch: it was twenty minutes past eleven. He stood still by the lamp-post, his eyes fixed on the hand of the watch. Precisely at half past eleven Hermann walked up the steps of the house and entered the brightly lit vestibule. The concierge was not there. Hermann ran up the stairs, opened the door of the ante-room and saw a footman asleep in a soiled, old-fashioned arm-chair by the side of a lamp. With a light, firm tread Hermann passed quickly by him. The ball-room and drawing-room were in darkness but the lamp in the ante-room shed a dim light into them. Hermann entered the bedroom. Ancient icons filled the icon-stand before which burned a golden lamp. Arm-chairs upholstered in faded damask and sofas with down cushions, the tassels of which had lost their gilt, were ranged with depressing symmetry round the walls hung with Chinese wall-paper. On one of the walls were two portraits painted in Paris by Madame Lebrun: the first of a stout, red-faced man of some forty years of age, in a light-green uniform with a star on his breast; the other - a beautiful young woman with an aquiline nose and a rose in the powdered hair drawn back over her temples. Every corner was crowded with porcelain shepherdesses, clocks made by the celebrated Leroy, little boxes, roulettes, fans and all the thousand and one playthings invented for ladies of fashion at the end of the last century together with Montgolfier's balloon and Mesmer's magnetism. Hermann stepped behind the screen. A small iron bedstead stood there; to the right was the door into the study - to the left, the other door into the passage. Hermann opened it and saw the narrow winding staircase leading to poor little Liza's room. But he turned about and went into the dark study.

The time passed slowly. Everything was quiet. The drawing-room clock struck twelve; the clocks in the other rooms chimed twelve, one after the other, and all was still again. Hermann stood leaning against the cold stove. He was quite calm: his heart beat evenly, like that of a man resolved upon a dangerous but inevitable undertaking. The clocks struck one, and then two, and he heard the distant rumble of a carriage. In spite of himself he was overcome with agitation. The carriage drove up to the house and stopped. He heard the clatter of the carriage- steps being lowered. In the house all was commotion. Servants ran to and fro, there was a confusion of voices, and lights appeared everywhere. Three ancient lady's maids bustled into the bedroom, followed by the countess who, half dead with fatigue, sank into a Voltaire arm- chair. Hermann watched through a crack in the door. Lizaveta Ivanovna passed close by him and he heard her footsteps hurrying up the stairs to her room. For a moment something akin to remorse assailed him but he quickly hardened his heart again.

The countess began undressing before the looking- glass. Her maids took off the cap trimmed with roses and lifted the powdered wig from her grey, closely cropped head. Pins showered about her. The silver- trimmed yellow dress fell at her puffy feet. Hermann witnessed the hideous mysteries of her toilette; at last the countess put on bed jacket and night- cap, and in this attire, more suited to her age, she seemed less horrible and ugly.

Like most old people the countess suffered from sleeplessness. Having undressed, she sat down in a big arm- chair by the window and dismissed her maids. They took away the candles, leaving only the lamp before the icons to light the room. The countess sat there, her skin sallow with age, her flabby lips twitching, her body swaying to and fro. Her dim eyes were completely vacant and looking at her one might have imagined that the dreadful old woman was rocking her body not from choice but owing to some secret galvanic mechanism.

Suddenly an inexplicable change came over the death-like face. The lips ceased to move, the eyes brightened: before the countess stood a strange young man.

'Do not be alarmed, for heaven's sake, do not be alarmed!' he said in a low, clear voice. 'I have no intention of doing you any harm, I have come to beg a favour of you.'

The old woman stared at him in silence, as if she had not heard. Hermann thought she must be deaf and bending down to her ear he repeated what he had just said. The old woman remained silent as before.

'You can ensure the happiness of my whole life,' Hermann went on, 'and at no cost to yourself. I know that you can name three cards in succession ...'

Hermann stopped. The countess appeared to have grasped what he wanted and to be seeking words to frame her answer.

'It was a joke,' she said at last. 'I swear to you it was a joke.'

'No, madam,' Hermann retorted angrily. 'Remember Tchaplitsky, and how you enabled him to win back his loss.'

The countess was plainly perturbed. Her face expressed profound agitation; but soon she relapsed into her former impassivity.

'Can you not tell me those three winning cards?' Hermann went on.

The countess said nothing. Hermann continued:

'For whom would you keep your secret? For your grandsons? They are rich enough already: they don't appreciate the value of money. Your three cards would not help a spendthrift. A man who does not take care of his inheritance will die a beggar though all the demons of the world were at his command. I am not a spendthrift: I know the value of money. Your three cards would not be wasted on me. Well? ...'

He paused, feverishly waiting for her reply. She was silent. Hermann fell on his knees.

'If your heart has ever known what it is to love, if you can remember the ecstasies of love, if you have ever smiled tenderly at the cry of your new-born son, if any human feeling has ever stirred in your breast, I appeal to you as wife, beloved one, mother - I implore you by all that is holy in life not to reject my prayer: tell me your secret. Of what use is it to you? Perhaps it is bound up with some terrible sin, with the loss of eternal salvation, with some bargain with the devil ... Reflect - you are old: you have not much longer to live, and I am ready to take your sin upon my soul. Only tell me your secret. Remember that a man's happiness is in your hands; that not only I, but my children and my children's children will bless your memory and hold it sacred ...'

The old woman answered not a word.

Hermann rose to his feet.

'You old hag!' he said, grinding his teeth. 'Then I will make you speak ...'

With these words he drew a pistol from his pocket. At the sight of the pistol the countess for the second time showed signs of agitation. Her head shook and she raised a hand as though to protect herself from the shot ... Then she fell back ... and was still.

'Come, an end to this childish nonsense!' said Hermann, seizing her by the arm. 'I ask you for the last time - will you tell me those three cards? Yes or no?'

The countess made no answer. Hermann saw that she was dead.

Homme sans mœurs et sans religion!

From a correspondence

Lizaveta Ivanovna was sitting in her room, still in her ball dress, lost in thought. On returning home she had made haste to dismiss the sleepy maid who reluctantly offered to help her, saying that she would undress herself, and with trembling heart had gone to her own room, expecting to find Hermann and hoping that she would not find him. A glance convinced her he was not there, and she thanked fate for having prevented their meeting. She sat down without undressing and began to recall the circumstances that had led her so far in so short a time. It was not three weeks since she had first caught sight of the young man from the window - and yet she was carrying on a correspondence with him, and he had already succeeded in inducing her to agree to a nocturnal tryst! She knew his name only because he had signed some of his letters; she had never spoken to him, did not know the sound of his voice, had never heard him mentioned ... until that evening. Strange to say, that very evening at the ball, Tomsy, piqued with the young Princess Pauline for flirting with somebody else instead of with him as she usually did, decided to revenge himself by a show of indifference. He asked Lizaveta Ivanovna to be his partner and danced the interminable mazurka with her. And all the time he kept teasing her about her partiality for officers of the Engineers, assuring her that he knew far more than she could suppose, and some of his sallies so found their mark that several times Lizaveta Ivanovna thought he must know her secret.

'Who told you all this?' she asked, laughing.

'A friend of someone you know,' Tomsy answered, 'a very remarkable person.'

'And who is this remarkable man?'

'His name is Hermann.'

Lizaveta Ivanovna said nothing; but her hands and feet turned to ice.

'This Hermann', continued Tomsy, 'is a truly romantic figure: he has the profile of a Napoleon and the soul of a Mephistopheles. I think there must be at least three crimes on his conscience. How pale you look!'

'I have a bad headache ... Well, and what did this Hermann - or whatever his name is - tell you?'

'Hermann is very annoyed with his friend: he says that in his place he would act quite differently ... I suspect in fact that Hermann has designs upon you himself; at any rate he listens to his friend's ecstatic exclamations with anything but indifference.'

'But where has he seen me?'

'In church, perhaps, or when you were out walking ... heaven only knows! - in your own room maybe, while you were asleep, for there is nothing he -'

Three ladies coming up to invite Tomsy to choose between 'oubli ou regret ?' interrupted the conversation which had become so painfully interesting to Lizaveta Ivanovna.

The lady chosen by Tomsy was the Princess Pauline herself. She succeeded in effecting a reconciliation with him while they danced an extra turn and spun round once more before she was conducted to her chair. When he returned to his place neither Hermann nor Lizaveta Ivanovna was in Tomsy's thoughts. Lizaveta Ivanovna longed to resume the interrupted conversation but the mazurka came to an end and shortly afterwards the old countess took her departure.

Tomsy's words were nothing more than the usual small- talk of the ball- room; but they sank deep into the girl's romantic heart. The portrait sketched by Tomsy resembled the picture she had herself drawn, and thanks to the novels of the day the commonplace figure both terrified and fascinated her. She sat there with her bare arms crossed and with her head, still adorned with flowers, sunk upon her naked bosom ... Suddenly the door opened and Hermann came in ... She shuddered.

'Where were you?' she asked in a frightened 'In the old countess's bedroom,' Hermann answered. 'I have just left her. The countess is dead.' 'Merciful heavens! ... what are you saying?' whisper.

'And I think', added Hermann, 'that I am the cause of her death.'

Lizaveta darted a glance at him, and heard Tomsy's words echo in her soul: '... there must be at least three crimes on his conscience'. Hermann sat down in the window beside her and related all that had happened.

Lizaveta Ivanovna listened to him aghast. So all those passionate letters, those ardent pleas, the bold, determined pursuit had not been inspired by love! Money! - that was what his soul craved! It was not she who could satisfy his desires and make him happy! Poor child, she had been nothing but the blind tool of a thief, of the murderer of her aged benefactress! ... She wept bitterly in a vain agony of repentance. Hermann watched in silence: he too was suffering torment; but neither the poor girl's tears nor her indescribable charm in her grief touched his hardened soul. He felt no pricking of conscience at the thought of the dead old woman. One thing only horrified him: the irreparable loss of the secret which was to have brought him wealth.

'You are a monster!' said Lizaveta Ivanovna at last.

'I did not mean her to die,' Hermann answered. 'My pistol was not loaded.'

Both were silent.

Morning came. Lizaveta Ivanovna blew out the candle which had burned down. A pale light illumined the room. She wiped her tear- stained eyes and looked up at Hermann: he was sitting on the window- sill with his arms folded, a menacing frown on his face. In this attitude he bore a remarkable likeness to the portrait of Napoleon. The likeness struck even Lizaveta Ivanovna.

'How shall I get you out of the house?' she said at last. 'I had thought of taking you down the secret staircase but that means going through the bedroom, and I am afraid.'

'Tell me how to find this secret staircase - I will go alone.'

Lizaveta rose, took a key from the chest of drawers and gave it to Hermann with precise instructions. Hermann pressed her cold, unresponsive hand, kissed her bowed head and left her.

He walked down the winding stairway and entered the countess's bedroom again. The dead woman sat as though turned to stone. Her face wore a look of profound tranquillity. Hermann stood in front of her and gazed long and earnestly at her, as though trying to convince himself of the terrible truth. Then he went into the study, felt behind the tapestry for the door and began to descend the dark stairway, excited by strange emotions. 'Maybe some sixty years ago, at this very hour,' he thought, 'some happy youth - long since turned to dust - was stealing up this staircase into that very bedroom, in an embroidered tunic, his hair dressed à l'oiseau royal, pressing his three- cornered hat to his breast; and today the heart of his aged mistress has ceased to beat ...'

At the bottom of the stairs Hermann saw a door which he opened with the same key, and found himself in a passage leading to the street.

5

That night the dead Baroness von W. appeared before me. She was all in white and said: 'How do you do, Mr Coun cillor?'

Swedenborg

Three days after that fatal night, at nine o'clock in the morning, Hermann repaired to the Convent of * * * *, where the last respects were to be paid to the mortal remains of the dead countess. Though he felt no remorse he could not altogether stifle the voice of conscience which kept repeating to him: 'You are the old woman's murderer!' Having very little religious faith, he was exceedingly superstitious. Believing that the dead countess might exercise a malignant influence on his life, he decided to go to her funeral to beg and obtain her forgiveness.

The church was full. Hermann had difficulty in making his way through the crowd. The coffin rested on a rich catafalque beneath a canopy of velvet. The dead woman lay with her hands crossed on her breast, in a lace cap and a white satin robe. Around the bier stood the members of her household: servants in black clothes, with armorial ribbons on their shoulders and lighted candles in their hands; relatives in deep mourning - children, grandchildren and great- grandchildren. No one wept: tears would have been une affectation. The countess was so old that her death could not have taken anybody by surprise, and her family had long ceased to think of her as one of the living. A famous preacher delivered the funeral oration. In simple and touching phrases he described the peaceful passing of the saintly woman whose long life had been a quiet, touching preparation for a Christian end. 'The angel of death', he declared, 'found her vigilant in devout meditation, awaiting the midnight coming of the bridegroom.' The service was concluded in melancholy decorum. First the relations went forward to bid farewell of the corpse. They were followed by a long procession of all those who had come to render their last homage to one who had for so many years been a participator in their frivolous amusements. After them came the members of the countess's household. The last of these was an old woman- retainer the same age as the deceased.

Two young girls supported her by the arms. She had not strength to prostrate herself - and she was the only one to shed tears as she kissed her mistress's cold hand. Hermann decided to approach the coffin after her. He knelt down on the cold stone strewn with branches of spruce- fir, and remained in that position for some minutes; at last he rose to his feet and, pale as the deceased herself, walked up the steps of the catafalque and bent over the corpse ... At that moment it seemed to him that the dead woman darted a mocking look at him and winked her eye. Hermann drew back, missed his footing and crashed headlong to the floor. They picked him up. At the same time Lizaveta Ivanovna was carried out of the church in a swoon. This incident momentarily upset the solemnity of the mournful rite. There was a dull murmur among the congregation, and a tall thin man in the uniform of a court-chamberlain, a close relative of the deceased, whispered in the ear of an Englishman who was standing near him that the young officer was the natural son of the countess, to which the Englishman coldly replied, 'Oh?'

The whole of that day Hermann was strangely troubled. Repairing to a quiet little tavern to dine, he drank a great deal of wine, contrary to his habit, in the hope of stifling his inner agitation. But the wine only served to excite his imagination. Returning home, he threw himself on his bed without undressing, and fell heavily asleep.

It was night when he woke and the moon was shining into his room. He glanced at the time: it was a quarter to three. Sleep had left him; he sat on the bed and began thinking of the old countess's funeral.

Just then someone in the street looked in at him through the window and immediately walked on. Hermann paid no attention. A moment later he heard the door of his ante- room open. Hermann thought it was his orderly, drunk as usual, returning from some nocturnal excursion, but presently he heard an unfamiliar footstep: someone was softly shuffling along the floor in slippers. The door opened and a woman in white came in. Hermann mistook her for his old nurse and wondered what could have brought her at such an hour. But the woman in white glided across the room and stood before him - and Hermann recognized the countess!

'I have come to you against my will,' she said in a firm voice: 'but I am commanded to grant your request. The three, the seven and the ace will win for you if you play them in succession, provided that you do not stake more than one card in twenty- four hours and never play again as long as you live. I forgive you my death, on condition that you marry my ward, Lizaveta Ivanovna.'

With these words she turned softly, rustled to the door in her slippers, and disappeared. Hermann heard the street- door click and again saw someone peeping in at him through the window.

It was a long time before he could pull himself together and go into the next room. His orderly was asleep on the floor: Hermann had difficulty in waking him. The man was drunk as usual: there was no getting any sense out of him. The street- door was locked. Hermann returned to his room and, lighting a candle, wrote down all the details of his vision.

'Attendez!'

'How dare you say "Attendez!" to me?'

'Your Excellency , I said "Attendez", sir.'

Two idées fixes cannot co- exist in the moral world any more than two physical bodies can occupy one and the same space. 'The three, the seven, the ace' soon drove all thought of the dead woman from Hermann's mind. 'Three, seven, ace' were perpetually in his head and on his lips. If he saw a young girl he would say, 'How graceful she is! A regular three of hearts!' Asked the time, he would reply, 'Five minutes to seven.' Every stout man reminded him of the ace. 'Three, seven, ace' haunted his dreams, assuming all sorts of shapes. The three blossomed before him like a luxuriant flower, the seven took the form of a Gothic portal, and aces became gigantic spiders. His whole attention was focused on one thought: how to make use of the secret which had cost him so dear. He began to consider resigning his commission in order to go and travel abroad. In the public gambling- houses in Paris he would compel fortune to give him his magical treasure. Chance spared him the trouble.

A circle of wealthy gamblers existed in Moscow, presided over by the celebrated Tchekalinsky, who had spent his life at the card-table and amassed millions, accepting promissory notes when he won and paying his losses in ready money. His long experience inspired the confidence of his fellow- players, while his open house, his famous chef and his gay and friendly manner secured for him the general respect of the public. He came to Petersburg. The young men of the capital flocked to his rooms, forsaking balls for cards and preferring the excitement of gambling to the seductions of flirting. Narumov brought Hermann to him.

They passed through a succession of magnificent rooms full of attentive servants. The place was crowded. Several generals and privy councillors were playing whist; young men smoking long pipes lounged about on sofas upholstered in damask. In the drawing- room some twenty gamblers jostled round a long table at which the master of the house was keeping bank. Tchekalinsky was a man of about sixty years of age and most dignified appearance; he had silvery- grey hair, a full, florid face with a kindly expression, and sparkling eyes which were always smiling. Narumov introduced Hermann. Shaking hands cordially, Tchekalinsky requested him not to stand on ceremony, and went on dealing.

The game continued for some while. On the table lay more than thirty cards. Tchekalinsky paused after each round to give the players time to arrange their cards and note their losses, listened courteously to their observations and more courteously still straightened the corner of a card that some careless hand had turned down. At last the game finished. Tchekalinsky shuffled the cards and prepared to deal again.

'Will you allow me to take a card?' said Hermann, stretching out his hand from behind a stout gentleman who was punting.

Tchekalinsky smiled and bowed graciously, in silent token of consent. Narumov laughingly congratulated Hermann on breaking his long abstention from cards and wished him a lucky start.

'There!' said Hermann, chalking some figures on the back of his card.

'How much?' asked the banker, screwing up his eyes. 'Excuse me, I cannot see.'

'Forty- seven thousand,' Hermann answered.

At these words every head was turned in a flash, and all eyes were fixed on Hermann.

'He has taken leave of his senses!' thought Narumov.

'Allow me to point out to you', said Tchekalinsky with his unflinching smile, 'that you are playing rather high: nobody here has ever staked more than two hundred and seventy- five at a time.'

'Well?' returned Hermann. 'Do you accept my card or not?'

Tchekalinsky bowed with the same air of humble acquiescence.

'I only wanted to observe', he said 'that, being honoured with the confidence of my friends, I can only play against ready money. For my own part, of course, I am perfectly sure that your word is sufficient but for the sake of the rules of the game and our accounts I must request you to place the money on your card.'

Hermann took a bank- note from his pocket and handed it to Tchekalinsky, who after a cursory glance placed it on Hermann's card. He began to deal. On the right a nine turned up, and on the left a three.

'I win!' said Hermann, pointing to his card.

There was a murmur of astonishment among the company. Tchekalinsky frowned, but the smile quickly reappeared on his face.

'Would you like me to settle now?' he asked Hermann.

'If you please.'

Tchekalinsky took a number of bank- notes out of his pocket and paid there and then. Hermann picked up his money and left the table. Narumov could not believe his eyes. Hermann drank a glass of lemonade and departed home.

The following evening he appeared at Tchekalinsky's again. The host was dealing. Hermann walked up to the table; the players immediately made room for him. Tchekalinsky bowed graciously. Hermann waited for the next deal, took a card and placed on it his original forty- seven thousand together with his winnings of the day before. Tchekalinsky began to deal. A knave turned up on the right, a seven on the left.

Hermann showed his seven.

There was a general exclamation. Tchekalinsky was obviously disconcerted. He counted out ninetyfour thousand and handed them to Hermann, who pocketed them in the coolest manner and instantly withdrew.

The next evening Hermann again made his appearance at the table. Every one was expecting him; the generals and privy councillors left their whist to watch such extraordinary play. The young officers leaped up from their sofas and all the waiters collected in the drawing- room. Every one pressed round Hermann. The other players left off punting, impatient to see what would happen. Hermann stood at the table, prepared to play alone against Tchekalinsky, who was pale but still smiling. Each broke the seal of a pack of cards. Tchekalinsky shuffled. Hermann took a card and covered it with a pile of bank- notes. It was like a duel. Deep silence reigned in the room.

'Ace wins!' said Hermann, and showed his card.

'Your queen has lost,' said Tchekalinsky gently.

Hermann started: indeed, instead of an ace there lay before him the queen of spades. He could not believe his eyes or think how he could have made such a mistake.

At that moment it seemed to him that the queen of spades opened and closed her eye, and mocked him with a smile. He was struck by the extraordinary resemblance ...

'The old woman!' he cried in terror.

Tchekalinsky gathered up his winnings. Hermann stood rooted to the spot. When he left the table every one began talking at once.

'A fine game, that!' said the players.

Tchekalinsky shuffled the cards afresh and the game resumed as usual.

CONCLUSION

Hermann went out of his mind. He is now in room number 17 of the Obuhov Hospital. He returns no answer to questions put to him but mutters over and over again, with incredible rapidity:

‘Three, seven, ace! Three, seven, queen!’

Lizaveta Ivanovna has married a very pleasant young man; he is in the civil service somewhere and has a good income. He is the son of the old countess's former steward. Lizaveta Ivanovna in her turn is bringing up a poor relative.

And Tomsy, who has been promoted to the rank of captain, has married the Princess Pauline.

纳塔内尔致洛塔尔

我这么久，这么久没有写信，你们大家一定满怀不安。母亲或许很气愤，克拉拉则可能以为我在这儿生活得穷奢极欲，把她那铭肌镂骨的、天使般的可爱形象给忘得一干二净。但事情并非如此。我每一日、每一刻都念着你们；我可爱的克莱辛 [1]，她那亲切的模样不时出现在我甜蜜的梦中，并朝我柔美地微笑，明眸善睐，每当我回到你们身边时，她都那样笑。唉，我多么想给你们写信，但精神上撕裂般的情绪一直使我心烦意乱！有什么可怕的不祥之物闯进了我的生活！令人毛骨悚然的厄运威胁着我，对它的不祥预感如阴云般笼罩在我的头顶，阻隔了每一束宜人美好的阳光。

我应该告诉你，我都遭遇了什么。我很清楚我必须这么做，然而只要我一琢磨这事，我就会禁不住发疯似的大笑。唉，我心爱的洛塔尔！我究竟该如何讲述，才让你多少能够感同身受：几日之前发生在我身上的事情，当真会像敌人一般摧毁我的生活！要是你在这儿，你就能亲眼目睹，但现在你肯定把我当作一个发了疯、见了鬼的人。简而言之，发生在我身上的怪事——我竭力摆脱它所带来的致命影响，但只是徒劳——并非别的，而是这么一回事：几天前，也就是十月三十日的中午十二点，一个卖天气瓶 [2] 的小贩走进我的房间，朝我兜售他的商品。我什么也没买，还威胁要把他从楼梯上扔下去，但他倒自己走下去了。

你或许会猜，我之所以认为这倒霉小贩会与我作对，是因为这出事件与我的一些个人经历有关，它们曾深深地影响了我的生活。事实也的确如此。我得尽全力使自己镇定下来，才能心平气和、耐心地向你讲述我的许多童年经历，这样就能使一切都化作清楚明晰的画面，浮现在你活跃的脑海中了。在我想要开口的这当儿，我听见你笑了，而克拉拉则说：“这实在太幼稚了！”笑吧，我请求你们，发自内心地取笑我吧！我恳求你们！但是天主作证！我在令人发狂的绝望中毛骨悚然，正像弗朗茨·摩尔乞求丹尼尔 [3] 那样乞求你们取笑我。现在说正事吧！

由于父亲工作繁忙，除了午餐时间外，我和我的兄弟姐妹们整日都不太能见到他。按老规矩，晚饭一般在七点端上餐桌，饭后我们所有人——母亲与我们——便到父亲的书房里去，围坐在一张圆桌旁。父亲一边抽着烟，一边喝着一大杯啤酒。他常常给我们讲一些奇妙的

故事，讲得那样起劲，以至他的烟斗老是熄灭，我便把引火纸递给他，将烟斗重新点燃，这曾是我的一大乐趣。然而很多时候他只会丢给我们一些绘本，自己沉默而僵直地坐在沙发椅上吞云吐雾，于是我们所有人都会陷进烟雾中。在那样的夜里，母亲总是很悲伤；时钟刚敲过九点，她便说：“好了，孩子们！上床去吧！上床去吧！沙人来了，我已经察觉到了。”而我每一次都真的听见有谁迈着沉重的步伐缓缓爬上楼梯，发出沉闷的嗒嗒声，那想必就是沙人了。有一次我感觉那沉闷的脚步声格外恐怖，便在母亲带我们离开时问她：“哎，妈妈！那总是把我们父亲身边赶走的可恶沙人究竟是谁呀？他到底长什么样？”“没有什么沙人，我亲爱的孩子，”母亲回答道，“我说沙人来了，只是想说你们困到连眼睛都睁不开，就好像眼里被人撒了沙子一样。”

母亲的回答并未使我满意，我稚气的心里清晰地浮现出这样一个想法：母亲只是担心我们被沙人吓着，才否定他的存在。我可是一直能听见他走上楼梯的。我满怀好奇，想更进一步了解沙人，还有他与这些小孩子的关系。终于我去询问了那个照料我小妹妹的老婆子：“沙人究竟是什么人呢？”

“哎，小纳塔内尔，”她回答，“你还不知道吗，那是一个邪恶的家伙，如果有孩子不肯上床睡觉，他就找到他们，往他们眼里撒一把沙子，让充血的眼睛从脑袋上掉出来。他把这些眼睛扔进袋子，在夜半时像喂鸟那样喂给他自己的小孩儿，沙人的小孩儿们坐在巢里，有猫头鹰嘴一般尖尖的喙，这样他们就能叼走不听话的孩子们的眼睛。”

我于是在脑海里为残暴的沙人描绘出阴森的肖像。而每当沉闷的脚步声在夜里传来时，恐怖与惊惧总是令我浑身哆嗦。对此，母亲能从我口中问出的，除了一句抽噎的“是沙人！是沙人！”外，再无其他。然后我便奔进卧室，整晚都因沙人的可怕模样而备受煎熬。

后来我长得足够大了，也看透老婆子所告诉我的——沙人，以及夜半时分他那些待在巢里的孩子——大概并不完全属实。尽管如此，沙人于我而言仍然是可怕的鬼怪。每当听见他不光爬上楼梯，还猛地闯入我父亲的房间时，恐惧便会攫住我。有时沙人很久不来，之后他又一次次来得更加频繁。这样持续了好些年，我却仍然无法对这阴森的怪物习以为常，沙人的骇人形象在我心中从未淡化。

我花越来越多的时间与精力去想象沙人与父亲的关系，无法战胜的胆怯使我不敢开口询问父亲，于是我打算自己去探寻那秘密，去见传说中的沙人。几年来，对沙人的兴趣在我心中变得愈加强烈。沙人使我的一切奇妙探险之事都格外着迷，这些东西本来就容易引发孩子

的兴趣。我最爱听或读有关科博尔特 [4]、女巫与拇指人 [5] 的惊悚故事；但在这些惊悚故事中，沙人永远是我的最爱，我在桌上、柜子上与墙面上用粉笔和煤块画满了他那最为古怪、最为可恶的模样。

我满十岁的时候，母亲让我从孩子们的卧房搬到另一间小室，它与父亲的房间在同一条走廊上，并且相距不远。每当钟声敲响九下，屋里传出那个陌生人的声音时，我们还是不得不尽快离开。我在自己的小室里听见沙人走进父亲的房间，不久后便觉得有一股香气在整个家里弥散开来，它闻着奇怪却又美妙。随着好奇心的累积，我的勇气也不断增加了——不管通过什么方式，我都要认识沙人。我常在母亲经过房门后悄悄溜出房间，来到走廊上，但我从没偷听到一丝一毫，因为每当我赶到自认为可以窥见沙人的位置上时，他都早已进门去了。无法克制的渴望驱使着我，我终于下定决心要藏在父亲的房间里，并在那儿等候沙人。

一个晚上，父亲的沉默与母亲的忧伤使我意识到沙人即将到来，我便借口自己太过困倦，在九点之前就离开了房间，并躲在紧挨房门的一个藏身之处。家里的大门嘎吱作响，缓慢而沉重的脚步声隆隆地穿过走廊，靠近了楼梯。母亲带着我的兄弟姐妹们急匆匆地从我躲藏的地方经过。悄悄地——悄悄地，我打开了父亲的房门。他背对着门，像往常一样沉默而僵直地坐在那儿。他没有发现我，我便迅速溜了进去，躲在窗帘后；窗帘掩着一个刚好挨着门的衣柜，它敞开着，里面挂着父亲的衣物。

近了，隆隆的脚步声愈加近了，他在房门外发出奇怪的呼哧声、擦刮声与嗡嗡声。恐惧与期待让我心若擂鼓，紧挨房门的地方传来尖锐的脚步声，门把被粗暴地扭动，门嘎吱一声猛地弹开了！我竭力鼓起勇气，小心翼翼地向外窥去。房间中央，沙人立在父亲面前，明亮的灯光在他脸上燃烧！沙人，那可怕的沙人，是那个有时会与我们共进午餐的老律师科佩留斯！

正因那阴森、恐怖至极的形象是这个科佩留斯，我心中的恐惧更深了。试想一个高个儿、宽肩的男人，有一个奇形怪状的胖脑袋，一张黄蜡石般的脸庞与一双浓密的灰眉毛，眉毛下面一对绿色猫眼尖锐地闪烁着，嘴唇之上则是一只硕大而牢固的鼻子。他那歪斜的嘴常常露出阴险扭曲的笑容，接着脸上的暗红色斑点便清晰可见，他咬紧的齿间也传出奇怪的嘶嘶声。

科佩留斯总是穿着一件裁剪过时的暗灰色外套，还有同样款式的背心和裤子，脚上搭配的却是黑色长袜和带有小搭扣的鞋子。他的小假发几乎遮不住头盖骨，卷发高高地贴在又大又红的耳朵上面，宽大

密实的发髻从脖颈处伸出来，露出了用来固定衬衫领子的银色扣子。他的整个模样既令人生厌，又叫人恐惧；但最惹我们孩子厌恶的，还是他那一双指节凸出、毛茸茸的手，只要是他用这双手碰过的东西，我们就都不要了。他发觉了这点，便以这样或那样的借口去碰这一小块糕点，或那一个香甜的水果。它们本是母亲悄悄替我们放在盘子上的。这些甜食本应使我们快乐，他却弄得我们泪盈满眶，出于恶心与厌恶而不愿再享用它们。在假期里，当我们从父亲那儿得到一小杯甜酒后，他也这么做。他会迅速伸手过来，或者直接把玻璃杯送到他青紫的唇边，我们只能抽噎着敢怒不敢言，这种时候他便会发出魔鬼般的笑声。他习惯称我们为小混蛋。但凡有他在场，我们都一声也不能吭，只在心里诅咒这个丑陋的男人，因为他是我们的敌人，而且存心要糟蹋我们微小的快乐。母亲似乎和我们一样憎恨这个可恶的科佩留斯，因为每当他现身后，她欢欣愉悦的心情就变得悲伤阴郁，原本无拘无束的性格也变得严肃。面对科佩留斯，父亲则自欺欺人，就仿佛科佩留斯是更加高贵的存在，必须容忍他的无礼，而且无论如何，人们都得以良好的心情接纳他。对此父亲从未明说，只通过准备其最喜欢的菜肴，并配以稀罕的好酒来稍作暗示。

而此刻，当我看见那个科佩留斯时，心中油然而生出一个惊悚可怕的想法：除了他以外，其他任何人不可能是沙人。对我来说，沙人从此不再只是吓人的睡魔——那个会把孩子们的眼珠作为饲料，在夜半时分带去猫头鹰巢里的怪物——并且不只会出现在逗弄小孩儿的无稽之谈中。不！他是一个丑陋的、鬼怪般的恶棍，给所到之处带去悲痛与绝望，带去短暂或永恒的厄运。

我着了魔似的一动不动。我清楚地知道自己会受到严厉的惩罚，但仍冒着被发现的危险站在那儿，把头伸出窗帘偷听。我的父亲郑重接待了科佩留斯。“起来！去干活！”科佩留斯声音嘶哑，呼噜噜地说着，扔开了外套。父亲面色阴沉，默默地脱去睡袍。两人都穿上了黑色长罩衫。我没看见他们是从哪儿拿来这些罩衫的。父亲打开了壁橱的侧门；我却发现，那并非如我一直以为的是个壁橱，而更像个黑色的洞。洞里有一只小炉子，旁边围着各式各样奇异的小工具。哦，上帝啊！当我的父亲朝那炉火弯下腰时，他看上去完全变了样。他柔和正直的面孔仿佛在一阵可怕的、痉挛般的痛楚中扭曲，变成一张丑陋又令人作呕的魔鬼的面庞。他看上去很像那科佩留斯了。而这家伙挥舞着烧红了的钳子，用它从浓烟里取出一些亮闪闪的物质，接着不知疲倦地锻打它们。我觉得似乎能在那四周瞧见人的面孔，但他们却没有眼睛——取而代之的，是丑恶的、深深的黑窟窿。

“眼睛快出来，眼睛快出来！”科佩留斯用沉闷的隆隆声低喊道。

惊恐疯狂地捕获了我，我尖叫起来，从躲藏处跌了出来，摔在地板上。这时科佩留斯一把抓住我：“小浑蛋！小浑蛋！”他龇牙咧嘴地咯咯笑了起来！他用力揪着我，把我往炉子上扔。炉火烧焦了我的头发。“现在我们有眼睛了——眼睛——一对漂亮的孩童眼睛。”科佩留斯悄声说着，从火里抓来一把烧红了的晶粒，打算扔进我的眼睛里。

这时我父亲恳求地抬高了双手，喊道：“大师！大师！放过我的纳塔内尔的眼睛吧！放过他的眼睛吧！”科佩留斯发出刺耳的笑声，喊道：“那就让这少年保住他的眼睛吧，他会得到教训，他痛哭的声音要传遍全世界。但现在我们得好好观察手与脚的运动机制。”这么说着，他粗暴地抓着我，以至关节都咔咔作响；并拧过我的手足，将它们一会儿这么摆，一会儿那么摆。“它们怎么放都不对！还是以前那样好！上年纪的人懂这个！”科佩留斯嘶嘶地轻声说道。我身边的一切都变得黑暗阴森，一阵突如其来的痉挛掠过神经与四肢百骸——我什么也感受不到了。

柔和、温暖的气息拂过我的脸庞，我从死一般的沉睡中惊醒，见母亲朝我俯下身来。“沙人还在吗？”我结结巴巴地问。“不，我亲爱的孩子，他老早老早就走了，他不会再伤害你了！”母亲这么说着，亲昵地拥吻她失而复得的宝贝。

我何必要使你厌烦呢，我心爱的洛塔尔！我何必这样事无巨细地叙述，何况还有那么多没讲？够了！我在偷听的时候被发现了，还被科佩留斯残忍地对待。恐惧与惊吓使我发起高烧，我在床上躺了好几周。“沙人还在吗？”这是我说的第一句神智清醒的话，也象征着我的康复与救赎。我要向你讲述的，只剩下我少年时期最骇人的时刻；然后你就会相信，并非因为我的眼睛出了毛病，才使得一切在我眼里都暗淡无光，而是阴暗的厄运在我人生的天空中投下了一片晦暗不清的阴翳，我或许只能以死将其粉碎。

科佩留斯不再出现了，据说他离开了这座城市。

那之后过去了约莫一年，一天晚上我们仍按老规矩围坐在圆桌旁，父亲兴致勃勃地讲述了他年轻时旅途中的许多趣事。当时钟敲响九点的时候，我们听见门的枢轴突然嘎吱作响，铁一般沉重的脚步声隆隆地穿过门廊，走上楼梯。“是科佩留斯。”母亲面色惨白地说。“对！……是科佩留斯。”父亲用虚弱的、断断续续的声音重复道。“但是孩子他爸，孩子他爸！”母亲的泪涌出了眼眶，她叫道，“非得这样不可吗？”“最后一次了！”父亲回答，“这是他最后一次来找我，我向你保证。走吧，带着孩子们走！……走吧……上床去！晚安！”

我仿佛被压进了坚硬冰冷的岩石里——我的呼吸停滞了！我站着一动不动，这时母亲抓过我的胳膊：“来吧，纳塔内尔，快过来！”我被她带走了，带进自己的小室。“放心，放心，躺上床去！睡吧，睡吧。”母亲离开时说道。但不可名状的恐惧与不安在心里折磨着我，让我根本无法合上眼睑。那可恨又可怕的科佩留斯就站在我跟前，他目光如炬，恶毒地嘲笑我，我竭力想摆脱他的幻影，但只是徒劳。

那或许已是午夜时分，忽然一声骇人的巨响传来，就跟一颗炮弹发射了似的。整座房子都轰隆作响，我的门前掠过一阵嘎吱声与沙沙声，紧跟着房屋大门嘭的一声关上了。“那是科佩留斯！”我惊恐地喊道，从床上一跃而起。此时传来刺耳又绝望的惨叫，我横冲直撞地奔向父亲的房间。门敞开着，令人窒息的浓烟迎面席卷而来，女佣的尖叫声传来：“唉呀，先生他……先生他！”

在蒸汽滚滚的炉子前，我的父亲倒在地板上。他已经死了，一张脸被烧得焦黑变形，很是丑陋。我的姐妹们围在他身旁哀号痛哭，而母亲晕倒在一旁！“科佩留斯，该死的撒旦，是你杀害了父亲！”我大喊一声，便失去了意识。

两天过后，父亲入了棺。那时他的面目又重新变得温柔和蔼了，就像活着时那样。我在心中欣慰地想，这说明他与科佩留斯那个魔鬼签订的契约没有使他陷入永恒的堕落。

爆炸惊醒了邻居，这起事故惹得谣言四起，还引得当局介入——他们要传唤科佩留斯并追究他的责任，但他却消失得无影无踪。

若我现在告诉你——我心爱的朋友——那个卖天气瓶的小贩正是可恶的科佩留斯，那么你便不会奇怪，为什么我认为这个敌人的出现将招致大难了。他的穿着打扮虽变了样，但科佩留斯的身形与面貌都深深地烙在了我的心中，绝无可能出错。此外，科佩留斯甚至未曾改过名字。就我所知，他在这儿假装成一个皮埃蒙特 [6] 来的机械师，并自称吉塞普·科波拉。

我决意与他抗争，无论发生什么，我都要为父亲之死复仇。

请千万别告诉母亲这丑陋的恶魔出现了。替我向亲爱的、可爱的克拉拉问好，我心绪平静些后再给她写信。祝好。

克拉拉致纳塔内尔

你确实很久不曾写信给我了，但即便如此我也相信，你仍然想着我念着我。你明明打算把上一封信寄给我的兄弟洛塔尔，却在信封上写了我的名字，而不是他的，那么你想必是热切地惦记着我了。我愉快地拆了信，直到读到“唉，我心爱的洛塔尔”时才意识到这个错误。我本不该再接着读下去，而应当把信交给我的兄弟。

就像你以前时不时孩子气地打趣我、指责我的那样，我具备女性所特有的好沉思的宁静心性。哪怕房屋有坍塌的危险，在急忙逃离之前，我也会迅速抚平窗帘上那一道难看的褶皱——我就是这样的女人。正因如此，我不能不承认，你这封信的开头是那样深深震撼了我，我差点儿喘不过气，眼前金星直冒。

唉，我心爱的纳塔内尔！怎么会有这样的骇人之物闯入你的生活！一想到要与你分开，再也见不到你，我的胸膛就仿佛被一把烧红的匕首刺穿了。我把信读了又读！那可恶的科佩留斯，你对他的描述真叫人毛骨悚然。直到现在我才知晓，你那位年迈的好父亲竟以这般骇人而暴力的方式死去了。在我把本属于兄弟洛塔尔的信交给他后，他竭力使我恢复平静，然而收效甚微。那个致命的天气瓶小贩吉塞普·科波拉阴魂不散地紧跟着我，我甚至羞于承认，他以各种古怪的模样出现在我的梦中，摧毁了我平时健康安稳的睡眠。但是很快，在第二天时我的感受就截然不同了。我亲爱的，尽管知道你出奇地预感到科佩留斯会对你作恶，我却仍一如既往地欢欣愉悦、无拘无束——如果洛塔尔告诉你这些，你可别生我的气。

我得向你坦承，我认为你所讲述的所有恐怖之事都只发生在你的想象中，它们与真实的外部世界恐怕少有关联。那老科佩留斯确实很令人讨厌，但只是因为他憎恨小孩儿，你们这些孩子才发自内心地怕他。

在你稚气的脑海里，当然会把童话里可怕的沙人同老科佩留斯联系起来，因为就算你不相信沙人，科佩留斯在你眼中也是一个鬼怪般的坏蛋，对小孩子尤其危险。你父亲在夜里所做的骇人勾当或许不过是暗地里进行的炼金实验，你的母亲当然会心怀不满，因为炼金会挥霍掉许多钱财。此外，父亲的心智完全被那骗人的渴望蒙蔽了，一心以为自己能得到更高的智慧，却因此疏远了家人——这也是那种炼金

作坊里常会出现的情况。你父亲的死亡很可能归咎于他自己的不小心，而科佩留斯对此并无责任。你相信吗，我昨天甚至询问了隔壁那位经验颇丰的药剂师：“进行化学实验时，这种致命的爆炸是否可能在一眨眼间就发生？”他答道：“哎，当然了。”他还以特有的风格向我详尽又拖沓地描述它如何发生，其间提到了好些听起来稀奇古怪的名字，我一个也没记住。

现在你可能对你的克拉拉心存不满了。你会说：“实际上，奥秘常常伸出隐形的双臂拥抱世人，但没有任何一丝奥秘的光芒能穿透这般冷漠的想法；世人仅仅看见缤纷多彩的表象世界就觉得开心，就像幼稚的儿童会为了镀金的水果而开心，却浑然不知其中暗藏致命的毒药。”

唉，我心爱的纳塔内尔！你难道不相信，就算是开朗快活、无拘无束又无忧无虑的人，也会对那黑暗力量心中有数，也知道它是我们的敌人，并能导致我们自我毁灭？但请原谅，我这样一个头脑简单的小姑娘，也要斗胆试着告诉你我对这场内心之战的看法。也许直到最后我也做不到措辞得当，但就算你会取笑我，那也不是因为我的想法愚蠢，而是因为我表达得如此笨拙。

假设存在这样的黑暗力量，它就像我们的敌人，阴险狡诈地在我们心中埋下一根线，用它来紧紧束缚我们，操纵我们走上一条危险堕落的道路，而这样的道路我们原本是绝不会踏上的。如果真的存在这样的力量，那么它必然会在我们心中把自己塑造成与我们相仿的模样。也就是说，它会成为我们自身。因为唯有如此，我们才会相信它，并如它所愿在心里为它腾出一块地方，使它能够进行那些隐秘的勾当。但假使我们始终拥有足够坚强的意志，能够认清那外来的邪恶影响，并通过积极地生活来加强这种意志，同时遵循我们的个人偏好与职业所指引的道路，坚定不移地笃定前行，那么这阴森可怖的力量便只能徒劳地追逐我们的虚假镜像，直至消亡。

洛塔尔补充说，这黑暗的精神力量常会化装为我们在外部世界里所遇到的阻碍，一旦我们在自己心中臣服于它，那么它必然会以这副模样侵入我们的内心。这样一来，我们会精神错乱，在玄之又玄的错觉中误以为那黑暗力量的声音是我们自己的声音。它是我们自身的鬼影，它与我们的自我相仿，并深刻地影响我们的内心，使我们或堕入深渊或飘飘欲仙。

我心爱的纳塔内尔！你想必察觉到，我与我的兄弟洛塔尔确实讨论过那黑暗的强大力量，在我费尽心思写下这些重要内容后，它们在我心中变得更深刻且条理清晰了。洛塔尔最后的话我并没有完全

理解，我只能猜测他的意思，但尽管如此，我仍认为这些看法都十分正确。我请求你，别再揣测那个丑陋的律师科佩留斯，或是兜售天气瓶的吉塞普·科波拉了，他们都是那黑暗力量的化装，你要坚信它们无法对你做什么；只有当你相信它们那满怀敌意的强大力量时，它们才会真正危害到你。别再让信中的每一行都诉说你心底的混乱，别再让我从灵魂最深处为你的处境感到痛心。真的，我可能会拿那个是沙人的律师与天气瓶小贩科佩留斯来寻开心。你要开朗些，开朗些！我已决定前往你身旁，就像你的守护精灵一样。如果丑恶的科波拉企图扰人清梦，我就要开怀大笑，将他驱赶。我毫不畏惧他和他那粗暴讨厌的拳头，无论他是律师还是沙人，他都糟蹋不了我的甜食，更伤不了我的眼睛。

永远永远，我心爱的纳塔内尔。

纳塔内尔致洛塔尔

由于我的马虎大意，克拉拉前阵子收到了本应给你的信，还把它读完了，这让我很不愉快。她写来一封内涵深刻的哲学信件，在其中详尽地证明了科佩留斯与科波拉只存在于我的内心，是我自身的鬼影；只要我认清这点，它即刻就会化为齏粉。说实话，她那含笑又明亮的双眼常常如孩童眸子一般甜美梦幻，这样一双眼中却闪烁出如此理智杰出的思想之光，像个文科硕士一样，真令人难以置信。你们谈到了我，她还引用了你的话，或许你给她读了些逻辑学的学术著作，好让她明察明辨吧。算了！

另外，或许那天气瓶小贩吉塞普·科波拉确实不是老律师科佩留斯。我是从一位最近才来到这里的物理学教授那儿听说的，这个教授同那个出名的自然研究者一样，名叫斯帕兰扎尼 [7]，来自意大利，并且是学术圈的一分子。他认识那个科波拉已经好几年了。另外，从科波拉的口音也能听出，他确实来自皮埃蒙特。科佩留斯倒是个德国人，不过我认为他对此撒了谎。我心中的大石仍未落地。你和克拉拉，你们到底还是把我当成了一个阴郁的幻想家，可是科佩留斯那张该死的脸实在给我留下了太深的印象，我无法摆脱它。斯帕兰扎尼说科波拉已经离开了这座城市，这让我挺开心的。

这位教授也是个怪人。他是个矮小的、圆滚滚的男人，颧骨突出的脸上，有着精致的鼻子、噘起来的厚嘴唇和一对目光刺人的小眼睛。或许这么形容更好：要是你在任意一个柏林口袋日历上见到乔多维茨基 [8] 画的卡廖斯特罗 [9]，你就是见到了斯帕兰扎尼——他看上去就是那副模样。

不久前有一次，我上楼梯的时候发现平日里都严严实实合着的窗帘被拉到了一旁，缝隙中露出了挡在窗帘后的一扇玻璃门。就连我自己也不知道，我怎么就好奇地瞥了过去。那房间里，一名女郎坐在一张小桌前，她出落得高挑纤瘦，但身材却相当匀称，且衣着华贵。她的手臂搭在桌上，双手交叠。她面对着门，因此她那天使般美丽的面庞尽收眼底。她看上去并没有察觉到我，而且目光有点儿呆滞——我几乎可以这么说：就好像根本没有视力一样。在我看来，她仿佛在睁着眼睛睡觉。我有点儿毛骨悚然，所以快速地悄悄溜进了一旁的大堂里。后来我听说，我所见到的那个人是斯帕兰扎尼的女儿奥林匹娅。他用特殊而又过分的方式把她关了起来，以至没有任何人能靠近她。

正因如此，她最终变得似乎痴呆，或者有了其他毛病。

但是，我干吗要告诉你这些呢？我原本可以对你口述得更好、更详细，你要知道，十四天后我就会回到你们身边了。我必须再次见到我亲爱的、可爱的天使——我的克拉拉，然后我的恶劣情绪就会烟消云散。在读过那封理智得过分的信后，我险些被这些恶劣情绪（我必须承认）淹没。因此我今天也不给她写信了。

千万次祝福。

再也找不到比这更离奇、更奇妙的见闻了。这便是发生在我可怜的朋友——年轻的大学生纳塔内尔——身上的故事，这故事才刚开头，而我要接着为你讲述。好意的读者！最富同情心的人啊，你可曾有过这般体验：有什么占据了你的胸腔、心灵与脑海，把其他一切思绪都排挤了出去？它们在你的心里翻滚蒸煮，直到那份炽热触及沸点，于是你体内热血奔涌，双颊变得绯红。你的目光是那么古怪，就仿佛它在空荡荡的房间内捕捉到了一个人影，而其他所有人却都对其视而不见；你的话语最终消融于一声晦暗的喟叹。这时你的朋友则询问你：“您怎么了，尊敬的人？您遇上什么事了，亲爱的朋友？”

你渴望吐露你脑海中的画面，运用所有炽烈的色彩与光影去描绘它，然而光是为开头找到合适的词句就已经使你精疲力竭。但你感到必须把那奇妙壮丽的、骇人听闻的、引人入胜的、惊悚恐怖的——把要诉说的一切都浓缩于你吐出的第一个词中，就像闪电那样在一瞬击中万物。然而任何能说出口的词在你眼里都黯然失色，如死一般冰冷僵硬。你找啊找啊，说得断断续续、吞吞吐吐；你的朋友们又提出许多理智的问题，它们就如同凛冽的寒风直吹进你的心房，冷却了那滚烫的热流。或者，你可以像个不拘一格的画家，仅凭大胆奔放的寥寥几笔便描绘出心中画面的轮廓，接着轻轻松松地为其增添愈加鲜艳的色彩，用栩栩如生的各式形象来吸引你的朋友们。于是他们便能目睹，你——你自己正是这画面的中心——如何呈现出了自己的心中所想！

而我，好意的读者！我必须向你坦白，从未有人向我询问过年轻的纳塔内尔的故事。你或许知道，我也属于作家这一类古怪的人。正如我之前所描述的那样，这些人心里藏着故事，只要有谁——不管是他们身边的人，还是来自世界各地的人——来到他们身边，并且问：“这到底是怎么回事？您给我讲讲吧，亲爱的？”他们就会兴高采烈。这份强烈的倾诉欲也驱使我对您讲述纳塔内尔那不幸的一生。它那么奇妙又古怪，占据了您的整颗心灵。但正因如此，也因为我必须使您——我的读者——能够承受这并非微不足道的奇妙故事，我才绞尽脑汁，要给纳塔内尔的故事一个意味深长、与众不同且动人的开

头：“从前”——这是所有小说最漂亮的开头，不过太生硬了！“在一座名为S的偏远小城里住着……”——好些了，至少在一点点向着高潮推进。或者直接从故事中间切入：“‘让他见鬼去吧！’大学生纳塔内尔喊道，疯狂的眼神中写着暴怒与惊恐，当那卖天气瓶的吉塞普·科波拉……”说实话，这些句子我都已经写下来了，却又觉得能从“大学生纳塔内尔那疯狂的眼神”里嗅出几分滑稽，但这绝不是一个滑稽的故事。我的脑海中压根没有浮现出什么词句能多多少少反映我心中的画面，并重现其光彩与色泽。我决定索性不开这个头了。

拿去，好意的读者！拿走这三封信，它们是朋友洛塔尔友好地分享与我的。有了这些信，你便能窥见那画面——我竭力想通过叙述来为其增添色彩——的轮廓。或许我能像一位优秀的肖像画家那样去呈现画面中的形象，使它们贴近原型，这样就算你未曾见过真人，也会觉得这个人物鲜活得仿佛就在眼前。哦，我的读者！也许你就会相信，没有什么会比真实的生活更加神奇美妙，而诗人们只能利用一面打磨得暗淡无光的镜子，照出生活的影子罢了。

为了让读者们深入了解故事前情，除了这些信件外，还有一些内容需要补充：纳塔内尔的父亲死后不久，克拉拉与洛塔尔——他们本是纳塔内尔一位远亲的孩子，后来这位远亲也亡故了，他们就成了孤儿——便被纳塔内尔的母亲收留在了家中。克拉拉与纳塔内尔互相怀有强烈的好感，这世上没人能够反对这份感情，因此在纳塔内尔离开家乡前往G市念大学时，他们便订婚了。写最后一封信时，他仍在G市，是著名的物理学教授斯帕兰扎尼的学生。

现在我能放心地继续讲述这个故事了。然而眼下，克拉拉的形象又那么活灵活现地出现在我眼前，叫我没法移开目光。当她亲切又满含笑意地瞧着我时，这种情况便总是发生。从主流审美观来看，克拉拉绝不漂亮。然而，建筑师们会称赞她那匀称曼妙的身段；画家们则会认为她颈部、肩膀与胸脯的线条都那么天真纯洁，会爱上她那不逊于抹大拉的玛利亚 [10] 的秀美金发，并就巴托尼 [11] 的色彩大侃特侃。他们其中一位，一个真正的幻想家，又别出心裁地把克拉拉那双眼睛比作雷斯达尔 [12] 画中的大海，倒映着如洗的湛蓝碧空，以及森林与鲜花盛放的原野，映照着自然景观之丰美与明艳多彩的勃勃生机。诗人与大师们则更进一步，感叹道：“这是怎样的汪洋，这是怎样的明镜啊！只要我们端详这名少女，看见她的目光向我们闪烁，天堂般美妙的音乐与歌声便会笼罩我们。这乐音涌入我们的心房，使一切复苏并活跃起来。我们也斗胆在克拉拉面前像鸟儿那般啁啾歌唱，以为自己唱的是首真正的歌谣，然而实则不过是由单调无聊的声响胡乱组成的产物。但克拉拉唇角露出的美好微笑却告诉我们，就算我们无法咏唱出什么高明的内容，也并非我们的过错。”

正是如此。克拉拉如同无忧无虑、无拘无束的孩子，有着天马行空的想象力，同时也有着女性深切柔和的心性，以及明晰敏锐的睿智。任何神秘的把戏都无法糊弄她；尽管她天性沉默且从不健谈，但无论是她那明亮的目光，还是那略带嘲讽的柔和微笑，都无不在诉说：“亲爱的朋友啊！你们怎么会以为，我会觉得你们口中那稍纵即逝的幻影都活灵活现，甚至把它信以为真？”许多人因此责备她冷漠无情，平淡乏味；但另外一些人则能更清楚深刻地认识生活——其中最甚者莫过于纳塔内尔，他总是快活有力地徜徉于科学与艺术之中——从而热烈地爱上这样一位感情丰富、通情达理、如孩子般天真的少女。

克拉拉全身心地依赖着自己的爱人，与后者的分别是她人生中出现的第一道阴霾。而正如纳塔内尔在信中告诉洛塔尔的那样，当他真正回到家乡，踏入母亲的房间时，她是怀着怎样的惊喜飞奔着投入了他的怀抱啊！如他所料，在重新见到克拉拉的那一瞬间，无论是律师科佩留斯，抑或是克拉拉那封过于理性的信件给他带来的不快，都统统在他的脑海中烟消云散了。

但纳塔内尔对朋友洛塔尔说的并没有错：可恶的天气瓶小贩科波拉的出现确实危及了他的生活。所有人都察觉到了这一点，因为纳塔内尔在回来的第一天就仿佛完全变了一个人。他沉浸在阴郁的幻想中，行为举止都古怪得令人无法适应。一切的一切，甚至就连生活本身，于他而言都成了华胥一梦。他越来越频繁地提到，每个人都误以为自己是自由的，实际上却陷入了残酷的游戏，不过是那黑暗力量手中的一枚棋子罢了；人们徒劳地反抗，终究也只能屈服于命运的安排。对此他谈得非常深入，并声称如果以为艺术与科学创作皆是个人发挥主观能动性的结果，那么就太愚蠢了，因为唯有灵感能使人创作，而这灵感并非源自我们的内心，而是来自我们身外的更高法则。

理智的克拉拉极其反感这些神秘的白日梦，然而她的反驳似乎也只是徒劳。纳塔内尔力图证明科佩留斯确实是那邪恶势力，早在他躲在窗帘后偷听时，它便伸出自己的魔爪攫住了他，而且这可恶的魔鬼还将用恐怖的手段摧毁他的爱情，他的幸福。每当这时，克拉拉都会十分严肃地回应：“是啊，纳塔内尔！你是对的，科佩留斯是那邪恶势力，是一股魔鬼般的力量。显而易见，它侵入生活并造成了可怕的后果，但这也只是因为你没有把他逐出脑海与内心。只要你仍对他深信不疑，那么他就是真的，还会对你施加影响；只有你的相信才是他的力量。”

纳塔内尔被彻底激怒了，因为克拉拉认定魔鬼只存在于他的内心。他想搬出自己那一整套关于魔鬼与黑暗力量的神秘学说，克拉拉却不悦地打断他，并插嘴说些鸡毛蒜皮、无关紧要的事情。纳塔内尔

因此更加愤怒了。他明白冷漠保守的人无法领会如此艰深的奥秘，却没清楚地意识到自己其实也把克拉拉归为了这一类人，因此仍锲而不舍地试图向她透露这些奥秘。

清晨克拉拉正忙着准备早餐的时候，他便站在她身旁，为她朗读各式各样的神秘学书籍，直到克拉拉恳求道：“但是亲爱的纳塔内尔，如果我说你是那个糟蹋我咖啡的邪恶势力呢？因为倘若如你所愿，我放下手头的所有事情，在你朗读的时候注视着你的眼睛，那么我的咖啡便会烧糊，你们可就都没有早饭吃了！”

纳塔内尔把书啪地一合，闷闷不乐地跑回他的房间去了。从前他尤其善于撰写生动优美的故事，而克拉拉则会津津有味地聆听。然而现在他的文章却变得阴沉了，内容莫名其妙、乱七八糟。尽管克拉拉体贴地缄口不言，他还是能察觉到，她很难对这些作品做出积极的评价。对克拉拉来说，没有什么比沉闷无聊更致命了，她的每一句话和每个眼神都诉说着精神上无法抵挡的睡意——纳塔内尔的文章其实无聊透顶。克拉拉那冷漠平淡的思维使纳塔内尔愈感不悦。至于他那黑暗晦涩、沉闷无聊的神秘学，克拉拉也无法克制自己对它们的厌烦。久而久之，尽管他们自己尚未察觉，但他们的两颗心已然渐行渐远。

纳塔内尔必须承认，科佩留斯的模样已在他的幻想中渐渐苍白。他想让科佩留斯这骇人的睡魔在自己的作品中登场，但常常要煞费苦心才能将其渲染得栩栩如生。后来他决定作一首诗，主题便是他那不祥的预感：科佩留斯会摧毁他的爱情与幸福。诗中他与克拉拉原本在忠贞的爱情中紧密结合。但之后某天，仿佛一只黑暗的拳头猛地砸进了他们的生活，把他们全部的幸福都彻底捣毁了。最后他们终于站上了婚礼的圣坛，那可怕的科佩留斯却突然出现，挖走了克拉拉那双可爱的眼睛。鲜血淋漓的眼睛掉在纳塔内尔的胸膛上，如同灼热的血红色火星一样燃烧起来。科佩留斯抓住他，把他抛进一个熊熊燃烧的火轮。它如旋涡般快速旋转，翻滚呼号着吞噬了他，并发出一声惊天动地的咆哮。那情形就仿佛飓风狂怒地拍击浪花四起的海面，海浪在暴怒的抗争中涌起，形成白首黑身的庞然大物。在一片隆隆巨响中，他却听见克拉拉的声音传来：“你难道不能看看我吗？科佩留斯骗了你，在你胸口燃烧的并非我的眼睛，而是你自己那几滴炽热的心头血——我的双眼还在，你快看看我啊！”纳塔内尔想：这是克拉拉的声音，我永远属于她。这一想法强劲地穿透了他置身的火轮，漆黑深渊中的巨响变得沉闷，终于渐渐消失。

纳塔内尔看向克拉拉的双眼。然而此时用克拉拉的双眼友好地瞧着他的，却是死神。

纳塔内尔作诗时十分平静，他深陷沉思，对每一行都孜孜不倦地精雕细琢，而且重视韵律规则，不使所有诗行都和谐动听、斐然成

章，他便决不罢休。然而当他终于完成诗作并高声朗读时，强烈的恐怖与惊惧却又攫住了他，他大喊起来：“这阴森恐怖的声音是谁的？”但不久后，整首诗在他眼中又成了佳作，他感觉它必能在克拉拉那冷漠的思维中点燃火星，尽管他并不清楚自己究竟为什么要刺激克拉拉，也不清楚用那阴森可怖的内容——它预言了可怕的厄运，这厄运会摧毁他们的爱情——去吓唬她的后果会是什么。

此刻纳塔内尔与克拉拉坐在母亲那小巧的花园中。克拉拉心情十分愉悦，因为纳塔内尔在写诗的三天里都没有再用自己的幻梦或不祥的预感去折磨她，他甚至像从前一样兴致勃勃、绘声绘色地讲起了许多趣事。于是克拉拉说：“现在我熟悉的那个你总算完完全全地回来了，看来你已经见识到，我们怎样驱赶了那丑恶的科佩留斯。”而直到这时，纳塔内尔才想起自己揣在衣兜里的诗，他原本打算朗读它的。于是他立刻抽出那些纸页，并开始诵读。克拉拉以为它一如既往地无聊，想着由他去吧，自己便安安静静地一心做起了手头的针线活儿。然而那诗作所带来的阴霾变得愈渐黑暗，终于她丢下针线，定定地看进纳塔内尔的眼里。他仍一刻不停地念着，心中炽热的感情染红了脸颊，泪珠从他的眼眶中簌簌滚落。他终于念完了，疲惫地沉沉悲叹起来，并握住克拉拉的手，就好像他在绝望的痛苦中崩溃了一般。他呻吟道：“唉！克拉拉……克拉拉！”克拉拉温柔地把他拥入怀中，轻轻地，却缓慢又严肃地说道：“纳塔内尔，我心爱的纳塔内尔！把那愚蠢的……胡言乱语的……疯狂的无稽之谈扔进火里吧。”纳塔内尔这时却愤怒地跳了起来，一把推开克拉拉，喊道：“你这了无生趣的、该死的机器人！”他飞奔着离开了。深受伤害的克拉拉在痛苦中泪如泉涌，大声抽噎起来：“唉，看来他从未爱过我，因为他根本不理解我。”

这时洛塔尔走进凉亭，克拉拉向他诉说了发生的一切。洛塔尔全心全意地爱着自己的妹妹，她的每一句控诉都如火星一般烧进他心中；他对纳塔内尔的胡思乱想早已心怀不满，这份不满被那火星点燃了，终于形成了熊熊燃烧的愤怒。洛塔尔冲向纳塔内尔，严词指责他竟那样荒唐地对待自己心爱的妹妹。怒火中烧的纳塔内尔则同样用狠话回击。他们一个是耽于幻想的愚蠢傻瓜，另一个则是痛苦而平凡的普通人，两人的决斗在所难免。他们决定按当地的传统规矩，在第二天早晨以花剑为武器进行决斗。他们阴沉地、静悄悄地走来走去。克拉拉听说了这场激烈的争吵，也在黎明时分看见击剑师傅带来剑，便猜到将会发什么。在决斗场上，洛塔尔与纳塔内尔面色阴沉，默默脱去外套，眼中燃烧着嗜血好战的光芒，都想把对方击倒在地。这时克拉拉冲进花园，抽泣着大声喊道：“你们这两个可怕的疯子！你们与其互相攻击，倒不如把我击倒好了！倘若我的爱人谋杀了我的哥哥，或是我的哥哥谋杀了我的爱人，我又怎么能继续活在这世上！”

洛塔尔丢下了武器，垂眼沉默地看向地面。而爱情又在纳塔内尔的心中再度掀起撕裂般的痛楚，他想起自己那美好的少年时代，在那些快乐的日子从可爱的克拉拉那儿获得过怎样的爱意啊。谋杀的武器从他手中落下，他扑倒在克拉拉脚边：“你能原谅我吗，我唯一的、我心爱的克拉拉！……你能原谅我吗，我心爱的哥哥洛塔尔！”洛塔尔被朋友这份沉重的苦痛触动了，他们三人彼此宽恕，不禁潸然泪下、互相拥抱，发誓永远忠诚相爱、绝不分离。

纳塔内尔感到肩上那快要压垮他的重担已然卸下，他似乎已经成功地反抗了笼罩自己的黑暗力量，也彻底挽救了濒临毁灭的自己。他在爱人身边又度过了三天幸福时光，随后便返回G市。他还得在那儿待上一年，但等学成之后，他便能永远留在自己的故乡了。

在纳塔内尔的母亲面前，所有人都绝口不提有关科佩留斯的一切。他们知道，勾起对他的回忆势必会使她陷入惊恐，因为同纳塔内尔一样，她也认为丈夫的死应归罪于科佩留斯。

纳塔内尔返回了自己在G市的住所，却惊愕万分地见它着了火。整幢房子在大火中坍塌了，从堆砌的瓦砾上望去，只剩下隔火墙光秃秃地立着。房屋底层住着一名药剂师，大火毫无疑问是在他的实验室里爆发的，并迅速往楼上蔓延，把整幢房子都点燃了。尽管火势凶猛，纳塔内尔那些强壮勇敢的朋友仍冲进他楼上的房间，把书、手稿与各式仪器及时抢救了出来，又将这些东西都完好无损地转移到另外一幢房内。他们在那儿另寻了一间屋子，纳塔内尔之后便搬了进去。

纳塔内尔自然注意到，如今他正好住在斯帕兰扎尼教授的对面；当他发现自己透过窗子正好能看进奥林匹娅所在的房间时，也没特别惊讶。奥林匹娅一如既往孤零零地坐在那儿。他能清楚地看见她的身形，但那张面庞显得朦胧不清。久而久之，他终于发觉奥林匹娅总保持着同样的姿势，什么也不干，在桌旁一坐就是好几个小时，就像他之前在玻璃门外发现她时那样。但她显然正目不转睛地朝他凝望，而他也不得不承认自己从未见过谁出落得如此美丽。但他心中念着的仍是克拉拉，对生硬呆板的奥林匹娅没什么兴趣；偶尔他会透过窗帘草草地瞥一眼那貌美的雕塑，但也仅此而已。

房门发出一声轻响时，他正给克拉拉写着信。门随即打开了，他发出一声惊呼——科波拉从门后露出那张可恶的脸，正往里看。纳塔内尔内心深处感到一阵地动山摇。但他又想到，斯帕兰扎尼曾告诉他说自己与科波拉是同乡，而且他也对爱人庄重宣誓过，不会再相信沙人科佩留斯，于是他又为自己害臊了，觉得自己简直像个害怕鬼怪的孩子一样。他竭力镇定下来，并尽量平静放松地说道：“我不买天气瓶，亲爱的朋友！您走吧！”

这时，科波拉却整个人踏入房间，宽大的嘴咧出一个丑陋的笑容，一双小眼睛在长长的灰色睫毛下闪烁，目光刺人。他声音沙哑地说：“哎，不要天气瓶，不要天气瓶！……那还有好看的眼镜，好看的眼镜！”纳塔内尔听后惊恐地叫起来：“你这疯子，你怎么还卖眼睛？……眼睛……眼睛？”但与此同时，科波拉把他所有的天气瓶推到一旁，在宽大的上衣口袋中翻来找出，掏出长柄眼镜与一般样式的眼镜，放在桌上。“喏，喏……这，这架在鼻子上的，这就是我卖的眼镜！好看的眼镜！”说着，他不断地掏出眼镜来，直到它们堆满整个桌面，在桌上奇异地闪闪发光。千百双眼睛眨巴着，拼命地闪烁着，凝望着纳塔内尔。他无法把目光从桌面上移开，而科波拉仍一刻不停地往桌上堆眼镜。无数道冒着火光的目光交织在一起，显得愈加疯狂，它们血红的视线直穿纳塔内尔的胸膛。剧烈的惊恐席卷了他，他叫喊起来：“停下！停下，可怕的家伙！”

他一把抓住科波拉的胳膊，而科波拉依然不停地掏着口袋，往桌上堆眼镜，压根不管整个桌面早已被覆满了。科波拉轻笑起来，嘶哑地说道：“哎呀！您啥也不要……那这儿还有好看的望远镜。”他把所有眼镜拢成一摞收回包内，又从大衣的边袋里掏出一堆大大小小的望远镜。眼镜被收走后，纳塔内尔完全平静了下来。他想起克拉拉，意识到恐怖的鬼魂只会在他的心中出现；而科波拉想必是个非常诚实的机械师和光学器具制造者，不可能是那该死的科佩留斯或鬼魂。此外，科波拉放在桌上的望远镜也没什么特别的，不似眼镜那般诡异，而且总体上来说，它们制作得相当精良。

为了让一切回到正轨，纳塔内尔真的决定向科波拉买些什么了。他拿起一副打造得十分干净透明的口袋望远镜放到眼前，试着望向窗外。他这一生中还从未见过这样的镜片，它能使一切都清晰纯粹地近距离呈现于眼前。不经意间，他望进了斯帕兰扎尼的房间：奥林匹娅坐在那儿，像往常一样挨着小桌，胳膊搭在桌面上，双手交叠。直到现在，纳塔内尔才终于看清她那张美得惊人的脸庞，只是那双眼睛有些古怪，显得呆滞又死气沉沉。奥林匹娅的模样在镜片后变得越来越清晰，与此同时，她的眼中似乎也升起了湿漉漉的月光，就好像她的视觉在这一刻被点燃了似的，那如火的目光逐渐绽放出生机。纳塔内尔完全着了迷，他倚在窗旁，身体越来越往前倾，端详着美若天仙的奥林匹娅。一阵咳嗽声与窸窣声把他从梦中惊醒，科波拉站在他身后，说：“三……三个杜卡特 [13]。”

纳塔内尔把他忘得一干二净，他迅速付了钱。“对吧？……好看的镜片，好看的镜片！”科波拉用他那讨厌而嘶哑的声音问道，露出一个阴森的微笑。“对，对，对！”纳塔内尔不耐烦地回答道。“再见 [14]，亲爱的朋友！”科波拉说着，又古怪地斜乜了纳塔内尔几眼，这才离开房间。纳塔内尔听见他大笑着走下楼梯。“好吧，”他说，“这

家伙嘲笑我，因为我为这副小望远镜付了太高的价钱，太高的价钱！”他这么低声说着，心中蓦地感到一阵恐惧袭来，房间里响起一声沉重的、死一般的叹息，他的呼吸凝滞了——他发觉，那声叹息是他自己发出的。“克拉拉，”他自言自语道，“她把我视作一个乏味无聊的、见了鬼的人，或许她是对的。但这太滑稽了——不，也许比滑稽更甚。我为那望远镜向科波拉支付了太高的价钱，这愚蠢的想法竟会使我这么害怕，而我全然不知为何。”

这会儿他坐下来，想写完给克拉拉的信，但投向窗外的一瞥又让他坚信奥林匹娅仍坐在那儿。就在那一瞬间，他不能自己地一跃而起，抓起科波拉的望远镜望向奥林匹娅。他无法从她那诱人的外表上移开视线，直到他的朋友兼兄弟齐格蒙德叫他去斯帕兰扎尼教授那儿开会。

之后的两天里，那间令人窒息的房间都窗帘紧闭。尽管他几乎从未离开过窗边，而且一刻不停地透过科波拉的望远镜瞧着，却没怎么见到房间里的奥林匹娅。到第三天，连整扇窗户都被遮挡了。如火的爱欲与渴望驱使他绝望地冲出大门——奥林匹娅的模样在他眼前游荡，一会儿出现在半空中，一会儿又从灌木丛里走出来，或伫立于明亮的溪流，用闪闪熠熠的大眼睛瞧着他。

克拉拉在他心中被抹得一千二净，除了奥林匹娅，他什么都不去想了。他带着哭腔高声控诉道：“唉！你，我高高在上的、美若天仙的爱人。既然你向我显身，为何又转瞬即逝，留我一人度过这幽暗绝望的漫漫长夜？”

在他打算回到自己的住处时，斯帕兰扎尼家中的嘈杂吸引了他的注意。所有的门都敞着，各式各样的器具被搬进屋内；一楼的窗户也开着，女佣们举着鸡毛掸子忙里忙外，造桌的木匠与糊裱匠们在室内弄出叮铃咣啷的敲击声。纳塔内尔惊讶地伫立在街上。这时齐格蒙德笑着朝他走来，问他：“哎，你怎么看我们的老斯帕兰扎尼？”

纳塔内尔断言他没有任何可说的，因为他对教授几乎一无所知。只是这座静谧阴森的房子里竟传来如此巨大的动静，进行着这样不同寻常的活动，着实令他吃惊。齐格蒙德于是告诉他，斯帕兰扎尼计划于明日举行一场盛宴，包括音乐会与舞会，几乎半个大学的人都受到了邀请。大家都在传，斯帕兰扎尼那平时不敢让任何人见到的女儿奥林匹娅，也会在舞会上首次亮相。

当晚许多马车驶至教授宅邸门前，灯光把精心布置过的大厅照得亮堂堂的。纳塔内尔设法弄到一封邀请函，揣着一颗怦怦直跳的心准时出席了教授的晚会。受邀者人数众多，都打扮得光鲜靓丽。奥林匹娅也登场了，她衣着华丽且十分有品位，那漂亮的面容与身段都令人

惊叹。她的背脊弯曲得有些不同寻常，苗条的身形如蜂一般，看着像是束腰的结果。她的姿势与步伐有些僵硬，像是精心设计好的，这让一些人感到很不舒服，但大家只把这归咎于在人前抛头露面所带来的压力。

音乐会开始了。奥林匹娅娴熟地弹起钢琴，并通过一曲咏叹调展示了自己高超的唱功。她歌声嘹亮，几乎如敲击玻璃一般尖锐。纳塔内尔听得心醉神迷。他站在最后一排，在炫目的烛光下没法完全看清奥林匹娅的面容。于是他悄悄把科波拉的望远镜举到眼前，透过它望向美丽的奥林匹娅。哎！——他发现她正多么渴望地盯着他。在爱的目光中，她的歌声变得愈发高昂，燃烧着涌入他的内心。在纳塔内尔听来，那巧妙的颤音一如天国传来的欢呼，是爱情使得这声音的主人容光焕发；终于，拖长的颤音在华彩乐段过后，尖锐地穿透并震颤了整个大厅。纳塔内尔就像被一双火热的手臂紧紧抓住了，他既痛苦又陶醉，不能自己地放声大喊起来：“奥林匹娅！”所有人都看向他，其中一些笑了笑。那位管风琴演奏者却摆出比之前更难看的脸色，只说道：“行吧，行吧！”

音乐会结束了，舞会随之开始。“同她跳舞！同她！”这便是纳塔内尔唯一的目的，是他的追求与企盼。但究竟如何才能鼓起勇气，去邀请这场盛宴的女王？然而——就连他自己也不知道这是如何发生的——在舞曲开始的时候，他已站在奥林匹娅身旁，而她尚未受到邀请。他握住她的手，甚至连一句结巴的话也吐不出来。奥林匹娅的手是冰凉的，这阴森的、死一般的冰冷使他浑身颤抖。他凝望奥林匹娅的双眼，它们朝他闪烁着，满含爱意与渴望。就在那一瞬间，他感到那冰凉的手上出现了脉搏的震颤，生命的血液也开始温暖地流动。

纳塔内尔心中的爱欲滚烫地涌了上来，他环抱住美丽的奥林匹娅，与她穿过人群。他本以为自己跳舞时很擅长踩节拍，但奥林匹娅那规律准确的舞步总使他步伐出错，然后他才意识到自己是多么不会踩拍子。他再也不想同别的女人跳舞了；而要是有人靠近奥林匹娅并向她邀舞，他就会想立刻杀了那人。然而这样的情况只发生了两次。他惊讶地发现奥林匹娅在每场舞之间都坐着，他便不厌其烦地一次又一次把她拉起来。若非纳塔内尔眼里只有奥林匹娅，那么各式各样灾难般的口角与争吵都将在所难免，因为年轻人中响起了此起彼伏的窃笑，它们被刻意压低了，但显然针对美丽的奥林匹娅；他们全都好奇地盯着她，却没人知道究竟为什么。

舞蹈与大量的美酒使纳塔内尔心绪高涨，让他克服了平时的腼腆。他坐在奥林匹娅身旁，紧握着她的手。爱情激发了他的表达欲，他热情似火地滔滔不绝，虽然无论他自己还是奥林匹娅都不明白他究竟在说些什么。不过奥林匹娅可能听懂了，因为她坚定地望进他的眼

中，一遍又一遍地轻叹：“唉，唉，唉！”纳塔内尔于是说道：“噢，美丽的、天使般的女子！你便是爱之光芒，闪耀在那应许的彼岸……你的心深不可测，如明镜映出我的整个倒影。”他还继续说了些其他诸如此类的话，但奥林匹娅只一味叹道：“唉，唉！”

斯帕兰扎尼教授在此间曾几次经过这对幸福的人，并奇怪地微笑起来，显得很满意。尽管纳塔内尔的精神还徜徉在另一个世界，但他仍一下子就发现斯帕兰扎尼的屋里明显变得昏暗了；他朝四周望去，惊恐地发现大厅已然变得空空荡荡，剩下的最后两盏灯也逐渐暗淡，即将熄灭。音乐与舞蹈早已结束了。

“分别，分别。”绝望中他发疯似的叫了起来，亲吻起奥林匹娅的手，又凑向她的唇，用他火热的嘴唇去吻她那冰冷的嘴！就像他碰到她那冷冰冰的手时那样，心中一阵恐怖攫住了他，他猛地想起传说中的亡灵新娘。但他仍紧紧拥着奥林匹娅。而在亲吻中，她的嘴唇似乎也像活过来一般变得温暖了。

斯帕兰扎尼教授缓缓穿过空荡荡的大厅。他的脚步声在厅中空洞地回响，跳动的光影环绕着他，使他看上去就像一个阴森可怖的幽灵。

“你爱我吗……你爱我吗，奥林匹娅？就一句话！——你爱我吗？”纳塔内尔悄声问道。但奥林匹娅却站起身来，叹息道：“唉，唉！”

“是的，你，我美丽动人的最爱，”纳塔内尔说道，“你在我的心间升起，如星辰那般璀璨，永远驱散了我心中的阴霾！”

“唉，唉！”奥林匹娅一边往前走去，一边答道。纳塔内尔跟着她，一起来到了教授面前。“您与我的女儿聊得尤其火热，”教授笑着说，“嗯，嗯，亲爱的纳塔内尔先生，既然您乐意接近这笨丫头，那么我们非常欢迎您前来拜访。”

晚宴结束后，纳塔内尔便离开了他心中那光芒四射的天堂。之后的几天里，斯帕兰扎尼举办的宴会一直是人们的谈资。尽管教授把一切都安排得井井有条，但聪明狡黠的家伙们仍会挑出各种各样奇怪又不得体的事情来说。首先浮现在人们脑海中的，便是那死一般僵硬又沉默的奥林匹娅。尽管她面容姣好，但人们仍说她完全是个呆头呆脑的傻小姐，并想探明斯帕兰扎尼隐藏她这么久的原因。纳塔内尔也听见了这些流言，心中不无怒火，却保持沉默。他心想，就算向这群家伙证明愚蠢的其实是他们自己，是他们认识不到奥林匹娅的美好与深沉，又有什么用呢？

有一天，齐格蒙德对他说：“帮我个忙，兄弟。请告诉我，你这个腼腆害羞的小子怎么可能会爱上那座蜡像，那个木偶娃娃？”纳塔

内尔险些暴跳如雷，但他很快冷静下来，回答道：“你倒是告诉我，齐格蒙德，平时你头脑灵光、目光明晰，能捕捉到一切美的事物，为何竟会忽视奥林匹娅那迷人的魅力？不过我也得因此感谢命运没有让你成为我的情敌，否则我们二人之一必将倒在血泊中。”

齐格蒙德察觉到自己朋友的心理状况，便迅速让步了，表示他并非要针对纳塔内尔的恋爱对象，然后又补充道：“但这确实奇怪。我们许多人对奥林匹娅的评价几乎都是一样的，在我们看来——请别对我生气，兄弟！——她僵硬得有些古怪，看着像没有灵魂。她的身材平平无奇，她的脸也一样，这是真的！要是她的目光并非那么缺乏生机——或者说像个盲人——的话，她可能还算得上漂亮。她的步伐奇怪得仿佛是设计好的，她的一举一动都让她像个上了发条的齿轮机。她的演奏与演唱都如机器般节奏准确，却显得毫无灵魂，令人不适。她跳舞时亦是如此。我们觉得这个奥林匹娅非常吓人，也不想与她扯上关系；在我们看来，她只是表现得像个活物而已，她和真正的活物间一定有什么特别的联系。”

齐格蒙德的一席话使纳塔内尔十分不悦。他深陷在恶劣的情绪中，但终于还是克制住它，十分严肃地回应道：“对你们这些冷漠又乏味的人来说，奥林匹娅或许是可怕的。充满诗意的性情中人只会在同类面前展现自我，她妩媚的目光只会投在我身上，照亮我的身心。只有在奥林匹娅的爱里我才能找回自己。你们不喜欢她，是因为她不像其他庸人一样，会同你们无聊地瞎扯淡。确实，她并不健谈，但她的寥寥数语都来自那充满爱的内心世界，它们如同神秘的象形文字，象征了对精神生活的超验认识。不过你们对这一切毫无概念，我的话对你们而言也没有意义。”

“上帝保佑你，我的兄弟，”齐格蒙德轻轻地，几乎痛苦地说道，“我觉得你走上了邪路。你可以相信我，如果……不，我不想再说下去了！”

纳塔内尔突然感到，那冷漠且乏味的齐格蒙德对自己其实非常真诚，因此他也真挚地握住了齐格蒙德朝他伸来的手。

纳塔内尔完全忘记了世上还有克拉拉，这个他曾经深爱的人；母亲和洛塔尔也都在他的记忆中消失了，他只为奥林匹娅活着。他每天花好几个小时坐在她身旁，幻想着他的爱情，幻想着他们间炽热鲜活的共情与精神上的契合，而奥林匹娅则聚精会神地听着这一切。纳塔内尔从自己的桌肚深处找出他写过的所有东西：诗歌，长篇与短篇小说，虚构的幻想作品。他又新创作了各式各样玄幻空洞的十四行诗、八行诗与抒情诗，他的作品数量日益增加。他会花上好几个小时，不知疲倦地为奥林匹娅一首接一首地朗读。他还不曾拥有过一位如此美好的聆听者，她不会在倾听的时候做针线活儿，也不会望向窗外；她

不喂鸟，不同袖珍犬或可爱的猫咪玩耍；她不摆弄碎纸片或手里的其他任何东西；她也不会刻意轻咳，来防止自己打呵欠。简而言之，几小时里她都眼神呆滞，目不转睛地看进爱人的双眼，而且一动不动；她的目光也变得越来越炽热，越来越鲜活。只有当纳塔内尔终于站起身来，亲吻她的手或嘴唇时，她才说：“唉，唉！”接着却道：“晚安，我的爱人！”

“噢，你这美丽的，深沉的人儿！”纳塔内尔在他的房间中喊道，“只有你，只有你一个人才能完全理解我！”只要一想到他与奥林匹娅之间存在怎样奇妙的共鸣，而这份共鸣又日益显著时，他的身躯便因心中的狂喜而震颤。在他眼里，奥林匹娅能对他的小说与诗歌做出真正深刻的评价，就好像她说出了他的心声一般。想必事实也确实如此，因为除了上文中提过的那些话外，奥林匹娅连一句别的话也没说过。在纳塔内尔还理智清醒的时候——比如说，早晨刚醒来时——他自己也会想起，奥林匹娅整个人都那么被动又沉默寡言，但他却这么说：“话语究竟算得了什么——话语！她那双美丽的眼睛和她的目光，能比任何语言表达出更多的内容。难道一个天使会屈尊挤进凡人那逼仄的圈子，去迎合可悲的世俗需求？”

斯帕兰扎尼教授似乎对纳塔内尔与自己女儿的关系相当满意，他毫不含糊地向纳塔内尔表达了自己的好意。在纳塔内尔终于鼓起勇气，委婉地暗示他想与奥林匹娅结合时，斯帕兰扎尼的整张脸布满了笑容，并表示他完全尊重女儿的选择。

这些话给了纳塔内尔勇气，心中燃烧的渴望也促使他决定第二天就立刻去看望奥林匹娅。之前她用妩媚且满含爱意的眼神倾诉了许久内心的情愫，而他却要敦促她直截了当、清楚明白地把它们都说出口，并且宣布她愿永远属于他。他找起了母亲在分别时给他的戒指，打算送给奥林匹娅，它象征着他的献身，也象征他们那萌芽抽条、灿烂绽放的生活。他收到了克拉拉与洛塔尔写来的信件，却漠不关心地将它们搁在一旁。

他找到了那枚戒指，把它揣在身上后就往奥林匹娅那儿奔去。还在楼梯和走廊上时，他就听见一阵奇怪的咆哮，它似乎是从斯帕兰扎尼的研究室中传来的。有谁跺脚——链条嘎啦作响——一声碰撞——什么东西撞上了门，其间夹杂着咒骂：放开我，放开我……你这卑鄙的家伙，可耻的东西！……为它费尽心血？哈哈哈哈！我们可不是这样约定的！是我，是我造了眼睛，我造了那齿轮机……让你的齿轮机见鬼去吧，制表匠的愚蠢走狗……滚开，撒旦！……停下……人偶的发条……见鬼的浑蛋！……停下……滚开……放开我！

那是斯帕兰扎尼和可怕的科佩留斯的声音，他们的吼叫声嘈杂而此起彼伏。纳塔内尔在不可名状的恐惧中冲进房间。教授紧紧抓着一

个女人身形的人偶的肩膀，意大利人科波拉则抓着她的脚，两人把她拉过来扯过去，在盛怒中争夺她。纳塔内尔认出了奥林匹娅，深深的惊恐使他猛地向后倒去。他的怒火疯狂地燃烧起来，盛怒中他想从那两个暴徒手中夺回自己的爱人。然而就在下一刻，科波拉用上九牛二虎之力，把人偶从教授的手中扭出来，并用它给了教授狠狠一记重击。教授因此向后撞上了桌子，摇摇晃晃，最后倒下了。桌上的梨状瓶、曲颈瓶等瓶子与玻璃圆柱体都摔下来，碎成了千万片。这时，科波拉把那人偶扛在肩上，在骇人的尖笑中猛冲下楼梯。人偶丑陋的双脚耷拉下来，硬邦邦地磕在一级级台阶上，发出恼人的声响。

纳塔内尔僵在原地。他看得清清楚楚——奥林匹娅死一样惨白的脸上没有眼睛，只有两个黢黑的窟窿。她是个没有生命的人偶。斯帕兰扎尼在地上打着滚，玻璃碴割伤了他的脑袋、胸膛与胳膊，血液像泉水那般汨汨涌出。他鼓足力气喊起来：“追他，追他！你愣着干什么？科佩留斯，科佩留斯，他抢走了我最好的机器人！我造了它二十年，我为它费尽心血……这个齿轮机……能说话，也能行走……我的……眼睛，被偷走了眼睛！该死的，该诅咒的家伙……追上他，把奥林匹娅还给我……她的眼睛就在那儿！”

这时，纳塔内尔见一对眼睛正躺在地板上，血淋淋地朝他凝望。斯帕兰扎尼伸出那只无恙的手抓走眼睛，朝纳塔内尔掷去。眼睛砸中他的胸膛。那一瞬间，疯癫伸出炽热的爪子攫住了他，把他的身心、理智与情感统统撕了个粉碎：“嚯！嚯！嚯！火轮——火轮！转起来，火轮——好玩儿，好玩儿！木偶娃娃，嚯，漂亮的木偶！木偶娃娃，转起来！”

他嚷嚷着扑倒在教授身上，一把掐住他的咽喉，差点儿把教授掐死。然而喧闹声引来了很多人，他们冲进屋子，扯开暴怒的纳塔内尔，救出教授并立即给他包扎伤口。就连身强体壮的齐格蒙德也无法制服这癫狂的疯子。纳塔内尔用恐怖的声音不断叫喊着：“木偶娃娃，转起来！”并用攥紧的拳头朝周围的人砸去。最后，好几个人一起上阵把他按在地上绑起来，才总算制服了他。他的吼叫渐渐减弱，变成野兽般骇人的咆哮。就在这发狂的咆哮声中，他被送入了疯人院。

不幸的纳塔内尔后来又遭遇了什么？在我接着为你讲述之前，好意的读者，我可以先放心地告诉你——要是你有些同情那技艺精湛的机械师与机器人制造家斯帕兰扎尼的话——他的伤都痊愈了。后来他不得不离开大学，因为纳塔内尔的事件引起了轰动。人们普遍认为斯帕兰扎尼触犯了法律，因为他把一个木偶人带入理智的社交圈中，并让它装作真人，这是不能容忍的欺骗行径。法学者甚至称之为场精妙的骗局，并要加以严厉的惩罚，因为它愚弄公众，而且狡猾地成功

了，几乎没有人（除了一些非常机敏的大学生）察觉到真相。

所有人都做起了事后诸葛亮，想通过各式各样的事实来证明自己在当时就感到可疑，然而这些所谓的“证据”却并不高明。比如受邀参加宴会的某个有修养的人就说：奥林匹娅打喷嚏比打呵欠更频繁，而这违反常理——有任何人会因此感到可疑吗？这位有修养的人认为，这驱动装置实际上在自动上发条，因此它会发出明显的咔啦声，诸如此类的。而文学与修辞学教授则取了一撮鼻烟，啪的一声合上烟盒，清了清嗓子，然后庄重地宣布：“尊敬的先生们、女士们！你们难道未曾发觉，问题的症结究竟在哪里？这一切是一个比喻——一个贯穿始终的隐喻！你们明白我的意思就够了，无须多余的解释 [15]！”

但许多尊敬的先生并不满足于此。机器人的故事烙在了他们的灵魂深处，对人偶的惧怕与不信任在公众间悄然而生。仅仅为了证明自己所爱的并非人偶，许多人便要求自己的爱人不着调地唱歌或毫无节奏地跳舞，要求她们在倾听时做针线活儿，或与狮子狗玩耍之类的。最重要的是，她们不能只是倾听，而且说出的话中要包含真正的思想感情。一些恋爱关系因此而变得更加亲密动人，而另一些情侣却因此渐渐疏远，他们都这么说：“这世上，很难有谁值得信任。”聚会中人们打呵欠的频率高到难以置信，但却绝不打喷嚏，以免遭人怀疑。而正如之前所说，为了躲避用机器人欺骗大众而招致的刑事调查，斯帕兰扎尼溜走了，科波拉也消失得无影无踪。

纳塔内尔仿佛从沉重可怕的梦境中醒来，他抬起眼皮，感到难以名状的幸福宛若暖流一般，柔和美妙地流经他的全身。他在父亲的那座房子里，正躺在自己房间里的床上，克拉拉朝他俯下身来，洛塔尔与他的母亲则站在不远处。

“终于，终于！哦我亲爱的纳塔内尔，你的重病终于痊愈了！你又属于我了！”克拉拉从灵魂深处发出一声感叹，紧紧抱住纳塔内尔。纳塔内尔则在痛苦与惊惧中泪如泉涌，落下晶莹滚烫的泪水，沉沉喟叹一声：“我的……我的克拉拉！”齐格蒙德这时走了进来，他在这场大难中仍忠诚地对自己的朋友不离不弃。纳塔内尔对他伸出手，道：“我忠实的兄弟，你没有丢下我！”

疯癫的症状已然无迹可寻了，在母亲、爱人与朋友的照料下，纳塔内尔很快强壮了起来。幸福重新回到了这个家庭中，因为一位年迈而贫穷的叔叔过世了，人们原本对他一无所求，却没料到他留下了颇丰的遗产，还有一座小农场，坐落于离城不远的一处宜人地带。他们——母亲，纳塔内尔与他的克拉拉，还有洛塔尔——想搬去那里，纳塔内尔也打算与克拉拉结婚。

纳塔内尔变得像从前那样温柔纯真的了，并终于清楚地认识到克拉

拉的纯洁可爱与美丽动人。任何人都不曾使他想起过去的一丝一毫，只是在齐格蒙德与他道别时，纳塔内尔说：“上帝保佑你，我的兄弟！我曾步入绝境，但有天使及时带领我走上光明的小道！唉，她便是我的克拉拉！”齐格蒙德不让他接着说下去了，因为他担心纳塔内尔那沉痛的回忆又会强烈而清晰地浮现。

这四个幸福的人搬往农场的日子到了。中午时分他们走在城里的街道上，购置了一些物品。市政府所在的高塔在集市上投下了一片阴影。“哎！”克拉拉提议说，“我们不如上塔楼去，看看远处的山峦！”说到做到，纳塔内尔与克拉拉上了塔，母亲与女佣回家去了，而洛塔尔不愿爬那么多楼梯，便在塔下等候。这对恋人挽着彼此的胳膊，来到塔顶的回廊，俯瞰笼着薄雾的森林，眺望远方黛色的山峦——它们耸立着，如同一座大都会。

“你看见那一片昏暗又奇怪的小树林了吗？”克拉拉问道，“它们简直像在朝着我们缓步行进。”纳塔内尔闻言后机械地翻起了外套兜，他找到科波拉的望远镜，透过它朝一旁看去——克拉拉正站在镜前！顿时他浑身的血管都痉挛般抽搐起来，他盯着克拉拉，面色死一般惨白。但很快，一阵滚烫的热流汹涌地流经他转动的眼珠，他眼里射出火星，像被追猎的野兽那样骇人地狂吼起来。他猛地一跃，发出令人毛骨悚然的尖声大笑，一边吼道“木偶娃娃转起来……木偶娃娃转起来”，一边暴力地抓住克拉拉，要把她抛下塔去。但克拉拉在绝望与死的恐惧中紧紧抓住了塔沿。

洛塔尔听见了疯子的咆哮声，也听见了克拉拉惊恐的尖叫，不祥的预感在他心中油然而生。他冲上塔去，通往第二道楼梯的门却紧锁着。克拉拉痛苦的尖叫声更加响亮了。盛怒与恐惧使洛塔尔疯了一样朝门撞去，这才终于弹开。而克拉拉的声音则变得越来越虚弱：“帮帮我……救命……救命……”最后渐渐消散在空气中。

“她死了——她被那疯子谋杀了！”洛塔尔大喊起来。通往回廊的门也是紧锁的。绝望使他爆发出洪荒之力，把门从枢轴上撞了下来。上帝啊！克拉拉被那发了疯的纳塔内尔揪着，悬在回廊外的半空，只剩一只手还紧紧抓着铁栏杆。洛塔尔闪电般地抓住自己的妹妹，把她拉回来，紧接着用握紧的拳头狠狠揍向疯子的脸。纳塔内尔踉跄着倒退几步，松开自己的猎物。

洛塔尔抱着昏迷的妹妹冲下塔。她得救了。而这时纳塔内尔却爬上塔沿，高高跃起至半空中，大喊道：“火轮转起来……火轮转起来！”

这疯狂的喊声使人们纷纷奔至塔下，身材高大的科佩留斯在他们中格外显眼——他也来到了这座城市，正好在往集市这边走。人们想

冲上塔去制服那疯子，这时科佩留斯却笑道：“哈，哈！等着吧，他马上就会自己下来的。”说罢，便像其他人一样抬起头来望向塔顶。

纳塔内尔突然浑身僵住了。他站在原地，弯下腰去，发现了科佩留斯。随即他尖声吼道：“哈！好看的眼睛……好看的眼睛！”说着，他朝塔下纵身一跃。

纳塔内尔摔碎了脑袋，躺在石砌路面上。在那之后，科佩留斯便消失在了混乱的人群中。

许多年过后，或许人们能在一个遥远的地方瞧见克拉拉，她与一个快乐的男人手挽着手，坐在一座漂亮的小房子门前，两个活泼的小男孩儿在他们面前玩耍。可以得出结论，克拉拉还是找到了那份安宁的家庭幸福，这也符合她那开朗且热爱生活的心性；而这份幸福，是那内心撕裂的纳塔内尔绝无可能给予她的。

‘ “Strange man,
how can you
have eyes for sale? Eyes?
Eyes?” ’

NathaNiel to lothar

You must surely all be worried sick not to have had word from me in such a long, long time. Mother is, no doubt, upset with me, and Clara may well believe that I am liv-ing the high life here, and have forgotten the face of my beloved angel so deeply and indelibly graven in my heart and mind. But it isn't so; every day of the week and every hour of the day I think of you all and my lovely little Clärchen's friendly figure floats past me in my dreams, smiling so sweetly at me with her bright eyes as she is wont to do whenever I walk in. Oh how could I put pen to paper in this wretched state that till now distracted my every thought! Something awful came into my life! Dark premonitions of a terrible impending fate cast their pall over me like the shadows of black storm clouds impermeable to any friendly rays of sunlight. Let me tell you then what happened to me. I have to tell you, that much I know; but just to think about it makes it spill out like a mad burst of laughter. Oh my dearest Lothar! How should I begin to make you fathom that what befell me just a few days ago could have such a devastating effect on my life! If only you were here, you could see for your-self; but by now you must surely take me for a crack-brained spook seer. In short, the terrible thing that happened to me, whose fatal impression I have tried in vain to erase from my consciousness, consists in nothing else than that a few days ago, namely on 30 October, at twelve noon, a barometer salesman stepped into my room and offered me his wares. I bought nothing and threat-ened to throw him down the stairs, whereupon, however, he promptly left of his own accord.

You suspect, I imagine, that only the most extraordin-ary life-altering relations could have lent this occurrence such signi ficance, indeed that it was the very person of that miserable pedlar that surely had such a poisonous effect on me. And that is just what happened. I will pull myself together, with all the strength of my will-power, quietly and patiently to recount the circumstances of my early youth as plainly and precisely as possible so that you, with your alert mind, may take everything in and paint as clear as possible a picture of my condition. But even now as I begin, I can hear you laughing and Clara remarking: 'What childish notions!' Laugh, if you like, have yourself a right hearty laugh at my expense! Be my guest! But God in heaven, my hair stands on end, and it seems to me as if I were begging you in my mad desperation to make me sound ridiculous, like Franz Moor did Daniel. But it's time to begin!

Except for at lunchtime, we, my siblings and myself, saw little of my father during the day. He must have been very busy. After supper, which, according to long-standing custom, was served at seven o'clock, all of us, my mother and us, gathered in my father's study, and each took our place at a round table. Father smoked and drank a tall glass of beer. Often he told us many wondrous tales and would get so involved in the telling that his pipe went out, and it was my duty to fetch a burning wad of paper for him to relight it, a task that gave me the greatest pleasure. But many times he would just give us picture books to look at and sit there in silence propped up in his easy chair, blowing dense clouds of smoke, so that we all hovered as though in a fog. On such evenings mother was very sad and no sooner did the clock strike nine than she would declare: 'Now children, to bed! To bed with you! The Sandman's coming, I can sense it!' And every time she said it I really did hear the sound of slow, heavy steps lumbering up the stairs; it must have been the Sandman.

One time the muffled thump and lumbering step sounded particularly grim to me; so I asked mother as she led us away: 'Mama, who is that evil Sandman who always chases us away from Papa? What does he look like?'

'There is no Sandman, my dear child,' replied mother; 'when I say the Sandman is coming, all it means is that you children are sleepy and can't keep your eyes open, as if somebody had scattered sand in them.'

Mother's answer didn't satisfy me - indeed the notion took firm hold of my childish imagination that mother only denied the existence of the Sandman so that we wouldn't be afraid, didn't I hear him with my own two ears coming up the steps? With a burning desire to know more about this Sandman and his connection to us children, I finally asked the old woman who took care of my youngest sister: 'What kind of man is that, the

Sandman?'

'Oh, Thanelchen,' she replied, 'don't you know yet? He's a bad man who comes to visit children when they won't go to sleep and fiings a handful of sand in their eyes, so they scratch themselves bloody, then he fiings them in his bag and carries them off to the half-moon to feed his children; they sit up there in their nest and have crooked beaks like owls with which they pick out the eyes of naughty human brats.'

So in my mind I painted a grim picture of that awful Sandman; as soon as I heard that lumbering step on the stairs I trembled with fear and horror. My mother could get nothing out of me but that one word stuttered amidst tears: 'Sandman! Sandman!' Then I bounded up to my bedroom and all night long I was tormented by the ter-rible presence of the Sandman.

By the time I was old enough to know that all that business about the Sandman and his children's nest on the half-moon the nanny had told me couldn't possibly be true, the Sandman had become entrenched in my mind as a hair-raising spook, and I was gripped by dread and terror when I heard him not only come clambering up the steps but tearing open the door to my father's study and barging in. Sometimes he stayed away a long time, but then he came more often, night after night. This went on for years, but I was never able to get used to that ghastly spook, nor did the grisly image of the Sandman ever fade from my mind.

I got ever more worked up about his dealings with my father; while some unbridgeable reserve kept me from asking him about it, the desire grew stronger from year to year to find out the secret for myself - to see the fabled Sandman with my own two eyes. The Sandman lured me down the path of wonder, the craving for adventure, that longing that had already taken seed in my childish mind. I liked nothing better than to hear or read fear-tingling tales of goblins, witches, sprites and suchlike; but the Sandman remained at the head of my list of the grisly figures I scribbled with chalk and charcoal on table tops, cupboards and walls.

When I turned ten, my mother moved me from the nursery into a little room off the corridor not far from my father's study. We still had to make ourselves scarce at the strike of nine, when that unseen presence was heard in the house. From my little room I distinctly heard him enter my father's chamber and soon thereafter it seemed to me as if the entire house filled with a strange-smelling vapour. My ever-mounting curiosity stirred my pluck to try and find a way to make the Sand-man's acquaintance. Many times I slipped out into the corridor as soon as mother had passed, but I was too late, since by the time I reached the spot from which I might catch a glimpse of him, the Sandman had invariably already entered. Finally, driven by an overpowering urge, I decided to hide in my father's room and await the Sand-man's appearance.

One evening, by my father's silence and my mother's sadness I surmised that the Sandman was coming; and so, pretending to be very tired, I excused myself before nine o'clock and hid in a nook beside my father's door. The front door creaked, the slow, heavy thud of steps advanced through the vestibule towards the stairs. Mother hastened by me with my brothers and sisters. Quietly then I opened my father's door. He was seated in silence, as usual, with his back to the door; he did not notice me slip in behind the curtain drawn over a closet where he hung his clothes.

Closer, ever closer came the thud of the steps; there was a curious cough and a scraping and a grumbling outside. My heart beat double-time in terror and expectation. Right there at the door came a powerful kick, a hefty blow on the latch, the door sprung open with a crash! Gathering all my pluck, I peeked out with great trepidation. The Sandman was standing there in the middle of the room in front of my father, the bright glow of the lamps lighting up his face. So the Sandman, the terrible Sandman, was the old barrister Coppelius who sometimes dined with us for lunch.

But the most hideous figure could not have instilled a deeper sense of horror in me than this Coppelius. Imagine a big, broad-shouldered man with a misshapen clumpish head, an ochre-coloured face and grey, bushy eyebrows, beneath which a pair of piercing, greenish cat's eyes peered forth, a big nose bent down over the upper lip. His crooked mouth often twisted into a crafty snigger, at which dark red spots appeared on his cheeks and a curious hissing tone issued from between his clenched teeth.

Coppelius always dressed in an old-fashioned ash-grey coat, a waistcoat and pants of the same colour, with black socks and shoes affixed with tiny buckles. His minuscule toupee hardly covered his skull, his ear-locks hung out over his big red ears and a big, half-hidden tuft of hair poked out from the scruff of his neck so as to reveal the silver clasp of his collar.

His entire appearance was altogether repulsive and disgusting; but what disgusted us children the most was his big, knotty, hairy fists, so much so that we were repelled by anything he'd touched. He noticed this and consequently took great pleasure in finding this or that excuse to graze a piece of cake or some sweet fruit that our dear mother surreptitiously dropped on our plates, so that, with tears in our eyes, repulsion kept us from enjoying a sweet titbit that we would otherwise have savoured. He did the same thing when, on holidays, our father poured us a little glass of sweet wine. He would then pass his fist quickly over it, even bring the glass to his blue lips and laugh a devilish laugh when we quietly vented a sniffie of anger. He always called us the little beasts; we were not permitted to make a sound in his presence and cursed the hideous and hostile man who intentionally and maliciously spoilt our little pleasures. Our mother seemed to hate that disgusting man as much as we did; for as soon as he appeared her high spirits and easy-going, cheerful manner faded into a sad and dour solemnity. Father behaved in his presence as if he were a higher being whose incivility one had to tolerate and whom one had to humour in every way possible. He only dared make timid suggestions in his presence and was sure to serve his favourite dishes and the finest wines.

So when I set eyes on this Coppelius I felt a grisly shudder in my soul at the sudden realization that no one but he could be the Sandman, but now the Sandman was no longer the fairy-tale bogeyman who dragged children off to feed to his young in the owl's nest on the moon - no! He was a hideous, ghastly fiend who brought misery and want, temporal and eternal rack and ruin wherever he appeared.

Positively paralysed with fear at the thought of being caught and severely punished, I just stood there with my head outstretched, listening through the curtain. My father received Coppelius respectfully.

'Up now! To work!' the latter cried with a hoarse snarl and threw off his coat. In grim-faced silence father flung off his dressing gown and both pulled on long black smocks. I saw from where they took them. Father opened the folding door of a wall closet; but then I noticed that what I had long taken for a wall closet was not one at all, but rather a dark, hidden space fitted with a small hearth. Coppelius stepped forward and a blue flame flickered forth. All kinds of curious instruments were scattered about. Dear God! When my old father bent down towards the fire he looked altogether different. A ghastly convulsive pain seemed to have twisted the gentle, honest features of his face into a devilish grimace. He looked just like Coppelius. The latter swung the red-hot tongs and fetched a bright, flickering mass of ore out of the thick vapour, which he then assiduously hammered. It seemed to me as if human faces became visible all about, but without eyes - dreadful, deep, black hollows where the eyes ought to be.

'Eyes out, eyes out!' Coppelius cried with a muffled, roaring voice. Gripped by wild terror, I let out a scream and burst out of my hiding place onto the floor. Whereupon Coppelius grabbed hold of me and, baring his teeth, grumbled, 'Little beast! Little beast!' Picking me up, he hurled me at the hearth, so that the flames singed my hair. 'Now we've got eyes - eyes - a lovely pair of children's eyes,' Coppelius whispered, and with his fists grabbed glowing cinders from the flames which he intended to strew in my eyes.

But then my father pleaded with hands folded in prayer: 'Master! Master! Let my Nathaniel keep his eyes! Let him keep them, I beg you!'

Whereupon Coppelius gave off a shrill laugh and cried out: 'Let the boy keep his eyes and whimper his lesson through life; but let us take a close look at the mechanism of the hands and feet.' Whereupon he grasped me so hard that my joints snapped, and twisted off my hands and feet and reinserted them here and there. Coppelius sputtered and lisped: 'Tis not right this way! 'Twas good the way it was! The old man got it right!' and everything around me went dark, a sharp cramp flitted through my nerves and limbs - and then I felt nothing.

A warm and gentle breath wafted over my face, and I awakened, as if out of a deathlike sleep, with my mother bent over me. 'Is the Sandman still here?' I stammered.

'No, my dear child, he's been gone a long, long time, he won't hurt you!' my mother said and kissed and cuddled her recuperated little darling.

Why should I try your patience, my dearest Lothar! Why should I keep babbling in minute detail when there's still so much to be told? Enough! Suffice to say that I was caught eavesdropping and mishandled by Coppelius. Fear and trembling had afflicted me with a high fever, with which I lay sick for several weeks. 'Is the Sandman still here?' Those were the first clear words to issue from my lips and the sign of my recovery, my salvation. Let me just still tell you the most terrible moment of my youth; then you'll be convinced that it's not the failing of my eyes that makes everything appear colourless, but rather that a dark destiny has draped a veil of clouds over my life, which perhaps I may only rip through in death.

Coppelius stopped coming by; we were told that he'd left town.

It was about a year later, as we sat in the evening, true to our old family custom, at the round table. Father was very chipper and entertained us with delightful stories from the travels of his youth. Then at the stroke of nine, we suddenly heard the front door hinges creak and slow, leaden steps thumped through the hallway and up the steps. 'It's Coppelius,' said mother, going pale in the face.

'Yes! It is Coppelius,' father confirmed with a weak and broken voice. Tears streamed from mother's eyes.

'But father, father!' she cried, 'must it be so?'

'This one last time,' he replied, 'it's the last time he comes here, I promise you. Just go, go with the children! Go! Go to bed! Goodnight!'

I felt as if I'd been pressed into cold, heavy stone - my breath stood still! Mother grabbed hold of my arm when I remained standing there: 'Come, Nathaniel, come along, please!' I let her lead me, I went into my room. 'Be quiet, be quiet, just go to bed! - sleep - sleep,' mother cried after me; but, torn as I was by my inner fear and turmoil, I could not close an eye. The picture of that hated, repulsive Coppelius stood there sniggering at me with his sparkling eyes; in vain did I try to erase the image from my mind.

It might already have been midnight when a terrible boom went off, as if a cannon had been fired. The whole house rumbled, it rattled and roared past my door, the front door was slammed shut with a mighty clatter. 'That's Coppelius!' I cried out in terror and leapt from my bed.

Then came a piercing shriek and a wretched wail, and I rushed to my father's room. The door stood open, a suffocating steam hit me in the face, the chambermaid cried out: 'Oh, the master! The master!'

In front of the steaming hearth my father lay dead on the floor with his terribly contorted face burnt black. My sisters howled and whined around him, my mother lay unconscious at his side. 'Coppelius, you cursed Satan, you killed my father!' I cried out, whereupon I lost consciousness. Two days later, when they laid my father in his coffin, his expression was once again mild and gentle as it had been in life. It was at least comforting to think that his pact with that devilish Coppelius could not have condemned him to eternal damnation.

The explosion had awakened the neighbours; the incident seemed suspicious to them and they informed the authorities, who issued a warrant for Coppelius' arrest. But he had disappeared without a trace.

If I tell you, dearest friend, that that barometer salesman was none other than the accursed Coppelius, you will not, I trust, think ill of me for taking his inimical reappearance as a sign of bad things to come. He was dressed differently, but Coppelius' physique and facial features are too deeply engraved in my memory for me to mistake him for another. Moreover, Coppelius did not even change his name. He now pretends to be a Piedmontese mechanic and calls himself Giuseppe Coppola.

I have resolved to confront him and to avenge my father's death, come what will.

Don't tell mother a thing about that terrible creature. Give a hug to my dear sweet Clara, I'll write to her when I've calmed down a bit. Be well, etc. etc.

Clar a to Nathaniel

It is true that you haven't written to me in quite a while, but I still believe that you think of me and hold me dear. I was surely very much on your mind, for though you intended to send your last letter to my brother Lothar, you unwittingly addressed it to me, not him. I tore open the envelope with joy and only realized the error upon reading the words: 'Oh, my dearest Lothar' - I know I ought not to have gone on reading after that, but rather to have handed the letter to my brother. But seeing as you sometimes reproached me in a childish, teasing way that I had such a calm, ladylike, sensible disposition that, before fleeing a house about to collapse, I would be inclined quickly to smooth out a wrinkle in the curtain, I dare hardly admit that the first lines of your letter upset me profoundly. I could hardly breathe, my eyes went blank. Oh, my dearly beloved Nathaniel! What terrible thing could have burst into your life! Being separated from you, the possibility of never seeing you again, that thought pierced my breast like the sharp blade of a dagger. I read and read! Your description of that disgusting Coppelius is really horrible.

Only now did I fathom that your dear old father died such a terrible, violent death. My brother Lothar, to whom I passed the letter, tried in vain to calm me down. The image of that despicable barometer pedlar Giuseppe Coppola pursued me wherever I went, and I am almost ashamed to admit that he even managed to trouble my ordinarily unruffled and restful sleep with all sorts of nightmarish phantasms. But soon thereafter, in fact by the very next day, my mood calmed down. Don't be upset with me, my dearest one, if Lothar tells you, despite your strange premonition that Coppelius would harm you, that I am once again my old cheerful, carefree self.

Let me confess here and now my firm conviction that all the awful and frightening things you speak of only happened in your imagination, and that the real outside world played little part in it. That old Coppelius may well have been repulsive enough, but the fact that he hated children made you and your siblings develop a real aversion to him.

Your childish imagination naturally associated your nanny's nursery account of the terrible Sandman with old Coppelius, who for you, even though you didn't believe in the Sandman, remained a fantastic monster of the kind children fear so intensely. The weird goings-on with your father at night were surely nothing other than alchemical experiments the two conducted together in secret, with which your mother may not have been pleased, since a lot of money was no doubt uselessly squandered in the process - on top of which, as is always the case with such laboratory assistants, your father became so consumed by the elusive craving for higher wisdom that he forgot about the family. Your father probably brought about his own death by a careless mistake, and Coppelius is not to blame. Can you believe that yesterday I asked the pharmacist next door if such a sudden deadly explosion ever occurred during chemical experiments? He said: 'Yes, indeed,' and described for me in his typical long-winded and minute manner how such a thing could happen, in the process citing all kinds of curious-sounding substances I cannot now recall. Now you'll get angry with your Clara. You'll say: 'Not a ray of the mysterious that embraces us with its invisible arms could break into that cold nature of yours; it only fastens on the colourful surface of things and takes a childish delight in the glittering golden fruit whose flesh contains a deadly poison hidden within.'

Oh my dearly beloved Nathaniel! Don't you think that even a cheerful - unaffected - carefree nature like mine could harbour an inkling of a dark force that insidiously strives to corrupt the sanctum of our inner self? But forgive me if, innocent girl that I am, I dare imply what I really think of that inner battle. I can't find the right words to say it and you're probably laughing at me, not because I mean to say something foolish, but because I am having such a hard time saying it.

If there is a dark force that can insidiously slip a perfidious filament into our innermost self, wherewith it then grabs hold of us and drags us along on a dangerously destructive path that we would not otherwise have taken - if there is such a force then it must refigure itself in our image, indeed it must become us; for only in this way will we be inclined to believe in it and give it the space it needs to realize its shadowy end. If we have enough good sense, fortified by healthy living, to recognize strange inimical influences as such, and steadfastly to hold to the path our nature and calling prescribe, then that sinister force will fail in the futile attempt to fashion itself in our image. It is also certain, Lothar adds, that that dark physical force to which we surrender ourselves of our own free will often make us internalize strange figures that life flings into our path, so that we merely rouse the spirit which our vivid delusion makes us believe emanates from that figure. It is the phantom of our own self whose deep affinity and profound influence on our state of mind either damns us to hell or uplifts us into heaven. You see, my best beloved Nathaniel, that we, my brother Lothar and I, discussed at length the subject of dark forces and compulsions, which, seeing as I have taken great pains to formulate the essential, now seems to me to be very deep indeed. I don't quite grasp Lothar's last point, though I have a sense of what he means and firmly believe it to be true. I beg you, erase the image of that ugly barrister Coppelius and the barometer pedlar Giuseppe Coppola from your mind. Be assured that these strange figures have no power over you; only your belief in their malevolent power can, in fact, make them malevolent to you. If the deep upset of your soul did not cry out in every line of your letter, if your state of mind did not shake me as profoundly as it does, in truth I could make light of your Mr Sandman, Esq. and that barometer pedlar Coppelius. Be cheerful - cheerful! I have decided to come to you and act as your guardian angel, and should that repulsive Coppelius dare reappear and trouble you again in your dreams, I will exorcize him with loud laughter. I am not in the least bit afraid of him and his loathsome fists; he will not spoil a tender titbit with his barrister's touch or steal my eyes as the Sandman.

Forever, my dearly beloved Nathaniel, etc. etc. etc.

NathaNiel to lothar

I am very sorry that, granted, on account of my own absent-minded mistake, Clara recently tore open and read the letter I wrote to you. She wrote me a very profound philosophical response in which she took great pains to prove that Coppelius and Coppola only existed in my imagination and were phantoms of my own troubled self, phantoms that would be instantaneously reduced to dust if only I recognized them as such. It is indeed hard to believe that the spirit that emanates from such a brightly smiling, sweet child's eyes could display such brilliant insight. She cites you. So you talked about me. You instruct her in logical disputation so that she may learn to sort and filter out the chaff from the grain. Better leave it alone!

By the way, it's certain that the barometer pedlar Giuseppe Coppola is not the old lawyer Coppelius. I've just begun attending the lectures of the recently arrived Professor of Physics who, like the illustrious naturalist, is also named Spalanzani, and is of Italian descent. He has known Coppola for a good many years and, moreover, you can tell from the pedlar accent that he really is Piedmontese. Coppelius was a German, but no true blue one, I think. I'm still not altogether calmed down. Even if you and Clara take me for a dark dreamer, I cannot erase the terrible impression of Coppelius'accursed face. I'm glad, as Spalanzani claims, that Coppelius has flown the coop. This Professor is a wondrous sort, a round, little man with high cheekbones, a finely chiselled nose, pout-ing lips and small piercing eyes. But you can get a clearer picture of him if you look at Chodowiecki's [16] portrait of Cagliostro [17] in any Berlin pocket calendar. That's just what Spalanzani looks like.

I recently discovered while climbing the steps to the lecture hall that the glass door ordinarily covered with a curtain left a visible crack open at the side. A tall, very slender and well-proportioned, splendidly dressed lady sat in a room at a little table on which she rested both her arms, with her hands folded before her. She was seated just opposite the door, so I got a good look at her angelically lovely face. She did not seem to notice me and, in fact, her eyes had something glassy about them - I'd almost be inclined to say they could not see; it seemed to me as if she slept with open eyes. I felt the strangest rush of feeling and, therefore, slipped quietly off to the auditorium next door.

Later I learnt that the lovely figure I spotted was Spalanzani's daughter Olympia, whom for some strange reason he keeps locked up so that no one can come near her. I've begun to think there is something peculiar about her, that perhaps she's simple-minded. But why do I write to you about all this? I could have told it to you more clearly and in greater detail in person. I might as well admit that I'll be visiting you in two weeks'time. I simply had to see my sweet angel-faced Clara again. By then the ill humour brought on (I must admit) by that annoyingly understand-ing letter of hers that sought to sound my depths will have blown over. Which is why I'm not writing to her today.

A thousand greetings, etc. etc. etc.

It would be impossible to imagine anything more incred-ible and strange than what happened to my poor friend, the young student Nathaniel, and which, dear reader, I have undertaken to tell you. Have you, gentle reader, ever experienced anything that so completely permeated your heart, your mind and your thoughts that it supplanted all other notions? Something that simmered and seethed in you, that made your blood boil and flow like lava through your veins and made your cheeks turn a fiery red. A thing that turned your gaze so eerie, as if it sought to grasp the presence of figures imperceptible to all other eyes in an empty room, as your words melted into dark moans. And your intimates asked you: 'What is it, friend? What on earth is the matter with you?' And then you wanted to describe your state of mind in all the glowing colours and shadows and lights, and strained to find the words, and didn't know where to begin. But it seemed to you as if with your very first word you felt compelled to evoke all the wondrous, beautiful, horrible, laughable, frightening things that happened, so that your account would strike your listeners like an electric shock. But every word that came to mind, anything that language could conjure up, seemed colourless, frigid and dead. You searched and searched, and stuttered and stammered, and the sensible questions of friends struck like icy gusts of wind that soon dissipated in the emotional cauldron within. But had you, like a bold painter, begun with a few audacious brush strokes to set down the rough outline of your state, you would have been able to apply with great ease ever brighter dabs of colour, and so to dazzle your friends with the living swirl of multifarious figures, and they would see themselves, as you see yourself, in the middle of the picture that issued from your imagination.

No one, I must admit, gentle reader, ever actually asked after the story of young Nathaniel; but as you well know, I am one of those rum writers to whom, if burdened with impressions of the kind I've just described, it seems as if anyone who happens to cross their path, indeed the whole world, were dying to know: 'What's bothering you? Pray tell us if you please!' So I felt a pressing need to speak to you of Nathaniel's fateful path. The very wondrousness and strangeness of it consumed my consciousness, but for that very reason - and because I needed to make you, dear reader, likewise inclined and, therefore, able to bear the things I am about to tell, which is no small feat - I tormented myself as to how to begin my account in a significant, original, gripping fashion.

'Once upon a time' - the nicest start to any tale - seemed too rapid! 'In the small provincial town of S. there lived 'sounded a bit better, at least informative enough to pave the way for the climax. Or to begin right off in medias res: "'The devil take you!" the young student Nathaniel cried out with a wild-eyed look of anger and dread at the sight of the barometer pedlar Giuseppe Coppola' - this I had, in fact, already written down when I was suddenly struck by something droll in the wild-eyed look of the young student Nathaniel; but the story is not in the least bit comical. I could find no words to reflect even the faintest glimmer of the burning heart of the matter. So I decided to dispense with the beginning.

Just take the three letters, gentle reader, that my friend Lothar was kind enough to pass on to me, as the outline of the picture, to which I will take pains to add more and more colour in the telling. Maybe I will manage, like a good portrait painter, to conjure up a character such that you will find a convincing resemblance without knowing the original; indeed that it will seem to you as if you had seen that person many times with your own two eyes. Maybe then, dear reader, you will believe that there is nothing more wondrous and strange than life itself, and that all that the poet can do is convey a dark reflection of it in a lightly buffed mirror.

So as to clarify what the reader needs to know from the start, I must add to the aforementioned letters that shortly after the death of Nathaniel's father, Clara and Lothar, the children of a distant relative who likewise died and left them orphaned, were taken in by Nathan-iel's mother. Clara and Nathaniel took a great liking to each other, to which no person on earth objected; they were therefore betrothed when Nathaniel left home to pursue his studies in G. , which is where we find him in his last letter, attending lectures by the famous professor of physics Spalanzani.

Now I could confidently press on with the tale; but at the moment I have such a vivid image of Clara's face before my eyes that I cannot look away, which is what always happened when she looked my way with her lovely smile. Clara could by no means have been considered beautiful; such was the opinion of all those who claimed to know a thing or two about beauty. And yet the architects of beauty praised the sleekness and symmetry of her stature, the painters found her neck, shoulders and bust almost too maidenly, but were all enamoured of her Magdalene hair and raved about her luminous colouring. But one of them, a real fantast, strangely enough compared Clara's eyes to a Ruisdael lake in which the azure blue fundament of a cloudless sky and the forest and flowering flora of the lush landscape of life were mirrored. But the poets and thinkers were even more ebullient and said: 'What lake - what mirror! Can one gaze at this girl without perceiving heavenly songs and notes come streaming from her eyes, music that reaches deep into our innermost selves, awakening and bestirring all our dormant passions?' If we ourselves try to sing her praises and the song falls flat, a crude croon masquerading as a serenade with haphazard tones carelessly warbled, the fault is ours and Clara's lips say it all in their delicately elastic smile. That's the way it was.

Clara had the healthy imagination of a cheerful, unaffected child, a deep womanly gentle disposition, and a downright sparkling, sharp-sighted intelligence. The mystics and conjurors failed to impress her; for without saying much - idle chatter was anathema to her quiet nature - her bright gaze and that hint of irony in her smile said: dear friends, do you really expect me to take your ephemeral shadow figures for real live people with impulses and emotions? For that reason, Clara was scorned by many as cold, emotionless, prosaic; but others with a sober grasp of all the twists and turns of life had a powerful affection for that tender, understanding, child-ish girl, none more so than Nathaniel, a young man seriously and passionately committed to the study of science and the arts. Clara was attached to her beloved with all her heart and soul; the first storm clouds troubled their life when he went away to study. With what rapture, then, you can well imagine, did she fly into his arms, when, as he let slip in his last letter to Lothar, he actually showed up in his home town at his mother's doorstep. It was just as Nathaniel expected; for as soon as he saw Clara again he forgot all about the lawyer Coppelius and Clara's letter, and his upset disappeared.

But Nathaniel was indeed right when he wrote to his friend Lothar that the appearance of that odious barometer pedlar Coppola had had a detrimental effect on his life. Everyone felt within days of his arrival that Nathaniel was a changed man. He fell into dark brooding spells and began to behave so strangely, in ways that one would never have expected of him. Everything, his entire life, had become the stuff of dream and premonition; he kept saying that everyone who gave free rein to his fancies merely served as a plaything in the terrible game of dark forces, that all resistance was in vain, and all one could do was meekly to submit to the will of fate. He went so far as to maintain that it was foolish to believe that spontaneity could affect the arbitrary outcome of artistic and scientific investigations; for the passion needed to pursue such work does not come from our innermost selves, but rather derives from the external influence of a higher principle independent of our own free will.

Such mystical musings were altogether repugnant to the sensible Clara, yet it seemed futile to attempt to prove him wrong. But it was only when Nathaniel insisted that Coppelius was the incarnation of the evil principle that had taken hold of him, pulling the strings from behind an invisible curtain, that Clara suddenly fathomed that this disgusting demon threatened to disrupt their happy love, grew very serious and said: 'Yes, Nathaniel, you're right, Coppelius is an evil inimical principle, a devilish force that infiltrated your life able to do dreadful things, but only if you refuse to banish him from your thoughts and feelings. As long as you believe in him he does indeed exist and affect you, only your belief gives him power over you.'

Furious that Clara only accepted the existence of demons as a function of his state of mind, Nathaniel wanted to counter with a disquisition on the entire mystical teachings of devils and uncanny forces; but, vexed in turn, Clara cut him short by suddenly bringing up some altogether irrelevant matter, which made Nathaniel all the more angry.

Cold, unreceptive spirits do not open their hearts to such deep secrets, Nathaniel thought, without fully fathoming that he counted Clara among those lesser natures, which is why he did not stop trying to initiate her into those esoteric teachings. Early in the morning when Clara helped prepare breakfast, he stood by her and read to her from all sorts of mystical texts, whereupon Clara protested: 'But my dear Nathaniel, what if I were to blame you for the evil principle that's keeping my coffee from brewing? For if, as you wish, I were to drop everything and look you in the eyes as you read to me, then my coffee will boil over and burn and you won't get your breakfast!'

Nathaniel slammed the book shut and ran in a rage to his room. In the past he had had a charming, lively talent for reading aloud the stories that he jotted down, to which Clara listened with the greatest pleasure; but now his writings were dark, incomprehensible, shapeless, so that even though, not wanting to hurt him, Clara said nothing, he nevertheless sensed how unreceptive she was. Nothing was more deadly for Clara than this boring stuff; in every look and word she revealed her insurmountable intellectual ennui. Nathaniel's writings were indeed a crashing bore. His chagrin at Clara's cold prosaic spirit grew; she simply could not shake off her displeasure at Nathaniel's dark, morbid, boring mysticism, and so the two drifted inwardly further and further apart without noticing it.

The figure of that repulsive Coppelius faded in his imagination, as Nathaniel himself had to admit, so that he had to take great pains to paint a vivid picture of him in his writings, in which he appeared as the bogeyman. Finally one day he felt impelled to express that dark pre-monition that Coppelius would disrupt his happy love as the subject of a poem. In the poem he represented himself and Clara as bound by true love, but every now and then it was as if a dark fist reached into their life and ripped out any seed of joy that sprouted in the garden of their hearts. Finally, when they were already standing together at the marriage altar, that terrible Coppeliuss appears and touches Clara's sweet smiling eyes; they burst open against his breast, searing and burning like bloody sparks, where-upon Coppeliuss seizes Nathaniel and flings him into a flaming circle of fire that spins at the speed of lightning and hurls him about in a blue blaze. Then comes a roar, as if the angry tempest whipped up the foaming waves of the sea that rear up in battle like white-hooded black giants. But through this wild roar he hears Clara's voice: 'Can you not see me? Coppeliuss deceived you, those were not my eyes that burned in your breast, they were the glowing drops of your own heart's blood - I still have my eyes, just look at me!' And Nathaniel thinks: it is Clara, and I am hers for ever. Then it is as if the thought reaches into the circle of fire, stops suddenly, and the roar fades into a dull thud in the black abyss. Nathaniel peers into Clara's eyes; but it is the face of death that smiles back at him with Clara's eyes.

While engaged in the composition of this poem Nathaniel remained very quiet and collected; he polished and tinkered with every line, and since he chose to follow the rule of metre, he did not rest until everything fitted together and sounded just right. When he was nevertheless finally done with it and read the poem out loud to himself he was totally appalled and, gripped by a wild sense of horror, cried out: 'Whose terrible voice is this?' But soon the whole thing just seemed to him to be a very successful poetic text, and he was convinced that it would excite Clara's cold heart, although he failed to consider just where her excitement might lead and to what end he wished to frighten her with such gruesome images, fore-shadowing a terrible fate that would tear their love apart.

They, Nathaniel and Clara, sat together in his mother's little garden, Clara as cheerful as could be because Nathaniel had not tormented her with his dreams and dark premonitions for the last three days, which he'd spent tinkering with the poem. Even Nathaniel spoke in a lively and spirited manner of funny things, like before, so that Clara said: 'Now at last I have you all to myself again, you see how we drove out that repulsive Coppe-liuss?' That reminded Nathaniel of the poem in his pocket, which he'd intended to read aloud. He promptly pulled out the pages and started reading.

Expecting the same tedious stuffas before, and pre-pared to endure it, Clara started quietly knitting. But as the storm cloud of his verse grew ever darker and darker around them she let the knitted stocking sink into her lap and looked Nathaniel hard in the eye. Swept along by the fire of his poetry, his cheeks tinted bright red by the cauldron of turbulent emotions, tears welled up in his eyes. Having finally reached the conclusion, he heaved a heavy sigh of exhaustion, gripped Clara's hand and sobbed, as though dissolving in inconsolable sadness: 'Oh, Clara!.....Clara!'

She pressed him gently to her breast and said quietly, but very slowly and succinctly: 'Nathaniel - my dearly beloved Nathaniel! Throw that raving - senseless - insane fairy tale into the fire.'

Whereupon, shoving Clara away from him, Nathaniel leapt up in a fury and cried out: 'You lifeless, accursed automaton!' He ran off, leaving Clara completely morti-fied, weeping bitter tears.

'He never loved me, he doesn't understand me!' she wailed at the top of her lungs. Lothar came striding into the arbour. Clara felt compelled to tell him what had happened. Lothar loved his sister with all his heart; every word of her accusation struck him like a spark, so that the ill will he'd long felt for that muddle-headed Nathaniel now flared up into wild anger. He ran to find him, reproached him with harsh words for his inexplicable treatment of his beloved sister, and the irascible Nathaniel replied in kind. A wild and crazy fop faced off with a miserable, mundane man of the people. A duel was inev-itable. They decided, according to the local academic custom, to meet behind the garden and draw sharp-bladed rapiers.

Silently and stealthily they slipped by; Clara had heard and seen the heated argument, and spotted the duelling master bringing the rapiers at dusk. She guessed what was about to happen. Lothar and Nathaniel had just reached the duelling ground and flung off their coats in brooding silence, a bloodthirsty fury pouring from their burning eyes, when Clara came bounding through the garden gate. Sobbing she cried out: 'Oh you barbaric beastly men! Cut me down right this moment before going at it with each other; for how am I supposed to go on living in this world if my beloved murders my brother, or my brother my beloved!"

Lothar let his sword sink and peered at the ground in silence, and all the heart-rending love Nathaniel had felt in the sweet days of youth for his precious Clara once again flared up in him. The deadly weapon fell from his hand and he flung himself at Clara's feet. 'Can you ever forgive me, my only, my ever so dearly beloved Clara! Can you forgive me, my dearest brother Lothar!' Lothar was stirred by the profound pain of his friend; the three young people, now reconciled, embraced in a flood of tears and swore henceforth faithfully to hold by their love.

Nathaniel felt as though a heavy weight that had pressed him to the ground had been lifted from his shoulders - indeed as though in resisting the dark force that had held him in its sway he had saved his entire being from the threat of annihilation. He spent three more blissful days with his loved ones and then rode back to G. , where he had to complete another year of study, after which he planned to return for good to his native town.

Everything having to do with Coppelius was kept from his mother; since the three friends knew all too well that she could not think of him without trembling, for, like Nathaniel, she too blamed him for the death of her husband.

Imagine how stunned Nathaniel was when, intending to return to his apartment, he found the entire house burnt to the ground, so that only the charred walls still rose from the rubble heap. Braving the fire that had started in the laboratory of the apothecary on the first floor and engulfed the house in flames from the bottom up, a few resolute friends had nevertheless managed in the nick of time to dash up to Nathaniel's room and save his books, manuscripts and instruments. They succeeded in carrying everything intact to another house, where they rented a room for him, into which Nathaniel promptly moved.

He was not particularly surprised to discover that he lived directly opposite Professor Spalanzani, nor did it seem strange to him when he realized that from his window he could peer directly into the room in which Olympia often sat alone, positioned in such a way that he could clearly recognize her figure, while her facial features remained blurred and vague. But after a while it did indeed strike him as strange that Olympia often sat for hours on end in the same stance she had assumed when he once glimpsed her through the glass door, perched before a small table, apparently engaged in no activity, and that she clearly cast a fixed gaze in his direction. He likewise had to admit to himself that he had never set eyes on a lovelier female figure; but, holding true to Clara in his heart, he remained largely oblivious to Olympia's stiff, stone-cold allures, and only every now and then did he cast furtive looks over his open compendium at the comely statue - that was all.

He was just writing to Clara when he heard a light knock; upon his invitation to enter, the door swung open a crack and Coppola's repulsive face peered in. Nathaniel felt a shudder of terror run through him; mindful, how-ever, of what Spalanzani had told him about his compatriot Coppola, and that he had given his sacred word to his beloved to lend no more credence to the Sandman Coppelius, he himself was ashamed of his childish fears. With a great effort he pulled himself together and spoke as calmly as possible: 'I'm not going to buy a barometer, my dear friend, so you might as well be going!'

At which, however, Coppola stepped squarely into the room and spoke with a hoarse voice, his broad mouth twisted into an ugly laughter, his sparkling little eyes casting a piercing look beneath the wink of his long grey lashes: 'Forget barometer, bah! I bring pair o'lovely peepers!'

Horried, Nathaniel cried out: 'Strange man, how can you have eyes for sale? Eyes? Eyes?'

But then and there Coppola shoved aside his barom-eters, reached into his deep coat pocket and pulled out spectacles and eyeglasses which he laid out on the table. 'Look - glass - glass - what you put on you nose, eyes a pretty - eyes a pretty!' Whereupon he pulled out more and more eyeglasses, so that the entire table was soon flickering and sparkling.

A thousand eyes peeped and twitched and stared at Nathaniel; but he was unable to turn away from the table, and Coppola kept laying out more and more eyeglasses, and ever wilder and wilder did those glaring gazes land, helter-skelter, shooting their blood-red rays at Nathaniel's breast. Overcome by frantic horror, he cried out: 'Stop it! Stop it, you wretched creature!' He grabbed Coppola by the arm as the latter, oblivious, reached yet again into his pocket to fetch more glasses to add to the heap that covered the table.

But Coppola shook himself free, and with a hoarse, repulsive laugh, muttered: 'Oh! This not for you! But look here, lovely glass!' - wherewith he swept up all the eyeglasses, shoved them back into his coat pocket, and from another pocket pulled out a number of big and little telescopes and field glasses.

As soon as the eyeglasses were out of sight Nathaniel grew calm again and, mindful of Clara's words, had to admit to himself that the terrible spook was a figment of his own imagination, and that Coppola was an altogether honest craftsman and lens grinder and could not possibly be Coppelius' cursed doppelgänger and shadow figure. He realized, furthermore, that there was nothing strange about all the lenses that Coppola now laid out on the table, nothing ghastly like the eyeglasses, and to make amends Nathaniel now decided actually to buy something from him. He reached for a small, very finely crafted pocket looking-glass and, to test it, peered out of the window.

Never in his life had he come upon a looking-glass that so clearly and sharply brought distant objects before his eyes in such clear focus. He unintentionally peered into Spalanzani's room; Olympia sat there, as usual, at the little table, with her arms resting on it and her hands folded. Now for the first time Nathaniel espied Olympia's exquisitely lovely face. Only the eyes appeared strange, blank and dead. But as he brought her face into greater and greater focus in the looking-glass, it seemed to him as if Olympia's eyes flashed open in moist moonbeams. It was as if she had only now acquired the power of sight; her glances grew livelier and livelier. Nathaniel lingered at the window, transfixed, unable to take his eyes off the stunningly lovely Olympia. He was awakened, as if out of a deep dream, by the sound of throat-clearing and scraping.

Coppola stood behind him: 'Tre zecchini - three ducats!' Nathaniel, who had completely forgotten the optician, quickly counted out the asking price. 'Fine glass - fine glass - is it not?' asked Coppola with his repulsive hoarse voice and his crafty smile.

'Yes, yes, indeed!' Nathaniel replied, greatly vexed. 'Adieu, dear friend!'

But Coppola cast several strange sidelong looks at Nathaniel and his room before taking his leave. The young man could still hear him laughing out loud on the staircase. 'All right,' Nathaniel muttered to himself, 'he's laughing at me because I no doubt paid far too much for the little looking-glass - paid far too much!' As he quietly whispered these words, a deep and terrible deathly groan resounded in the room. Nathaniel was so frightened he stopped breathing. But the groan had emanated from his own throat, he fathomed after the fact. 'Clara's quite right,' he said to himself, 'to take me for a ridiculous ghost-haunted idiot; it's perfectly insane - completely ridiculous of me to let the thought that I paid Coppola too much for the looking-glass unnerve me to such a degree; and for no reason at all.' Now he sat himself down to finish writing the letter to Clara, but a fleeting glance out of the window confirmed that Olympia was still seated there; and then and there, driven by an irresistible urge, he jumped up, grabbed Coppola's looking-glass and remained glued to the window, riveted by Olympia's alluring visage, until a friend and fellow student, Siegmund, called out to remind him that it was time to come along to Professor Spalanzani's lecture.

But the next day the curtain was pulled shut in that fateful room across the way, and he could not catch sight of Olympia on that day or on the following two days, despite the fact that he seldom left his own window and constantly kept peering over with Coppola's looking-glass. On the third day even the blinds were pulled. Desperately pining and driven by a burning desire, he ran out to her front door. Impressions of Olympia's lovely figure hung in the air everywhere he looked; she stepped out from behind the bushes and the reflection of her big, sparkling eyes beamed out at him from the clear brook. Clara's image had been totally erased from his heart, he thought of nothing but Olympia and wailed and complained at the top of his voice: 'Oh you, my shining star of love, did you appear before me only to vanish again and leave me in the dark and desperate night?'

As he was about to return to his room, he became aware of noisy goings-on in Spalanzani's house. The doors were open, all kinds of devices were being carried in, the windows on the first floor were open wide, busy housemaids swept and dusted the window boxes with big brooms; inside, meanwhile, carpenters and decorators banged and hammered. Stunned, Nathaniel remained standing there in the street; then Siegmund came over to him and said, laughing: 'So what do you say about our old Spalanzani?' Nathaniel assured him that he had nothing to say since he knew absolutely nothing about the Professor, but that he was rather surprised to discover such a wild to-do and housekeeping frenzy in that ordinarily dark and silent house; whereupon Siegmund informed him that Spalanzani was going to throw a big party the next day, including a concert and ball, and that half the university was invited. The word was that Spalanzani was going to let his daughter Olympia, whom he'd fearfully kept sheltered from view, appear for the first time in public.

Nathaniel received an invitation and presented himself at the Professor's at the appointed hour with a fast-beating heart, as carriages rolled up to the door and lights shimmered in the elegantly decorated rooms. The company was numerous and glamorous. Olympia appeared richly and tastefully attired. Everyone had to admire her finely chiselled face and graceful figure. The strange stoop of her back and her bone-thin waist appeared to be the consequence of a girdle tied too tight. There was a measured stiffness in her stance and step that some found displeasing; but that was ascribed to the stress of appearing in society. The concert began. Olympia played the grand piano with great skill and likewise brought off a bravura aria with a clear, almost bell-glass-like, pitch-perfect voice. Nathaniel was completely captivated; he stood in the last row and could not clearly make out Olympia's features in the candlelight. Without attracting notice, he therefore pulled out Coppola's looking-glass and gazed through its lens at the lovely Olympia. Oh God! He now fathomed how ardently she peered in his direction, how every note only seemed to sound enveloped in a loving look that surged through his burning heart. The artful trills rang out in Nathaniel's ear like the heavenly Hosannas of the spirit trans figured by love; and when at last, following the cadenza, the long trill pierced the air all around him, feeling as though suddenly enveloped by her warm embrace, and no longer able to control himself, he cried out in rapture and pain: 'Olympia!' All heads turned to look at him, some laughing.

But the cathedral organist's face twisted into an even dourer grimace than before and he merely remarked: 'Well, well!' The concert came to an end, the ball began. Only to dance with her - with her ! That was now the object of Nathaniel's deepest desire, all that he strove for; but how would he get up the courage to ask her, the queen of the evening, for a dance? Nevertheless - he himself had no idea how it happened - finding himself all of a sudden standing right there beside Olympia, once the music had already started up, and she not yet having been invited to dance, hardly able to stammer a few words, he reached for her hand. Olympia's hand was ice-cold; he felt a terrible deathly frost surge through him; he looked into her eyes, which greeted his gaze with love and longing, and at that very moment it was as if the pulse began to beat in her cold hand and the lifeblood began to glow warm within. And love's longing welled up, glowing hotter and hotter in Nathaniel's breast; he wrapped his arm around lovely Olympia and led her down the rows of dancers. He had always thought himself to be a good dancer, able to hold to the beat; but from the precise rhythmic steadiness of Olympia's step, which often caused him to falter, he soon fathomed the failing of his sense of beat. And yet he no longer wanted to dance with any other woman in the world, and felt as if he would have killed on the spot anyone else who dared approach her to ask for a dance. But this happened only twice, and thereafter, to his amazement, Olympia always remained seated between dances and he did not hesitate to reach for her hand and pull her up again and again.

Had Nathaniel had eyes for anything but the lovely Olympia, countless tussles and tangles would have been unavoidable; for clearly the quiet, painstakingly muffled laughter that emanated here and there among the groups of young people was directed at the lovely Olympia, whom they followed with the strangest looks - it was hard to say why. Fired up by the dance and by the wine of which he'd pleasantly partaken, Nathaniel shed his innate shyness. He sat beside Olympia, his hand in hers, and spoke fervently of his love for her in words that nei-ther he nor she understood.

But she perhaps grasped their meaning; for she peered without flinching right into his eyes and sighed again and again: 'Oh - Oh - Oh!'

Whereupon Nathaniel replied: 'Oh you beautiful, heavenly woman! You ray of hope from the Promised Land of love - you deep spirit in which my entire being is mirrored,' and more of the same.

In response to which Olympia kept sighing the same 'Oh, Oh!'

Professor Spalanzani walked several times past the blissful pair and smiled with a strange look of satisfaction. And though Nathaniel's spirit hovered elsewhere in another world, all of a sudden it seemed to him as if it grew curiously dark down here below in Professor Spalanzani's house; he looked around and fathomed with a start that the last two lights in the empty hall were burning down to the wick and threatened at any moment to go out. Music and dance had stopped long ago. 'Time to part, time to part,' he cried out in a wild and desperate voice, kissed Olympia's hand and leant forward to kiss her on the mouth with his burning lips, but her lips were ice-cold! And, just as when he'd first touched Olympia's cold hand, he felt a shudder run through him, the legend of the dead bride suddenly flashing through his mind; but Olympia pressed him tightly to her, and in that kiss her lips seemed to come alive with warmth. Professor Spalanzani paced slowly through the empty hall; his steps sounded muffled and, ringed by dancing shadows, his figure appeared terrifying and ghostlike. 'Do you love me - do you love me, Olympia? Just that one word! Do you love me?' whispered Nathaniel.

But, standing up, Olympia only sighed: 'Oh! Oh!'

'Oh yes, my precious, my beautiful star of love,' said Nathaniel, 'you rose in the firmament of my heart and will evermore light up and transfigure the darkness within!'

'Oh, Oh!' Olympia responded, walking away.

Nathaniel followed her; they stood before the Professor. 'You sweet-talked my daughter in a right sprightly manner,' he said with a smile. 'Well then, my dear Mr Nathaniel, if conversing with the simple-minded girl gives you pleasure, you're welcome to visit whenever you like.'

Nathaniel staggered off starry-eyed, with all of heaven's splendour bursting from his breast. Spalanzani's party was the talk of the town in the days that followed. Notwithstanding the Professor's great pains to make it a splendid occasion, the chatterboxes nevertheless dwelt on all sorts of unseemly and strange goings-on, saving their sharpest barbs for the stiff and silent Olympia, who, despite her lovely exterior, was saddled by the wagging tongues with a lot of completely nonsensical notions as to her sanity - the reason, it was said, that Spalanzani kept her hidden for so long. Needless to say, Nathaniel was not pleased to learn of this, and he said nothing; what was the point, he reasoned, in proving to these dullards that it was their own nonsense that kept them from recognizing Olympia's profound and beautiful spirit!

'I beg you, my friend,' Siegmund said to him one day, 'tell me how in heaven's name an intelligent man like you ever fell for the wax face of that wooden doll?'

Nathaniel was about to explode in anger, but then he pulled himself together and calmly responded: 'Why don't you tell me, brother Siegmund, how a fellow with an eye for beauty could be blind to Olympia's heavenly charms? But then again, it's just as well fate didn't make you a rival; for one of us would have to fall in blood.'

Fathoming how things stood with his friend, Siegmund backed off and, after observing that in matters of beauty and love all is in the eye of the beholder, he added: 'Still it's funny that so many of us feel pretty much the same way about Olympia. She seemed to us - don't take it badly, my friend! - strangely stiff and soulless. Her figure's regular, just like her face, it's true! She might well be considered beautiful, if her gaze were not so devoid of life, so totally lacking, you might say, the power of sight. Her step is strangely measured, every movement seems prescribed by clockwork gears and cogs. Her play-ing and singing have the unpleasantly precise soulless rhythm of a machine, which is true of her dance step too. This Olympia seemed completely odd to us, we didn't know how to take her; it was as if she were only acting like a living being, and yet she unquestionably has her own way about her.'

Nathaniel refused to give in to the bitter feelings that welled up in his heart at Siegmund's words. He checked his mood and simply replied, deadly serious: 'Olympia may indeed seem odd to you cold, prosaic types. The poetic temperament only reveals itself to like-minded souls! Her loving look fell on me alone, lighting up my senses and thoughts; only in Olympia's love can I find myself again. You all think ill of her because she doesn't babble banalities like all the other shallow souls. It's true, she speaks little; but those few words seem like true hiero-glyphs revealing an inner world replete with love and a profound intellectual grasp of the eternal beyond. But you just don't understand, all these words are lost on you.'

'Beware, my brother,' said Siegmund very softly, almost sadly, 'it seems to me you're heading in a dangerous direction. You can count on me, if all else - no, I dare not say any more!' Nathaniel suddenly fathomed that the cold, prosaic Siegmund was being very sincere with him, and so he took and shook the proffered hand with all his heart.

Nathaniel had completely forgotten that there was a Clara in this world whom he once loved; his mother, Lothar, everyone had slipped from his consciousness, he only lived for Olympia, beside whom he sat for hours every day, and to whom he held forth on his love, on a life flushed with sympathy, on their psychic affinity - to all of which Olympia listened with deep devotion. From the depths of his desk drawers Nathaniel fetched out everything he had ever written. Poems, fantasies, visions, novels, stories, to which were added daily all sorts of high-flown sonnets, stanzas, canzone - all of it he tirelessly read to Olympia for hours on end.

But he had never had such a lovely listener. She did not embroider and knit, she did not peer out of the window, she fed no birds, she played with no lapdogs or cuddly cats, she practised no paper-cutting or did anything else with her hands, she held back no furtive yawns with a quiet, forced cough - in short, for hours and hours she peered with a fixed and steady gaze into the eye of her beloved without fidgeting or budging, and her gaze grew ever livelier and more intense. Only when Nathaniel finally stood up and kissed her on the hand, and even on the mouth, did she respond: 'Oh, oh!' Followed with: 'Good night, my dear!'

'Oh you beautiful, oh you profound spirit,' Nathaniel cried out when he reached his room, 'only you, you alone completely understand me.' He experienced an inner bliss when he pondered what a wondrous harmony manifested itself ever more each day between his and Olympia's spirits; for it seemed to him as if Olympia had grasped his works, his poetic gift, from the depths of her soul, indeed that her voice came from the bottom of her innermost self. That must be true, he thought; for Olympia never uttered any more words than those already noted above. But when, at his most lucid moments, for instance in the morning upon waking, Nathaniel really pondered Olym-pia's total passivity and laconic manner, he shrugged it off: 'What are words - words! Her heavenly gaze says more than any hollow language. Can any child of heaven fit herself into the narrow compass of a pitiful earthly need?'

Professor Spalanzani seemed to be absolutely delighted by the relationship between his daughter and Nathaniel; he gave them all sorts of unequivocal signs of his approval and when Nathaniel finally dared to allude to a future bond with Olympia, a smile spread over Spalanzani's face and he replied that he would leave it to his daughter to decide of her own free will. Emboldened by these words, with burning desire in his heart, Nathaniel decided to implore Olympia the very next day to declare clearly in plain words what her dear loving look had long since told him, that she wished to be his for evermore. He searched for the ring that his mother had given him when he left home to give to Olympia as a symbol of his commitment to their budding, blossoming life together. While looking for it he happened on Clara's and Lothar's letters; indifferent, he flung them aside, found the ring, stuffed it in his pocket and ran over to see Olympia.

Even from the doorstep, and from the vestibule, he heard a strange din; it appeared to emanate from Spalan-zani's study. A stamping of feet - a clatter - a shoving - a pounding on the door, interspersed with coarse words and hurled imprecations. 'Let go! Let me go! You wretch! You cursed creature! Did I put my life and limb on the line for that?' - 'Ha ha ha ha! - that was not our arrangement - it was me, me who made the eyes!' - 'And I the mechanical clockwork!' - 'Poor devil with your clockwork-you filthy cur of a simple-minded clockmaker!' - 'Get out! - Satan! - Stop!' - 'Organ grinder!' - 'Devilish beast! - Stop - Get out - Let go!' It was the voices of Spalanzani and that disgusting Coppelius that screeched and raged.

Nathaniel burst in, gripped by an unspeakable terror. The Professor held a female figure by the shoulders, the Italian Coppola held her by the feet; they tugged and tore her here and there, furiously fighting for possession. Nathaniel recoiled in profound horror when he recog-nized the figure as Olympia; flaring up in a wild fit of anger, he was about to tear his beloved out of their strug

- gling grip - but at that very moment, with a mighty burst of strength, Coppola managed to yank the figure free of the Professor's hands and, with a pivot, swinging her in his direction, managed to land Nathaniel such a stunning blow that it made him tumble backwards over the work table, toppling and knocking down the phials, retorts, bottles and measuring glasses. All the equipment smashed in a thousand pieces on the floor. Then Coppola flung the figure over his shoulder and raced with a repulsive, shrill laugh down the steps, so that the ugly dangling feet of the figure banged with a wooden thud and thump on the steps. Stunned, Nathaniel stood up - he had seen all too clearly that Olympia's deathly pallid wax face had no eyes, but black hollows in their stead; she was a lifeless doll.

Spalanzani thrashed around on the floor; glass shards had cut his head, chest and arms, blood spurted as though from a fountain. But he pulled himself together. 'After him - after him - why do you waver? Coppelius - Coppelius has robbed me of my finest automaton-twenty years'work - life and limb invested - the clockwork - speech - step - all mine - the eyes - the eyes robbed from you. Cursed hellhound! After him-fetch me back Olympia-there are her eyes!'

Then Nathaniel spotted a pair of bloody eyes peering at him from the floor. Spalanzani grasped them with his uninjured hand and flung them at him so that they struck him on the breast. Then madness grabbed him with its burning claws and bored its way into his heart of hearts, tearing his thinking and feeling to shreds. 'Hopla - hopla - hopla! - ring of fire - ring of fire! Spin around, ring of fire - merrily - merrily! - wooden doll, hopla, lovely little wooden doll - turn turn!' - whereupon he flung himself at the Professor and pressed his fingers to his throat. He would have strangled him, but, roused by the racket, many people stormed in, tore the raging Nathaniel from the Professor's neck, managed to revive the old man and thereby saved his life. As strong as he was, Siegmund was not able to restrain the madman, who kept on screaming in a terrifying voice: 'Wooden doll, turn, turn!' and lashed about him with balled fists. Finally, it took the combined strength of many men to overpower him, fling him to the floor and tie him up. His words dissolved in a terrible beastly bellowing. In this pitiful state, still raving in a ghastly frenzy, he was taken to the madhouse.

But before I continue, gracious reader, with my account of the fate of that poor unfortunate, Nathaniel, those of you who took an interest in the masterful mechanic and maker of automaton, Spalanzani, can rest assured that he completely recuperated from his wounds. He was forced to leave the university, as Nathaniel's story had stirred up a public uproar and it was commonly held to be an altogether fraudulent swindle to try to pass off a wooden doll for a living person in proper society (for Olympia had effectively pulled the wool over their eyes). Jurists went so far as to call it a refined, and, therefore, all the harder to punish, swindle, which he succeeded in pulling off so skilfully that everyone (except for a few sharp-eyed students) was taken in, although they now put on a smart façade and pointed out all sorts of things that seemed suspicious to them at the time. But such smart-alecs ultimately brought no hard and fast evidence to the case. For instance, could it possibly have aroused anyone's suspicion that, according to the testimony of one elegant invitee, Olympia more often sneezed than yawned? This, maintained said elegant invitee, was the automaton's hidden rewind mechanism that noticeably creaked in the process, etc.

A professor of poetry and rhetoric took a pinch of snuff, snapped the tin shut, cleared his throat and launched into his erudite discourse: 'Most honoured ladies and gentlemen, can't you see where the shoe pinches? The whole thing is an allegory - a long-drawn-out metaphor! You catch my drift! Sapienti sat !'

But many honoured gentlemen derived little consolation from this view; the story of the automaton had taken root and a dreadful distrust of human figures seeped into their souls. In order to be completely convinced that they were not in love with a wooden doll, quite a few lovers demanded that their beloved sing something off-key and dance out of step, that they embroider and knit while being read to, play with Bowser, etc. , and above all that they not just listen, but also occasionally say something in such a way as to demonstrate that their words necessarily derive from actual thought and feeling. Consequently the loving bond of many couples grew stronger and all the more attractive, but others quietly drifted apart. 'One can hardly be held accountable for this,' was the common excuse. Yawning was all the rage at social teas, but people refrained from sneezing, so as to dispel any suspicions. Spalanzani was obliged to leave the town, as has already been said, to escape the criminal investigation into his fraudulent introduction of an automaton into human society. Coppola also vanished.

When Nathaniel awakened, as though from an oppressive and terrible dream, he batted his eyes open and felt himself infused with an indescribable sense of well-being and heavenly warmth. He lay in his bed in his room in his father's house; Clara was bent over him and his mother and Lothar stood close by.

'At last, at last, oh my dearly beloved Nathaniel, you've pulled through at last, and now you're mine again!' Clara spoke the words with all her heart and took Nathaniel in her arms.

But bright, burning tears of sadness and rapture poured from his eyes and he moaned deeply: 'My Clara, my Clara!' Siegmund, who had faithfully stood by his friend in dire moments, entered the room. Nathaniel held out his hand: 'You, my faithful brother in need, you never abandoned me.'

Every last trace of madness was gone, and soon Nathaniel got better in the painstaking care of his mother, his beloved and his friends. Fortune had in the meantime returned to the house; for a miserly old uncle, from whom no one hoped to inherit a penny, had died and left Nathaniel's mother, in addition to a considerable fortune, a small estate in a pleasant district not far from the city. There they intended to move together, mother, Nathaniel with his Clara, whom he now planned to marry, and Lothar. Nathaniel had become more gentle and childlike than ever and only now really recognized Clara's heavenly pure, radiant spirit. No one reminded him, not even breathing the slightest hint, of the recent past.

It was only when Siegmund prepared to leave that Nathaniel spoke up: 'By God, my brother, I was heading down the path of no return, but in the nick of time an angel made me find the right way! It was my Clara, after all!' Siegmund cut him off, fearing that bitter memories might once again make him start raving.

The time approached when the four happy people planned to move out to the small country estate. At mid-day they went walking through the streets of the city, having bought some things. The tall town hall tower cast a long shadow over the market place. 'Oh!' said Clara, 'let's climb it one last time and gaze out at the distant mountains!' No sooner said than done! Nathaniel and Clara both climbed the steps, mother went home with the maid, and Lothar, who was disinclined to mount the many steps, stayed down below. Now the two lovers stood arm in arm at the tower's highest lookout gallery and peered at the sweet-scented ring of woods, beyond which the blue mountains loomed like a giant city.

'Will you look at that strange little grey bush that seems to be slowly drawing near?' asked Clara.

Nathaniel mechanically reached into his coat pocket; he found Coppola's looking-glass and turned it sideways. There was Clara standing in the eye of the lens. A spas-modic quiver started up in his veins and arteries - turning deathly pale, he peered at Clara, but soon sparks of fire flashed from his rolling eyes; he let out a horrible cry like a hunted animal, jumped high in the air and with a curious cackle proceeded to scream out shrilly: 'Turn, little wooden doll, turn!' - and with a great burst of strength he grabbed hold of Clara and tried to hurl her off the balcony, but Clara clung for dear life to the metal railing.

Hearing the madman raving and Clara's terrified screams, and gripped by a terrible foreboding, Lothar clambered up the stairs, but the door to the second flight of steps was locked. Clara's piteous screams sounded louder and louder. Consumed with anger and fear, Lothar hurled himself against the door, which finally gave way.

Clara's cries grew fainter and fainter: 'Help! Save me! Save me!' till her voice went silent.

'She's done for - murdered by that madman!' Lothar screamed. The door to the lookout gallery was also locked. Desperation turned him into a lion; he broke down the door. God in heaven! Clara dangled in Nathaniel's mad grip over the edge of the railing, only holding on to the cast-iron railing by one hand. Quick as lightning, Lothar grabbed his sister, pulled her to safety and at the very same moment heaved a balled fist into the madman's face so that he tumbled backwards and let go of his prey.

Lothar raced back down the steps, his unconscious sister in his arms. She was saved. Meanwhile, Nathaniel kept flailing about on the lookout gallery and jumped high in the air and cried: 'Ring of fire, turn! Ring of fire, turn!'

Aroused by the screams, a throng gathered below, including the lawyer Coppelius, who had just come to town and made straight for the market place. Some people wanted to climb the tower to capture the madman, whereupon Coppelius laughed and said: 'Ha ha, just be patient, he'll be down shortly on his own initiative!' and looked on as the others raced up the steps.

Nathaniel suddenly stopped dead in his tracks. He leant down, spotted Coppelius below and with a shrill shriek - 'Ha! Eyes a pretty! Eyes a pretty!' - he leapt over the parapet. As Nathaniel landed, his skull smashed on the cobblestones, while Coppelius disappeared in the crowd.

Some years later Clara was said to have been spotted in some distant town seated, hand in hand, with a friendly man on a bench before the door of a lovely little country house, two bouncing boys playing at her feet. It might, therefore, be fair to suppose that Clara finally found the quiet domestic bliss that suited her cheerful, life-loving spirit and that Nathaniel in his torn and troubled state could never have given her.

Sketchy, Doubtful, Incomplete Jottings

断篇残句，略记迷思

错误比真理更易被发现。前者流于表面，因而更易掌控；后者扎根深处，并非人人都可探知。

我们都以过去为生，又因过去而亡。

当我们需要学习某个伟大的事物时，便会立刻用我们与生俱来的可怜与不足来逃避学习。尽管如此，我们总还能学到些东西。

德国人根本不在乎与人共处，而是重视独处。无论是谁，都有一种专属自己的独处方式，不愿被他人剥夺。

经验的道德世界大部分都只由恶意和嫉妒构成。

迷信是生活的诗学，所以诗人迷信不是坏事。

信任是一个神奇的东西。仅听信一人之言，此人有可能出错或自欺欺人；而听信众人之言，众人也会发生同样的事情。所以人们往往不能发现真相。

我们不该心怀恶念，希望他人遭遇不快的生活。然而对于那些偶然陷入其中的人而言，这恰恰是他们性格的试金石，也考验着他们生而为人最核心品质。

一个见识有限的老实人往往能看穿最精明的骗子。

一个人如果感受不到爱意，那么就必须学会阿谀奉承，否则他将无法应付生活。

面对批评，人们既不能自卫，也无法反抗。必须蔑然视之，这样就能渐渐接受批评的存在。

群体离不开能干的人，却又总是感受到来自能者的压力。

不管是谁，哪怕是我的仆人，只要指出了我的错误，那么他就是我的主人。

自上而下或自下而上的往事，最终总会彼此相遇。

如果要求人们履行义务，却不赋予其任何权利，那么就必须开出丰厚的报酬。

一个地方的所谓浪漫，是一种宁静的崇高之感，这种感觉以历史的形式呈现，或者与之等同地，表现为孤独、疏离、避世。

辉煌雄壮的教堂圣歌《降临吧，造物之神》实际上完全是对天才的召唤，正因如此，它在精神强大的人们之中引起了强烈共鸣。

美体现了自然法则的奥秘，如果没有美这样具象化的呈现，我们将永远无从知晓自然法则的内涵。

我能保证直白坦率，却无法承诺不偏不倚。

不念恩义始终是一种弱点。我从未见过心无感激的能干之人。

我们是如此的目光短浅，总以为自己很有道理。于是可以想象，一个思维超群的人不但会犯错误，甚至还会为之欣喜。

我们很少看到仅凭温和的方式能够达到美好而正确的目的。相反，实际情况往往是迂腐导致迟滞不前，狂妄导致仓促行事。

文字和图像是相关联的，它们总在找寻彼此，就像我们在比喻与寓言中充分了解到的那样。一直以来，耳朵听到的话语或音乐，同样也会浮现在眼前。所以当我们还是小孩子时，在法典和上帝的施恩书中、在《圣经》和插图课本中，总能看到文字和图片均衡分布。说出无法用图像描绘的事物，或者画出无法用语言阐明的东西，这是完全合理的。然而人们经常错误地认识两者的关系，明明该使用图像，却要用语言表述，从而诞生了象征意义上加倍邪恶的神秘怪物。

任何投身于科学研究的人，都会先后受困于外界的阻挠与关注。人们一开始不愿承认我们研究成果的价值，而后又装模作样，好像已经知晓我们将会研究出什么成果。

一本逸事和格言汇编对于老于世故的人们来说价值连城，前提是他知道如何恰当地在对话中穿插前者，在合适的情景下想起后者。

人们说：“艺术家们，研究自然吧！”然而从平凡中提炼高贵、用畸形锻造美丽，并非小事。

失去判断，也就失去了记忆。

世界是一座有裂缝的钟，只会吱嘎作响，不能鸣声报时。

人们一定要善意地容忍青年业余爱好者的鲁莽冒失，因为待到日后年岁稍长，他们会成为艺术和大师们最忠实的拥趸。

对于坏到骨子里的恶人而言，幸灾乐祸是他们唯一的乐趣。

聪慧之人永远是最好的百科全书。

有些人从不犯错，因为他们从不做理性的事。

当我认识到我与自身、我与外部世界的关系时，我就称其为真理。如此一来，人人都有一个属于自己的真理，而且它永远不会改变。

特殊总会被普遍打败，而普遍总要让自己适应特殊。

没有人能主宰真正的创造力，只能任由它天马行空，自由发挥。

无论是谁，只要大自然开始向他揭示其公开的奥秘，他就会不可抗拒地向往自然最高贵的诠释者——艺术。

时间本身就是一种元素。

一个人永远无法知道，自己被赋予了多少人性。

对于理解毫无助益的差别，就不是差别。

显花植物 [1] 中仍然保留着许多隐花植物 [2] 的性状，即使用数百年的时间也不足以破解其中的奥秘。

混淆两个辅音，可能是因为发音器官不够灵活；而混淆单元音和双元音，则是因为自负而头脑发热。

一个人如果打算学习全部的法律，那么就根本不会有时间去触犯法律。

人不能为所有人而活，尤其不能为那些自己不愿与之相处的人而活。

对于后世的召唤来源于一种纯粹的生动感受，即确有永恒不朽的存在，即便不能立时得到认可，但必将为小众所喜爱，最终受到大众的追捧。

秘密还不是奇迹。

演员们俘获观众的心，却不会付出真情，他们是优雅的骗子。

草率而狂热地追捧有问题的天才，是我早年犯过的错误，而我永远也无法彻底摆脱它。

我愿与你坦诚相待，不想一拍两散，然而却无法做到。你行为不端，脚踩两只船，不仅没有吸引来追求者，还失去了自己的朋友。这该如何收场啊！

无论身居高位，还是出身卑微，人人都始终要为自己的人性买单。

自由作家如今炙手可热，全体公众都拜倒在他们脚下。

每当我听到人们谈论自由的创意想法时，都惊讶于人们竟如此热衷那些空洞无物的言论：一个想法是不可能自由的！它是强劲有力、自成一体的，如此便完成了上帝交付与它的神圣使命——富有创造力。相比而言，一个概念就更加不自由，因为它被赋予了另一个完全不同的使命。

然而，若要找寻自由的踪迹，那么就必须观察人们的态度，态度是有生命力的情绪。

但是态度很少是自由的，因为它直接来源于人本身，来源于人身边最亲近的关系和他的需求。

我们就此搁笔。我们应该以此为标准，衡量每天所听到的言论！

（面对自然，）我们一直以来只能利用自己的眼睛和想象事物的方式来加以探索。而自然本身就知道它现在想要什么，它曾经想要什么。

告诉我，你所在的地方！——阿基米德

去开发，你所在的地方！——诺泽 [3]

事物的旁观者总在竭力找寻普适的因果关系，并把所有类似的现象都归结于某一个共同的诱因，却很少考虑最直接的缘由。

聪明之人不会遭遇微小的蠢事。

任何一件艺术品，无论大小，及至最微小的细节，都全部取决于创作理念。

不存在没有比喻的诗，因为诗本身就是个比喻。

一位好脾气的老考官对一名学生耳语道：“你还什么都没学到呢。 [4] ”然后让他通过了考试。

卓越的事物往往深不可测，你可以用自己喜欢的方式开始接触它。

最平庸的小说也总好过平庸的读者，最差的小说也会对这一体裁做出些许贡献，使其整体精彩绝伦。

我在普遍的事物上花费了大量时间，直至我意识到优秀的人们在特殊领域取得的成就。

其实，只有当人们所知甚少时，才会以为自己了解某个事物。随着知识的积累，怀疑也会逐渐加深。

实际上，一个人的可爱之处在于他所犯下的错误。

德国人知道如何修正他人，却不知道如何施以援手。

有些人爱着自己的同类并在人群中找寻他们；有些人则爱着并追求与自己完全相反的人。

长期厌世之人必将变得凄惨可悲，比如视我们为敌的那些人就是这种情况。

妒忌与憎恶将观察者的视野限制在事物表面，哪怕他们已经具备了洞察力也无法深入。而如果借助善良与爱心的力量，就可以看穿世界和人心，如此他便可以期望达到至高境界了。

一位英国批评家称赞我拥有“全面的能力”，对此我必须致以最诚挚的感谢。

对于每一个友好的德国人而言，些许诗学天赋是有可取之处的，有了它就可以通过正确的方式，利用一定程度的尊重和不满来掩盖自己内心的真实想法，不管这是一种怎样的想法。

物质本身呈现在所有人的眼前，其内涵只有行家里手才能发掘，而其组成形式对于大多数人来说，就是一个谜。

人们偏爱生机与活力，青春又通过一颗不老的心得以实现。

我们以自己选择的方式认知世界，它总有黑白两面。

在实际生活中，人们总是一错再错，因此我们必须不厌其烦地重复说教正确的做法。

在罗马，除了全体罗马人之外，还有一群由雕像组成的民众。类似地，在我们所处的真实世界之外，还有一个几乎更加强大的幻想世界，那里居住着大多数的人。

人类就像红海：一条界线无法将他们彻底隔绝，就在界线的末端处，他们又会彼此交融。

辨别真实与虚假，区分确定与模糊，判定某件事应该受到怀疑还是谴责，这是历史学家的职责所在。

只有重视当下的人才会写出编年史。

思想一再重现，信念传播蔓延，形势一去不回。

在所有民族中，希腊人对生活的幻想最为美妙。

译者好比忙碌的皮条客，极力向我们推荐一位半遮半掩的美女，这是因为他们激起了我们对原著无法抗拒的向往。

我们乐于推崇先人，却不愿夸奖后代。只有父亲才不会嫉妒儿子的才能。

自谦不是什么难事，然而在虎落平阳的下坡路上，当你已经落后，还能承认不如你的人实则在你之上，就十分难得了。

我们的所有成就，都是舍弃自身，以求存在。

我们的所作所为都会令人倦怠，那些不知疲倦的人是幸福的！

希望是不幸之人的第二灵魂。

那些快乐地做事，并欣喜于自我成就的人，是幸福的。

人们心中同样存在着一种臣服于人的渴望，因此法国人的骑士制度实为一种“奴役” [5] 。

剧院里的视觉和听觉快感极大地限制了人们的反思。

经验可以无限延伸，而理论则不能在相同意义上净化并完善。对于前者，整个宇宙向着各个方向展开；而后者则封闭在人类能力的边界之内。因此，所有构建理论的模式都必定重现，这也解释了为什么会出现那样奇怪的现象：在丰富广博的经验中，一个狭隘的理论却能重新赢得人们青睐。

摆在我们眼前的永远是同一个世界，我们一直观察它或者猜度它。而生活在真实或虚假之中的也永远是同一批人，置身于后者的人们感到更加舒适。

真理与我们的天性相悖，谬误则不然，原因很简单：真理要求我们意识到自己的狭隘，而谬误却讨好我们，仿佛我们以某种方式脱离了局限。

自德国人“崛起” [6] 已有将近二十年的时间。一旦他们注意到了这点，他们就一定能意识到自己有多奇怪了。

相信自己可以做到曾经能够做到的事，是很自然的；而有些人相信自己可以做到自己从未做到过的事，这可能很奇怪，但并不罕见。

古往今来，对科学进步做出贡献的都是个人，而非时代自身。毒死苏格拉底也好，烧死扬·胡斯 [7] 也罢，都是时代的所作所为，它是一成不变的。

真正的象征主义，用特殊表现一般，并非把普通事物演绎为梦境或幻影，而是在片刻之间生动地揭示玄妙莫测的东西。

所有理想的事物，一旦现实对其提出要求，就会将现实事物与其自身一并吞没。信贷（纸币）与白银的关系、信贷与自身的关系就是这样。

技艺精湛常被视为利己主义。

一旦优秀的作品和它们值得颂扬的美德宣告终结，新教徒的多愁善感就立马取而代之。

如果人们能够挑选出好的建议，那么仿佛他自己就已经具备完成这件事的能力了。

所有智慧之事都已经被思考过了，人们只需将它们再思考一遍。

人如何认识自我呢？思考永远不会有用，而应该通过行动认知。

着手尝试履行你的义务，很快你就会发现自己是什么样的人。

不过你的义务是什么呢？是时代对你的要求。

理性世界可以被看作一个巨大的永生个体，他不停地造就必要的事物，甚至通过这种方式主宰了偶然的事物。

随着年龄增长，我愈发讨厌一些了不起的人，他们本应该约束自己的本性，从而把自己和身边人从专横的必要性中解放出来。我愈发讨厌他们出于某一个先入为主的错误概念，做着与自己愿望完全矛盾的事。最终，由于整体构想坍塌了，他只能在细节之处兀自烦恼，浪费时间。

精明能干之人，期待着吧！你有资格：

从伟人身上——获得仁慈

从当权者身上——获得优待

从务实和善良的人身上——获得帮助

从群体中——获得青睐

从个体中——获得爱！

那些业余爱好者习惯在他们竭尽所能之后找借口，说作品还没完成。不言而喻，他们永远也无法完成，因为他们从未真正地开始创作。大师只需寥寥数笔，就大功告成；无论细致与否，作品都已经完成了。最聪明的门外汉在不确定中摸索，越做越怀疑自己最初的设计。直到最后，无法弥补的错误才暴露出来，这样自然无法完成作品。

真正的艺术领域中不存在预备学校，只有事先准备。最好的准备

其实是让资质平庸的学生参与大师的创作。许多研磨颜料的助手最终成为伟大的画家。

另一种准备的方式是模仿，通过模仿一位化繁为简的大师，不经意地激发人们与生俱来的能力。

我们坚信艺术家研究自然的必要性和价值，然而也不否认，当意识到这种值得表扬的努力被滥用时，我们有多心痛。

我们深信，如果年轻的艺术家在研究自然的同时，不会思考如何打磨每一处细节，使其融为一体，从而转变为一幅美丽的图画，最后用画框装裱，那么他们就应该少接触甚至完全放弃对自然的研究，心甘情愿地把这份工作交给爱好者或者专家。

世界上的许多美是遗世独立的，但灵魂需要发现它们彼此之间的关联并以此创作出艺术品。花朵的魅力来源于停在它身旁的昆虫，来源于滋润它的露水，来源于为它提供养分的容器。每一丛灌木、每一棵树，都是因为周围的岩石和小溪而获得意义，都是因为一个适度的距离而增强了魅力。对于人类和所有动物而言，也是如此。

通过这种方法，年轻艺术家获得的好处是多样的。他学会了将彼此相关的事物组合在一起的最佳方式，而当他按照这种方式聪明地构思时，一定会贡献不少发明创造，一定会具备利用单一个体创造丰富整体的能力。

除了满足艺术教育的应有之义，他还取得了一个巨大的、不容忽视的优势：他学会了如何创作畅销的、在艺术爱好者看来优美而生动的画作。

这种类型的作品不必精雕细琢、尽善尽美，只要构思精巧、结构完整，它就能赢得艺术爱好者的青睐，效果甚至超过了那些更加大气

磅礴、内容更为详尽的作品。

让每一个年轻艺术家都去翻看他素描本和画夹里的草稿，想想运用上面的方法，能从中创作出多少赏心悦目、备受欢迎的作品吧！

我们这里探讨的不是更高层次的艺术，当然也可以对其进行讨论。我们不过是给艺术家一个警示，让他们迷途知返，为他们指明通往高级艺术的道路。

让艺术家们实践半年，不用炭笔，不用画刷，除非他有描绘眼前自然事物或风景的强烈愿望。如果他有天赋，那么我们所暗示的目的，很快就会显现出来。

告诉我你与谁交往，那么我就能说出你是什么样的人；如果我了解你正在做什么，我就能知道你会成为什么样的人。

每个人都必须按照自己的方式思考，因为他总能依据自己的思路发现某一个或者某一类真理，令他一生受益。但他不可以放任自己的思想恣意妄为，而应该时时自我监督，赤裸裸的本能并不适合人类。

无限制的行为，无论属于哪种类型，都会让人堕落。

人造和自然的作品中，最值得注意的是创作它的目的。

人们会迷失自我，也会在与他人相处时犯错，因为他们把手段当成了目的，而后徒劳无功，甚至令人讨厌。

我们的所思、所做，都是如此完美的纯粹和美好，外界的干预只

会破坏它。于是我们可以保持优势，接下来只需要把错放的东西归位，将毁掉的东西复原。

甄别不同程度的错误，并将正确的内容替换在相应的部分，是一件困难而辛苦的工作。

真理不必总以具象出现，它只要作为一种精神四处游荡，在所到之处促成和谐，那就足够了，就像钟声庄严而友善地回响在空中一样。

当我询问一些年轻的德国画家，甚至包括那些曾经旅居意大利的画家，为什么他们总要使用那样令人生厌的艳俗色调（尤其是在风景画中），为什么在画中丝毫不见和谐之美的踪迹，他们就以傲慢无礼的口吻振振有词地回答说，自己就是这样看待自然的。

康德为我们指出，存在一种理性批判，它是人类所具备的最高能力，也是人类自我反省的原因。康德的言论为我们带来了多大好处，人人都可自行查看。而我在此意义上也要提出一个观点，即一种感性批判也是必需的，如果艺术——尤其是德国艺术——还想以某种方式复苏并且以一种令人愉快的活泼步调向前进步的话。

为理性而生的人们需要接受大量的教育，这种教育会通过父母和老师的悉心照顾、通过温和的示范和严格的训练渐渐显现。同样地，还有正在逐渐成长的艺术家的，但不是天生完美，他们可能天生具有清晰的观察力，向形状、比例、动作投去欣喜的目光，但对于更高级的组合、姿态、光线、阴影、颜色缺乏天生的洞察力，而自己却不会意识到这一点。

如果他不愿向技艺更为高超的前辈和当代艺术家学习，弥补自己的不足，以求成为真正的艺术家，那么他就会误入歧途，抱残守缺，还以为这是在保护自己的原创性。因为我们所拥有的不仅仅是与生俱来的禀赋，还有后天能够习得的技能，这两者共同造就了我们。

普遍概念和狂妄傲慢总有可能酿成恐怖的悲剧。

光凭吹气是不能演奏笛子的，你们还必须让手指动起来。

植物学家们有一个植物种类库，他们称其为“不完全的 [8] ”。人们也可以说，存在不完整的、不全面的人，这些人的渴望及追求与他们的行动及成果不成比例。

资质最差的人可能是完满的，前提是他们要在自己的能力范围内活动。然而如果缺失了最重要的恰当比例，即便是最优秀的长处也会暗淡、失效和破碎。这种灾难性的缺失现在愈发常见，因为又有谁能跟得上这个日益膨胀、发展极度迅猛的当下，满足它提出的所有要求呢？

有些人既聪明又主动，还能了解并恰当而巧妙地利用自己的能力，只有他们才能了解世界的真实面目。

大错特错：高估自己的能力，低估自己的价值。

我时不时会遇到这样一种年轻人，在他身上我不期望看到任何改变和提升。然而让我担心的是，我看到一些十分优秀的人在时代的浪潮中随波逐流，我一直想要提醒他们的是：正因为一个人的舢板易碎，他的手上才会拿着船桨。这样他就不会被暴虐的风浪裹挟，而可以按照自己的想法行动。

但是一个年轻人如何才能看清，那些人人追求、赞同、支持的东西，实则有害而应该受到谴责的？为什么他不该放任自我以及自己的天性一起跟随潮流？

我们这个时代等不及任何事物的成熟，最大的悲哀是下一秒会将上一秒吞噬，虚度光阴的人们总是生活拮据，勉强糊口，无所作为。用来填满报纸版面的新闻已经足够多了！一个聪明的人或许还能够插入一两条。这样一来，一个人所做之事、所付出的努力、所写的文字，包括他计划中的创作，都会被公之于众。没有人被允许快乐或忧伤，除非作为他人的消遣，于是新闻就这样在街头巷尾传播，进而在城市之间、国家之间扩散，最终在各个大洲之间流行开来。这一切都基于速度至上的原则。

就像蒸汽机很难被压制一样，人们的行为也很难被规范：商贸蓬勃繁荣，纸币迅速流通，人们债台高筑，为的却是偿还之前的欠款。这一切对于现在的年轻人而言，都是可怕的东西。如果他天生性情沉静，既不会向世界索取无度，也不会任由外界定义自己，那么他将无比幸福！

然而当下的主流观念在方方面面威胁着他，所以最为重要的是及早让他看清自己的本心，明确自己的方向。

随着人年岁渐长，天真无邪的话语和行为变得愈发珍贵。我一直试图向身边人说明真诚、直白和轻率之间的区别，以及与其说三者之间有什么不同，莫不如说是一种从最无害到最有害的过渡，对其必须加以观察或者更多地去感受。

于是我们必须训练自己为人处世的技巧，否则我们就有可能在无意间失去从别人那里获得的好意。人们或许能在生活中自己逐渐意识到这一点，不过事先一定会付出巨大的代价。可惜的是，我们不能为后人省下这笔学费。

艺术和科学之于生活，是一种多变的关系，受到艺术和科学所处的层次、时代的特性以及其他众多偶然因素的影响。因此，要说明这一切并非易事。

诗学往往在各种情况的最初阶段发挥作用，无论这里所说的情况是完全原始的，还是半开化的，抑或是指某一文化通过认知外来文化而正在转变。在这些情况下，人们可以说，新事物的作用完全得以发挥。

而音乐领域的上佳之作则并不需要多少创新，实际上，一个音乐作品越是经典，人们就越熟悉它，因而它能发挥的作用也就越大。

或许，音乐将艺术的价值体现得最为淋漓尽致，因为它的创作不需要用量精准的原材料，它是纯粹的形式和内容，使表达的一切东西变得高级而尊贵。

音乐要么是神圣的，要么是世俗的。音乐的神圣完全与音乐的价值相称，它也实现了音乐对生活影响的最大化，这种影响历经漫长的岁月却始终如一。世俗的音乐则应该完全是令人愉悦的。

杂糅了神圣和世俗特质的音乐是亵渎上帝的、粗制滥造的，它喜欢宣泄脆弱、可怜和悲哀的情绪，听上去乏味无聊。因为一方面，它不够庄重肃穆，称不上神圣；另一方面，它又缺乏世俗音乐的主要特征——令人愉悦。

教堂音乐的神圣庄严与世俗音乐的活泼欢快是两个核心，真正的音乐都围绕在它们周围。在这两点核心上，音乐总会不可避免地催生出虔诚或舞蹈。将两者混合会导致错误，将两者削弱会导致乏味，而如果音乐寻求与教育性的、描写性的以及其他类似的诗歌结合起来，那么就会变得冰冷。

事实上，雕塑艺术中，只有那些顶级的作品才能发挥作用。诚然，出于一两个原因，中等水平的作品会给我们留下深刻印象，但是它们导致的困惑多于它们带来的快乐。

因此，雕塑艺术必须寻找对于素材的兴趣，这种兴趣往往出现在名人画像中。然而如果雕塑艺术打算同时兼顾真实和高贵的话，那么

在此方面它也要达到一定的高度。

绘画是所有艺术中最自由、最闲适的一种。说它最自由，是因为虽然从原料和创作对象的角度出发，有些作品只能算作手工艺品，几乎称不上艺术，但是也会有许多人宽容它，喜欢它。还有一部分原因在于，不管一个人是否接受过教育，都会对一个工于技法而空洞无物的作品赞叹不已。只需要稍稍接近一些艺术，便可以更受欢迎。真实的颜色、外表和可见对象彼此之间的关系已经令人赏心悦目，而既然人眼已经对任何事物见怪不怪，那么一个错误形象或者画面对于视觉的冲击，就不如杂音对听觉的冲击大。人们可以容忍最糟糕的图画，因为人们对那些外表更加丑陋的东西都已经司空见惯了。一个画家只要和艺术家稍稍沾边，就已经可以比同样层次的音乐家更受欢迎了；此外，一个资质平庸的画家至少可以按照自己的意愿单干，而一个资质平庸的音乐家必须通过与人合作来寻求一些共鸣。

当我们探讨艺术作品时，是否应该比较它们孰高孰低？我的回答是：艺术鉴赏家应该比较，因为他们的脑海中存在这样的概念，知道艺术可以并应该创作出什么样的作品。对于还在接受艺术教育的业余爱好者们来说，如果想收获最多，那么就不应比较，而应该单独鉴赏每一个作品：这样一来，他会渐渐形成对于普遍事物的直觉和观念。外行之人对于艺术品的比较，实则只会方便他们骄傲自负地妄下论断。

一件艺术品的内容比它的创作方式更令人感兴趣。人们可以详细了解前者，却无法完整地掌握后者。所以人们在欣赏作品时会找出重点，最终当人们仔细观察这些地方，就会发现整体的效果并没有缺失，只是无人知晓而已。

“诗人是从哪里想出这一句的？”这一问题也仅仅是对内容的提问，没有人能从中读出有关方式的东西。

想象力只有通过艺术，尤其是诗歌，才能得以规范。最可怕的是没有品位的想象力。

矫揉造作是一种畸形的理想主义，一种主观的意识，因此它往往并不缺乏智慧的成分。

文献学家依赖传世文本的一致性。比如有一份手稿，它存在真实的漏洞和笔误，导致文义中断，以及其他可能被人指责的不足之处。而后又出现了一份抄本，接着冒出来了第三个，比较这些版本对于理解和理性看待原作的意义越来越大。他进一步深入研究，要求自己在不借助外界工具的情况下，更多地掌握并描述所讨论问题的一致性。因为这需要一种特殊技巧，要求对已故作者格外深入的了解和一定程度的创造力。所以人们不该责备文献学家对于鉴赏品位品头论足，即使他们在这方面并非每次都成功。

诗人依赖描写。描写的最高境界是可以与真实媲美，这意味着诗人的描写如此活灵活现，以至于人人都以为那与真实情况一般无二。最高水平的诗歌是表现外在的，它越是想回归内在，质量就越是下降。有些诗歌只描绘内在世界而不通过外在使其具象化，或者没有让读者透过内在而感受到外在，这两种诗歌都是诗学堕落于平庸的最后一步。

雄辩术依赖于诗歌的所有优势和权利，它抢占了诗歌的地位，还滥用诗歌，以求获得市民生活中某些眼前的、合乎或违背道德的外在优势。

Sketchy, Doubtful, Incomplete Jottings

It is much easier to recognize error than to find truth; the former lies on the surface, this is quite manage-able; the latter resides in depth, and this quest is not everyone's business.

We all live on the past and perish by the past.

*

When we are called to learn something great, we at once take refuge in our native poverty and yet have still learnt something.

The Germans are indifferent about staying together, yet they do want to be on their own. Each person, never mind who he may be, has his own way of being alone and is unwilling to be deprived of this.

The empirical-moral world consists largely of bad will and envy.

Superstition is the poetry of life; so it does the poet no harm to be superstitious.

Trust is a curious matter. Listen only to one person: he may be wrong or deceiving himself; listen to many: they are in the same case, and as a rule you don't really discover the truth.

One should not wish anyone disagreeable conditions of life; but for him who is involved in them by chance, they are touchstones of character and of the most decisive value to man.

A limited, honest man often sees right through the knavery of the sharpest tricksters.

One who feels no love must learn to flatter, otherwise he won't make out.

You can neither protect nor defend yourself against criticism; you have to act in defiance of it and this is gradually accepted.

The crowd cannot do without efficient people and always finds efficiency burdensome.

Anyone who tells on my faults is my master, even if it happens to be my servant.

Memoirs from above downwards, or from below upwards: they are always bound to meet.

If you demand duties from people and will not con-cede them rights, you have to pay them well.

When a landscape is described as romantic, this means that there is a tranquil sense of the sublime in the form of the past, or, what amounts to the same, of solitude, remoteness, seclusion.

The splendid liturgical song 'Veni Creator Spiritus' is in actual fact a call addressed to genius; and this is also why it appeals powerfully to people who are spirited and strong.

Beauty is a manifestation of secret natural laws which without this appearance would have remained eternally hidden from us.

I can promise to be candid, not, however, to be impartial.

Ingratitude is always a kind of weakness. I have never known competent people to be ungrateful.

We are all so blinkered that we always imagine we are right; and so we can imagine an extraordinary spirit, a person who not only makes a mistake but even enjoys being wrong.

Completely moderate action to achieve what is good and right is very rare; what we usually see is pedantry seeking to retard, impertinence seeking to precipitate.

Word and image are correlatives which are always in quest of one another as metaphors and comparisons show us clearly enough. Thus, from of old, what is inwardly said or sung for the ear is at the same time intended for the eye. And so in ages which seem to us childlike, we see in codes of law and salvational doctrine, in bible and in primer, a continual balance of word and image. If they put into words what did not go into images, or formed an image of what could not be put into words, that was quite proper; but people often went wrong about this and used the spoken word instead of the pictorial image, which was the origin of those doubly wicked symbolically mystical monsters.

Anyone who devotes himself to the sciences suffers, firstly through retardations and then through preoccupations. To begin with, people are reluctant to admit the value of what we are providing; later on they act as though they already knew what we might be able to provide.

A collection of anecdotes and maxims is the greatest treasure for a man of the world-as long as he knows how to weave the former into apposite points of the course of conversation, and to recall the latter on fitting occasions.

People say, 'Artist, study nature!' But it is no small matter to develop what is noble out of what is common, beauty out of what lacks form.

Where concern is lost, memory fares likewise.

The world is a bell that is cracked: it clatters, but does not ring out clearly.

One must put up kindly with the pressing overtures of young dilettantes: with age they become the truest votaries of art and of the master.

When people really deteriorate, their only contribution is malicious joy in the misfortune of others.

Intelligent people are always the best encyclopaedia.

There are people who never make mistakes because they never have sensible projects.

Knowing my attitude to myself and to the world outside me is what I call truth. And so everyone can have his own truth and yet it remains the self-same truth.

What is particular is eternally defeated by what is general; the general has eternally to fit in with the particular.

No one can control what is really creative, and every-body just has to let it go its own way.

Anyone to whom nature begins to unveil its open mystery feels an irresistible yearning for nature's noblest interpreter, for art.

In phanerogamy there is still so much of what is cryptogamic that centuries will not suffice to unriddle it.

Exchanging one consonant for another might perhaps be due to some organ deficiency, transforming a vowel into a diphthong the result of conceited pathos.

If one had to study all laws, one would have no time at all to transgress them.

One can't live for everyone, more especially not for those with whom one wouldn't care to live.

A call to posterity originates in the clear vital feeling that there is such a thing as permanence and that even if this is not immediately acknowledged it will, in the end, win the recognition of a minority and finally of a majority. bear the thought that anyone is like him.

Reckless, passionate favouritism of problematic men of talent was a failing of my younger years of which I could never completely rid myself.

I would like to be honest with you without us parting company; but this isn't possible. You are acting wrongly and trying to sit between two stools, not getting any followers and losing your friends. What's to come of this!

No matter whether you're of high rank or low, you can't avoid paying the price of your common humanity.

Writers of a liberal persuasion are now on to a good game; they have the whole public at their feet.

When I hear talk about liberal ideas, I'm always amazed how people like to delude themselves with the sound of empty words: an idea is not allowed to be liberal! Let it be forceful, doughty, self-enclosed, so as to fulfil its God-given mission of being product-ive. Still less is a concept allowed to be liberal; for its commission is completely different.

But where we have to look for liberality is in people's attitudes and these are their feelings come to life.

Attitudes, however, are seldom liberal because an attitude springs directly from the person, his immediate context and his needs.

We'll leave it at that; by this yardstick we should measure what we hear day after day!

It's always only our eyes, the way we imagine things; nature quite alone knows what it wills, what it intended.

‘Give me where I stand!’

‘Take where you stand!’

Declare where you stand!

It is general causal relationships which the observer will explore, and he will attribute similar phenomena to a general cause; rarely will he think of the immediate cause.

No intelligent man experiences a minor stupidity.

In every work of art, great or small, and down to the smallest detail, everything depends on the initial conception.

There is no such thing as poetry without tropes as poetry is a single trope writ large.

A kindly old examiner whispers into a schoolboy's ear: 'Etiam nihil didicisti' [you haven't learnt anything as yet] and gives him a pass-mark.

Excellence is unfathomable; tackle it in what way you will.

The most mediocre novel is still better than mediocre readers, indeed the worst novel still participates in some way in the excellence of the genre as a whole.

I was intent on pursuing what is general until such time as I came to comprehend the achievement of outstanding people in what is particular.

The Germans know how to correct, but not how to give supportive help.

There are people who love and seek out those like themselves, and, then again, those who love and pursue their opposites.

Anyone who had always allowed himself to take so poor a view of the world as our adversaries make out would have turned into a rotten subject.

Envy and hatred limit the observer's view to the surface even if this is also associated with acumen; if this, however, goes hand in hand with kindness and love, the observer can see right through the world and mankind; indeed, he can hope to reach the Allhighest.

An English critic credits me with 'panoramic ability', for which I must tender my most cordial thanks.

A certain measure of poetical talent is desirable for every German as the right way to cloak his condition, of whatever kind it may be, with a certain degree of worth and charm.

The subject-matter is visible to everyone, content is only discovered by him who has something to contribute, and form is a mystery to most.

Error is continually repeated in action, and that is why we must not tire of repeating in words what is true.

Just as in Rome, besides the Romans, there was also a people of statues, so, too, apart from this real world, there is also an illusory world, mightier almost, where the majority live.

People are like the Red Sea: the staff has hardly kept them apart, immediately afterwards they flow together again.

The historian's duty: to distinguish truth from falsehood, certainty from uncertainty, doubtful matters from those which are to be rejected.

Thoughts recur, convictions perpetuate themselves; circumstances pass by irretrievably.

Among all peoples, the Greeks have dreamt life's dream most beautifully.

Translators are to be regarded as busy matchmak-ers who exalt the great loveliness of a half-veiled beauty: they kindle an irresistible longing for the original.

We like to rate Antiquity higher than ourselves, but not posterity. It's only a father who doesn't envy a son's talent.

It's not at all hard to subordinate yourself; but when you are set on a declining course, in the descendant, how hard it is to admit that what is, in fact, below you is above you!

Our whole achievement is to give up our existence in order to exist.

All we devise and do is exhausting; happy the man who doesn't get weary.

'Hope is the second soul of those who are unfortunate.'

He who acts as though he's glad, and is glad about what he has done, is happy.

There is, too, in man a desire to serve; hence French chivalry is a form of service, 'servage'.

*

'In the theatre visual and aural entertainment greatly limit reflection.'

Experience can be extended into infinity; in not quite the same sense theory can be purified and perfected. To the former the universe is open in all directions; the latter remains locked within the confines of human capacity. This is why all modes of conceptual thinking are bound to reappear, and that is why, strangely enough, a theory of limited value can regain favour in spite of wider experience.

It is always the same world which lies open to our view, is always contemplated or surmised, and it is always the same people who live in truth or wrong-headedly, more comfortably in the latter way than in the former.

Truth is contrary to our nature, not so error, and this for a very simple reason: truth demands that we should recognize ourselves as limited, error flatters us that, in one way or another, we are unlimited.

It is now nearly twenty years since all Germans 'tran-scend'. Once they notice this, they are bound to realize how odd they are.

It is natural enough that people should imagine they can still do what they were once able to do; that others imagine themselves capable of doing what they never could do is perhaps strange but not infrequent.

At all times only individuals have had an effect on scientific knowledge, not the epoch. It was the epoch that did Socrates to death by poison, the epoch that burnt Huss: epochs have always remained true to type.

This is true symbolism, where the particular represents the general, not as dream and shadow, but as a live and immediate revelation of the unfathomable.

As soon as the ideal makes a demand on the real, it in the end consumes it and also itself. Thus credit (paper money) consumes silver and its own self.

Mastery is often seen as egoism.

As soon as good works and their merit cease, sentimentality immediately takes over in the case of Protestants.

If you can seek out good advice, it's as though you yourself have the capacity for action.

There's nothing clever that hasn't been thought of before - you've just got to try to think it all over again.

How can we learn self-knowledge? Never by taking thought but rather by action. Try to do your duty and you'll soon discover what you're like.

But what is your duty? The demands of the day.

The reasonable world is to be seen as a great individual not subject to mortality and forever bringing about what is needed, in this way even mastering chance events.

The longer I live, the more depressing I find the spectacle of a man, whose optimal function is to be a lord over nature so as to free himself and his fellow men from tyrannical necessity, doing the exact opposite of what he really wants to do, and all because of some preconceived false notion; and in the end, because the structure of the project as a whole has been ruined, he just muddles on miserably with odd details.

Man of ability and action, be worthy of, and expect:

grace -from those who are great favour -from the powerful

a helping hand -from those who are active and good affection -from the crowd

love -from an individual

When a dilettante has done what lies within his capacity to complete a work, he usually makes the excuse that of course it's as yet unfinished. Clearly, it never can be finished because it was never properly started. The master of his art, by means of a few strokes, produces a finished work; fully worked out or not, it is already completed. The cleverest kind of dilettante gropes about in uncertainties and, as the work proceeds, the dubiousness of the initial structure becomes more and more apparent. Right at the end the faulty nature of the work, impossible to correct, shows up clearly and so, of course, the work can never be finished.

For true art there is no such thing as preparatory schooling, but there are certainly preparations; the best, however, is when the least pupil takes a share in the master's work. Colour-grinders have turned into very good artists.

Copycat work, casually stimulating people's natural activity in imitating an important artist who achieves with ease what is difficult, is quite a different matter.

We are quite convinced that it is essential for the artist to make studies from nature; we won't however deny that it often grieves us to perceive the misuse of such praiseworthy endeavours.

We are convinced that the young artist should rarely, if at all, set out to do studies from nature without at the same time considering how he might round off every sheet and make a whole of it, transforming this unit into a pleasing picture set within a frame, and offer it courteously to the amateur and the expert.

Much that is beautiful stands as an isolated entity in the world, but the spirit has to discover connections and thus to create works of art. The flower unfolds its full beauty only through the insect that clings to it, through the dewdrop that makes it glisten, through the calix from out of which it may be drawing its last sustenance. No bush, no tree whose charm may not be enhanced by a neighbouring rock or brook, by a simple prospect in the distance. And so it is with human figures and so with animals of every kind.

The advantages accruing to a young artist in this way are indeed manifold. He learns to think out the best way of fitting together related things and, when he thus composes intelligently, he will, in the end, assuredly not lack what is termed invention, the capacity to develop a manifold whole out of single units.

And, as well as conforming to the tenets of art pedagogy, he gains the great advantage, by no means to be despised, of learning to create saleable pictures that are a pleasure and delight to the art lover.

A work of this kind need not be complete down to the last detail; if it is well envisaged, thought out and finished, it is often more appealing to the art lover than a larger, more fully completed picture.

Let every young artist take a look at the studies in his sketch book and portfolio and consider how many of these sheets he might have been able to make enjoyable and desirable in this way.

We are not talking about the higher regions of art which might of course also be discussed; this is no more than a warning to recall the artist from a devious path and point the way to higher regions.

Let the artist put this to a practical test, if only for half a year, and not make use of either charcoal or brush unless he has the firm intention of actually structuring a picture out of the natural object or scene confronting him. If he has inborn talent, what we intended by our comments will soon be revealed.

Tell me with whom you consort and I will tell you who you are; if I know how you spend your time, then I know what might become of you.

Every individual must think in his own personal way; for on his way he always finds a truth or a kind of truth which helps him get through life. But he mustn't let himself go, he has got to keep a check on himself; purely naked instinct is unseemly.

Absolute activity, of whatever kind, ultimately leads to bankruptcy.

In the works of man as in those of nature, what most deserves notice is his intention.

People are at a loss with regard to themselves and one another because they use means as ends, and then, because of sheer busyness, nothing whatever happens or perhaps, even worse, something which is disagreeable.

What we think out, what we undertake, should have achieved such perfect clarity and beauty that any-thing the world could do to it could only spoil it; this would leave us with the advantage of only having to adjust what has been misplaced and refashion what has been destroyed.

Whole, half-and quarter-errors are most difficult and wearisome to put right, to sort out.

Truth need not always take corporeal form; enough for it to be around in spiritual form, bringing about harmony as it floats on the breeze as a spiritual presence like the solemn-friendly sound of bells.

When I ask young German artists, even those who have spent some time in Italy, why they use such crudely bright colours, especially in their landscapes, and seem to shun anything like harmony, they are apt to answer boldly and cheerfully that this is pre-cisely how they see nature.

Kant has drawn our attention to the fact that there is such a thing as a Critique of Reason, and that this, the highest faculty possessed by man, has cause to keep watch over itself. Let everyone judge for himself what great advantages the voice of Kant has brought him. I, for my part, would similarly like to urge that a Critique of the Senses should be worked out, if art, especially German art, is in any way to recover and to proceed and progress at a pleasing and lively pace.

Man, born to be a creature of reason, nevertheless needs much education, whether this comes gradually by way of careful parents and tutors, by peaceful example or by stern experience. Similarly, there is such a thing as a born potential artist, but no one is born perfect. He may have an inborn clarity of vision, a happy eye for shape, proportion, movement: but without becoming aware of this lack, he may be with-out a natural instinct for composition in its higher aspects, for correct tonal proportion, for light, shade and colouring.

Now if he is not inclined to learn from more highly skilled contemporary or earlier artists what he himself lacks in order to be a true artist, he will lag behind his own potential because of a wrong-headed idea that he is safeguarding his own originality; for we own not just what we are born with, but also what we can acquire, and this is what we are.

General notions and great conceit are always poten-tial creators of shocking misfortune.

‘You don't play the flute just by blowing - you've got to move your fingers.'

Botanists have a plant-category which they call 'Incompletae'; similarly one can say that there are incomplete and uncompleted people. These are the ones whose longings and strivings are out of proportion with what they actually do and what they achieve.

The least gifted man can be complete if he keeps within the limits of his capacities and skills, but real excellence is obscured, cancelled out and destroyed if there is not that absolutely essential sense of proportion. This disastrous lack is bound to crop up frequently in our own day; for who can possibly keep up with the demands of an exorbitant present, and that at maximum speed?

Only those people who are both clever and active, who are clear about their own capacities and can use them with moderation and common sense, will really get on in the world as it is.

A great failing: to see yourself as more than you are and to value yourself at less than your true worth.

From time to time I meet a young man whom I wouldn't wish different or improved in any way; but what worries me is that some of these people seem to me just the kind who let themselves drift along with the current of the stream of time, and this is where I keep wanting to point out that man is put at the helm of his own fragile craft precisely so that he may not follow the whim of the waves, the determination of his own insight.

But how is a young man independently to reach the insight that what everyone else pursues, approves and furthers may be reprehensible and damaging? Why shouldn't he let himself and his own natural disposition go the same way?

The greatest evil of our time - which lets nothing come to fruition - is, I think, that one moment consumes the next, wastes the day within that same day and so is always living from hand to mouth without achieving anything of substance. Don't we already have news-sheets for every point of the day! A clever man might well be able to slip in one or two more. In this way everything that anyone does, is working at or writing, indeed plans to write, is dragged out into the open. No one is allowed to be happy or miserable except as a pastime for the rest of the world, and so news rushes from house to house, from town to town, from one country to another, and, in the end, from one continent to the next, and all on the principle of speed and velocity.

As little as steam engines can be quelled, so little is this possible in the behavioural realm: the lively pace of trade, the rapid rush of paper-money, the inflated increase of debts made in order to pay off other debts, these are the monstrous elements to which a young man is now exposed. How good for him if nature has endowed him with a moderate and calm attitude so that he makes no disproportionate claims on the world nor yet allows it to determine his course!

But the spirit of the day threatens him in every sphere and nothing is more important than to make him realize early enough the direction in which his will should steer.

As one grows older, the most innocent talk and action grow in significance, and to those I see around me for any length of time I always try to point out the shades of difference between sincerity, frankness and indiscretion, and that there is really no difference between them, but just an intangible transition from the most harmless comment to the most damaging, and that this subtle transition has to be observed or indeed felt.

In this matter we have to use tact, else we run the risk of losing people's favour without being in the least aware of this and precisely in the way we came by it. This we probably come to understand in the course of life, but only after we have paid a high price for our experience, and from this we cannot, alas, spare those who come after us.

The relationship of the arts and the sciences to life is very varied according to the way their temporal stages are related to the nature of their epoch and a thousand other chance contingencies; which is why it isn't easy to make sense of all this.

Poetry is most effective at the start of any set of circumstances, irrespective of whether these are quite crude, half-cultured, or when a culture is in the process of change as it begins to become aware of a foreign culture; in such cases one can claim the effect of the new is definitely to be felt.

Music at its best hardly needs to be new; indeed, the older it is, the more familiar to us, the more effective it can be.

The dignity of art perhaps appears most eminent in music because it has no material of a kind for which detailed accounting might be needed. It is all form and content and it heightens and ennobles all it expresses.

Music is either sacred or profane. What is sacred accords completely with its nobility, and this is where music most immediately influences life; such influence remains unchanged at all times and in every epoch. Profane music should be altogether cheerful.

Music of a kind that mixes the sacred with the pro-fane is godless and shoddy music which goes in for expressing feeble, wretched, deplorable feelings, and is just insipid. For it is not serious enough to be sacred and it lacks the chief quality of the opposite kind: cheerfulness.

The numinous nature of church music, the cheerful-ness and playfulness of folk melodies are the two pivots of true music. At these two focal points music always and inevitably leads either towards reverence or else to dance. Any mixture of the two is confusing, dilution is boring, and if music consorts with didactic or descriptive poems and texts of that kind, the result is coldness.

Plastic art is really only effective at its highest level; it is true that the middle zone can perhaps impress us for more reasons than one, but all middle-range art of this kind is more confusing than gladdening. Sculpture therefore has to discover subject-matter of interest and this is to be found in the portraits of people of some significance. But here, too, it has to reach a high degree of excellence if it is to be at the same time true and dignified.

Painting is the slackest and most easy-going of all the arts. The slackest because, on account of the material and subject-matter, we condone and enjoy much that is no more than skilled craftsmanship and can hardly be called art. In part it is also because a good technical performance, even though it may be dull, can be admired by the cultured as well as the uneducated, and need only remotely resemble art in order to be highly acceptable. True colours, surfaces and a true relationship of visible objects - all this is in itself pleasing; and, since the eye is in any case used to seeing everything, it does not find misshapen or mistaken form as objectionable as a jarring note is for the listening ear. We tolerate the worst portrayal because we are used to seeing even worse originals. So the painter need only be remotely artistic so as to find a bigger public than a musician of equal merit; the minor painter can at least always operate on his own, whereas the minor musician has to associate with others in order to achieve some sort of resonance by means of a combined musical effort.

The question 'Are we to compare or not to compare when considering works of art' is one we would like to answer as follows: the trained connoisseur should make comparisons, for he has a general idea, a pre-conceived notion of what could be and should be achieved; the amateur, still involved in the process of being educated, can make the best progress if he does not compare but judges each achievement on its individual merit: this gradually forms an instinct and idea for the general situation. Comparison by the unknowing is really only a lazy and conceited way of avoiding judgement.

To find and to appreciate goodness everywhere is the sign of a love of truth.

The sign of a historical feeling for humanity is that, at the same time as we appreciate the merits and attainments of the present, we also take into account the merits of the past.

The best we get from history is that it rouses our enthusiasm.

Idiosyncrasy calls forth idiosyncrasy.

One has to remember that there are quite a lot of people who would like to say something significant without being productive, and then the most peculiar things see the light of day.

People who think deeply and seriously are on bad terms with the public.

If I'm to listen to someone else's opinion, it must be put in a positive way; I have enough problematic speculations in my own head.

Superstition is innate in the human make-up, and when you think you have completely ousted it, it takes refuge in the strangest nooks and crannies and then suddenly emerges when one thinks one is toler-ably safe.

We would know much more about things if we weren't intent on discerning them too precisely. For, surely, an object can only be comprehensible to us when viewed at an angle of forty-five degrees.

Microscopes and telescopes really only serve to con-fuse the unaided human senses.

I hold my peace about many things; for I don't like to confuse people and am quite content if they are happy while I am cross.

Everything that liberates our mind without at the same time imparting self-control is pernicious.

The 'what' of a work of art interests people more than the 'how'; they can grasp the subject-matter in detail but not the method as a whole. That is why they pick out individual passages, in which, if you observe closely, the total effect is not actually lost but remains unconscious to all.

And the question, too, 'Where has the poet got it from?' gets no further than the 'what'; it helps no one to understand the 'how'.

Imagination is only ordered and structured by poetry. There is nothing more awful than imagination devoid of taste.

Mannerism is an ideology gone wrong, a subjective ideology; that's why, as a rule, it isn't without wit.

The philologist is dependent on the congruence of what has been handed down in written form. There is a basic manuscript and this has real gaps, errors of transcription which lead to a break in the meaning and to other difficulties common to manuscript tradition. Then a second copy is found, a third one; collating these leads to growing perception of what makes sense and meaning in the transmitted material. Indeed, the philologist goes further and requires that it should increasingly reveal and structure its inner meaning and the congruence of its subject-matter without dependence on philological aides. This calls for a special degree of sensitive judgement, a special absorption in an author long dead and a certain amount of inventive power; one cannot, therefore, take it amiss if the phil-ologist allows himself to make a judgement in matters of taste even if this doesn't always succeed.

The poet is dependent on representation, the cli-max of which is reached when it vies with reality, that is, when the descriptions are so full of living power that everyone can see them as being actually present. At the summit of its excellence poetry appears as something completely external; the more it withdraws into the inner realm, the more it is on its way towards sinking. The kind of poetry which concentrates on the inner realm without giving it outward substance or without allowing the out-ward to be perceived through the inward - both are the last steps from which poetry steps down into ordinary life.

Oratory is dependent on all the advantages of poetry, on all its rights. It takes possession of these and mis-uses them in order to get hold of certain outer momentary advantages, whether moral or immoral, in civic life.

Literature is the fragment of fragments; only the least amount of what has happened and has been spoken was written down, the least of what has been recorded in writing has survived.

Although Lord Byron's talent is wild and uncomfortable in its structure, hardly anyone can compare with him in natural truth and grandeur.

The really important value of folksong, so called, is that its themes are taken directly from nature. But the educated poet too might well avail himself of this advantage if only he knew how to set about it.

But the advantage inherent in folksong is that natural people, as distinct from the educated, are on better terms with what is laconic.

Shakespeare is dangerous reading for talents in the process of formation: he forces them to reproduce him, and they imagine they are producing themselves.

Nobody can make judgements about history except those who have experienced history as a part of their own development. This applies to whole nations. The Germans have only been able to judge literature since the point they themselves have had literature.

One is really only alive when one enjoys the good will of others.

Piety is not an end but a means to attain by the great-est peace of mind the highest degree of culture.

This is why we may say that those who parade piety as a purpose and an aim mostly turn into hypocrites.

'When one is old one has to do more than when one was young.'

A duty absolved still feels like an unpaid debt, because one can never quite live up to one's expectations.

Human failings are only descried by an unloving person; that is why, in order to realize them, one has to become unloving oneself, but not more than is strictly to the purpose.

It is our greatest good fortune to have our failings corrected and our faults adjusted.

Three things are not recognized except in the due course of time:

a hero in wartime,

a wise man in a rage,

a friend in need.

Three classes of fools:

men because of pride,

girls by love,

women by jealousy.

The following are mad:

he who tries to teach simpletons,

contradicts the wise,

is moved by empty speeches,

believes whores,

entrusts secrets to the garrulous.

Man can only live together with his own kind and not with them either; for in the long run he cannot bear the thought that anyone is like him.

Whichever way you look at nature, it is the source of what is infinite.

You have to have actually found a thing if you want to know where it is situated.

译后记

承蒙企鹅兰登之托，本人翻译了松尾芭蕉俳句集《怎奈唇寒口难开》一书。虽然有三十余载的日语从业经历和十几年的长期驻日工作、生活积累，但翻译俳句，本人还是初出茅庐，也不失为有益的尝试。

首先这本书因版权原因，原译本[由卢西恩·斯特雷克（Lucien Stryk）译于1985年]为英语，书名为Lips too chilled，出版社的编辑按英语去翻查了日语原著（岩波书店1962年版的《芭蕉句集》），我再由日语原文翻译成中文。在此过程中发现英译本可能因为语言体系的差别，很难准确表达出原意，大多是直译过来的，所以给查找原文带来了一定难度。

第二，由于俳句用日语诵读时，会表现为575的自然韵律，即一首由17个假名 [1] 组成的正常俳句，分别会在5、7、5的假名处自然断句（受措辞或语法结构的影响，部分俳句会出现增字或减字的情况）。且日语中的单词可以一词多义、一字多音，所以一首俳句也可能只有三个词汇，但意蕴较深，这也是俳句的魅力所在。如同中国的写意画虽草草几笔，但会给人带来无限遐想。而松尾芭蕉在日本被奉为俳圣，他的“古池や蛙飛び込む水の音”（见本书第4页）更是成为俳句之冠。由于中日文化的差异，如果简单直译则读者很难悟出其中意境，而完全意译又会脱离575的格式，失去俳句的原本特色，且目前在国内出版的俳句集大多不是575的格式。

在试译过程中我与编辑反复沟通、斟酌，决定仍以575的格式译出。这样，不但给翻译工作带来一定难度，还要尽可能如诗歌般押韵，需要一定的创作性。为此我参考了大量有关松尾芭蕉的俳句注释、创作背景，并结合在日本的生活经历尝试进行再创作，逐步适应后有了渐入佳境之感，感觉这样译既不破坏原结构，又能将原作中的意境转达给读者，还有译者的发挥空间，不失为俳句汉译的一种积极探索。

第三，由于英译本的问题，经查有个别句子不是芭蕉的原作，我们进行了调换。同时为更便于读者理解正确的原意，我们将日文原文一并刊出，请读者参考、指正。

另外，在这里我还要特别感谢责任编辑和译审给予的非常有价值的意见和建议，本书同样包含了她们的心血和汗水。

沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特 致父亲利奥波德·莫扎特（萨尔茨堡）

奥格斯堡，1777年10月17日 [1]

我亲爱的父亲！

现在我得开始跟您说说施泰因 [2] 的钢琴了。在看到它们之前，施佩特 [3] 的钢琴是我的最爱；但现在我更喜欢施泰因钢琴，因为它的制音效果比雷根斯堡钢琴（即施佩特钢琴）还要好得多。在我用力弹奏时，不管我把手指放在琴键上还是抬起，声音都会在我敲响它们的那一瞬间立刻消失。随便以哪种方式触键，音质都很稳定-不会发出杂音，不会变强或是变弱，或者完全不出声。总之，所有乐音都十分均衡。毫无疑问，这样一台钢琴施泰因至少要卖300弗罗林。但他投入的努力和勤奋是无法用金钱来衡量的。他的钢琴有一个独一无二的优点，就是安装了擒纵器 [4]（Auslösung）。这样的制琴师真的是百里挑一。但如果没有擒纵机件，一架钢琴根本就不可能没有杂音或回声；触键时，琴槌会落下，但一敲过琴弦，不管你这时把手指放在琴键上还是移开，都会立刻向上跳起。施泰因告诉我，只有在他完成了这样一架钢琴的时候，才会坐下来尝试弹奏各种走句 [5]，流动的、跳跃的，一直调试到这架钢琴什么都能演奏。因为他的工作纯粹是为了提高音乐品质，而不仅仅为了赚钱，不然他立刻就能完工。

他经常说：“如果我自己不是这样狂热的音乐爱好者，不能在钢琴上弹点什么的话，我早就对我的工作失去耐心了。但我本身就喜欢不会让演奏者失望并且经久耐用的乐器。”他的钢琴确实非常耐用。他保证他的音板不会破损或者断裂；每当他完成了一个钢琴音板，他就放到室外，让它日晒夜露，风吹雨打，以致破裂。然后他就在裂缝里嵌进楔子，黏合起来，这样音板就会变得非常坚实牢固。他喜欢看到音板开裂，因为这之后就能确保不会再发生这种情况了。为了让音板更加坚固，他甚至经常亲手切割它，再将它黏合起来。现在他一共制作完成了三架这样的钢琴。直到今天我才又弹奏了其中一架。

今天是17号，我们和年轻的加斯纳先生一起吃饭，他是一位年轻英俊的鳏夫，亡妻也年轻美丽，他们才结婚两年。这个年轻人非常正派而有礼貌，盛情款待了我们。一同吃饭的还有阿贝·亨利·布林格先生和维斯霍费尔先生的一个同事，他是一位前耶稣会会士，目前担任这儿的大教堂乐长 [6]。他和沙赫特纳先生（萨尔茨堡的宫廷小号

手)很熟,因为他曾是沙赫特纳先生在因戈尔斯塔特 [7] 时的唱诗班指挥。他叫帕特尔·格布尔。我会写信向沙赫特纳先生转达他的问候。加斯纳先生和他的一个小姨子,妈妈,我,还有我们的堂妹 [8], 吃完饭后就去了施泰因先生那里。4点钟的时候,乐长先生和施米德鲍尔先生也来了。施米德鲍尔先生是圣乌尔里希修道院的资助者,一位非常好的老先生,说话很文雅;我在那儿视奏 [9] 了一首贝克 [10] 的奏鸣曲,一如既往地艰难,令人痛苦。简直无法形容这让乐长先生和修道院资助者多么震惊,以至于得在胸前画十字呼唤主。在这儿和在慕尼黑,我经常凭记忆演奏我的全部六首奏鸣曲 [11]。在之前的农舍音乐会 [12] 上,我已经演奏过那首G大调第五号。最后一首D大调在施泰因的钢琴上产生了无与伦比的效果。那个需要由膝盖压住的踏板机械,施泰因也做得比其他人都好。我几乎不需要怎么碰它,就能让它起作用;稍稍把膝盖移开一点点,就听不见一点儿回声了。明天我可能会去演奏他的管风琴,也就是说,我明天看了之后会跟您说说这件事;至于他的小女儿我打算最后再谈。当我对施泰因先生说,我很想演奏他的管风琴,因为管风琴是我的挚爱。他惊讶不已:“什么?您这样一位出色的钢琴家,想要演奏管风琴这种乐器?它既缺乏柔美和表现力,也弹不出弱音和强音变化,听起来老是一个样子。”“这些都说明不了什么,在我看来、听来,管风琴就是所有乐器之王。”“好吧,那我没意见。”于是我们就一起去了。我从他的话里察觉到,他认为我在他的管风琴上弹不出什么名堂,比方说,只能完全像弹钢琴那样来弹弹。他告诉我,他也曾应舒巴特 [13] 的要求,把他带来演奏管风琴。“我当时很害怕,”他说,“因为舒巴特告诉了所有人,教堂里坐得满满当当。我认为他接下来会精神饱满、激情洋溢,弹奏速度很快,而這些都不适合管风琴。但在他开始的那一刻,我的想法就完全变了。”我只说了一句:“施泰因先生,您觉得,我会在管风琴上狂奔是吗?”“啊,瞧您说的!这压根不是一回事。”然后我们就去了管风琴演奏台。我开始即兴弹奏,这时他已经笑了,随后我又弹了一个赋格。“现在我相信您喜欢演奏管风琴了,”他说,“如果您能以这种方式演奏的话。”起初,踏板对我来说有点儿陌生,因为它没有被划分开。它从c小调开始,然后d小调、e小调,它们都在同一排。在我们的钢琴上,上面一排应该是D大调和E大调,在这里却是降E大调和升F大调。但我很快掌握了这些。

我还去看了圣乌尔里希圣殿古老的管风琴,通往它的楼梯简直是噩梦。我请求其他人为我演奏管风琴,因为我想下楼去听,管风琴在楼上的空间里根本产生不了效果。但是我的期待落空了。那位年轻的唱诗班指挥,一位牧师,只在管风琴上演奏不知所谓的琶音 [14]。而当他想演奏和声时,产生的只有不和,因为音全不准。那之后我们不得不去接待室,因为妈妈、堂妹和施泰因先生也在那里,还有一位神父埃米利安,一头自负的驴子,头脑简单的卖弄聪明者,人倒也挺不

错的。他一直想和堂妹开玩笑，但她却拿他开心。最后，他喝醉了（这件事很快就发生了），他开始谈论音乐。他唱了一首卡农，我说：“我这辈子没听过比这更美的歌曲。”我接着说：“很遗憾我不能和你一起唱，因为我天生发不出乐音。”“这没关系。”他说。于是他开始唱了。我第三个唱，但是我编了完全不同的内容，压低声音唱给堂妹听：“埃米利安神父，哦！你这个笨蛋！舔舔我的屁股吧！”[15]”然后我们又笑了半个小时。埃米利安神父对我说：“如果我们能一起待得久一点儿该多好，我还想和你们谈谈音乐作曲艺术。”“那样的话，我们的谈话很快就会结束。”我说，“吃你自己的拇指去吧！”[16]”就先写到这里吧，下次再聊。

沃·阿·莫扎特

[1] 1777年8月，莫扎特辞去了萨尔茨堡的宫廷乐师职务，在母亲的陪同下，于9月23日踏上寻找工作机会的旅途，先后访问了慕尼黑、奥格斯堡、曼海姆、巴黎，其中奥格斯堡乃其父利奥波德·莫扎特的出生地。莫扎特和母亲在慕尼黑遭到选帝侯婉拒后，于1777年10月11日到达奥格斯堡，暂居在叔叔弗朗茨·阿洛伊斯·莫扎特家中。（说明：书中脚注除特别标明之外，均为译者注。）

[2] 约翰·安德烈亚斯·施泰因（1728-1792），著名德国钢琴制造师。他师从德国管风琴制作大师戈特弗里德·西尔伯曼，是钢琴制造史上的关键人物，设计制造了维也纳式击弦机钢琴。

[3] 弗兰兹·雅各布·施佩特（Franz Jakob Späth，1714-1786），管风琴、钢琴制造师，生活在雷根斯堡，故下文以雷根斯堡钢琴指代其所制作的钢琴。

[4] 或称擒纵结构，即钢琴击弦装置。在琴槌击打钢琴琴弦使其振动后，擒纵器立即使其停止振动，恢复到原来的位置，准备再次受击振动，而演奏者的手指仍可按在键上。

[5] 指流畅连续的连奏。

[6] 德语原文Kapellmeister，又译为乐团指挥，作为德国宫廷乐团的领导者，乐长起初不仅担任指挥，也负责作曲、编曲、组织管理等。因Meister有“师傅”之意，将Kapellmeister译为“乐长”更贴近德文原意。

[7] 德国巴伐利亚州的一座城市，位于多瑙河沿岸。

[8] 即莫扎特叔叔之女玛丽亚·安娜·泰克拉·莫扎特（1758-1841）。莫扎特常亲昵地以Bäse（施瓦本方言，意为小堂

妹) 唤她, 两人关系十分亲密。

[9] 指在没有排练的情况下直接看着乐谱演奏。

[10] 弗朗茨·伊格纳茨·冯·贝克 (1733-1803), 德国古典音乐作曲家。

[11] 即莫扎特在这次旅行中的全部演奏曲目: C大调第一号钢琴奏鸣曲K.279/189d, F大调第二号钢琴奏鸣曲K.280/189e, 降B大调第三号钢琴奏鸣曲K.281/189f, 降E大调第四号钢琴奏鸣曲K.282/189g, G大调第五号钢琴奏鸣曲K.283/189h, D大调第六号钢琴奏鸣曲K.284/205b。

[12] 前一天 (1777年10月16日), 莫扎特参加了由奥格斯堡城市贵族在农舍举办的音乐会, 他们认为这个地点与莫扎特相配, 可以给他“带来荣耀”, 暗示了将其视为农民。

[13] 克里斯蒂安·弗里德里希·丹尼尔·舒巴特 (1739-1791), 德国音乐家、诗人、作家, 自1774年起在奥格斯堡出版反对教会的杂志《德国编年史》(Deutsche Chronik), 1775年被驱逐出奥格斯堡, 1777年被捕入狱。

[14] 琶音指一串和弦音从低到高或从高到低依次连续奏出, 可视为分解和弦的一种。通常作为一种专门的技巧训练用于练习曲中, 有时作为短小的连接句或经过句出现在乐曲旋律声部中。

[15] 莫扎特有一首卡农就叫《舔舔我的屁股吧》(Leck mich im Arsch , K.231/382c)。

[16] 巴伐利亚俚语, 表示没兴趣再继续对话或提供信息, 用来摆脱纠缠而好奇的人。

利奥波德·莫扎特 致儿子沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特（曼海姆）

萨尔茨堡，1777年10月23日

我亲爱的儿子！

祝你命名日 [17] 快乐！但是我今天能祝福你什么呢？有哪些祝福是我平时不曾给予你的呢？我愿天主的恩典时刻伴你左右，只要你像一位真正的天主教基督徒那样热忱地履行义务，天恩就永远不会远离你。

你是知道我的。我不是学究，不是狂热教徒，更不是一位伪善者。我只是你的父亲。你不会拒绝你父亲的请求吧？我想请你关心自己的灵魂福祉，不要让你的父亲在死后还忧虑不安。只有这样，在艰难的时刻，我才不必责备自己对你的灵魂救赎关切得不够。再见！要幸福地活着，理智地活着！一定要尊敬、爱护你的母亲，她这么大了还如此辛苦。像我爱你一样爱我吧。

真心牵挂你的父亲

利奥波德·莫扎特

[17] 命名日是和本人同名的圣徒纪念日，对命名日的庆祝是基督教国家从中世纪就有的一项传统。-编者注

利奥波德·莫扎特 致儿子沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特（曼海姆）

萨尔茨堡，1777年11月24日

我亲爱的儿子！

我实在不知道该说些什么，你16号的那封信太让我震惊了。你用最轻率的语气告诉我，施马尔茨先生，可能是施马尔茨先生在慕尼黑皮革厂的父亲、兄弟或者朋友，或者干脆就是他本人，向你道歉说他没有得到把钱给你的指令。这我相信。他说得对，你应该去恳求赫尔佐克先生或者诺克与希德尔银行，继续借你一小笔贷款，就像我一贯做的那样。因为哈格瑙尔先生没给他们异地使用这笔贷款的指令 [18]，生意人只按字面指令办事。但在你的恳求下，他可以为你这么做。只是你那么自然、那么无所谓地跟我说了这件意外的事，就好像我有成箱成箱的钱，仿佛这件事能让我觉得即使眼下拿不到钱也没那么可怕。我就不浪费时间跟你细讲我们现在的处境了，你心知肚明，妈妈也一样。在我20号的信里，我已经把所有主要债款列出来了，尽管还是忘了有一批东西的钱我们还没付给哈格瑙尔，但目前我们没有欠他钱。你上一封信最让我惊讶的是，你冷不丁地跟我说起这件事，之前却丝毫未提。之前的信里只是说，比起奉承，钱才是旅行中更必要的好东西，因为你们那时就知道你们的经济状况很糟糕。可你们没有透露一点点消息，我那时也没有料到这一切。我本打算硬着头皮去解决异地使用贷款指令这件事，如果施马尔茨先生一直这么好说话的话。如果是这样该有多好！我请你从我的角度好好想一想，从奥格斯堡你写信告诉我，你们最多花了27弗罗林。现在我来算笔账，如果你们花了30弗罗林，那么就还剩170弗罗林。如果途经瓦勒斯基泰因去曼海姆的傻旅行花了70弗罗林，那么你们手里应该还剩下100弗罗林。如果这段旅途花费了更多，剩下的钱是不是就应该不够旅行去美因茨了？但等到了曼海姆，你们离法兰克福就近了，必要的时候可以用你第二封贷款信用证从法兰克福的博隆加罗先生那里取点钱。你们只要随便去问一个跟博隆加罗有来往的美因茨生意人，他就会负责把信用证寄给博隆加罗先生，然后拿到你们要的钱。

这难道不比待在曼海姆毫无好处地挥霍你们的钱更明智吗，因为这些钱可能够你们做一次花费15或者16弗罗林的旅行。到沃尔姆斯只要1.25站，到奥彭海姆要2站，到美因茨只要1站。因此总共只有4.25站。如果你们到了美因茨，钱已经剩得不多或者没钱了，那里也有熟

人可以帮助你们。没有绅士会为口袋里没有一分钱但可以出示贷款信用证而感到羞愧。即使在最富有最重要的人物身上也可能发生这种事。旅行的一大原则就是，只要情况允许，就只随身携带必要的钱财。我一直盲目谈论着美因茨，只是出于想当然的猜测，因为从你们之前的信中，我没能有荣幸得知你们打算去哪里旅行，直到最后一刻你才从奥格斯堡给我写了信：明天我们要去瓦勒斯泰因。斯坦因先生写信告诉我，他们星期天七点半动身去了瓦勒斯泰因和曼海姆。这种事情应该提前写信告诉我，因为我有时候能做些有用的准备，给你一些提醒。就像我之前那么煞费苦心地给法兰克福的奥托先生和普法伊尔先生写信一样。当然，你们的旅行跟我没关系！不是吗？你们当然还可以从曼海姆走一条完全不一样的路，你们可以先去维尔茨堡，再从那儿经过马克伽芬去达姆斯塔特，最后到法兰克福-美因茨。但我怎么能猜中你们的想法呢，怎么能给你们建议呢，因为你们从来也没征求过我的建议。根据你的来信，我也不知道曼海姆的事情如何了，你在信上写了有机会和选帝侯 [19] 亲密交谈，我忍不住猜想你是否打算在那里留一段时间。此外，你的意见、态度、打算等，所有这一切都应该及时且如实地向我报告，因为即使在最顺利的情况下，收到并回复一封信也要12天。即便是这一点你也没有动脑子想想，竟然在16号的那封信里告诉我，我可以继续往曼海姆给你写信，而你最快也要12天以后，也就是28号才能收到。这期间赫尔佐克先生早就回复了我的信，告诉我你将动身去旅行。但直到21号也就是星期五，我才收到你的来信，作为我和你母亲结婚纪念日当天的礼物，因此我24号之前都不能回复你。要到12月1号或2号，你才会读到这封信，天知道你那时在哪里。你们两个知道我很清楚旅行中有多少额外开销，尤其当人们太慷慨或者太友善的时候，花钱会怎样快得如流水。我亲爱的妻子还很自豪地说她会早起，不磨磨蹭蹭，麻利又省钱地安排一切。在慕尼黑黑待了16天，在奥格斯堡待了14天，按照你16号信里说的，接下来将要在曼海姆待17天，再加上等待奥格斯堡回复的时间，也就是3周。这简直就像巫术。你们已经走了8周，也就是2个月了，现在已经到曼海姆了？这真是难以理解的飞速！我们当时去英国的时候，在慕尼黑黑待了9天，拜访了选帝侯和克莱门特公爵，因为我们必须等待恩赐的礼物。之后我们在奥格斯堡待了15天，在那里演了3场音乐会，也就是6月28号、6月30号和7月4号。6月9号我们从萨尔茨堡动身，由于必须在因河畔瓦瑟堡做马车的新轮子，所以12号才到慕尼黑。尽管我们也在乌尔姆、路德维希堡和布鲁萨尔逗留了些许，但13号也就到了施韦青根。所以你们看到了，你们那些又长又没有必要的各处逗留把一切都搞砸了，公认的金秋就这么过去了，而直到现在你们还在做散心之旅，把时间都花在了娱乐消遣上面。现在好了，糟糕的暴风雨，短暂的白天，最冷的时候已经来了，还有更多更糟糕的天气在后面。你们的目的地现在看起来既昂贵又遥远。

你不能一整个冬天都在旅行，你的逗留地必须是一个大城市，人多，有赚钱的希望和机会。像这样的地方上哪儿去找呢？只有巴黎。但在巴黎就完全是另一种生活方式，另一种思考方式了-你必须保持注意力高度集中，每天琢磨赚钱的途径，练就各种繁文缛节以讨好上层阶级。关于这些我会在下一封信中细说。为了让你更快到达巴黎，下次我会说说我关于另一条旅行路线的想法，它和之前说的完全不一样，但值得一试-也就是从科布伦茨到特里尔、卢森堡、色当，曾经和瓦勒尔先生一起拜访过我们的齐根哈根先生在色当有个手绢厂，他人可能现在就在那里。然后是勒泰勒、兰斯、苏瓦松，再到巴黎。请你注意，从巴黎到勒泰勒一共有22个法国站点。从勒泰勒到色当很近，到卢森堡也不远，而特里尔就在卢森堡边上。卢森堡是一个气势恢宏的要塞，那里会有很多军官。兰斯和苏瓦松都是大城市。在这些地方赚回一些旅行费用还是比较容易的，因为艺术大师很少造访这些地方。相比之下，从布鲁塞尔到巴黎要经过34站，将花费我们6匹马20路易斯，而且赚不到一分钱。因为从科布伦茨到布鲁塞尔没什么可做的，除了或许能拜访柯尼赛格选帝侯。也许这也不错？布鲁塞尔有什么呢？

在此期间，无论你选择哪条路线，都要拿到一些去巴黎的推荐信，谁写的不重要，商人、官员等都可以。你是否知道还有没有法国大使或者法国人在美因茨或科布伦茨？我觉得是没有。你现在连一封推荐信都还没有，而我有很多封。为了能立刻获得庇护，建立起关系网，你绝对需要这些推荐信。这样的旅行一点儿乐趣都谈不上，你还没有经历过。一个人脑子里必须想着其他更重要的事情，而不是只会玩愚蠢的把戏。你必须一直考虑上百件事情，不然就会突然陷入困境，一分钱都没有。没有了钱，你也就不再有朋友，即使你免费教了上百节课，即使你写奏鸣曲，即使每晚10点到12点跟朋友鬼混，而不去做重要的事情。再去问问贷款的事！所有的消遣都可以停止了，所有的嬉皮笑脸眼下也都可以收起来了。我绝不是责怪你通过友善的举动和坎纳比希一家建立关系，这做得很好。但是你应该把晚上的一些闲散时间献给如此牵挂你的父亲，不要只给他一封匆忙写就的大杂烩，而是写一份有条有理的可信的报告，比如写写你们的旅行花费，你们还剩下多少钱，未来的旅程计划以及你在曼海姆的打算，等等。这些都应该事无巨细地写下来，并且征求我的建议。我希望你能够明智地看到这一点，如果不是你可怜的老父亲，谁会来最终承担这一切呢？正如前面所说，我21号收到了你的信，在今天之前都没时间回复。昨天23号，我向三位一体的上帝忏悔，满含泪水地为你们祈祷全能天主的庇佑。下午有一场卡耶坦·安特雷特举办的射击练习，我得了一等奖。布林格先生向你们问好，你的信也让他有点儿惊讶。我觉得，在目前这个严肃的情况下，他不大高兴你关于公共债务的玩笑。五点半我还去了哈格瑙尔先生那里，请求他今天就给奥格斯堡那边写

信，如果诺克与希德尔银行没通知他已向你汇款的话。今天早晨我再次去了店里跟哈格瑙尔的儿子约瑟夫先生聊天。我发现他们虽然从诺克与希德尔银行那里收到了信，但没看到上面有关于你的消息。他承诺我今天写信去问问。现在我已经把我能做的都做了，只希望你在此期间已收到了一些钱。直到诺克与希德尔银行知道你已拿到了多少钱，他们才会通知我。请注意，拿钱的时候最好不要接受弗罗林而是接受当地货币，比如金路易或者卡罗林等。现在我已经把压在心头的事情都说完了，这些都是来自上帝的真理。你会知道的，像这样依靠不稳定的经济收入去旅行毫无乐趣可言。但无论如何，你一定要虔诚地向天主祈求健康，请求他在坏人面前庇护你。此外要通过所有你知道的方式挣钱，同时省吃俭用。对于以后再也不会见到的旅伴，我总是倾向于少给点钱，宁愿他在背后说我小气，也不愿给了他很多钱，他还在背后为此嘲笑我。纸已经写不下了，而且我眼睛也累了。

我和南妮儿 [20] 希望你们身体健康，真心吻你们一百万次，我是你们的老丈夫，老父亲，注意——不是你们的儿子

莫扎特

希望你们收到了我20号的信，我在上面写了你可以给巴黎的格林男爵写信，也应该给慕尼黑的基姆湖侯爵写信。下一封信我会把去巴黎的所有沿途站点和我的意见都写下来，再附上一份我们在巴黎的旧友名单。再见。

[18] 这件事的前因如下：哈格瑙尔在奥格斯堡的诺克与希德尔银行贷给莫扎特一笔钱，但是没授权这家银行异地使用这笔钱。因此赫尔佐克的银行，即诺克与希德尔银行，只给了莫扎特一封致施马尔茨先生（曼海姆）的推荐信，而非可贷出钱款的贷款信用证。

[19] 选帝侯是德国历史上一种特殊现象，指代那些拥有选举“罗马人的皇帝”权利的诸侯。此制度严重削弱了皇权，加深了政治分裂。-编者注

沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特 致父亲利奥波德·莫扎特（萨尔茨堡）

曼海姆，1777年11月29日

我亲爱的父亲！

今天上午我收到了您24号的来信，依我看来，面对突如其来的好运或歹运，您没能做到处之泰然。到目前为止，事实证明我们一家四口从来没有特别幸运但也没有特别不幸，为此我感谢天主。但您对我妈妈如此一番责备，实在不公平。我们没有任何不必要的花销，至于旅途中的必要开支，您知道得很清楚，比我们都清楚。我们在慕尼黑待了那么久，除了我自己不能怪任何人。如果我是一个人出来的话，我一定干脆就留在那里了。至于说我们为什么在奥格斯堡待了14天？我不禁怀疑，您大概没收到我从奥格斯堡寄出的信？我本来想举办一场音乐会。但他们让我失望了，这时就已经过去了8天。我决定无论如何得动身离开了，他们却不让我走，他们希望我能举办一场音乐会，我希望他们求我，然后他们这么做了，我便办了音乐会。这就是您说的14天。为什么我们直接就去了曼海姆？这个问题我在上一封信里已经回答了。至于我们为什么还在这里？您真的认为我没有任何正当理由留在这里吗？但是我可以告诉您，我的父亲……好，您的确应该知道原因和整件事情的来龙去脉。但是上帝做证，我现在并不想说这件事，因为我今天没法说出一丁点儿细节，只能告诉您一些不确定的消息。以我对您的了解，这只会让您徒增担心、忧虑，而这正是我一直以来努力避免的。但是如果您把这归结于我的疏忽、轻率和懒惰，那我只能谢谢您对我的评价。我打心里感到遗憾，因为您根本不了解我，不了解您的儿子。

我并不是无忧无虑，我只是准备好承受一切情况。因此，只要无损于我的荣誉和莫扎特这个好名声，我就可以耐心等待并忍受一切。因为如果必须如此，那也只好顺其自然了。但我现在就请您不要总是过早地高兴或苦恼，因为无论发生什么事，只要我们身体健康，就一切都好。因为幸福只存在于我们的想象之中。上个星期四即18号，也就是圣伊丽莎白瞻礼日 [21] 的前一天上午，我去拜访了萨维奥利伯爵，问他选帝侯泰奥多尔是否可以让我今年冬天留在曼海姆，因为我想给小王子上课。他回答道：“好，我会向选帝侯提议的，如果这件事取决于我的话，那一定没问题。”下午我去了坎纳比希那儿，因为拜访伯爵是他向我建议的，所以他立刻就问我是否去过了。我就把情

况都跟他说了。他说：“我非常希望您能留下来和我们一起过这个冬天，但我更希望您能在这里有份适合您的长久职位。”我回答说：“没什么能比在您这里安顿下来更好了，但我真的不知道有没有可能长留下来。您已经有两个乐长了。我不知道我能做些什么，我不想地位还不如福格勒 [22] ！”“这是不会的，”他说，“这里没有一个乐手在乐长之下，更不会在乐团负责人之下。选帝侯可以任命您为室内乐作曲家。您再等等，我会和萨维奥利伯爵谈谈这件事。”星期四举行了一场盛大的音乐会。伯爵一看到我就请我见谅，他还没和选帝侯说那件事，因为现在仍在选帝侯命名日庆典期间。等庆典一结束，也就是下周一，他一定和选帝侯说这件事。然后我又等了3天，什么消息也没等到。当我去找他询问时，他说：“我的好莫扎特先生，昨天是星期五，今天是狩猎日，所以我不可能问选帝侯这件事，但明天这个时候我肯定会给您一个答复。”我请求他不要忘记了。说实话，我离开的时候相当生气，于是决定把我最简单的6首关于J.C.费舍尔小步舞曲的变奏曲 [23] 呈现给年轻伯爵（我就是为了这个目的才把谱子重新誊抄了1份），以便有机会亲自与选帝侯交谈。您无法想象那位家庭女教师见到我来访有多高兴，礼数周全地接待了我。当我拿出变奏曲乐谱，并告诉她这是为伯爵而创作的曲子时，她说：“啊！您太好了。不过您是否也为伯爵夫人写点什么了？”“还没有，”我说，“但如果我在这里待得够久，有时间写点什么的话，我自然会的。”“顺便跟您道贺一句，”她说，“我非常高兴您能留在这里过冬。”“我？我还不知道这件事！”“真令人吃惊。太奇怪了！选帝侯最近这么亲口跟我说的。‘顺便一提，’他说，‘莫扎特整个冬天都留在这里。’”好了，如果他真的这么亲口说了，那就是说唯一可以说这句话的人已经同意了，如果没有选帝侯的许可，我当然不能留在这里。然后我就把整件事情都告诉了那位家庭女教师。我们商量好第二天（也就是今天）我4点钟过去，给伯爵夫人带点乐谱。她会在我来之前和选帝侯说话，这样我就一定能见到他。我今天去了，但他没来。明天我会再去一次。我为伯爵夫人写了一个回旋曲。现在您说说看，我没有正当理由留在这里等待结果吗？我应该现在就动身离开这个有重大进展的地方吗？我现在可是有机会能与选帝侯本人交谈。我想这个冬天我很可能会在这里度过了，因为选帝侯喜欢我，欣赏我，并且知道我能做些什么。我希望下一封信能给您带来好消息。我再次请您不要过早高兴或是苦恼，并且不要向任何人透露这件事，除了布林格先生和姐姐。这里我寄给姐姐我为坎纳比希夫人写的奏鸣曲 [24] 快板和行板乐谱。回旋曲下回再寄，不然这次的信就太厚了。您必须保留原件。您可以以每张6分钱的价钱让别人誊抄这些乐谱，而我在这儿得花每张24分。您不觉得这很贵吗？再见了！吻您的双手十万次，真心拥抱我的姐姐。

我是您听话的儿子

沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特

您可能已经听过这首奏鸣曲的一些片段了。因为这首曲子在坎纳比希那里每天至少被吹拉弹唱演奏三遍！不过当然都是低声演奏的。

玛丽亚·安娜·莫扎特补充：

我亲爱的丈夫，我吻你和南妮儿一千次，请你向所有朋友转达我们的祝福。我下次再多写一点儿，现在已经是夜里12点了，再见。

我依旧是你忠实的妻子

利奥波德·莫扎特 致儿子沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特（曼海姆）

萨尔茨堡，1777年12月4日

我亲爱的妻子，亲爱的儿子！

关于上封信里你们所说的必须等待的事情，我没有任何反对意见。至于你们旅行中那些违背我的意见，给我们带来不利甚至造成明显损害的事情，也没什么好说的了，因为这些都过去了，没法改变了。只是你，我的儿子，竟然写信跟我说，一切打算都是多余的，没有任何用，因为我们不知道究竟会发生什么。这种话绝对是不经思考，轻率写下的。没有一个基督徒，不，我应该说没有一个理智的人会否认，一切都必将遵循天主的意志发生。但这样就能得出结论说，我们应该闭着眼睛行动，无忧无虑地活着，不为未来做打算，只等着事情降临头顶吗？难道天主和这个理性的世界不曾要求过我们，不管做什么，都应该用人类的理智尽量全面地考虑后果，并且尽力为未来做准备吗？如果这些对我们的一切行为来说都是必要的，那考虑到我们目前的处境，对于一场旅行来说，周全考虑难道不是更有必要吗？或者你还没经历过这种后果？光是采取行动让选帝侯这个冬天把你留在那里，对你来说就已经够了吗？难道你不必……难道你不该早点考虑可以采取的计划，以防事情进展不顺利吗？难道你不该早点告诉我这件事，听听我的意见吗？现在好了，现在你终于写信了。可你写了什么？“如果我们无论如何要动身离开这里，那我们就直接去魏尔堡找拿骚-魏尔堡公主（你为她在荷兰写了奏鸣曲 [25] 等）。”还有“只要那里官员的饭菜合我们口味，我们就留下来。”这是何等的趣闻！这种语言，和你之前的那些信一样，只有一个绝望的人才会这么说话，用以安慰自己和我。不过你还有希望得到6个金路易，这些钱会让一切都好转起来。现在我的问题是，你是否真的确定公主在那里？她不会无缘无故地去那里，因为她丈夫在管理军队，目前在海牙。你难道不应该早点告诉我这件事吗？另一个问题是，你不觉得先去美因茨，再从那里经过法兰克福去魏尔堡更好吗？毕竟，从曼海姆去魏尔堡的路线会经过法兰克福，而且因为你不会一直在魏尔堡待着，去美因茨的路又会再次经过法兰克福。但是如果你先去美因茨再去魏尔堡，那你也许可以抄一条经过拿骚的近路从魏尔堡到科布伦茨。或者你想绕开美因茨吗？我们在那里有那么多好朋友。那时候即使我们没有去拜访生病的选帝侯，也演了3场音乐会，赚了200弗罗林。告诉我

吧，我亲爱的儿子，现在这些都是没必要的打算吗？你亲爱的好妈妈告诉我，她之后会为你们的开支勤快地记账。很好！详细的账单我不要求，也从没想过要这么一份。但是你们在到达奥格斯堡的时候就应该写信给我，告诉我你们在慕尼黑的阿尔贝特那里花了多少钱，在路途上花了多少钱，现在还剩下多少多少钱。你从奥格斯堡写信告诉我，加上音乐会的收入之后，你们总计大概花了20弗罗林。在你从曼海姆寄来的第二封信里，你至少应该告诉我，这段路途花了你们多少多少数目，你们现在还剩下……这样我就能及时做好准备。我为你准备一份贷款信用证寄到奥格斯堡也是没必要的打算吗？如果你不给我的故交赫尔佐克先生一份信用证，你真的认为他会因为你从曼海姆寄去的那些信给你汇钱吗？想都不要想！他最有可能做的事情是先来问我的意见。为什么只有当你们陷入困境里，我才能知道你们需要钱？你想等等看选帝侯会给你什么不是吗？也许你是为了不给我添堵，但事实上只有当你向我及时如实地报告一切，才能给我少添点堵，因为我比你们俩都清楚，在这样的旅行中，一个人必须怎样为一切可能的状况做好准备，才不至于哪天就陷入意想不到的可怕窘境。在这种时刻，所有的朋友都会消失！一个人必须快乐，必须享受生活！但是一个人也必须花时间去慎重考虑，这一点必须是你旅行过程中的头等大事，哪一天都不能让自己处于不利境地。日子一天天过去了，不过无论如何现在旅行的时间还很短，但这些在旅馆里度过的日子都花费不菲。公正的上帝啊！你让我现在不要为未来打算，哪怕我已经因为你们欠了450弗罗林的债。你也许觉得跟我说上百个愚蠢的笑话，就能给我带来好心情。我很高兴你心态很好，但是如果你能用理性写下你去魏尔堡的原因，你现在的处境，以及你接下来怎么打算的，最重要的是如果你能在任何情况下都听取我的意见，而不是写下按字母排序的问候语 [26]，我会更加开心。这些都能在邮寄日之前做完，因为你不可能现在才有了这个主意，也不可能自己就知道了公主在那里，如果没人给你提个醒的话。总之一句话！这些都不是多余的打算，因为只有当一个人脑子里同时有两三个计划，并事先做出必要的准备，才能保证如果一个计划失败了，还可以毫不耽搁地采取另一个。不这么做的人，就是一个不理性的人，一个轻率的人。在今天这个世界，这样的人不管有多聪明，也总是会落于人后，甚至会变得很不幸，因为他总是被谄媚者、小人或嫉妒者所愚弄。注意到这一点吧，我的儿子，如果能在1000人中发现一个人可以不图私利跟你做真正的朋友，那就是这个世界最大的奇迹。好好研究一下那些自称是你朋友，或者炫耀他是你朋友的人，你就会知道他们为什么跟你交往。如果他们在你身上没有任何好处可捞，那他们就会去找下一个对他们有用的人当朋友。或者还有一种情况，他们跟你做朋友，是为了通过抬举你来惹恼第三个人。如果在曼海姆最后毫无结果，你们就要计划去美因茨，法兰克福，魏尔堡，科布伦茨等地。你们必须始终尽量寻找彼此相邻

的地方，这样的话，可能的情况下，做个短途旅行，就可以很快再到一个有收入来源的地方。如果这封信寄到曼海姆的时候，你们已经去了魏尔堡，那我也无能为力了。但如果你们还在曼海姆，并且必须动身离开，妈妈会在地图上发现你们的最佳路线是先去美因茨，不然你们就会错过美因茨或者折回去一段路。在魏尔堡你们得记住，那里找不到一个天主教教堂，因为那里所有人都是新教徒或者加尔文教徒。我希望你们在那里不要逗留太久。

谁告诉你们从维尔茨堡到曼海姆必须穿过施佩萨尔特森林，就因为在这个森林在富尔达和法兰克福之间的阿沙芬堡？这估计又是贝克先生骗你们的。阿沙芬堡和维尔茨堡之间相距10里路。可能去曼海姆的时候，人们得花几个小时从右边穿过森林。但是维尔茨堡附近什么都没有，无论你们是否去过。

注意：关于从魏尔堡到科布伦茨的旅程，我还有一个新发现，就是，这条路穿过乡间，会比从美因茨去科布伦茨的路要安全，那条路太靠近莱茵河了。我现在想听听你们接下来的打算，我从来没有想到，我亲爱的妻子竟然没有及时地向我报告旅行的精确花销，因为我已经要过两次阿尔贝特那里的账单了，并且你们也应该告诉我在拉姆旅馆那里花费了多少。但是你们的所有开销我目前都一无所知。我请妈妈一定要就这一点给我写一封机密信，我不要啰里啰唆的解释，但是我得看到房东的账单，看看他们是怎么招待你们的，所有钱都花在了哪里。现在我们必须认真严肃考虑一下怎么让你们摆脱眼下的处境，怎样尽可能经济地旅行，并且做出合理准备，但是所有的坏消息和好消息你们都必须立刻让我知道。你们一定不能卖了马车。

愿天主保佑你们和我，南妮儿和我吻你们一亿次，我是你们的丈夫和老父亲

莫扎特

切尔宁伯爵让我转达他对你们的问候。有传言说大主教不仅要送海登去意大利 [27]，而且还想送他和特林德尔去博尔扎诺。但是特林德尔先生婉拒了。我的好沃尔夫冈，我请你考虑周全一切，不要总是只给我写已经过去了的事情。不然我们两个都不开心。

利奥波德·莫扎特 致儿子沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特（曼海姆）

萨尔茨堡，1778年2月5日

我亲爱的儿子！

按我的推测，这应该是你在曼海姆能收到的最后一封信了，所以这封信是单独写给你的。尽管你可能会想到，要和你分离得更远这件事对我来说多么难以接受，但是你还是不可能对我心头的沉重感同身受。如果你愿意花时间回忆一下，在你们娇嫩的少年时代，我带着你们两个孩子一起做了些什么，你就不会指责我胆怯，而是会像其他人一样，承认我是个男人，并且是一个一直敢于冒险的男人。只是我做事总是尽量地三思而后行，因为人不能阻止意外发生，只有上帝能预见未来。当然，直到现在我们既算不上幸福也算不上悲哀，感谢天主，让我们走了一条平平安安的中间道路。我们尽自己所能来让你幸福，也希望通过你让我们更幸福，至少让你的人生有一个坚实的根基。但是我们的命运事与愿违。正如你所知，我们的最后一步让我深陷泥潭，你知道，现在我大概欠了700弗罗林的债款，以我微薄的月俸，我不知道现在该怎么养活自己、妈妈和你姐姐。因为我活到现在都没指望过从大主教那里拿到更多的钱。现在你一定一清二楚了，你年迈的双亲，打心里爱着你的姐姐，我们未来的命运都在你一个人手里。从你们出生起，或者说更早，打从我结婚起，我就无比艰难地靠着20弗罗林的固定月俸度日，一点一点供养妻子和7个孩子，2个仆人还有外婆，此外还要支付分娩、葬礼和看病费用。如果你考虑到了这些，你就会相信，我不仅从来没有花过一分钱让自己有一点点享受，而且因为没有得到天主的特别眷顾，尽管我如此周全打算，如此拼命，还是从未摆脱掉负债的生活。但即便如此，我也从未像现在这样债台高筑。我把我所有的时间都献给了你们两个，只希望确保你们能够养活自己，让我拥有一个安宁的晚年，能够对你们的教育问心无愧，不用操太远的心，只需关心我自己的灵魂救赎，平静地迎接死亡。但是命数和天主的意志让我现在再次接受这份讨厌的上课工作，并且是在这样一个地方-付出那么艰辛的努力，收入却如此微薄，以至于每个月都挣不够足以养活自己和家庭的钱。尽管如此，我还是会保持心情愉快，自我宽慰，为了至少能获得一点儿微薄的收入。我亲爱的沃尔夫冈，我现在不但不会不信任你，一点儿也不，相反，我完全信赖你并且希望你能孝顺。这一切都取决于你必然具备的理智，只要

你愿意倾听它，即使在幸福的时刻也要倾听它。最后这点不能强求。但你一定要用理智考虑一切，我希望也请求你这么做。

你现在要进入一个完全不一样的世界了：你千万不要认为我说巴黎很危险是出于偏见，相反，根据我个人的经验，我没有任何理由认为巴黎危险。但我那时的处境和你现在的处境天差地别。我们当时住在一位使臣家里，第二次是在一个独立的房子里。我那时人到中年，你们还是孩子，我避免一切社交，尤其避免和我们这个行业的人熟识。你记得我在意大利也是这么做的。我只和上层阶级结识、交往，其中都是中年人，我不和年轻人结识，即使他们也属于顶级阶层。我不常邀请任何人来家里做客，以便保持自己的自由，我一直认为在我方便的时候去拜访别人是更加明智的做法。如果我不喜欢那个人，或者我有工作和别的安排，我就可以直接离开。但如果别人来拜访我，并且举止粗鲁，我就不知道该怎么摆脱他们了。即使是一个并不讨厌的人，也总是会影响我去做重要的工作。你还是个22岁的年轻人，没有老年人的那种严肃态度，无法阻止别人来结识你，好把你带入他的社交圈，慢慢利用你。这样的人可以来自任何阶层，可能是冒险家、吹牛大王或者骗子，可能是个年轻人也可能是个年纪大的。一个人会不知不觉地进入这样的圈套，然后就无法抽身了。至于女人的问题，我其实一点儿也不想去谈，因为这需要极度的克制和理智，天性本身就是我们的敌人。一个人如果没有运用他的全部理智去进行必要的克制，之后就算再怎么努力想走出这个迷宫也是徒劳。这种悲剧常常会以死亡收场。我们经常多么愚蠢地被起初并不起眼的笑料、阿谀者和小丑蒙骗，一旦后来理智察觉到了，我们就会对此十分难为情。你可能已经尝到了一些苦头。我不想责备你。我知道你不仅把我当作父亲来爱，也把我当作一位最值得信赖的朋友来爱。现在你看到了，我们的幸与不幸，我的后半生甚至是我将来临的死亡，都放在了你的手里，就像放在上帝手里一样。如果我了解你的话，我当然只希望你快乐，你不在的日子里，这个心愿就能宽慰我，因为我已经被剥夺了属于父亲的幸福，无法听你说话、看到你，也不能拥抱你。像一个虔诚的天主教徒那样生活吧！爱并敬畏天主，热忱且虔诚地向他祈祷，过基督徒应该过的生活。这样就算我再也见不到你了，我临死之时也不会忧惧不安。

真心给你来自父亲的祝福，我至死都是你忠实的父亲和最可靠的朋友

利奥波德·莫扎特

这里是我们在巴黎的熟人名单。他们都会很期待见到你。

给妻子（补写在信封上）

我亲爱的妻子！

因为你们会在11号或者12号收到这封信，我不得不怀疑沃尔夫冈在曼海姆是否还能再收到一封信。通过这段附记，我向他道别！我满含泪水写下这些话。南妮儿亲吻她亲爱的兄弟沃尔夫冈一百万次。她本来要在我的信上再写点什么来道别，但信已经写得太满了，而且我不能让她读这封信。我们请沃尔夫冈照顾好自己的身体，保持家里的饮食习惯，不然他一到巴黎就会脸色苍白。所有的辛辣食物对他的健康都有害。我希望他带上那本大拉丁语祈祷书，上面找得到圣母小日课的所有赞美诗。如果他想在曼海姆买德语版的圣母小日课，以便能用德语读，那他必须找遍所有版本。因为拉丁语的赞美诗很难理解，如果有德语版的在手边会好一点儿。宗教音乐会也会演出模仿对位法赞美诗 [28]，他可以通过这种方式来获得巨大声誉。也许他还能在那里演出他的《主之仁慈》 [29]。歌剧歌手不来萨尔茨堡了，他们要去施特劳宾取悦奥地利官员。大主教再次要求长官举行9场舞会，昨天是第1场，有30个人出席。舞会一直开到1点半，但9点半前都没有人来，直到10点钟才有人开始跳舞。我们吃了只阉鸡，喝了6大杯葡萄酒。我希望你们收到了誊抄好的两首四手联弹奏鸣曲 [30]，费舍尔变奏曲和回旋曲 [31]，都打包在了一个信封里。阿德加瑟先生的灵魂在死后再也找不到好的风箱师傅了。因为教堂的老风箱师，80岁的托马斯也随他而去了。最近最大的新闻是，巴利桑尼夫人为她可敬的老丈夫不可思议地争风吃醋，就因为他和儿子凯科好几个晚上都去了英俊的弗赖绍夫先生家里演出，而他有一个比她更漂亮但头脑简单的妻子。这真是难以置信的小题大做。再见。我们吻你们千百万次。

莫扎特

所有人都向你们致以最美好的祝福，尤其是布林格先生，警官中士克萊斯先生和韦伯·莫克的妻子等人。

[28] 对位法采用的方法有两种，即模仿与对比，赋格曲是用模仿方法创作的最高级形式。

[29] 宗教音乐《主之仁慈》，K.222/205a。

[30] 降B大调四手联弹钢琴奏鸣曲，K.358/186c；D大调四手联弹钢琴奏鸣曲，K.381/123a。

[31] 指的是《C大调第七号钢琴奏鸣曲》最后一个乐章，K.309/284b。

沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特 致父亲利奥波德·莫扎特（萨尔茨堡）

曼海姆，1778年7月3日

先生

我亲爱的父亲！

我有一个非常悲伤痛苦的消息要告诉您，这也是我直到现在才回复您上个月11号那封信的原因。

亲爱的妈妈病得很厉害，她像以往那样放过血了，这确实很有必要，这之后她状态很不错。但几天后她就开始抱怨打寒战，同时还发烧，然后腹泻、头痛也来了。起初我们只使用我们的家庭药方-抗痉挛药粉。我们本来也想用黑色药粉，但手边没有，这里也买不到，连抗癫痫药粉这个名字都没人知道。但妈妈的情况越来越糟，几乎说不了话，也失去了听力，以至于我们不得不对她大喊大叫，因此格林男爵派他的医生来看她。她非常虚弱，仍然发着烧，神志不清。医生让我对她抱有希望，但我实在无法太乐观。这么多天以来，我日夜徘徊在恐惧和希望之间，但我已完全皈依天主的意志，并希望您和亲爱的姐姐也能如此。不然还有什么别的方法能让我们保持平静呢？我是说，相对平静一点儿，因为我们不可能完全保持平静。这样一来，无论结果如何，我心里都会感到安慰，因为我知道天主会为我们做出最好的安排，即使是那些违背我们意愿的事情，也一样是为了我们好。因为我相信（我不会改变这个想法），没有哪个医生、个人，也没有什么不幸、意外真的可以给予或夺走一个人的生命。只有上帝可以做到。那些只是他最常使用的工具，但并不是全部。毕竟我们有时会看到有的人昏厥、倒下，一会儿就死了。当我们的时辰来临时，一切手段都是徒劳的，这些手段与其说阻止死亡不如说是加快了死亡。我们的亡友黑夫纳已经印证了这一点！我说这些并不意味着妈妈已经没希望了，马上或者一定会死。她可以重新恢复健康，但只有当主也这么希望之时才能如此。在尽力为亲爱的妈妈向主祈求健康和生命之后，我喜欢这样想想来自我安慰，因为这真的会让我感到更加开朗、平静和宽慰。您很容易能想到我多么需要这些！但现在说说别的吧。让我们抛开这些悲伤的想法，我们仍然要抱有希望，但不要太多；我们要信赖上帝，自我宽慰-如果这是全能之主的意志，那一切安排都是好的，因为他最了解什么有利于我们暂时的福分，什么有助于我们永恒的福

祉和救赎。

我为宗教音乐会的开幕写了一部交响曲 [32]，它在基督圣体节 [33] 上演时受到了热烈欢迎。我还听说在《欧洲信使报》(Courrier de l'Europe) 上有一篇相关报道，可见人们多么喜欢它。排演的时候我非常害怕，因为我这辈子还没听到过比这更糟糕的演奏。您无法想象他们如何接连两次敷衍、拉锯似的演奏这首曲子。我当时真的害怕极了。我很想再排演一次，但是因为要排演的曲目那么多，最后就没有时间了。所以我只好惴惴不安，怀着不满和气愤的心情上床睡觉。第二天我决定不去音乐会演出了。但是傍晚时天气很好，我最终还是下定决心过去，并打定主意，如果一切还像排演时那么糟糕，我就走到乐团里，把小提琴从首席小提琴手拉乌斯先生的手里夺过来，自己亲自来指挥。我向上帝祈祷一切可以顺利进行，因为这一切都是为了他的荣耀光辉。看吧，交响曲开始了，拉夫 [34] 站在我旁边。在第一乐章快板的中间，有一段我知道一定会取悦听众的段落。他们果然都为之痴狂，掌声雷动。因为我写的时候就知道会产生什么样的效果，所以我在结尾处又弹了一遍这一段落。这时观众们开始齐喊“从头再奏”。他们也喜欢行板，但更喜欢最后的快板。我注意到这里演出的作品，所有的终曲快板都像开场快板一样，总是让所有乐器齐奏 [35]。于是我决定别出机杼，在开始的前八小节只让两把小提琴和钢琴弱奏，紧接着立刻是一段强音响奏。不出所料，听众们在钢琴弱奏部分发出嘘声要求安静，然后强音一响起来，他们就开始齐刷刷地鼓掌。我非常高兴，所以交响曲一演奏完毕，我就去皇宫里要了一份精美的冰激凌。然后如我所承诺的那样做了念珠祷告，之后就回家了，因为我总是在家时最开心，也最愿意待在家里。或者待在一个善良又可靠的德国人家里也行，只要他未婚时过着典范的基督徒生活，结婚后挚爱妻子并好好教育孩子。

现在我要说一条您可能已经知道的新闻。那个不信天主的头号流氓伏尔泰像狗一样，像一头畜生那样翘辫子了。这就是他的报应！您说得对，我们已经欠了特蕾泽5个季度的工资。您很早就看出来我不喜欢这里，原因很多，但是因为我现在人已经在这里，再去细说它们也没什么用。但这错不在我，永远都不会是我的过错，因为我愿意倾尽全力做到最好。好吧，上帝会安排好一切的！目前我脑子里盘算着一些事情，为此我每天都向天主祈祷，如果这也符合他的意志，那事情就会如愿发生的，如果不符合，我也不会不满意，因为至少我做了自己能做的。但如果一切如我所愿进展顺利，那您也必须尽您那份力，不然整件事情就无法圆满办成。凭您对我的爱，我相信您一定会尽力而为的。只是关于这件事，您现在不要做无谓的猜想。我早就求您给我这份恩典-在时机成熟前，不要催我说清楚一切想法。

至于歌剧，现在的情况是这样的，目前很难找到优秀的歌词。那

些老歌词是一流的，但不适合现代风格，新歌词又都没什么价值。歌词本来是法国人唯一能引以为傲的东西，现在却每况愈下，但在这里，歌词正是唯一必须出色的东西，因为法国人不理解音乐。现在我有两部咏叹调歌剧可以写，一个两幕剧，一个三幕剧。两幕剧是《亚历山德拉和罗克珊》（Alexandra et Roxane），但剧本作者目前还在乡下。三幕剧是从梅塔斯塔齐奥 [36] 《得摩丰》（Demofonte）翻译过来的，其中穿插着合唱和舞蹈，整体风格很适合法国舞台，但是这个剧本我至今还没能看到。

写信告诉我您在萨尔茨堡是否已买到施罗特的协奏曲，或者是胡尔曼德尔的奏鸣曲？我想买下它们寄给您。这两部作品都非常美。至于凡尔赛宫，它决不在我的考虑范围内。为此我也征求了格林男爵和其他好朋友的意见，他们都和我想得一样。薪水不多，但你却必须在那个地方煎熬6个月，什么额外收入都没有，最终白白埋没自己的才华。谁在巴黎为王室服务，谁就会被遗忘。但我想当一位管风琴师！我非常想要一个体面的工作，但只能是乐长，并且收入丰厚。

那么再见了！保重您的身体，信赖上帝，您就能得到安慰。我亲爱的妈妈现在在全能之主的手中。如果他仍要把她送还我们，如我们所愿，我们自然感恩不尽，但如果他要把她带去他身边，任凭我们怎样恐惧、担心或者绝望，都是无济于事的。还是让我们坚定地皈依上帝那神性的意志吧，相信这一切都是为了我们好，因为他不会无缘无故地做出安排。再见，最亲爱的爸爸！为了我，您要好好保重身体。我亲吻您的双手一千次，全心拥抱我的姐姐。

我是您听话的儿子

沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特 致父亲利奥波德·莫扎特（萨尔茨堡）

曼海姆，1778年7月9日

我希望您已经准备好坚强地接受这个最悲痛的消息。我上一封3号的信就让您做好心理准备，不要期待听到好消息。因为就在那一天，3号晚上的10点21分，妈妈安息主怀了。事实上，在我给您写信的时候，她已经在享受天堂之福了。一切都结束了。我是在那天夜里给您写信的，希望您和亲爱的姐姐能原谅我这小小的但十分必要的欺骗。因为想到你们定会和我一样伤心痛苦，我实在不忍心立刻告诉你们这个可怕的消息。但是我希望你们两个已经准备好了接受最坏的消息，愿你们在所有自然而适度的痛苦和哭泣过后，终能皈依天主的意志，尊崇他那不可探究、深不可测的全知神意。您不难想象我经受了些什么，需要多少勇气和坚强才能镇定地忍受一天天每况愈下的这一切。然而仁慈的上帝赐予了我这个恩典-痛苦我体尝够了，也哭够了，但是这些有什么用呢？我必须试着自我宽慰。亲爱的父亲，亲爱的姐姐，你们也要这样做！哭吧，尽情地痛哭，但最后你们要安慰好自己。不要忘记，全能的上帝已经决定了这件事，我们能做什么来反抗他呢？还是向主祈祷并感谢他的仁慈安排吧，因为妈妈是非常幸福地死去的。在那些伤心的时刻，我有三个聊以自慰的想法。一是完全信赖上帝并且皈依他的意志。二是妈妈那从容、美丽的死亡让我不禁想到她在那一瞬间变得多么幸福，也让我想到她现在不知道比我们幸福多少倍。那一瞬间我甚至希望可以和她一起走。这个愿望、这个渴望反过来成了我的第三个慰藉之源-我们不是永远失去了她，我们会再次见到她，并且会比在人世间更加幸福快乐地相聚在一起。只是我们不知道我们的时辰什么时候会到，但我一点都不为此焦虑。当天主决定了，我就服从他的安排。现在，他最神圣、圣洁的意志已经实现了。让我们为妈妈的灵魂虔诚祷告吧，然后就让我们继续前行，去面对其他事情。每件事情都有它自己的时辰。现在我在德皮奈夫人和格林先生家里写这封信，我目前住在这里，有一个漂亮的房间，窗外风景宜人。就眼下这个状况而言，我在这里称得上愉快了。如果能听到我亲爱的父亲和姐姐镇定而坚强地完全皈依上帝的意志，全心全意地信赖他，坚信他为我们做出了最好的安排，这对我来说将是莫大的帮助和安慰。我最亲爱的父亲，要保重身体！最亲爱的姐姐，你也要保重！你还不曾体尝过你弟弟的好心肠，因为他还没有机会展现这一

点。我的亲人，照顾好自己的身体，要记住你们还有一个儿子，一个兄弟，他会竭尽全力让你们幸福。同时他也知道，有一天你们将不再否定他那些必将带来荣耀的心愿和快乐 [37]，你们也会同样竭尽所能地使他幸福。噢！然后我们就尽可能地在人世间的平静、快乐地生活在一起。当天主最终决定了时辰，我们就在彼岸再次相聚，正是为了这个目的我们才被选中和创造出来。

您上一封6月29号的信我已经收到，知道你们两个都身体健康，我很高兴，感谢赞美主。读到您写的海登醉酒那段 [38]，我忍不住哈哈大笑。如果我在场的话，我一定会立刻在他耳边低语：“阿德加瑟。”这实在是个耻辱，这么能干的一个人竟然由于个人过错而无法履行职责，在这样一个为荣耀天主而设立的职位上犯下过错，而且是当着大主教和整个宫廷官员的面，教堂里都是人。这真的太可怕了。这也是我厌恶萨尔茨堡的主要原因之一。那些粗俗、无礼、放荡的宫廷乐师，没有一个诚实有教养的人可以和我们一起生活。真的，没人能接受与他们为伍，都会为他们感到羞耻。可能正是出于这个原因，音乐家在我们那儿既不受欢迎，也不受人尊重。如果他们能像曼海姆管弦乐团那样被组织起来该多好！那是一支被纪律主宰的乐团！指挥坎纳比希先生很有权威，所以一切事情都能被认真执行。坎纳比希是我见过的最棒的指挥，下属对他又爱又怕。他在整座城市都享有盛名，他的小兵们名声也很好。他们的行为举止自然十分不同，他们很有教养，衣着得体，不去酒馆，也不酗酒。但这些都与萨尔茨堡永远也做不到，除非大主教信任您或我，将管弦乐团交给我们全权掌管，这非常必要，不然一切都是徒劳。因为在萨尔茨堡，每个人都——或者不如说没有人——关心管弦乐团。如果要我接受这个职位，那就要让我在行动上完全的自由，宫廷音乐负责人不能在管弦乐团以及所有与乐团有关的事情上对我指手画脚。因为一位朝臣不能当乐长，但一位乐长可以是朝臣。顺便告诉您，选帝侯泰奥多尔现在又回到曼海姆了。坎纳比希夫人和坎纳比希本人都和我保持着通信。我担心管弦乐团要大大缩编，如果真是这样，那将是永远的遗憾，但如果不致如此，我就仍然会抱有希望。您知道，我不再要别的什么了，除了一个体面的工作、良好的声誉和可观的收入，无论在哪里，只要是在一个天主教国家里。您在整个事件中与施塔耳亨贝格伯爵巧妙周旋，简直就像尤利西斯一样 [39]。您只管按照您的打算进行下去吧，注意别让自己被蒙骗了。尤其是当您要与那只傲慢的蠢鹅谈话时，要更加警惕。我是知道她的，相信我，她绝对是个口蜜腹剑的人。这很正常，毕竟整件事情还处在悬而未决的状态。在我真正能够下定决心之前，还有许多条件要被许可。但即使一切都进展顺利，我也宁愿待在萨尔茨堡以外的任何地方。不过我也不太为之发愁，因为他们不大可能会准许我的所有要求，我要得太多了。但也不是完全不可能。如果一切都进展顺利，安排妥当，我会毫不犹豫地答应下来，哪怕只是为了享受和您一

我的朋友拉夫明天就离开了，但是他要途经布鲁塞尔去亚琛和水疗中心，然后再从那儿去曼海姆，等他一到就会立刻告诉我，因为我们想保持通信。他向您和姐姐致以问候，虽然他不认识您。您说您很久没听我谈及跟我学作曲的女学生了，的确如此，但我能对您说些什么呢？她永远不会成为作曲家；我所有的努力都是徒劳的，因为首先她愚蠢透顶，其次她懒惰透顶。关于歌剧的情况，我上封信回答过您。至于诺韦尔 [41] 的芭蕾舞，我只说过他可能会写一个新的舞剧，其中只有半场以芭蕾舞形式上演，我正是为这部分舞蹈写乐曲 [42]。也就是说，这部剧有六段是其他人写的，充满了可怕的法国陈腐气息，而交响曲和行列舞，大约有12段由我来创作。这个芭蕾舞剧目前已经上演了四次，大受欢迎。但我现在绝对什么都不写了，除非我事先知道我能得到什么。这个芭蕾舞剧音乐只是作为朋友送给诺韦尔的礼物。5月的最后一天，文德林先生离开了这里。如果我要见巴格男爵，那我必须有千里眼，因为他目前在伦敦，不在这儿。我是不是没有告诉您这些？您等着看吧，我以后一定会尽快回复您所有的信件。不过据说巴格男爵很快就会回来，我很高兴，原因很多，最重要的是在他家里总有机会认真排练。巴赫乐长很快也会来到这里，我觉得他会写一部歌剧。法国人就是蠢驴，永远都是。他们什么都不会，必须依靠外国人。我在宗教音乐会与皮钦尼 [43] 交谈过。无论我们什么时候偶然相遇，他对我都很有礼貌，我对他也是。除此之外我没有结交朋友，不管是和他，还是和其他作曲家。我明白我在做什么，他们也明白，这就够了。我的交响曲在宗教音乐会上获得了无与伦比的反响，这我也已经告诉您了。如果我受到委托要写一部歌剧，无疑会让我十分烦闷，但是我也不那么在意了，因为我已经习惯了，要是这该死的法语对音乐来说不那么可爱该多好！这很令人遗憾。相比之下，德国人则是神圣的。其次这些歌手-他们不配这个名字，因为他们不是在唱歌，而是用他们整个嗓子、鼻子和喉咙乱吼乱叫。为了下一个四句节，我要给宗教音乐会写一部法国清唱剧。指挥勒格罗先生 [44] 对我有很深的偏见。您必须知道，复活节以来我再没有去见过他（尽管

我之前每天都拜访他），因为他没有上演我的交响协奏曲 [45] 这件事让我很生气。我经常去拜访和他同住一宅的拉夫先生，每次都要经过他的房间。他的仆人和女仆每次都会看到我，我也每次都让他们代为致敬。他没有上演那部交响曲真的很让人遗憾，它本来会大受欢迎的。而现在他已经没这个机会了，他到哪儿找齐能够演奏这部交响曲的四个人呢？

有一天我去拜访拉夫，却被告知他出去了，不过很快就会回家，所以我打算等他回来。这时勒格罗先生走进房间说：“能再次有幸见到您真是个奇迹。”

“是的，我一直有很多事要做。”“您今天能留下来一起用餐吗？”“很抱歉，我已经有安排了。”“莫扎特先生，我们必须再次一块儿聚聚。”“我也很乐意。”长时间的沉默之后，他说：“顺便问您一句，您愿意为我给基督圣体日写一部大型交响乐吗？”

“为什么不呢？”“一言为定吗？”“哦，当然了！只要我确信它可以上演，不会经受那首交响协奏曲同样的命运就行。”然后话匣子就被打开了。他诚心诚意地道歉，但也知道没太多可说的。简单来说，交响曲得到了他的高度认可。勒格罗对此非常满意，他说这是他演出过的最好的交响曲。然而，行板却没有令他赏识的好运气。他说它转调太多，而且太长了。但他这么说是因为听众忘记了热烈鼓掌和喝彩，像在第一乐章和终曲乐章里一样。可是这里的行板确实受到了我自己、所有行家、音乐爱好者以及大多数听众的高度认可。与勒格罗所说的刚好完全相反，这段行板既自然又简短。但是为了让他（以及他所认为的不少人）满意，我已经重新写了一段新的行板。两段行板就其各自的形式而言都很出色，因为两者具有不同的特点，但我更喜欢新的行板。等我找到合适的机会，就把这个交响曲给您寄去，连同《小提琴演奏指导》、一些钢琴曲、福格勒的《声音科学》和《声音艺术》一起。然后我想听听您的意见，这个交响曲会以新的行板，在8月15号，也就是圣母升天节那天第二次上演。交响曲是re音，行板是sol音，这里的人们不说D大调或g小调。现在勒格罗已经很认可我了。该结尾了。如果您要写信给我，我觉得等您收到格林男爵的信之后再写会更好。格林先生很快就会给您写信。他和夫人都问候您并向您致以最真挚的哀悼。但他们希望您能够在无法改变的事情面前保持冷静。节哀顺变，热诚祈祷，这是我们唯一还能做的事了。我希望您能去马利亚平原朝圣教堂和洛雷托教堂那里做弥撒。我在这里也做了弥撒。至于给贝尔先生的推荐信，我认为这个没有必要寄给我，我从来没见过他。我只知道他是个不错的单簧管演奏者，但是很放荡。我不喜欢和这类人打交道。这得不到什么好名声。我一封推荐信都不想给他。这么做真的会让我很羞愧，即使他可以为我做什么！他在这里的名声并不好，许多人甚至没听说过他。两个施塔米茨现在只有弟

弟 [46] 在巴黎，大一点儿的那个 [47]（真正的作曲家）目前在伦敦。他们是两个可怜的三流角色，赌博、酗酒、嫖妓，不是我会与之打交道的那类人，那个年轻的施塔米茨几乎都没有体面的衣服。顺便一说，如果布鲁内蒂那里的事情落空了，我很愿意推荐我的一个好朋友给大主教做首席小提琴手，他是一个体面、可敬又正派的人，非常可靠。我推测他大约四十岁，是一个鳏夫。他的名字叫罗特费舍尔，现在是拿骚-魏尔堡两个公主在基希海姆博兰登的首席演奏者，但他不太满意（我们私下偷偷说），因为他的选帝侯不喜欢他，或者说不喜欢他的音乐。他向我毛遂自荐，我很乐意帮帮他，因为他是我见过最棒的人。再见。我吻您的双手十万次，全心拥抱我的姐姐。

我是您听话的儿子

[37] 可能暗指莫扎特的结婚打算。

[38] 利奥波德在1778年6月29日的信里写道：在圣三一主日庆典上，海登演奏管风琴时手脑无法协作，演奏得十分糟糕，大家都以为他已被故管风琴师阿德加瑟（Adlgasser）的亡灵附体了，因为阿德加瑟正是在晚祷演奏时中风以致演奏失常，但海登的表现其实是醉酒所致。

[39] 利奥波德在1778年6月29日的信里谈到自己如何巧妙地使得伯爵主动提出让莫扎特重返任职的想法；尤利西斯，又译俄底修斯，是罗马神话中的英雄，对应希腊神话中的奥德修斯（奥德赛），献木马计里应外合攻破特洛伊。

[40] 以下为莫扎特回应父亲上一封信里所提及的家乡新闻。

[41] 让-乔治·诺韦尔（Jean-Georges Noverre，1727-1810），法国舞蹈家、舞蹈理论家、芭蕾舞剧编导。

[44] 约瑟夫·勒格罗（Joseph Legros），1777-1791年担任宗教音乐会导演。

[45] 即降E大调交响协奏曲，K.297b/Anh.C 14.01。

[46] 指安东·塔达乌斯·约翰·尼波默克·施塔米茨（Anton Thadäus Johann Nepomuk Stamitz，1750或1754年至1798或1809年），捷

克裔德国作曲家、小提琴家。早年从父约翰·施塔米茨（Johann Wenzel Anton Stamitz）学习，1770年随其兄卡尔·施塔米茨访问巴黎，1782-1789年在凡尔赛任职，1798年后不知所终。作品风格与卡尔·施塔米茨类似。

[47] 指卡尔·菲利普·施塔米茨（Karl Philipp Stamitz，1745-1801），捷克裔德国作曲家、小提琴家。早年从父学习，1762年进入曼海姆管弦乐团，1770年移居巴黎。其作品为典型的古典主义风格。作有五十余首交响曲，十余首单簧管协奏曲，大量各种体裁的室内乐。

利奥波德·莫扎特 致儿子沃尔夫冈·阿马德乌斯·莫扎特（曼海姆）

萨尔茨堡，1778年7月13日

我亲爱的妻子，亲爱的儿子！

亲爱的妻子，为了不错过你的命名日，我今天就给你写信，这样信一定能在命名日之前到你手里。祝你命名日快乐，岁岁有今朝，希望万能的主保佑你这一天和未来都平安健康，保佑你在这个变幻莫测的人世间尽可能地幸福。我百分百确信，你如果要真正感到幸福，绝对不能少了你的丈夫和女儿。不过上帝会以他深不可测的决定和神意为我们做出最好的安排。你一年之前想过会在巴黎度过下一个命名日吗？这在当时对有些人来说多么难以置信，虽然我们并不这么觉得。因此，在上帝的帮助下，我们很有可能要比我们所预计的更早团聚。现在唯一压在我心头的事情，就是和你们分居两地，相隔千山万水。但是感谢上帝，我们都很健康！我们两个亲吻你和沃尔夫冈一百万次，主要想请你们保重好身体。战争剧如今终于要开始了！^[48] 你在巴黎应该已经知道了，这个月5号，普鲁士国王^[49] 入侵波希米亚，他从克沃兹科开始，经过纳霍德，一直进犯到克尼格雷茨。可以确定的是，战争一定会爆发，因为双方都无法不损颜面地撤兵。这几周以来，奥地利利用行军和反向行军，在好几个地方为普鲁士国王创造了实施突袭和发动进攻的位置和时机。但是普鲁士国王认为采取这样的进攻不明智。最近奥地利皇帝^[50] 在纳霍德建立起一个强大的假军火库，促使普鲁士国王采取进攻。但这个军火库是假的，里面除了一些样子货之外什么都没有。他们必须冒这个险，不管结果如何，因为奥地利既没有能力也不愿意成为进攻方。但克罗地亚人作为先头部队（事实上，这是他们唯一可以被用到的地方）几乎已经管不住了，因为这些人总是希望获得战利品，也因此热衷于打仗。萨克森军队与普鲁士结盟了，他们可能真的加入了亨利亲王的势力，接下来很可能会攻打埃格尔和上普法尔茨。下一个邮车肯定会带来更多的新消息。这条消息是奥地利邮车11号带来的。这场战争无疑会成为最血腥的战争之一，因为普鲁士国王想光荣地死去，而奥地利皇帝想光荣地开启他的沙场人生。

前面这些话是昨天12号写下的。今天13号，上午10点之前我收到了你7月3号那封悲伤的信。你完全可以想象到，我们现在心里是什么感觉。我们一起痛哭，几乎无法读完那封信。你姐姐啊！仁慈的上

帝啊！希望你最神圣的意志可以实现！我亲爱的儿子！我一直尽可能地皈依上帝的意志，你知道的，我因为哭泣几乎无法写下去是人性使然。我最后该写些什么来结束这封信呢？没有别的了，除了我想到在我写信的这一刻，她可能已经去世了，或者她已经好转了，因为你是3号写下那封信的，而今天已经13号了。你说在放血之后她有所好转，但是几天之后她开始抱怨打寒战和发烧。你们俩的最后一封信是6月12号写的，她当时写道，我昨天给自己放血了。那也就是11号的事，为什么会在星期天斋戒日做这件事？我猜想她可能吃了点肉。放血这件事她耽搁太久了。我很了解她，我知道她喜欢把所有事情从今天拖到明天，尤其是到了一个陌生地方以后，她必须先去找外科医生咨询一下。事已至此，无法改变了，因为我完全相信你的孝心，知道你已尽心尽力地照料你的好妈妈了。如果上帝还会把她送给我们，你之后还会一直这么照顾她。对于你的好妈妈来说，你是她眼里的珍宝，她非同寻常地爱着你，深深地以你为傲，这些我比你更清楚，她活着就是为了你。但是如果我们的全部希望都落空了！如果我们真的失去了她！天哪！你需要朋友，可靠的朋友！不然你会失去一切，比如在葬礼费用这一项上！我的上帝！有许多你不了解的花销，如果没有可靠的朋友，一个生人会在这些花费上面被欺骗、包办、糊弄，花上许多不必要的钱，还要被讹诈。你可以不理解这些。如果这个不幸真的降临到你头上，你就去请求格林先生让你把母亲的东西放在他家，这样你就不必看管那么多东西，或者你也可以把一切家当都好好锁起来。因为如果你经常一整天不在家，很可能会遭遇入室盗窃。上帝保佑我的一切担忧都是多余的。但在这些事情上你会承认你父亲是对的。我亲爱的妻子！我亲爱的儿子！如果她在放血几天之后开始病重，那她一定从6月16号或者17号起就开始抱恙了。但是你们等得太久了。她以为她可以通过卧床休息，通过节食，通过她自己的方法好转。我知道这是怎么一回事，你们抱着情况会好转的希望，把事情从今天拖到明天。但是，我亲爱的沃尔夫冈，高烧时如果腹泻需要立刻咨询医生，以便知道应该退烧还是必须顺其自然，因为用来退烧的药会加剧腹泻。而如果在不恰当的時刻腹泻，病情会如同火上浇油。上帝啊！我们都在你的手里。

祝贺你的交响曲在宗教音乐会上取得的成功。我能想象你当时有多紧张。但如果排练不顺利，你就决定闯进管弦乐团实在是一个头脑发热的想法。上帝保佑，你必须将这一类的突发奇想统统排出脑海。它们都是欠考虑的，这样的一步会让你付出沉重代价，没有一个理智的人会为了一部交响曲如此冒险。这样的冒犯，并且是公开的冒犯，不仅肯定会被法国人报复，而且会被所有重视荣誉的人狠狠报复。意大利人会什么都不说，在街角等着，然后一枪毙了你。我从慕尼黑得到了可靠的消息，泽奥伯爵被确立为慕尼黑和曼海姆地区的宫廷音乐负责人。两个管弦乐团的乐手名单已经被送去了曼海姆。这两个乐团

会被合并，最差的乐手会被剔除。沃茨卡先生和其他宫廷侍从一起，已经以400弗罗林的退休金被辞退了，这让我很惊讶。桑夫特医生厚颜无耻地为他的治疗要价3000弗罗林，为此他的头衔和薪水都被剥夺了。现在终于有望在8月10号，再次在慕尼黑见到选帝侯泰奥尔多、选帝侯夫人及整个宫廷人员。

这封信是以我的祝福展开的，南妮儿想以她的祝福来收尾，只是你完全想得到，她一个字都没法写，尽管她必须要写点什么了……每个打算写下的字都让她的眼里再次溢满了泪水。你，她亲爱的弟弟，如果你还能做到的话，就如我们所愿，代表她祝福妈妈吧！

哦不！你已经不能再这么做了……她已经去了！你拼命安慰我，一个人如果不是完全失去了希望或者被可怕的处境刺激，是不会这样激动的。现在我要去吃午饭了，但我没有任何胃口。

现在是下午3点半，我开始写下面这些话。我知道我亲爱的妻子现在已经在天国了。我满含泪水地写下这些，但是完全皈依上帝的意志！昨天是圣三一主日的教堂庆典，所以我们平时的射击练习推迟到了今天。我不能也不想因为你那悲伤的信，那么晚才取消活动。我们吃得很少，但南妮儿必须吃点东西，因为她在餐桌上哭得太厉害，吐了，而且头痛欲裂，已经去床上休息了。布林格先生和其他人都发现了我们极度悲伤。我一句话都没说，让他读你的信。他把自己的情绪掩饰得很好，只是问我认为现在情况如何。我告诉他，我确信我亲爱的妻子已经死了。他说，其实他也几乎这么认为。然后他安慰了我，像一个真正的朋友那样，而那些话我已经都对自己说过了。我努力振作起来，让自己皈依于最神圣的神意。结束射击之后，所有人都情绪低落离开了。布林格先生留了下来，假装不经心地问我，觉得病情目前是否还有转机。我回答他，我认为她已经死了，而且在你写信的当天就死了。但我皈依上帝的意志，必须记得我仍然有两个孩子，我希望他们会继续爱我，就如同我活着是为了他们一样。我已经写信告诉你我确信她已经过世了，还提醒你看管好她的遗物等。对此他说，是的，她已经死了。这件突发意外像是在我眼前蒙上了一层面纱，阻碍了我的判断力，不然我一读你的信就会立刻猜到你已经写信告诉了布林格先生真相。但你的信真的让我愣住了，看到信的那一刻我就被彻底击倒，无法思考。即使是现在，我仍然不知道能写什么！我这边你可以放心，我会像个男人一样面对这件事。但是想想你母亲对你温柔的爱，你就会意识到她有多在乎你。就像当你成熟了，当我死了，你会更加爱我一样。你爱我，这一点我毫不怀疑。那么你要保重身体。我的人生全靠你了，你姐姐未来的生活也依仗你，她全心全意地爱着你。眼睁睁看着自己幸福的婚姻被死亡撕裂，这种痛苦真的令人心碎。但只有真正经历了才能了解。要写信告诉我所有的细节。她是不是放血放得不够？可以确定的是，她太相信自己，请医生请得太迟

了。这时她的肠道炎已经病入膏肓了。你要保重身体！不要让我们都不幸福！南妮儿还不知道布林格先生的信。但我准备让她相信她的好妈妈已经过世了。尽快给我写信，告诉我一切。告诉我她何时下葬，葬在哪里。上帝啊！我一定要去巴黎寻找我亲爱的妻子的墓穴！我们发自内心地吻你，我必须说再见了，邮车要走了。

你诚实而极度悲伤的父亲

‘They wanted me
to give a concert;
I wanted them to beg me. And so they did. I gave a concert.’

Mozart to his father, 17 October 1777, Augsburg

Mon très cher Père ,

I must start with Stein's pianofortes. Before I saw any of Stein's work, I'd always preferred Späth's pianos; but now I prefer Stein's, as they damp so much better than the Regensburg instruments. If I strike hard, it doesn't matter whether I keep my finger down or raise it, the sound ceases the moment I produce it. However I attack the keys, the tone is always even. It doesn't produce a clattering sound, it doesn't get louder or softer or fail to sound at all; in a word, it's always even. It's true, he won't part with a pianoforte like this for under 300 florins, but the effort and labour that he expends on it can't be paid for. A particular feature of his instruments is their escape action. Not one maker in a hundred bothers with this. But without escape action it's impossible for a pianoforte not to produce a clattering sound or to go on sounding after the note has been struck; when you strike the keys, his hammers fall back again the moment they hit the strings, whether you hold down the keys or release them. He told me that only when he's finished making a piano like this does he sit down and try out all the passagework, runs and leaps, and, using a shave, works away at the instrument until it can do everything. For he works only to serve the music, not just for his own profit, otherwise he'd be finished at once.

He often says that if he weren't such a great music lover and didn't have some slight skill on the instrument, he'd long since have run out of patience with his work; but he loves an instrument that never lets the player down and that will last. His pianos will really last. He guarantees that the sounding board won't break or crack. Once he's finished making a sounding board for a piano he puts it outside, exposing it to the air, rain, snow, heat of the sun and all the devils in order for it to crack, and then he inserts wedges, which he glues in, so that it's very strong and firm. He's perfectly happy for it to crack as he's then assured that nothing more can happen to it. Indeed, he often cuts into it himself and then glues it back together again and makes it really strong. He has completed three such pianofortes. Not until today did I play on one of them again. Today - the 17th - we had lunch with young Herr Gasser, a young and handsome widower who's lost his young and beautiful wife. They'd been married for only 2 years. He's a most excellent and polite young man. We were splendidly entertained. Also there was a col-league of Abbé Henri, Bullinger and Wieshofer, an ex-Jesuit who's now Kapellmeister at the cathedral here. He knows Herr Schachtner very well, he was his choirmaster in Ingolstadt. He's called Pater Gerbl. I'm to give his best wishes to Herr Schachtner. After lunch Herr Gasser and I went to Herr Stein's, where we were accompanied by one of his sisters-in-law as well as Mama and our cousin. At 4 o'clock we were joined by the Kapellmeister and Herr Schmidbaur, the organist at St Ulrich's, a fine old gentleman who's very well-spoken; and I then sight-read a sonata by Beecke that was quite hard and miserable al solito ; I can't begin to tell you how the Kapellmeister and organist crossed themselves. Both here and in Munich I've played my 6 sonatas many times from memory. I played the fifth one in G at the aristocrats'concert in the Bauernstube. The last one, in D, sounds amazing on Stein's pianoforte. The device that you depress with your knee is also better made on his instrument than on others. I scarcely need to touch it and it works; and as soon as you remove your knee even a little, you no longer hear the slightest reverberation. Tomorrow I may get round to his organs - - I mean, to write about them; I'm saving up his little daughter till the end. When I told Herr Stein that I'd like to play on his organ as the organ was my passion, he was very surprised and said:What, a man like you, so great a keyboard player wants to play on an instrument that has no douceur, no expression, no piano or forte but always sounds the same? - - None of that matters. In my eyes and ears the organ is the king of instruments. Well, as you like. We went off together. I could already tell from what he said that he didn't think I'd do much on his organ and that - for example - I'd play in a way more suited to a piano. He told me that Schubart had asked to be shown his organ, and I was afraid - he said - as Schubart had told everyone, and the church was quite full; for I thought he'd be all spirit, fire and speed, none of which works on the organ; but as soon as he started I changed my mind. I said only this:What do you think, Herr Stein? Do you think I'll run all over the organ? - - Oh, you, that's quite different. We reached the choir. I began to improvise, by which point he was already laughing, and then a fugue. I can well believe - he said - that you enjoy playing the organ if you play like that - - at first the pedal was a little strange as it wasn't divided. It began with C, then D, E in the same row. But with us D and E are above, as E flat and F sharp are here. But I soon got used to it. I also played on the old organ at St Ulrich's. The steps up to it are a nightmare. I asked if someone could play on it for me as I wanted to go down and listen. From up there the organ is totally ineffectual. But I could make nothing of it, as the young choirmaster, a priest, played only scales, so it was impossible to form any impression. And when he tried to play some chords, he produced only discords as it was out of tune. After that we had to go to a coffee-room as my mother and cousin and Herr Stein were with us. A certain Pater Aemilian, an arrogant ass and a simpleton of his profession, was in an especially hearty mood. He kept wanting to joke with my cousin, but she just made fun of him - - finally, when he was drunk (which didn't take long), he started to talk about music. He sang a canon and I said I'd never in my whole life heard a finer one. I said I'm sorry, I can't join in as I've no natural gift for intoning. That doesn't matter, he said. He started. I was the third voice, but I made up some very different words, for example, O you prick, lick my arse. Sotto voce to my cousin. We laughed about it for half an hour. He said to me: if only we could have spent longer together. I'd like to discuss the art of composition with you. Then the discussion would soon be over, I said. Get lost . To be continued.

W. A. Mozart

Leopold Mozart to his son, 23 October 1777, Salzburg

Mon très cher Fils ,

I must congratulate you on your name day! But what can I wish you today that I don't always wish you? - - I wish you the grace of God, that it may accompany you everywhere and never abandon you, as indeed it will never do if you strive to fulfil the obligations of a true Catholic Christian.

You know me. - I'm no pedant, I'm not holier than thou, and I'm certainly no hypocrite:but you surely won't refuse a request from your father? - It is this:that you should be concerned for your soul's welfare and not cause your father any anxiety in his hour of death, so that at that difficult time he won't have to reproach himself for neglecting your soul's salvation. Farewell! Be happy! Lead a sensible life! Honour and esteem your mother, who has much toil in her old age, love me as I love you. Your truly solicitous father

Leop. Mozart

Leopold Mozart to his son, 24 November 1777, Salzburg

Mon très cher Fils ,

I really don't know what to say, I was so stunned by your last letter of the 16th. In it you announced with a display of the greatest nonchalance that Herr Schmalz - presumably the father, brother or relation of Herr Schmalz of the leather factory in Munich or possibly even Herr Schmalz himself - had apologized for the fact that he had no instructions to give you any money. I can well believe that; and he was right: you should have asked Herr Herzog or the firm of Nocker&Schiedl to provide you with a little extra credit, as I used to do :for they had no orders from Hagenauer's house to extend this credit elsewhere, and no businessman exceeds his literal orders:but it would have been done if you'd asked them. But this incident was described in such matter-of-fact and indif-ferent terms as though I'd whole chests full of money and should have been terribly annoyed that you'd not been paid at once. I won't waste time with a long-winded account of our circumstances, you know them yourself, as does Mama, and in my letter of the 20th I listed the main items, although I forgot a sizeable sum that we owe to Hagenauer for goods but with whom we're not writing up a single farthing more on credit . But what amazed me most of all on receiving your letter was that you suddenly came out with this story without telling me about it in your previous letter, in which you simply said that money would have been more useful and appropriate for your journey than a trinket, as you knew even then that you were low on funds. If Herr Schmalz had been willing, I would have been lumbered with instructions for payment without having received the slightest advance notice and at a time when I suspected nothing . That's a pretty state of affairs indeed! - I leave you to think it over, in the light of my present circumstances. You wrote to me from Augsb. that you'd lost only 27 florins. - According to my own calcula-tions, you must still have 170 florins even if you'd lost 30 florins. Even if that stupid trip to Mannheim via Wallerstein cost you 70 florins, you should still be left with 100 florins. Even if it cost you more, can you really not have enough left to be able to make the journey to Mainz? You'd then be near Frankfurt and if absolutely necessary would be able to draw a little with your second letter of credit from Herr Bolongaro in Frankfurt. Then you'd only have to ask some businessman in Mainz who's in contact with Herr Bolongaro; he would have under-taken to send the letter of credit to Herr Bolong. and to draw what you require.

Wouldn't this have been more sensible than to settle down in Mannheim and squander your money to no avail, as this money would presumably have enabled you to make the journey, which would have cost perhaps 15 or 16 florins. It's only $1\frac{1}{4}$ stages to Worms, 2 to Oppenheim and 1 to Mainz, so only $3\frac{3}{4}$ in all. And even if you'd had little or no money on your arrival, we have acquaintance there who would help you, and no gentleman need be ashamed if he hasn't a farthing in his pocket but can produce a letter of credit: this can happen to the wealthies and most distinguished people, indeed it's a maxim when travelling that, if possible, you should carry only as much money as you need. I'm still in the dark and if I speak of Mainz it's pure supposition as you haven't done me the honour in any of your letters of telling me where you are intending to go, only at the very last moment did you write to me from Augsburg and say you were going to Wallerstein; and Herr Stein wrote to say that you left for Wallerstein and Mannheim at half past 7 on Sunday. But such things should be announced some time in advance as I can sometimes make useful preparations and send reminders, just as I was at pains to do by writing to Herr Otto and Herr Pfeil in Frankfurt. - - Of course, your journey is no concern of mine! Isn't that so? - - You could, of course, have taken a very different route from Mannheim: namely, Würzburg and from there to the Mar grave of Darmstadt, then Frankfurt and Mainz. But how can I guess what you're thinking or make suggestions as I'm never consulted and didn't know how things stood in Mannheim, indeed to judge by your letter in which you had an opportunity to speak so familiarly with the elector I was bound to assume that you had very different plans and were intending to stay there for some time; all of which - whatever your opinions, inclinations, aims etc. may be - you should have reported honestly and in good time as it takes 12 days to receive and reply to a letter even if all goes smoothly. But you didn't bother to consider this either as in your last letter of the 16th you wrote that I could continue to write to you in Mannheim , although it would be 12 days at the quickest before you received this letter, in other words, not until the 28th, by which time Herr Herzog will long since have replied and you will have left. But I did not receive your letter until Friday the 21st, as a present on our wedding day , and was unable therefore to reply until the 24th; you'll have read this letter - God knows where - on 1 or 2 December. Neither of you must think that I don't know how many incidental expenses are incurred on a journey and how money van-ishes into thin air, especially when one's overgenerous or too kind. My dear wife prided herself on getting up early, on not lingering and on doing everything quickly and economically. 16 days in Munich , 14 days in Augsburg and now, according to your letter of 16 Nov . , 17 days in Mann -heim , which, including the time spent waiting for a reply from Augsb., will turn out to be 3 weeks. That's sorcery indeed; you've been away 8 weeks, in other words, 2 months, and you're already in Mannheim? - - That's incredibly quick! When we travelled to England, we spent 9 days in Munich, called on the elector and Duke Clemens , and had to wait for our present. - We were 15 days in Augsb., but we gave 3 concerts there, namely, on 28 and 30 June and 4 July. - We left Salzburg on 9 June and did not arrive in Munich until the 12th as new wheels had to be made in Wasserburg, yet in spite of this we were in Schwetzingen by 13 July , although we broke our journey in Ulm, Ludwigsburg and Bruchsal. So you see that your long and unnecessary stay has ruined everything, the most beautiful autumn in living memory has come and gone, and so far you've regarded your journey as no more than a pleasure trip and spent the time enjoying your-selves:now the bad weather, shorter days and cold are here, with more of the same to come, while your prospects and goals are now correspondingly expensive and distant.

You can't spend the whole winter travelling; and if you plan to stay anywhere, it should be in a large town with lots of people where there are hopes and opportunities of earning some money:and where is such a place to be found in the whole of this region? - Apart from Paris: - - but life in Paris requires a completely different attitude to life, a different way of thinking, you have to be atten-tive and every day think of ways of earning money and exercise extreme politeness in order to ingratiate yourself with people of standing:I'll write more on this in my next letter, in which I shall also set out my ideas on a quite different route that may be worth taking and which, I believe, will get you to Paris more quickly, namely, from Koblenz to Trier , Luxembourg , Sedan , where Herr Ziegen -hagen , who visited us with Herr Wahler, has a textile factory. Perhaps he'll be there now. Then Rethel, Rheims, Soissons and Paris. Note that from Paris to Rethel there are 22 French post stages. From Rethel it's only a stone's throw to Sedan - Luxembourg, too, isn't far, and Trier is close to Luxembourg. Luxembourg is an imposing fort-ress and there'll be lots of officers there.Rheims and Soissons are large towns. In all these places it will be relatively easy to earn some money in order to recover your travelling expenses as virtuosos rarely visit such places. By contrast, it's 34 post stages from Brussels to Paris, and these cost us 20 louis d'or for 6 horses, without our receiving a farthing in return. And between Koblenz and Brussels there's nothing that can be done, except perhaps with the elector of Cologne. Perhaps? - And what about Brussels? - - - -

Meanwhile, whichever route you take, make sure that you obtain some letters of recommendation to take with you to Paris, it doesn't matter who writes them - businessmen, courtiers etc. etc. And is there no French ambassador or resident in Mainz or Koblenz? I don't think there is. You haven't got any letters of recommendation, whereas I had a lot; they're vital in providing you with both patronage and contacts. A journey like this is no joke, you've no experience of this sort of thing, you need to have other, more important thoughts on your mind than foolish games, you have to try to anticipate a hundred different things, otherwise you'll suddenly find yourself in the shit without any money, - - and where you've no money you'll have no friends either, even if you give a hundred lessons for nothing, and even if you write sonatas and spend every night fooling around from 10 till 12 instead of devoting yourself to more important matters. Then try asking for credit! - That'll wipe the smile off your face. I'm not blaming you for a moment for placing the Cannabichs under an obligation to you by your acts of kindness, that was well done:but you should have devoted a few of your otherwise idle hours each evening to your father, who is so concerned about you, and sent him not simply a mishmash tossed off in a hurry but a proper, confidential and detailed account of the expenses incurred on your journey, of the money you still have left, of the journey you plan to take in future and of your intentions in Mannheim etc. etc. In short, you should have sought my advice; I hope you'll be sensible enough to see this, for who has to shoulder this whole burden if not your poor old father? As I've already said, I didn't receive your letter until the 21st and was unable to reply until today. Yesterday, the 23rd, I confessed my sins at Holy Trinity and with tears in my eyes commended you both to the protection of Almighty God. In the afternoon we had target practice. The prize was offered by Cajetan Antretter and I won. Herr Bullinger, who sends his best; wishes, was also somewhat taken aback by your letter and it struck me that, in the present serious situation, he didn't appreciate your joke about a public debt. At half past 5 I then went to see Herr Hagenauer to ask him that if Messrs Nocker & Schiedl had not informed him by post that they had transferred some money to you, he might care to write to Augsb. by today's post. I returned to the shop this morning and spoke to Herr Joseph. I discovered that although they'd received letters from Nocker & Schiedl, there'd been no word about you. He promised to write today. I've now done all I can and hope that in the meantime you'll have received some money, Nocker & Schiedl won't send me a report until they know how much you've been given. NB: It's always better when drawing money to accept not florins but the local currency, e. g., 6, 7 etc. louis d'or, carolins or whatever. I've now told you what was weighing on my mind, it is God's own truth. You'll have to learn for your-self that it is no joke to undertake a journey like this and to have to live on random income: above all you must pray most earnestly to God for good health, be on your guard against wicked people, earn money by every means that is known and available to you, and then spend it with the greatest care. I prefer to give too little to someone who is travelling with me and whom I may never see again and risk being called a skinflint, rather than have him laugh at me behind my back for giving him too much. I've no more paper, and I'm tired, especially my eyes.

Nannerl and I wish you the best of health and with all our hearts kiss you a million times. I am your old husband and father but NB not your son.

Mozart

I hope you'll have received my letter of the 20th in which I told you to write to Monsieur Grimm in Paris, also what you should write to the Prince of Chiemsee in Munich. By the next post I'll send you a list of all the stages to Paris and my opinion etc., also a list of all our former acquaintances in Paris. Addio .

Mozart to his father, 29 November 1777, Mannheim

Mon très cher Père ,

I received your letter of the 24th this morning and see from it that you're unable to reconcile yourself to fate, be it good or bad, when it takes us by surprise; until now, and as things stand, the four of us have never been happy or unhappy, and for that I thank God. You reproach us both for many things, without our deserving it. We are not incurring any expenses that are not necessary; and what is necessary when travelling you know as well as we do, if not better. That we stayed so long in Munich was the fault of no one but myself ; and if I'd been alone, I'd certainly have stayed in Munich. Why did we spend 2 weeks in Augsburg? - - I'm tempted to think that you didn't receive my letters from Augsburg. - - I wanted to give a concert - I was let down; meanwhile a whole week went by. I was absolutely determined to leave. They wouldn't let me. They wanted me to give a concert; I wanted them to beg me. And so they did. I gave a concert. There are your 2 weeks. Why did we go straight to Mannheim? - - I answered this question in my last letter. Why are we still here? - - Yes - - can you really think that I'd remain somewhere for no reason? - - But I could have told my father - - all right, you shall know the reason and indeed the whole course of events. But God knows that I had no wish to speak about it because I was unable to go into detail - any more than I can today - and I know you well enough to appreciate that a vague account would have caused you worry and distress, something I've always tried to avoid; but if you ascribe the cause to my negligence, thoughtlessness and indolence, I can only thank you for your high opinion of me and sincerely regret that you don't know your own son.

I'm not thoughtless but am prepared for anything and as a result can wait patiently for whatever the future holds in store, and I'll be able to endure it - as long as my hon-our and the good name of Mozart don't suffer in consequence. Well, if it must be so, then let it be so. But I must ask you at the outset not to rejoice or grieve pre-maturely; for whatever happens, all is well as long as we remain healthy; for happiness consists - - simply in our imagination. Last Tuesday week, the 18th, the day before St Elisabeth's Day, I saw Count Savioli in the morning and asked him if there was any chance that the elector would keep me here this winter? - - I wanted to teach the young princes. He said yes, I'll suggest it to the elector; and if it's up to me, it will certainly happen. That after-noon I saw Cannabich and as it was at his suggestion that I'd been to see the count, he asked me at once if I'd been there. - I told him all that had happened, he said to me I'd very much like you to spend the winter here with us, but I'd like it even more if you had a proper, permanent appointment. I said that there was nothing I'd like more than to be always near them but that I really didn't know how it would be possible for me to stay permanently. You've already got two Kapellmeisters, so I don't know what I could do, as I wouldn't like to be under Vogler ! Nor shall you, he said. None of the members of the orchestra here is under the Kapellmeister or even under the intendant. The elector could make you his chamber composer. Wait, I'll speak to the count about it. There was a big concert on Thursday. When the count saw me, he apologized for not having said anything, but the galas were still going on; but as soon as the galas were over, namely, on Monday, he would certainly speak to the elector. I left it for 3 days, and as I'd heard nothing, I went to see him in order to make enquiries. He said: My dear Monsieur Mozart (this was Friday, namely, yester-day), there was a hunt today so I've been unable to ask the elector; but by this time tomorrow I shall certainly be able to give you an answer: I begged him not to forget. To tell the truth, I was rather angry when I left him and decided to take the young count my six easiest variations on Fischer's minuet - which I'd already had copied out here for this very purpose - in order to have an opportunity to speak to the elector in person. When I arrived, you can't imagine how pleased the governess was to see me. I received a most courteous welcome. When I took out the variations and said that they were for the count, she said Oh, that's good of you; but have you also got something for the countess? - - Not yet, I said, but if I were to stay here long enough to write something, I'll - - By the way, she said, I'm glad that you'll be staying here all winter. Me? - - I didn't know that! - - That surprises me. It's curious. The elector himself told me so recently. By the way, he said, Mozart is staying here this winter. Well, if he did indeed say that, then he's the one person who can say it, for without the elector I certainly can't remain here. I told her the whole story. We agreed that I'd return the next day - namely, today - after 4 o'clock and bring something for the countess. You'll speak to the elector - before I arrive - and he'll still be with you when I get there. I went back there today, but he didn't come. But I'll go again tomorrow. I've written a rondeau for the countess. Don't I have reason enough to remain here and await the outcome? - - Should I leave now that the great-est step has been taken? - - I now have a chance to speak to the elector himself. I think I shall probably remain here all winter as the elector is fond of me, he thinks highly of me and knows what I can do. I hope to be able to give you some good news in my next letter. I beg you once again not to rejoice or worry too soon and to confide this story in no one except Herr Bullinger and my sister. I'm sending my sister the allegro and andante from the sonata for Mlle Cannabich. The rondeau will follow shortly. It would have been too much to send them all together. You'll have to make do with the original; you can have it copied more easily at 6 kreuzers a page than I can at 24 kreuzers. Don't you find that expensive? - - Adieu. I kiss your hands 100, 000 times and embrace my sister with all my heart. I am your obedient son.

Wolfgang Amadé Mozart

You'll probably already have heard a little of the sonata, as it's sung, banged out, fiddled and whistled at least 3 times a day at Cannabich's. - Only sotto voce , of course.

[Maria Anna Mozart's postscript]

My dear husband, I kiss you and Nannerl many 1000 times and ask you to give our best wishes to all our acquaint-ances, I'll write more next time, but it's turned midnight, addio, I remain your faithful wife

Maria Anna Mozart

Leopold Mozart to his wife and son, 4 December 1777, Salzburg

My Dear Wife and Dear Son,

I've no objection to your having to wait for what you told me about in your last letter, and there's nothing more that can be said about all that has happened on your journey and that has turned out differently from what I'd expected and worked out to our disadvantage and even caused us obvious harm, as it is all over and done with and can no longer be changed. - But the fact that you, my son, write that all speculation is superfluous and of no avail as we cannot know what is to happen - this is indeed ill considered and was undoubtedly written unthinkingly. No sensible person - I shall not say no Christian - will deny that everything will and must happen according to God's will. But does it follow from this that we should act blindly, live carefree lives, make no provisions for the future and simply wait for things to befall us of their own accord? - Does God himself and, indeed, do all rational people not demand that in all our actions we consider their consequences and outcome, at least as far as our human powers of reason enable us to, and that we make every effort to see as far ahead as we can? - - If this is necessary in all our actions, how much more so is it in the present circumstances, on a journey? Or have you not already suffered the consequences of this? - - Is it enough for you to have taken the step with the elector in order to remain there throughout the winter ? - - Should you not - shouldn't you long ago have thought of a plan that can be implemented if things don't work out: and shouldn't you have told me about it long ago and learnt my views on it? - - And now you write - what? If we were after all to leave here we'll go straight to Weilburg to the Princess of Nassau-Weilburg - for whom you wrote the sonatas in Holland - etc. - There we'll stay as long as the officers' table is to our liking - what sort of a tale is that? Like everything else you wrote, this is the language of a desperate man who is trying to console both himself and me. - - But there's still a hope that you'll receive 6 louis d'or, and that will make everything all right. - But my question to you now is whether you're certain that the princess is there:she won't be there without good reason as her husband is based in The Hague on account of his military office. Shouldn't you have told me about this long ago? - Another question:wouldn't you do better to go to Mainz - and from there to Weilburg via Frankfurt? After all, if you go from Mannheim to Weilburg, you'll cross the Frankfurt road:and as you're not staying in Weilburg for ever, the Mainz road will take you back through Frankfurt. If you first go to Mainz and then to Weilburg, you'll have only a short distance from Weilburg to Koblenz, which will presumably take you via Nassau. Or do you intend to avoid Mainz, where we've so many good friends and where we earned 200*florins from 3 concerts* , even without playing for the elector, who was ill. Tell me, my dear son, are these useless speculations? - - Your dear good Mama told me she'd keep a careful note of your expenses. Good! I've never asked for a detailed account and never thought of demanding one:but when you arrived in Augsburg you should have written to say:We paid such and such at Albert's in Munich, and such and such was spent on travelling expenses, so that we still have such and such a sum. From Augsburg you wrote to say that after taking account of the concert receipts you were about 20 florins out of pocket. In your 2nd letter from Mannheim you should at least have said that the journey cost us such and such an amount and we're now left with - - , so that I could have made arrangements in good time - - was my arrangement to send you a letter of credit in Augsburg a useless speculation? - - Do you really think that Herr Herzog - who's a good old friend of mine - would have provided you with money in response to all your letters from Mannheim if you'd not already given him a letter of credit? - - Certainly not! The most that he would have done would have been to make enquiries with me first. - - Why did I have to discover that you needed money only when you were in trouble?You wanted to wait to see what the elector gave you . Isn't that so? Perhaps in order to spare me the worry - - but it would have caused me less worry if I'd been told everything honestly and in good time, as I know better than either of you how one must be prepared for all eventualities on such a journey in order not to be placed in some terrible predicament at the very moment when one least expects it. - At such times all your friends disappear! One must be cheerful ; one must enjoy oneself ! But one must also find time to give serious thought to these matters , and this must be your main concern when travelling and when not a single day should be allowed to pass to your disadvantage - - the days slip past - days which are in any case very short at present and which all cost money at an inn. Merciful heavens! You ask me not to speculate now that I'm 450 florins in debt entirely thanks to you two . - And you think that you may be able to put me in a good mood by telling me a hun-dred foolish jokes. I'm pleased that you're in good spirits:but instead of the good wishes set out in the form of the alphabet, I'd have felt happier if you'd told me the reasons for, and the circumstances of, your journey to Weilburg and what you planned to do afterwards and, most of all, if you'd listened to my opinion; and this could have been done before a post day, as you can't only just have hit on the idea, nor can you know independently that the prin-cess is there, unless someone had already suggested the idea to you. In a word, it is no idle speculation when one has something in mind and formulates 2 or 3 plans and makes all the necessary arrangements in advance so that if one plan doesn't work out, one can easily turn to another. Anyone who acts otherwise is an unintelligent or thoughtless person who, especially in today's world , will always be left behind, no matter how clever he is, and who will even be unhappy as he will always be duped by flatterers, false friends and those who envy him. My son, to find one man in a 1000 who is your true friend for rea-sons other than self-interest is one of the greatest wonders of this world . Examine all who call themselves your friends or who make a show of friendship and you'll find the reason why this is so. If they're not motivated by self-interest on their own account, then they'll be acting in the interests of some other friend whom they need; or they are your friends so that by singling you out they can annoy some third party. If nothing comes of Mannheim , you still have your plan to go to Mainz , Frankfurt , Weil-burg , Koblenz etc.; one should always look for places as close to each other as possible so that, if you can, the journeys should be kept short and you can soon get to a place where you'll find a source of income. If this letter doesn't reach you in Mannheim and you're already in Weil-burg , I can't help you. But if you're still in Mannheim and have to leave, then Mama will see from the map that your best plan is to go to Mainz first, otherwise you'll either have to forgo Mainz or retrace your steps a little. In Weil-burg you need to bear in mind that you'll not find a Catholic church there as everyone is Lutheran or Calvinist . So I'd prefer you not to spend too long there.

And who told you that you'd have to go through the forest of Spessart to get from Würzburg to Mannheim as the Spessart is near Aschaffenburg , between Fulda and Frank-furt? - - This is no doubt some other trick that Herr Beecke has played on you. Aschaffenburg and Würzburg are 10 miles apart. - It may be that one drives past the forest on the right-hand side for some hours as one approaches Mannheim. But there's nothing near Würzburg, whether you've been there or not.

NB:I've another observation to make about any jour-ney that you may choose to make from Weilburg to Koblenz , namely, that the road is across country and will be safer than the one from Mainz to Koblenz , which is too near the Rhine. I now want to know all your other plans, I'd never have suspected that my own dear wife wouldn't have given me the occasional accurate account of your travelling expense , as I've twice asked about Albert's bill and should also have been told about the bill from the landlord of the Lamb etc. etc. But I'm not allowed to know about all your expenses. And so I must ask Mama to write me a confidential letter on this point -I don't want a wordy explanation but would just like to see from the landlord's bill how people have been treating you and where all the money has gone . We must now give serious thought to the ways and means of getting you out of the present situation, of travelling as economically as possible and of making sensible arrangements, but at all events you must let me know at once what may be to our detri-ment or advantage. On no account must you sell the chaise. May God keep both you and me well. Nannerl and I kiss you many 100, 000, 000 times. I am your own husband and father.

Mzt

Count Czernin has asked me to give you his best wishes. There was a rumour not only that the archbishop will be sending Haydn to Italy but that he had already wanted to send him to Bozen with Triendl. But Herr Triendl excused himself. I beg you, my dear Wolfg., consider everything and don't always write about things when they're already over and done with. Otherwise we'll all be unhappy.

Leopold Mozart to his son, 5 February 1778, Salzburg

My Dear Son,

In all probability this will be the last letter that you can be certain of receiving from me in Mannheim, and so it is addressed to you alone. How hard it is for me to accept that you're moving even further away from me is something you may perhaps be able to imagine, but you cannot feel as acutely as I do the weight that lies on my mind. If you take the trouble to recall what I did with you two children during your tender youth, you'll not accuse me of timidity but, like everyone else, will concede that I am a man and have always had the courage to risk everything. But I did everything with the greatest caution and consideration that were humanly possible: - one can't prevent accidents, for God alone can foretell the future. Until now, of course, we've been neither happy nor unhappy, but, thanks be to God, we've trodden a middle course. We've tried everything to make you happy and, through you, to make ourselves happier and at least to place your destiny on a firmer footing; but fate was against us. As you know, our last step has left me in very deep waters, and you also know that I'm now around 700 florins in debt and don't know how I shall support myself , your mother and your sister on my monthly income , for as long as I live I cannot hope to receive another farthing from the prince . So it must be clear as day to you that the future fate of your old parents and of your sister, who undoubtedly loves you with all her heart, lies solely in your hands. Ever since you were born and, indeed, before that - in other words, ever since I was married - there is no doubt that I've had a difficult time providing a livelihood for a wife and 7 children, 2 servants and Mama's mother, all on a fixed monthly income of only a little more than 20 florins, and to pay for accouchements, deaths and illnesses, expenses which, if you think them over, will convince you not only that I have never spent a farthing on the least pleasure for myself, but that, without God's special mercy, I'd never have managed to keep out of debt in spite of all my hopes and bitter efforts: yet this is the first time I've been in debt . I gave up every hour of my life to you 2 in the hope of ensuring not only that in due course you'd both be able to count on being able to provide for yourselves but that I too would be able to enjoy a peaceful old age and be accountable to God for my children's education, with no more cares but being able to live solely for my soul's salvation and calmly awaiting my end. But God has willed and ordained that I must once again take on the undoubtedly wearisome task of giving lessons and of doing so, moreover, in a town where these strenuous efforts are so badly paid that it is not possible every month to earn enough to support oneself and one's family . Yet one must be glad and talk oneself hoarse in order to earn at least something . Not only do I not distrust you, my dear Wolfgang, no, not in the very least, but I place all my trust and hope in your filial love: all depends on your good sense, which you certainly have - if only you will listen to it - and on fortunate circumstances. This latter cannot be coerced; but you will always consult your good sense - at least I hope so and beg of you to do so.

You're now entering a completely different world: and you mustn't think that it is simply prejudice that makes me see Paris as such a dangerous place, au contraire - from my own experience I've no reason at all to regard Paris as so very dangerous. But my situation then could not be more different from yours now. We stayed with an ambassador, and on the second occasion in a self-contained apartment; I was a man of mature years and you were children; I avoided all contact with others and in particular preferred not to become over-familiar with people of our own profession ; remember that I did the same in Italy. I made the acquaintance and sought out the friendship only of people of a higher social class - and among these only mature people, not young lads, not even if they were of the foremost rank. I never invited anyone to visit me regularly in my rooms in order to be able to maintain my freedom, and I always considered it more sensible to visit others at my convenience. If I don't like a person or if I'm working or have business to attend to, I can then stay away. - Conversely, if people come to me and behave badly, I don't know how to get rid of them, and even a person who is otherwise not unwelcome may prevent me from getting on with some important work. You're a young man of 22; and so you don't have that earnestness of old age that could deter a young lad of whatever social class, be he an adventurer, joker or fraud and be he young or old, from seeking out your acquaintance and friend-ship and drawing you into his company and then gradually into his plans. One is drawn imperceptibly into this and cannot then escape. I shan't even mention women, for here one needs the greatest restraint and rea-son, as nature herself is our enemy, and the man who does not apply his whole reason and show the necessary restraint will later do so in vain in his attempt to escape from the labyrinth, a misfortune that mostly ends only in death . You yourself may perhaps already have learnt from your limited experience how blindly we may often be taken in by jests, flatteries and jokes that initially seem unimportant but at which reason, when she awakes later on, is ashamed; I don't want to reproach you. I know that you love me not just as your father but also as your staunchest and surest friend; and that you know and realize that our happiness and misfortune and, indeed, my very life - whether I live to a ripe old age or die suddenly - are in your hands as much as God's. If I know you, I can hope for nothing but contentment, and this alone must console me during your absence, when I am deprived of a father's delight in hearing, seeing and embracing you. Live like a good Catholic, live and fear God, pray most fervently to Him in reverence and trust, and lead so Christian a life that, even if I am never to see you again, the hour of my death may be free from care. With all my heart I give you a father's blessing and remain until death your faithful father and surest friend.

Leopold Mozart

Here are our Paris acquaintances, all of whom will be delighted to see you.[.....]

[Leopold's postscript to his wife on the envelope]

My Dear Wife,

As you'll receive this letter on the 11th or 12th and as I doubt whether a further letter will reach Wolfg. in Mann-heim, I'll take my leave of him with this enclosure! I'm writing this with tears in my eyes. Nannerl kisses her dear brother Wolfg. a million times. She would have added a note to my letter and said goodbye, but the letter was already full and in any case I didn't let her read it. We ask Wolfg. to take care of his health and to stick to the diet that he got used to at home ; otherwise he'll have to be bled as soon as he arrives in Paris, everything spicy is bad for him. I expect he'll take with him the big Latin prayer book that contains all the psalms for the full office of Our Lady. If he wants to have the German text of the office of Our Lady in Mannheim in order to have it in German too, he'll have to try to obtain the very smallest format as the Latin psalms are difficult to understand. It would be better if he also had them in German. Learned contrapuntal set-tings of the psalms are also performed at the Concert Spirituel; it's possible to gain a great reputation in this way. Perhaps he could also have his Misericordias performed there. The opera singers aren't coming but have gone instead to Straubing to entertain the Austrian officers. The prince has again forced the magistrature to hold 9 balls, the first one was yesterday and was attended by 30 persons; it lasted till half past one, but not a soul had arrived by half past 9 and it wasn't till 10 that they started dancing; 1 capon and 6 mugs of wine were consumed. I hope you received the 2 sonatas for 4 hands, the Fischer variations and the rondo, which were all parcelled up in the same letter. - - The late Herr Adlgasser hasn't found a decent bellows blower in the afterlife; the cathedral's old bellows blower, the 80-year-old Thomas, has followed him into the next world. The main news is that Mme Barisani has become incredibly jealous of her old and respectable husband as he and Checco have on a handful of occasions been to perform at the home of handsome Herr Freysauff, who has a relatively pretty but witless wife. There was an incredible fuss. Farewell. We kiss you millions of times.

Mzt

Everyone sends their best wishes, especially Herr Bull-inger and the wife of the sergeant of the bodyguards, Herr Clessin , Waberl MÖlk etc.

Mozart to his father, 3 July 1778, Paris

Monsieur

mon très cher Père !

I have some very disagreeable and sad news for you, which is also the reason why I have been unable until now to reply to your last letter of the 11th. -

My dear mother is very ill - she was bled, as usual, and very necessary it was, too; she felt very well afterwards - but a few days later she complained of shivering and feverishness - she had diarrhoea and a headache - at first we just used our home remedies, antispasmodic powder, we'd like to have used the black one too, but we didn't have any and couldn't get any here, it's not known here even under the name of Pulvis epilepticus . - But when things started to get worse - she could hardly speak and lost her hearing so we had to shout - Baron Grimm sent his doctor - she's very weak and is still feverish and delirious - I'm told to be hopeful, but I'm not - for long days and nights I've been hovering between fear and hope - but I've resigned myself to God's will - and I hope that you and my dear sister will do the same; what other means is there to remain calm? - or, rather, calmer, as we can't be entirely calm; - come what may, I feel comforted - because I know that God, who orders every-thing for the best, however contrary it may seem to us, wills it so; for I believe - and I won't be persuaded otherwise - that no doctor, no individual, no misfortune and no accident can give a man his life or take it away, God alone can do that - these are only the instruments that He generally uses, although not always - after all, we can see people fainting, collapsing and dying - once our time comes, all remedies are useless, they hasten death rather than prevent it - we saw this in the case of our late friend Herr Heffner! - I'm not saying by this that my mother will and must die and that all hope is lost - she may yet be hale and hearty again, but only if God so wills it - after praying to my God with all my strength for health and life for my dear mother, I like to think this and derive comfort from such thoughts, as I then feel heartened, calmer and consoled - and you'll easily imagine that I need this! - Now for something different; let's banish these sad thoughts. Let us hope, but not too much; let us put our trust in God and console ourselves with the thought that all is well if it accords with the will of the Almighty as He knows best what is most advantageous and beneficial to our temporal and eternal happiness and salvation -

I've had to write a symphony to open the Concert Spirituel. It was performed to general acclaim on Corpus Christi; I also hear that there was a report on it in the Courrier de l'Europe. - Without exception, people liked it. I was very afraid at the rehearsal as I've never in all my life heard anything worse; you can't imagine how twice in succession they bungled and scraped their way through it. - I was really very afraid - I'd have liked to rehearse it again, but there are always so many things to rehearse and so there was no more time; and so I had to go to bed with a fearful heart and in a discontented and angry frame of mind. The next day I decided not to go to the concert at all; but in the evening the weather was fine and so I decided to go, determined that if it went as badly as it had done during the rehearsal, I'd go into the orchestra, take the fiddle from the hands of the first violin, Herr Lahoussaye, and conduct myself. I prayed to God that it would go well because everything is to His greater glory and honour; and behold, the symphony started, Raaff was standing next to me, and in the middle of the opening allegro there was a passage that I knew very well people were bound to like, the whole audience was carried away by it - and there was loud applause - but as I knew when I wrote it what effect it would produce, I introduced it again at the end - now people wanted to have it encoored. They liked the andante, too, but especially the final allegro - I'd heard that all the final allegros and opening ones too begin here with all the instruments playing together and generally in unison, and so I began mine with 2 violins only, playing piano for 8 whole bars, followed at once by a forte - the audience, as I expected, went 'shush' at the piano - then came the forte - and as soon as they heard it, they started to clap - I was so happy that as soon as the symphony was over I went to the Palais Royal - had a large ice - said the rosary, as I'd promised - and went home - just as I'm always happiest at home and always will be - or with some good, true, honest German who, if he's single, lives on his own as a good Christian or, if married, loves his wife and brings up his children well -

You probably already know that that godless arch - rogue Voltaire has died like a dog, like a beast - that's his reward! - As you say, we owe Tresel her wages for 5 quarters - you'll have realized long ago that I don't like it here - there are many reasons for this, but as I'm here, it would serve no useful purpose to go into them. It's not my fault and never will be, I'll do my very best - well, God will make all things right! - I've something in mind for which I pray to God every day - if it's His divine will, it will happen, if not, then I'm also content - at least I'll have done my part - when all is sorted out and if things work out as I want, you too must do your part or the whole business will be incomplete - I trust in your kind-ness to do so - but for the present you mustn't waste time thinking about it, the only favour I wanted to beg of you now is not to ask me to reveal my thoughts until it's time to do so.

As for the opera, it's now like this. It's very difficult to find a good libretto. The old ones are the best but they're not suited to the modern style, and the new ones are all useless; poetry was the one thing of which the French could be proud but this is now getting worse by the day - and yet poetry is the one thing that must be good here as they don't understand music - there are now 2 aria-based operas that I could write, one en deux actes, the other en trois. The one en deux is Alexandre et Roxane - but the poet who's writing it is still out of town - the one en trois is a translation of Demofonte by Metastasio, com-bined with choruses and dances and in general arranged for the French theatre. Of this I've not yet been able to see anything -

Let me know if you've got Schroeter's concertos in Salzburg. And Hüllmandel's sonatas. - I was thinking of buying them and sending them to you. Both sets of pieces are very fine - I never thought of going to Versailles - I asked Baron Grimm and some other good friends for their advice - they all thought like me.

It's not much money, you have to spend 6 months languishing in a place where you can't earn anything else and your talent lies buried. Anyone in the king's service is forgotten in Paris. And then, to be an organist! - I'd like a decent appointment, but only as a Kapellmeister, and well paid.

Farewell for now - take care of your health, put your trust in God - it's there that you must find consolation; my dear mother is in the hands of the Almighty - if He returns her to us, as I hope, we shall thank Him for this mercy, but if it is His will to take her to Him, our fears and cares and despair will be of no avail - let us rather resign ourselves steadfastly to His divine will, fully con-vinced that it will be for our own good, for He does nothing without good cause - farewell, dearest Papa, keep well for my sake; I kiss your hands 1000 times and embrace my sister with all my heart. I am your most obedient son.

Wolfgang Amadè Mozart

Mozart to his father, 9 July 1778, Paris

Monsieur

mon très cher Père !

I hope that you are prepared to hear with fortitude a piece of news that could not be sadder or more painful - my last letter of the 3rd will have placed you in the position of knowing that the news, when it came, would not be good - that same day, the 3rd, at 10. 21 in the evening, my mother passed away peacefully; - when I wrote to you, she was already enjoying the delights of heaven - by then it was all over - I wrote to you during the night - I hope that you and my dear sister will forgive me this slight but very necessary deception - concluding from my own grief and sadness what yours must be, I couldn't possibly bring myself to spring such a terrible piece of news on you - but I hope that you're both now ready to hear the worst and that, after giving way to natural and only too justified grief and tears, you will eventually resign yourselves to God's will and worship His inscrutable, unfathomable and all-wise providence - you'll easily be able to imagine what I have had to bear - what courage and fortitude I needed to endure it all calmly as things grew progressively worse - and yet God in His goodness granted me this mercy - I have suffered enough anguish and wept enough tears - but what use was it all? - and so I had to console myself; you, my dear father and sister, must do the same! - Weep, weep your fill - but ultimately you must take comfort, - remember that Almighty God willed it so - and what can we do against Him? - We should rather pray and thank Him that it all turned out for the best - for she died a very happy death; - in these sad circumstances, I consoled myself with three things, namely, my entire trust and sub-mission in God's will - then the fact that I was present at so easy and beautiful a death, as I imagined how happy she had become in a single moment - how much happier she is now than we are - so much so that at that moment I wanted to take the same journey as she had just done - in turn this wish and desire gave rise to my third source of consolation, namely, that she is not lost to us for ever - we shall see her again - we shall be happier and more contented to be with her than we have been in this world; we do not know when our time may come - but this is no cause for anxiety - when God wills it, then I too shall will it - well, God's most hallowed will has been done - let us therefore say a devout prayer for her soul and proceed to other matters, there is a time for everything - I'm writing this at the home of Madame d'Épinay and Monsieur Grimm, where I'm now lodging, a pretty little room with a very pleasant view and, so far as my state allows, I'm happy here - it will help me to regain my contentment to hear that my dear father and sister have accepted God's will with composure and fortitude and that they trust in Him with all their hearts in the firm conviction that He orders all things for the best - dearest father! Look after yourself! - Dearest sister - look after yourself - you've not yet enjoyed your brother's kind heart as he's not yet been able to demonstrate it - dearest father and sister - look after your health - remember that you have a son and a brother who is doing everything in his power to make you happy - knowing full well that one day you'll not refuse to grant him his desire and his happiness - which certainly does him honour - and that you'll do everything possible to make him happy - Oh, then we'll live together as peacefully, honourably and contentedly as is possible in this world - and finally, when God wills it, we shall meet again there - for this we are destined and created -

Your last letter of 29 June has arrived safely and I'm pleased to learn that you are both well, all praise and thanks be to God, I couldn't help laughing at your account of Haydn's drunkenness, - if I'd been there, I'd certainly have whispered in his ear: Adlgasser. But it's a disgrace that such an able man should be rendered incapable of performing his duties and have only himself to blame for it - in a post that's in God's honour - when the archbishop and the whole court are there - and the whole church is full of people - it's appalling - this is also one of the main reasons why I detest Salzburg - the coarse, ill-mannered and dissolute court musicians - no honest man of good breeding could live with them; - instead of taking an interest in them, he should be ashamed of them! - also - and this is probably the reason - the musicians aren't very popular with us and are simply not respected - if only the orchestra were organized as it is in Mannheim! - the discipline that obtains in that orchestra! - the authority that Cannabich wields - there everything is taken seriously; Cannabich, who's the best music director I've ever seen, is loved and feared by his subordinates. - He's also respected by the whole town, as are his troops - but they certainly behave very differently - they're well-mannered, dress well, don't frequent taverns and don't get drunk - but this can never be the case with you, unless, that is, the prince trusts you or me and gives us full authority, at least as far as the orchestra is concerned - otherwise it's no good; in Salzburg everyone - or rather no one - bothers about the orchestra - if I were to take it on, I'd have to have a completely free hand - the chief steward should have nothing to say to me on orchestral matters and, indeed, on anything bound up with the orchestra. A courtier can't stand in for a Kapellmeister, though a Kapellmeister could no doubt stand in for a courtier - by the way, the elector is now back in Mannheim - Madame Cannabich and her husband are in correspondence with me. I'm afraid that the orchestra will be much reduced in size, which would be an eternal shame, but if this doesn't happen, I may still remain hopeful - you know that there's nothing I want more than a good position, good in character and good in terms of the money - it doesn't matter where it is - as long as it's in a Catholic area. - You acted in a masterly way, just like Ulysses, throughout the whole affair with Count Starhemberg - only continue as before and don't allow yourself to be taken in - and in particular you should be on your guard if conversation turns to that arrogant goose - I know her, and you can be assured that she has sugar and honey on her lips but pepper in her head and heart - it's entirely natural that the whole business is still open to discussion and that many points must be conceded before I could make up my mind and that even if everything were all right I'd still prefer to be anywhere else but Salzburg - but I don't need to worry, as it's unlikely that everything will be granted to me as I'm asking for so much-. But it's not impossible - I'd not hesitate for a moment if everything were properly organized - if only to have the pleasure of being with you - but if the Salzburgers want me, they must satisfy me and all my wishes - otherwise they'll certainly not get me. - So the abbot of Baumberg has died the usual abbot's death! - I didn't know that the abbot of the Holy Cross had died too - I'm very sorry - he was a good, honest, decent man; so you didn't think that Dean Zöschinger would be made abbot? - Upon my honour, I never imagined it otherwise; I really don't know who else it could have been! - Of course, he's a good abbot for the orchestra! - So the young lady's daily walk with her faith-ful lackey bore fruit after all! - They were certainly busy and haven't been idle - the devil makes work for idle hands: - so the amateur theatricals have finally started up? - But how long will they last? - I don't suppose Countess Lodron will be wanting any more concerts like the last one - Czernin is a young whippersnapper and Brunetti a foul-mouthed oaf.

My friend Raaff is leaving tomorrow; but he's going via Brussels to Aix-la-Chapelle and Spa - and from there to Mannheim; he'll let me know as soon as he gets there, for we intend to stay in touch - he sends you and my sister his good wishes, even though he doesn't know you. You say in your letter that you've heard no more about my composition pupil for a long time - that's true, but what shall I tell you about her? - She's not the sort of person who will ever become a composer - all my efforts are in vain - in the first place, she's thoroughly stupid and also thoroughly lazy - I told you about the opera in my last letter - as for Noverre's ballet, all I've ever said is that he may write a new one - he needed just half a ballet and so I wrote the music for it - in other words, 6 numbers are by others and consist entirely of dreadful old French airs, whereas I've written the symphony and contredanses, making 12 pieces in all - the ballet has already been given 4 times to great acclaim - but I'm now absolutely determined not to write anything else unless I know in advance what I'm going to get for it - I did this just as a favour for Noverre. - Monsieur Wendling left on the last day of May - if I wanted to see Baron Bagge, I'd have to have very good eyes as he's not here but in London - is it possible that I've not already told you this? - You'll see that in future I'll answer all your letters accurately - it's said that Baron Bagge will be returning soon, which I should like very much - for many reasons - but especially because there's always an opportunity at his house to hold proper rehearsals - Kapellmeister Bach will also be here soon - I think he'll be writing an opera - the French are asses and will always remain so, they can do nothing themselves - they have to rely on foreigners. I spoke to Piccinni at the Concert Spirituel - he's very polite to me and I to him - whenever we happen to meet - otherwise I've not made any new acquaintances - either with him or with other composers - I know what I'm doing - and so do they - and that's enough: - I've already told you that my symphony was a great success at the Concert Spirituel. - If I'm asked to write an opera, it'll no doubt be a source of considerable annoyance, but I don't mind too much as I'm used to it - if only the confounded French language weren't such a dastardly enemy of music! - It's pitiful - German is divine in comparison. - And then there are the singers - - they simply don't deserve the name as they don't sing but scream and howl at the tops of their voices, a nasal, throaty sound - I'll have to write a French oratorio for the Concert Spirituel next Lent - the director Legros is amazingly taken with me; I should add that although I used to see him every day, I've not seen him since Easter, I was so annoyed that he'd not performed my sinfonia concertante; I often visited his house in order to see Mon-sieur Raaff and each time had to pass his rooms - on each occasion the servants and maids saw me and on each occasion I asked them to give him my best wishes. - I think it's a shame that he didn't perform it, people would have liked it - but he no longer has any opportunity to do so. Where could he find 4 such people for it? One day, when I was planning to visit Raaff, he wasn't at home but I was assured that he'd soon be back. And so I waited - Monsieur Legros came into the room - it's a miracle that I've finally had the pleasure of seeing you again - yes, I've got so much to do - are you staying for lunch? - I'm sorry, but I've a prior engagement. - Monsieur Mozart, we must spend more time together; - it'll be a pleasure. - Long silence - finally:by the way, won't you write a grand symphony for me for Corpus Christi? - Why not? - But can I rely on it? - Oh yes, as long as I can rely on its being performed - and that it doesn't suffer the same fate as the sinfonia concertante - then the dance began - he apolo-gized as best he could - but there wasn't much he could say - in a word, the symphony was universally liked - and Legros is so pleased that he says it's his best symphony - only the andante hasn't had the good fortune to win his approval - he says it contains too many modulations and that it's too long - but this is because the audience forgot to clap as loudly and make as much noise as they did for the first and final movements - but the andante won the greatest approval from me and from all the connoisseurs and music lovers and most other listeners - it's exactly the opposite of what Legros says - it's entirely natural - and short. - But in order to satisfy him - and, as he claims, several others - I've written another one - each is fitting in its own way - for each has a different character - but I like the last one even more - when I have a moment, I'll send you the symphony, together with the violin tutor, some keyboard pieces and Vogler's

Tonwissenschaft und Tonsezkunst - and I shall then want to know what you think about them - the symphony will be performed for the second time - with the new andante - on 15 August - the Feast of the Assumption - the symphony is in re and the andante in sol - you're not supposed to say D or G here. - Well, Legros is now right behind me. - It's time to start thinking about ending this letter - if you write to me, I think it would be better if you were to do so chez Monsieur Le Baron de Grimm, Chaus-sée d'Antin près le Boulevard - Monsieur Grimm will be writing to you himself very shortly. He and Madame d'Épinay both ask to be remembered to you and send you their heartfelt condolences - but they hope that you will be able to remain composed in the face of a matter that can't be changed - take comfort - and pray fervently, this is the only expedient that is left to us - I was going to ask you to have Holy Masses said at Maria Plain and Loreto - I've also done so here. As for the letter of rec-ommendation for Herr Beer, I don't think it'll be necessary to send it to me - I still haven't met him; I know only that he's a good clarinettist but a dissolute companion - I don't like associating with such people - it does one no credit; and I've no wish to give him a letter of recommendation - I'd be truly ashamed to do so - even if he could do something for me! - But he's by no means respected - many people haven't even heard of him - Of the 2 Stamitzes, only the younger one is here - the older (the real composer à la Hafeneder) is in London - they're 2 wretched scribblers - and gamblers - drunkards - and whoremongers - not the kind of people for me - the one who's here has scarcely a decent coat to his back - by the way, if things don't work out with Brunetti, I'd very much like to recommend a good friend of mine to the arch-bishop as first violin, a decent, honest, upstanding man - a stolid individual; - I'd put him at around 40 - a widower - he's called Rothfischer - he's concert master to the princess of Nassau-Weilburg at Kirchheimbolanden - between ourselves, he's dissatisfied as the prince doesn't like him - or rather he doesn't like his music - he's com-mended himself to me and it would give me real pleasure to help him - he's the best of men. - Adieu. I kiss your hands 100, 000 times and embrace my sister with all my heart. I am your most obedient son.

Wolfgang Amadè Mozart

Leopold Mozart to his wife and son, 13 July 1778, Salzburg

My Dear Wife and Son,

In order not to miss your name day, my dear wife, I'm writing to you today, even though the letter will no doubt arrive a few days early. I wish you a million joys in being able to celebrate it once more and ask Almighty God to keep you well on this day and for many years to come and allow you to live as contented a life as is possible in this inconstant world theatre. I'm absolutely convinced that for you to be truly happy you need your husband and daughter. God in His unfathomable decree and most holy providence will do what is best for us. Would you have thought a year ago that you'd be spending your next name day in Paris? - - However incredible this would have seemed to many people then, although not to our-selves, it is possible that with God's help we may be reunited even before we expect it: for my one concern is that I am separated from you and living so far away , so very far away from you ; otherwise we're well, God be praised! We both kiss you and Wolfgang a million times and beg you above all to take great care of your health. - The theatre of war has finally opened ! In Paris you'll already know that on the 5th of this month the king of Prussia entered Bohemia from Glatz and that he's passed through Nachod and penetrated as far as Königgrätz. War was bound to break out as neither power could withdraw its armies without losing face. For several weeks Austria, with its marches and countermarches, has provided the king with occasional opportunities to make an incursion and launch an attack: but the king didn't think it advisable to undertake such an attack; now the emperor has established a very powerful false arsenal at Nachod, and this persuaded the king to attack. But the arsenal was a feint and contained only a semblance of the real thing. They had to take this risk, whatever the outcome, as Austria was neither able nor willing to be the aggressor, while the Croats were merely an advance guard (the only position in which they can really be used) and could barely be restrained any longer, as these people always hope to win booty, which is why they're so keen to go to war. The Saxon troops have formed an alliance with Prussia, and it's presumably true that they've joined forces with Prince Heinrich and will no doubt attack Eger and the Upper Palatinate. More news will no doubt arrive with the next post: this came with the Austrian post on the 11th. This war will be one of the bloodiest, the king wants to die a glorious death, and the emperor wants to start his army life on an equally glorious note.

I wrote the foregoing yesterday , the 12th . This morning, the 13th, shortly before 10 o'clock, I received your distressing letter of 3 July. You can well imagine how we are both feeling. We wept so much that we could scarcely read your letter. - And your sister! - Great God in your mercy! May your most hallowed will be done! My dear son! For all that I am resigned as far as possible to God's will, you'll none the less find it entirely human and natural that I'm almost unable to write for weeping. What am I to conclude from all this? Only that even as I write these lines, she is presumably already dead - or that she has recovered, for you wrote on the 3rd and today is already the 13th. You say that after being bled she felt well, but that a few days later she complained of shivering and feverishness. The last letter from the two of you was dated 12 June, and in it she wrote I was bled yesterday :so that was the 11th - and why was it done on a Saturday - a fast day? - - I expect she ate some meat. She waited too long to be bled. Knowing her very well, I remember that she likes to put things off, especially in a foreign place, where she'd first have to enquire after a surgeon. Well, so the matter stands - it can't be helped any longer - I have complete confidence in your filial love and know that you have taken all possible care of your mother, who is undoubtedly good, and that if God restores her to us, you will always continue to do so - your good mother, who always saw you as the apple of her eye and whose love for you was exceptional, who was exceedingly proud of you and who - I know this better than you - lived for you alone. But if all our hopes are in vain! Could we really have lost her! - Good God! You need friends , honest friends ! Other-wise you'll lose everything, what with the funeral expenses etc. My God! There are many expenses about which you know nothing and where strangers are cheated - taken for a ride - tricked - put to unnecessary expense and exploited if they don't have honest friends: you can have no conception of this. If this misfortune has befallen you, ask Baron Grimm if you can store your mother's effects at his house, so that you don't have to keep an eye on so many things: or lock everything up, because if you're often away for whole days at a time, people could break into your room and rob you. God grant that all my pre-cautions are unnecessary: but you will recognize your father in this. My dear wife! My dear son! - as she fell ill a few days after being bled, she must have been ill since 16 or 17 June. But you waited too long - she thought she'd get better through bed rest - by dieting - by her own devices, I know how it is, one hopes for the best and puts things off: but, my dear Wolfgang, diarrhoea when one has a fever requires a doctor to know if the fever should be reduced or allowed to run its course as medicines designed to reduce the temperature cause an increase in diarrhoea: and if the diarrhoea is stopped at the wrong time, the materia peccans leads to gangrene. - God! We are in your hands.

Congratulations on the success of your symphony at the Concert Spirituel. I can imagine how anxious you must have been. - Your determination to rush out into the orchestra if things hadn't gone well was presumably just a wild idea. God forbid! You must put this and all such notions out of your head; they're ill considered, such a step would cost you your life, which no man in his right senses risks for a symphony. - Such an affront - and a public affront to boot - would inevitably be avenged by the sword not just by a Frenchman but by all who value their honour. An Italian would say nothing but would lie in wait at a street corner and shoot you dead. - From Munich I've received reliable reports that Count Seeau has been confirmed as intendant of music for Munich and Mannheim; that a list of all the orchestral players has been sent to Mannheim; that the two orchestras will be combined and the worst players weeded out; Herr Wotschitka and the other valets de chambre have been pensioned off on a pension of 400 florins, which surprises me; Dr Sänfftel had the effrontery to demand 3000 florins for his treatment, whereupon he was stripped of his title and salary; finally, it is hoped in Munich that the elector and his wife, the electress, will be back in Munich with their entire court by 10 August. - I began this letter with my congratulations, - and Nannerl was planning to end it with her own. But, as you can imagine, she's incapable of writing a single word, now that she has to write - each letter that she's supposed to write down brings a flood of tears to her eyes. You, her dear brother, must take her place, if - as we hope and desire - you can still do so.

But no! You can no longer do so - she has passed away - you are trying too hard to console me, no one is as eager as that unless driven to it quite naturally by the loss of all human hope or by the event itself. I'm now going to have some lunch, though I don't suppose I'll have much of an appetite.

I'm writing this at half past 3 in the afternoon. I now know that my dear wife is in heaven. I'm writing this with tears in my eyes but in total submission to God's will! Yesterday was the annual celebration of the dedication of the Holy Trinity, so our usual target practice was post-poned till today. I was unable to cancel it at such a late hour and didn't want to either, in spite of your sad letter. We ate little, but Nannerl, who had cried a lot before lunch, was violently sick and had a terrible headache, so she went to lie down on her bed. Herr Bullinger and the rest of them found us in this deeply distressing situation. Without saying a word, I gave him your letter to read, and he acted his part very well and asked me what I thought of it. I told him that I was firmly convinced that my dear wife was already dead: he said that he was indeed inclined to suspect as much himself; and he then comforted me and as a true friend told me all that I had already told myself. I made an effort to cheer up and to remain so, while submitting to God's most holy will, we finished our target practice and everyone left, feeling very saddened, Herr Bullinger remained with me and, without appearing to do so, asked me if I thought that there was any hope in the condition that had been described to us. I replied that I thought that not only was she now dead but that she was already dead on the day you wrote your letter; that I had submitted to the will of God and had to remember that I still had 2 children who I hoped would continue to love me inasmuch as I lived only for them; that I was so firmly convinced that she was dead that I'd even written to you, reminding you to take care of her succession etc. To this he said, yes, she's dead. At that moment the scales fell from my eyes, scales that had been put in place by this sudden and unexpected turn of events, preventing me from seeing what had happened, for otherwise I'd have quickly suspected that you'd secretly written the truth to Herr Bullinger as soon as I'd read your letter. But your letter had really stunned me - at first I was too dumbfounded to be able to think properly. Even now I still don't know what to write! You don't need to worry about me; I shall play the man. But just think of your mother's tender love for you and you'll realize how much she cared for you - just as when you reach maturity you'll love me more and more after my death - if you love me-as I do not doubt - you should take care of your health, -my life depends on yours , as does the future support of your sister, who honestly loves you with all her heart. It is unbelievably difficult when death severs a good and happy marriage, but you have to experience that for your-self to know it. - Write and tell me all the details ; perhaps she wasn't bled enough? - - The only thing that's certain is that she trusted too much in herself and called in the doctor too late; meanwhile the inflammation of her intestines gained the upper hand.Take good care of your health ! Don't make us all unhappy! Nannerl doesn't yet know about Bullinger's letter, but I've already prepared her to believe that her dear mother is dead. - Write to me soon - tell me everything - when she was buried - and where. - - Good God! To think that I'll have to go to Paris in search of my dear wife's grave! - We kiss you both with all our heart. I must close as the post is leaving. Your honest and utterly distraught father

维洛那二士

[II,iii, 1-30] [1] 跟随其主人普洛丢斯外出旅行之前，小男仆朗斯向他的家人告别，所有人对他的离开都表达了足够多的悲伤和不舍，除了“人类最好的朋友”。

哎哟，我到现在才哭好呢，咱们朗斯一族里的人都有这个心肠太软的毛病。我像《圣经》上的浪子一样，派到了我的一份家产，现在要跟着普洛丢斯少爷上京城里去。我想我的狗克来勃是最狠心的一条狗。我的妈眼泪直流，我的爸涕泗横流，我的妹妹放声大哭，我家的丫头也号啕喊叫，就是我们养的猫儿也悲伤得乱搓两手，整个家弄得七零八乱，可是这条狠心的恶狗却不流一点儿泪。他是一块石头，像一条狗一样没有心肝；就是犹太人，看见我们分别的情形，也会禁不住流泪的；看我的老祖母吧，她眼睛早已盲了，可是因为我要离家远行，也把她的眼睛都哭瞎了呢。我可以把我们分别的情形扮给你们看。这只鞋子算是我的父亲；不，这只左脚的鞋子是我的父亲；不，不，这只左脚的鞋子是我的母亲；不，那也不对。-哦，不错，对了，这只鞋子底已经破了，它已经穿了一个洞，它就算是我的母亲；这一只是我的父亲。他妈的！就是这样。这一根棒是我的妹妹，因为她就像百合花一样的白，像一根棒那样的瘦小。这一顶帽子是我家的丫头阿南。我就算是狗；不，狗是他自己，我是狗-哦，狗是我，我是我自己。对了，就是这样。现在我走到我父亲跟前：“爸爸，请你祝福我。”现在这只鞋子就要哭得说不出一句话来；然后我就要吻我的父亲，他还是哭个不停。现在我再走到我的母亲跟前；唉！我希望她现在能够像一个木头人一样开起口来！我就是这么吻了她，她的一口气这么喘上喘下的。现在我要到我妹妹跟前，你瞧她哭得多么伤心！可是这条狗站在旁边瞧着我一把一把眼泪挥在地上，却始终不流一点儿泪也不说一句话。

[II,iv, 190-212] 普洛丢斯本来爱的是裘丽亚，但现在又被他密友的恋人雪尔薇亚迷得神魂颠倒。他既无法理解自己的感情为何如此易变，也不知如何为之辩护。

正像一阵更大的热焰压盖住原来的热焰，一枚大钉敲落了小钉，我的旧日的恋情，也因为一个新的对象而完全冷却了。是我的眼睛在作祟吗？还是因为伐伦泰因把她说得天花乱坠？还是她的真正的完美使我心醉？或者是我的见异思迁的罪恶，使我全然失去了理智？她是

美丽的，我所爱的裘丽亚也是美丽的；可是我对于裘丽亚的爱已经成为过去了，那一段恋情就像投入火中的蜡像，已经全然熔解，不留一点儿原来的痕迹。好像我对于伐伦泰因的友谊已经突然冷淡，我不再像从前那样喜爱他了；啊，这是因为 I 太过于爱他的爱人了，所以我才对他毫无好感。我这样不假思索地爱上了她，如果跟她相知渐深之后，更将怎样为她倾倒？我现在看见的只是她的外相，可是那已经使我的理智的灵光晕眩不定，那么当 I 在看到她内心的美好时，我一定要变成盲目了。我要尽力克制我的罪恶的恋情；否则就得设计赢取她的芳心。

[II,vi, 1-38]随着他的爱情越发炽烈，困境也变得越深。普洛丢斯试图平衡爱意和对友人的忠诚两方面的要求，却发现自己早已被种种繁复纠缠的情感束缚住了。

舍弃我的裘丽亚，我就要违背了盟誓；恋爱美丽的雪尔薇亚，我也要违背了盟誓；中伤我的朋友，尤其违背了盟誓。爱情的力量当初使我信誓旦旦，现在却又诱令我干犯三重的寒盟大罪。动人灵机的爱情啊！你已经引诱我犯罪，现在教我怎样为自己辩解吧。我最初爱慕的是一颗闪烁的星星，如今崇拜的是一个中天的太阳；无心中许可的誓愿，可以有意把它毁弃不顾；只有没有智慧的人，才会迟疑于善恶二者间的选择。呸，呸，不敬的唇舌！她是你从前用两万遍以灵魂做证的盟言，甘心供她驱使的，现在怎么好把她加上恶名！我不能朝三暮四转爱他人，可是 I 已经变了心了；可是 I 现在所爱的，才是真正值得 I 爱的。I 失去了裘丽亚，失去了伐伦泰因；要是 I 继续对他们忠实，I 必须失去我自己。I 失去了伐伦泰因，换来了我自己；失去了裘丽亚换来了雪尔薇亚：爱情永远是自私的，我自己当然比一个朋友更为宝贵，裘丽亚在天生丽质的雪尔薇亚相形之下，不过是一个黝黑的丑妇。我要忘记裘丽亚尚在人间，记着 I 对她的爱情已经死去；我要把伐伦泰因当作敌人，努力取得雪尔薇亚更甜蜜的友情。要是 I 不用些诡计破坏伐伦泰因，I 就无法贯彻自己的心愿。

[V,iv, 1-12]以为自己情场失意的伐伦泰因，在孤独中找到了慰藉。

习惯是多么能够变化人的生活！在这座浓荫密布人迹罕至的荒林里，我觉得要比人烟繁杂的市镇里舒服得多。I 可以在这里一人独坐，和着夜莺的悲歌调子，泄吐我的怨恨忧伤。唉，我那心坎儿里的人儿呀，不要长久抛弃你的殿堂吧，否则它会荒芜而颓圯，不留下一点儿可以供人凭吊的痕迹的！我这破碎的心，是要等着你来修补呢，雪尔薇亚！你这温柔的女神，快来安慰你的寂寞孤零的恋人呀！

驯悍记

[IV,i, 174-97]披特鲁乔开始告诉观众他打算如何驯服桀骜不驯的凯萨琳娜，让她屈从于自己的意志——他要用猎手驯服一只猎鹰或鹞子的方式制服她。

我已经巧妙地开始把她驾驭起来，希望能够得到美满的成功。我这头悍鹰现在非常饥饿，在她没有俯首听命以前，不能让她吃饱；我必须一眼不放松地注意着她，就像她是头乱扑翅膀的倔强的鹞子一样。今天她没有吃过肉，明天我也不给她吃；昨夜她不曾睡觉，今夜我也不让她睡觉，我要故意嫌被褥铺得不好，把枕头枕垫被单线毯满房乱丢。还说都是为了爱惜她才这样做的；总之她将要整夜不能合眼，倘然她昏昏思睡，我就骂人吵闹，吵得她睡不着。这是用体贴为名惩治妻子的法子，我就这样克制她的狂暴倔强的脾气；要是有人知道还有比这更好的驯悍妙法，那么我倒要请教请教。

血海歼仇记

（原名：泰脱斯·安特洛尼格斯）

[II,i, 1-24]哥特族皇后坦摩拉的摩尔情人亚伦在坦摩拉与罗马皇帝撒脱尼纳斯的婚姻中看到了自己的机会，决定从此不做卑贱的奴隶，而要成为主人。

现在坦摩拉已经登上了奥林帕斯的峰巅，命运的箭镞再也不会伤害她；她高踞宝座，不受震雷闪电的袭击，脸色惨白的妒忌不能用威胁加到她的身上。正像金色的太阳向清晨敬礼，用他的光芒镀染海洋，驾着耀目的云车从黄道上飞驰疾过，高耸霄汉的山峰都在他的俯瞰之下；坦摩拉也正是这样，人世的尊荣听候着她的智慧的使唤，正义在她的颀蹙之下屈躬战栗。那么，亚伦鼓起你的勇气，现在正是你攀龙附凤的机会。你的主后已经长久成为你的俘虏，用色欲的锁链镣铐她自己，被亚伦的迷人的目光紧紧捆束，比缚在高加索山上的普洛密修斯 [2] 更难脱身；你只要抱着向上的决心，就可以升到和她同样高的位置。脱下奴隶的服装，摈弃卑贱的思想！我要大放光辉，满身插戴起耀目的金珠来，伺候这位新膺恩命的皇后。

[2] 普洛密修斯，现通常译作“普罗米修斯”，希腊神话中半神性之巨人，因盗窃神火，为宙斯锁系于高加索山上。（说明：书中脚注除特别标明之外，均为译者注。）

爱的徒劳

[III,i, 170-202]裴朗是个妙语连珠的才子，自知的愤世嫉俗者，此前总是对“恋爱”的念头不屑一顾。然而他却发现自己也被邱必特大人的神箭射中，陷入爱恋，不能自拔。

而我，-确确实实，我是在恋爱了！我曾经鞭责爱情；我是捉拿相思的捕快；我把刻毒的讥刺加在那个比一切人类更伟大的孩子的身上，像一个守夜的警吏一般监视他的行动，像一个尊严的塾师一般呵斥他的错误！这个盲目的，哭笑无常的，淘气的孩子，这个少年的前辈，矮小的巨人，邱必特先生；统治着一切恋爱的诗句，交叉的手臂，叹息，呻吟，一切无聊的踟躅和欲望的悲愤的无上的君主，总辖天下痴男怨女的唯一的主宰和伟大的元帅；啊，我的小小的心！我却要高举他的旗帜，在他的战场上充当一名士卒！什么，我！我恋爱！我追求！我要找寻一个妻子！一个像一座永远需要修理的时钟般的女人，你不去留心她就会出了毛病！嘿，最不该的是叛弃了誓约；而且在三个之中，我偏偏爱上了最坏的一个：一个伶俐风骚的姑娘，她的眼睛像两颗乌黑的弹丸；凭着上天起誓，即使百眼的巨人阿格斯把她终日监视，她也什么都干得出来。我却要为她叹息！为她整夜不睡！为她祷告神明！罢了，这是邱必特给我的惩罚，因为我藐视了他的全能的小小的威力。好，我要恋爱、写诗、叹息、祷告、追求和呻吟；谁都有他心爱的姑娘，我的爱人也该有个痴心的情郎。

仲夏夜之梦

[I,i, 226-45]海冷娜发现曾一度恋慕自己美貌的情郎，如今却移情于其密友黑美霞。她不由得感慨起爱情的善变、横暴与不义。

有些人比起其他的人来是多么幸福！在全雅典大家都以为我跟她一样美；但那有什么相干呢？第米屈律斯是不以为如此的；除了他一个人之外大家都知道的事情，他不会知道。正如他那样错误地迷恋着黑美霞的秋波一样，我也是只知道爱慕他的才智；一切卑劣的弱点，在恋爱中都无足重轻，而变成美满和庄严。爱情是不用眼睛，而用心灵看着的，因此生着翼膀的邱必特常被描成盲目；而且爱情的判断全然没有理性，是翼膀不是眼睛表示出鲁莽的迅速，因此爱神便据说是一个孩儿，因为在选择方面他常会弄错。正如顽皮的孩子惯爱发假誓一样，司爱情的小儿也到处赌着口不应心的咒。第米屈律斯在没有看见黑美霞之前，他也曾像雨雹一样发着誓，说他是完全属于我的；但这阵冰雹一感到一丝黑美霞身上的热力，他便融解了，无数的盟言都化为乌有。

罗密欧与朱丽叶

[II,ii, 2-25]罗密欧望见他眼中的明星在夜空中出现，于是开始滔滔不绝地发表天文学感想——对于冷冰冰的月神黛安娜，处女童贞的卫护者，他说了些很是不客气的话。

轻声！那边窗子里亮起来的是什么光？那就是东方，朱丽叶就是太阳！起来吧，美丽的太阳！赶走那妒忌的月亮，她因为她的女弟子比她美得多，已经气得面色惨白了。既然她这样妒忌着你，你不要皈依她吧；脱下她给你的这一身惨绿色的贞女的道服，它是只配给愚人穿着的。那是我的意中人，啊，那是我的爱！唉，但愿她知道我在爱着她！她欲言又止，可是她的眼睛已经道出了她的心事。待我去回答她吧；不，我不要太鲁莽，她不是对我说话。天上两颗最灿烂的星，因为有事离去，请求她的眼睛替代它们在空中闪耀。要是她的眼睛变成了天上的星，天上的星变成了她的眼睛，那便怎样呢？她脸上的光辉会掩盖了星星的明亮，正像灯光在朝阳下黯然失色一样；在天上的她的眼睛，会在太空中大放光明，使鸟儿们误认为黑夜已经过去而展开它们的歌声。瞧！她用纤手托住了脸庞，那姿态是多么美妙！啊，但愿我是那一只手的手套，好让我亲一亲她脸上的香泽！

[II,ii, 33-49]完全没意识到有人在偷听自己讲话，朱丽叶对着夜空倾吐羡慕心意，自以为只是在独白。但她的话却已经被自己所钟情的对象听去了。

罗密欧啊，罗密欧！为什么你偏偏是罗密欧呢？否认你的父亲，抛弃你的姓名吧；也许你不愿意这样做，那么只要你宣誓做我的爱人，我也不愿再姓凯普莱脱了。

罗 （旁白）我是继续听下去呢，还是现在就对她说话？

朱 只有你的名字才是我的仇敌，你即使不姓蒙太玖，仍然是这样的一个人。姓不姓蒙太玖又有什么关系呢？它又不是手，又不是脚，又不是手臂，又不是脸孔，又不是身体上任何其他的部分。啊！换一个姓名吧！姓名本来是没有意义的；我们叫作玫瑰的这一种花，要是换了个名字，它的香味还是同样的芬芳；罗密欧要是换了别的名，他的可爱的完美也绝不会有丝毫改变。罗密欧，抛弃了你的名字吧；我愿意把我整个的心魂，赔偿你这一个身外的空名。

[III,ii, 1-31]等待情郎前来约会的朱丽叶一心只盼夜晚快点来

临，催促为太阳神驾车穿越天穹的骏马快点奔跑。

朱 快快跑过去吧，踏着火云的骏马，把太阳拖回到它的安息的所在；但愿驾车的腓通 [3] 鞭策你们飞驰到西方，让阴沉的暮夜赶快降临。展开你密密的帷幕吧，成全恋爱的黑夜！遮住夜行人的眼睛，让罗密欧悄悄地投入我的怀里，不被人看见也不被人谈论！恋人们可以在他们自身美貌的光辉里互相缱绻；即使恋爱是盲目的，那也正好和黑夜相称。来吧，温文的夜，你朴素的黑衣妇人，教会我怎样在一场全胜的赌博中失败，把各人纯洁的童贞互为赌注。用你黑色的罩巾遮住我脸上羞怯的红潮，等我深藏内心的爱情慢慢儿胆大起来，不再因为在行动上流露真情而惭愧，来吧，黑夜！来吧，罗密欧！来吧，你黑夜中的白昼！因为你将要睡在黑夜的翼上，比乌鸦背上的新雪还要皎白。来吧，柔和的黑夜！来吧，可爱的黑颜的夜，把我的罗密欧给我，等他死了以后，你再把带他去，分散成无数的星星，把天空装饰得如此美丽，使全世界都恋爱着黑夜，不再崇拜炫目的太阳。啊！我已经买下了一所恋爱的华厦，可是它还不曾属我所有；虽然我已经把自己出卖，可是还没有被买主领去。这日子长得真叫人厌烦，正像一个做好了新衣服的小孩，在节日的前夜焦躁地等着天明一样。

[3] 腓通是希腊日神赫里俄斯儿子，与其父驾驭日车。

无事烦恼

[II,iii, 8-33]裴尼狄克自己以嘲弄作为铠甲抵御邱必特的箭矢，同时感叹爱情可以制造何等奇迹，即使聪慧明理如他的朋友克劳第奥也难以幸免。

我真不懂一个人明明知道沉迷在恋爱里是一件多么愚蠢的事，可是在讥笑他人的浅薄无聊以后，偏偏会自己打自己的耳光，照样跟人家闹起恋爱来；克劳第奥就是这种人。从前我认识他的时候，战鼓和军笛是他的唯一的音乐；现在他却宁愿听小鼓和洞箫了。从前他会跑十里路去看一身好甲冑；现在他却会接连十个晚上不睡觉，为了设计一身新的紧身衣的式样。从前他说起话来，总是直截爽快，像个老老实实的军人；现在他却变成了个秀才先生，满嘴都是些稀奇古怪的话儿。我会不会也变得像他一样呢？我不知道；我想不至于。我不敢说爱情不会叫我变成一只牡蛎；可是我可以发誓，在它没有把我变成牡蛎以前，它一定不能叫我变成这样一个傻瓜。好看的女人，聪明的女人，贤惠的女人，我都碰见过，可是我还是原来的我；除非在一个女人身上能够集合一切女人的优点，否则没有一个女人会中我的意的。她一定要有钱，这是不用说的；她必须聪明，不然我就不要；她必须贤惠，不然我也不敢领教；她必须美貌，不然我看也不要看她；她必须温柔，否则不要叫她走近我的身旁；她必须有很好的人品，否则我不愿花十先令把她买下来；她必须会讲话，精音乐，而且她的头发必须是天然的颜色。

该撒遇弑记

[II,i, 10-34]因其情怀高绝、目标宏大而变得不择手段的勃鲁脱斯说，该撒必须要死。无论该撒的个人品质如何，只要他活着，就是对自由的威胁。

勃 只有叫他死这一个办法；我自己对他并没有私怨，只是为了大众的利益。他将要戴上王冠；那会不会改变他的性格是一个问题；蝮蛇是在光天化日之下出现的，所以步行的人必须刻刻提防。让他戴上王冠？-不！那等于我们把一个毒刺给了他，使他可以随意加害于人。把不忍之心和威权分开，那威权就会被人误用；讲到该撒这个人，说一句公平话，我还不知道他什么时候曾经受他的感情的支配甚于他的理智。可是微贱往往是少年的野心的阶梯，凭借着它一步步爬上了高处；当他一旦登上了最高的一级之后，他便不再回顾那梯子，他的眼光仰望着云霄，瞧不起他从前所恃为凭借的低下的阶段。该撒何尝不会这样？所以，为了恐怕他有这一天，必须早一点儿防备。既然我们反对他的理由，不是因为他现在有什么可以指责的地方，所以就得这样说：他在现在的地位之上，要是再扩大了他的权力，一定会引起这样这样的后患；我们应当把它当作一颗蛇蛋，与其让它孵出以后害人，不如趁它还在壳里的时候就把它杀死。

[II,i, 61-9]勃鲁脱斯称，凯歇斯暗中怂恿的话语，在他自己心中掀起了一场战争。

自从凯歇斯怂恿我反对该撒那一刻起，我一直没有睡过。在计划一件危险的行动和开始行动之间的一段时间里，一个人就好像置身于一场可怖的噩梦之中，遍历种种的幻象；他的精神和身体上的各部分正在彼此磋商；整个的身心像一个小小的国家，临到了叛变突发的前夕。

[II,i, 77-85]心情忐忑的勃鲁脱斯问道，如果我们的事业是正义的，为什么谋划时如此见不得人？

阴谋啊！你在百鬼横行的夜里，还觉得不好意思显露你的险恶的容貌吗？啊！那么你在白天什么地方可以找到一处幽暗的巢窟，遮掩你的奇丑的脸相呢？不要找寻吧，阴谋，还是把它隐藏在和颜悦色的后面；因为要是您用本来面目招摇过市，即使幽冥的地府也不能把你遮掩过人家的眼睛的。

[III,i, 254-75]在声言要与该撒的谋杀者和解后，玛格斯·安东尼话锋一转，开始用全然不同的语言形容他被害的朋友的尸身。

啊！你这一块流血的泥土，有史以来一个最高贵的英雄的遗体，恕我跟这些屠夫们曲意周旋。愿灾祸降于溅泼这样宝贵的血的凶手！你的一处处伤口，好像许多无言的嘴，张开了它们殷红的嘴唇，要求我的舌头替它们向世人申诉；我现在就在这些伤口上预言：一个咒诅将要降临在人们的肢体上，残暴惨酷的内乱将要使意大利到处陷于混乱；流血和破坏将要成为一时的风尚，恐怖的景象将要每天被人们亲眼所见，以至于做母亲的人看见她们的婴孩被战争的魔手所肢解，也会毫不在乎地付之一笑；人们因为习惯于残杀，一切怜悯之心将要完全灭绝；该撒的冤魂借着从地狱的烈火中出来的哀提 [4] 的协助，将要用一个君王的口气，向罗马的全境发出屠杀的号令，让战争的猛犬四处蹂躏，为了这一个万恶的罪行，大地上将要弥漫着呻吟求葬的肉体的腐臭。

[4] 哀提（Ate），现通常译作阿忒，是希腊神话中诱人或神失去理智而发狂的女神。-编者注

皆大欢喜

[III, ii, 1-10] 鄂兰陀受了爱情的鼓舞，决心在森林里的每棵树上刻写和悬挂他所爱之人的芳名。

悬在这里吧，我的诗，证明我的爱情；
你三重王冠的夜间的女王，请临视 [5]，
从苍白的昊天，用你那贞洁的眼睛，
那支配我生命的，你那猎伴的名字 [6]。
啊，罗瑟琳！这些树林将是我的书册，
我要在一片片树皮上镂刻下相思，
好让每一个来到此间的林中游客，
随处见得到颂赞她美德的言辞。
走，走，鄂兰陀；去在每株树上刻着伊，
那美好的，幽娴的无可比拟的人儿。

[5] 三重王冠的女王指黛安娜女神，因为她在天上为月神，在地上为狩猎女神，在幽冥为死亡女神。

[6] 黛安娜又为司狩猎的女神，又为处女的保护神，故鄂兰陀以罗瑟琳为她的猎伴。

汉姆莱脱 [7]

[I,ii, 129-59]发现自己的父亲被害，而且母亲没出几星期就改嫁他人，汉姆莱脱王子对生命感到无助的狂怒，对他而言，生命中除了绝望已经一无所有。

啊，但愿这一个太坚实的肉体会融解，消散，化成一堆露水！或者那永生的真神不会制定禁止自杀的律法！上帝啊！上帝啊！人世间的一切在我看来是多么可厌陈腐，乏味而无聊！哼！哼！那是一个荒芜不治的花园，长满了恶毒的莠草。想不到居然会有这种事情！刚死了两个月！不，两个月还不满！这样好的一个国王，比起这一个来，简直是天神和丑怪；这样爱我的母亲，甚至于不愿让天风吹痛了她的脸庞。天上和地下！我必须记着吗？嘿，她会偎依在他的身旁，好像吃了美味的食物，格外促进了食欲一般；可是，只有一个月的时间，我不能再想下去了！脆弱啊，你的名字就是女人！短短的一个月以前她哭得像个泪人儿似的，送我那可怜的父亲下葬；她在送葬的时候所穿的那双鞋子现在还没有破旧，她就，她就，-上帝啊！一头没有理性的畜生也要悲伤得长久一些，-她就嫁给我的叔父，我的父亲的弟弟。可是他一点儿不像我的父亲，正像我一点儿不像赫邱利斯一样。只有一个月的时间，她那流着虚伪之泪的眼睛还没有消去它们的红肿，她就嫁了人了。啊，罪恶的匆促，这样迫不及待地钻进了乱伦的衾被！那不是好事，也不会有好结果；可是碎了吧，我的心，因为我必须噤住我的嘴！

[I,v, 92-112]得到父亲的鬼魂“记着我”的命令后，汉姆莱脱向所有的神灵和魔鬼发誓永远不忘。

天上的神明啊！地啊！再有什么呢？我还要向地狱呼喊吗？啊，呸！忍着吧，忍着吧，我的心！我的全身的筋骨，不要一下子就变得衰老，支持着我的身体呀！记着你！是的，你可怜的亡魂，当记忆不曾从我这混乱的头脑里消失的时候，我会记着你的。记着你！是的，我要从我的记忆的碑板上，拭去一切琐碎愚蠢的记录，一切书本上的格言，一切陈言套语，一切过去的印象，我的少年的阅历所留下的痕迹，只让你的命令留在我的脑筋的书卷里，不掺杂一丝下贱的废料；是的，上天为我做证！啊，最恶毒的妇人！啊，奸贼，奸贼，脸上堆着笑的万恶的奸贼！我的写字板呢？我必须把它记下来：一个人尽管满面都是笑，骨子里却是杀人的奸贼；至少我相信在丹麦是这样的。

(写字)好,叔父,我把你写下来了。现在我要记下我的话,那是,“再会,再会!记着我”。我已经发过誓了。

[II,ii, 547-603]伶人投入的表演让汉姆莱脱为自己无法在现实中采取行动,为父亲报仇而深感羞惭,但同时他也看到了一个机会,可以让戏剧表演为自己的计谋服务。

啊,我是一个多么不中用的蠢材!这一个伶人不过在一本虚构的故事、一场激昂的幻梦之中,却能够使他的灵魂融化在他的意象里,在它的影响之下,他的整个的脸色变得惨白,他的眼中洋溢着热泪,他的神情流露着仓皇,他的声音是这么呜咽凄凉,他的全部动作都表现得和他的意象一致,这不是很不可思议的吗?而且一点儿也不为了什么!为了赫邱琶!赫邱琶对他有什么相干,他对赫邱琶又有什么相干,他却要为她流泪?要是他也有了像我所有的那样使人痛心的理由,他将要怎样呢?他一定会让眼泪淹没了舞台,用可怖的字句震裂了听众的耳朵,使有罪的人发狂,使无罪的人骇愕,使愚昧无知的人惊慌失措,使所有的耳目迷乱了它们的功能。可是我,一个糊涂颠倒的家伙,垂头丧气,一天到晚像在做梦似的,忘记了杀父的大仇;虽然一个国王给人家用万恶的手段掠夺了他的权位,杀害了他的最宝贵的生命,我却始终哼不出一句话来。我是一个懦夫吗?谁骂我恶人?谁敲破我的脑壳?谁拔去我的胡子,把它吹在我的脸上?谁扭我的鼻子?谁当面指斥我胡说?谁对我做这种事?吓!我应该忍受这样的侮辱,因为我是一个没有心肝,逆来顺受的怯汉,否则我早已用这奴才的尸肉,喂肥了四境之内的乌鸢了。嗜血的,荒淫的恶贼!狠心的,奸诈的,淫邪的,悖逆的恶贼!啊!复仇!-嗨,我真是蠢材!我的亲爱的父亲被人谋杀了,鬼神都在鞭策我复仇,我这做儿子的却像一个下流女人似的,只会用空言发发牢骚,学起泼妇骂街的样子来,真是了不得的勇敢!呸!呸!活动起来吧,我的脑筋!我听人家说,犯罪的人在看戏的时候,因为台上表演的巧妙,有时会激动天良,当场供认他们的罪恶;因为暗杀的事情无论干得怎样秘密,总会借着神奇的喉舌泄露出来。我要叫这班伶人在我的叔父面前表演一本跟我的父亲的惨死情节相仿的戏剧,我就在一旁窥察他的神色;我要窥视到他的灵魂的深处,要是他稍露惊骇不安之态,我就知道我应该怎么办。我所看见的幽灵也许是魔鬼的化身,借着一个美好的形状出现,魔鬼是有这一种本领的;对于柔弱忧郁的灵魂,他最容易发挥他的力量;也许他看准了我的柔弱和忧郁,才来向我作祟,要把我引诱到沉沦的路上。我要先得到一些比这更切实的证据;凭着这一本戏,我可以发掘国王内心的隐秘。

[III,i, 56-88]汉姆莱脱思考自杀。

生存还是毁灭，这是一个值得考虑的问题；默然忍受命运的暴虐的毒箭，或是挺身反抗人世的无涯的苦难，在奋斗中结束了一切，这两种行为，哪一种是最勇敢的？死了，睡去了-什么都完了-要是在这一种睡眠之中，我们心头的创痛，以及其他无数血肉之躯所不能避免的打击，都可以从此消失，那正是我们求之不得的结局。死了，睡去了；睡去了也许还会做梦。嗯，阻碍就在这儿：因为当我们摆脱了这一具朽腐的皮囊以后，在那死的睡眠里，究竟将要做些什么梦，那不能不使我们踌躇顾虑。人们甘心久困于患难之中，也就是为了这一个缘故；谁愿意忍受人世的鞭挞和讥嘲，压迫者的凌辱，傲慢者的冷眼，被轻蔑的爱情的惨痛，法律的迁延，官吏的横暴和微贱者费尽辛勤所换来的鄙视，要是他只要用一柄小小的刀子，就可以清算他自己的一生？谁愿意负着这样的重担，在烦劳的生命的迫压下呻吟流汗，倘不是因为惧怕不可知的死后，那从来不曾有一个旅人回来过的神秘之国，是它迷惑了我们的意志，使我们宁愿忍受目前的磨折，不敢向我们所不知道的痛苦飞去？这样理智使我们全变成了懦夫，决心的炽热的光彩，被审慎的思维盖上了一层灰色，伟大的事业在这一种考虑之下，也会逆流而退，失去了行动的意义。

[III,ii, 395-406]为了让自己进入利于行动的心理状态，汉姆莱脱准备先去正面申斥他母亲对父亲犯下的罪行。

现在是一夜之中最阴森的时候，鬼魂都在此刻从坟墓里出来，地狱也要向人世吐放戾气；现在我可以痛饮热腾腾的鲜血，干那白昼所不敢正视的残忍的行为。且慢！我还要到我的母亲那儿去一趟。心啊！不要失去你的天性之情，永远不要让尼罗 [8] 的灵魂潜入我这样坚定的胸怀；让我做一个凶徒，可是不要做一个逆子。我要用利剑一样的话刺痛她的心，可是绝不伤害她身体上一根毛发；我的舌头和灵魂要在这一次学学伪善者的样子，无论在言语上给她多么严厉的谴责，在行动上却要做得丝毫不让人家指摘。

[III,iii, 36-72]篡位者（同时也是汉姆莱脱的继父）克劳狄斯在祈祷时承认了自己可怖的罪行，同时也承认自己无法为之忏悔。

我的罪恶的戾气已经上达于天；我的灵魂上负着一个元始以来最初的咒诅，杀害兄弟的暴行！我不能祈祷，虽然我的愿望像决心一样强烈；我的更坚强的罪恶击败了我的坚强的意愿。像一个人同时要两件事情，我因为不知道应该先从什么地方下手而徘徊歧途，结果反弄得一事无成。要是这一只可咒诅的手上染满了一层比它本身还厚的兄弟的血，难道天上所有的甘霖，都不能把它洗涤得像雪一样洁白吗？慈悲的使命，不就是宽宥罪恶吗？祈祷的目的，不是一方面预防我们的堕落，一方面救拔我们于已堕落之后吗？那么我要仰望上天；

我的过失已经消灭了。可是唉！哪一种祈祷才是我所适用的呢？“求上帝赦免我的杀人重罪”吗？那不能，因为我现在还占有着那些引起我的犯罪动机的目的物，我的王冠，我的野心，我的王后。非分攫取的利益还在手里，就可以幸邀宽恕吗？在这贪污的人世，罪恶的镀金的手也许可以把公道推开不顾，暴徒的赃物往往就是枉法的贿赂；可是天上却不是这样的，在那边一切都无可遁避，任何行动都要显现它的真相，我们必须当面为我们自己的罪恶做证。那么怎么办呢？还有什么法子好想呢？试一试忏悔的力量吧。什么事情是忏悔所不能做到的？可是对于一个不能忏悔的人，它又有什么用呢？啊，不幸的处境！啊，像死亡一样黑暗的心胸！越是挣扎，越是不能脱身的胶住了的灵魂！救救我，天使们！试一试吧：弯下来，顽强的膝盖；钢丝一样的心弦，变得像新生之婴的筋肉一样柔嫩吧！但愿一切转祸为福！

[III,iii, 73-95]汉姆莱脱遇见独自祈祷，无人在旁保护的克劳迪斯，意识到这是个刺杀他的绝好时机。但他停下了，害怕他会因此将一个本该下地狱受罚的灵魂送进天堂。

他现在正在祈祷，我正好动手；我决定现在就干，让他上天堂去，我也算报了仇了。不，那还要考虑一下：一个恶人杀死我的父亲；我，他的独生子，却把这个恶人送上天堂。啊，这简直是以恩报怨了。他用卑鄙的手段，在我父亲罪孽深重的时候乘其不备地把他杀死；虽然谁也不知道在上帝面前，他的生前的善恶如何相抵，可是照我们一般的推想，他的业债多半是很重的。现在他正在洗涤他的灵魂，要是我在这时候结果了他的性命，那么天国的路是为他开放着，这样还算是复仇吗？不，收起来，我的剑，等候一个更惨酷的机会吧；当他在酒醉以后，在愤怒之中，或是在荒淫纵欲的时候，在赌博，咒骂，或是其他邪恶的行为的中间，我就要叫他颠踬在我的脚下，让他幽深黑暗不见天日的灵魂永堕地狱。

[IV,iv, 32-66]听闻别人为了争夺一块小小的土地要发动战争，汉姆莱脱又为自己连最重的欺辱都无法为之复仇而感到羞惭不安。

我所见到听到的一切，都好像在对我谴责，鞭策我赶快进行我的蹉跎未就的复仇大愿！一个人要是在他生命的盛年，只知道吃吃睡睡，他还算是个什么东西？简直不过是一头畜生！上帝造下我们来，使我们能够这样高谈阔论，瞻前顾后，当然要我们利用他所赋予我们的这一种能力和灵明的理智，不让它们白白废掉。现在我明明有理由，有决心，有力量，有方法，可以动手干我所要干的事，可是我还是在说一些空话，“我要怎么怎么干”，而始终不曾在行动上表现出来；我不知道这是为了鹿豕一般的健忘呢，还是为了三分懦怯一分智慧的过于审慎顾虑。像大地一样显明的榜样都在鼓励我；瞧这一支勇

猛的大军，领队的是一个娇养的少年王子，勃勃的雄心振起了他的精神，使他蔑视不可知的结果，为了区区弹丸大小的一块不毛之地，拼着血肉之躯，去向命运、死亡和危险挑战。真正的伟大不是轻举妄动，而是在荣誉遭遇危险的时候，即使为了一根稻秆之微，也要慷慨力争。可是我的父亲给人惨杀，我的母亲给人污辱，我的理智和感情都被这种不共戴天的大仇所激动，我却因循隐忍，一切听其自然，看着这两万人为了博取一个空虚的名声，视死如归地走下他们的坟墓里去，目的只是争夺一方还不够作为他们埋骨之所的土地，相形之下，我将何地自容呢？从这一刻起，让我摒除一切的疑虑妄念，把流血的思想充满在我的脑际！

第十二夜

[II,ii, 17-41]假扮成少年男子的薇娥拉收到美丽的奥丽薇霞送来的爱情赠礼——奥丽薇霞谎称自己只是把它“还给”对方——并惊叹于英俊潇洒的外形对女人竟然会有这么大的魅力。

我没有留下戒指呀；这位小姐是什么意思？但愿她不要迷恋了我的外貌才好！她把我打量得那么仔细；真的，我觉得她看得我那么出神，连自己讲的什么话儿也顾不到了，那么没头没脑颠颠倒倒的。一定的，她爱了我啦；情急智生，才差这个无礼的使者来邀请我。不要我主人的戒指！嘿，他并没有把什么戒指送给她呀！我才是她意中的人；真是这样的话，-事实上确是这样，-那么可怜的小姐，她真是做梦了！我现在才明白假扮的确不是一回好事情，魔鬼会乘机大显他的身手。一个又漂亮又靠不住的男人，多么容易占据了女人家柔弱的心！唉！这都是我们生性脆弱的缘故，不是我们自身的错处；因为上天造下我们是哪样的人，我们就是哪样的人。这种事情怎么了结呢？我的主人深深地爱着她；我呢，可怜的小鬼，也是那样恋着他；我呢，认错了人，似乎在恋着我。这怎么了呢？因为我是个男人，我绝不能叫我的主人爱上我；因为我是个女人，唉！可怜的奥丽薇霞也要白费无数的叹息了。

这纠纷要让时间来理清；

叫我打开这结儿怎么成！

特洛埃围城记

（原名：特洛埃勒斯与克蕾雪达）

[I,i, 91-106] 尽管他的城邦正在与希腊人交战，特洛埃王子特洛埃勒斯认为，一切纷争都无法将他的注意力从爱人克蕾雪达身上引开——他的怒气只会留给为他传情达意的难对付的信使潘达勒斯。

别闹，你们这些聒耳的喧哗！别闹，粗暴的声音！两方面都是些傻瓜！无怪海伦是美丽的，因为你们每天用鲜血涂着她的红颜。我不能为了这一个理由去和人家作战；它对于我的剑是一个太贫乏的题目。可是潘达勒斯-天啊！你是多么作弄着我！我要向克蕾雪达传达我的情愫，只有靠着潘达勒斯的力量；可是央他去说情，他自己就是这么难说话，克蕾雪达又是那么凛若冰霜，把一切哀求置之不闻。爱坡罗 [9]，为了你的达芬 [10] 的爱，告诉我，克蕾雪达是什么，潘达勒斯是什么，我们都是些什么？她的眠床就是印度；她睡在上面，是一颗无价的明珠；一道汹涌的波涛隔开在我们的中间；我是个采宝的商人，这个潘达勒斯便是我的不可靠的希望，我的载登彼岸的渡航。

[I,ii, 281-95] 克蕾雪达也觉得必须要通过一个中间人来传达情意不太方便，但她足够精明，不会屈服于特洛埃勒斯的追求，轻易委身于他。她发觉，爱情和任何战争一样，是一场力量的博弈。

言语，盟誓，礼物，眼泪，以及恋爱的全部祭礼，他都借着别人的手向我呈献过了；然而我从特洛埃勒斯本身所看到的，比之从潘达勒斯的谰辞的镜子里所看到的，还要清楚千倍。可是我却还不能就答应他。女人在被人追求的时候是个天使；无论什么东西，一到了人家手里，便一切都完了；无论什么事情，也只有在正在进行的时候兴趣最为浓厚。一个被人恋着的女子，要是不知道男人重视未获得的事物，甚于既得的事物，她就等于一无所知；一个女人要是以为恋爱在达到目的以后，还是像热情未获满足以前一样的甜蜜，那么她一定从来不曾有过恋爱的经验。所以我从恋爱中间归纳出这一句箴言：既得之后是命令，未得之前是请求。虽然我的心里装满了爱情，我却不让我的眼睛泄露我的秘密。

[III,ii, 16-27] 特洛埃勒斯已然被预期中将要到来的爱情冲昏了头脑，他确信自己在爱情真的来临时一定会经受不住它的强烈冲击——实际上，他会被快乐摧毁，就像死在战场上一样。

我觉得眼前迷迷糊糊的，期望使我的头脑打着回旋。想象中的美味是这样甘芳，它迷醉了我的神经。要是我的生津的齿颊果然尝到了

经过三次提炼的爱情的旨酒，那就该怎样呢？我怕我会死去，昏昏沉沉地倒下去不再醒来；我怕那种太微妙渊深的快乐，调和在太芳冽的甘美里，不是我的粗俗的感官所能经受；我怕，我更怕在无边的幸福之中，我会失去一切的知觉，正像大军冲锋，敌人披靡的时候，每个人都忘记了自己一样。

量罪记

[II,ii, 162-87]所有官员中最虔信，最道貌岸然的安哲鲁声称自己抗拒了所有女性的诱惑，但唯独不可抗拒地被贞洁的依莎贝拉吸引。

什么？这是哪里说起？是她的错处？还是我的错处？诱惑的人和受诱惑的人，哪一个更有罪？嘿！她没有错，她也没有引诱我。像芝兰旁边的一块臭肉，在阳光下蒸发腐烂的是我，芝兰却不曾因为枯萎而失去了芬芳，难道一个贞淑的女子，比那些狂花浪柳更能引动我们的情欲吗？难道我们因为缺少荒芜的旷地，必须把圣殿拆毁，种植我们的罪恶吗？呸！呸！呸！安哲鲁，你在干些什么？你是个什么人？你因为她的纯洁而对她爱慕，因为爱慕她而必须玷污她的纯洁？啊，让她的弟弟活命吧！要是法官自己也偷窃人家的东西，那么盗贼是可以振振有词的。啊！我竟是这样爱她，所以才想再听见她说话，饱餐她的美色吗？我在做些什么梦？狡恶的魔鬼为了引诱圣徒，会把圣徒做他钩上的美饵；因为爱慕纯洁的事物而驱令我们犯罪的诱惑，才是最危险的。娼妓用尽她天生的魅力，人工的狐媚，都不能使我的心中略起微波，可是这位贞淑的女郎却把我完全征服了。我从前看见人家为了女人发痴，总是讥笑他们，想不到我自己也会有这么一天！

[II,iv, 1-17]安哲鲁惧怕，自己对依莎贝拉不被准许的感情，会使他的宗教信仰顷刻间成为笑柄。

我每次要祈祷沉思的时候，我的心思总是纷乱无主：上天所听到的只是我的口不应心的空言，我的精神却贯注在依莎贝拉身上；上帝的名字挂在我的嘴边咀嚼，心头的欲念，兀自在那里奔腾。我已经厌倦于我所矜持的尊严，正像一篇大好的文章一样，在久读之后也会使人掩耳；现在我宁愿把我这岸然道貌，去换一根因风飘荡的羽毛。什么地位！什么面子！多少愚人为了你还虚伪的外表而凜然生畏，多少聪明人为了它而俯首帖服！可是人孰无情，不一定出角的才是魔鬼呢。

奥瑟罗

[III,iii, 255-74]奥瑟罗被埃古包藏祸心的欺骗性暗示与自己的嫉妒心蒙蔽了双眼，他此时已经在信里准备将他的爱人苔丝德梦娜视为背叛了自己的人——不是真正忠诚的猎鹰，而是一只“没有被驯服的野鹰”。

这是一个非常诚实的家伙，对于人情世故实在是熟悉不过的了。要是我能证明她是一只没有被驯服的野鹰，虽然我用自己的心弦把她系住，我也要放她随风远去，追寻她自己的命运。也许因为我生得黑丑，缺少绅士们温柔风雅的谈吐，也许因为我年纪老了点儿-虽然还不算顶老-所以她才会背叛我，我已经自取其辱，只好割断对她这一段痴情。啊，结婚的烦恼！我们可以在名义上把这些可爱的人儿称为我们所有，却不能支配她们的爱憎喜恶。我宁愿做一只虾蟆，呼吸牢室中的浊气，也不愿占住了自己心爱之物的一角，让别人把它享用。可是就算是权贵也不能幸免灾祸，他们并不比贫贱者享有更多的特权。那是像死一样不可逃避的命运，我们一生下来就已经冥冥中注定了的。

[V,ii, 1-22]只因着自己疯狂的嫉妒心，在没有确凿证据的情况下，奥瑟罗就确信自己的妻子不忠。于是他决心要杀死苔丝德梦娜。

只是为了这一个原因，只是为了这一个原因，我的灵魂！纯洁的星星啊，让我不要向你们说出它的名字！只是为了这一个原因……可是不愿溅她的血，也不愿毁伤她那比白云更皎洁、比石膏更腻滑的肌肤。可是她不能不死，否则她将要陷害更多的男子。让我熄灭了这一盏灯，然后我就熄灭你的生命的火焰。融融的灯光啊，我把你吹熄以后，要是我心生后悔，仍旧可以把你重新点亮；可是你，造化最精美的粉本啊，你的火焰一旦熄灭，我不知道什么地方有那天上的神火，能够燃起你的原来的光彩！我摘下了蔷薇，就不能再给它已失的生机，只好让它枯萎凋谢；当它还在枝头的时候，我要嗅一嗅它的芳香。（吻苔）啊，甘美的气息！你几乎诱动公道的心。使她折断她的利剑了！再一个吻，再一个吻。愿你到死都是这样；我要杀死你，然后再爱你。再一个吻，这是最后的一吻了；这样销魂，却又是这样无比的惨痛！我必须哭泣，然而这些是无情的眼泪。她醒来了。

终成眷属

[I,i, 78-97]海伦那知道自己应该将悲伤的泪水留给自己刚刚去世的父亲，然而她发现，自己心中对贝特兰的汹涌爱意已经压倒了对父亲的哀悼之情。

唉！要是真不过如此就好了。我没有想到我的父亲；我这些滔滔的眼泪，虽然好像是一片孺慕的哀忱，却不是为他而流。他的容貌怎样，我也早就忘记了，在我的想象之中，除了贝特兰以外没有别人的影子。我现在一切都完了！要是贝特兰离我而去，我还有什么生趣？我正像爱上了一颗灿烂的明星，痴心地希望着有一天能够和他结婚，他是这样高不可攀；我不能逾越我的名分和他亲近，只好在他的耀目的光华下，沾取他的几分余辉，安慰安慰我的饥渴。我的爱情的野心使我备受痛苦，希望和狮子匹配的驯鹿，必须为爱而死。每时每刻看见他，是愉快也是苦痛；我默坐在他的旁边，在心板上深深地刻画着他的秀曲的眉毛，他的敏锐的眼睛，他的迷人的鬃发。他那可爱的脸庞上的每一根线条，每一处微细的特点都会清清楚楚地摄在我的心里。可是现在他去了，我的爱慕的私衷，只好以眷怀旧日的陈迹为满足。

黄金梦

[IV,i, 1-41]在将一笔巨大的财富全部花在款待宾客和赠送礼物上之后，因慷慨而变得一贫如洗的泰门发现昔日所谓的“朋友”们全都离弃了自己。他对人类的世界彻底失望了，跑到城外郊野的树林里生活。在他进入林中之前，最后望了一眼家乡雅典，并对那里的人们发出这样的咒诅。

让我回头瞧瞧你。城啊，你包藏着如许的豺狼，快快陆沉吧，不要再替雅典做藩篱！已婚的妇人们，淫荡起来吧！子女们不要听父母的话！奴才们和傻瓜们，把那些年高德劭的元老们拉下来，你们自己坐上他们的位置吧！娇嫩的处女变成人尽可夫的娼妓，在你们父母的跟前跟别人奸通吧！破产的人，不要偿还你们的欠款，用刀子割破你们债主的咽喉吧！仆人们，放手偷窃吧！你们庄严的主人都是借着法律的名义杀人越货的大盗。婢女们，睡到你们主人的床上去吧；你们的主妇已经做卖淫妇去了！十六岁的儿子，夺下你步履龙钟的老父手里的拐杖，把他的脑浆敲了出来吧！孝亲敬神的美德，和平公义的正道，齐家睦邻的要义，教育，礼仪，百工的技巧，尊卑的品秩，风俗，习惯，一起陷于混乱吧！加害于人身各种瘟疫，向雅典伸展你们的毒手，播散你们猖獗传染的热病！让风湿钻进我们那些元老的骨髓，使他们手脚瘫痪！让淫欲放荡占领我们那些少年人的心，使他们反抗道德，沉溺在狂乱之中！在每一个雅典人身上播下疥癣疮毒的种子，让他们一个个害起了癩病！让他们的呼吸中都含着毒素，谁和他们来往做朋友的都会中毒而死！除了我这赤裸裸的一身以外，我什么也不要带走，你这可憎的城市！我给你的只有无穷的咒诅！泰门要到树林里去，和最凶恶的野兽做伴侣，比起无情的人类来，它们是要善良得多了。天上一切神明听着我，把那城墙内外的雅典人一起毁灭了吧！求你们让泰门把他的仇恨扩展到全体人类，不分贵贱高低！阿门。

[IV,iii, 1-45]在人类的世界中，决定地位高低的是财富而非真正的价值。泰门一边抨击着世界的丑恶不公，一边挖取地里的树根来填饱肚子，却意外地挖出了金子。此时，他对这“最卑下的金属”“人尽可夫的娼妇”充满了怨恨和冷嘲。

神圣的化育万物的太阳啊！把地上的瘴雾吸起，让天空中弥漫着毒气吧！同生同长，同居同宿的孪生兄弟，也让他们各人去接受不同

的命运，让那贫贱的被富贵的所轻蔑吧。重视伦常天性的，必须遍受各种颠沛困苦的凌虐，灭伦悖义的才会安享荣华。让乞儿跃登高位，大臣退处贱职吧；元老必须世代受人贱视，乞儿必须享受世袭的光荣。有了丰美的牧草，牛儿自然肥胖；缺少了饲料它就会瘦瘠下来。谁敢秉着光明磊落的胸襟挺身而出，说，“这人是一个谄媚之徒”？要是有一个人是谄媚之徒，那么谁都是谄媚之徒；因为每一个按照财产多寡区分的阶级，都要被次一阶级所奉承；博学的才人必须向多金的愚夫鞠躬致敬。在我们万恶的天性之中，一切都是歪曲偏斜的，一切都是奸邪淫恶。所以，让我永远厌弃人类的社会吧！泰门憎恨形状像人一样的东西，他也憎恨他自己；愿毁灭吞噬了整个人类！泥土，给我一些树根充饥吧！（掘地）谁要是希望你给他一些更好的东西，你就用你最猛烈的毒物满足他的口味吧！噢，这是什么？金子！黄黄的，发光的，宝贵的金子！不，天神们啊，我不是一个游手好闲的信徒；我只要你们给我一些树根！这东西，只这点点儿，就可以使黑的变成白的，丑的变成美的，错的变成对的，卑贱变成尊贵，老人变成少年，懦夫变成勇士。吓！你们这些天神们啊，为什么要给我这东西呢？嘿，这东西会把你们的祭司和仆从从你们的身旁拉走，把健汉头颅底下的枕垫抽去；这黄色的奴隶可以使异教联盟，同宗分裂；它可以使受咒诅的人得福，使害着灰白色癩病的人为众人所敬爱；它可以使窃贼得到高爵显位，和元老们分庭抗礼；它可以使鸡皮黄脸的寡妇重做新娘，即使她的尊容可以使身染恶疮的人见了呕吐，有了这东西也会恢复三春的娇艳。来，该死的土块，你这人尽可夫的娼妇，你惯会在乱七八糟的列国之间挑起纷争，我倒要让你去施展一下你的神通。

李尔王

[I,ii, 1-22]私生子凭什么比合法的儿子卑贱？葛罗斯脱的私生子爱特门决定，自己在行为上绝不会尊重合法嫡子埃特加先天优越的权利。

大自然，你是我的女神，我愿意在你的法律之前俯首听命。为什么我要受世俗的排挤，让世人的歧视剥夺我的应享的权利，只因为我比一个哥哥迟生了一年或是十四个月？为什么他们要叫我私生子？为什么我比人家卑贱？我的壮健的体格，我的慷慨的精神，我的端正的容貌，哪一点比不上正夫人的公子？为什么他们要给我加上庶出，贱种，私生子的恶名？贱种，贱种；贱种？难道在热烈兴奋的奸情里生下的孩子，倒不及拥着一个毫无欢趣的老婆，在半睡半醒之间制造出来的那一批蠢货？好，合法的埃特加，我一定要得到你的土地；我们的父亲欢喜他的私生子爱特门，正像他欢喜他的合法的嫡子一样。好听的名词，“合法”好；我的合法的哥哥，要是这封信发生效力，我的计策能够成功，瞧着吧，庶出的爱特门将要把合法的嫡子盖罩在他的下面-那时候我可要扬眉吐气啦，帮助帮助私生子吧！

[II,iii, 1-21]父亲因受了私生子弟爱特门的欺骗，下令逮捕埃特加，于是埃特加被迫伪装逃命。他觉得自己身边发生的一切如此疯狂，以至于他想不到什么伪装能比一个四处流浪的疯乞丐更合适的了。

听说他们已经发出告示捉我，幸亏我躲在一株空心的树干里，没有给他们找到。没有一处城门可以出入无阻：没有一个地方不是警卫森严，准备把我捉住！为了保全自己的生命起见，我想还不如改扮作一个最卑贱穷苦，最为世人所轻视，和禽兽相去无几的家伙；我要把污泥涂在脸上。一块毡布裹住我的腰，把满头的头发打了许多乱结，赤身裸体抵抗着风雨的侵没。这地方本来有许多疯乞丐，他们高声叫喊，用针哪，木槌哪，钉子哪，迷迭香的树枝哪，刺在他们麻木而僵硬的手臂上，用这种可怕的形状，到那些穷苦的农场，乡村，羊棚和磨坊里去，有时候发出一些疯狂的咒诅，有时候向人哀求祈祷，乞讨一些布施。我现在学着他们的样子一定不会引起人家的疑心。可怜的疯叫花！可怜的汤姆！倒有几分像；我现在不再是埃特加了。

[IV,i, 1-9]仍然处于疯乞丐伪装下的埃特加，对自己稳居社会底层地位这个事实感到欣慰。

与其被人在表面上恭维而背地里鄙弃，那么还是像这样自己知道为举世所不容的好。一个最困苦最微贱最为命运所屈辱的人，可以永远抱着希冀而无所恐惧；从最高的地位上跌落下来，那变化是可悲的，对于穷困的人，命运的转机却能使他欢笑！

[III,iv, 28-36]因着自己的落难，李尔开始思考他的国家里穷人的悲惨境遇。

衣不蔽体的不幸的人们，无论你们在什么地方忍受着这样无情的暴风雨的袭击，你们的头上没有片瓦遮身，你们的腹中饥肠雷鸣，你们的衣服千疮百孔，怎么抵挡得了这样的气候呢？啊！我一向太不关心这种事情了。安享荣华的人们啊，睁开你们的眼睛来，替这些不幸的人们设身处地想一想，分一些你们享用不了的福泽给他们，让上天知道你们不是全无心肝的人吧！

麦克佩斯

[I,v, 36-52]麦克佩斯夫人意识到，只需一场谋杀就能让自己的丈夫坐上苏格兰的王位——而刚好国王邓根今晚要来他们的城堡做客。

报告邓根走进我这堡门来送死的乌鸦，它的叫声是嘶哑的。来，注视着人类恶念的魔鬼们！解除我的女性的柔弱，用最凶恶的残忍自顶至踵贯注在我的全身；凝结我的血液，不要让悔恨通过我的心头，不要让天性中的恻隐摇动我的狠毒的决意！来，你们这些杀人的助手，你们无形的躯体散满在空间，到处找寻为非作恶的机会，进入我的妇人的胸中，把我的乳水当作胆汁吧！来，阴沉的黑夜，用最昏暗的地狱中的浓烟罩住你自己，让我的锐利的刀瞧不见它自己切下的伤口，让青天不能从黑暗的重衾里探出头来，高喊着：“住手，住手！”

[I,vii, 1-28]在妻子将谋杀邓根的念头放进他的脑海中之后，麦克佩斯思考自己将要犯下的罪行，并为其之巨大和不可饶恕而感到惊骇。

要是干了以后就完了，那么还是快一点儿干；要是凭着暗杀的手段，可以攫取美满的结果；要是这一刀砍下去，就可以完成一切，终结一切；要是我们就可以在这里跳过时间的浅滩，展开生命的新页……可是在这种事情上，我们往往可以看见冥冥中的裁判；教唆杀人的人，结果反而自己被人所杀；把毒药投入酒杯里的人，结果也会自己饮鸩而死。他到这儿来是有两重的信任：第一，我是他的亲戚，又是他的臣子，按照名分绝对不能干这样的事；第二，我是他的主人，应当保障他的身体的安全，怎么可以自己持刀行刺？而且这个邓根秉性仁慈，处理国政，从来没有过失，要是把他杀死了，他的生前的美德将要像天使一般发出喇叭一样清澈的声音，向世人昭告我的弑君重罪；怜悯像一个御气而行的天婴，将要把这可憎的行为揭露在每一个人的眼中，使眼泪淹没了天风。没有一种力量可以鞭策我前进，可是我的跃跃欲试的野心，却不顾一切地驱着我去冒颠蹶的危险。

[II,i, 33-64]麦克佩斯试图坚定自己杀邓根的决心时几近谵妄，谋杀想象和实际谋杀行为之间的区别在他的头脑里渐渐模糊。

在我面前摇晃着，它的柄对着我的手的，不是一把刀子吗？来，让我抓住你。我抓不到你，可是仍旧看见你。不祥的幻象，你只是一

件可视不可触的东西吗？或者你不过是一把想象中的刀子，从谄热的脑筋里发出来的虚妄的意匠？我仍旧看见你，你的形状正像我现在拔出的这一把刀子一样明显。你指示着我所要去的方向，告诉我应当用什么利器。我的眼睛倘不是受了其他知觉的愚弄，就是兼领了一切感官的机能。我仍旧看见你；你的刃上和柄上还流着一滴一滴刚才所没有的血。没有这样的事；杀人的恶念使我看见这种异象。现在在半个世界上，大自然似乎已经死去，罪恶的梦景扰乱着平和的睡眠，作法的巫覡在向惨白的赫凯梯献祭；形容枯瘦的杀人犯，听到了替他巡风的豺狼的噪声，像一个鬼似的向他的目的地蹑足跨步前进。坚固结实的大地啊，不要听见我的脚步声音，知道它们是到什么地方去的，我怕路上的砖石会泄露了我的行踪。我正在这儿威胁他的生命，他却在那儿活得好好的；在紧张的行动中间，言语是多么软弱无力。（钟声）我去，就是这么干；钟声在招引我。不要听见它，邓根，这是召唤你上天堂或者下地狱的丧钟。

[V,v, 17-28]听闻妻子的死讯，麦克佩斯缩进了自己的内心世界中，悲叹自己为之战斗和杀戮过的一切终究都是徒劳，毫无意义。

她应该迟一点儿再死；现在不是应该让我听见这个消息的时候。明天，明天，再一个明天，一天接着一天地蹑步前进，直到最后一秒钟的时间；我们所有的昨天，不过替傻子们照亮了到死亡的土壤中去的路。熄灭了吧，熄灭了吧，短促的烛光！人生不过是一个行走的影子，一个在舞台上指手画脚的拙劣的伶人，登场了片刻，就在无声无息中悄然退下；它是一个愚人所讲的故事，充满着喧哗和骚动，找不到一点儿意义。

女王殉爱记

（原名：安东尼与克莉奥佩屈拉）

[IV,xiv, 44-54]在与他的埃及情人争吵并分开之后，安东尼听到她死去的消息，精神一下子被击垮了（尽管后来这死讯被证明不是真的）。他自己也打算寻死。他决定，两人将会在来生重会，就像迦太基女王黛陀和特洛埃英雄依尼阿斯一样。

我要追上你，克莉奥佩屈拉，流泪请求你的宽恕。在生命的长途上，现在只留下了痛苦；火炬既然已经熄灭，还是静静地躺下来，不要深入迷途了。一切的辛勤徒然毁坏了自己所成就的事业；纵然有盖世的威力，免不了英雄失路的悲哀；从此一切撒手，也可以省下多少麻烦。埃洛斯！-我来了，我的女王！-埃洛斯！等一等我。在灵魂们偃息在花朵里的乐园之内，我们将要携手相亲，用我们活泼的神情引起幽灵们的注目；黛陀和她的依尼阿斯将要失去追随的一群，到处都是我们遨游的地方。

沉珠记

(原名：泰尔亲王配力克斯)

[I,i, 122-43]配力克斯惊骇而恐惧地意识到他的求婚对象与其父亲——伟大的安替奥克斯国王有着乱伦关系。

殷勤的礼貌把罪恶掩盖得多么巧妙！正像一个伪君子一样，除了一副仁义的假面具以外，便没有一毫可取的地方。要是我果然理解错了，那么你当然不会是那样的坏人，因为淫邪的欲望而出卖你的灵魂；可是现在你是父亲又是儿子，因为你非礼拥抱了你的女儿，那种快乐是应该让一个丈夫享受，不应该让一个父亲享受的；她是吃她母亲血肉的人，因为她玷污了她母亲的枕席；两人都像毒蛇一样，虽然吃的是芬芳的花草，它们的身体内却藏着毒液。安替奥克斯，再会吧！因为智慧告诉我，凡是能够动手干那些比黑夜更幽暗的行为而不知惭愧的人，一定会不惜采取任何的手段，把它竭力遮掩。一件罪恶往往引起第二件，奸淫和杀人正像火焰和烟气一样互相联系。毒药和阴谋是罪恶的双手，犯罪者遮羞的武器；为了免得我的生命遭人暗算，我要赶快逃出这危险的陷阱。

[II,i, 1-11]配力克斯痛斥毁坏其船只的风暴，风暴已经充分展示了威力，现在他只希望它可以给自己一个安静的死亡。

天上的星辰啊，停止你们的愤怒吧！风雨雷电的神灵，请你们记着，尘世的凡民在你们的神威之下是无能为力的，我这脆弱的身心唯有对你们俯首降服。唉！海水曾经把我冲在岩石上，从一处海岸卷到另一处海岸，留下我这仅余残喘的一身，除了一死而外，再没有其他的想望。你们已经使一个君王失去他所有的一切，这就足够表现你们力量的伟大了；你们既然不让他葬身鱼腹，他的唯一的要求，只是让他在这儿得到一个安静的死。

英雄叛国记

（原名：科利奥兰纳斯）

[IV,iv, 12-26]科利奥兰纳斯作为“人民之敌”被放逐出罗马城后，发现自己到了罗马的“仇敌”城邦安息。他苦涩地回忆起自己曾如何“使安息的妇女成为寡妇”，并立即出发去拜访旧日宿敌奥菲迪斯。

啊，变化无常的世事，刚才还是誓同生死的朋友，两个人的腔子里好像只有一颗心，睡眠、饮食、工作、游戏，都是彼此相共，亲爱得分不开来，一转瞬之间，为了些微的争执，就会变成不共戴天的仇人。同样切齿痛恨的仇敌，他们在梦寐之中也念念不忘地钩心斗角，互谋倾陷，为了一个偶然的机，一些不足道的琐事，也会变成亲密的友人，彼此携手合作。我现在也正是这样，我痛恨我自己生长的地方，我的爱心已经移向了这个仇敌的城市。我要进去：要是他把我杀死，那也并不是有悖公道的行为，要是他对我曲予优容，那么我愿意为他的国家尽力。

冬天的故事

[III,iii, 58-76]西西里亚国王里昂提斯产生了自己的王后赫米奥妮对其不忠的念头，于是下令将他们刚出生的婴儿——他相信这是王后与别人的私生子——带到荒野里抛弃。幸运的是，一位口中抱怨着青春的麻烦的年老牧羊人撞见了婴儿，将她捡回了家。

我希望十六岁和二十三岁之间并没有别的年龄，否则这整段时间里就让青春在睡梦中度了过去吧；因为在这中间所发生的事，不过是叫姑娘们养起孩子来，对长辈任意侮辱，偷东西，打架。你听！除了十六岁和二十三岁之间的那种火辣辣的年轻人，谁还会在这种天气出来打猎？他们已经吓走了我的两头顶好的羊；我担心在它们的东家没有找到它们之前，狼已经先把它找到了。它们多半是在海边啃着常春藤。好运气保佑着我吧！咦，这儿是什么？（抱起小儿）哎呀，一个孩子，一个怪体面的孩子！不知道是个男的还是个女的。好一个孩子；真是一个可爱的孩子。一定是什么私情事儿；虽然我读过的书不多，可是我也还读过那些大户人家的侍女怎样跟人结识私情的笑话儿：扶梯放好，箱笼收拾好，两口子打后门儿一溜；爹娘睡在暖暖的被窝里好快活，可怜的孩子却丢在这儿受冻。我要行个好事把她抱起来；可是我还是等我的儿子来了再说吧。他已经在叫我了。喂！喂！

还璧记

（原名：辛白林）

[II,ii, 12-51]埃契摩吹嘘自己能够引诱任何他想引诱的女人，于是普修默斯就与他打赌自己贞洁的妻子伊慕琴一定品行端正无瑕。伊慕琴抵御住了埃契摩的进攻。发现自己作为风流浪子的名声和财富都即将毁于一旦，埃契摩只好铤而走险，偷偷躲在箱子里潜入伊慕琴的卧房，这样他就能得到足够的信息来向普修默斯证明自己已经得手。他在黑夜中现身，开始记录伊慕琴房间里的陈设和她本人的身体细节：虽然他不会动她的身体，但要强暴她的好名声。

蟋蟀们在歌唱，人们都在休息之中恢复他们疲劳的精神。我们的达昆正是像这样蹑手蹑脚地，轻轻走到那被他毁坏了贞操的女郎的床前。赛西莉霞，你睡在床上的姿态是多么优美！鲜嫩的百合花，比你的被褥更洁白！要是我能够接触一下她的肌肤！但是一个吻，仅仅一个吻！无比美艳的红玉，它们被安放得多么可爱！散布在室内的异香，是她樱唇中透露出来的气息。蜡烛的火焰向她的脸上低俯，想要从她紧闭的眼睫之下，窥视那收藏了的光辉，虽然它们现在被窗户所遮掩，还可以依稀想见那净澈的纯白和空虚的蔚蓝，那正是太空本身的颜色。可是我的计划是要记录这室内的陈设；我要把一切写下来：这样这样的图画；那边是窗子；她的床上有这样的装饰；织锦的褂帏，上面织着这样这样的人物和故事。啊！可是关于她肉体上的一些活生生的记录，才是比一万种琐屑的家具更有力的证明，更可以充实我此行的收获。睡眠啊！你死亡的模仿者，沉重地压在她的身上，让她的知觉像教堂里的墓碑一般漠无所感吧。下来，下来；（自伊慕琴臂上取下手镯）一点儿不费力地，它就滑落下来了！它是我的；有了这样外表上的证据，一定可以格外加强内心的扰乱，把她的丈夫激怒得发起疯来。在她的左胸还有一颗梅花形的痣，就像莲香花花心里的红点一般：这是一个确证，比任何法律所能造成的证据更有力；这一个秘密将使他不能不相信我已经打开链锁，把她宝贵的贞操偷走了。够了。我好傻！为什么我要把这也记了下来，它不是已经牢牢地钉住在我的记忆里了吗？她读了一个晚上的书，原来看的是替吕厄斯的故事；这儿折下的一页，正是菲萝美儿被迫失身的地方。够了；回到箱子里去，把弹簧关上了。黑夜的巨龙，走快一些吧，让黎明拨开乌鸦的眼睛！恐惧包围着我的全身；虽然这是一位天上的神仙，我却像置身在地狱之中。（钟鸣）一，二，三；赶快，赶快！

[II,v, 1-35]听到埃契摩的胜利故事后，普修默斯的世界和信念完

全崩塌了，进入了一种极度厌女的情绪状态之中。

难道男人们生到这世上来，一定要靠女人的合作的吗？我们都是私生子，全都是。被我称为父亲的那位最可尊敬的人，当我的母亲怀我的时候，谁也不知道他在什么地方；不知道哪一个人造下了我这冒牌的贗品；可是我的母亲在当时却是像黛安娜一般圣洁的，正像现在在我的妻子担着无双美誉一样。啊，报复！报复！她不让我享受我的合法的欢娱，常常劝诫我忍耐自制，她的神情是那样的贞静幽娴，带着满脸的羞涩，那楚楚可怜的样子，便是铁石心肠的人，也不能不见了心软；我以为她是像没有被太阳照临的白雪一般皎洁的。啊，一切的魔鬼们！这卑鄙的埃契摩在一小时之内-也许还不到一小时的工夫？-也许他没有说什么话，只是像一头日耳曼的野猪似的，一声叫喊，一头就扑了上去，除了照例的半推半就以外，并没有遭遇任何的反抗。但愿我能够在我自己的一身之内找到哪一部分是女人给我的！因为我断定男人的罪恶的行动，全都是女人遗留给他的性质所造成的：说诳是女人的天性；谄媚也是她的；欺骗也是她的；淫邪和猥亵的思想，都是她的，她的；报复也是她的本能；野心，贪欲，好胜，傲慢，虚荣，诽谤，反复，凡是一切男人所能列举，地狱中所知道的罪恶，或者一部分或者全部分，都是属于她的；不，简直是全部分；因为她们即使对于罪恶也没有恒心，每一分钟都要更换一种新的花样。我要写文章痛骂她们，厌恶她们，咒诅她们。可是这还不是表示真正的痛恨的最好的办法，我应该祈祷她们如愿以偿，因为她们自己招来的痛苦，是远胜于魔鬼所能给予她们的灾祸的。

[III,vi, 1-27]伊慕琴满怀欣喜地去见丈夫，却发现他在计划着杀掉自己——因为她所谓的“不贞”而嫉妒到发狂了。现在，身穿男子服色的伊慕琴坚持前往密尔福特港，希望在那里找到丈夫，并让他相信自己的忠诚不变。

我现在明白了做一个男人是很麻烦的；我已经筋疲力尽，连续两夜把大地当作我的眠床；倘不是我的决心支持着我，我早就病倒了。密尔福特啊，当毕散尼奥在山顶上把你指点给我看的时候，你仿佛就在我的眼底。天哪！难道一个不幸的人，连一块安身之地都不能得到吗？我想他所到之处，就是地面也会从他的脚下逃走的。两个乞丐告诉我我不会迷失我的路径；难道这些可怜的苦人儿，他们自己受着痛苦，明知这是上天对他们的惩罚和磨难，还会向人扯诳吗？是的，富人们也难得讲半句真话，怎么怪得他们？被锦衣玉食汨没了本性，是比困穷困而扯诳更坏的；国王们的詐欺，是比乞丐的假话更可鄙的。我的亲爱的夫啊！你也是一个欺心之辈。现在我一想到你，我的饥饿也忘了，可是就在片刻之前，我已经饿得快要站不起来。噢！这是什么？这儿还有一条路通到洞口；它大概是野人的巢窟。我还是不要叫

喊，我不敢叫喊；可是饥饿在没有使人完全失去知觉以前是会提起人的勇气的。升平富足的盛世徒然养成一批懦夫，困苦永远是坚强之母。喂！有人吗？要是里面住着文明的人类，回答我吧；假如是野人的话，我也要向他们夺取或是告借一些食物。喂！没有回答吗？那么我就进去。最好还是拔出我的剑；万一我的敌人也像我一样见了剑就害怕，他会瞧都不敢瞧它的。好天啊，但愿我所遇到的是这样一个敌人！

[IV,ii, 293-334]此时她仍然在向西方走的路上。悲伤得快要疯掉的伊慕琴从不安的睡眠中醒来，竟发现身边躺着的似乎是自己丈夫的无头尸体。

是的，先生，到密尔福特港是怎么走的？谢谢您啦。打那边的林子里过去吗？请问还有多少路？哎哟！还有六里吗？我已经走了整整一夜了。真的，我要躺下来睡一会儿。（见克尸 [11]）可是且慢！我可不要跟人家睡在一起！天上的男女神明啊！这些花就像是人世的欢乐，这个流血的汉子是忧愁烦恼的象征。我希望我在做梦；因为我自己仿佛是一个看守山洞的人，替一些诚实的人们煮煮食物。可是不会有这样的事，这不过是脑筋里虚构出来的无中生有的幻象；我们的眼睛有时也像我们的判断一般靠不住。真的，我还是在害怕得发抖。要是天上还剩留着仅仅像麻雀眼睛一般大小的一点点儿的慈悲，敬畏的神明啊，求你们赐给我一部分吧！这梦仍然在这儿；虽然在我醒来的时候，它还是围绕在我的周遭，盘踞在我的心头；并不是想象却是有实感的。一个没有头的男子！普修默斯的衣服！我知道他的两腿的肥瘦，这是他的手他的迈邱利一般敏捷的脚，他的马斯一般威武的股肉，赫邱利斯一般雄壮的筋骨，可是他的乔武一般神圣的脸呢？天上也有谋杀案了吗？怎么！

[V,iv, 1-26]监狱中的普修默斯回想起自己对挚爱的妻子伊慕琴犯下的多重罪恶，感到监狱正是他最该在的地方。

欢迎，囚囚的生活！因为我想你是到自由去的路。可是我还比一个害痛风病的人好一些，因为他宁愿永远生活在痛苦呻吟之中，不愿让死亡这一个手到病除的良药治愈他的疾病；只有死才是打开这些铁锁的钥匙。我的良心上负着比我的足胫和手腕上更重的镣铐；仁慈的神明啊，赐给我忏悔的利剑，让我劈开这黑暗的牢门，得到永久的自由吧！我已经衷心悔恨，这还不够吗？儿女们是这样使他们尘世的父亲回嗔作喜；天上的神明是更充满了慈悲的。我必须忏悔吗？还有什么比拖镣戴铐更好的方式，出于自愿而不是被迫的？为了被除我的罪孽，我愿意呈献我整个的生命。我知道你们比万恶的世人仁慈得多，他们从破产的负责人手里拿去三分之一，六分之一，或是十分之一的

财产，让这些债户留着有余不尽的残资，供他们继续地剥削：那却不是我的愿望。把我的生命拿去，抵偿伊慕琴的宝贵的生命吧；虽然它们的价值并不相等，可是那总是一条生命，为你们所亲手铸下的。在人与人之间，他们并不戥量着每一枚货币，即使略有轻重，也瞧着上面的花纹而收受下来；你们应该把我收受，因为我是你们的。伟大的神明啊，要是你们愿意做这一次清算，就请拿去我的生命，勾销这些无情的债务。啊，伊慕琴！我要在沉默中向你抒陈我的心曲。（睡）

[11] 此处指克洛登。-编者注

暴风雨

[II,ii, 1-17]野人卡列班诅咒普洛士丕罗，因为他觉得对方篡夺了自己在岛上王国的合法统治，并设各种各样的酷刑来折磨自己，以让自己顺服于他。

愿太阳从一切沼泽平原上吸起来的瘴气都降在普洛士丕罗身上，让他的全身没有一处不生恶病！他的精灵会听见我的话，但我非把他咒一下不可。他们要是没有他的吩咐是不会擒掬我，显出各种的怪相吓我，把我推到烂泥里或是在黑暗中化作一团磷火诱我迷失了路的；但是他们要想出种种的恶作剧来摆布我：有时变成猴子，向我咧着牙齿扮嘴脸，然后再咬我；一下子又变成刺猬在路上滚作一团，我的赤脚一踏上去便把针刺竖了起来；有时我的四面围绕着毒蛇，吐出分叉的舌头来，那咝咝的声音吓得我发了狂。

（屈林鸠罗上。）

卡 瞧！瞧！又有一个他的精灵来了！因为我柴捡得慢，要来给我吃苦头。让我把身体横躺下来；也许他会注意不到我。

[18-40]屈林鸠罗不是轻盈的精灵，而只是一个被暴风雨吹到岸边的水手。当他遇到卡列班时，不知该如何看待这个形状奇异的卧姿生物。

这儿没有丛林也没有灌木可以抵御任何风雨。又有一阵大雷雨要起来啦，我听见风在呼啸，那边那堆大的乌云像是一只臭水袋，就要把水倒下来的样子。要是这回再像不久以前响着那么大的雷，我不晓得我该把我的头藏到什么地方去好；那块云准要整桶整桶地倒下水来。咦！这是什么东西？是一个人还是一条鱼？死的还是活的？一定是一条鱼；他的气味像一条鱼，有些隔宿的发霉了的鱼腥气，不是新腌的鱼。奇怪的鱼！我从前曾经到过英国；要是我现在还在英国，只要把这条鱼染上一些颜色，包管那边无论哪一个假期里没事做的傻瓜都会掏出整块的银洋来：在那边很可以靠这条鱼发一笔财；随便什么稀奇古怪的畜生在那边都可以做成一桩好生意。他们不愿意丢一个铜子给跛脚的叫花子，却愿意拿出一角钱来看一个死了的印第安红人。嘿，他像人一样生着腿呢！他的翼鳍多么像是一对臂膀！他的身体还是暖的！我说我弄错了，这不是鱼，是一个岛上的土人，才刚被天雷轰的那样子。（雷声）唉！雷雨又来了；我只得躲到他的衫子底下去，别的再没有躲避的地方了：一个人倒运起来就要跟妖怪一起睡

觉。让我躲在这儿直到云消雨散。

[V,i, 33-57] 岛屿的主宰普洛士丕罗成功报复了曾经错待他的人，他所有的工作即告结束。于是他念出了最后一个咒语，意在让魔法力量从这个世界上消失。

你们山河林沼的小妖们；踏沙无痕，追逐着退潮时的海神，而他一转身来，便又倏然逃去的精灵们；在月下的草地上留下了环舞的圈迹，使羊群不敢走近的小神仙们；以及在半夜中以制造菌蕈为乐事，一听见肃穆的晚钟便雀跃起来的你们：虽然你们不过是些弱小的孩儿，但我借着你们的帮助，才能遮暗了中天的太阳，唤起了作乱的狂风，在青天碧海之间激起了浩荡的战争；我把火给予震雷，用乔武大神的霹雳劈碎了他自己那株粗干的橡树；我使稳固的海岬震动，连根拔起了松树和杉柏；因着我的法力无边的命令，坟墓中的长眠者也被惊醒，打开了墓门而出来。但现在我要捐弃这种狂暴的魔术，仅仅再要求一些微妙的天乐化导他们的心性，使我能得到我所希望的结果；以后我便将折断我的魔杖，把它埋在幽深的地底，把我的书投向深不可测的海心。

‘And when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars.’

Two Gentlemen of Verona

[II, iii, 1– 30] Off on his travels with his master Proteus, Launce the servant- boy has had to say his fond farewells: all have been gratifyingly sad to see him go except for 'man's best friend':

Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault. I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think Crab my dog be the sourest- natured dog that lives. My mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity; yet did not this cruelhearted cur shed one tear. He is a stone, a very pebblestone, and has no more pity in him than a dog. A Jew would have wept to have seen our parting. Why, my grandam, having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father. No, this left shoe is my father. No, no, left shoe is my mother. Nay, that cannot be so neither. Yes, it is so, it is so, it hath the worser sole. This shoe with the hole in it is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on't, there 'tis. Now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily and as small as a wand. This hat is Nan our maid. I am the dog. No, the dog is himself, and I am the dog. O, the dog is me, and I am myself. Ay, so, so. Now come I to my father: 'Father, your blessing.' Now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping. Now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on. Now come I to my mother. O, that she could speak now like an old woman! Well, I kiss her. Why, there 'tis; here's my mother's breath up and down. Now come I to my sister. Mark the moan she makes. Now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

[II, iv, 190– 212] Previously in love with Julia, but now newly smitten with Silvia, his best friend's girl, Proteus finds it as hard to comprehend his fickle feelings as he does to justify them:

Even as one heat another heat expels,

Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it my mind, or Valentine's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus?
She is fair; and so is Julia that I love –
That I did love, for now my love is thawed;
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks my zeal to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not as I was wont.
O, but I love his lady too too much,
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice
That thus without advice begin to love her!
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzlèd my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[II, vi, 1– 38] His dilemma deepening with his passion, Proteus ties himself up into emotional knots, as he seeks to square the demands of love and loyalty:

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn;
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn;
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn.
And e'en that power which gave me first my oath

Provokes me to this threefold perjury:
Love bade me swear, and Love bids me forswear.
O sweet- suggesting Love, if thou hast sinn'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it!
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he wants wit that wants resolvèd will
To learn his wit t'exchange the bad for better.
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue, to call her bad
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferred
With twenty thousand soul- confirming oaths!
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love where I should love.
Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose;
If I keep them, I needs must lose myself;
If I lose them, thus find I by their loss:
For Valentine, myself; for Julia, Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious in itself;
And Silvia – witness heaven, that made her fair! –
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiope.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself
Without some treachery used to Valentine.

[V, iv, 1– 12] A loser, it seems, in love, Valentine finds solace in solitude:

How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall
And leave no memory of what it was!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia:
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain.

The Taming of the Shrew

[IV, i, 174– 97] Petruchio unfolds his masterplan for breaking the ungovernable Katherine to his will – he'll treat the 'shrew' as a haggard or hawk and tame her that way:

Thus have I politicly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And till she stoop she must not be full- gorged,
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites
That bate and beat and will not be obedient.
She eat no meat to- day, nor none shall eat.
Last night she slept not, nor tonight she shall not.
As with the meat, some undeservèd fault
I'll find about the making of the bed,
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets.
Ay, and amid this hurly I intend
That all is done in reverend care of her.
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night,
And if she chance to nod I'll rail and brawl,
And with the clamour keep her still awake.
This is a way to kill a wife with kindness,
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.

He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak –'tis charity to show.

Titus Andronicus

[II, i, 1– 24] The servant shall be master, resolves Aaron, Moorish lover of Tamora, the Gothic Queen, seeing opportunities for himself in her marriage to Saturninus, Emperor of Rome :

Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot, and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack or lightning flash,
Advanc'd above pale envy's threat'ning reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistening coach
And overlooks the highest- peering hills,
So Tamora.
Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart and fit thy thoughts
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fettered in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes
Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
Away with slavish weeds and servile thoughts!
I will be bright and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new- made Emperess.
'To wait' said I? – to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,

This siren that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck and his commonweal's.

Love's Labour's Lost

[III, i, 170– 202] A wit and self- conscious cynic, Berowne has always scoffed at the idea of love, yet now he finds he too has been struck by an arrow from the bow of Dan (Lord) Cupid :

And I, forsooth, in love!

I, that have been love's whip,

A very beadle to a humorous sigh;

A critic, nay, a night- watch constable,

A domineering pedant o'er the boy,

Than whom no mortal so magnificent!

This wimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This Signor Junior, giant- dwarf, Dan Cupid,

Regent of love- rhymes, lord of folded arms,

Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,

Liege of all loiterers and malcontents,

Dread prince of plackets, king of codpieces,

Sole emperor and great general

Of trotting paritors – O my little heart!

And I to be a corporal of his field,

And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop!

What? I love? I sue? I seek a wife?

A woman, that is like a German clock,

Still a- repairing, ever out of frame,

And never going aright, being a watch,

But being watched that it may still go right!

Nay, to be perjured, which is worst of all;

And, among three, to love the worst of all –
A whitely wanton with a velvet brow,
With two pitch- balls stuck in her face for eyes;
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,
Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard!
And I to sigh for her, to watch for her,
To pray for her! Go to, it is a plague
That Cupid will impose for my neglect
Of his almighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan;
Some men must love my lady, and some Joan.

A Midsummer Night's Dream

[I, i, 226– 45] Her own beauties once adored, but now despised by a sweetheart who has transferred his affections to her best friend Hermia, Helena is forced to reflect upon the utter, unjust arbitrariness of love :

How happy some o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know.
And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities.
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity.
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind,
And therefore is winged Cupid painted blind.
Nor hath love's mind of any judgement taste;
Wings and no eyes figure unheedy haste.
And therefore is love said to be a child
Because in choice he is so oft beguiled.
As waggish boys in game themselves forswear,
So the boy love is perjured everywhere;
For ere Demetrius looked on Hermia's eyne,
He hailed down oaths that he was only mine,
And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolved, and showers of oaths did melt.

Romeo and Juliet

[II, ii, 2– 25] Romeo waxes astronomical as his star appears in the night sky – with some withering words for moon- goddess Diana, cold patroness of female chastity :

But soft! What light through yonder window breaks?

It is the East, and Juliet is the sun!

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,

Who is already sick and pale with grief

That thou her maid art far more fair than she.

Be not her maid, since she is envious.

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,

And none but fools do wear it. Cast it off.

It is my lady. O, it is my love!

O that she knew she were!

She speaks. Yet she says nothing. What of that?

Her eye discourses. I will answer it.

I am too bold. 'Tis not to me she speaks.

Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,

Having some business, do entreat her eyes

To twinkle in their spheres till they return.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head?

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars

As daylight doth a lamp. Her eyes in heaven

Would through the airy region stream so bright

That birds would sing and think it were not night

See how she leans her cheek upon her hand!

O that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek!

[II, ii, 33– 49] Unaware that she is not alone, Juliet speaks in what should be soliloquy, though her speech is heard by the very man to whom it is nominally addressed :

O Romeo, Romeo! – wherefore art thou Romeo?
Deny thy father and refuse thy name.
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

ROMEO (aside)

Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

JULIET

'Tis but thy name that is my enemy.
Thou art thyself, though not a Montague.
What's Montague? It is nor hand, nor foot
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a man. O, be some other name!
What's in a name? That which we call a rose
By any other name would smell as sweet.
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo called,
Retain that dear perfection which he owes
Without that title. Romeo, doff thy name;
And for that name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself.

[III, ii, 1– 31] Night cannot come soon enough for Juliet, as she awaits the arrival of her lover, urging on the horses that draw the sun's chariot across the sky :

Gallop apace, you fiery- footed steeds,
Towards Phoebus' lodging! Such a waggoner
As Phaëton would whip you to the West

And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love- performing night,
That runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms untalked of and unseen.
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties; or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night. Come, civil night,
Thou sober- suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Played for a pair of stainless maidenhoods.
Hood my unmanned blood, bating in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night. Come, Romeo. Come, thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow upon a raven's back.
Come, gentle night. Come, loving, black- browed night.
Give me my Romeo. And when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
O I have bought the mansion of a love,
Gallop apace, you fiery- footed steeds,
Towards Phoebus' lodging! Such a waggoner
As Phaëton would whip you to the West
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love- performing night,

That runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms untalked of and unseen.
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties; or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night. Come, civil night,
Thou sober- suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Played for a pair of stainless maidenhoods.
Hood my unmanned blood, bating in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night. Come, Romeo. Come, thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow upon a raven's back.
Come, gentle night. Come, loving, black- browed night.
Give me my Romeo. And when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
O I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possessed it; and though I am sold,
Not yet enjoyed. So tedious is this day
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not wear them.

Much Ado About Nothing

[II, iii, 8– 33] His own armour of scorn so far proof against Cupid's arrows, Benedick muses on the mysterious miracles worked by love, even on those who, like his friend Claudio, should know better :

I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe. I have known when he would have walked ten mile afoot to see a good armour, and now will he lie ten nights awake carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier, and now is he turned orthography; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not. I will not be sworn but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God.

Julius Caesar

[II, i, 10– 34] Ruthless in his high- mindedness, Brutus says that Caesar simply has to die. Alive, he is a threat to freedom, whatever his personal qualities may be :

It must be by his death; and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. – He would be crowned.
How that might change his nature, there's the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the adder,
And that craves wary walking. Crown him! – that!
And then, I grant, we put a sting in him
That at his will he may do danger with.
Th'abuse of greatness is when it disjoins
Remorse from power; and, to speak truth of Caesar,
I have not known when his affections swayed
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber- upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: so Caesar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus: that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities;

And therefore think him as a serpent's egg
Which, hatched, would as his kind grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell.

[II, i, 61– 9] Cassius' whisperings, says Brutus, have set off acivil war in his very nature :

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar

I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing

And the first motion, all the interim is

Like a phantasma or a hideous dream:

The genius and the mortal instruments

Are then in council; and the state of man,

Like to a little kingdom, suffers then

The nature of an insurrection.

[II, i, 77– 85] If our cause is so just, says an uneasy Brutus, why such need for secrecy ?

O conspiracy,

Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,

When evils are most free? O then, by day

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough

To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability;

For if thou path, thy native semblance on,

Not Erebus itself were dim enough

To hide thee from prevention.

[III, i, 254– 75] After conciliatory words with Caesar's killers, Mark Antony uses very different language over the body of his murdered friend :

O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever livèd in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy –
Which like dumb mouths do ope their ruby lips
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue –
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quartered with the hands of war,
All pity choked with custom of fell deeds;
And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry havoc and let slip the dogs of war,
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

As You Like It

[III, ii, 1– 10] Orlando, inspired by love, determines to deck every tree in the forest with his beloved's name :

Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love,
And thou, thrice- crownèd queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind, these trees shall be my books
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character
That every eye which in this forest looks
Shall see thy virtue witnessed everywhere.
Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she.

Hamlet

[I, ii, 129– 59] His father murdered, his mother remarried within weeks, Prince Hamlet rages helplessly against a life which for him holds nothing but disappointment :

O that this too too sullied flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew;
Or that the Everlasting had not fixed
His canon 'gainst self- slaughter. O God, God,
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on't! ah, fie, 'tis an unweeded garden
That grows to seed. Things rank and gross in nature Possess it merely. That it should come to this –
But two months dead, nay, not so much, not two!
So excellent a king, that was to this
Hyperion to a satyr; so loving to my mother
That he might not beteem the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth,
Must I remember? Why, she would hang on him
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on. And yet, within a month –
Let me not think on't. Frailty, thy name is woman.
A little month, or e'er those shoes were old
With which she followed my poor father's body
Like Niobe, all tears, why she, even she –
O God! a beast that wants discourse of reason

Would have mourned longer – married with my uncle,
My father's brother, but no more like my father
Than I to Hercules. Within a month,
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gallèd eyes,
She married. O, most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to good.
But break, my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

[I, v, 92– 112] Conjured by his father's ghost to 'Remember', Hamlet swears by every power imaginable never to forget :

O all you host of heaven! O earth! What else?
And shall I couple hell? O, fie! Hold, hold, my heart.
And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up. Remember thee?
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee?
Yea, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past
That youth and observation copied there,
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmixed with baser matter. Yes, by heaven!
O most pernicious woman!
O villain, villain, smiling, damnèd villain!
My tables – meet it is I set it down
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain.
At least I am sure it may be so in Denmark.

(He writes)

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word:

It is 'Adieu, adieu, remember me'.

I have sworn't.

[II, ii, 547– 603] An actor's performance having brought humiliatingly home to him his own inability to take real- life action in avenging his father, Hamlet nevertheless sees an opportunity to use the theatre as a means to advance his own personal plot :

O what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Is it not monstrous that this player here,

But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,

Could force his soul so to his own conceit

That, from her working, all his visage wanned,

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,

A broken voice, and his whole function suiting

With forms to his conceit? And all for nothing.

For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her? What would he do

Had he the motive and the cue for passion

That I have? He would drown the stage with tears

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,

Make mad the guilty and appal the free,

Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed

The very faculties of eyes and ears. Yet I,

A dull and muddy- mettled rascal, peak

Like John- a- dreams, unpregnant of my cause,

And can say nothing, no, not for a king

Upon whose property and most dear life

A damned defeat was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? Breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? Gives me the lie i'th' throat
As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
Ha, 'swounds, I should take it. For it cannot be
But I am pigeon- livered and lack gall
To make oppression bitter, or ere this
I should ha' fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal. Bloody bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!
O, vengeance!
Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave,
That I, the son of a dear father murdered,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must like a whore unpack my heart with words
And fall a- cursing like a very drab,
A stallion! Fie upon't, foh!
About, my brain! Hum – I have heard
That guilty creatures sitting at a play
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul that presently
They have proclaimed their malefactions.
For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak
With most miraculous organ, I'll have these players
Play something like the murder of my father
Before mine uncle. I'll observe his looks.
I'll tent him to the quick. If he do blench,

I know my course. The spirit that I have seen
May be a devil, and the devil hath power
T' assume a pleasing shape, yea, and perhaps
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses me to damn me. I'll have grounds
More relative than this. The play's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the King.
[III, i, 56– 88] Hamlet contemplates suicide :
To be, or not to be – that is the question;
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles
And by opposing end them. To die, to sleep –
No more – and by a sleep to say we end
The heartache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to. 'Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To die – to sleep –
To sleep – perchance to dream. Ay, there's the rub.
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life.
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despised love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of th' unworthy takes,

When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? Who would these fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscovered country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have
Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment
With this regard their currents turn awry
And lose the name of action.

[III, ii, 395– 406] Trying to get into the right frame of mind for action, Hamlet prepares to confront his mother with the wrongs she has committed against his father's memory :

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world. Now could I drink hot blood
And do such bitter business as the day
Would quake to look on. Soft! now to my mother.
O heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever
The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom.
Let me be cruel, not unnatural.
I will speak daggers to her, but use none.
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites.
How in my words somever she be shent,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent!

[III, iii, 36– 72] King Claudius, the usurper (and Hamlet's stepfather), at prayer, acknowledges his heinous crime, but acknowledges too that he cannot find it in himself to repent it :

O, my offence is rank. It smells to heaven.

It hath the primal eldest curse upon't,

A brother's murder! Pray can I not,

Though inclination be as sharp as will.

My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,

And like a man to double business bound

I stand in pause where I shall first begin,

And both neglect. What if this cursèd hand

Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,

Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens

To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy

But to confront the visage of offence?

And what's in prayer but this twofold force,

To be forestallèd ere we come to fall

Or pardoned being down? Then I'll look up.

My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer

Can serve my turn? 'Forgive me my foul murder'?

That cannot be, since I am still possessed

Of those effects for which I did the murder,

My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.

May one be pardoned and retain th' offence?

In the corrupted currents of this world

Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;

And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself

Buys out the law; but 'tis not so above.

There is no shuffling. There the action lies

In his true nature, and we ourselves compelled,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? What rests?
Try what repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it when one cannot repent?
O, wretched state! O, bosom black as death!
O limèd soul, that, struggling to be free
Art more engaged! Help, angels! Make assay.
Bow, stubborn knees, and heart with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new- born babe.
All may be well.

[III, iii, 73– 95] Hamlet, finding Claudius at prayer and vulnerable, senses a golden opportunity to kill him, but pauses, fearing he might thus save a soul whom he thinks deserves damnation :

Now might I do it pat, now 'a is a- praying.
And now I'll do't. And so 'a goes to heaven.
And so am I revenged. That would be scanned.
A villain kills my father, and for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.
Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
'A took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows save heaven?
But in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him! And am I then revenged,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and seasoned for his passage?
No.

Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid hent.
When he is drunk asleep; or in his rage,
Or in th'incestuous pleasure of his bed,
At game, a- swearing, or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in't –
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven,
And that his soul may be as damned and black
As hell, whereto it goes.

[IV, iv, 32– 66] The news of a war to be fought over ownership of a tiny piece of territory sparks thoughts in Hamlet of his own failure to avenge even the most grievous of wrongs :

How all occasions do inform against me
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good and market of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more.
Sure He that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fust in us unused. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple
Of thinking too precisely on th' event –
A thought which, quartered, hath but one part wisdom
And ever three parts coward – I do not know
Why yet I live to say 'This thing's to do',
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means
To do't. Examples gross as earth exhort me.
Witness this army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
Whose spirit, with divine ambition puffed,

Makes mouths at the invisible event,
Exposing what is mortal and unsure
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an eggshell. Rightly to be great
Is not to stir without great argument,
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw
When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father killed, a mother stained,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep, while to my shame I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men
That for a fantasy and trick of fame
Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough and continent
To hide the slain? O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

Twelfth Night

[II, ii, 17– 41] When Viola, disguised as a boy, is sent a love token by the beautiful Olivia – who claims to be ‘returning’ it – she is struck by the power of a handsome form over female sensibilities :

I left no ring with her; what means this lady?
Fortune forbid my outside have not charmed her!
She made good view of me; indeed, so much
That – methought – her eyes had lost her tongue,
For she did speak in starts, distractedly.
She loves me, sure, the cunning of her passion
Invites me in this churlish messenger.
None of my lord’s ring! Why, he sent her none.
I am the man! If it be so – as ’tis –
Poor lady, she were better love a dream.
Disguise, I see thou art a wickedness
Wherein the pregnant enemy does much.
How easy is it for the proper false
In women’s waxen hearts to set their forms.
Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we,
For such as we are made of, such we be.
How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me.
What will become of this? As I am man,
My state is desperate for my master’s love.
As I am woman – now alas the day,

What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe!

O time, thou must untangle this, not I!

It is too hard a knot for me t' untie.

Troilus and Cressida

[I, i, 91– 106] Though his city, Troy, is at war, Prince Troilus deems no dispute worthy of his Cressida- engrossed attention – his anger is saved for the difficult intermediary who is running his love affair, Lord Pandarus :

Peace, you ungracious clamours! Peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,

When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument;

It is too starved a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus – O gods, how do you plague me!

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,

And he's as tetchy to be wooed to woo

As she is stubborn- chaste against all suit.

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we –

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:

Between our Ilium and where she resides,

Let it be called the wild and wandering flood,

Ourself the merchant, and this sailing Pandar

Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

[I, ii, 281– 95] Cressida too finds romance conducted through a go- between hard, but knows enough not to surrender any ground. Love, she senses, is as much a power- struggle as any war :

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice

He offers in another's enterprise;

But more in Troilus thousandfold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be.
Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing;
Things won are done; joy's soul lies in the doing.
That she beloved knows naught that knows not this:
Men prize the thing ungained more than it is.
That she was never yet that ever knew
Love got so sweet as when desire did sue;
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach:
'Achievement is command; ungained, beseech.'
Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

[III, ii, 16– 27] All but overcome already by the anticipation of love, Troilus is sure he will be overwhelmed by love in fact – annihilated as effectively by pleasure, perhaps, as he might be by death in battle :

I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense. What will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-repured nectar? – death, I fear me,
Swooning destruction, or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tuned too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers.
I fear it much; and I do fear besides
That I shall lose distinction in my joys,
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Measure for Measure

[II, ii, 162– 87] Angelo, most pious of officials, claims he has resisted every other feminine temptation without difficulty, but is attracted despite himself to the chaste Isabella :

What's this? What's this? Is this her fault or mine?

The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?

Ha?

Not she, nor doth she tempt; but it is I

That, lying by the violet in the sun,

Do as the carrion does, not as the flower,

Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be

That modesty may more betray our sense

Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,

Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,

And pitch our evils there? O, fie, fie, fie!

What dost thou? Or what art thou, Angelo?

Dost thou desire her foully for those things

That make her good? O, let her brother live:

Thieves for their robbery have authority

When judges steal themselves. What, do I love her,

That I desire to hear her speak again,

And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on?

O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,

With saints dost bait thy hook. Most dangerous

Is that temptation that doth goad us on

To sin in loving virtue. Never could the strumpet,

With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite. Ever till now,
When men were fond, I smiled and wondered how.

[II, iv, 1– 17] His unlicensed feelings for Isabella, fears Angelo, make a mockery of his religious faith :

When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words,
Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: God in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew His name,
And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, whereon I studied,
Is like a good thing being often read,
Grown seared and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I with boot change for an idle plume
Which the air beats for vain. O place, O form,
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood;
Let's write 'good Angel' on the devil's horn;
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Othello

[III, iii, 255– 74] Taken in as much by his own jealousy as by the lying insinuations of his malevolent ensign, Iago, the moor Othello is tragically ready to see his beloved Desdemona as his betrayer – no true falcon but an unruly ‘haggard’ hawk:

This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learnèd spirit
Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart- strings,
I'd whistle her off and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have; or for I am declined
Into the vale of years – yet that's not much –
She's gone: I am abused, and my relief
Must be to loathe her. O, curse of marriage!
That we can call these delicate creatures ours
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
Prerogated are they less than the base.
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death:
Even then this forked plague is fated to us
When we do quicken:

[V, ii, 1– 22] Convinced of his wife's infidelity by no more compelling cause than his own frantic jealousy, Othello resolves to murder Desdemona :

It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul:
Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!
It is the cause. Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster:
Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light:
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me; but once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume. When I have plucked thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again,
It must needs wither. I'll smell it on the tree.

He kisses her

O, balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! One more, one more.
Be thus when thou art dead and I will kill thee,
And love thee after. One more, and this the last.
So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep.
But they are cruel tears; this sorrow's heavenly –
It strikes where it doth love. She wakes.

All's Well That Ends Well

[I, i, 78– 97] Helena should, she knows, reserve her sorrow for the recent death of her beloved father – but she finds her overpowering love for Bertram displacing such filial feelings :

O, were that all! I think not on my father,
And these great tears grace his remembrance more
Than those I shed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him; my imagination
Carries no favour in't but Bertram's.
I am undone: there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one
That I should love a bright particular star
And think to wed it, he is so above me.
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind that would be mated by the lion
Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His archèd brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table – heart too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour.
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics.

Timon of Athens

[IV, i, 1– 41] Having squandered a fortune in hospitality and gifts, Timon finds himself forgotten by his so- called ‘friends’ when, exhausted by generosity, his money runs out. Bitterly disenchanted with the world of men, he takes refuge in the wild woods outside the city, but allows himself a single backward glance at his hometown as he leaves :

Let me look back upon thee. O thou wall
That girdles in those wolves, dive in the earth
And fence not Athens. Matrons, turn incontinent.
Obedience, fail in children. Slaves and fools
Pluck the grave wrinkled Senate from the bench,
And minister in their steads. To general filth
Convert, o’th’ instant, green virginity.
Do’t in your parents’ eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives
And cut your trusters’ throats. Bound servants, steal.
Large- handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law. Maid, to thy master’s bed;
Thy mistress is o’th’ brothel. Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lined crutch from thy old limping sire,
With it beat out his brains. Piety and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night- rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries

And let confusion live. Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke. Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners. Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot. Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and their crop
Be general leprosy. Breath infect breath,
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison. Nothing I'll bear from thee
But nakedness, thou detestable town.
Take thou that too, with multiplying bans.
Timon will to the woods, where he shall find
Th' unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.
The gods confound – hear me, you good gods all –
The Athenians both within and out that wall.
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
Amen.

[IV, iii, 1– 45] Wealth, not worth, decides status in the world of men, inveighs an angry Timon as he digs in the woods for edible roots. When he finds gold instead he is filled with satirical scorn towards this basest of metals, the 'common whore' of all mankind :

O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity. Below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,

Scarce is dividant – touch them with several fortunes,
The greater scorns the lesser. Not nature,
To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune
But by contempt of nature.
Raise me this beggar and deject that lord –
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.
It is the pasture lards the wether's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares,
In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say 'This man's a flatterer'? If one be,
So are they all, for every grise of fortune
Is smoothed by that below. The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. All's obliquy,
There's nothing level in our cursèd natures
But direct villainy. Therefore be abhorred
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men.
His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains.
Destruction fang mankind. Earth, yield me roots.

He digs

44 Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison. What is here?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious gold?
No, gods, I am no idle votarist.
Roots, you clear heavens! Thus much of this will make Black white, foul fair, wrong right,
Base noble, old young, coward valiant.
Ha, you gods! Why this? What, this, you gods? Why, this Will lug your priests and servants from your sides,

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads.
This yellow slave
Will knit and break religions, bless th' accursed,
Make the hoar leprosy adored, place thieves
And give them title, knee, and approbation,
With senators on the bench. This is it
That makes the wappened widow wed again –
She whom the spital- house and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To th' April day again. Come, damned earth,
Thou common whore of mankind, that puts odds
Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature.

King Lear

[I, ii, 1– 22] What makes a bastard less worthy than his legitimate brother? Conceived on the wrong side of the blanket, Edmund, Gloucester's bastard son, resolves that he will be no respecter of right in his own conduct :

Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Log of a brother? Why bastard? Wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well- compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true
As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
With 'base'? with 'baseness'? 'bastardy'? 'base, base'?
Who in the lusty stealth of nature take
More composition and fierce quality
Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops
Got 'tween asleep and wake? Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land.
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund
As to the legitimate. Fine word 'legitimate'!
Well, my 'legitimate', if this letter speed
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow. I prosper.

Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

[II, iii, 1– 21] His beloved father turned against him by his bastard brother's machinations, Edgar must flee for his life in disguise. So crazy do things seem to be that he can think of no better shape to adopt for his flight than that of a wandering, ranting Bedlam beggar :

I heard myself proclaimed,
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escaped the hunt. No port is free, no place
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Whiles I may 'scape
I will preserve myself; and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast. My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots,
And with presented nakedness outface
The winds and persecutions of the sky,
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numbed and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting villages, sheepcotes, and mills
Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with prayers,
Enforce their charity: 'Poor Turlygod! Poor Tom!'
That's something yet; Edgar I nothing am.

[IV, i, 1– 9] Still in his mad disguise, Edgar finds he can take considerable comfort from the knowledge that he is firmly at the bottom of the social heap :

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned

Than still contemned and flattered. To be worst,
The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts.

[III, iv, 28– 36] Brought low himself by circumstance, Lear reflects on the plight of his country's poor :

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your looped and windowed raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou mayst shake the superflux to them
And show the heavens more just.

Macbeth

[I, v, 36– 52] A single murder stands between her husband and the Scottish throne, realizes Lady Macbeth – and King Duncan is to be the guest of honour in her own home this very night :

The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here
And fill me from the crown to the toe top- full
Of direst cruelty. Make thick my blood;
Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose nor keep peace between
The effect and it. Come to my woman's breasts
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever, in your sightless substances,
You wait on nature's mischief. Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunkest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark
To cry, 'Hold, hold!'

[I, vii, 1– 28] His wife having put the idea of murdering Duncan in his head, Macbeth is appalled at the enormity of the contemplated crime :

If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly. If the assassination

Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success – that but this blow
Might be the be- all and the end- all! – here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,
We'd jump the life to come. But in these cases
We still have judgement here – that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which being taught return
To plague the inventor. This even- handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poisoned chalice
To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan
Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet- tongued against
The deep damnation of his taking- off;
And pity, like a naked new- born babe
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, horsed
Upon the sightless curriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself
And falls on the other.

[II, i, 33– 64] As he steels his nerves to kill the sleeping Duncan, an all but delirious Macbeth can hardly tell where his fantasies of power leave off and murderous fact takes up the story :

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee –
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still!
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat- oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.
Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going,
And such an instrument I was to use. –
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest. – I see thee still,
And on thy blade and dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. There's no such thing:
It is the bloody business which informs
Thus to mine eyes. Now o'er the one half- world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtained sleep. Witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecat's offerings; and withered Murder,
Alarumed by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost. Thou sure and firm- set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
Thy very stones prate of my whereabouts
And take the present horror from the time
Which now suits with it. – Whiles I threat, he lives:

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

(A bell rings .)

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan, for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

[V, v, 17– 28] On hearing the news of his lady's death, Macbeth retreats into a world of his own to reflect upon the meaningless futility of all he has fought and killed for :

She should have died hereafter;

There would have been a time for such a word –

Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day

To the last syllable of recorded time;

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools

The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player

That struts and frets his hour upon the stage

And then is heard no more. It is a tale

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing.

Antony and Cleopatra

[IV, xiv, 44– 54] Having parted at odds with his Egyptian lover, Antony is broken by the news of her death (though it will turn out to be untrue). He will himself commit suicide, he resolves, and they will be reconciled in the next life, like the Carthaginian Queen Dido and the Trojan hero Aeneas :

I will o’ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture; since the torch is out,
Lie down, and stray no farther. Now all labour
Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
Itself with strength. Seal then, and all is done.
Eros! – I come, my queen – Eros! Stay for me.
Where souls do couch on flowers, we’ll hand in hand,
And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:
Dido and her Aeneas shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.

Pericles, Prince of Tyre

[I, i, 122– 43] Pericles is horror- struck – and terrified – when he realizes that his intended bride has been the incestuous lover of her father, the great king Antiochus :

How courtesy would seem to cover sin,
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain you were not so bad
As with foul incest to abuse your soul;
Where now you're both a father and a son
By your untimely claspings with your child,
Which pleasures fits a husband, not a father,
And she, an eater of her mother's flesh
By the defiling of her parents' bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell, for wisdom sees those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night
Will shun no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke.
Murder's as near to lust as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets to put off the shame.
Then, lest my life be cropped to keep you clear,
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear.

[II, i, 1– 11] Pericles harangues the storm that has wrecked his ship: it has shown its mastery, now he wishes it would leave him to die in peace :

Yet cease your ire, you angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you,
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas, the seas hath cast me on the rocks,
Washed me from shore to shore, and left my breath
Nothing to think on but ensuing death.
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes,
And, having thrown him from your watery grave
Here to have death in peace is all he'll crave.

Coriolanus

[IV, iv, 12– 26] Exiled from Rome himself as an enemy of the people, Coriolanus now finds himself in Antium, an ‘enemy’ state. ‘City, ’tis I who made thy widows,’ he wryly recalls, as he sets off in search of his old adversary, Aufidius :

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seems to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise
Are still together, who twin, as ’twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends
And interjoin their issues. So with me.
My birthplace hate I, and my love’s upon
This enemy town. I’ll enter. If he slay me,
He does fair justice: if he give me way,
I’ll do his country service.

The Winter's Tale

[III, iii, 58– 76] King Leontes of Bohemia, having taken his head that his queen, Hermione, has been unfaithful, orders that their infant child – her bastard, he believes – be taken out and abandoned in the wilderness. Fortunately for the baby, an aged shepherd comes stumbling along, pondering as he goes the follies of youth :

I would there were no age between ten and three- andtwenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest: for there is nothing in the between but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, stealing, fighting. Hark you now: would any but these boiled brains of nineteen and two- and- twenty hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep, which I fear the wolf will sooner find than the master. If anywhere I have them, 'tis by the sea- side, browsing of ivy. Good luck, an't be thy will!

He sees the child

What have we here? Mercy on's, a barne! A very pretty barne. A boy or a child, I wonder? A pretty one, a very pretty one. Sure, some scape. Though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting gentlewoman in the scape: this has been some stair- work, some trunk- work, some behind- door- work. They were warmer that got this than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity – yet I'll tarry till my son come: he hallowed but even now. Whoa- ho- hoa!

Cymbeline

[II, ii, 12– 51] Giacomo having bragged that he can seduce any woman he wants, Posthumus has made a bet on the chastity of his virtuous wife, Imogen. With not only his rakish pride but his fortune at stake, however, a desperate Giacomo has had himself carried into her chamber in a trunk so that he will be able to give Posthumus details suggestive of the closest intimacy. Emerging at dead of night, he begins to check off the features of her room and person: he may leave her body alone, but he will rape her reputation :

The crickets sing, and man's o'er-laboured sense
Repairs itself by rest. Our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded. Cytherea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! Fresh lily,
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss! Rubies unparagoned,
How dearly they do't! 'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus. The flame o' th' taper
Bows toward her and would under-peep her lids
To see th' enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows white and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct. But my design
To note the chamber. I will write all down:
Such and such pictures; there the window; such
Th' adornment of her bed; the arras, figures –
Why, such and such; and the contents o' th' story.
Ah, but some natural notes about her body

Above ten thousand meaner movables
Would testify, t' enrich mine inventory.
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!

And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying! Come off, come off;
(Taking off her bracelet)

As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard!
'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To th' madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque- spotted, like the crimson drops
I' th' bottom of a cowslip. Here's a voucher
Stronger than ever law could make; this secret
Will force him think I have picked the lock and ta'en
The treasure of her honour. No more. To what end?
Why should I write this down that's riveted,
Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turned down
Where Philomel gave up. I have enough.
To th' trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning
May bare the raven's eye! I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

(Clock strikes)

One, two, three. Time, time!

[II, v, 1– 35] His life in tatters, his faith destroyed, after hearing Giacomo's tale of conquest, Posthumus is left in profoundly misogynistic mood:

Is there no way for men to be, but women

Must be half- workers? We are all bastards,
And that most venerable man which I Did call my father was I know not where
When I was stamped. Some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time. So doth my wife
The nonpareil of this. O, vengeance, vengeance!
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrained,
And prayed me oft forbearance; did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on't
Might well have warmed old Saturn; that I thought her
As chaste as unsunned snow. O, all the devils!
This yellow Iachimo in an hour – was't not?
Or less! – at first? Perchance he spoke not, but,
Like a full- acorned boar, a German one,
Cried 'O!' and mounted; found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman's part in me! For there's no motion
That tends to vice in man but I affirm
It is the woman's part. Be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lust and rank thoughts, hers, hers; revenges, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longing, slanders, mutability,
All faults that man may name, nay, that hell knows,
Why, hers, in part or all; but rather all;
For even to vice

They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice but of a minute old for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them. Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.

[III, vi, 1– 27] Imogen has set off in joy to meet her husband, only to discover that he has been plotting her death – driven to a frenzy of jealousy by news of her alleged adultery. Now, in man's attire, she perseveres in her journey towards Milford Haven, hoping to find him there and convince him of her fidelity :

I see a man's life is a tedious one.
I have tir'd myself, and for two nights together
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick
But that my resolution helps me. Milford,
When from the mountain- top Pisanio showed thee,
Thou wast within a ken. O Jove! I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Two beggars told me
I could not miss my way. Will poor folks lie,
That have afflictions on them, knowing 'tis
A punishment or trial? Yes; no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true. To lapse in fullness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. My dear lord!
Thou art one o' th' false ones. Now I think on thee
My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
At point to sink for food. But what is this?
Here is a path to 't; 'tis some savage hold.
I were best not call; I dare not call. Yet famine,

Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
Plenty and peace breeds cowards; hardness ever
Of hardness is mother. Ho! Who's here?
If anything that's civil, speak; if savage,
Take or lend. Ho! No answer? Then I'll enter.
Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy
But fear the sword, like me, he'll scarcely look on't.
Such a foe, good heavens!

[IV, ii, 293– 334] Still making her sad way westward, almost mad with grief, Imogen awakens from uneasy sleep to find herself lying by what appears to be the headless body of her husband:

Yes, sir, to Milford Haven. Which is the way?
I thank you. By yond bush? Pray, how far thither?
'Ods pittikins! Can it be six mile yet?
I have gone all night. Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.
But, soft! no bedfellow. O gods and goddesses!
(Seeing the body)

These flow'rs are like the pleasures of the world;
This bloody man, the care on't. I hope I dream;
For so I thought I was a cave- keeper,
And cook to honest creatures. But 'tis not so;
'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes. Our very eyes
Are sometimes, like our judgements, blind. Good faith,
I tremble still with fear; but if there be
Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
As a wren's eye, feared gods, a part of it!
The dream's here still. Even when I wake it is Without me, as within me; not imagined, felt.

A headless man? The garments of Posthumus?

I know the shape of his leg; this is his hand,

His foot mercurial, his martial thigh,

The brawns of Hercules; but his jovial face –

Murder in heaven! How!

[V, v, 97– 123] Posthumus, in prison, feels he could be in no better place as he mulls over the manifold wrongs he has done his beloved Imogen :

Most welcome, bondage! For thou art a way,

I think, to liberty. Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity than be cured

By th' sure physician death, who is the key

T' unbar these locks. My conscience, thou art fettered

More than my shanks and wrists; you good gods, give me

The penitent instrument to pick that bolt,

Then, free for ever! Is't enough I am sorry?

So children temporal fathers do appease;

Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent,

I cannot do it better than in gyves,

Desired more than constrained. To satisfy,

If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take

No stricter render of me than my all.

I know you are more clement than vile men,

Who of their broken debtors take a third,

A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again

On their abatement; that's not my desire.

For Imogen's dear life take mine; and though

'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coined it.

'Tween man and man they weigh not every stamp;
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake;
You rather mine, being yours. And so, great pow'rs,
If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence.
(Sleeps)

The Tempest

[II, ii, 1– 17] The savage Caliban curses Prospero, who has, he feels, usurped his rightful rule in this island realm, contriving cruel torments of every kind to maintain his obedience :

All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch- meal a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin- shows, pitch me i' th' mire,
Nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometime like apes that mow and chatter at me,
And after bite me; then like hedgehogs which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount
Their pricks at my footfall. Sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.

Enter Trinculo

Lo, now, lo!

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat.
Perchance he will not mind me.

[18– 40] No airy spirit but a sailor, cast ashore in the recent storm, Trinculo finds it hard to know what to make of Caliban's recumbent form :

Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing. I hear it sing i' th' wind. Yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before, I know not where to hide my head. Yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls. What have we here? A man or a fish? Dead or alive? A fish! He smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish- like smell; kind of not-of- the- newest poor- John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver. There would this monster make a man. Any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legged like a man! And his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by thunderbolt.

(Thunder)

Alas, the storm is come again! My best way is to creep under his gaberdine. There is no other shelter hereabout. Misery acquaints a man with strange bed- fellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

[V, i, 33– 57] Prospero, the island's ruler, his work done, the wrongs once done to him put right, weaves the final spell by which he intends to forsake the world of magic :

Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves,
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him
When he comes back; you demi- puppets that
By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites; and you whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrumps, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid –
Weak masters though ye be – I have bedimmed
The noontide sun, called forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azured vault

Set roaring war; to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt; the strong-based promontory
Have I made shake, and by the spurs plucked up
The pine and cedar; graves at my command
Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let 'em forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I here abjure; and, when I have required
Some heavenly music – which even now I do –
To work mine end upon their senses that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And deeper than did ever plummet sound
I'll drown my book.

一、真理与修辞

[17a] [1] 雅典的人们，我不知道，你们到底是不是被我的控告者们说服了。至于我，我自己也快被他们说不知道自己是谁了，他们可真是雄辩！可他们简直一句真话也没说。他们信口雌黄，其中有句话[a5]特别让我惊讶，即，你们必须小心被我欺骗，[17b]因为我伶牙俐齿。他们真不害羞，不怕会被我用事实马上驳倒

（ἐξελεγχθήσονται）：我无论如何不像伶牙俐齿的——在我看来这是他们做的最可耻的事——除非是，他们把说真话叫作[b5]伶牙俐齿。而如果他们这么说，我会承认我是个演说者，但不是他们那种。可我得说，这些人说的话里，很少有真话，或根本没有真话，但你们听我说的都是真话。宙斯在上，雅典的人们，你们听到我说的并不像他们精心编造的词句那样，不是刻意修饰的[17c]辞令和名目，都是我临场口占的字句——我相信我说的是实事求是（δίκαια）的——你们中谁也不要期待别的说话方式。当然，诸位，在我这[c5]个年纪，是不该像孩子一样到你们这里来胡扯了。雅典的人们，我热切地求你们、恳请你们，如果你们听到我申辩的这些话，觉得和我在市场上的钱庄柜台边或别的地方常说的一样（你们中很多人在那里听到过），你们不要[17d]因此而惊讶或喧哗（θορυβεῖν）。因为事实是，现在我第一次到法庭上来，已经是七十高龄的老人。我完全不懂这里的说话方式。比如，要是我在这儿真的是一个外邦人，你们一定[d5]同意我用从小习惯了的[18a]口音和方式说话。那么，同样，我现在向你们提出这个正当请求——至少在我看来，它是正当的——你们不要管我的说话方式（这方式也许更糟，也许更好），只需了解我用这个方式表达出的想法，看我我说的是[a5]不是对的。这是法官们的美德，而演说者的美德就是说真话。

二、案情的真相

那么，雅典的人们，我认为正确的申辩方式是，首先针对那些最初的虚假控告和那些最初的控告者做申辩；其次，针对后面的控告和后面的[18b]控告者申辩。而很久之前（有些年头了），在你们面前就出现了很多控告我的人，说的根本不是真话。比起阿努图斯周围的人，我更怕他们，虽然阿努图斯他们也可怕。诸位，那些人更可怕，你们中[b5]很多人从孩童时代就被他们说服了，听他们控告我。其中

同样没有真话，他们说，有个苏格拉底，是个智慧的人，是关心天上的事的学究，还考察地下万物，把弱的说法变强。[18c]雅典的人们，他们散布这谣言，真是我可怕的控告者。听到这些话的人就认为，考察这些东西，就是不信神的。再者，这些控告者数量多，而且在很久以前[c5]就在告我了，他们在你们最易轻信的年龄里（你们是儿童或少年时）对你们讲的那些控告，都被想当然地接受了，根本无人申辩。在这一切当中，最没道理的是，我根本不[18d]知道，也无法说出他们的名字——除了其中一个正好是喜剧诗人。很多人出于嫉妒而诬蔑中伤我，说服了你们——或是先说服自己，再说服别人。所有这些人都是极难相处的。也不可能[d5]让他们中哪一个来此当面对质，那我就简直要像空拳练习 [2] 一般申辩，在无人回答时质疑他们。但你们要把我所说的当真，我有两拨[18e]控告者。其中一拨刚刚控告我，另外一拨就是我所说的很久之前控告我的那些。你们知道，我应该首先针对后者申辩，因为你们最先听到了后者的控告，听得比前者的多得多。

好了。雅典的人们，我是要申辩的，要试着[19a]在这么短的时间里，打消你们中间那么长时间以来持有的恶意。如果能对你们和我都好，我能圆满完成申辩，我当然愿意。但我认为这[a5]是很难的，这点根本不会逃过我的眼睛。一方面，神愿意怎样，就怎样发生吧；另一方面，我们要遵守法律来做申辩。

三、哲学生活的根据：针对第一拨控告者的辩护

A.智者之知

那么，是什么引起了对我的诬蔑？还是让我们从头讲起。莫勒图斯[19b]在写下现在这份诉状时，他信的就是这些诬蔑。好了。那些诬蔑者，究竟进行了怎样的诬蔑？他们若来控告，那他们起誓后的状辞一定是：“苏格拉底行了不义，忙忙碌碌，[b5]寻求地上和天上之事，把弱的说法变强，[19c]并把这些教给别人。”大体如此。而你们自己在阿里斯托芬的喜剧里看到了这些：有个苏格拉底被搬到那里，吹嘘说他在空气里走路，还胡说好些别的胡话。但对于这类事，我闻所未闻，无论[c5]大小。但我不是说，如果谁是擅长这些的智者，我就看不起这些学问——但愿莫勒图斯不会告我有这么重大的罪，让我辩护！但是，雅典的人们，这些事情和我都没有关系。[19d]并且，我可以让你们中的很多人做证，我觉得你们应该相互告知和展示，你们那些听到过我怎么说的人——你们中有很多人听我说过的——相互展示，无论听多听少，[d5]你们中是否有谁听我对此说过什么，因此你们就知道，很多人给我编造的其他罪名，也是这样莫须有的。

可这些都不是真的。如果你们听到，我试图教育人，然后从中牟

利，[19e]那也根本不是真的。而在我看来，谁要是能教育人们，这还是很高贵的，就像雷昂提尼人（Λεοντίνοϛ）高尔吉亚（Γοργίας）、西欧斯人（Κεῖοϛ）普罗迪科斯（Πρόδικοϛ）、埃利斯人（Ἠλεῖοϛ）希琵阿斯（Ἡππίας）那样。诸位，他们当中的每一个，都走[e5]到每个城邦中的年轻人中去——本来，这些年轻人只要愿意，他们可以免费和城邦里的任何人交往，并且能说服他们，不和自己城邦中的那些人在一起。[20a]而和他们在一起，得给他们财物，还要为此感激他们。

这里还有另外一个智者，是巴洛斯人（Πάριοϛ），听说他还在这里。我正好遇到了这么一个人，他在智者身上花的钱[a5]比别的人都多，就是希波尼科（Ἱππόνικοϛ）的儿子卡利亚（Καλλίας） [3]，卡利亚有两个儿子。我问他：

“卡利亚，如果你的两个儿子是马驹或牛犊，我们会给它们找个教习，雇用他，只要他愿意让它们按照自己[20b]的美德（ἀρετή）变得美好和善好，这个人就是一个马术师或者农夫；而今，你的儿子们是人，那么，你心里想给他们找什么人来做教习呢？是一个精通这样的美德，即关于做人和做公民[b5]的美德的教习吗？而我想，你既然有两个儿子，应该已经考量过这点了。是这样，”我说，“还是不是？”

“当然。”他说。

“他是谁？”我说，“从哪里来，要多少学费？”

“是欧埃诺斯（Εὐήνοϛ），苏格拉底，他是巴洛斯人，五个米纳。”

如果欧埃诺斯真有这技艺，并且会循循善诱，那我祝福他。[20c]如果我懂这些，我就会美滋滋的，自我膨胀。但是我并不懂，雅典的人们。

B.无知之知

那么，也许你们当中有人会插话说：

“那么，苏格拉底，[c5]你到底是怎么回事呢？对你的诬蔑都从何而起呢？也许你没有做多少出格的事，但如果你所做的真的和大多数人没有不同，就不会出现这些流言和说法。那么告诉我们你出了什么事吧，[20d]以免我们武断地对待你。”

我看说这话的人说得很对，我会试着向你们揭示出来，是什么给我带来了这名声和诬蔑。听清楚了。也许在你们中的一些人看来，[d5]我是在说笑话。但你们要明白，我要告诉你们的都是真的。

雅典的人们，我得到这个名声，不因为别的，正是因为智慧。这

到底是什么样的智慧？也许就是凡人的智慧。也许我确实善于这种智慧。而我刚刚提到的人，[20e]要么确实有比人更高的智慧，因而是智慧的，要么我说不出那是什么。因为我不懂这些，而谁说懂，都是在说谎，制造对我的诬蔑。雅典的人们，不要对我喧哗，哪怕我好像在对[e5]你们说大话。我说的这话并不是我自己说的，我是借用你们认为值得信赖的（ἄξιόχρεων）一个人说的话。我的这些，究竟是不是真的智慧，是什么样的智慧，我要向你们举出的证人，就是德尔斐（Δελφοί）的神。你们该知道凯瑞丰（Χαίρεφών）的。他和我从年轻时就是伙伴，[21a]他也是你们大家（πλήθει）的伙伴，一起在新近的逃亡中出逃，又和你们一起回来 [4]。你们知道凯瑞丰是怎样一种人 [5]，知道他无论做什么事，都是那么莽撞。有一次他到了德尔斐，竟敢提出这[a5]个问题——我说过了，诸位，你们不要喧哗——他问，是否有人比我更智慧。于是皮提亚女祭司 [6] 拿起签（ἀνεῖλειν）说，没有人更智慧。这个人已经死了，但他的弟弟在你们中间，可以做证。

[21b]你们看我为什么说这些。我想要告诉你们，对我的诬蔑是从何而起的。听到这话，我就自己寻思：“神说的究竟是什么，这到底是什么哑谜？我自己知道，我没有大智慧，也没有小[b5]智慧。那么他说我最智慧，到底是什么意思呢？神可不会说假话，因为这不是神的做法。”在好长时间里，我都不明白他说的到底是什么。随后，我很不情愿地转向下面这样的探讨。我去拜访一个据说很智慧的人，[21c]好像在那里就可以证明（ἐλέγζων）这说法是错的，回应神谕说：

“你说我是最智慧的，但这个人比我更智慧。”于是我仔细审视了他——他的名字我不必说，雅典的人们，那是一个政治家[c5]——我观察了他，并且和他对话之后，得到这么个印象：我看到，虽然很多别的人觉得他很智慧，特别是他自己，但其实不然。随后，我试着告诉他，虽然他认为自己是智慧的，其实他不智慧。[21d]结果，我遭到他和在场很多人的忌恨。我离开那里，寻思，我比这个人更智慧。也许我俩都不知道美好（καλόν）和善好（ἀγαθόν）是什么，但是那个人[d5]认为他知道自己不知道的事，而我既然不知道，也就不认为我知道。我觉得好像在这件事上总比他智慧一点儿，即我不知道的事，我就不认为我知道。我离开那儿，到另外一个看起来更智慧的人那里去，[21e]结果在我看来也是这样，于是我就遭到那人和别的很多人的忌恨。

在这之后，我拜访了一个又一个人，痛苦而恐惧地看到，我被人们忌恨。可是在我看来，[e5]完成神给的任务一定先于所有别的事——为了考察他说的神谕，就要去找所有[22a]好像有知识的人。天狗在上 [7]，雅典的人们——而我必须对你们说真话——我经历的就

是这类的事。我按照神的说法考察之后，那些声名显赫的人在我看来是最无能的；而[a5]另外那些看上去更一般的人，却好像更明智些（φρονίμως）。我必须告诉你们，我的奔波真是干苦活，我这才觉得那个神谕变得不可驳斥了。在这些政治家之后，我去拜访了一些诗人，包括悲剧诗人、[22b]酒神的赞美诗人，还有别的诗人，自以为我在那里就可以当场发现，我比他们无知。我拿起在我看来他们最用心写的诗，细细询问他们说了什么，[b5]也看我能从他们那里学到什么。诸位，我简直羞于说出真相。可我必须讲出来。当时在场的人谈到他们花心血写的诗歌，没有几个人不比诗人自己说得好。于是，很快我也明白诗歌是怎么回事了，作诗不是靠智慧[22c]作的，而是靠某种自然，被灵感激发，就像先知和灵媒一样：他们是说了很多很美的话，但是他们并不理解自己所说的。我明白了，诗人所感到的，也是他们的这种感觉。[c5]同时，我也看到，他们因为诗歌，就认为自己在别的事情上也是最智慧的人，其实并不是。于是我离开了他们，结果认为自己更高明，就像我比政治家高明一样。

最后我走到匠人们当中。[22d]我知道，我是所谓的什么也不知道，而我也知道，我会发现他们知道很多美好的事情。这一点我没弄错，他们知道我所不知道的，在这一点上比我智慧。但是，雅典的人们，[d5]在我看来，这些能工巧匠和诗人有一样的毛病——因为能漂亮地完成自己的技艺，他们一个个就自以为在别的事情上，哪怕天下大事上（τὰ μέγιστα），也是最智慧的。他们的这种自以为是遮蔽了他们的智慧。[22e]于是我从那个神谕的角度问我自己，我究竟是愿意这样是我所是，既不像他们的智慧那样智慧，也不像他们的愚蠢那样愚蠢，还是像他们那样，兼有二者。我对我自己[e5]和神谕回答说：“‘是我所是’对我更好些。”

由于这种省察，雅典的人们，[23a]我遭到了很多人的忌恨，是最苛刻和最沉重的忌恨，因而他们对我也就有了很多诬蔑，于是人们用这么个名儿来说我：“智慧的。”每一次，在场的人都认为，我在什么问题上的驳斥别人，我在那个问题上就[a5]是智慧的。而其实，诸位，神才是真正智慧的，他在那个神谕里表明的是这个：人的智慧价值很小，几乎什么也不是。他好像是在这样说：“这个苏格拉底，其实是假借[23b]我的名字，用我做个例子，如同在说‘你们中最智慧的，人类啊，就是像苏格拉底那样，知道就智慧而言，他真是毫无价值’。”正是因此，我现在[b5]还在按照神的意愿，四处寻求和追问每一个我以为智慧的公民及外邦人。每当我发现他并不智慧，我就替神证明，指出此人不智慧。因为忙于这些，我没有空闲从事城邦里那些值得一提的事务，也无暇顾及家里的事，而是[23c]因为服务于神而陷入赤贫。

C. 诬蔑的形成

除此之外，有些青年自愿追随我——他们最有闲工夫，出身豪富。他们乐于听我省察人们，自己[c5]经常模仿我，还试着省察别人。于是，我想他们发现无数的人是自以为知道一些，其实知道得很少，甚至什么也不知道。于是，那些被他们省察的人对我生气了，却不对他们自己生气，[23d]说什么，苏格拉底是最有害的人，把青年都败坏了。有人问他们我做了什么，教了什么，他们什么也说不出，根本不知道，但又不愿表现得毫无根据，于是就说出了所有那些为爱知[d5]者们（φιλοσοφούντων）预备的控诉，说什么“天上地下的事”，什么“不信神”，什么“把弱的说法变强”。我认为他们并不想说出事实，非常明显，他们假装知道，其实不知道。同时，我认为他们是爱名者（φιλότιμοι）[23e]，很使劲，人数也多，异口同声（ξυντεταγμένως）、言之凿凿地说我的坏话，灌满了你们的耳朵，长期以来，一直使劲地诬蔑我。靠了这些，莫勒图斯伙同阿努图斯和卢孔攻击我。其中，莫勒图斯[e5]为诗人们不平，阿努图斯为那些匠人和[24a]政治家不平，卢孔为演说家不平。就像我开头说的，我要是能在这么短的时间里消除在你们当中已根深蒂固的诬蔑，那就怪了。雅[a5]典人，这就是你们要知道的真相，无论大事小事，我都说出来，都不隐瞒你们，一点儿也不保留。而且我清楚地知道，我也会因为这些而招致忌恨。这也证明我说的是真相，这就是对我的诬蔑，这就是诬蔑我的原因[24b]。无论你们现在还是以后考察这一点，你们都会发现是这样的。

四、在哲学与政治之间：针对第二拨控告者的辩护

A. 诉状

那么，针对那些最先对我提出控告的控告者，向你们做这些申辩，就该够了。至于那所谓的好人和[b5]爱城者莫勒图斯，以及后来的控告者，我说过，我随后就要来申辩。既然这些人看来是另外一群控告者，我们就再来看他们宣誓所写的诉状 [8]。上面是这样说的：苏格拉底行了不义，因为他败坏青年，不信城邦[24c]信的神，而是信新的精灵之事（δαίμόνιακαινά）。那控告就是这样的。我们来一条一条地省察这份控告。

他说我因败坏青年行了不义。而我[c5]，雅典的人们啊，说莫勒图斯行了不义，因为他把正事当玩笑，轻易地把人陷进官司（ἄγωνα），对他从未关心过（ἐμέλησεν）的事情假装正经，无中生非。事情是不是这样的，我且来摆给你们看。

B. 败坏青年

来吧，莫勒图斯，回答我。把[24d]青年们变得尽可能最好，不是顶重要的事吗？

我同意。

现在，告诉诸位，谁把他们变得更好了？显然你知道，因为你关心这事。像你说的，[d5]因为你发现了败坏青年的人，也就是我，所以把我带到诸位面前，提出控告。那么说说是谁把他们变好的，披露给大家。你看，莫勒图斯，你不说话，没什么可说的？这不可耻吗？这不是我所说的话的足够证据吗：你从未关心过此事！但是，[d10]说吧，来吧，是谁把他们变得更好的？

法律。

[24e]但这不是我所问的，最好的人啊。我问的是，最先知道这些——法律——的人，是谁呢？

他们，苏格拉底，法官们。

你怎么讲，莫勒图斯？他们能够教育[e5]年轻人成为更好的人？

当然是。

他们都能，还是有些人能，别的人不能？

都能。

赫拉在上，你说得好，青年的帮助者真是[e10]人才济济了。那怎样呢？这些听众会把他们变得更好，[25a]还是不会？

他们会。

怎样，议员们呢？

议员们也会。

[a5]那么，莫勒图斯，在公民大会上呢，参加大会的那些人，是不会败坏青年的？或者他们也都会把青年变得更好？

他们也会。

看来，除我之外，雅典人都会把年轻人变得[a10]高贵和好，只有我败坏他们。你是这么说的吧？

这正是我说的意思。

你可让我倒大霉了。回答我。你是否认为马也是这样的？所有[25b]人都可以把它们变得更好，只有一人是败坏者？或者是完全相反，只有特定的一人或很少的人，精于驯马，能把马变得更好，大多数入如果和马在一起，使用它们，就会败坏它们？无论是马，还是别

的牲畜，[b5]难道不都是这样吗，莫勒图斯？一定是的，不论你和阿努图斯承认不承认。如果只有一人败坏，别人都帮助，那青年们可是太[25c]幸运了。但是，莫勒图斯，你已足以表明，你从未挂念过青年，还清楚地表现出了你的这种漠不关心。虽然你因此把我带上了法庭，但你自己从未关心过此事。

[c5]当着宙斯的面，你对我们说，莫勒图斯，是在善良的公民中过日子（oikeĩv）好，还是在邪恶的公民中过日子好？伙计（τᾶν），回答啊！我问的可不是个难题。难道不是恶人总是对身边的人做坏事，好人做好事吗？

[c10]当然是。

[25d]那么，是否有人更愿遭到身边的人的伤害，而不是得到帮助呢？回答呀，好人。因为法律命令你回答呢。有人愿意被伤害吗？

当然没有。

[d5]来吧，你带我到这儿来，说我败坏青年，把他们变得更坏，我是有意的还是无意的？

我认为是有意的。

那怎样，莫勒图斯？难道你小小年纪，比我这么大把年纪更有智慧，知道坏[d10]人总是对和自己最接近的人做坏事，好人做好事？[25e]难道我反而那么无知，根本不知道，如果我要给身边的人带来痛苦，我就会冒着被他伤害的危险，所以我还是像你所说的那样，有意做了这些坏事？[e5]我可不信你这一套，莫勒图斯，我认为别人也不相信。[26a]我要么没败坏他们，要么败坏了他们，但不是有意的；在这两种情况下，你都在撒谎。如果我无意败坏了他们，法律就不该因为这种（无意的）过错，让人带我来这里，而应该让人私下教育和警告我。显然，如果我得到了教诲，我就会停止我无意做的事。[a5]而你却回避，不愿意与我交往，不愿意教育我，反而把我带到这儿来，而法律只要求把需要惩罚的人带到这儿来，不是需要教育的人。

C.不敬之罪

然而，雅典的人们，我说得很清楚，[26b]莫勒图斯从未或多或少地关心过这事。可你要告诉我们，莫勒图斯，你说，我怎么败坏青年？不过很明显，按照你写的这份诉状，我是通过教给他们不信[b5]城邦信的神，而是信新的精灵之事。你说的是不是这个：我用教育败坏他们？

我说的的确是这个。

现在谈的这些神，当着他们的面，莫勒图斯，你说得更清楚些，

对我，[26c]也对这些人。我还不能明白，你是不是说我教育人们信（νομίζεῖν）有神存在——我自己信有神存在，并不完全是无神论，不因为这行不义——但不是城邦信的神，而是信别的神，这就是[c5]你状告我的原因，说我信别的神？或者你说我根本不信神，并把这教给别人？

我说的是后者，你根本不信神。

[26d]奇怪的莫勒图斯呀，你怎么这么说呢？难道我竟不像别的人那样，相信日月是神吗？

宙斯在上，法官们，他说太阳[d5]是石头，月亮是泥土。

你以为你控告的是阿那克萨哥拉（ἀναξαγόρης）吗，亲爱的莫勒图斯？你还如此看不起在场的人们，认为他们不通文墨，以至于不知道，这是充斥克拉佐梅纽（Κλαζομένιος）的阿那克萨哥拉的著作的说法？哪怕价格很高的时候，青年们也可以花一个德拉克马，[d10]从乐队 [9] 那里得到，难道竟然要从我这里学这些？如果苏格拉底自称这是他的说法，[26e]他们会笑话苏格拉底，特别是这么一个奇特的说法。宙斯面前的人啊，我在你看来是这样的吗？我不信有神存在吗？

[e5]不信，宙斯在上，从来都不信。

莫勒图斯，你让人无法相信，在我看来，连你自己都无法相信自己。这个人，雅典的人们啊，看来是太自负、太放肆了，他就是因为如此自负和放肆，年轻气盛，才如此控告。[27a]他就像编造了谜语来审查我：“智慧的苏格拉底是不是知道，我在开玩笑，说得自相矛盾，还是我会欺骗他和别的听众？”因为在我看来，他[a5]在自己的诉状里就说得自相矛盾，他如同在说：“苏格拉底因为不信神而行了不义，而他信神。”这真是开玩笑。

诸位，一起来看，为什么在我看来他是这么说的。你要回答我们，莫勒图斯。而你们，就像我[27b]一开始就请求你们的，如果我按照我习惯的方式讲话，记住不要喧哗。

莫勒图斯，是否会有一个人，相信有人事存在，但又不相信有人存在？让他回答，诸[b5]位，不要让他一次又一次地喧哗。是否有人相信没有马，而有马之事？是否有人不相信有吹笛者，而有笛子之事？没有吧，最好的人？如果你不想回答，我替你和别的这些人说出来。回答这个问题：[27c]是否有人信有精灵之事，而不信有精灵？

没有。

太好了，你终于回答了，虽然是吞吞吐吐，在这些人的逼迫下[c5]回答的。那么，你说我信仰和教授精灵之事，且不论新旧，但按

照你的说法，我相信精灵之事，你在诉状中已经就此发誓。而如果我相信精灵之事，那么我一定信精灵？不是这样吗？是这样的。[c10]既然你不回答，我就认为你同意了。而我们认为，[27d]精灵（δαίμων）当然就是神或神的孩子，不是吗？你说是还是不是？

当然是。

那么，倘若如你所说，我认为有精灵，而如果精灵们[d5]又是某种神，这就是我说的你出的谜和玩笑：说我不认为有神，又说我认为有神，因为我认为有精灵。如果精灵们是神的某种庶子，是仙女所生的，或是无论人们所说的别的什么所生，什么人[d10]会认为，有神的孩子存在，但没有神存在？这太奇怪了，[27e]就如同说认为马和驴的孩子（παῖδας），即骡子，存在，而马不存在，驴也不存在。但是，莫勒图斯，你做出这样的控告，难道不是要么为了用这个考我们，要么因为不知道[e5]该告我行了什么真的不义？哪怕那些心灵闭塞的人，你也没办法说服他们，一个信精灵之事又信神之事的人，却不信[28a]有精灵、神、英雄。

五、为哲学而死的理由

A. 苏格拉底与阿喀琉斯

然而，雅典的人们啊，我并不像莫勒图斯的诉状上所说的那样行了不义，我认为不必再为此做更多申辩，这些也就够了。而我先前[a5]说的，即，在很多人当中，对我产生了很多忌恨，你们要清楚地知道，这是真的。就是这一点把我拿下的。如果有什么把我拿下了，那不是莫勒图斯，也不是阿努图斯，而是众人的诬蔑与嫉妒。这曾经拿下了很多其他的好[28b]人，我想还会拿下更多人。不必担心，这不会到我为止。

也许有人会说：“你难道不羞愧吗，苏格拉底，为了忙于这些事务（ἐπιτήδευμα ἐπιτηδεύσας），现在招来了杀[b5]身之祸？”

我义正词严地回应他：

“这位，如果你认为有点儿人格的人应该计较生死的危险，而不是在做事时仅仅关心这个——做的究竟是正义还是不义，是好人做的还是坏人做的，那你说得真不美。而依着[28c]你的说法，在特洛伊死去的半神们，包括忒提斯之子 [10]，都是微不足道的了。忒提斯之子不愿在耻辱中苟活，藐视危险，所以，当他急切地要杀死赫克托耳的时候，他的女神[c5]母亲对他说了番话，我记得是这么说的：‘孩子，如果你为你的朋友帕特罗克洛斯之死报仇，杀死赫克托耳，你的死期将至——因为，在赫克托耳死后，马上就是你了，轮到你了。’他

听了这话，根本就蔑视死亡和危险。[28d]他更害怕过坏的生活，害怕朋友们得不到复仇。‘那就马上死吧，’他说，‘我让那行不义者得到惩罚后，不必留在这弓船旁边让人嘲笑，成为大地上的负担。’你不认为他考虑死亡和[d5]危险了吧？”

这样就是依循了真理，雅典的人们。人无论是自己认为这样最好，从而让自己站在一个岗位上，还是被长官安排在岗位上，在我看来，都应该在危险中坚守，不把死亡或别的什么看得比[d10]耻辱还重。雅典的人们，当你们选举来指挥我的长官[28e]来安排我在某个岗位上时，无论是在波底代亚（Ποσειδαία） [11]、安菲玻里（Ἀμφιπόλις） [12]，还是在德利昂（Δελίον）附近 [13]，我就像别的任何人一样，冒着死的危险待在被安排的岗位上。而我在这里，我[e5]认为并意识到，是神安排我以爱知为生，省察自己和别人。我如果反而怕死，[29a]或因为别的什么原因，而脱离岗位，从这里逃走，那我可真是做了可怕之事了。而如果我不服从（ἄπειθῶν）神谕，怕死，以不智慧为智慧，那才是可怕之事，人们就可以正当地把我带上法庭，说我不信有神存在。所谓[a5]的怕死，诸位，不过是不智慧而自以为智慧，因为这就是自以为知道自己不知道的事。没人知道，死没准儿是人的所有好处中最大的一个，人们都害怕，好像明确知道[29b]，它是坏事中最大的。认为知道自己不知道的事，这不是极为可耻的无知吗？诸位，我和多数人不同或许也是因为这个。如果我要说我是更智慧的，就是因为这一点：[b5]我既然不足以知道冥界里的事，我就认为我不知道。但我知道，对比自己好的神和人行不义或不服从，是坏的和可耻的。相对于这些我知道是坏的坏事情，我从来不会害怕，也不会逃避那些我不知道没准儿是好的事情。

B. 苏格拉底的哲学使命

而如果[29c]你们不听阿努图斯的话（他说，要么一开始就不该把我带到这里来；要么，既然我被带来了，就不能不处死我。他对你们说，我要是给放了，你们的孩子就都会[c5]按照苏格拉底教的去，就全都败坏了），如果你们就此跟我说：

“苏格拉底，现在你们不听阿努图斯的话，而是放了你，但有一个条件，即，你不要再花时间研究了，不再爱知了。而如果[29d]我们逮着你还在做这些，你就要死。”

如果你们就是在我说的这些条件下放我，我要告诉你们：

“雅典的人们，我向你们致敬，爱你们，但是我更要听神的话，而不是你们的。只要我还有一口气，能够做，我就根本不能[d5]停止爱知，要激励你们，告诉你们中每个我遇到的人，说我习惯说的话：‘最好的人，你是雅典人，是这个最伟大、最以智慧（σοφία）和

力量著称的城邦的人，你只想着聚敛尽可能多的钱财[29e]，追求名声和荣誉，却不关心，也不求知（φροντίζω）智慧（φρόνησις）和真理，以及怎样使灵魂变成最好的，你不为这些事而羞愧吗？’如果你们中有人反驳，说他关心，我不会轻易放他走，自己也不走，而是询问他，省察他。如果我发现他并没有美德，[e5]他反而说自己有，就羞辱（ἐλέγξω）他，责备他[30a]把最大价值的当成最不重要的，把更微小的当成更大的。只要我遇上了，无论年轻人还是老人，无论外邦人还是本城的人，我都会对他这么做，尤其是本城的人，因为你们是离我最近的同胞。[a5]你们要清楚，是神命令我这么做的。我认为，比起我对神的服务，你们在这城里还没有过什么更大的好处。我在城中转悠，所做的不过就是劝说你们当中的青年和老人，不要这么关心身体或金钱，[30b]而要使劲让灵魂变得尽可能最好，对你们说：‘美德不来自金钱，相反，金钱和人类所有别的好处，无论个体的还是城邦的，之所以好，都是因为美德。’[b5]那么，如果我就是用说这些来败坏青年，那么这就是有害的。但，如果谁说我说的是不是这些，他说得不对。对此，我会说：‘雅典的人们，不论你们是否被阿努图斯说服了，不论你们是否放我，我都会[30c]这么做，虽九死而不悔。’”

不要喧哗，雅典的人们，请按照我请求你们的做，在我说话时不對我喧哗，而是听我说。因为，我认为，听我说话也对你们有益。我要对[c5]你们说一些话，也许这会让他们叫（βοήσθε）起来。但是永远不要这么做。而要清楚地知道，如果你们杀了我，而我是我所说的这样的人，那么，你们对我的伤害，并不比对你们自己的伤害大。没人会伤害我，无论是莫勒图斯还是阿努图斯——他们没有能力——因为我想，让[30d]更好的人被更坏的人伤害，是渎神违法的。也许有人能杀死、放逐或羞辱我。此人和别人一定都认为，这是很大的坏事，但是我不这么想，而是认为，现在做这事（即[d5]试图不义地杀人）的人对自己带来了大得多的伤害。而现在，雅典的人们，我远不是常人想象的那样，在为自己申辩，而是为你们申辩，以免你们判了我罪，从而对神给你们的赐予犯了错误。[30e]而如果你们杀死我，你们将不容易找到别的这类赐予了，即——打个不恰当的比方——像我这样，受命于神，献身城邦的一个。这城邦就如同一匹高头大马，因为大，就会[e5]慵懒，需要一只牛虻来惊醒。在我看来，神就派我到城邦里来当这样的一个人，惊醒、[31a]劝说、责备你们每一个，我整天不停地在各处安顿你们。诸位，另外一个这样的人不容易出现在你们中间了，而如果你们听了我的话，你们就放了我。也许你们立即会遭到烦扰，就像打盹儿的人被惊醒；如果你们要打[a5]我，听信了阿努图斯的话，很容易就能杀我。如果神不再操心，派另外一个来烦你们，随后你们就要在沉睡中度完余生。

而我恰巧就是神派给城邦的这样一个，你们[31b]由下面的事会明白的：我不关心我自己的任何事，简直不像是人所能为。多年来，家里的事都得不到关心，而我总是为你们做事，亲自走到你们每个人那里，像父亲或长兄一样，[b5]劝你们关心美德。如果我从中得到什么，或靠叫你们做这些挣薪水，那还有些道理。现在，你们自己看，他们，那些控告者，虽然如此无耻地在别的所有事情上控告我，却不能厚着脸皮[31c]提供证人，证明我拿过或乞求过薪水。而我认为，我可以提供足够的证据，证明我说的是真的，那就是我的贫困。

C. 哲学作为政治

这看起来也许有点儿不合常理：我私下为[c5]人们出主意，奔走忙碌。在公共场合，却不肯走到你们众人当中，为城邦出主意。此事的原因，就是你们多次听我在很多地方说的，会出现一个神性的[31d]精灵的声音，而莫勒图斯在写诉状时，嘲讽的也许就是这一点。这从我小时候就开始了，就出现了某种声音，每当它出现时，它总是阻止我做事，却从不鼓励我做什么。[d5]就是它反对我参与政事，而且我认为反对得漂亮（παγκάλως）。可你们要清楚地知道，雅典的人们，如果我很早以前就试图参与政事，我早就死了，那么我[31e]对你们和我自己都会毫无益处。不要因为我说出真话而对我动怒。凡是坦诚地反对你们或别的大众，阻止在城邦里发生不义或犯法的事的人，都活不了。事实[32a]上，谁若一定要为正义而战，并且想多活一段，他必须私下干，而不是参与政事。

对这些，我会给你们举出有力的证据，不用[a5]语言，而是用你们看重的事实。请你们听我的经历，你们就会知道，我不会因为怕死而向一个违背正义的人屈服，哪怕不屈服就会灭亡。我要告诉你们的，虽然像是讼师的陈词滥调，却都是真的。而我，雅典的人们，从来没有在城邦里担任过[32b]别的职务，只当过议员 [14]。那时正该我们的部族安提俄克斯（'Αντιοχίς）当主席（πρυτανεύω） [15]，而你们通过决议 [16]，要集体审判十个将军，因为他们从海战班师时，很多阵亡将士的尸体没有被运回——后来，[b5]你们都认为这是不合法的。但在那时的主席（πρύτανις）当中，只有我反对你们做违法的事，投了反对票。虽然那些演说家准备弹劾我，要逮捕我，你们发号施令、大喊大叫，但我认为我掌握了法[32c]律和正义，认为自己应该冒风险，而不是因为害怕被捕或死亡，就赞同你们提不义的建议。那是城邦里还是民主制的时候。等到成了寡头制，三十僭主 [17] [c5]召我们五个人到圆宫 [18]，命我们把撒拉密斯的赖翁（Σαλαμῖνος Λέοντα） [19] 从撒拉密斯带走处死，他们也给了别的很多人很多这类命令，希望让尽可能多的人承担责任。对此我[32d]又用行动（而非言辞）指出，我宁愿死（如果这不是一个很粗鲁的说

法)，也不愿意做这个，这不义或不虔诚（ἀνόσιον）的事。这是我的全部关心所在。因为那个政府虽然强硬，却不能逼我[d5]去行不义，于是，我们走出圆宫后，另外四个人到撒拉密斯去带赖翁，我却回家去了。也许，如果这个政府不很快被推翻，我会因此而死。[32e]关于这，很多人可以向你们做证。

那么，如果我以公事为业，做一个好人应该做的事，扶助正义，公事公办地把这当作最重要的事来做，你们认为我还能活这么大岁数吗？[e5]根本不能，雅典的人们。谁也不能。[33a]在我的整个一生中，我若是从事公共事务，就都是这样的，在私下的活动中，也是如此。我从来没有屈服于任何违背正义的事，不论是对诬蔑我的人、称为我的学生的人，[a5]还是别人。我从来都不是老师。如果有谁想听我说话，听我完成我的任务，不论老少，我都从不拒绝。我不会收了钱[33b]才讲，不收钱就不讲。不论贫富，我都会向他们问问题。谁要想听我说什么，就要回答我的问题。不论这些人变好没有，都不该由我[b5]负责，因为我对他们从未许诺什么，也没教给他们什么。如果有人说过，曾经从我处私下学过或听到过什么，而别人都没有，你们一定要知道，他说的不是真的。

但是，为什么有人那么喜欢和我来往[33c]这么长时间？你们听到了，雅典的人们，我对你们说的是全部真相。这是因为，他们喜欢听我省察那些自以为智慧其实不智慧的人。这不是不愉快的事。正如我说的，这是神[c5]派我干的，通过神谕，通过托梦，通过凡是神分派让人完成任务时，所采用的别的各种方式。

这些，雅典的人们，都是真的，很容易检验。而如果我败坏[33d]青年，我就已经败坏了一些，他们中一些人应该已经长大了，就会认识到，他们在年轻的时候，我曾经给他们出过坏主意，现在就会走上来控告我，报复我。如果他们[d5]自己不愿意，他们的那些亲戚中也会有人来，父亲、兄弟，以及别的亲戚都会。如果这些人的一些亲戚曾经从我这里遭遇了坏事，他们现在就会记起来，报复我。我看到，这里有他们中的很多人，首先是这个克力同（Κρίτων），[33e]和我是同龄人，出身也相同，是这个克力同布鲁斯（Κριτοβούλυσ）的父亲；然后是斯菲图斯（Σφήττιος）人吕萨尼亚（Λυσανίας），这个埃斯奇涅（Αισχίνης）的父亲；还有这个凯菲西欧（Κηφισιεύς）人安提丰（Αντιφών），埃匹格涅斯（Επιγένης）的父亲。还有别的一些人，他们的兄弟都和我来往。还有西奥佐提多斯（Θεοζοτίδος）的儿子[e5]尼克斯特拉托斯（Νικόστρατος），是西奥多托斯（Θεόδοτος）的兄弟，现在西奥多托斯死了，他不能阻止尼克斯特拉托斯告我了。还有[34a]德谟多克斯（Δημοδόκος）的儿子，那个帕拉鲁斯（Πάραλος），已故的忒阿格斯（Θεάγης）是他的兄弟。还有阿里斯图诺斯（Ἀρίστωνος）

的儿子，那个阿德曼托斯（Ἀδεύμαντος），柏拉图是他的兄弟。还有艾安托多罗斯（Αἰαντόδωρος），那个阿波罗多罗斯（Ἀπολλόδωρος）是他的兄弟。

我还可以说出好多人来，莫勒图斯真应该在他的演说中把其中一些当成证人。如果[a5]他忘了，现在他可以举出来——我可以让步——让他说，他可有一个这种证人？但是你们会发现，事实是完全相反的，诸位，他们都会帮助我这个莫勒图斯和阿努图斯认为的所谓败坏了他们的亲戚、对他们[34b]作恶的人。那些被败坏的人自己帮助我还有道理。而那些未被败坏的亲戚，已在耄耋之年，都会来帮我。如果不是他们有正当和正义的原因，[b5]知道莫勒图斯是在说谎，我说的是真的，那还有什么原因来帮我？

D. 爱智者的荣耀

诸位，这些，也许还有别的更多此类的话，就是我所要申辩的。你们中也许有人[34c]想起自己的申辩来，会受刺激，也许他在为比这个官司（ἄγωνα）还小的官司角逐（ἀγωνιζόμενος）时，泪流满面地向法官们恳求，还带孩子上来，以便能得到最大的同情，甚至还带上来很多别的[c5]亲戚朋友。我可不做这些事，宁愿冒着好像是最大的危险。那么，这样想的人也许会对我的态度更固执，就因为这而生气，冲动地投[34d]我的反对票。如果你们中有人是这样——我认为没有，但如果有，我这么对他说就很好：

“最好的人，我也有家庭。因为就像荷马说的，我不是[d5]出生于岩石或古老的橡树。我是父母生的，也有家庭，还有儿子，雅典的人们，有三个呢，一个已经是小伙子，其余两个还是小孩儿。我不需要带他们中的哪个上来，求你们投票放过我。”

那么，我到底为什么不这样做？不是因为我太固执，雅典[34e]的人们，也不是我看不起你们；究竟我是否敢于面对死亡，是另外一个问题（λόγος）；但对声望而言，无论是我的、你们的，还是整个城邦的，我这样年纪和名声的人这么做，都是不大[e5]高贵的。不论真假，人们[35a]认为，苏格拉底与大多数人有些不同。那么，如果你们当中有什么人，无论因为智慧、勇敢，还是别的这类美德，看起来和别人不同，要这样做就太可耻了。我经常看到，本来[a5]很体面的人，在受审时做出非常奇怪的事，以为死就是遭受很可怕的事，好像你们如果不杀他们，他们就不会死（ἀθανάτος）。在我看来，他们真是给城邦带来（περίπτω）耻辱，让一个外邦人[35b]以为，在雅典人中，那些本来靠美德与别人不同，从而让人们选出授予职位和别的荣誉的，和女人没什么不同。雅典的人们，你们中凡是有体面的，[b5]不管在哪方面有体面，都不该这么做；我们若是这么做了，

你们也不该允许。而你们要由此表明，谁要把这种可怜的表演带上台来，把城邦变得滑稽可笑，你们就更应该投他的反对票，而不是给那保持安静的投反对票。

除去名声，诸位，我认为，哀求法官[35c]是不对的，靠乞求逃脱也是不应该的，而应该教育和说服。因为法官占据那席位，不是为了施舍正义，而是要裁判正义。他们发誓并不是要按照自己的喜好施舍，而是根据[c5]法律裁判。所以，我们不能让你们习惯于发假誓，你们也不该习惯于此。否则我们双方就都不虔敬（εὐσεβοῦν）了。所以，雅典的人们，你们不能认为我应该对你们做这些我觉得不高贵、不[35d]正义、不虔诚（ὀσιον）的事，特别是，宙斯在上，不虔敬又是莫勒图斯给我加的罪名。显然，既然你们已经发了誓，如果我劝说和以乞求逼迫，我就是在教给你们，不要认为神存在，我这申辩简[d5]直就成了控告自己不信神。但是远不是这样。我信神，雅典的人们，我的控告者们无人比得上我，我请你们和神抉择，怎样才是对我对你们都最好的。

六、惩罚与荣耀

[35e]雅典的人们，你们投我的反对票 [20]，我[36a]对这结果并不生气。这有很多原因，其中一个，是这样的结果并不出乎我的意料，但我反而更惊讶于双方所投石子的数目。因为我记得反对票不会只[a5]多一点儿，而要多出更多。但现在看起来，只要有三十个石子不这么投，我就会被放了。要是只有莫勒图斯，看来我现在就已经被放了；不仅放了，而且每个人都清楚，如果阿努图斯不和卢孔上来告我，那他就要付一千[36b]德拉克马，因为他得不到五分之一的石子。 [21]

他对我提出（τιμάω）死刑。好吧。雅典的人们，我应向你们提出什么替代 [22] 的呢？不是显然要按[b5]照我的品行（ἄξιός）吗？那该是什么呢？按我这品行该遭受或付出什么呢？要知道，我一生没有庸庸碌碌地过，我不关心众人所关心的金钱、家业、军阶，不做公众演说，也不做别的当权者，不想参加城里的朋党和帮派，我认为自己真是[36c]太忠厚了，要参与这些就难以保命。我没有去那儿做这些事，如果去了，我认为我对你们和我自己都没有什么助益。但正如我说的，我私下到你们每个人那里，做有最大益处（εὐεργετεῖν）的益事（εὐεργεσία）。我[c5]尝试着劝你们中的每个人，不要先关心“自己的”，而要先关心自己，让自己尽可能变得最好和最智慧；不要关心“城邦的”，而要关心城邦自身，对其他事情也要按同样的方式关心——我既然是这样，[36d]那么按这品行应该得到什么呢？应该是好的——雅典的人们，如果真正要按照我的品行提出我应得的。而

且是我该得到的那种好事。我这样一个需要闲暇来劝勉你们的贫穷的恩人（εὐεργέτης），[d5]应得到什么样的好处呢？雅典的人们，给我这种人最合适不过的，就是在政府大厅（πρυτανεῖον）里用膳 [23]。你们中有谁在奥林匹亚运动会中用一匹马、两匹马或四匹马的马车赢了比赛，我比他都更适合在那里吃。因为，他好像在给你们造福，我就是在造福；而他[36e]不需要这供养，我需要。那么，如果按照正义，根据我的品行提出，我就要提出这个：[37a]在政府大厅用膳。

也许，就像我谈乞怜和妥协时一样，你们觉得我说这些是大放厥词。雅典的人们，不是那样的，而应该是[a5]下面这样。我认为，我从不曾对谁行不义，至少不曾有意行不义，但是我不能说服你们这样认为。因为我们相互交谈的时间太短。我就认为，如果你们有一项法律，就像别人有一样 [24]，并不选[37b]某一天来判死刑，而是多等几天，你们会被说服的。而今，在这么短的时间里，从这么大的诬蔑中解脱出来，是不容易了。我相信，我没有对任何人行不义，我也不会对自己行不义，不会说我自己的品行该得恶报，[b5]给自己提出这样一种惩罚方式。我怕什么？怕遭到莫勒图斯给我提的惩罚吗？我说了，我不知道那是好还是坏。难道我不这样，而是从我明知道是坏的事情中，另找一种，提出来罚我？难道要监禁？我为什么[37c]要在监狱里生活，给每届（ἀεὶ）选出来的惯例者当奴隶，给十一人 [25]当奴隶？难道要在付清罚款前先收监吗？但对于我来说，罚款和我刚说的监禁是一样的。因为我从哪儿也找不到钱来付清。但是我可以提出[c5]流放吗？也许，你们将会给我这个惩罚。我也太贪生怕死（φιλοψυχία）了，雅典的人们，才会这么不合情理，以至于不能明白，你们，我的同胞公民，都不能忍受我的行事[37d]和言辞，觉得这些是那么难以承受，惹人忌恨，以至你们要寻求除掉这些；难道别人会容易忍受这类东西吗？雅典的人们，根本不可能。对于我这年纪的人，此时被流放，[d5]轮番跑到一个又一个别的城邦去，又被赶出来，这可真是高贵的生活。因为我清楚地知道，我无论到哪里去，青年人们都会像在这里一样倾听我说话。如果我赶他们走，他们会说服自己的长辈，赶我走；但如果[37e]我不赶他们走，他们的父辈和家人会为了他们赶我走。

也许有人会说：

“苏格拉底，你要是沉默不语，在流放后，不就可以过日子了吗？”

要在这方面说服你们[e5]中那些人，是最难的。因为，如果我说那是不遵从神的，因此我不能[38a]保持沉默，你们不会被说服，好像我在出言讥讽（εἰρωνευομένω）。如果我又说，每天谈论美德，

谈论别的你们听我说的话——听我对自己[a5]和别的人做省察，听我说，未经省察的生活是不值得过的生活——这对人而言恰恰是最大的好，你们就更不可能被我说服了。事情就是我说的那样；但诸位，要说服你们可不容易。同时，我不习惯认为我的品行该遭什么恶罚。如果我有钱，我就会[38b]按我能够付的那么多提出罚我的钱，因为那不会伤害我。但现在不是这样，除非你们同意我提出我付得起的钱数。也许，我能付[b5]一个米纳的银子。那我就提这么多。

雅典的人们，柏拉图、克力同、克力同布鲁斯和阿波罗多罗斯叫我付三十个米纳的罚款，他们做担保。那么我就提出这些。他们可以向你们做这银子的可信赖的担保。

七、临别告白

[38c]雅典的人们 [26]，不必多长时间，那些想毁掉城邦的人就可以加给你们杀害智者苏格拉底的罪名和责任——虽然我不智慧，那些想责怪你们的人会说智慧——[c5]但只要你们等一小段时间，你们期待的自然就发生了。看我这把年纪，活了很久，离死很近了。我不是对你们全体说这话的，而是对那些[38d]投票处死我的人说的。我对这些人还说下面的话：雅典的人们，你们也许认为，我很难用语言说服你们，来赢得你们——好像我认为需要[d5]用尽各种言行来逃出这个案子。根本不是。我很难赢得你们，不是因为缺少语言，而是因为缺乏勇气和无耻，我不愿对你们说那些你们最喜欢听的话，我不哀悼，不悲恸，不做也不[38e]说别的很多我认为不合我的品行（如我所说的）而你们习惯从别人那里听到的那些。我认为，我不该因为危险而做自由人该做的事，而且我现在也不后悔做了这样的申辩，我宁愿[e5]选择这样申辩而死，也不选择那样活着。因为，不论是在法庭上，还是在战斗中，无论是我还是别人，都不该[39a]蓄意做什么事来逃脱死亡。因为在很多战争中都很明显，有人丢盔弃甲，对追击者摇尾乞怜，从而逃脱死亡；还有很多别的办法，[a5]如果有勇气做任何事、说任何话，在任何危险中都有办法逃脱死亡。但是各位，逃离死亡并不难，可逃离邪恶（πονηρία）却难得多。因为邪恶比死亡跑得更快。而[39b]今我迟缓年迈，那慢一些的会赢我，那些控诉我的又聪明又敏捷，却被快一些的赢了，那就是恶（κακίας）。而今我要走了，接受你们判的死刑；他们却要接受真理所判的罪恶[b5]和不义。那就让我服从这个惩罚，他们也要服从他们的。也许就该是这样了，我认为他们也该得到所应得的。

然后，[39c]投票判我罪的人们，我愿对你们预言。因为我所在的处境，是人们大多要预言的处境：就是临死之前。而我说，杀我的人们，宙斯在上，[c5]我死之后，你们的报应（τιμωρία）也会很快

来临，那可比你们给我的这惩罚——杀我——残酷多了。现在你们这么做了，以为就可以摆脱对生活做出检验（ἐλεγχον），但是，如我所说，结果会完全相反。会有更多的人检验你们，现在我一直阻拦他们，而你们[39d]看不到。他们会更严厉，也更年轻，会让你们更加恼怒。你们靠杀人来阻止人们责备你们活[d5]得不正确，这念头可不美。因为这种解脱既全无可能，也不美。而那最美和最容易的解脱，不是阻止别人，而是把自己培养成最好的。对你们中那些投我反对票的人，我如此预言，[39e]然后我就走了。

至于那些投票认为我无罪的人，我们可以愉快地谈谈所发生的事，趁着当官的还忙着，我还没有到就死之地去。诸位，和我待一会儿吧。只要还能，我们不[e5]妨互相聊聊天（διαμυθολογήω）。我想把你们当[40a]朋友，告诉你们，刚刚所发生的对我究竟意味着什么。各位法官（ἄνδρεςδικασταί）——我叫你们法官（δικασταῖς），才叫得对了——我这里发生了奇妙的事。在以前的时候，那个和我相伴的[a5]精灵的声音，总会不断出来反对——只要我想做不对的事，哪怕是小事。而刚才，你们看到，我这儿发生的，人们总是以为，并且确实都相信，是最大的坏事。但是，从早晨[40b]离家开始，这个神就没有给出信号反对，即使到了法庭这里，也没有，在我说话的过程中，也没有反对我要说的话。而别的时候在我说话时，它却不断在讲话的中途阻拦。现在，针对我[b5]做的这件事，它从来没有反对我的言行。在我看来，这事的原因是什么呢？我要告诉你们：或许，我的这次遭遇变成了好事，我们要认为死是坏的，[40c]都是不对的。我认为，这里有一个巨大征兆发生了：如果我我要做的不是件好事，那么，我所熟悉的信号就不会不反对我。

另外，如果死就是从这里[e5]迁移到另外一个地方，而且人们所说的是真的，即，所有的死人都在那里，法官们，还有什么比这更好的？如果一个到了冥府的人，从这些[41a]所谓的法官中得到解脱，他会发现那些真正的法官，他们据说在那里审判，有米诺斯

(Μίνως) [28]、拉达马索斯(Ραδάμανθους) [29]、埃亚库斯(Αἰακός) [30]、特里普托勒摩斯(Τριπτόλεμος) [31]和别的很多活着[a5]时公正(δίκαιοι)的半神。那这趟旅行岂可小看？还有，要是能和俄耳甫斯(Ὀρφεύς)、穆塞欧(Μουσαῖος)、赫西俄德(σίοδος)、荷马(Ὅμηρος) [32]在一起，你们中谁不宁愿付出高额代价？如果这是真的，我愿意死很多次。当我[41b]遇到帕拉梅德(Παλαμήδης) [33]、特拉蒙(Τελαμών)的埃阿斯(Αἴας) [34]，还有别的死于不义的冤狱的古人时，我会把我自己的遭遇和他们的相比，对我而言，在那里这样过日子是尤其奇妙的——我认为，[b5]这没有什么不快乐的——而最大的好事是，在那里省察和询问他们，就像在这里做的那样，看他们当中谁有智慧，谁自以为有智慧，而其实没有。法官们，人们愿付出多大代价，来省察带领大军攻打特洛伊的人 [35]、奥德修斯(Ὀδυσσεύς)、[41c]西西弗斯(Σίσυφος) [36]，或人们能提到的其他无数男人、女人？在那里和他们谈论、交往，省察他们，会是无比幸福。当然，那里的人根本不会因此[c5]杀人。如果所说的是真的，那里的人不仅在别的方面比这里的人幸福，而且在余下的时间里都是不朽的。

法官们啊，你们也应该对死抱有良好的希望，把这当成真的：[41d]好人不会有恶报，无论生前还是死后，诸神不会不关心他的事。我出的这事不是偶然的，而是明白显示给我的——死去，从杂事[d5]中解脱，这对我更好。因此，那征兆不让我转向任何地方，我也并不抱怨那些投我反对票和控告我的人。但他们并不是因为想到了这，才投我的反对票和控告我的；他们是要伤害我。为此[41e]他们该受谴责。

但我对他们提个请求。我的儿子们长大以后，诸位，如果他们在你们看来关心钱财或别的东西[e5]胜过了关心美德，你们就惩罚(τιμωρέω)他们，像我烦扰你们一样烦扰他们；如果他们实际不是什么而自以为是，你们就要谴责他们，就像我谴责你们一样，告诉他们他们没有关心应该关心的，他们的认知配不上自己的品行。如果你们这么做，我和[42a]我的儿子从你们这里得到的就是正义的。不过，是该走的时候了，我去死，你们去生。我们所去做的究竟哪个更好，谁也不知道——除了[a5]神。

[1] 柏拉图著作中的数字和字母标号即“斯特方页码”，来自1578年斯特方在巴黎出版的柏拉图希腊文著作的页码标注，是柏拉图著作的标准页码标号。（说明：书中脚注均为译者注。）

[2] 即拳击手在没有对手时所做的练习。在现代拳击中，仍有“空拳练习”(shadow-boxing)。

[3] 卡利亚是雅典的巨富。在《普罗塔戈拉》中，他同时款待普罗塔戈拉、西庇亚和普罗迪科斯。色诺芬的《会饮》所记述的场景就发生在卡利亚家中。此外，还有很多雅典作家提到过他。

[4] 这次出逃发生在公元前404年，也就是苏格拉底审判的五年前，他们八个月后回到雅典。当时，雅典在伯罗奔尼撒战争中战败，斯巴达人为雅典建立了寡头制，而这些寡头为自己攫取了绝对权力，因此被称为“三十僭主”。于是，很多民主派逃离雅典。苏格拉底反对民主制，但也不支持寡头制，不过苏格拉底一直留在了雅典城。

[5] 苏格拉底的早年同伴凯瑞丰举止怪异，是雅典人所熟知的。他不仅出现在柏拉图的对话中，还出现在很多喜剧当中，阿里斯托芬的《云》《鸟》《蛙》等作品都讽刺了他。

[6] 阿波罗杀死了德尔斐看守神殿的龙皮图（πύθω），于是得到了皮提亚的徽标。他的祭司都被称为皮提亚。

[7] 苏格拉底多次以天狗发誓，比如在《高尔吉亚》[482b5]中。他在那里还明确讲，这是埃及的一个神。早在希罗多德的时候，希腊人已经知道了埃及人对狗的崇拜。

[8] 第欧根尼·拉尔修在《名哲言行录》第二卷的“苏格拉底”部分提到，这份诉状在罗马皇帝哈德良时期还保存在雅典的档案里，其中写道：“皮特索斯的莫勒图斯的儿子莫勒图斯盟誓，状告阿罗匹克的索夫罗尼斯克的儿子苏格拉底，说：‘苏格拉底行了不义，因为他不信城邦信的神，而是带进新的精灵之事。他还因为败坏青年而行了不义。判死刑。’”

[9] 有关“乐队”的说法，通常有两种解释。一是指通过悲剧了解阿那克萨哥拉的说法；二是雅典广场中卖书的地方通常在乐队旁边。

[10] 即阿喀琉斯，这里不说“阿喀琉斯”而说“忒提斯之子”，是为了突出阿喀琉斯的半神身份。在希腊散文中，以某人的父母指代某人是常见的，不过一般是用父名，而不是母名。

[11] 这一战役发生在公元前432年（修昔底德《伯罗奔尼撒战争史》卷一），当时苏格拉底37岁。在《会饮》[219e5]以下，阿尔喀比亚德详细描述了苏格拉底在这次战役中的表现。在这一战里，苏格拉底连续站了24小时，救了阿尔喀比亚德的性命。

[12] 这可能指的是公元前422年的一场著名战役，但并没有充足的证据（修昔底德《伯罗奔尼撒战争史》卷二）。当时苏格拉底已经47岁，不太可能参加这样的远征。另外一种可能是，这指的是在公元前437年至公元前436年之间建造安菲玻里时的战斗。那时候苏格拉底32岁。

[13] 德利昂不是城镇名，而是阿波罗一个神殿的名字，那次战役发生在这“附近”（参见色诺芬《回忆苏格拉底》）。在德利昂之战中，雅典人被忒拜人打败（参见修昔底德《伯罗奔尼撒战争史》卷四）。在《会饮》[221a2]中，阿尔喀比亚德描述到，苏格拉底从战场上撤退时极为沉着和勇敢，超出了将军拉克斯，他的表现比在波底代亚之战中更加突出。

[14] 苏格拉底说自己只当过议员，并不意味着他只当过一次议员。亚里士多德在《政治学》62：3里谈到，一个人可以当两次议员。我们会在[32b6]看到，这很可能是苏格拉底第二次当议员。另外，苏格拉底当议员，也并不违背他不从政的原则。当议员和当兵一样，是公民的义务，不算从政。

[15] 雅典的议会一般由十个部落分别出五十人组成。每个部落的五十个人，通过抽签，组成议会为城邦工作三十五或三十六天。议会决定把什么事情提交公民大会讨论。这五十个人被称为“主席”。

[16] 在雅典和斯巴达的战争结束前两年，也就是公元前406年，雅典和斯巴达在爱琴岛附近有一场海战，雅典取得了胜利。战斗结束后，海上起了风暴，很多被打坏的战船和雅典将士（包括阵亡的和活着的）还在战场上，无法营救。公民大会举行了两次集会，要集体判处十个将军中的六人死刑，但苏格拉底认为这是不合法的，应该分别审判。他的反对没有起到作用。

[17] 伯罗奔尼撒战争结束后，斯巴达取胜，在雅典扶植了三十僭主。三十僭主起初只是处死一些人们不喜欢的煽动家和政治人物，后来就发展到诛杀了很多民主制的支持者，以及富有的公民和外邦人。很多同情民主制的人逃离了雅典。公元前403年，三十僭主的统治只有八个月，就被这些逃亡者推翻了。寡头党的余部从雅典退到附近的一个小镇上，到公元前401年才被彻底消灭，当时距苏格拉底的审判只有两年。苏格拉底不是民主派，所以在三十僭主时期没有离开雅典。

[18] 圆宫（θολός），又称“伞宫”（σκιάς），是一个圆形建筑，在民主制时期的雅典，当主席的五十个议员在那里集会、献祭、吃饭。三十僭主把这里当成他们主要的政府建筑之一。

[19] 赖翁据说是一个很正直的人。处死他是三十僭主犯下的一大罪行。三十僭主处死的无辜的人很多，但赖翁之死尤其引起人们的愤恨。

[20] 这是在陪审团投票之后的演说。雅典人用石子投票。这次一共有500人，投票结果应该是280（反对票）：220（赞成票）。

[21] 苏格拉底的算法，是认为三个人分别得了280票中的三分

之一，这个数字不到500票的五分之一。按照雅典的法律，如果原告得票不到总数的五分之一，就会因为诬告的罪名而被判处一千德拉克马的罚金。

[22] 按照雅典的法律，有些案件按照固有的规定处罚，有些则不必。苏格拉底的这个案子就是没有固定处罚的。在这样的案子中，法律要求法官从两者之中选择一个处罚方式，即，原告在诉讼书最后提出的惩罚，以及被告在判罪之后提出的惩罚。而法官不准提出第三种处罚。

[23] 在古典时代，在政府大厅用膳的人是享有特权的极少数人，贵宾一般只包括奥林匹亚运动会的得胜者、雅典民主制的建立者哈摩狄阿斯（Ἀρμόδιος）和阿利斯托斋吞（Ἀριστογείτων）的直系后裔中的长子。有时候，也会有大使、经选举获得此荣耀的官员、得胜的将军等被邀请去用膳。

[24] 斯巴达的法律就是这样规定的。

[25] 雅典管理监狱和刑罚的官员共有十一人，是抽签选定的。

[26] 在苏格拉底正式提出了一种惩罚方式后，陪审团再次投票，结果是大多数人支持死刑。

[27] 因为波斯国王拥有巨大的财富和庞大的帝国，希腊人一般认为他是最快乐的人。

[28] 米诺斯是古代克里特的国王，扫清了附近的海盗。据说他制定了克里特的法律，生时是一个正义的人。传说他让雅典每年送七个童男和七个童女到克里特，给怪兽做牺牲。忒修斯杀死了怪兽，解救了童男童女。此后，雅典每年有纪念忒修斯的仪式。苏格拉底之所以没有很快被处死，就是因为这个仪式正在进行。在《奥德赛》卷十一：568-571，奥德修斯曾游冥府，看到米诺斯在那里的各位法官之中。

[29] 拉达马索斯是米诺斯的兄弟，也有义人之名。品达曾说，他执掌幸福岛（好人死后去的地方）。

[30] 据品达说，埃亚库斯是爱琴海的立法者，甚至还审理诸神之间的争执，但没有说他审判死人。在《高尔吉亚》[523e-527a]中，苏格拉底谈到，米诺斯、拉达马索斯、埃亚库斯是冥府的法官。

[31] 特里普托勒摩斯是传说中阿提卡地区厄琉西斯的国王克琉斯的儿子。他从女神得墨忒尔处学到了让作物生长收获的方法。

[32] 这是希腊文化中最重要四位诗人。俄耳甫斯和穆塞欧可能只是传说人物。在《普罗塔戈拉》[316d8]、《理想国》[364e3]

中，按照俄耳甫斯神话传统，俄耳甫斯和穆塞欧并提。在阿里斯托芬的《蛙》[1032-1036]中，四位诗人按照和这里同样的顺序排列。

[33] 帕拉梅德参加了希腊人对特洛伊的战争。据说，因为某种原因（对此有各种说法），帕拉梅德和奥德修斯陷入争执，于是奥德修斯以背叛希腊、里通特洛伊的名义逮捕了帕拉梅德。帕拉梅德被希腊军队用石头砸死。埃斯库罗斯、欧里庇得斯、索福克勒斯都曾写过题为《帕拉梅德》的悲剧，但都没有流传下来。高尔吉亚曾写过《帕拉梅德的申辩》，没有佚失。在色诺芬的《申辩》[26]中，苏格拉底提到了帕拉梅德的申辩。第欧根尼·拉尔修说，欧里庇得斯在《帕拉梅德》中提到了苏格拉底的申辩，但这是不可能的，因为欧里庇得斯比苏格拉底早死十六年。

[34] 埃阿斯是特洛伊战争中著名的希腊勇士。在阿喀琉斯死后，他和奥德修斯争夺阿喀琉斯的盔甲。奥德修斯作弊取胜。埃阿斯为了报复，想杀死奥德修斯和阿伽门农。但雅典娜把他变疯癫了，疯了的埃阿斯杀死了一群羊。他清醒过来以后，羞愤自杀。

[35] 指希腊军队的统帅阿伽门农。

[36] 在《伊利亚特》卷五：153中，西西弗斯被称为“最巧的人”。

‘Practically nothing they said was true. From me you will hear the whole truth.’

Apology

I do not know, men of Athens, how my accusers affected you; as for me, I was almost carried away in spite of myself, so persuasively did they speak. And yet, hardly anything of what they said is true. Of the many lies they told, one in particular surprised me, namely that you should be careful not to be deceived by an accomplished speaker like me. That they were not ashamed to be immediately proved wrong by the facts, when I show myself not to be an accomplished speaker at all, that I thought was most shameless on their part—unless indeed they call an accomplished speaker the man who speaks the truth. If they mean that, I would agree that I am an orator, but not after their manner, for indeed, as I say, practically nothing they said was true. From me you will hear the whole truth, though not, by Zeus, gentlemen, expressed in embroidered and stylized phrases like theirs, but things spoken at random and expressed in the first words that come to mind, for I put my trust in the justice of what I say, and let none of you expect anything else. It would not be fitting at my age, as it might be for a young man, to toy with words when I appear before you. One thing I do ask and beg of you, gentlemen: if you hear me making my defense in the same kind of language as I am accustomed to use in the marketplace by the bankers' tables, where many of you have heard me, and elsewhere, do not be surprised or create a disturbance on that account. The position is this: this is my first appearance in a lawcourt, at the age of seventy; I am therefore simply a stranger to the manner of speaking here. Just as if I were really a stranger, you would certainly excuse me if I spoke in that dialect and manner in which I had been brought up, so too my present request seems a just one, for you to pay no attention to my manner of speech—be it better or worse—but to concentrate your attention on whether what I say is just or not, for the excellence of a judge lies in this, as that of a speaker lies in telling the truth.

It is right for me, gentlemen, to defend myself first against the first lying accusations made against me and my first accusers, and then against the later accusations and the later accusers. There have been many who have accused me to you for many years now, and none of their accusations are true. There I fear much more than I fear Anytus and his friends, though they too are formidable. These earlier ones, however, are more so, gentlemen; they got hold of most of you from childhood, persuaded you and accused me quite falsely, saying that there is a man called Socrates, a wise man, a student of all things in the sky and below the earth, who makes the worse argument the stronger. Those who spread that rumor, gentlemen, are my dangerous accusers, for their hearers believe that those who study these things do not even believe in the gods. Moreover, these accusers are numerous, and have been at it a long time; also, they spoke to you at an age when you would most readily believe them, some of you being children and adolescents, and they won their case by default, as there was no defense. What is most absurd in all this is that one cannot even know or mention their names unless one of them is a writer of comedies. [37] Those who maliciously and slanderously persuaded you—who also, when persuaded themselves then persuaded others—all those are most difficult to deal with: one cannot bring one of them into court or refute him; one must simply fight with shadows, as it were, in making one's defense, and cross-examine when no one answers. I want you to realize too that my accusers are of two kinds: those who have accused me recently, and the old ones I mention; and to think that I must first defend myself against the latter, for you have also heard their accusations first, and to a much greater extent than the more recent.

Very well then, men of Athens. I must surely defend myself and attempt to uproot from your minds in so short a time the slander that has resided there so long. I wish this may happen, if it is in any way better for you and me, and that my defense may be successful, but I think this is very difficult and I am fully aware of how difficult it is. Even so, let the matter proceed as the god may wish, but I must obey the law and make my defense.

Let us then take up the case from its beginning. What is the accusation from which arose the slander in which Meletus trusted when he wrote out the charge against me? What did they say when they slandered me? I must, as if they were my actual prosecutors, read the affidavit they would have sworn. It goes something like this: Socrates is guilty of wrongdoing in that he busies himself studying things in the sky and below the earth; he makes the worse into the stronger argument, and he teaches these same things to others. You have seen this yourself in the comedy of Aristophanes, a Socrates swinging about there, saying he was walking on air and talking a lot of other nonsense about things of which I know nothing at all. I do not speak in contempt of such knowledge, if someone is wise in these things—lest Meletus bring more cases against me—but, gentlemen, I have no part in it, and on this point I call upon the majority of you as witnesses. I think it right that all those of you who have heard me conversing, and many of you have, should tell each other if anyone of you has ever heard me discussing such subjects to any extent at all. From this you will learn that the other things said about me by the majority are of the same kind.

Not one of them is true. And if you have heard from anyone that I undertake to teach people and charge a fee for it, that is not true either. Yet I think it a fine thing to be able to teach people as Gorgias of Leontini does, and Prodicus of Ceos, and Hippias of Elis. [38] Each of these men can go to any city and persuade the young, who can keep company with anyone of their own fellow citizens they want without paying, to leave the company of these, to join with themselves, pay them a fee, and be grateful to them besides.

Indeed, I learned that there is another wise man from Paros who is visiting us, for I met a man who has spent more money on Sophists than everybody else put together, Callias, the son of Hipponicus. So I asked him—he has two sons—

“Callias,” I said, “if your sons were colts or calves, we could find and engage a supervisor for them who would make them excel in their proper qualities, some horse breeder or farmer. Now since they are men, whom do you have in mind to supervise them? Who is an expert in this kind of excellence, the human and social kind? I think you must have given this thought to this since you have sons. “Is there such a person,” I asked, “or is there not?”

“Certainly there is,” he said.

“Who is he?” I asked, “What is his name, where is he from? and what is his fee?”

“His name, Socrates, is Evenus, he comes from Paros, and his fee is five minas.”

I thought Evenus a happy man, if he really possesses this art, and teaches for so moderate a fee. Certainly I would pride and preen myself if I had this knowledge, but I do not have it, gentlemen.

One of you might perhaps interrupt me and say:

“But Socrates, what is your occupation? From where have these slanders come? For surely if you did not busy yourself with something out of the common, all these rumors and talk would not have arisen unless you did something other than most people. Tell us what it is, that we may not speak unadvisedly about you.”

Anyone who says that seems to be right, and I will try to show you what has caused this reputation and slander. Listen then. Perhaps some of you will think I am jesting, but be sure that all that I shall say is true.

What has caused my reputation is none other than a certain kind of wisdom. What kind of wisdom? Human wisdom, perhaps. It may be that I really possess this, while those whom I mentioned just now are wise with a wisdom more than human; else I cannot explain it, for I certainly do not possess it, and whoever says I do is lying and speaks to slander me. Do not create a disturbance, gentleman, even if you think I am boasting, for the story I shall tell does not originate with me, but I will refer you to a trustworthy source. I shall call upon the god at Delphi as witness to the existence and nature of my wisdom, if it be such. You know Chaerephon. He was my friend from youth, and the friend of most of you, as he shared your exile and your return. You surely know the kind of man he was, how impulsive in any course of action. He went to Delphi at one time and ventured to ask the oracle—as I say, gentlemen, do not create a disturbance—he asked if any man was wiser than I, and the Pythian replied that no one was wiser. Chaerephon is dead, but his brother will testify to you about this.

Consider that I tell you this because I would inform you about the origin of the slander. When I heard of this reply I asked myself: “Whatever does the god mean? What is his riddle? I am very conscious that I am not wise at all; what then does he mean by saying that I am the wisest? For surely he does not lie; it is not legitimate for him to do so.” For a long time I was at a loss as to his meaning; then I very reluctantly turned to some such investigation as this; I went to one of those reputed wise, thinking that there, if anywhere, I could refute the oracle and say to it:

“This man is wiser than I, but you said I was.” Then, when I examined this man—there is no need for me to tell you his name, he was one of our public men—my experience was something like this: I thought that he appeared wise to many people and especially to himself, but he was not. I then tried to show him that he thought himself wise, but that he was not. As a result he came to dislike me, and so did many of the bystanders. So I withdrew and thought to myself: “I am wiser than this man; it is likely that neither of us knows anything worthwhile, but he thinks he knows something when he does not, whereas when I do not know, neither do I think I know what I do not know.” After this I approached another man, one of those thought to be wiser than he, and I thought the same thing, and so I came to be disliked both by him and by many others.

After that I proceeded systematically. I realized, to my sorrow and alarm, that I was getting unpopular, but I thought that I must attach the greatest importance to the god’s oracle, so I must go to all those who had any reputation for knowledge to examine its meaning. And by the dog, men of Athens—for I must tell you the truth—I experienced something like this: in my investigation in the service of the god I found that those who had the highest reputation were nearly the most deficient, while those who were thought to be inferior were more knowledgeable. I must give you an account of my journeyings as if they were labors I had undertaken to prove the oracle irrefutable. After the politicians, I went to the poets, the writers of tragedies and dithyrambs and the others, intending in their case to catch myself being more ignorant than they. So I took up those poems with which they seemed to have taken most trouble and asked them what they meant, in order that I might at the same time learn something from them. I am ashamed to tell you the truth, gentlemen, but I must. Almost all the bystanders might have explained the poems better than their authors could I soon realized the poets do not compose their poems with knowledge, but by some inborn talent and by inspiration, like seers and prophets who also say many fine things without any understanding of what they say. The poets seemed to me to have had a similar experience. At the same time I saw that, because of their poetry, they thought themselves very wise men in other respects, which they were not.

So there again I withdrew, thinking that I had the same advantage over them as I had over the politicians.

Finally I went to the craftsmen, for I was conscious of knowing practically nothing, and I knew that I would find that they had knowledge of many fine things. In this I was not mistaken; they knew things I did not know, and to that extent they were wiser than I. But, men of Athens, the good craftsmen seemed to me to have the same fault as the poets: each of them, because of his success at his craft, thought himself very wise in other most important pursuits, and this error of theirs overshadowed the wisdom they had, so that I asked myself, on behalf of the oracle, whether I should prefer to be as I am, with neither their wisdom nor their ignorance, or to have both. The answer I gave myself and the oracle was that it was to my advantage to be as I am.

As a result of this investigation, men of Athens, I acquired much unpopularity, of a kind that is hard to deal with and is a heavy burden; many slanders came from these people and a reputation for wisdom, for in each case the bystanders thought that I myself possessed the wisdom that I proved that my interlocutor did not have. What is probable, gentlemen, is that in fact the god is wise and that his oracular response meant that human wisdom is worth little or nothing, and that when he says this man, Socrates, he is using my name as an example, as if he said: "This man among you, mortals, is wisest who, like Socrates, understands that his wisdom is worthless." So even now I continue this investigation as the god bade me—and I go around seeking out anyone, citizen or stranger, whom I think wise. Then if I do not think he is, I come to the assistance of the god and show him that he is not wise. Because of this occupation, I do not have the leisure to engage in public affairs to any extent, nor indeed to look after my own, but I live in great poverty because of my service to the god.

Furthermore, the young men who follow me around of their own free will, those who have most leisure, the sons of the very rich, take pleasure in hearing people questioned; they themselves often imitate me and try to question others. I think they find an abundance of men who believe they have some knowledge but know little or nothing. The result is that those whom they question are angry, not with themselves but with me. They say: "That man Socrates is a pestilential fellow who corrupts the young." If one asks them what he does and what he teaches to corrupt them, they are silent, as they do not know, but, so as not to appear at a loss, they mention those accusations that are available against all philosophers, about “things in the sky and things below the earth,” about “not believing in the gods” and “making the worse the stronger argument”; they would not want to tell the truth, I’m sure, that they have been proved to lay claim to knowledge when they know nothing. These people are ambitious, violent and numerous; they are continually and convincingly talking about me; they have been filling your eyes for a long time with vehement slanders against me. From them Meletus attacked me, and Anytus and Lycon, Meletus being vexed on behalf of the poets, Anytus on behalf of the craftsmen and the politicians, Lycon on behalf of the orators, so that, as I started out by saying, I should be surprised if I could rid you of so much slander in so short a time. That, men of Athens, is the truth for you. I have hidden or disguised nothing. I know well enough that this very conduct makes me unpopular, and this is popular, and this is proof that what I say is true, that such is the slander against me, and that such are its causes. If you look into this either now or later, this is what you will find.

Let this suffice as a defense against the charges of my earlier accusers. After this I shall try to defend myself against Meletus, that good and patriotic man, as he says he is, and my later accusers. As these are a different lot of accusers, let us again take up their sworn deposition. It goes something like this: Socrates is guilty of corrupting the young and of not believing in the gods in whom the city believes, but in other new spiritual things. Such is their charge. Let us examine it point by point.

He says that I am guilty of corrupting the young, but I say that Meletus is guilty of dealing frivolously with serious matters, of irresponsibly bringing people into court, and of professing to be seriously concerned with things about none of which he has ever cared, and I shall try to prove that this is so.

Come here and tell me, Meletus. Surely you consider it of the greatest importance that our young men be as good as possible?

Indeed I do.

Come then, tell these men who improves them. You obviously know, in view of your concern. You say you have discovered the one who corrupts them, namely me, and you bring me here and accuse me to these men. Come, inform them and tell them who it is. You see, Meletus, that you are silent and know not what to say. Does this not seem shameful to you and a sufficient proof of what I say, that you have not been concerned with any of this? Tell me, my good sir, who improves our young men?

The laws.

That is not what I am asking, but what person who has knowledge of the laws to begin with?

These jurymen, Socrates.

How do you mean, Meletus? Are these able to educate the young and improve them?

Certainly.

All of them, or some but not others?

All of them.

Very good, by Hera. You mention a great abundance of benefactors. But what about the audience? Do they improve the young or not?

They do, too.

What about the members of Council?

The Councillors, also.

But, Meletus, what about the assembly? Do members of the assembly corrupt the young, or do they all improve them?

They improve them.

All the Athenians, it seems, make the young into fine good men, except me, and I alone corrupt them. Is that what you mean?

That is most definitely what I mean.

You condemn me to a great misfortune. Tell me: does this also apply to horses do you think? That all men improve them and one individual corrupts them? Or is quite the contrary true, one individual is able to improve them, or very few, namely the horse breeders, whereas the majority, if they have horses and use them, corrupt them? Is that not the case, Meletus, both with horses and all other animals? Of course it is, whether you and Anytus say so or not. It would be a very happy state of affairs if only one person corrupted our youth, while the others improved them. You have made it sufficiently obvious, Meletus, that you have never had any concern for our youth; you show your indifference clearly; that you have given no thought to the subjects about which you bring me to trial.

And by Zeus, Meletus, tell us also whether it is better for a man to live among good or wicked fellow citizens. Answer, my good man, for I am not asking a difficult question. Do not the wicked do some harm to those who are ever closest to them, whereas good people benefit them?

Certainly.

And does the man exist who would rather be harmed than benefited by his associates? Answer, my good sir, for the law orders you to answer. Is there any man who wants to be harmed?

Of course not.

Come now, do you accuse me here of corrupting the young and making them worse deliberately or unwillingly?

Deliberately.

What follows, Meletus? Are you so much wiser at your age than I am at mine that you understand that wicked people always do some harm to their closest neighbors while good people do them good, but I have reached such a pitch of ignorance that I do not realize this, namely that if I make one of my associates wicked I run the risk of being harmed by him so that I do such a great evil deliberately, as you say? I do not believe you, Meletus, and I do not think anyone else will. Either I do not corrupt the young or, if I do, it is unwillingly, and you are lying in either case. Now if I corrupt them unwillingly, the law does not require you to bring people to court for such unwilling wrongdoings, but to get hold of them privately, to instruct them and exhort them; for clearly, if I learn better, I shall cease to do what I am doing unwillingly. You, however, have avoided my company and were unwilling to instruct me, but you bring me here, where the law requires one to bring those who are in need of punishment, not of instruction.

And so, men of Athens, what I said is clearly true: Meletus has never been at all concerned with these matters. Nonetheless tell us, Meletus, how you say that I corrupt the young; or is it obvious from your deposition that it is by teaching them not to believe in the gods in whom the city believes but in other new spiritual things? Is this not what you say I teach and so corrupt them?

That is most certainly what I do say.

Then by those very gods about whom we are talking, Meletus, make this clearer to me and to these men: I cannot be sure whether you mean that I teach the believe that there are some gods—and therefore I myself believe that there are gods and am not altogether an atheist, nor am I guilty of that—not, however, the gods in whom the city believes, but others, and that this is the charge against me, that they are others. Or whether you mean that I do not believe in gods at all, and that this is what I teach to others.

This is what I mean, that you do not believe in gods at all.

You are a strange fellow, Meletus. Why do you say this? Do I not believe, as other men do, that the sun and the moon are gods?

No, by Zeus, gentlemen of the jury, for he says that the sun is stone, and the month earth.

My dear Meletus, do you think you are prosecuting Anaxagoras? Are you so contemptuous of these men and think them so ignorant of letters as not to know that the books of Anaxagoras of Clazomenae are full of those theories, and further, that the young men learn from me what they can buy from time to time from a drachma, at most, in the bookshops, and ridicule Socrates if he pretends that these theories are his own, especially as they are so absurd? Is that, by Zeus, what you think of me, Meletus, that I do not believe that there are any gods?

That is what I say, that you do not believe in the gods at all.

You cannot be believed, even, I think, by yourself. The man appears to me, men of Athens, highly insolent and uncontrolled. He seems to have made this deposition out of insolence, violence and youthful zeal. He is like one who composed a riddle and is trying it out: “Will the wise Socrates realize that I am jesting and contradicting himself in the affidavit, as if he said: “Socrates is guilty of not believing in gods but believing in gods,” and surely that is the part of a jester!

Examine with me, gentlemen, how he appears to contradict himself, and you, Meletus, answer us. Remember, gentlemen, what I asked you when I began, not to create a disturbance if I proceed in my usual manner.

Does any man, Meletus, believe in human activities who does not believe in humans? Make him answer, and not again and again create a disturbance. Does any man who does not believe in horses believe in horsemen's activities? Or in flute-playing activities but not in fluteplayers? No, my good sir, no man could. If you are not willing to answer, I will tell you and these men. Answer the next question, however. Does any man believe in spiritual activities who does not believe in spirits?

No one.

Thank you for answering, if reluctantly, when these gentlemen made you. Now you say that I believe in spiritual things and teach about them, whether new or old, but at any rate spiritual things according to what you say, and to this you have sworn in your deposition. But if I believe in spiritual things I must quite inevitably believe in spirits. Is that not so? It is indeed. I shall assume that you agree, as you do not answer. Do we not believe spirits to be either gods or the children of gods? Yes or no?

Of course.

Then since I do believe in spirits, as you admit, if spirits are gods, this is what I mean when I say you speak in riddles and in jest, as you state that I do not believe in gods and then again that I do, since I do believe in spirits. If on the other hand the spirits are children of the gods, bastard children of the gods by nymphs or some other mothers, as they are said to be, what man would believe children of the gods to exist, but not gods? That would be just as absurd as to believe the young of horses and asses, namely mules, to exist, but not to believe in the existence of horses and asses. You must have made this deposition, Meletus, either to test us or because you were at a loss to find any true wrongdoing of which to accuse me. There is no way in which you could persuade anyone of even small intelligence that it is possible for one and the same man to believe in spiritual but not also in divine things, and then again for that same man to believe neither in spirits nor in gods nor in heroes.

I do not think, men of Athens, that it requires a prolonged defense to prove that I am not guilty of the charges in Meletus' deposition, but this is sufficient. On the other hand, you know that what I said earlier is true, that I am very unpopular with many people. This will be my undoing, if I am undone, not Meletus or Anytus but the slanders and envy of many people. This has destroyed many other good men and will, I think, continue to do so. There is no danger that it will stop at me.

Someone might say: "Are you not ashamed, Socrates, to have followed the kind of occupation that has led to your being now in danger of death?"

However, I should be right to reply to him:

"You are wrong, sir, if you think that a man who is any good at all should take into account the risk of life or death; he should look to this only in his actions, whether what he does is right or wrong, whether he is acting like a good or a bad man." According to your view, all the heroes who died at Troy were inferior people, especially the son of Thetis who was so contemptuous of danger compared with disgrace.³ When he was eager to kill Hector, his goddess mother warned him, as I believe, in some such words as these: "My child, if you avenge the death of your comrade, Patroclus, and you kill Hector, you will die yourself, for your death is to follow immediately after Hector's." Hearing this, he despised death and danger and was much more afraid to live a coward who did not avenge his friends. "Let me die at once," he said, "when once I have given the wrongdoer his deserts, rather than remain here, a laughing-stock by the curved ships, a burden upon the earth." Do you think he gave thought to death and danger?

This is the truth of the matter, men of Athens: wherever a man has taken a position that he believes to be best, or has been placed by his commander, there he must I think remain and face danger, without a thought for death or anything else, rather than disgrace. It would have been a dreadful way to behave, gentlemen of the jury, if, at Potidaea, Amphipolis and Delium, I had, at the risk of death, like anyone else, remained at my post where those you had elected to command had ordered me, and then, when the god ordered me, as I thought and believed, to live the life of a philosopher, to examine myself and others, I had abandoned my post for fear of death or anything else. That would have been a dreadful thing, and then I might truly have justly been brought here for not believing that there are gods, disobeying the oracle, fearing death, and thinking I was wise when I was not. To fear death, gentlemen, is no other than to think oneself wise when one is not, to think one knows what one does not know. No one knows whether death may not be the greatest of all blessings for a man, yet men fear it as if they knew that it is the greatest of evils. And surely it is the most blameworthy ignorance to believe that one knows what one does not know. It is perhaps on this point and in this respect, gentlemen, that I differ from the majority of men, and if I were to claim that I am wiser than anyone in anything, it would be in this, that, as I have no adequate knowledge of things in the underworld, so I do not think I have. I do know, however, that it is wicked and shameful to do wrong, to disobey one's superior, be he god or man. I shall never fear or avoid things of which I do not know, whether they may not be good rather than things that I know to be bad.

Even if you acquitted me now and did not believe Anytus, who said to you that either I should not have been brought here in the first place, or that now I am here, you cannot avoid executing me, for if I should be acquitted, your sons would practice the teachings of Socrates and all be thoroughly corrupted; if you said to me in this regard:

“Socrates, we do not believe Anytus now; we acquit you, but only on condition that you spend no more time on this investigation and do not practice philosophy, and if you are caught doing so you will die;”

If, as I say, you were to acquit me on those terms, I would say to you:

“Men of Athens, I am grateful and I am your friend, but I will obey the god rather than you, and as long as I draw breath and am able, I shall not cease to practice philosophy, to exhort you and in my usual way to point out to any one of you whom I happen to meet: Good Sir, you are an Athenian, a citizen of the greatest city with the greatest reputation for both wisdom and power; are you not ashamed of your eagerness to possess as much wealth, reputation and honors as possible, while you do not care for nor give thought to wisdom or truth, or the best possible state of your soul?" Then, if one of you disputes this and says he does care, I shall not let him go at once or leave him, but I shall question him, examine him and test him, and if I do not think he has attained the goodness that he says he has, I shall reproach him because he attaches little importance to the most important things and greater importance to inferior things. I shall treat in this way anyone I happen to meet, young and old, citizen and stranger, and more so the citizens because you are more kindred to me. Be sure that this is what the god orders me to do, and I think there is no greater blessing for the city than my service to the god. For I go around doing nothing but persuading both young and old among you not to care for your body or your wealth in preference to or as strongly as for the best possible state of your soul, as I say to you: "Wealth does not bring about excellence, but excellence makes wealth and everything else good for men, both individually and collectively."

[39] Now if by saying this I corrupt the young, this advice must be harmful, but if anyone says that I give different advice, he is talking nonsense. On this point I would say to you, men of Athens: "Whether you believe Anytus or not, whether you acquit me or not, do so on the understanding that this is my course of action, even if I am to face death many times."

Do not create a disturbance, gentlemen, but abide by my request not to cry out at what I say but to listen, for I think it will be to your advantage to listen, and I am about to say other things at which you will perhaps cry out. By no means do this. Be sure that if you kill the sort of man I say I am, you will not harm me more than yourselves. Neither Meletus nor Anytus can harm me in any way; he could not harm me, for I do not think it is permitted that a better man be harmed by a worse; certainly he might kill me, or perhaps banish or disfranchise me, which he and maybe others think to be great harm, but I do not think so. I think he is doing himself much greater harm doing what he is doing now, attempting to have a man executed unjustly. Indeed, men of Athens,

I am far from making it defense now on my own behalf, as might be thought, but on yours, to prevent you from wrongdoing by mistreating the god's gift to you by condemning me; for if you kill me you will not easily find another like me. I was attached to this city by the god—though it seems a ridiculous thing to say—as upon a great and noble horse which was somewhat sluggish because of its size and needed to be stirred up by a kind of gadfly. It is to fulfill some such function that I believe the god has placed me in the city. I never cease to rouse each and every one of you, to persuade and reproach you all day long and everywhere I find myself in your company. Another such man will not easily come to be among you, gentlemen, and if you believe me you will spare me. You might easily be annoyed with me as people are when they are aroused from a doze, and strike out at me; if convinced by Anytus you could easily kill me, and then you could sleep on for the rest of your days, unless the god, in his care for you, sent you someone else.

That I am the kind of person to be a gift of the god to the city you might realize from the fact that it does not seem like human nature for me to have neglected all my own affairs and to have tolerated this neglect now for so many years while I was always concerned with you, approaching each one of you like a father or an elder brother to persuade you to care for virtue. Now if I profited from this by charging a fee for my advice, there would be some sense to it, but you can see for yourselves that, for all their shameless accusations, my accusers have not been able in their impudence to bring forward a witness to say that I have ever received a fee or ever asked for one. I, on the other hand, have a convincing witness that I speak the truth, my poverty.

It may seem strange that while I go around and give this advice privately and interfere in private affairs, I do not venture to go to the assembly and there advise the city. You have heard me give the reason for this in many places. I have a divine or spiritual sign which Meletus has ridiculed in his deposition. This began when I was a child. It is a voice, and whenever it speaks it turns me away from something I am about to do, but it never encourages me to do anything. This is what has prevented me from taking part in public affairs, and I think it was quite right to prevent me. Be sure, men of Athens, that if I had long ago attempted to take part in politics, I should have died long ago, and benefited neither you nor myself. Do not be angry with me for speaking the truth; no man will survive who genuinely opposes you or any other crowd and prevents the occurrence of many unjust and illegal happenings in the city. A man who really fights for justice must lead a private, not a public, life if he is to survive for even a short time.

I shall give you great proofs of this, not words but what you esteem, deeds. Listen to what happened to me, that you may know that I will not yield to any man contrary to what is right, for fear of death, even if I should die at once for not yielding. The things I shall tell you are commonplace and smack of the law courts, but they are true. I have never held any other office in the city, but I served as a member of the Council, and our tribe Antiochis was presiding at the time when you wanted to try as a body the ten generals who had failed to pick up the survivors of the naval battle.

[40] This was illegal, as you all recognized later. I was the only member of the presiding committee to oppose you doing something contrary to the laws, and I voted against it. The orators were ready to prosecute me and take me away; and your shouts were egging them on, but I thought I should run any risk on the side of law and justice rather than join you, for fear of prison or death, when you were engaged in an unjust course. This happened when the city was still a democracy. When the oligarchy was established, the Thirty [41] summoned me to the Hall, along with four others, and ordered us to bring Leon from Salamis, that he might be executed. They gave many such orders to many people, in order to implicate as many as possible in their guilt. Then I showed again, not in words but in action, that, if it were not rather vulgar to say so, death is something I couldn't care less about, but that my whole concern is not to do anything unjust or impious. That government, powerful as it was, did not frighten me into any wrongdoing. When we left the Hall, the other four went to Salamis and brought in Leon, but I went home. I might have been put to death for this, had not the government fallen shortly afterwards. There are many who will witness to these events.

Do you think I would have survived all these years if I were engaged in public affairs and, acting as a good man must, came to the help of justice and considered this the most important thing? Far from it, men of Athens, nor would any other man. Throughout my life, in any public activity I may have engaged in, I am the same man as I am in private life. I have never come to an agreement with anyone to act unjustly, neither with anyone else nor with any one of those who they slanderously say are my pupils. I have never been anyone's teacher. If anyone, young or old, desires to listen to me when I am talking and dealing with my own concerns, I have never begrudged this to anyone, but I do not converse when I receive a fee and not when I do not. I am equally ready to question the rich and the poor if anyone is willing to answer my questions and listen to what I say. And I cannot justly be held responsible for the good or bad conduct of these people, as I never promised to teach them anything and have not done so. If anyone says that he has learned anything from me, or that he heard anything privately that the others did not hear, be assured that he is not telling the truth.

Why then do some people enjoy spending considerable time in my company? You have heard why, men of Athens; I have told you the whole truth. They enjoy hearing those being questioned who think they are wise, but are not. And this is not unpleasant. To do this has, as I say, been enjoined upon me by the god, by means of oracles and dreams, and in every other way that a divine manifestation has ever ordered a man to do anything.

This is true, gentlemen, and can easily be established. If I corrupt some young men and have corrupted others, then surely some of them who have grown older and realized that I gave them bad advice when they were young should now themselves come up here to accuse me and avenge themselves. If they were unwilling to do so themselves, then some of their kindred, their fathers or brothers or other relations should recall it now if their family had been harmed by me. I see many of these present here, first Crito, my contemporary and fellow demesman, the father of Critobulus here; next Lysanias of Sphettus, the father of Aeschines here; also Antiphon the Cephisian, the father of Epigenes; and others whose brothers spent their time in this way; Nicostratus, the son of Theozotides, brother of Theodotus, and Theodotus has died so he could not influence him; Paralius here, son of Demodocus, whose brother was Theages; there is Adeimantus, son of Ariston, brother of Plato here; Aeantodorus, brother of Apollodorus here.

I could mention many others, some one of whom surely Meletus should have brought in as witness in his own speech. If he forgot to do so, then let him do it now; I will yield time if he has anything of the kind to say. You will find quite the contrary, gentlemen. These men are all ready to come to the help of the corruptor, the man who has harmed their kindred, as Meletus and Anytus say. Now those who were corrupted might well have reason to help me, but the uncorrupted, their kindred who are older men, have no reason to help me except the right and proper one, that they know that Meletus is lying and that I am telling the truth.

Very well, gentlemen of the jury. This, and maybe other similar things, is what I have to say in my defense. Perhaps one of you might be angry as he recalls that when he himself stood trial on a less dangerous charge, he begged and implored the jurors with many tears, that he brought his children and many of his friends and family into court to arouse as much pity as he could, but that I do none of these things, even though I may seem to be running the ultimate risk. Thinking of this, he might feel resentful toward me and, angry about this, cast his vote in anger. If there is such a one among you—I do not deem there is, but if there is—I think it would be right to say in reply:

My good sir, I too have a household and, in Homer's phrase, I am not born "from oak or rock" but from men, so that I have a family, indeed three sons, men of Athens, of whom one is an adolescent while two are children. Nevertheless, I will not beg you to acquit me by bringing them here.

Why do I do none of these things? Not through arrogance, gentlemen, nor through lack of respect for you. Whether I am brave in the face of death is another matter, but with regard to my reputation and yours and that of the whole city, it does not seem right to me to do these things, especially at my age and with my reputation. For it is generally believed, whether it be true or false, that in certain respects Socrates is superior to the majority of men. Now if those of you who are considered superior, be it in wisdom or courage or whatever other virtue makes them so, are seen behaving like that, it would be a disgrace. Yet I have often seen them do this sort of thing when standing trial, men who are thought to be somebody, doing amazing things as if they thought it a terrible thing to die, and as if they were to be immortal if you did not execute them. I think these men bring shame upon the city so that a stranger, too, would assume that those who are outstanding in virtue among the Athenians, whom they themselves select from themselves to fill offices of state and receive other honors, are in no way better than women. You should not act like that, men of Athens, those of you who have any reputation at all, and if we do, you should not allow it. You should make it very clear that you will more readily convict a man who performs these pitiful dramatics in court and so makes the city a laughingstock, than a man who keeps quiet.

Quite apart from the question of reputation, gentlemen, I do not think it right to supplicate the jury and to be acquitted because of this, but to teach and persuade them. It is not the purpose of a juryman's office to give justice as a favor to whoever seems good to him, but to judge according to law, and this he has sworn to do. We should not accustom you to perjure yourselves, nor should you make a habit of it. This is irreverent conduct for either of us. Do not deem it right for me, men of Athens, that I should act towards you in a way that I do not consider to be good or just or pious, especially, by Zeus, as I am being prosecuted by Meletus here for impiety; clearly, if I convinced you by my supplication to do violence to your oath of office, I would be teaching you not to believe that there are gods, and my defense would convict me of not believing in them. This is far from being the case, gentlemen, for I do believe in them as none of my accusers do. I leave it to you and the god to judge me in the way that will be best for me and for you.

[The jury now gives its verdict of guilty, and Meletus asks for the penalty of death.]

There are many other reasons for my not being angry with you for convicting me, men of Athens, and what happened was not unexpected. I am much more surprised at the number of votes cast on each side for I did not think the decision would be by so few votes but by a great many. As it is, a switch of only thirty votes would have acquitted me. I think myself that I have been cleared on Meletus' charges, and not only this, but it is clear to all that, if Anytus and Lycon had not joined him in accusing me, he would have been fined a thousand drachmas for not receiving a fifth of the votes.

He assesses the penalty at death. So be it. What counter-assessment should I propose to you, men of Athens? Clearly it should be a penalty I deserve, and what do I deserve to suffer or to pay because I have deliberately not led a quiet life but have neglected what occupies most people: wealth, household affairs, the position of general or public orator or the other offices, the political clubs and factions that exist in the city? I thought myself too honest to survive if I occupied myself with those things. I did not follow that path that would have made me of no use either to you or to myself, but I went to each of you privately and conferred upon him what I say is the greatest benefit, by trying to persuade him not to care for any of his belongings before caring that he himself should be as good and as wise as possible, not to care for the city's possessions more than for the city itself, and to care for other things in the same way. What do I deserve for being such a man? Some good, men of Athens, if I must truly make an assessment according to my deserts, and something suitable. What is suitable for a poor benefactor who needs leisure to exhort you? Nothing is more suitable, gentlemen, than for such a man to be fed in the Prytaneum, [42] much more suitable for him than for any one of you who has won a victory at Olympia with a pair or a team of horses. The Olympian victor makes you think yourself happy; I make you be happy. Besides, he does not need food, but I do. So if I must make a just assessment of what I deserve, I assess it at this: free meals in the Prytaneum.

When I say this you may think, as when I spoke of appeals to pity and entreaties, that I speak arrogantly, but that is not the case, men of Athens; rather it is like this: I am convinced that I never willingly wrong anyone, but I am not convincing you of this, for we have talked together but a short time. If it were the law with us, as it is elsewhere, that a trial for life should not last one but many days, you would be convinced, but now it is not easy to dispel great slanders in a short time. Since I am convinced that I wrong no one, I am not likely to wrong myself, to say that I deserve some evil and to make some such assessment against myself. What should I fear? That I should suffer the penalty Meletus has assessed against me, of which I say I do not know whether it is good or bad? Am I then to choose in preference to this something that I know very well to be an evil and assess the penalty at that? Imprisonment? Why should I live in prison, always subjected to the ruling magistrates the Eleven? A fine, and imprisonment until I pay it? That would be the same thing for me, as I have no money. Exile? For perhaps you might accept that assessment. I should have to be inordinately fond of life, men of Athens, to be so unreasonable as to suppose that other men will easily tolerate my company and conversation when you, my fellow citizens, have been unable to endure them, but found them a burden and resented them so that you are now seeking to get rid of them. Far from it, gentlemen. It would be a fine life at my age to be driven out of one city after another, for I know very well that wherever I go the young men will listen to my talk as they do here. If I drive them away, they will themselves persuade their elders to drive me out; if I do not drive them away, their fathers and relations will drive me out on their behalf.

Perhaps someone might say:

But Socrates, if you leave us will you not be able to live quietly, without talking?

Now this is the most difficult point on which to convince some of you. If I say that it is impossible for me to keep quiet because that means disobeying the god, you will not believe me and will think I am being ironical. On the other hand, if I say that it is the greatest good for a man to discuss virtue every day and those other things about which you hear me conversing and testing myself and others, for the unexamined life is not worth living for man, you will believe me even less. What I say is true, gentlemen, but it is not easy to convince you. At the same time, I am not accustomed to think that I deserve any penalty. If I had money, I would assess the penalty at the amount I could pay, for that would not hurt me, but I have none, unless you are willing to set the penalty at the amount I can pay, and perhaps I could pay you one mina of silver. [43] So that is my assessment.

Plato here, men of Athens, and Crito and Critobulus and Apollodorus bid me put the penalty at thirty minas, and they will stand surety for the money. Well then, that is my assessment, and they will be sufficient guarantee of payment.

[The jury now votes again and sentences Socrates to death .]

It is for the sake of a short time, men of Athens, that you will acquire the reputation and the guilt, in the eyes of those who want to denigrate the city, of having killed Socrates, a wise man, for they who want to revile you will say that I am wise even if I am not. If you had waited but a little while, this would have happened of its own accord. You see my age, that I am already advanced in years and close to death. I am saying this not to all of you but to those who condemned me to death, and to these same ones I say: Perhaps you think that I was convicted for lack of such words as might have convinced you, if I thought I should say or do all I could to avoid my sentence. Far from it. I was convicted because I lacked not words but boldness and shamelessness and the willingness to say to you what you would most gladly have heard from me, lamentations and tears and my saying and doing many things that I say are unworthy of me but that you are accustomed to hear from others. I did not think then that the danger I ran should make me do anything mean, nor do I now regret the nature of my defense. I would much rather die after this kind of defense than live after making the other kind. Neither I nor any other man should, on trial or in war, contrive to avoid death at any cost. Indeed it is often obvious in battle that one could escape death by throwing away one's weapons and by turning to supplicate one's pursuers, and there are many ways to avoid death in every kind of danger if one will venture to do or say anything to avoid it. It is not difficult to avoid death, gentlemen; it is much more difficult to avoid wickedness, for it runs faster than death. Slow and elderly as I am, I have been caught by the slower pursuer, whereas my accusers, being clever and sharp, have been caught by the quicker, wickedness. I leave you now, condemned to death by you, but they are condemned by truth to wickedness and injustice. So I maintain my assessment, and they maintain theirs. This perhaps had to happen, and I think it is as it should be.

Now I want to prophesy to those who convicted me, for I am at the point when men prophesy most, when they are about to die. I say gentlemen, to those who voted to kill me, that vengeance will come upon you immediately after my death, a vengeance much harder to bear than that which you took in killing me. You did this in the belief that you would avoid giving an account of your life, but I maintain that quite the opposite will happen to you. There will be more people to test you, whom I now held back, but you did not notice it. They will be more difficult to deal with as they will be younger and you will resent them more. You are wrong if you believe that by killing people you will prevent anyone from reproaching you for not living in the right way. To escape such tests is neither possible nor good, but it is best and easiest not to discredit others but to prepare oneself to be as good as possible. With this prophecy to you who convicted me, I part from you.

I should be glad to discuss what has happened with those who voted for my acquittal during the time that the officers of the court are busy and I do not yet have to depart to my death. So, gentlemen, stay with me awhile, for nothing prevents us from talking to each other while it is allowed. To you, as being my friends, I want to show the meaning of what has occurred. A surprising thing has happened to me, jurymen—you I would rightly call jurymen. At all previous times my familiar prophetic power, my spiritual manifestation, frequently opposed me, even in small matters, when I was about to do something wrong, but now that, as you can see for yourselves, I was faced with what one might think, and what is generally thought to be, the worst of evils, my divine sign has not opposed me, either when I left home at dawn, or when I came into court, or at any time that I was about to say something during my speech. Yet in other talks it often held me back in the middle of my speaking, but now it has opposed no word or deed of mine. What do I think is the reason for this?

I will tell you. What has happened to me may well be a good thing, and those of us who believe death to be an evil are certainly mistaken. I have convincing proof of this, for it is impossible that my familiar sign did not oppose me if I was not about to do what was right.

Let us reflect in this way, too, that there is good hope that death is a blessing, for it is one of two things: either the dead are nothing and have no perception of anything, or it is, as we are told, a change and a relocating for the soul from here to another place. If it is complete lack of perception, like a dreamless sleep, then death would be a great advantage. For I think that if one had to pick out that night during which a man slept soundly and did not dream, put beside it the other nights and days of his life, and then see how many days and nights had been better and more pleasant than that night, not only a private person but the great king would find them easy to count compared with the other days and nights. If death is like this I say it is an advantage, for all eternity would then seem to be no more than a single night. If, on the other hand, death is a change from here to another place, and what we are told is true and all who have died are there, what greater blessing could there be, gentlemen of the jury? If anyone arriving in Hades will have escaped from those who call themselves jurymen here, and will find those true jurymen who are said to sit in judgement there, Minos and Rhadamanthus and Aeacus and Triptolemus and the other demi-gods who have been upright in their own life, would that be a poor kind of change? Again, what would one of you give to keep company with Orpheus and Musaeus, Hesiod and Homer? I am willing to die many times if that is true. It would be a wonderful way for me to spend my time whenever I met Palamedes and Ajax, the son of Telamon, and any other of the men of old who died through an unjust conviction, to compare my experience with theirs. I think it would be pleasant. Most important, I could spend my time testing and examining people there, as I do here, as to who among them is wise, and who thinks he is, but is not.

What would one not give, gentlemen of the jury, for the opportunity to examine the man who led the great expedition against Troy, or Odysseus, or Sisyphus, and innumerable other men and women one could mention. It would be an extraordinary happiness to talk with them, to keep company with them and examine them. In any case, they would certainly not put one to death for doing so. They are happier there than we are here in other respects, and for the rest of time they are deathless, if indeed what we are told is true.

You too must be of good hope as regards death, gentlemen of the jury, and keep this one truth in mind, that a good man cannot be harmed either in life or in death, and that his affairs are not neglected by the gods. What has happened to me now has not happened of itself, but it is clear to me that it was better for me to die now and to escape from trouble. That is why my divine sign did not oppose me at any point. So I am certainly not angry with those who convicted me, or with my accusers. Of course that was not their purpose when they accused and convicted me, but they thought they were hurting me, and for this they deserve blame. This much I ask from them: when my sons grow up, avenge yourselves by causing them the same kind of grief that I caused you, if you think they care for money or anything else more than they care for virtue, or if they think they are somebody when they are nobody. Reproach them as I reproach you, that they do not care for the right things and think they are worthy when they are not worthy of anything. If you do this, I shall have been justly treated by you, and my sons also.

Now the hour to part has come. I go to die, you go to live. Which of us goes to the better lot is known to no one, except the god.

[37] This is Aristophanes. Socrates refers below (19c) to the character Socrates in his Clouds (225 ff.), first produced in 423 B.C.

[38] These were all well-known Sophists. For Gorgias and Hippias see Plato's dialogues named after them; both Hippias and Prodicus appear in Protagoras .

[39] Alternatively, this sentence could be translated: "Wealth does not bring about excellence, but excellence brings about wealth and all other public and private blessings for men."

[40] This was the battle of Arginusae (south of Lesbos) in 406 B.C., the last Athenian victory of the Peloponnesian war. A violent storm prevented the Athenian generals from rescuing their survivors.

[41] This was the harsh oligarchy that was set up after the final defeat of Athens in 404 B.C. and ruled Athens for some nine months in 404-3 before the democracy was restored.

[42] The Prytaneum was the magistrates' hall or town hall of Athens in which public entertainments were given, particularly to Olympian victors on their return home.

[43] One mina was the equivalent of 100 drachmas. In the late fifth century one drachma was the standard daily wage of a laborer. A mina, then, was a considerable sum.

孙太白尝言：其曾祖肄业于南山柳沟寺。麦秋旋里 [1]，经旬始返。启斋门，则案上尘生，窗间丝满。命仆粪除 [2]，至晚始觉清爽可坐。乃拂榻陈卧具，扃扉 [3] 就枕，月色已满窗矣。

辗转移时，万籁俱寂。忽闻风声隆隆，山门忽然作响，窃谓寺僧失扃。注念间 [4]，风声渐近居庐，俄而房门辟矣。大疑之。思未定，声已入屋；又有靴声铿铿然，渐傍寝门。心始怖。俄而寝门辟矣。忽视之，一大鬼鞠躬塞入，突立榻前，殆与梁齐。面似老鸦皮色；目光睽闪 [5]，绕室四顾；张巨口如盆，齿疏疏长三寸许；舌动喉鸣，呵喇 [6] 之声，响连四壁。

公惧极；又念咫尺之地，势无所逃，不如因而刺之。乃阴抽枕下佩刀，遽 [7] 拔而斫之，中腹，作石缶声。鬼大怒，伸巨爪攫公。公少缩。鬼攫得衾，捽 [8] 之，忿忿而去。

公随衾堕，伏地号呼。家人持火奔集，则门闭如故，排窗入，见公状，大骇。扶曳登床，始言其故。共验之，则衾夹于寝门之隙。启扉检照，见有爪痕如箕，五指着处皆穿。

既明，不敢复留，负笈 [9] 而归。后问僧人，无复他异。

孙太白曾经讲过这样一件事：他的曾祖父在南山柳沟寺读书，某一年的麦秋时节回故乡，在家待了十多天才返回寺里。他打开书房的门，只见书案上落满了灰尘，窗户上也布满了蜘蛛网。他叫来仆人打扫房间，一直到晚上才觉得屋子清爽了，可以坐下来了。于是，他掸掸床，铺好被褥，关上门躺下休息。这时，月光已满西窗棂间。

他翻来覆去很久都无法入眠，四周静悄悄的，没有一点儿声音。忽然，他听到风声隆隆大作，山门也“砰”地发出巨响，他心道：一定是寺里的僧人忘记关门了。正在凝思驻想间，只听得风声离他住的屋子越来越近，不一会儿，房门自动打开了。他大为疑惑，但还没等想明白，风声已经进了屋。又听见穿着靴子的脚步声铿铿作响，逐渐靠近卧室的门。他开始感到恐怖。不一会儿，卧室的门也自动打开了，他猛然看过去，只见一个大鬼正弯腰挤进房里来。它耸立床前，几乎与房梁一样高；它的面孔是老瓜皮似的颜色，目光闪烁不定；它在房

间里走来走去四下张望，张开如盆大口，稀疏的牙齿约有三寸长，舌头一动喉咙里就发出哗啦哗啦的声音，震得四面墙壁嗡嗡响。

孙公害怕极了，但想到卧室这样的方寸之地根本无处可逃，不如乘势刺杀它。于是，他偷偷从枕头下抽出佩刀，猛地拔出砍向大鬼，正好砍在大鬼的肚子上，发出撞击石缶似的声音。大鬼勃然大怒，伸出巨爪来抓他。孙公稍稍缩了缩身子，大鬼抓住被子揪扯着，气冲冲地离开了。

孙公随着被子掉在床下，趴在地上大声呼救。家人都拿着火把赶了过来，只见门和原先一样依然关着，就打开窗子跳了进去。见到孙公的样子，大家都吓了一跳。家人将他搀扶到床上，他才将事情的原委说了一遍。大家一起查看，只见被子夹在卧室的门缝里。再打开门，就着火把查看，看到门上留有簸箕般大小的爪子印，五根手指抠着的地方将门板都穿透了。

等到天亮，孙公不敢再留下来，就背起书箱回去了。后来问僧人，他们说并没有再发生什么怪事。

[1] 旋里：返回故乡。

[2] 粪除：打扫，扫除。

莽中怪

长山安翁者，性喜操农功。秋间莽熟，刈 [10] 堆陇畔。时近村有盗稼者，因命佃人，乘月辇运登场 [11]；俟其装载归，而自留逻守。遂枕戈 [12] 露卧。目稍瞑，忽闻有人践莽根，咋咋作响。心疑暴客。

急举首，则一大鬼，高丈余，赤发髻须 [13]，去身已近。大怖，不遑他计，蹣身暴起，狠刺之。鬼鸣如雷而逝。恐其复来，荷戈而归。迎佃人于途，告以所见，且戒勿往。众未深信。

越日，曝麦于场，忽闻空际有声。翁骇曰：“鬼物来矣！”乃奔，众亦奔。移时复聚，翁命多设弓弩以俟之。

异日，果复来，数矢齐发，物惧而遁。二三日竟不复来。

麦既登仓，禾 [14] 杂糴 [15]，翁命收积为垛，而亲登践实之，高至数尺。忽遥望骇曰：“鬼物至矣！”众急觅弓矢，物已奔翁。翁仆，齧 [16] 其额而去。共登视，则去额骨如掌，昏不知人。负至家中，遂卒。后不复见。不知其为何怪也。

译文

长山有一位安姓老翁，生性喜欢做农活。有一年秋天，莽麦熟了，收割后就堆在田垄边。当时邻近的村庄有偷盗庄稼的人，安翁就让佃户们趁着月光连夜用推车将莽麦运到场上。等佃户们装车运走后，他自己留下来巡逻守卫。安翁枕着武器躺在露天的野地里，刚闭上眼，忽然听到有人踩得莽根咋咋响。他怀疑来了盗贼，猛然抬起头，却看见一个一丈多高的大鬼，红色的头发，蓬乱的胡须，离自己已经很近。安翁很害怕，顾不上想别的，忽地跳起狠狠刺过去。鬼大叫一声，如雷声轰鸣，消失不见了。安翁害怕鬼还会来，就扛着利器回去。在路上遇到佃户们，他将刚刚看到的一切告诉他们，并劝告他们不要过去。但大家都不太相信。

过了一天，大家在场上晾晒莽麦，忽然听到空中传来声音。安翁大惊，说：“鬼来了！”拔腿就跑，大家也跟着他奔逃。过了一会儿，大家又聚集在一起，安翁让大家多准备一些弓箭以防备鬼再来。第二天，鬼果然又来了，大家数箭齐发，鬼被吓跑了，此后两三天都没有再过来。

荞麦都已入仓，麦场上还散乱堆放着荞麦秸秆。安翁让佃户们将秸秆收起来堆成垛，他亲自爬上垛顶用脚踏实。当秸垛高达几尺时，忽然，他望着远处惊慌大叫：“鬼来了！”大家急忙寻找弓箭，鬼已扑向安翁。安翁倒在了垛顶，鬼咬了他的额头就离开了。大家爬上垛顶一看，只见安翁的前额被咬去巴掌大一块额骨，人已昏迷不醒。大家将安翁背回家，他很快就死了。后来鬼也没再出现过，不知它究竟是什么怪物。

偷桃

童时赴郡试，值春节。旧例，先一日，各行商贾，彩楼鼓吹赴藩司，名曰“演春”。余从友人戏瞩。

是日游人如堵。堂上四官，皆赤衣，东西相向坐。时方稚，亦不解其何官，但闻人语哢哢 [17]，鼓吹聒耳。忽有一人，率披发童，荷担而上，似有所白 [18]；万声汹动，亦不闻其为何语，但视堂上作笑声。即有青衣人 [19] 大声命作剧。其人应命方兴，问：“作何剧？”堂上相顾数语。吏下宣问所长。答言：“能颠倒生物。”吏以白官。少顷复下，命取桃子。

术人应诺，解衣覆笥 [20] 上，故作怨状，曰：“官长殊不了了 [21]！坚冰未解，安所得桃？不取，又恐为南面者怒。奈何！”其子曰：“父已诺之，又焉辞？”术人惆怅良久，乃曰：“我筹之烂熟。春初雪积，人间何处可觅？惟王母园中，四时常不凋谢，或有之。必窃之天上，乃可。”子曰：“嘻！天可阶而升乎？”曰：“有术在。”乃启笥，出绳一团，约数十丈，理其端，望空中掷去；绳即悬立空际，若有物以挂之。未几，愈掷愈高，渺入云中；手中绳亦尽。乃呼子曰：“儿来！余老惫，体重拙，不能行，得汝一往。”遂以绳授子，曰：“持此可登。”

子受绳，有难色，怨曰：“阿翁亦大愤愤 [22]！如此一线之绳，欲我附之，以登万仞之高天。倘中道断绝，骸骨何存矣！”父又强鸣拍之，曰：“我已失口，追悔无及，烦儿一行。儿勿苦，倘窃得来，必有百金赏，当为儿娶一美妇。”子乃持索，盘旋而上，手移足随，如蛛趁丝，渐入云霄，不可复见。

久之，坠一桃，如碗大。术人喜，持献公堂。堂上传示良久，亦不知其真伪。忽而绳落地上，术人惊曰：“殆矣！上有人断吾绳，儿将焉托！”移时，一物坠。视之，其子首也。捧而泣曰：“是必偷桃，为监者所觉。吾儿休矣！”又移时，一足落；无何 [23]，肢体纷堕，无复存者。

术人大悲，一一拾置笥中而阖之，曰：“老夫止此儿，日从我南北游。今承严命，不意罹此奇惨！当负去瘞 [24] 之。”乃升堂而跪，曰：“为桃故，杀吾子矣！如怜小人而助之葬，当结草以图报耳。”坐官骇詫，各有赐金。术人受而缠诸腰，乃扣笥而呼曰：“八八儿，不

出谢赏，将何待？”忽一蓬头童首抵笥盖而出，望北稽首，则其子也。

以其术奇，故至今犹记之。后闻白莲教能为此术，意此其苗裔耶？

年少的时候，我曾去济南府参加府试。正好碰到春节，按照旧时风俗，春节的前一天，各行各业做生意的人要抬着彩楼，吹吹打打到藩司衙门去庆贺，这叫“演春”。我也跟着友人去看热闹。

这天游人众多，把四周围得像一堵堵墙。大堂上坐着四位官员，都穿着红色官袍，东西相对而坐。我当时年纪还小，也不知道他们是什么官，只听得人声嘈杂，鼓乐喧天，震耳欲聋。忽然，有一人领着一个披散着头发的小孩儿，挑着一副担子走了上来，好像说了几句话。当时人声鼎沸，也听不见他说了些什么，只看到堂上的人都在笑，随即有一名衙役大声吩咐他们进行表演。那人答应一声站起来，问道：“表演什么？”堂上的官员互相看看商量了几句，就有一名衙役走下堂来，问他们有什么拿手的表演。他回答说：“我能变出不按季节时令生长的植物。”衙役回到堂上禀告官员，过了一会儿又走下来，让他们表演取桃子。

变戏法的答应了，脱下衣服盖在竹箱上，故意装出一副埋怨的样子，说：“长官们太不明事理了，现在厚厚的冰还没有融化，到哪里能找到桃子呢？不去找的话，又怕当官的生气发怒，这可怎么办？”他儿子说：“父亲已经答应了，又怎能推托呢？”变戏法的人懊恼发愁了好一会儿，才说道：“我已想得很清楚，眼下还是初春时节，冰雪尚未融化，人间哪里能找到桃子？只有王母娘娘的桃园中四季如春，花木不会凋零，也许会有桃子。必须上天去偷才行。”儿子说：“嘻！天也能像爬台阶一样登上去吗？”变戏法的说：“我有办法。”于是打开竹箱，拿出一团有几十丈长的绳子。他理出绳子的一头，向空中抛去，绳子立刻立在了空中，好像挂在了什么东西上一样。不一会儿，绳子越升越高，隐约没入云彩中，他手中的绳子也放到了尽头。这时，变戏法的人叫来儿子，说：“孩子，你过来。我年老力衰，身体笨重，行动不灵便，爬不上去了，还得你上去一趟。”就将绳子头交给儿子，说：“抓着它可以爬上去。”

儿子接过绳子，面有难色，抱怨说：“父亲真是太糊涂了！这么一根细线似的绳子，想让我顺着它爬上万丈高空，如果半路上绳子断了，我岂非尸骨无存！”做父亲的又尽力哄劝，拍抚着他说：“我已经脱口答应了，后悔也来不及了，还是要麻烦你走一趟。你不要怕苦，万一能偷来桃子，定能得到上百两银子的赏赐，到时我一定给你娶个

漂亮媳妇。”儿子这才抓着绳子，盘旋着向上攀爬，脚随着手向上移动，好像蜘蛛在丝网上爬行一样，渐渐没入云端看不见了。

过了好久，从天上掉下一个桃子，有碗口那么大。变戏法的人很高兴，拿着献到公堂上。堂上的官员传递着看了很久，也不知道桃子是真还是假。忽然绳子掉落在地，变戏法的人大惊失色，说：“危险！天上有人弄断了我的绳子，我儿子靠什么下来啊？”过了一会儿，又有东西掉下来，一看，是他儿子的头。变戏法的人捧着儿子的头，哭着说：“这一定是偷桃子的时候被看守的人发现了，我儿子这回可完了。”又过了一會兒，掉下一只脚来；接着，四肢、躯干纷纷掉下来，再不可能活着了。

变戏法的人悲恸欲绝，一件一件捡起来放进竹箱里，并盖上盖子，说：“老汉只有这么一个儿子，每天跟着我走南闯北。今天因遵循长官们的命令去取桃，想不到遭遇这样的惨祸，我要将他背回去安葬。”于是，他走到堂上，跪下说道：“因为桃子的缘故，我儿子被杀了。大人们如果可怜小人，帮助我安葬了他，我即使死了也要报答各位大人的恩情。”堂上的官员惊骇不已，各自拿出银钱赏赐他。变戏法的人接过钱缠在腰上，然后拍了拍竹箱说：“八八儿，不出来谢各位大人的赏赐，还等什么呢？”忽然，一个披头散发的小孩用头顶開箱盖，从里面爬了出来，朝北面大堂上的官员们叩头。一看，正是变戏法老汉的儿子。

因为这个戏法太神奇了，所以直到现在我都记得。后来听说白莲教能表演这样的法术，这父子二人是白莲教的后人吧？

种梨

有乡人货梨于市，颇甘芳，价腾贵。有道士破巾絮衣，丐于车前，乡人咄之，亦不去；乡人怒，加以叱骂。道士曰：“一车数百颗，老衲止丐其一，于居士亦无大损，何怒为？”观者劝置劣者一枚令去，乡人执不肯。

肆中佣保 [25] 者，见喋聒不堪，遂出钱市一枚，付道士。道士拜谢，谓众曰：“出家人不解吝惜。我有佳梨，请出供客。”或曰：“既有之，何不自食？”曰：“我特需此核作种。”

于是掬梨啖。且尽，把核于手，解肩上镢 [26]，坎地深数寸，纳之而覆以土。向市人索汤沃灌。好事者于临路店索得沸沈 [27]，道士接浸坎上。万目攒视，见有勾萌 [28] 出，渐大；俄成树，枝叶扶苏；倏而花，倏而实，硕大芳馥，累累满树。道士乃即树头摘赐观者，顷刻向尽。已，乃以镢伐树，丁丁良久，方断；带叶荷肩头，从容徐步而去。

初，道士作法时，乡人亦杂立众中，引领注目，竟忘其业。道士既去，始顾车中，则梨已空矣。方悟适所依散 [29]，皆己物也。又细视车上一靶 [30] 亡，是新凿断者。心大愤恨。急迹之，转过墙隅，则断靶弃垣下，始知所伐梨本，即是物也，道士不知所在。一市粲然。

好事者于临路店索得沸瀋

译文

有个乡下人在集市上卖梨，梨的味道非常香甜，但价格很贵。有

个道士，戴着破头巾穿着破棉衣，站在卖梨人的车前讨梨吃。乡下人呵斥他，他也不走；乡下人非常生气，就责骂他。道士说：“你一车梨有好几百个，贫道只讨一个，对你也没什么大损失，你何必发这么大脾气？”旁观的人劝卖梨的拿一个不好的梨给道士，打发他离开，但乡下人坚决不肯。

旁边店铺里的一个伙计，见他们吵嚷得不成样子，就拿出钱买了一个梨送给道士。道士致谢之后对众人说：“出家人不知道吝惜东西，我有好梨，准备拿出来请大家品尝。”有人问：“你既然有梨，为什么不吃自己的？”道士说：“我只是需要这个梨核做种子。”

于是道士捧着梨大口吃起来，吃完梨，将梨核放在手中，取下肩上背着铁铲，在地上挖了个几寸深的坑，将梨核放进坑里又盖上土。道士向集市上的人要热水来浇灌。有好事的人就到路边店铺中要滚烫的水，道士接过来浇进坑里。大家都瞪着眼睛围观，只见有嫩芽儿破土而出，并渐渐长大，一会儿就长成一棵大树，枝叶繁茂。转眼间开了花，转眼间又结了果，又大又香的梨子挂满枝头。道士就从树上摘下梨子分给围观的人，一会儿就分完了。然后，道士又用铁铲砍树，叮叮当当好久才砍断。道士将带着枝叶的梨树扛在肩上，从从容容、不慌不忙地走了。

一开始道士作法时，那个乡下人也在人群中，伸长脖子全神贯注地观看，竟然忘记了自己的生意。道士走了以后，他才回头看向他的车子，只见车里的梨一个都没有了。他这才恍然大悟，原来道士分发的梨都是自己的。再细细一看，一根车把也没有了，是刚刚砍断的。乡下人又气又恨，急忙追赶道士，转过一个墙角，看到砍断的车把被扔在墙下，这才明白道士砍断的梨树就是他的车把，而道士早已不知所踪。集市上的人都大笑不止。

[25] 佣保：雇工。

[26] 钁（chán）：古代一种铁制的掘土工具，也是一种挖草药的器具。

[27] 沈：汁。

[28] 勾萌：草木初发的嫩芽，屈者为勾，直者为萌。

[29] 俵（biào）散：分发，分给。

[30] 靶：通“把”，器物上便于用手拿的部分，此指车把。

狐嫁女

历城殷天官，少贫，有胆略。邑有故家之第，广数十亩，楼宇连亘。常见怪异，以故废无居人；久之，蓬蒿渐满，白昼亦无敢入者。会公与诸生饮，或戏云：“有能寄此一宿者，共釀 [31] 为筵。”公跃起曰：“是亦何难！”携一席往。众送诸门，戏曰：“吾等暂候之，如有所见，当急号。”公笑云：“有鬼狐，当捉证耳。”

遂入，见长莎 [32] 蔽径，蒿艾如麻。时值上弦，幸月色昏黄，门户可辨。摩娑数进，始抵后楼。登月台，光洁可爱，遂止焉。西望月明，惟衔山一线耳。坐良久，更无少异，窃笑传言之讹。席地枕石，卧看牛女。

一更向尽，恍惚欲寐，楼下有履声，籍籍而上。假寐睨之，见一青衣人，挑莲灯，猝见公，惊而却退。语后人曰：“有生人在。”下问：“谁何？”答云：“不识。”俄一老翁上，就公谛视，曰：“此殷尚书，其睡已酣。但办吾事，相公侗傥，或不叱怪。”乃相率入楼，楼门尽辟。移时，往来者益众。楼上灯辉如昼。

公稍稍转侧，作嚏咳。翁闻公醒，乃出，跪而言曰：“小人有箕帚女 [33] ，今值于归。不意有触贵人，望勿深罪。”公起，曳之曰：“不知今夕嘉礼，惭无以贺。”翁曰：“贵人光临，压除凶煞，幸矣。即烦陪坐，倍益光宠。”公喜，应之。入视楼中，陈设绮丽。遂有妇人出拜，年可四十余。翁曰：“此拙荆。”公揖之。

俄闻笙乐聒耳，有奔而上者，曰：“至矣！”翁趋迎，公亦立俟。少间，笼纱 [34] 一簇，导新郎入。年可十七八，丰采韶秀。翁命先与贵客为礼。少年目公。公若为宾，执半主礼。次翁婿交拜，已，乃即席。少间，粉黛云从，酒馥雾霏 [35] ，玉碗金瓯，光映几案。酒数行，翁唤女奴请小姐来。女奴诺而入，良久不出。翁自起，牵 [36] 帟促之。俄婢媼辈拥新人出，环佩璆然 [37] ，麝兰散馥。翁命向上拜。起，即坐母侧。微目之，翠凤明珰，容华绝世。

既而酌以金爵，大容数斗。公思此物可以持验同人，阴内袖中。伪醉隐几 [38] ，颓然而寝。皆曰：“相公醉矣。”居无何，新郎告行，笙乐暴作，纷纷下楼而去。已而主人敛酒具，小一爵，冥搜不得。或窃议卧客；翁急戒勿语，惟恐公闻。

移时，内外俱寂，公始起。暗无灯火，惟脂香酒气，充溢四堵。视东方既白，乃从容出。探袖中，金爵犹在。及门，则诸生先候，疑其夜出而早入者。公出爵示之。众骇问，公以状告。共思此物非寒士所有，乃信之。

后公举进士，任肥丘。有世家朱姓宴公，命取巨觥，久之不至。有细奴掩口与主人语，主人有怒色。俄奉金爵劝客饮。谛视之，款式雕文，与狐物更无殊别。大疑，问所从制。答云：“爵凡八只，大人为京卿时，觅良工监制。此世传物，什袭 [39] 已久。缘明府辱临，适取诸箱篋，仅存其七，疑家人所窃取；而十年尘封如故，殊不可解。”公笑曰：“金杯羽化矣。然世守之珍不可失。仆有一具，颇近似之，当以奉赠。”终筵归署，拣爵持送之。主人审视，骇绝。亲诣谢公，诘所自来。公为历陈颠末。始知千里之物，狐能摄致，而不敢终留也。

译文

山东历城的殷尚书，年轻时家中贫寒，但他有胆量有见识。县里有一处世家大族的宅院，占地几十亩，里面的亭台楼阁连成一片。因为那里经常发生怪异的事，所以被荒废了，无人居住。时间长了，宅院里渐渐长满了蓬蒿，即使白天也没人敢进去。一天，殷公与一群生员在一起喝酒，有人开玩笑说：“如果有人能在那里住一宿，大家就一起凑钱请他吃桌酒席。”殷公一跃而起，说：“这有什么难的！”当晚就带着一张席子过去了。大家将他送到门口，开玩笑说：“我们暂且在这里等着，如果你见到什么鬼狐精怪，赶紧呼救。”殷公笑着说：“如果有鬼狐的话，我一定捉住它做个证明。”

于是殷公走进院子，只见高高的莎草掩隐了路径，蒿艾也长得密密麻麻。这时正是初七初八的样子，幸好有昏黄的月光，勉强可以分辨出门户。殷公摸索着走过几重院落，才到了后面的楼阁。登上月台，见上面光洁可爱，就停了下来。再看看西边的月亮，已落到山后，只留下一线余晖。殷公坐了好久，并无一点儿异常，心中暗笑传言的荒谬。他在地铺上席子，枕着石头，仰面躺下观赏起天边的牛郎织女星。

一更将尽的时候，殷公迷迷糊糊快睡着了，楼下忽传来杂乱的脚步声，有人上楼来了。殷公假装睡着了，斜眼看去，是一个身穿青衣提着莲花灯的人。这人猛然看见殷公，吓了一跳往后退去，对后面的人说：“有个陌生人在上面。”下面的人问：“是谁？”他回答道：“不认识。”不一会儿，一老翁上来，靠近殷公仔细看了看，说：“这是殷尚书，他已睡熟了。只管办我们的事吧，殷相公洒脱不拘小节，或许不会责怪我们。”于是众人相继上了楼，将楼上的门都打开了。又过了一会，来来往往的人越来越多，楼上灯火辉煌，如同白昼。

殷公轻轻翻了个身，打了个喷嚏。老翁听到他醒了，赶快走出来并跪下说道：“小人有个女儿，今晚出嫁。想不到冒犯了贵人，还望不要怪罪。”殷公起身，将他扶起来，说：“不知道贵府今晚有喜事，很抱歉没有奉上贺礼。”老翁说：“贵人大驾光临，能压除凶神恶煞，我们已经很荣幸。如果能麻烦您入座陪客，那更是加倍的荣光。”殷公很高兴，就答应了。进楼一看，屋内陈设很华丽。又有妇人出来拜见，年纪四十几岁。老翁说：“这是我妻子。”殷公也拱手还礼。

一会儿，听到笙管鼓乐震耳欲聋，有人跑上来说：“来了！”老翁急忙快步上前迎接，殷公也站起来等候。不一会儿，好多灯笼引导着新郎走了进来。他年纪十七八岁，相貌俊雅，风度翩翩。老翁让他先给殷公行礼。新郎看着殷公，殷公像代主人迎接宾客的傧相一样，还了半主礼。接着翁婿互拜，拜完后才入席。又过了一会儿，年轻美貌的丫鬟侍女们一个接一个送上热气腾腾的美酒佳肴，玉碗金杯，光芒映照在酒桌上。酒过数巡，老翁让侍女请小姐过来。侍女应声而去，但过了好久也没出来。老翁亲自起身，掀起帷幔进去催促。一会儿，几个丫鬟仆妇簇拥着新娘走了出来，新娘身上的环佩叮当作响，兰麝之香四溢。老翁让女儿向上座贵客行礼，新娘礼毕起身后就坐在了母亲身边。殷公稍微看了一眼，只见她髻插翡翠凤钗，耳戴明珠耳坠，容颜艳丽，举世无双。

随后用金爵斟酒，金爵大得能装下好几斗的酒。殷公心想这个东西可以拿回去向同窗们做证，就偷偷藏在了袖子中。他假装醉酒倚靠在几案上，好像萎靡不振地睡着了。众人都说：“殷相公醉了。”没过多久，听见新郎辞行，笙管鼓乐猛然间又响了起来，大家纷纷离席下楼而去。过后主人收拾酒具，发现少了一个金爵，四处寻找也没找到。有人私下议论可能为醉卧的殷公所拿，老翁急忙告诫大家不要乱说，唯恐殷公听见。

又过了一阵，内外都已寂静无声，殷公这才起来。周围一片黑暗，没有一点儿灯火，只有脂粉的芳香、浓郁的酒气弥漫在室内。看东方已发白，殷公才不慌不忙走出来，伸手摸摸袖子，金爵还在。殷公到了门口，众生员已经先等候在那里，都怀疑他是夜里出来早晨又进去的。殷公拿出金爵给大家看，众人惊讶地询问，殷公就将自己的所见所闻告诉他们。大家都认为金爵这么贵重的东西非贫寒的读书人所能拥有，于是都相信了他的话。

后来殷公中了进士，在肥丘任职。当地的世家大族朱氏宴请殷公，让家人去取大酒杯，过了好久也没拿来。有个小童捂着嘴与主人说了几句话，主人面有怒色。不一会儿捧来金爵劝殷公饮酒。殷公仔细一看，金爵的款式及上面雕刻的图案，与狐狸的金爵毫无差别。他心中十分疑惑，就问主人金爵是什么地方制造的。朱氏回答说：“金

爵一共八个，是我祖上做京官时找能工巧匠打造的。这是家传宝物，已珍藏很久。因为大人驾光临，刚才从竹箱里取出来，仅剩下七只，怀疑是家里人偷走了。但十年间灰尘厚积，与原来一样，实在无法解释。”殷公笑着说：“你那只金爵羽化成仙了，但家传的珍宝不能丢失了。我也有一只，与您的金爵很相似，我要赠送与您。”散席后，殷公回到官署，找出金爵并派人送了过去。朱氏拿着金爵反复查看，非常震惊，亲自到官署感谢殷公，并询问金爵的来历。殷公就将事情的原委一一讲给他听。这才知道千里以外的东西，狐狸也能取来，但终究不敢留下。

鬼哭

谢迁之变 [40]，宦第皆为贼窟。王学使七襄之宅，盗聚尤众。城破兵入，扫荡群丑，尸填堦 [41]，血至充门而流。公入城，扛尸涤血而居。往往白昼见鬼；夜则床下磷飞，墙角鬼哭。

一日，王生皞迪，寄宿公家，闻床底小声连呼：“皞迪！皞迪！”已而声渐大，曰：“我死得苦！”因哭，满庭皆哭。公闻，仗剑而入，大言曰：“汝不识我王学院耶？”但闻百声嗤嗤，笑之以鼻。公于是设水陆道场，命释道忏度之。夜抛鬼饭，则见磷火荧荧，随地皆出。

先是，閤人 [42] 王姓疾笃 [43]，昏不知人事者数日矣。是夕，忽欠伸若醒。妇以食进。王曰：“适主人不知何事施饭于庭，我亦随众啖噉 [44]。食已方归，故不饥耳。”由此鬼怪遂绝。岂钹铙钟鼓 [45]，焰口瑜伽 [46]，果有益耶？

译文

谢迁起义时，官宦之家都被贼寇占据，学使王七襄家里聚集的盗贼尤其多。官兵破城后，扫荡搜杀叛乱的人，死尸躺满了台阶，血一直流到大门口。王学使进城回到家里，扛出尸体，洗净血污，这才住了下来。但常常大白天也能看到鬼，一到夜晚，床下鬼火乱飞，墙角鬼哭之声不断。

一天，有个叫王皞迪的书生借住在王公家，听到床底有细小的声音连连呼喊他：“皞迪！皞迪！”随即声音越来越大，并且说道：“我死得好苦啊！”又哭起来，于是满院子都是啼哭声。王公听见后，拿着宝剑冲入王生屋里，大声说：“你们不认识我王学院吗？”却只听见众鬼哧哧冷笑。王公没有办法，只好设了水陆道场，让和尚、道士念经超度这些亡魂。夜里又将饭抛撒在院子里让群鬼吃，只见磷火飞来飞去，到处都是。

此前，王公家的一个王姓看门人病情严重，已昏迷数天不省人事。这天晚上，他忽然伸了伸懒腰，好像刚睡醒的样子。他妻子给他端来食物，他说：“刚才主人不知道为什么在院子里施饭，我也跟大家一起吃了。吃完才回来的，所以现在不觉得饿。”从此以后鬼怪就绝迹了。难道和尚道士们奏乐作法、放焰口念经超度亡魂，果然有

译文

翰林院侍读学士董默庵家中被狐狸骚扰，砖瓦沙石经常忽然间像下冰雹一样落下来，一家人只好纷纷奔跑躲藏，等到狐狸停下来才敢出来干活。董公深感忧虑，借了司马孙祚庭的宅子搬过去躲避，但狐狸仍像以前一样来骚扰。

一天，董公在朝房等候上朝时，与同僚们谈起这件怪事。有位大臣说，关东道士焦螟，现在居住在内城，他会道教画符降妖的法术，非常灵验。董公于是登门拜访焦螟，请他帮忙降妖。道士用朱砂画了一道符，让董公回去后贴在墙上。狐狸竟然不害怕，还变本加厉地抛掷砖石。没有办法，董公只好又去告诉道士。道士大怒，亲自来到董公家，筑起神坛，施展法术。不一会儿，只见一只大狐狸趴在了神坛下。董家人受害很久，对狐狸恨之入骨，一个丫鬟上前击打它，却忽然倒在地上没有了呼吸。

道士说：“这个狐狸非常猖獗，我都不能一下子降伏它，一个女

子怎么敢轻易冒犯它呢？”接着又说道：“正好我可以借这个丫鬟之口来审问狐狸，也是个办法。”于是，他伸出食指与中指，念起咒语。过了一会儿，丫鬟忽然从地上爬起来，直身跪在坛前。道士问它住在哪里，丫鬟发出狐狸的声音说：“我出生在西域，来京城已经十八辈子了。”道士说：“京城里，哪里容得下你们长久居住？赶快离开吧。”狐狸没有回答。

道士大怒，拍着桌子说：“你还想违抗我的命令吗？如果再拖延，道法绝不饶恕你！”狐狸这才面露恐惧之色，表示愿意遵守教令。道士又催它快走。丫鬟这时又倒地没了呼吸，过了很久才苏醒过来。又过了一会儿，只见四五个白色团块，圆滚滚的像球一样，贴着屋檐边儿，一个挨着一个依次相随，转眼间都离开了。从此董公家就安宁下来了。

张老相公

张老相公，晋人。适将嫁女，携眷至江南，躬市奁妆。舟抵金山，张先渡江，嘱家人在舟，勿燔 [56] 膾脔。盖江中有鼉怪，闻香辄出，坏舟吞行人，为害已久。

张去，家人忘之，炙肉舟中。忽巨浪覆舟，妻女皆没。张回棹，悼恨欲死。因登金山，谒寺僧，询鼉之异，将以仇鼉。僧闻之，骇言：“吾侪日与习近，惧为祸殃，惟神明奉之，祈勿怒；时斩牲牢，投以半体，则跃吞而去。谁复能相仇哉！”

张闻，顿思得计。便招铁工，起炉山半，冶赤铁，重百余斤。审知所常伏处，使二三健男子，以大钳举投之。鼉跃出，疾吞而下。少时，波涌如山。顷之浪息，则鼉死已浮水上矣。

行旅寺僧并快之，建张老相公祠，肖像其中，以为水神，祷之辄应。

译文

张老相公是山西人，因为女儿将要出嫁，就携带家眷到江南一带，亲自为女儿置办嫁妆。船到镇江金山时，张老相公准备先过江，就嘱咐家里人在船上不要烹饪有腥膻气味的食物。因为江中有大鼉作怪，它闻到香味就会出来，毁坏船只、吞食行人，在此已为害很久。

张老相公离开后，家里人忘记了他的嘱咐，在船上烤肉。忽然滔天巨浪将船打翻，张老相公的妻子女儿都落水沉没。等张老相公驾船返回得知消息，他悲伤痛恨，几不欲独活。他登上金山，拜见金山寺的和尚，打听大鼉的怪异之事，准备找大鼉报仇。僧人们听了非常害怕，说：“我们每天与它相邻，担心被它祸害，只好将它当神仙一样供奉着，祈祷它不要发怒。经常屠宰牲畜，半只半只地扔到江中，大鼉就会跳出水面吞食。谁还敢跟它作对啊？”

张老相公听后，立刻想出了报仇的办法。他找来几个铁匠，在金山的半山腰建起冶炼炉，炼成一块百余斤重的大铁块。问清大鼉经常出没的地方，让两三位身强力壮的男子，用大铁钳举起铁块投入江中。大鼉跳出水面，快速将铁块吞下又沉入水底。不一会儿，江面波涛汹涌，浪高如山。又过了一会儿，波平浪息，大鼉的尸体浮上水面。

过往的旅客、寺中的僧人都很高兴，修建了张相公祠，并在祠内塑了他的像。人们将他当作水神供奉，向他祈愿都很灵验。

译文

淄川有个人一向轻佻无赖，一次，他偶然在村外游玩，见一少妇骑马而来，就对同伴说：“我能让她笑一笑。”大家都不相信，于是约定打赌，输了的请客吃饭。

此人突然跑出去奔到少妇马前，一连声地嚷着：“我要死！”就从墙头抽出一根高粱秸秆，横长一尺多，解下腰带挂在上面，自己伸长脖子做出上吊的样子。少妇经过时，果然被逗笑了，众人也都笑了起来。少妇已经过去很远，此人仍然一动不动，大家笑得更厉害了。走近一看，只见他伸出舌头闭着眼睛，已经真的断气而亡了。

在高粱秆上自缢而亡，不也很奇怪吗？这件事可以作为对那些轻薄子的警诫了。

九山王

曹州李姓者，邑诸生 [59]。家素饶。而居宅故不甚广；舍后有园数亩，荒置之。一日，有叟来税屋，出直百金。李以无屋为辞。叟曰：“请受之，但无烦虑。”李不喻其意，姑受之，以覘 [60] 其异。

越日，村人见舆马眷口入李家，纷纷甚夥 [61]，共疑李第无安顿所，问之。李殊不自知，归而察之，并无迹响。过数日，叟忽来谒。且云：“庇宇下已数晨夕。事事都草创，起炉作灶，未暇一修客子礼。今遣小女辈作黍，幸一垂顾。”李从之。则入园中，欵 [62] 见舍宇华好，崭然一新。入室，陈设芳丽。酒鼎沸于廊下，茶烟袅于厨中。俄而行酒荐饌，备极 [63] 甘旨 [64]。时见庭下少年人，往来甚众。又闻儿女喁喁，幕中作笑语声。家人婢仆，似有数十百口。李心知其狐。

席终而归，阴怀杀心。每入市，市硝硫，积数百斤，暗布园中殆满。骤火之，焰亘霄汉，如黑灵芝，燔臭 [65] 灰眯不可近；但闻鸣啼噪动之声，嘈杂聒耳。既熄入视，则死狐满地，焦头烂额者，不可胜计。方阅视间，叟自外来，颜色惨恻，责李曰：“夙无嫌怨。荒园报岁百金，非少；何忍遂相族灭？此奇惨之仇，无不报者！”忿然而去。疑其掷砾为殃，而年余无少怪异。

时顺治初年，山中群盗窃发，啸聚万余人，官莫能捕。生以家口多，日忧离乱。适村中来一星者 [66]，自号“南山翁”，言人休咎 [67]，了若目睹，名大噪。李召至家，求推甲子。翁愕然起敬，曰：“此真主也！”李闻大骇，以为妄。翁正容固言之。李疑信半焉，乃曰：“岂有白手受命而帝者乎？”翁谓：“不然。自古帝王，类多起于匹夫，谁是生而天子者？”

夙无嫌怨

生惑之，前席 [68] 而请。翁毅然以“卧龙”自任。请先备甲冑数千具、弓弩数千事。李虑人莫之归。翁曰：“臣请为大王连诸山，深相

结。使言者谓大王真天子，山中士卒，宜必响应。”李喜，遣翁行。发藏镞 [69]，造甲冑。翁数日始还，曰：“借大王威福，加臣三寸舌，诸山莫不愿执鞭勒 [70]，从戟下。”浹旬 [71] 之间，果归命者数千人。于是拜翁为军师；建大纛 [72]，设彩帜若林；据山立栅，声势震动。

邑令率兵来讨，翁指挥群寇，大破之。令惧，告急于兗 [73]。兗兵远涉而至，翁又伏寇进击，兵大溃，将士杀伤者甚众。势益震，党以万计，因自立为“九山王”。翁患马少，会都中解马赴江南，遣一旅要路篡取之。由是“九山王”之名大噪。加翁为“护国大将军”。高卧山巢，公然自负，以为黄袍之加，指日可俟矣。

东抚以夺马故，方将进剿；又得兗报，乃发精兵数千，与六道合围而进。军旅旌旗，弥满山谷。“九山王”大惧，召翁谋之，则不知所往。“九山王”窘急无术，登山而望曰：“今而知朝廷之势大矣！”山破，被擒，妻孥 [74] 戮之。始悟翁即老狐，盖以族灭报李也。

译文

曹州有个姓李的秀才，家中一直很富有，但住宅并不太宽敞。屋子后面有一片几亩地的园子，一直荒废着。一天，有一老翁来租房，愿出一百两银子的租金，李生以没有多余的屋子为由拒绝。老翁说：“你收下租金就好，不要有什么顾虑。”李生不明白他的意思，暂且收下银子，看看到底有什么怪异之事。

过了一天，村里人看到有车马家眷进入李家，纷纷杂杂很多人的样子。大家都疑惑李家安顿不下这么多人，就去问李生。李生自己还不知道怎么回事，回家察看，并没有什么动静。又过了几天，老翁忽然来拜访李生，并且说道：“搬来贵府已有几天了，每件事都要重新安排，还要起炉灶生火做饭，一直没有时间来尽客居的礼节。今天安排孩子们做了饭，还请你赏光去坐坐。”李生跟着老翁进入园子里，忽然看到一片华美的屋子，都是新盖的。走进室内，陈设也很华美。走廊上酒鼎沸腾，厨房中茶烟袅袅。一会儿，端上了美酒佳肴，极尽美味。不时看到庭院中有少年人来来往往，人数挺多；又听见小儿女轻声细语，帘幕内不时传来笑语声。家眷加上丫鬟奴仆有数十上百人。李生心里明白这家人是狐狸。

李生喝完酒回家，心里暗暗起了杀机。每次去集市上，就买一些芒硝、硫黄，积攒了几百斤，偷偷布满了整个园子。一天，忽然点燃，顿时园中烈焰冲天，浓烟滚滚如黑灵芝一般，起火处焦臭刺鼻，烟尘迷目，让人无法靠近。只听到火中呼号挣扎的声音，喧嚣刺耳。火熄灭后进去一看，满园都是烧死的狐狸，头被烧伤的不计其数。李生正在察看，老翁从外面回来了，脸色悲恸欲绝，质问李生说：“我

与你并无仇怨，每年以百两银子租你的荒园也不算少，你怎么忍心灭我一族？此深仇血恨岂有不报的道理！”说完愤然离去。李生以为老翁会抛掷砖瓦碎石来祸害他，但过了一年多，并没有发生什么怪异的事情。

到了顺治初年，山中盗贼纷起，聚集了有一万多人，官兵也没有能力抓捕他们。李生因为家中人口多，天天担心会发生离乱之事。正好村中来了一位算命先生，自称“南山翁”，算人的吉凶祸福明明白白，好像他亲眼所见一样，一时声名大噪。李生将他请到家中，请他推算生辰八字。南山翁很惊讶，恭敬地说：“这是真命天子啊！”李生听了大吃一惊，以为是无稽之谈，南山翁却一脸严肃坚持此说。李生半信半疑，说：“哪有白手起家而做了帝王的？”南山翁说：“不是这样的。自古帝王大多出身平民，有谁天生就是天子的呢？”

李生被南山翁的话蛊惑，很动心，向他请教各项事宜。南山翁毅然承担起“卧龙”诸葛先生的职责，让李生先准备甲冑数千套、弓箭数千副。李生担心没有人来归附他，南山翁说：“我愿为大王联合各路山寨，深入交结，再派人到处宣扬你是真龙天子，山中的将领兵卒一定会响应。”李生大喜，便打发南山翁去办事。他将家藏的银子都拿了出来，制造盔甲。南山翁几天后才回来，说：“凭借大王的威望福运，加上我的三寸不烂之舌，各山寨都愿跟从你，听从你的指挥。”果然，十天左右就有数千人来归附。于是李生拜南山翁为军师，竖起大旗，设置的五色彩旗林立，又占据山头建起营寨，一时声势大作。

县令带兵来讨伐，南山翁指挥兵马大败官兵。县令很害怕，将紧急情况报告给兖州府。兖州兵马长途征伐，南山翁又埋伏人马进行攻击，兖州军大败，将士们死伤惨重。从此，李生声势更为壮大，党徒数以万计，因此自立为“九山王”。南山翁还嫌马匹太少，正好有京城的马匹要运往江南，他就派遣一支部队拦路抢了下来。由此“九山王”名声大噪，加封南山翁为“护国大将军”。李生高卧山寨中，非常自负，认为黄袍加身称王称帝的日子指日可待。

山东巡抚因为马匹被夺一事，正准备进山剿灭贼寇，又得到兖州府的报告，于是派遣数千精兵，分六路合围而来，兵士旗帜布满山谷。“九山王”非常恐惧，召来南山翁商议对策，却不知南山翁去了哪里。“九山王”束手无策，登上山顶一望，说道：“今天才知道朝廷势力有多强大！”最终官兵攻破了山寨，李生被擒，妻子儿女全被杀了。他这才明白，南山翁就是老狐，这是用杀李生满门来报当年的灭族之仇。

罗子浮，邠人。父母俱早世。八九岁，依叔大业。业为国子左厢[75]，富有金缯而无子，爱罗若己出。

十四岁，为匪人诱去作狭邪游[76]。会有金陵娼，侨寓郡中，生悦而惑之。娼返金陵，生窃从遁去。居娼家半年，床头金尽，大为姊妹行齿冷。然犹未遽绝之。无何，广疮[77]溃臭，沾染床席，逐而出。丐于市，市人见辄遥避。自恐死异域，乞食西行；日三四十里，渐至邠界。又念败絮脓秽，无颜入里门，尚趑趄[78]近邑间。

日就暮，欲趋山寺宿。遇一女子，容貌若仙。近问：“何适？”生以实告。女曰：“我出家人，居有山洞，可以下榻，颇不畏虎狼。”生喜，从去。入深山中，见一洞府。入则门横溪水，石梁驾之。又数武[79]，有石室二，光明彻照，无须灯烛。命生解悬鹑[80]，浴于溪流，曰：“濯之，疮当愈。”又开幃拂褥促寝，曰：“请即眠，当为郎作裤。”乃取大叶类芭蕉，剪缀作衣。生卧视之。制无几时，折迭床头，曰：“晓取着之。”乃与对榻寝。

生浴后，觉疮疡无苦。既醒，摸之，则痂厚结矣。诘旦，将兴，心疑蕉叶不可着。取而审视，则绿锦滑绝。少间，具餐。女取山叶呼作饼，食之，果饼；又剪作鸡、鱼烹之，皆如真者。室隅一罍，贮佳酝，辄复取饮；少减，则以溪水灌益之。数日，疮痂尽脱，就女求宿。女曰：“轻薄儿！甫能安身，便生妄想！”生云：“聊以报德。”遂同卧处，大相欢爱。

一日，有少妇笑入曰：“翩翩小鬼头快活死！薛姑子好梦，几时做得？”女迎笑曰：“花城娘子，贵趾久弗涉，今日西南风紧，吹送来也！小哥子抱得未？”曰：“又一小婢子。”女笑曰：“花娘子瓦窑[81]哉！那弗将来？”曰：“方鸣之，睡却矣。”于是坐以款饮。又顾生曰：“小郎君焚好香也。”生视之，年二十有三四，绰有余妍。心好之。剥果误落案下，俯地假拾果，阴捻翘凤。花城他顾而笑，若不知者。生方恍然神夺，顿觉袍裤无温；自顾所服，悉成秋叶。几骇绝。危坐移时，渐变如故。窃幸二女之弗见也。

少顷，酬酢[82]间，又以指搔纤掌。花城坦然笑谑，殊不觉知。突突[83]怔忡间，衣已化叶，移时始复变。由是惭颜息虑，不敢妄想。花城笑曰：“而家小郎子，大不端好！若弗是醋葫芦娘子，恐跳

迹入云霄去。”女亦哂曰：“薄幸儿，便值得寒冻杀！”相与鼓掌。花城离席曰：“小婢醒，恐啼肠断矣。”女亦起曰：“贪引他家男儿，不忆得小江城啼绝矣。”花城既去，惧貽诮责；女卒晤对如平时。居无何，秋老风寒，霜零木脱，女乃收落叶，蓄旨御冬。顾生肃缩，乃持襖 [84] 掇拾洞口白云为絮复衣，着之温暖如襦，且轻松常如新绵。

逾年，生一子，极惠美。日在洞中弄儿为乐。然每念故里，乞与同归。女曰：“妾不能从；不然，君自去。”因循二三年，儿渐长，遂与花城订为姻好。生每以叔老为念。女曰：“阿叔腊 [85] 故大高，幸复强健，无劳悬耿。待保儿婚后，去住由君。”女在洞中，辄取叶写书，教儿读，儿过目即了。女曰：“此儿福相，放教入尘寰，无忧至台阁。”

未几，儿年十四，花城亲诣送女。女华妆至，容光照人。夫妻大悦，举家宴集。翩翩扣钗而歌曰：“我有佳儿，不羨贵官。我有佳妇，不羨绮纨。今夕聚首，皆当喜欢。为君行酒，劝君加餐。”既而花城去，与儿夫妇对室居。新妇孝，依依膝下，宛如所生。

生又言归。女曰：“子有俗骨，终非仙品。儿亦富贵中人，可携去，我不误儿生平。”新妇思别其母，花城已至。儿女恋恋，涕各满眶。两母慰之曰：“暂去，可复来。”翩翩乃剪叶为驴，令三人跨之以归。

大业已归老林下，意侄已死，忽携佳孙美妇归，喜如获宝。入门，各视所衣，悉蕉叶；破之，絮蒸蒸腾去。乃并易之。

后生思翩翩，偕儿往探之，则黄叶满径，洞口路迷，零涕而返。

罗子浮是邠州人，父母都早早去世了，八九岁时就由叔叔罗大业抚养。大业为国子监祭酒，家境富有但没有儿子，他很疼爱罗子浮，把他当作自己的亲生儿子一样。

罗子浮十四岁时，被坏人引诱着狎妓宿娼。当时有个从金陵来的妓女侨居本郡，子浮很喜欢她，被她迷住了。当妓女返回金陵时，罗子浮也偷偷跟着她逃离了家乡。他在妓院住了半年，钱财都用光了，被妓女们嘲笑、嫌弃，但他并没有被立即赶走。不久，罗子浮身上的梅毒疮溃烂发臭，弄脏了床褥席子，终于被妓院赶了出来。他只能在街市上乞讨，街上的人见到他都远远地躲开。罗子浮担心自己客死他乡，便一边讨饭一边西行，每天走三四十里，渐渐到了邠州地界。又想到自己衣衫褴褛，一身脓疮污秽不堪，实在没脸回家，就先滞留在邻近的县里。

一天傍晚，罗子浮打算去山中寺庙投宿，路上遇到一位女子，容

颜美丽如仙女一般。女子上前问道：“你要去哪里？”罗子浮如实相告。女子说：“我是出家人，住的地方有山洞，你可以住下来，不用担心有虎狼相害。”罗子浮很高兴，跟着女子去了。进入深山中，看到一个洞府，进去后看到门前横淌着一条小溪，上面架着小石桥。又走了几步，有两间石室，室内非常光亮，不需要点灯烛。女子让罗子浮脱去破烂衣服在溪水中沐浴，说：“洗洗吧，身上的毒疮自然会痊愈。”又打开帷幃，铺好被褥，催促罗子浮去睡觉，说道：“你赶快睡吧，我要给你做套衣裤。”于是取来像芭蕉叶一样的大叶子，裁剪后缝起来做衣服，罗子浮躺在床上看着。过了一会儿，衣服便缝好了，女子将衣服折叠整齐放在他床头，说：“早上起床后穿上吧。”说完，便在对面的床上睡下了。

罗子浮洗浴后，感觉身上的烂疮不疼了。醒来后一摸，已经结了厚厚的痂。清晨准备起床时，他心里怀疑叶子做的衣服没法儿穿，取过来仔细一看，却是绿色锦缎，非常光滑。过了一会儿准备吃早餐，女子拿来山叶说是饼，一吃果然是饼；又将叶子剪成鸡、鱼的样子烹饪，都跟真的一样。室内一角存放着一坛好酒，女子一次次取来饮用，坛中美酒稍微少一些，她就将溪水灌进去补充。过了几天，罗子浮身上的疮痂都脱落了，他靠近女子恳请同宿。女子说：“你这个轻薄的人，刚能安身，就开始胡思乱想。”罗子浮说：“我只是想以此报答你的恩德。”于是二人同床而眠，非常愉悦开心。

一天，有一少妇笑着进来，说：“翩翩小鬼头快活死了，你们俩何时做成的好事啊？”翩翩迎上去笑着说：“原来是花城娘子。你这贵客可是好久没有光临此地了，今天定是西南风吹得紧，将你吹过来了。抱上儿子没有？”花城说：“又是个小丫头。”翩翩笑着说：“花城娘子真是个瓦窑啊。怎么没有将孩子带来啊？”花城说：“刚刚哄了她一会儿，已经睡下了。”于是三人一齐落座，慢慢饮酒。花城又看着罗子浮说：“小郎君烧高香了。”罗子浮见她二十三四岁，风姿绰约、容貌秀美，心里很喜欢。剥果实时不小心将果子掉到桌子底下，他俯身假装拾果子，偷偷捏了一下花城的小脚。花城看着别处笑笑，好像什么都不知道。罗子浮正在神魂颠倒间，忽然觉得身上的衣服裤子都不暖和了，低头一看，自己穿的衣服已都变成了秋叶。他差点吓死，赶紧坐端正，过了一会儿，身上的衣服才慢慢变回原来的样子，他暗自庆幸两位女子没看见。

又过了一会儿，罗子浮在给花城敬酒时，又用手指挠她的掌心。花城坦然地说笑戏谑，好像完全没有感觉。正在罗子浮心神不宁、心怦怦乱跳时，身上的衣服又已变成了叶子。过了一会儿才又变回来。罗子浮满面羞惭，这才打消杂念，再不敢胡思乱想。花城笑着说：“你家小郎君太不正经了。如果不是醋葫芦娘子拘管得严，他大概早跳到云端逍遥快活了。”翩翩也讥笑说：“这个轻薄的人，就应该

活活被冻死。”两人拍掌大笑。花城离席说：“小丫头醒来，恐怕要哭断肠子了。”翩翩也起身说：“你只顾勾引别人的男人，就想不起小江城会哭死了。”花城走后，罗子浮害怕翩翩嘲笑责骂他，但翩翩仍像平时一样对待他。

住了不久，已到深秋季节，寒风阵阵，霜降叶落，翩翩就捡拾起落叶，储存食物准备过冬。她看到罗子浮冻得瑟瑟发抖，就拿着个包袱，收集起洞口的白云，铺在衣服里做成棉衣。罗子浮穿在身上，暖和得像穿了短袄一样，并且轻软蓬松，就跟新棉衣一样。

过了一年，翩翩生了个儿子，非常聪明漂亮，罗子浮每天的乐趣就是在山洞里逗弄儿子。但他常常想念家乡，恳请翩翩跟他一起回去。翩翩说：“我不能跟你回去，要不你就自己回去吧。”这样拖延了两三年，儿子渐渐长大，翩翩就与花城结成了亲家。罗子浮常常牵挂年迈的叔叔，翩翩说：“叔叔虽然年纪大了，但身体还很强健，用不着你挂念。等保儿结婚后，是走是留，你自己决定。”翩翩在山洞用树叶写字，教儿子读书，儿子一看就明白了。翩翩说：“这孩子有福相，让他到人间，不愁做不到台阁大臣这样的高官。”

又过了几年，他们的儿子十四岁了，花城亲自将女儿送来完婚。只见花城之女衣着华美，容貌艳丽，夫妻二人都很高兴，合家团聚设宴庆贺。翩翩敲着钗环唱道：“我有好儿郎，不羨做高官。我有好儿媳，不羨穿绣锦。今晚聚一起，大家都喜欢。为君斟满酒，劝君多进餐。”酒后，花城离去，翩翩夫妇与儿子儿媳对门住着。新媳妇很孝顺，依恋在翩翩膝下，犹如亲生女儿一样。

罗子浮又说要去，翩翩说：“你有俗骨，终究不能成仙。儿子也是富贵中人，你可将他带回去，我不耽误他的前程。”新媳妇正想着要与母亲告别，花城已经来了。小儿女对他们的母亲恋恋不舍，眼泪盈眶。翩翩与花城都安慰说：“你们暂时离开，以后还可以回来。”翩翩就将树叶剪成毛驴，让三人骑上回家去。

罗大业此时已告老还乡，他以为侄子早已死了，忽见罗子浮带着英俊的孙子、美貌的孙媳回来，欢喜得像得到了宝贝。罗子浮三人入门后，再看看自己所穿的衣服，都已变成了蕉叶。扯破蕉叶，里面充作棉絮的白云也升到了天空。于是，三人都换了衣服。

后来罗子浮思念翩翩，带着儿子回去探望，只见路上落满了黄叶，再也找不到通往洞口的路，父子二人只能流着泪回了家。

闻李太公敬一言：“某公在沈阳，宴集山颠。俯瞰山下，有虎衔物来，以爪穴地，瘞 [86] 之而去。使人探所瘞，得死鹿。乃取鹿而掩其穴。少间，虎导一黑兽至，毛长数寸。虎前驱，若邀尊客。既至穴，兽眈眈蹲伺。虎探穴失鹿，战伏不敢少动。兽怒其诳，以爪击虎额，虎立毙。兽亦径去。”

我曾听李太公敬一讲过这样一件事：有一人在沈阳，于一山顶上

集会宴饮。他从山顶往下看时，看到有只老虎口中衔着什么东西过来，老虎用爪子在地上挖了个洞，将东西放进去掩埋好就走了。这人就派人去查看老虎埋的是什么东西，原来是一头死鹿。查看的人将鹿取走，又将洞埋好。过了一会儿，老虎引导着一只黑兽过来，黑兽身上的毛有几寸长。老虎在前面带路，好像在邀请一位尊贵的客人。到了洞前，黑兽凶狠地盯着，在一旁蹲踞守候。老虎往洞里一伸爪子，发现鹿不见了，吓得颤抖着趴在地上一动不敢动。黑兽被老虎欺骗非常愤怒，用爪子猛击老虎额头。老虎立刻毙命，黑兽也径自离开了。

武昌尹图南，有别第，尝为一秀才税居 [87]。半年来，亦未尝过问。一日，遇诸其门，年最少，而容仪裘马，翩翩甚都 [88]。趋与语，却又蕴藉 [89] 可爱。异之。归语妻。妻遣婢托遗问以窥其室。室有丽姝，美艳逾于仙人；一切花石服玩，俱非耳目所经。

尹不测其何人，诣门投谒，适值他出。翼日，却来拜答，展其刺呼 [90]，始知余姓德名。语次，细审官阀，言殊隐约。固诘之，则曰：“欲相还往，仆不敢自绝。应知非寇窃逋逃者，何须必知来历。”尹谢之。命酒款宴，言笑甚欢。向暮，有昆仑 [91] 捉马挑灯，迎导以去。

明日，折简报主人。尹至其家，见屋壁俱用明光纸裱，洁如镜。金狻猊 [92] 薰 [93] 异香。一碧玉瓶，插凤尾孔雀羽各二，各长二尺余。一水晶瓶，浸粉花一树，不知何名，亦高二尺许，垂枝覆几外；叶疏花密，含苞未吐；花状似湿蝶敛翼；蒂即如须。

筵间不过八簋，丰美异常。即命童子击鼓催花为令。鼓声既动，则瓶中花颤颤欲折；俄而蝶翅渐张；既而鼓歇，渊然 [94] 一声，蒂须顿落，即为一蝶，飞落尹衣。余笑起，飞一巨觥；酒方引满，蝶亦颺去。顷之，鼓又作，两蝶飞集余冠。余笑云：“作法自毙矣。”亦引二觥。三鼓既终，花乱堕，翩翩而下，惹袖沾衿。鼓童笑来指数：尹得九筹，余得四筹。尹已薄醉，不能尽筹，强引三爵，离席亡去。由是益奇之。

然其为人寡交与，每阖门居，不与国人通吊庆 [95]。尹逢人辄宣；闻其异者，争交欢余，门外冠盖相望。余颇不耐，忽辞主人去。去后，尹入其家，空庭洒扫无纤尘；烛泪堆掷青阶下；窗间零帛断绵，指印宛然。惟舍后遗一小白石缸，可受石许。尹携归，贮水养朱鱼。经年，水清如初贮。后为佣保移石，误碎之。水蓄并不倾泻。视之，缸宛在，扪之虚爽。手入其中，水随手泄；出其手，则复合。冬月不冰。一夜，忽结为晶，鱼游如故。

尹畏人知，常置密室，非子婿不以示也。久之渐播，索玩者纷错于门。腊月，忽解为水，阴湿满地，鱼亦渺然。其旧缸残石犹存。忽有道士踵门求之。尹出以示。道士曰：“此龙宫蓄水器也。”尹述其破而不泄之异。道士曰：“此缸之魂也。”殷殷然乞得少许。问其何用，

曰：“以屑合药，可得永寿。”予一片，欢谢而去。

译文

武昌尹图南有一处宅院，曾租给一个秀才居住，半年多也没问过此事。一天，尹图南在宅子门口遇到秀才，只见他非常年轻，容仪俊美，衣着华丽，风度翩翩。尹图南上前与他交谈，又觉得他谈吐优雅，令人喜爱。尹图南认为此人很特别，回去后告诉妻子。妻子便让丫鬟以送礼为名，暗地里查看秀才的家庭情况。发现他妻子也是美女，比天仙还美艳，家里所有的奇花异石、衣饰珍玩，都是从来没有看见过、没有听说过的。

尹图南猜测不出秀才是什么人，就递上名帖，登门拜访。秀才正好外出了。第二天，秀才来回拜。尹图南打开他的名帖，才知道他姓余名德。两人交谈之间，尹图南细细询问他的家族门第，余德的回答非常含糊。尹图南反复追问，余德说：“您如想与我交往，我也不敢拒绝。您应该知道我并不是逃亡在外的窃贼盗匪，何必一定要知道我的来历呢？”尹图南连忙道歉，命家人上酒款待他。二人相谈愉快，一直到傍晚，才有两个奴仆牵着马提着灯过来将余德接了回去。

第二天，余德写便笺给尹图南要回请他。尹图南来到余德家，见室内墙壁都用明光纸装裱，光洁如镜子。金狻猊香炉里燃烧着特别的香料，一只碧玉瓶里插着凤尾与孔雀翎各两支，每支二尺多长。一只水晶瓶里浸着一树粉花，叫不出名字，也是二尺多高。垂下的枝条覆盖到了几案之外，树叶稀疏，花朵繁密，含苞待放。花朵的形状像沾水的蝴蝶收拢着翅膀，花蒂像蝴蝶的触须。

酒席上不过摆了八个盘子的菜肴，但异常丰盛精美。余德命童子击鼓催花行酒令。鼓声一响，水晶瓶中的花就微微颤动起来，好像要折断一样。不一会儿，“蝴蝶”的翅膀慢慢张开。接着停止击鼓，随着一声闷响，蝶须样的花蒂立刻凋落，当即变成一只蝴蝶飞落在尹图南的衣服上。余德笑着起身，递上一个大酒杯，斟上酒让尹图南喝。酒刚斟满，蝴蝶便飞走了。一会儿，鼓声又响起，两只蝴蝶飞来落在余德的帽子上，余德笑着说：“我这是自作自受了。”也喝了两大杯。第三次鼓声响过，花纷纷飘落，化作蝴蝶翩翩飞舞，落在二人的袖子上、衣襟上。击鼓的童子笑着过来，指点计数二人身上各落了多少，结果尹图南应喝九杯，余德应喝四杯。这时尹图南已有些醉意，不敢多喝，勉强喝了三杯便离席逃遁。从此，尹图南越发觉得余德是个奇人。

然而余德很少与人打交道，总是关着门待在家里，不与周围的人有婚丧庆吊的往来。尹图南逢人就为余德宣扬，听说他逸事的人都争相与他结交，常常是贵客盈门、络绎不绝。余德很不耐烦，忽然辞别

尹图南离开了。余德走后，尹图南来到他家，只见空空的庭院打扫得一尘不染，烛油堆放在青石阶下，窗户上只剩些残布断线，上面还印着清晰的指痕。只有屋后留下一个小小的白色石缸，可以盛一石水左右。尹图南将缸带回去，盛上水养了几条红鱼，过了一年，缸里的水仍然清澈如初。后来，仆人在搬石块时不小心打碎了石缸，但缸里的水仍凝聚着没流出来。再一看，缸好像还在，用手一摸却空空的、软软的。将手伸进去，水就随着手流出来，手拿开，水又合拢过来，到了冬天也不结冰。一天夜里，缸里的水忽然结成冰晶，而鱼仍在里面游动。

尹图南怕别人知道这件事，一直将它放在密室里，除了儿子、女婿这样的至亲之人，从不给别人看。但时间长了，消息逐渐传开，要求观看赏玩的人纷纷登门。腊月里，冰晶忽然化为水，流了一地，里面的鱼也不见了，只剩下原来旧缸的碎石。忽然有一道士登门索看，尹图南拿出残石给他看，道士说：“这是龙宫中盛水的器皿。”尹图南又跟他讲述了缸破后水不流的奇特之处，道士说：“这是缸的魂魄。”又很殷切地向尹图南求取一点儿碎石，问他有什么用处，道士说：“用石缸的碎屑合药，吃了能够长寿。”尹图南给了他一片，道士高兴地道谢而去。

Te Troll

Sun Taibo told me this story.

His great-grandfather, also named Sun, had been studying at Willow Gully Temple on South Mountain, and came home for the autumn wheat harvest. He only stayed at home for ten days, but when he returned to the temple and opened the door of his lodgings, he saw that the table was thick with dust and the windows laced with cobwebs. He ordered his servant to clean the place, and by evening it was in sufficiently good order for him to be able to install himself comfortably again. He dusted off the bed, spread out his quilt, closed the door and lay his head down on the pillow. Moonlight came flooding in at the window.

He tossed and turned a long while, as silence descended on the temple. Then suddenly a wind got up and he heard the main temple door flapping noisily. Thinking to himself that one of the monks must have forgotten to close it, he lay there a while in some anxiety. The wind seemed to be coming closer and closer in the direction of his quarters, and the next thing he knew the door leading into his room blew open. He was now seriously alarmed, and quite unable to compose himself. His room filled with the roaring of the wind, and he heard the sound of clomping boots gradually approaching the alcove in which his bed was situated. By now he was utterly terrified. Then the door of the alcove itself flew open, and there it was, a great troll, stooping down at first as it approached, then suddenly looming up over his bed, its head grazing the ceiling, its face dark and blotchy like an old melon rind. Its blazing eyes scanned the room, and its cavernous mouth lolled open, revealing great shining fangs more than three inches long. Its tongue flickered from side to side, and from its throat there issued a terrible rasping sound that reverberated through the room.

Sun quaked in sheer terror. Thinking quickly to himself that the beast was already too close for him to have any chance of escape and that his only hope now lay in trying to kill it, he secretly drew his dagger from beneath his pillow, concealed it in his sleeve, then swiftly drew it out and stabbed the creature in the belly. The blade made a dull thud on impact, as if it had struck a stone mortar. The enraged troll flailed out at him with its huge claws, but Sun shrank back from it. The troll only succeeded in tearing at the bedcover, and pulled it down on to the ground as it stormed out.

Sun had been dragged to the ground with the bedcover, and he lay there howling. His servant came running with a lantern, and, finding the door locked, as it usually was during the night, he broke open the window and climbed in. Appalled at the state his master was in, he helped him back to bed and heard his tale. Afterwards they examined the room together and saw that the bedcover was still caught tight between the door and the door frame. As soon as they opened the door and the cover fell free, they saw great holes in the fabric, where the beast's claws had torn at it.

When dawn broke the next morning, they dared not stay there a moment longer but packed their things and returned home. On a subsequent occasion they questioned the resident monks, but there had been no further apparition.

The Monster in the Buckwheat

An old gentleman of Changshan County, by the name of An, enjoyed working on his land. One autumn, when his buckwheat was ripe, he went to supervise the harvest, cutting it and laying it out in stacks along the sides of the fields. At that time, someone was stealing the crops in the neighbouring village, so the old gentleman asked his men to load the cut buckwheat on to a cart that very night and push it to the threshing ground by the light of the moon. He himself stayed behind to keep watch over his remaining crops, lying in the open field with spear at hand as he waited for them to return. He had just begun to doze off, when he heard the sound of feet trampling on the buckwheat stalks, making a terrific crunching noise, and suspected that it might be the thief. But when he looked up, he saw a huge monster bearing down upon him, more than ten feet tall, with red hair and a big bushy beard. Leaping up in terror, he struck out at it with all his might, and the monster gave a great howl of pain and fled into the night.

Afraid that it might reappear at any moment, An shouldered his spear and headed home, telling his labourers, when he met them on the road, what he had seen, and warning them not to proceed any further. They were reluctant to believe him.

The next day, they were spreading out the buckwheat in the sun when suddenly they heard a strange sound in the air.

'It's the monster again!' cried old An in terror, and fled, as did all the others.

A little later that day, they gathered together again and An told them to arm themselves with bows and lie in wait. The following morning, sure enough, the monster returned a third time. They each shot several arrows at it, and it fled in fear. Then for two or three days it did not return. By now all the threshed buckwheat was safely stored in the granary, but the stalks of straw still lay higgledy- piggledy on the threshing floor. Old An gave orders for the straw to be bound together and piled into a rick, then he himself climbed up on to the rick, which was several feet high. He was treading it down firmly when suddenly he saw something in the distance.

‘The monster is coming again!’ he cried aghast.

Before his men could get to their bows, the creature had already jumped at him, and knocked him back on to the rick. It took a bite out of his forehead and went away again. The men climbed up and saw that a whole chunk of the old man’s forehead, a piece the size of a man’s palm, had been bitten off, bone and all. He had already lost consciousness, and they carried him home, where he died.

The monster was never seen again. Nobody could even agree on what sort of creature it was.

Stealing a Peach

When I was a boy, I went up to the prefectural city of Ji'nan to take an examination. It was the time of the Spring Festival, and, according to custom, on the day before the festival all the merchants of the place processed with decorated banners and drums to the provincial yamen. This procession was called Bringing in the Spring. I went with a friend to watch the fun. There was a huge crowd milling about, and ahead of us, facing each other to the right and left of the raised hall, sat four mandarins in their crimson robes. I was too young at the time to know who they were. All I was aware of was the hum of voices and the crashing noise of the drums and other instruments.

In the middle of it all, a man led a boy with long unplaited hair into the space in front of the dais and knelt on the ground. The man had two baskets suspended from a carrying pole on his shoulders and seemed to be saying something, which I could not distinguish for the din of the crowd. I only saw the mandarins smile, and immediately afterwards an attendant came down and in a loud voice ordered the man to give his performance.

‘What shall I perform?’ said the man, rising to his feet.

The mandarins on the dais consulted among themselves, and then the attendant inquired of the man what he could do best.

‘I can make the seasons go backwards, and turn the order of nature upside down.’

The attendant reported back to the mandarins, and after a moment returned and ordered the man to produce a peach. The man assented, taking off his coat and laying it on one of his baskets, at the same time complaining loudly that they had set him a very hard task.

‘The winter frost has not melted – how can I possibly produce a peach? But if I fail, their worships will surely be angry with me. Alas! Woe is me!’

The boy, who was evidently his son, reminded him that he had already agreed to perform and was under an obligation to continue. After fretting and grumbling a while, the father cried out, 'I know what we must do! Here it is still early spring and there is snow on the ground – we shall never get a peach here. But up in heaven, in the garden of the Queen Mother of the West, they have peaches all the year round. There it is eternal summer! It is there we must try!'

'But how are we to get up there?' asked the boy.

'I have the means,' replied his father, and immediately proceeded to take from one of his baskets a cord some dozens of feet in length. He coiled it carefully and then threw one end of it high up into the air, where it remained suspended, as if somehow caught. He continued to pay out the rope, which kept rising higher and higher until the top end of it disappeared altogether into the clouds, while the other end remained in his hands.

'Come here, boy!' he called to his son. 'I am getting too old for this sort of thing, and anyway I am too heavy, I wouldn't be able to do it. It will have to be you.'

He handed the rope to the boy.

'Climb up on this.'

The boy took the rope, but as he did so he pulled a face. 'Father, have you gone mad?' he protested. 'You want me to climb all the way up into the sky on this flimsy thing? Suppose it breaks and I fall – I'll be killed!'

'I have given these gentlemen my word,' his father pleaded, 'and there's no backing out now. Please do this, I beg of you. Bring me a peach, and I am sure we will be rewarded with a hundred taels of silver. Then I promise to get you a pretty wife.'

So his son took hold of the rope and went scrambling up it, hand over foot, like a spider running up a thread, finally disappearing out of sight and into the clouds.

There was a long interval, and then down fell a large peach, the size of a soup bowl. The delighted father presented it to the gentlemen on the dais, who passed it around and studied it carefully, unable to tell at first glance whether it was genuine or a fake. Then suddenly the rope came tumbling to the ground.

‘The poor boy!’ cried the father in alarm. ‘He is done for! Someone up there must have cut my rope!’

The next moment something else fell to the ground, an object which was found on closer examination to be the boy’s head. ‘Ah me!’ cried the father, weeping bitterly and holding the head up in both his hands. ‘The heavenly watchman caught him stealing the peach! My son is no more!’

After that, one by one, the boy’s feet, his arms and legs, and every single remaining part of his anatomy came tumbling down in a similar manner. The distraught father gathered all the pieces up and put them in one of his baskets, saying, ‘This was my only son! He went with me everywhere I went. And now, at his own father’s orders, he has met with this cruel fate. I must away and bury him.’

He approached the dais.

‘Your peach, gentlemen,’ he said, falling to his knees, ‘was obtained at the cost of my boy’s life. Help me, I beg you, to pay for his funeral expenses, and I will be ever grateful to you for your kindness.’

The mandarins, who had been watching the scene in utter horror and amazement, immediately collected a good purse for him. When the father had received the money and put it in his belt, he rapped on the basket.

‘Babar ! ’ he called out. ‘Out you come now and thank the gentlemen! What are you waiting for?’

He had no sooner said this than there was a knock from within and a tousled head emerged from the basket. Out jumped the boy, and bowed to the dais. It was his son.

To this very day I have never forgotten this extraordinary performance. I later learned that this ‘rope trick’ was a speciality of the White Lotus sect. Surely this man must have learned it from them.

Growing Pears

A peasant was selling pears in the market. Sweet they were and fragrant – and exceedingly expensive. A Taoist monk in a tattered cap and robe came begging by the pear vendor's cart, and the man told him to be gone. When the monk lingered, the vendor began to abuse him angrily.

'But you have hundreds of pears in your cart,' returned the monk, 'and I am only asking for one. You would hardly notice it, sir. Why are you getting so angry?'

Onlookers urged the vendor to give the monk one of his less succulent pears, just to be rid of him, but the man obstinately refused. A waiter who was serving the customers at a nearby wine-stall, seeing that the scene was threatening to grow ugly, bought a pear and gave it to the monk, who bowed in thanks and turned to the assembled crowd.

'Meanness,' he declared, 'is something we monks find impossible to understand. I have some very fine pears of my own, which I should like to give you.'

'If you have such fine pears,' said one of the crowd, 'then why did you not eat them yourself? Why did you need to go begging?'

'I needed this one for the seed,' was the monk's reply.

So saying, he held the pear out in front of him and began munching it until all he had left was a single seed from its core, which he held in one hand while taking down a hoe from his shoulder and making a little hole in the ground. Here he placed the seed and covered it with earth. He now asked for some hot water to sprinkle on it, and one of the more enterprising members of the crowd went off and fetched him some from a roadside tavern. The water was scalding hot, but the monk proceeded to pour it on the ground over his seed. The crowd watched riveted, as a tiny sprout began pushing its way up through the soil, growing and growing until soon it was a fully fledged tree, complete with branches and leaves. And then it flowered and bore fruit, great big, fragrant pears. Every branch was laden with them. The monk now climbed up into the tree and began picking the pears, handing them down to the crowd as he did so. Soon every single pear on the tree had been given away. When this was done, he started hacking at the tree with his hoe, and had soon felled it. Then, shouldering the tree, branches, leaves and all, he sauntered casually off.

Now, from the very beginning of this performance, the pear vendor had been standing in the crowd, straining his neck to see what the others were seeing, quite forgetting his trade and what he had come to market for. Only when the monk had gone did he turn and see that his own cart was empty. Then he knew that the pears the monk had just been handing out were all from his cart. And he noticed that his cart was missing one of its handles; it had been newly hacked away. The peasant flew into a rage and went in hot pursuit of the monk, following him the length of a wall, round a corner, and there was his cart- handle lying discarded on the ground. He knew at once that it had served as the monk's pear tree. As for the monk himself, he had vanished without trace, to the great amazement of the crowd.

The water was scalding hot.

The Golden Goblet

Yin Shidan, who rose to be President of the Board of Civil Office, was a native of Licheng who grew up in circumstances of great poverty and had shown himself to be a young man of courage and resourcefulness.

In his home town there was a large estate that had once belonged to a long-established family, a rambling property consisting of a series of pavilions and other buildings that extended over several acres. Strange apparitions had often been witnessed on the estate, with the result that it had been abandoned and allowed to go to ruin. No one was willing to live there. With time the place grew so overgrown and desolate that no one would so much as enter it even in broad daylight.

One day, Yin was drinking with some young friends of his when one of them had a bright idea.

‘If one of us dares to spend a night in that haunted place,’ he proposed jokingly, ‘let’s all stand him a dinner!’

Yin leaped up at once. ‘Why, what could be easier!’

And so saying he took his sleeping mat with him and went to the place, the others accompanying him as far as the entrance.

‘We will wait here outside,’ they said, smiling nervously. ‘If you see anything out of the ordinary, be sure to raise the alarm.’

Yin laughed. ‘If I find any ghosts or foxes, I’ll catch one to show you.’ And in he went.

The paths were overgrown with long grass and tangled weeds. It was the first quarter of the month, and the crescent moon gave off just enough light for him to make out the gateways and doors. He groped his way forwards until he found himself standing before the building that stood at the rear of the main compound. He climbed on to the terrace and thought it seemed a delightful place to take a little nap. The slender arc of the moon shining in the western sky seemed to hold the hills in its mouth. He sat there a long while without observing anything unusual, and began to smile to himself at the foolish rumours about the place being haunted. Spreading his mat, and choosing a stone for a pillow, he lay there gazing up at the constellations of the Cowherd and the Spinning Maid in the night sky.

By the end of the first watch, he was just beginning to doze off when he heard the patter of footsteps from below, and a servant-girl appeared, carrying a lotus-shaped lantern. The sight of Yin seemed to startle her and she made as if to flee, calling out to someone behind her, 'There's a strange-looking man here!'

'Who is it?' replied a voice.

'I don't know.'

Presently an old gentleman appeared and, approaching Yin, scrutinized him.

'Why, that is the future President Yin! He is fast asleep. We can carry on as planned. He is a broad-minded fellow and will not take offence.'

The old man led the maid on into the building, where they threw open all the doors. After a while a great many guests started arriving, and the upper rooms were as brightly lit as if it had been broad daylight.

Yin tossed and turned on the terrace where he lay. Then he sneezed. The old man, hearing that he was awake, came out and knelt down by his side.

'My daughter, sir, is being given in marriage tonight. I had no idea that Your Excellency would be here, and crave your indulgence.'

Yin rose to his feet and made the old man do likewise. 'I was not aware that a wedding was taking place tonight. I regret I have brought no gift with me.'

'Your very presence is gift enough,' replied the old man graciously, 'and will help to ward off noxious influences. Would you be so kind as to honour us further with your company now?'

Yin assented. Entering the building, he looked around him at the splendid feast that had been prepared. A woman of about forty, whom the old gentleman introduced as his wife, came out to welcome him, and Yin made her a bow. Then the sound of festive pipes was heard, and someone came rushing in, crying, 'He has arrived!'

The old man hurried out to receive his future son-in-law, and Yin remained standing where he was in expectation. After a little while, a bevy of servants bearing gauze lanterns ushered in the groom, a handsome young man of seventeen or eighteen, of a most distinguished appearance and prepossessing bearing. The old gentleman bade him pay his respects to the guest of honour, and the young man turned to Yin, whom he took to be some sort of Master of Ceremonies, and bowed to him in the appropriate fashion. Then the old man and the groom exchanged formal courtesies, and when these were completed, they took their seats. Presently a throng of finely attired serving-maids came forward, with choice wines and steaming dishes of meat. Jade bowls and golden goblets glistened on the tables. When the wine had been round several times, the old gentleman dispatched one of the maids to summon the bride. The maid departed on her errand, but when she had been gone a long while and still there was no sign of his daughter, the old man himself eventually rose from his seat and, lifting the portière, went into the inner apartments to chivvy her along. At last several maids and serving-women ushered in the bride, to the sound of tinkling jade pendants, and the scent of musk and orchid wafted through the room. Obedient to her father's instructions, she curtsied to the senior guests and then took her seat by her mother's side. Yin could see from a glance that beneath the kingfisher-feather ornaments she was a young woman of extraordinary beauty.

They were drinking from large goblets of solid gold, each of which held well over a pint, and Yin thought to himself that one of these would be an ideal proof of his adventure that night. So he hid one in his sleeve, to show his friends on his return, then slumped across the table, pretending to have been overpowered by the wine.

'His Excellency is drunk,' they remarked.

A little later, Yin heard the groom take his leave, and as the pipes started up again, all the guests began trooping downstairs.

The old gentleman came to gather up his golden goblets, and noticed that one of them was missing. He searched for it to no avail. Someone suggested their sleeping guest as the culprit, but the old gentleman promptly bid him be silent, for fear that Yin might hear.

After a while, when all was still within and without, Yin rose from the table. The lamps had all been extinguished and it was dark, but the aroma of the food and the fumes of wine still lingered in the hall. As he made his way slowly out of the building, and felt inside his sleeve for the golden goblet, which was still safely hidden, the first light of dawn glimmered in the eastern sky.

He reached the entrance of the estate to find his friends still waiting outside. They had stayed there all night, in case he should try to trick them by coming out and going back in again early in the morning. He took the goblet from his sleeve and showed it to them. In utter amazement they asked him how he had come by it, whereupon he told them the whole story. They knew how poor he was, and that he was most unlikely to have owned such a valuable object himself, and so were obliged to believe him.

Some years later, Yin passed his final examination and obtained the degree of Doctor or jìnshi, after which he was appointed to a post in Feiqiu. A wealthy gentleman of the district by the name of Zhu gave a banquet in his honour, and ordered his large golden goblets to be brought out for the occasion. They were a long time coming, and as the company waited a young servant came up and whispered something to the master of the household, who instantly flew into a rage. Presently the goblets were brought in, and Zhu urged his guests to drink. To his astonishment, Yin at once recognized the shape and pattern of the goblets as being identical with the one he had 'kept' from the fox wedding. He asked his host where they had been made.

'I had eight of them,' was the reply. 'An ancestor of mine was a high-ranking mandarin in Peking and had them made by a master goldsmith of the time. They have been in my family for generations, but it is a long while since I last had them taken out of storage. When I knew we would have the honour of your company today, I told my man to open the box, and it turns out there are only seven left! I would have suspected one of my household of stealing it, but apparently there was ten years' dust on the seals and the box was untampered with. It baffles me how this can have happened.'

'The thing must have grown wings and flown away of its own accord!' quipped Yin with a laugh. 'But seeing that you have lost an heirloom, I feel I must help you replace it. I myself have a goblet, sir, very similar to this set of yours. Allow me to make you a present of it.'

When the meal was over, he returned to his official residence, and taking out his own goblet, sent it round straightaway to Zhu's house. When he inspected it, Zhu was absolutely amazed. He went to thank Yin in person, and when he asked him where he had acquired the goblet, Yin told him the whole story.

Which all goes to show that although foxes may be capable of getting hold of objects from a very long way away, they do not hold on to them for ever.

Wailing Ghosts

At the time of the Xie Qian troubles in Shandong, the great residences of the nobility were all commandeered by the rebels. The mansion of Education Commissioner Wang Qixiang accommodated a particularly large number of them. When the government troops eventually retook the town and massacred the rebels, every porch was strewn with corpses. Blood flowed from every doorway.

When Commissioner Wang returned, he gave orders that all the corpses were to be removed from his home and the blood washed away, so that he could once more take up residence. In the days that followed, he frequently saw ghosts in broad day light, and during the night ghostly will- o'- the- wisp flickerings of light beneath his bed. He heard the voices of ghosts wailing in various corners of the house.

One day, a young gentleman by the name of Wang Gaodi who had come to stay with the Commissioner heard a little voice crying beneath his bed, 'Gaodi! Gaodi!'

Then the voice grew louder. 'I died a cruel death!'

The voice began sobbing, and was soon joined by ghosts throughout the house.

The Commissioner himself heard it and came with his sword.

'Do you not know who I am?' he declared loudly. 'I am Education Commissioner Wang.'

The ghostly voices merely sneered at this and laughed through their noses, whereupon the Commissioner gave orders for a lengthy ritual to be immediately performed for all departed souls on land and sea, in the course of which Buddhist bonzes and Taoist priests prayed for the liberation of his supernatural tenants from their torments. That night they put out food for the ghosts, and will- o'- the- wisp lights could be seen flickering across the ground.

Now before any of these events, a gate- man, also named Wang, had fallen gravely ill, and had been lying unconscious for several days. The night of the ritual he suddenly seemed to regain consciousness, and stretched his limbs. When his wife brought him some food, he said to her, 'The Master put some food out in the courtyard – I've no idea why! Anyway I was out there eating with the others, and I've only just finished, so I'm not that hungry.'

From that day, the hauntings ceased.

Does this mean that the banging of cymbals and gongs, the beating of bells and drums, and other esoteric practices for the release of wandering souls are necessarily efficacious?

Scorched Moth the Taoist

The household of Hanlin Academician Dong was troubled by fox-spirits. Tiles, pebbles and brick shards were liable to fly around the house like hailstones at any moment, and his family and household were forever having to take shelter and wait for the disturbances to abate before they dared carry on with their daily duties. Dong himself was so affected by this state of affairs that he rented a residence belonging to Under-Secretary Sun, and moved there to avoid his troubles. But the fox-spirits merely followed him.

One day when he was on duty at court and described this strange phenomenon to his colleagues, a senior minister mentioned a certain Taoist master from the north-east by the name of Jiao Ming – Scorched Moth – who lived in the Inner Manchu City and issued exorcist spells and talismans reputed for their efficacy. Dong paid the man a personal call and requested his aid, whereupon the Master wrote out some charms in cinnabar-red ink and told Dong to paste them on his wall. The foxes were unperturbed by these measures, however, and continued to hurl things around with greater vigour than ever. Dong reported back to the Taoist, who was angered by this apparent failure of his charms and came in person to Dong's house, where he set up an altar and performed a full rite of exorcism. Suddenly they beheld a huge fox crouching on the ground before the altar. Dong's household had suffered long from this creature's antics, and the servants felt a deep-seated sense of grievance towards it. One of the maids went up to it to deal it a blow, only to fall dead to the ground.

'This is a vicious beast!' exclaimed the Taoist. 'Even I could not subdue it! This girl was very foolish to provoke it.' He continued, 'Nonetheless, we can now use her to question the fox.'

Pointing his index finger and middle finger at the maid, he pronounced certain spells, and suddenly she rose from the ground and knelt before him. The Taoist asked her where she hailed from.

'I come from the Western Regions,' replied the maid, in a voice that was clearly not her own but that of the fox. 'We have been here in the capital for eighteen generations.'

'How dare creatures such as you dwell in the proximity of His Imperial Majesty? Off with you at once!'

The fox-voice was silent, and the Taoist thumped the altar-table angrily. 'How dare you disobey my orders? Delay a moment longer, and my magic powers will work on you harshly!'

The fox shrank back fearfully, indicating his submission, and the Taoist urged him once more to be gone. Meanwhile the maid had fallen to the ground again, dead to the world. It was a long while before she regained consciousness.

All of a sudden they saw four or five white lumps of some strange substance go bouncing like balls one after the other along the eaves of the building, until they were all gone. Then peace finally reigned in the Dong household.

The Giant Turtle

An elderly gentleman called Zhang, a native of the western region of Jin, was about to give away his daughter in marriage, and took his family with him by boat on a trip to the South, having decided to purchase there all that was necessary for her trousseau. When the boat arrived at Gold Mountain, he went ahead across the river, leaving his family on board and warning them not to fry any strong-smelling meat during his absence, for fear of provoking the turtle-demon that lurked in the river. This vicious creature would be sure to come out if it smelled meat cooking, and would destroy the boat and eat alive anyone on board. It had been wreaking havoc in the area for a long while.

Once the old man had left, his family quite forgot his words of caution, lit a fire on deck and began to cook meat on it. All of a sudden a great wave arose, overturning their boat and drowning both Zhang's wife and daughter. When Zhang returned, he was grief-stricken at their deaths. He climbed up to the monastery on Gold Mountain and called on the monks there, asking them for information about the turtle's strange ways, so that he could plan his revenge. The monks were appalled at his intentions.

'We live with the turtle every day, in constant fear of the devastation it is capable of causing. All we can do is worship it and pray to it not to fly into a rage. From time to time we slaughter animals, cut them in half and throw them into the river. The turtle jumps out of the water, gulps them down and disappears. No one would be so crazy as to try to seek revenge!'

As he listened to the monks' words, Zhang was already forming his plan. He recruited a local blacksmith, who set up a furnace on the hillside above the river and smelted a large lump of iron, over a hundred catties in weight. Zhang then ascertained the turtle's exact hiding place and hired a number of strong men to lift up the red-hot molten iron with a great pair of tongs and hurl it into the river. True to form, the turtle leaped out of the water, gulped down the molten metal and plunged back into the river. Minutes later, mountainous waves came boiling to the water's surface. Then, in an instant, the river became calm and the turtle could be seen floating dead on the water.

Travellers and monks alike rejoiced at the turtle's death. They built a temple to old man Zhang, erected a statue of him inside it and worshipped him as a water god. When they prayed to him, their wishes were always fulfilled.

A Fatal Joke

The schoolmaster Sun Jingxia once told this story.

A certain fellow of the locality, let us call him 'X', was killed by bandits during one of their raids. His head flopped down on to his chest. When the bandits had gone and the family came to recover the corpse for burial, they detected the faintest trace of breathing, and on closer examination saw that the man's windpipe was not quite severed. A finger's breadth remained. So they carried him home, supporting the head carefully, and after a day and a night, he began to make a moaning noise. They fed him minute quantities of food with a spoon and chopsticks, and after six months he was fully recovered.

Ten years later, he was sitting talking with two or three of his friends when one of them cracked a hilarious joke and they all burst out laughing. 'X' was rocking backwards and forwards in a fit of hysterical laughter, when suddenly the old sword-wound burst open and his head fell to the ground in a pool of blood. His friends examined him, and this time he was well and truly dead.

His father decided to bring charges against the man who had told the joke. But the joker's friends collected some money together and succeeded in buying him off. The father buried his son and dropped the charges.

A Prank

A certain fellow of my home district, a well-known prankster and libertine, was out one day strolling in the countryside when he saw a young girl approaching on a pony.

‘I’ll get a laugh out of her, see if I don’t!’ he called out to his companions.

They were sceptical of his chances of success and wagered a banquet on it, even as he hurried forward in front of the girl’s pony and cried out loudly, ‘I want to die! I want to die ...’

He took hold of a tall millet stalk that was growing over a nearby wall and, bending it so that it projected a foot into the road, untied the sash of his gown and threw it over the stalk, making a noose in it and slipping it round his neck, as if to hang himself. As she came closer, the girl laughed at him, and by now his friends were also in fits. The girl then rode on into the distance, but the man still did not move, which caused his friends to laugh all the more. Presently they went up and looked at him: his tongue was protruding from his mouth, his eyes were closed. He was quite lifeless.

Strange that a man could succeed in hanging himself from a millet stalk. Let this be a warning to libertines and pranksters.

King of the Nine Mountains

There was a certain gentleman by the name of Li from the town of Caozhou, an official scholar of the town, whose family had always been well off, though their residence had never been extensive. The garden behind their house, of an acre or two, had been largely abandoned.

One day, an old man arrived at the house, inquiring about a place to rent. He said he was willing to spend as much as a hundred taels, but Li declined, arguing that he had insufficient space.

‘Please accept my offer,’ pleaded the old man. ‘I will cause you no trouble whatsoever.’

Li did not quite understand what he meant by this, but finally agreed to accept the money and see what happened.

A day later, the local people saw carriages and horses and a throng of people streaming into the garden behind Li’s residence. They found it hard to believe that the place could accommodate so many, and asked Li what was going on. He himself was quite at a loss to explain, and hurried in to investigate, but found no trace of anything.

A few days later, the old man called on him again.

‘I have enjoyed your hospitality already for several days and nights,’ he said. ‘Things have been very hectic. We have been so busy settling in, I am afraid we simply have not had time to entertain you as we should have done. Today I have asked my daughters to prepare a little meal, and I hope you will honour us with your presence.’

Li accepted the invitation and followed the old man into the garden, where this time he beheld a newly constructed range of most splendid and imposing buildings. They entered one of these, the interior of which was most elegantly appointed. Wine was being heated in a cauldron out on the verandah, while the delicate aroma of tea emanated from the kitchen. Presently wine and food were served, all of the finest quality and savour. Li could hear and see countless young people coming and going in the courtyard, and he heard the voices of girls chattering and laughing behind gauze curtains. Altogether he estimated that, including family and servants, there must have been over a thousand people living in the garden.

Li knew they must all be foxes. When the meal was finished, he returned home and secretly resolved to find a way of killing them. Every time he went to market he bought a quantity of saltpetre, until he had accumulated several hundred catties of the stuff, which he put down everywhere in the garden. He set light to it, and the flames leaped up into the night sky, spreading a cloud of smoke like a great black mushroom. The pungent odour of the smoke and the choking particles of burning soot prevented anyone from getting close, and all that could be heard was the deafening din of a thousand screaming voices. When the fire had finally burned itself out and Li went into the garden, he saw the bodies of dead foxes lying everywhere, countless numbers of them, charred beyond recognition. He was still gazing at them when the old man came in from outside, an expression of utter devastation and grief on his face.

‘What harm did we ever do you?’ he reproached Li. ‘We paid you a hundred taels – far more than it was worth – to rent your ruin of a garden. How could you be so cruel as to destroy every last member of my family? It is a terrible thing that you have done, and we will most certainly be revenged!’

And with those bitter words of anger, he took his leave.

Li was concerned that he would cause trouble. But a year went by without any strange or untoward occurrence.

It was the first year of the reign of the Manchu Emperor Shunzhi. There were hordes of bandits up in the hills, who formed huge roving companies which the authorities were quite powerless to apprehend. Li had numerous dependants and was especially concerned at the disturbances.

Then, one day, a fortune-teller arrived in the town, calling himself the Old Man of the Southern Mountain. He claimed to be able to see into the future with the utmost accuracy, and soon became something of a local celebrity. Li sent for him and asked him to read his Eight Astrological Signs. The old man did so, and then rose hurriedly to his feet with a gesture of reverence.

'What harm did we ever do you?'

‘You, sir, are a true lord, an emperor among men!’

Li was flabbergasted and thought that perhaps the old man was making it all up. But he insisted that he was telling the truth, and Li was almost tempted to believe it himself.

‘But I am a nobody,’ he said. ‘Tell me: when did a man ever receive the Mandate of Heaven and become Emperor in this way – with his own bare hands?’

‘Why,’ declared the old man, ‘throughout history! Our Emperors have always come from the ranks of the common people. Which founder of a dynasty was ever born Son of Heaven?’

Now Li, who was beginning to get carried away, drew close to the fortune-teller and asked him for further guidance. The old man declared that he himself would be willing to serve as Li’s Chief Marshal, just as the great wizard and strategist Zhuge Liang had once served the Pretender Liu Bei in the time of the Three Kingdoms. Li was to make ready large quantities of suits of armour and bows and crossbows. When Li expressed doubts that anyone would rally to his side, the old man replied, ‘Allow me to work for you in the hills, sir. Let me forge links and win men over. Once word is out that you are indeed the true Son of Heaven, have no fear, the fighters of the hills will flock to you.’

Li was overjoyed, and instructed the old man to do as he proposed. He took out all the gold he had and gave orders for the necessary quantity of suits of armour to be made. Several days later, the old man was back.

‘Thanks principally to Your Majesty’s great aura of blessing, and in some negligible part to my own paltry abilities as an orator, on every hill the men are now thronging to join your cause and rallying to your banner.’

Sure enough, ten days later, a large body of men came in person to swear their allegiance to the new Son of Heaven and to the Old Man of the Southern Mountain whom they acknowledged as their Supreme Marshal. They set up a great standard, with a forest of brightly coloured pennants fluttering in the breeze, and from their stockade on one of the hills they lorded it over the region.

The District Magistrate led out a force to quell this rebellion, and the rebels under the command of the old fortune-teller inflicted a crushing defeat on the government troops. The Magistrate took fright and sent for urgent reinforcements from the Prefect. The Old Marshal harassed these fresh troops, ambushing and overwhelming them, killing large numbers, including several of their commanding officers. The rebels were now more widely feared than ever. They numbered ten thousand, and Li formally proclaimed himself the King of the Nine Mountains, while his Marshal was given the honorific title of Lord Marshal Protector of the Realm. The old man now reckoned his troops were short of horses, and since it so happened that the authorities in the capital were sending some horses under escort to the south, he dispatched some men to intercept the convoy and seize the horses. The success of this operation increased the prestige of the King of the Nine Mountains still further. He took his ease in his mountain lair, well satisfied with himself and considering it now merely a matter of time before he was officially installed on the Dragon Throne.

The Governor of Shandong Province now decided, mainly on account of the seizure of the horses, to launch a large-scale expedition to quell the rebellion once and for all. He received a report from the Prefect of Yanzhou, and sent large numbers of crack troops, who were to co-ordinate with detachments from the six local circuits and converge on the rebel stronghold from all sides. The King of the Nine Mountains became alarmed and summoned his Marshal for a strategic consultation, only to find that the old man had vanished. The 'King' was truly at his wits' end. He climbed to the top of one of the mountains of his 'domain' and looked down on the government forces and their standards, which stretched along every valley and on every hilltop.

'Now I see,' he declared sombrely, 'how great is the might of the Emperor's court!'

His stronghold was destroyed, the King himself was captured, his wife and entire family were executed. Only then did Li understand that the Marshal was the old fox, taking his revenge for the destruction of his own fox-family.

Butterfly

Luo Zifu was born in Bin County, and lost both his parents at an early age. When he was eight or nine years old he went to live with his Uncle Daye, a high official in the Imperial College and an immensely wealthy man. Daye had no sons of his own and came to love Luo as if he were his own child.

When the boy was fourteen, he fell in with bad company and became a regular frequenter of the local pleasure-houses. A famous Nanking courtesan happened to be in Bin County at the time, and the young Luo became hopelessly infatuated with her. When she returned to Nanking, he ran away with her and lived with her there in her establishment for a good six months – by which time his money was all gone and the other girls had begun to mock him mercilessly, though they still tolerated his presence.

Then he contracted syphilis and broke out in suppurating sores, which left stains on the bedding, and they finally drove him from the house. He took to begging in the streets, where the passers-by shunned him. He began to dread the thought of dying so far from home, and one day set off begging his way back to Shaanxi, covering ten or so miles a day, until eventually he came to the borders of Bin County. His filthy rags and foul, pus-covered body made him too ashamed to go any further into his old neighbourhood, and instead he hobbled about on the outskirts of town.

Towards evening, he was stumbling towards a temple in the hills, seeking shelter for the night, when he encountered a young woman of a quite unearthly beauty, who came up to him and asked him where he was going. He told her his whole story.

‘I myself have renounced the world,’ was her response. ‘I live here in a cave in the hills. You are welcome to stay with me. Here at least you will be safe from tigers and wolves.’

Luo followed her joyfully, and together they walked deeper into the hills. Presently he found himself at the entrance to a grotto, inside which flowed a stream, with a stone bridge leading over it. A few steps further and they came to two chambers hollowed out of the rock, both of them brightly lit, but with no sign anywhere of either candle or lamp. The girl bid Luo remove his rags and bathe in the waters of the stream.

‘Wash,’ she said, ‘and your sores will all be healed.’

She drew apart the bed- curtains and made up a bed for him, dusting off the quilt.

‘Sleep now,’ she said, ‘and I will make you a pair of trousers.’

She brought in what looked like a large plantain leaf and began cutting it to shape. He lay there watching her, and in a very short while the trousers were made and placed folded on the bed.

‘You can wear these in the morning.’

She lay down on a couch opposite.

After bathing in the stream, Luo felt all the pain go out of his sores, and when he awoke during the night and touched them, they had already dried and hardened into thick scabs. In the morning he rose, wondering if he would truly be able to wear the plantain- leaf trousers. When he took them in his hands, he found that they were wonderfully smooth, like green satin.

In a little while, breakfast was prepared. The young woman brought more leaves from the mountainside. She said that they were pancakes, and they ate them, and sure enough they were pancakes. She cut the shapes of poultry and fish from the leaves and cooked them, and they made a delicious meal. In the corner of the room stood a vat filled with fine wine, from which they drank, and when the supply ran out she merely replenished it with water from the stream.

In a few days, when all his sores and scabs were gone, he went up to her and begged her to share his bed.

‘Silly boy!’ she cried. ‘No sooner cured than you go losing your head again!’

‘I only want to repay your kindness ...’

They had much pleasure together that night.

Time passed, and one day another young woman came into the grotto and greeted them with a broad grin.

‘Why, my dear wicked little Butterfly!’ (for such was the girl’s name). ‘You do seem to be having a good time! And when did this cosy little idyll of yours begin, pray?’

‘It’s been such an age since you last visited, dearest Sister Flower!’ returned Butterfly, with a teasing smile. ‘What Fair Wind of Love blows you here today? And have you had your little baby boy yet?’

‘Actually I had a girl ...’

‘What a doll factory you are!’ quipped Butterfly. ‘Didn’t you bring her with you?’

‘She’s only just this minute stopped crying and fallen asleep.’

Flower sat down with them and drank her fill of wine.

‘This young man must have burned some very special incense to be so lucky,’ she remarked, looking at Luo. He in turn studied her. She was a beautiful young woman in her early twenties, and the susceptible young man was instantly smitten. He peeled a fruit and ‘accidentally’ dropped it under the table. Bending down to retrieve it, he gave the tip of one of her tiny embroidered slippers a little pinch. She turned away and smiled, pretending not to have noticed. Luo, who was now totally entranced and more than a little aroused, noticed all of a sudden that his gown and trousers were growing cold, and when he looked down at them they had turned into withered leaves. Horrified, he sat primly upright for a moment, and slowly they reverted to their former soft, silken appearance. He was secretly relieved that neither of the girls seemed to have noticed anything.

A little later, they were still drinking together when he let his finger stray to the palm of Flower’s dainty little hand. Flower carried on laughing and smiling, as if nothing had happened. And then suddenly, to his horror, it happened a second time: silk was transformed to leaf, and leaf back to silk. He had learned his lesson this time, and resolved to behave himself.

‘Your young man is rather naughty!’ said Flower, with a smile. ‘If you weren’t such a jealous jar of vinegar, he’d be roaming all over the place!’

'You faithless boy!' quipped Butterfly. 'You deserve to freeze to death!'

She and Flower both laughed and clapped their hands.

'My little girl's awake again,' said Flower, rising from her seat. 'She'll hurt herself crying like that.'

'Hark at you,' said Butterfly, 'leading strange men astray and neglecting your own child!' Flower left them, and Luo was afraid he would be subjected to mockery and recrimination from Butterfly. But she was as delightful as ever.

The days passed, and, as autumn turned to winter, the cold wind and frost stripped the trees bare. Butterfly gathered the fallen leaves and began storing them for food to see them through the winter. She noticed Luo shivering, and went to the entrance of the grotto, where she gathered white clouds with which to line a padded gown for him. When it was made, it was warm as silk, and the padding was light and soft as fresh cotton floss.

A year later, she gave birth to a son, a clever, handsome child with whom Luo loved to pass the days playing in the grotto. But, as time went by, he began to pine for home and begged Butterfly to return with him.

'I cannot go,' she told him. 'But you go if you must.'

A further two or three years went by. The boy grew, and they betrothed him to Flower's little daughter. Luo was now constantly thinking of his old uncle, Daye.

'The old man is strong and well,' Butterfly assured him. 'You do not need to worry on his behalf. Wait until your boy is married. Then you can go.'

She would sit in the grotto and write lessons on leaves for their son, who mastered them at a single glance.

'Our son has a happy destiny,' she said to Luo. 'If he goes into the human world, he will certainly rise to great heights.'

When the boy was fourteen, Flower came with her daughter, dressed in all her finery. She had grown into a radiantly beautiful young woman. She and Butterfly's son were very happy to be married, and the whole family held a feast to celebrate their union.

Butterfly sang a song, tapping out the rhythm with her hairpin:

A fine son have I,

Why should I yearn

For pomp and splendour?

A fine daughter is mine,

Why should I long

For silken luxury?

Tonight we are gathered

To sing and be merry.

For you, dear lad, a parting cup!

For you, a plate of food!

Flower took her leave. The young couple made their home in the stone chamber opposite, and the young bride waited dutifully on Butterfly as if she were her own mother.

It was not long before Luo started talking again of returning home.

‘You will always be a mortal,’ said Butterfly. ‘It is in your bones, and in our son’s. He, too, belongs in the world of men. Take him with you. I do not wish to blight his days.’

The young bride wanted to say a last farewell to her mother, and Flower came to visit them. Both she and her husband were loth to leave their mothers, and their eyes brimmed with tears.

‘Go for a while,’ said the women, by way of comforting them. ‘You can always come back later.’

Butterfly cut out a leaf and made a donkey, and the three of them, Luo and the young couple, climbed on to the beast and rode away upon it.

Luo’s uncle, Daye, was by now an old man and retired from public life. He thought that his adopted son had died. And now, out of the blue, there he was, with a son of his own and a beautiful daughter-in-law! He rejoiced as if he had come upon some precious treasure. The moment they entered his house, their silken clothes all turned once more into crumbling plantain leaves, while the 'cotton padding' drifted up into the sky. They dressed themselves in new, more ordinary clothes.

As time went by, Luo pined for Butterfly, and he went in search of her with his son. But the path through the hills was strewn with yellow leaves, and the entrance to the grotto was lost in the mist. The two of them returned weeping from their quest.

The Black Beast

My friend's grandfather Li Jingyi once told the following story.

A certain gentleman was picnicking on a mountainside near the city of Shenyang when he looked down and saw a tiger come walking by, carrying something in its mouth. The tiger dug a hole and buried whatever it was in the ground. When he had gone, the gentleman told his men to find out what it was the tiger had buried. They came back to inform him that it was a deer, and he bade them retrieve the dead animal and fill up the hole.

Later the tiger returned, followed this time by a shaggy black beast. The tiger went in front as if it were politely escorting an esteemed guest. When the two animals reached the hole, the black beast squatted to one side and watched intently while the tiger felt in the earth with his paws, only to discover that the deer was no longer there. The tiger lay there prostrate and trembling, not daring to move. The black beast, thinking that the tiger had told a lie, flew into a fury and struck the tiger on the forehead with its paw. The tiger died immediately, and the black beast went away.

The Stone Bowl

A certain gentleman by the name of Yin Tu'nan, of Wuchang, possessed a villa that he rented out to a young scholar. Half a year passed and he never once had occasion to call on this young tenant of his. Then one day he chanced to see him outside the entrance to the compound, and observing that, despite the tenant's evident youth, he had the fastidious manner and elegant accoutrements of a person of refinement, Yin approached him and engaged him in conversation. He found him indeed to be a most charming and cultivated person. Clearly this was no ordinary lodger.

Returning home, Yin mentioned the encounter to his wife, who sent over one of her own maids to spy out the land, on the pretext of delivering a gift. The maid discovered a young lady in the young man's apartment, of a breathtaking beauty that surpassed (as she put it) that of a fairy, while the living quarters, she observed to her mistress, were furnished with an extraordinary variety of plants, ornamental stones, rare clothes and assorted curios, things such as she had never before set eyes on.

Yin was intrigued to find out exactly what sort of person this young man could be, and went himself to the villa to pay him a visit. It so happened the man was out, but the following day he returned Yin's visit and presented his name card. Yin read on the card that his name was Yu De, but when Yin pressed Yu De for further details of his background, he became extremely vague.

'I am happy to make your acquaintance, sir. Trust me, I am no robber, nor am I a fugitive from justice. But beyond that, I am surely not obliged to divulge further particulars of my identity.'

Yin apologized for his incivility and set wine and food before his guest, whereupon they dined together in a most convivial manner until late in the evening, when two dark-skinned servants came with horses and lanterns to fetch their young master home.

The following day, he sent Yin a note inviting him over to the villa for a return visit. When Yin arrived, he observed that the walls of the room in which he was received were lined with a glossy paper that shone like the surface of a mirror, while fumes of some exotic incense smouldered from a golden censer fashioned in the shape of a lion. Beside the censer stood a vase of dark- green jade containing four feathers – two phoenix feathers, two peacock – each of them over two feet in length. In another vase, made of pure crystal, was a branch of some flowering tree which he could not identify, also about two feet long, covered with pink blossoms and trailing down over the edge of the little table on which it stood. The densely clustered flowers, still in bud, were admirably set off by the sparsity of leaves. They resembled butterflies moistened by the morning dew, resting with closed wings on the branch, to which they were attached by delicate antenna- like tendrils.

The dinner served consisted of eight dishes, each one a gastronomic delicacy. After dinner, the host ordered his servant to ‘sound the drum for the flowers’ and to commence the drinking game. The drum duly sounded, and as it did so the flowers on the branch began to open tremulously, spreading their ‘butterfly wings’ very slowly one by one. And then as the drumming ceased, on the final solemn beat, the tendrils of one flower detached themselves from the branch and became a butterfly, fluttering through the air and alighting on Yin’s gown. With a laugh, Yu poured his guest a large goblet of wine, and when Yin had drained the goblet dry, the butterfly flew away. An instant later the drumming recommenced, and this time when it ceased two butterflies flew up into the air and settled on Yu’s cap. He laughed again.

And he downed two goblets. At the third drumming, a veritable shower of butterfly- flowers began to fall through the air, fluttering here and there and eventually settling in large numbers on the gowns of both men. The pageboy drummer smiled and thrust out his fingers twice, in the manner of drinking games: once for Yin, and it came to nine fingers; once for Yu, and it came to four. Yin was already somewhat the worse for drink and was unable to down his quota. He managed to knock back three goblets, and then got down from the table, excused himself and stumbled home. His evening’s entertainment had only served to intensify his curiosity. There was indeed something very unusual about his lodger.

Yu seldom socialized, and spent most of his time shut up at home in the villa, never going out into society even for occasions such as funerals or weddings. Yin told his friends of his own strange experience and word soon got around, with the result that many of them competed to make Yu's acquaintance, and the carriages of the local nobility were often to be seen at the doors of the villa. Yu found this attention more and more irksome, and one day he suddenly took his leave of Yin and went away altogether. After his departure, Yin inspected the villa and found the interior of the building quite empty. It had been left spotlessly clean and tidy. Outside, at the foot of the stone steps leading up to the terrace, was a pile of 'candle tears', the waxen accumulation, no doubt, of the revels of many evenings. Tattered curtains still hung in the windows, and there seemed to be the marks of fingers still visible on the fabric. Behind the villa, Yin found a white stone bowl, about a gallon in capacity, which he took home with him, filled with water and used for his goldfish. A year later, he was surprised to see that the water in the bowl was still as clear as it had been on the very first day. Then, one day, a servant was moving a rock and accidentally broke a piece out of the rim of the bowl. But somehow, despite the break, the water stayed intact within the bowl, and when Yin examined it, it seemed to all intents and purposes whole. He passed his hand along the edge of the break, which felt strangely soft. When he put his hand inside the bowl, water came trickling out along the crack, but when he withdrew his hand, water filled the bowl as before.

Throughout the winter months, the water in the bowl never froze. And then one night it turned into a solid block of crystal. But the fish could still be seen swimming around inside it.

Yin was afraid that others might get to know of this strange bowl, and he kept it in a secret room, telling only his own children and their husbands and wives. But, with time, word got out and everyone was at his door wanting to see and touch this marvel.

The night before the festival of the winter solstice, the crystal block suddenly melted and water leaked from the bowl, leaving a large dark stain on the floor. Of the goldfish there was no sign whatsoever. Only the fragments of the broken bowl remained.

One day, a Taoist came knocking at the door and asked to see the bowl. Yin brought out the broken pieces to show him.

‘This,’ said the Taoist, ‘was once a water vessel from the Dragon King’s Underwater Palace.’

Yin told him how it had been broken, and how it had continued to hold water.

‘That is the spirit of the bowl at work,’ commented the Taoist, entreating Yin to give him a piece of it. Yin asked him why he wanted it.

‘By pounding such a fragment into a powder,’ he replied, ‘I can make a drug that will give everlasting life.’

Yin gave him a piece, and the Taoist thanked him and went on his way.

像约翰和我这样的普通人居然会租一处祖传老宅来消夏，这是很不寻常的事情。

一幢殖民风格的别墅，一座世袭的房产，我愿称之为闹鬼的房子，由此获得一种浪漫主义的至喜体验——然而我又怎能对命运要求太多！

不过，我还是要骄傲地说这座房子确有古怪之处。

否则，它的租金为何如此便宜？又为何会空置如此之久？

当然，约翰会嘲笑我，这是婚姻中可以预料到的事情。

约翰极其现实。他对信仰毫无耐心，对迷信避之不及，并且公开嘲笑一切看不见摸不着且没有具体形象的东西。

约翰是一位医生，也许（当然我不会对任何一个活人这么说，但这是一张没有生命的纸，我用它来放松精神）——也许这就是我无法快速康复的原因之一。

你看，他不相信我病了！

那我又能做什么呢？

当一位权威的医生，同时也是你的丈夫，向亲朋好友保证你并没有什么严重的疾病，只不过是暂时性的精神抑郁——轻微情绪激动的倾向——你又能怎么做呢？

我的哥哥也是一名医生，同样很权威，他给出了一样的说辞。

所以我服用磷酸盐或亚磷酸盐——管它是哪一种呢——吃补药，进行康复旅行，呼吸新鲜空气，进行适当锻炼，而“工作”在康复之前是被绝对禁止的。

我并不同意他们的理念。

而我相信适宜的工作会带来兴奋和变化，将对我有益。

然而我又能做些什么呢？

我确实无视他们的意见，写作过一段时间。可这件事确实极大地

消耗了我——我需要精心隐藏，否则就要面对他们的强烈反对。

有时候我会想，像我这种状况如果能少一些反对，多一些社交和激励……可是约翰说，对我来讲最坏的事情就是去琢磨自己的状况，我也承认这总让我心绪不佳。

所以先不去管它，我来聊聊这幢房子吧。

这地方的确漂亮！房子孤零零的，远离大路，离村庄有三英里之遥。它令我想起了曾经读到过的英伦建筑，有篱笆，有高墙，有上锁的大门，还有很多为园丁和其他仆人准备的独栋小屋。

还有个宜人的花园！我从未见过这样的花园——巨大而阴凉，里面处处是树篱环绕的小径，小径两旁是长长的葡萄藤架，架下有一些座椅。

也有几处温室，只是完全毁坏了。

我想，这里可能存在着某种法律纠纷，继承人和共同继承人的问题。总之，出于某种原因，这个地方已经空置多年。

恐怕，这助长了我身上的幽灵之气。我有些害怕，但并不困扰——这幢房子有某种异样，我能感觉到。

一个月光朗照的夜晚，我甚至对约翰也说过这样的话，但他说我感受到的只不过是一阵气流而已，旋即便关上了窗子。

我时而会对约翰产生无名火。我确信自己过去从未如此敏感。我想这是我的精神状况所致。

但是约翰说，如果我放任自己这样感觉，我就是疏于恰当的自制。所以我很辛苦地控制自己——至少在他面前。而这让我感到疲惫至极。

我一点儿都不喜欢我们的房间。我想住楼下的那间，它对着走廊，窗户镶满玫瑰花，还挂着那么美丽的老式印花棉布帘子！可是约翰不愿意。

他说那个房间只有一个窗户，而且放不下两张床；假如他想分屋睡，隔壁也没有房间。

他非常细致体贴，除非有特别的指令，他也几乎不让我走动。

我有一份精确到小时的日常作息时间表。他照顾好我的一切，如果不加倍珍惜，真会觉得自己是卑鄙的忘恩负义之人。

约翰说，来这里纯粹是为了我，我应该好好休息，尽力多呼吸新鲜空气。“亲爱的，你的运动量取决于你的体力，”他说，“你的进食量也多多少少取决于你的胃口，而新鲜空气你随时都能呼吸到。”所以

我们住进了顶层的那间育婴室。

那是一间通风很好的大房间，几乎占据了整个楼层，四面都是窗子，空气和阳光十分充沛。我判断，它最初是一间育婴室，后来变成了游戏室和健身房，因为窗子装有保护小孩的栏杆，墙上还有一些圆环和类似的东西。

看墙漆和墙纸，这里像是办过男童学校。墙纸已经剥落——我床头伸手可及之处的墙纸被撕成一大块一大块的，对面墙脚有一大片也是如此。我此生从未见过比这更糟糕的墙纸了。

其中那蔓生开来华丽杂乱的纹饰，简直犯了艺术里的每一项大忌。

当你的目光追随它时，它沉闷得足以迷惑你的视线，又鲜明得不断激起你去一探究竟的欲望。当你追随那些蹙脚而飘忽的曲线看上一小段后，却发现它们突然无疾而终、自断前程——从一个极反常的角度跌落，在闻所未闻的矛盾中自我毁灭。

那色彩实在令人不快，几乎令人作呕；一种不洁净的焦黄色，在缓缓变化的日照中褪成了奇怪的颜色。

有些地方，呈现出一种乏味而又耀眼的橘黄色，其他地方则是一种惨淡的硫黄色。

难怪孩子们讨厌它！假如我不得不久居此地，我也会嫌弃它。

约翰来了，我要把这张纸放到一边去——我哪怕写下一个字，他都会厌恶。

我们来此地已经两个星期了，自从第一天起，我就没有写作的欲望。

此刻我坐在窗边，就在顶层这间恶劣的育婴室里。只要我愿意，没有什么能够阻止我写作，除非我体力不支。

约翰整个白天都不在，病人病情严重时，他晚上都要出诊。

我很欣慰我的病情并不严重！

可这些精神问题令人极其消沉。

约翰并不知道我有多么痛苦。在他的认知里，我没有痛苦的理由，而这足以让他感到满意。

当然我只是神经质而已。我没有尽到我在一方面的职责，这真的令我心情沉重！

我本想对约翰有所帮助，让他安心、感到宽慰，可到了今天这个

地步，我已然成了他的累赘。

没有人会相信，我付出了多大的努力，却连最简单的事情——穿衣、招待客人，以及订购物品——都力不从心。

幸亏玛丽很擅长照看宝宝。多可爱的一个宝贝！

但是我不能和他在一起，这也让我非常紧张。

我想约翰从来没觉得紧张不安。他狠狠嘲笑了我对墙纸的反应！

他原本想要给这个房间贴上新墙纸，后来他却说我是在放纵自己被情绪左右——对一位神经质患者来说，最坏的事情就是让这种幻想肆意生长。

约翰说，墙纸换过之后，便轮到笨重的床架，接着是带栏杆的窗户，然后是楼梯口的那扇门，如此等等。

“你知道这个地方对你的健康有益，”约翰说，“而且说真的，亲爱的，我可不想为了只租三个月的房屋大动干戈。”

“那我们搬到楼下吧，”我说，“楼下有那么漂亮的房间。”

他拥我入怀，唤我为幸运的小可爱，说如果我想的话，他愿搬去地下室，还会请人将它粉刷一新。

关于床、窗户，以及其他，他倒是说对了。

这是一间人人都会心仪的房间，通风又舒适，当然我也不会傻到为了一时的念头而为难约翰。

我确实喜欢上这个大房间了，除了那可怕的墙纸。

从一扇窗子望出去，我能看见花园，那里有被浓荫遮蔽的神秘的藤架凉亭，有怒放的老气的花朵，还有灌木丛和长满疙瘩的树木。

透过另一扇窗子，我可以看见迷人的海湾，还有一处隶属于这套房子的私人小码头。一条美丽的林荫小径从房子向下延伸至码头。我总是幻想路人在这些数不清的小路上和凉亭下散步，但是约翰已经警告我绝对不要沉溺于幻想。他说我的想象力以及虚构故事的习惯，会使得像我这样神经衰弱的病人产生各种活跃的幻想，我应该运用我的意念和理智去遏制这种倾向。于是我听从了他的建议。

有时候我想，要是我可以恢复到能写一点儿东西，我就能放下思想重负，得到休息。

可我发现，只要我一开始尝试，就会感觉非常疲惫。

在没有任何建议和陪伴的情况下写作，是一件十分令人气馁的事。约翰说，当我真正康复后，他愿邀请表亲亨利和朱莉娅前来长

住；但随后补充道，以我现在的状况，他宁可在我的枕头里放烟花，也不愿意让这些会令我情绪激动的人环绕在我周围。

我希望自己能快点儿康复。

不过我不能去思考这件事。那墙纸仿佛对自己的恶劣影响全然自知。

墙纸上有一种反复出现的斑点，那图案就像一只被拧断的脖子从那里耷拉下来，两只凸出的眼睛倒着瞪着你。

我对这图案的粗俗感到愤怒，而它们似乎还永无止境。它们上下左右匍匐而行，那些荒诞可笑、死鱼一样的眼睛则到处都是。有一个地方两边的宽度没有对上，竖直的衔接线两侧上上下下都是眼睛的图案，一侧比另一侧略高。

我从未在无生命体上见过如此丰富的表情，现在我们知道它们可以有多么丰富的表情了！小时候我经常睡不着，便躺在床上盯着空白的墙壁和简单的家具看，从中得到的乐趣和恐惧比大多数孩子在玩具店里得到的还要多。

我犹记得我们家那个巨大的老式衣柜，它的球形把手曾多么温和地闪烁着光泽；还有一把椅子，就像是一位坚定有力的朋友。

我曾觉得，如果其他任何一样东西露出狰狞的表情，我一定会跳入那把椅子，寻求安全。

这间房子里的家具，虽然和其他部分搭配不甚和谐，但鉴于它们都是临时从楼下搬来的，这一点也可以接受。我猜测当这间房被用作游戏室时，那些育婴用品也不得不搬出去。难怪房间的剩余部分被孩子们野蛮地破坏到面目全非。

正如我之前所说，一处处的墙纸都被撕破了，而它们和墙面曾像亲兄弟一样紧紧贴在一起——孩子们一定不乏毅力和怨恨才能把它们撕下来。

地板被划得沟壑纵横、坑坑洼洼，时不时扎出一根木刺，灰泥也被挖了出来，遍地都是。而这张笨重的大床，是我们在房间里找到的唯一的家具，它看上去似乎经历过战争的浩劫。

但对于这些，我丝毫不在乎——我眼里只有那墙纸。

约翰的妹妹来了。一个如此可爱的姑娘，对我又关心体贴！我绝不能让她发现我在写作。

她是一个完美又热情的管家，对这份工作也心满意足。我确信，她认为正是写作害得我生了病。

她出门后我就是能写作的，透过这些窗户，我目送她一路远去。

有一扇窗可以俯瞰那条路，一条林荫遮蔽的可爱的蜿蜒曲径。还有一扇窗正好眺望远处的乡村，那也是一处可爱的乡村，遍布着高大的榆树和丝绒般的草地。

墙纸还有一种不同色调的隐藏图案，特别令人不适，因为你只能在特定光线下才能看见它，而且还看不清楚。

但是在墙纸没有褪色的地方，在阳光正好的地方，我能看见一个奇怪的、讨厌的，而且形状不明的图案，仿佛躲在那愚蠢又显眼的表层图案后面，鬼鬼祟祟地走动。

约翰的妹妹上楼来了！

哎呀，七月四日 [1] 终于过去了！人们都走了，我累极了。约翰认为稍微见一见人，对我或许有益处，所以妈妈、内莉和孩子们刚刚来这里住了一个星期。

我自然一件事也没有做。现在是詹妮负责一切家务。

但我还是感到一样的疲劳。

约翰说，如果我不能尽快康复，今年秋天他就要把我送到威尔·米切尔 [2] 那里。

然而我根本不想去。我有一个朋友曾是他的病人，她说米切尔就跟约翰和我哥哥一样，甚至更过分！

况且，去那里路途遥远，于我是难以承受的。

我觉得任何事情都不值得我动一动手指，我变得异常不安，十分易怒。

我无缘无故地哭泣，大多数时候都在哭泣。

当然，约翰或别人在场时，我不会哭，我独自一人时才哭。

最近很多时候我都是一个人，约翰经常因为要照顾重症患者而留在镇上。而当我需要独处时，詹妮总是给我自由。

我会在花园里或是沿着那条可爱的小径散散步，在玫瑰花荫下的门廊里坐一坐，或者在这里躺上一会儿。

我真的喜欢上这个房间了，虽然那墙纸还在。也许正是因为这墙纸。

墙纸就这样占据了我的心！

我躺在这张无法移动的大床上——我确信，它被钉子牢牢固定

在地面上的——视线追踪着那个图案，一小时又一小时。我向你保证，这就像做体操一样有益。这样说吧，我从底部开始，视线落在那边角落下面还没有被触碰过的地方；我下了一千次决心，一定要追随那无意义的图案，直到得出某种结论。

我对设计原则略知一二，我知道这图案并非根据辐射、变换、重复或对称等法则（或是任何我听说过的设计逻辑）排布的。

当然，图案在每个幅宽上都是重复的，但在别的方向上并无规律可循。

从一个角度看，每个幅宽都是独立的，臃肿的曲线和花饰——一种蹩脚的罗马花纹——带着癫狂在愚昧的竖列里上下摇摆。

但从另一个角度看，它们又对角式地衔接在一起，蔓生的轮廓线越出边界，形成倾斜的巨大波纹，就像一群舞动的海藻在全力追逐，看起来很恐怖。

整个图案也在水平方向延展，至少表面如此，我费尽心力想辨认出它在那个方向上的排列次序。

他们贴上了一条约幅的水平腰线，这又加剧了混乱。

在房间一侧，墙纸几乎完好无损。当交错的光线暗淡下来，斜阳直射那里时，我几乎可以幻想到辐射线——漫无止境的怪影仿佛环绕着一个共同的中心而成形，又以同样的离心力向前突然跌落出去。

追随墙纸的图案令我感到疲倦。我想我要小睡片刻。

我不明白为什么我要写这个。

我并不想写。

我觉得很无力。

而且我知道约翰会认为它很可笑。但我必须用某种方式说出我的感觉和想法——它对我真是很大的安慰！

但是要付出的努力比获得的安慰还要大。

我有一半时间慵懒至极，总是躺在床上。

约翰说我不能丧失体力，他让我吃鳕鱼肝油和大量的补品、补药，麦芽酒、葡萄酒和嫩肉则更为常见。

亲爱的约翰！他深爱我，痛恨我生病。几天前，我跟他真诚又理性地聊过一次，我告诉他我多希望他能允许我离开此地，去我的表亲亨利和朱莉娅那儿小住。

他却说我既承受不了离开此地，也无法忍受那边的生活。我也没

能为自己据理力争，因为我话还没说完就哭了起来。

对我来说，正常思考变得愈发艰难。我想这正是我的神经衰弱造成的。

亲爱的约翰将我抱起，径直抱到楼上，然后把我放在床上。他坐在我身边念书给我听，直到我困倦。

他说我是他心爱的人，是他的安慰，是他的一切，我必须为了他照顾好我自己，我得保持健康。

他说，除了我自己，没有人能帮我走出困境，我必须依靠自我意志和自控力，不可以再任凭愚蠢的幻想蔓延。

毕竟还有一丝慰藉，那就是我的宝宝健康又快乐，不必住进这间贴着可怖墙纸的育婴室里。

如果不是我们占用了这个房间，我那有福的孩子肯定要住进来！多么幸运地逃过一劫啊！唉，无论如何我都不能让我的孩子，一个柔弱的小东西，住在这样一个房间里。

我之前从未想过这个问题，好在约翰把我留在了这里，你瞧，婴儿可没有我这样的忍耐力。

当然我再也没有对他们提起墙纸的事——我太明智了——但我仍然在观察它。

墙纸上有些东西，除了我，没人知道，以后也不会有人知道。

隐匿在表层图案背后的那些暗淡的图形，一天天地清晰起来了。

它的形状保持不变，只是数量越来越多。

那图形就像是一个女人弯下身子，在表层图案后缓慢地爬行。我一点儿也不喜欢它。我思考——我开始想——我盼望约翰能把我带离此地！

跟约翰谈论我的病情太困难了，因他如此智慧，又因他如此爱我。

但是昨晚我尝试了一次。

那是一个月夜。月色从四周注入房间，和白天的太阳光无异。

有时，我讨厌见到月光，它悄无声息地爬行，如此缓慢，总是透过这扇或那扇窗户进入房间。

约翰睡了，我不愿吵醒他，所以静静地注视着月光照在起伏的墙纸上，直到它令我感到害怕。

后面那个模糊的人影仿佛在摇动图案，好像想要挣脱而出。

我轻轻地起身，走过去触摸墙纸，看它是否真的在动。我回到床上时，约翰醒了。

“怎么了，小姑娘？”他说，“别那样起来走动——你会感冒的。”

我想这正是谈话的良机。我告诉他，实情是我在这里并没有好转，希望他能带我离开。

“哎呀，亲爱的！”他说，“我们的租期还有三个星期，我不知道那之前怎么走。

“家里的维修还没有完工，而且我现在也不太可能离开城镇。如果你有任何危险，我肯定能，当然也会带你走。但你真的好多了，亲爱的，不管你自己是否意识到了。我是医生，亲爱的，我知道。你恢复了体重，脸上有血色了，胃口也好多了，真的，你让我放心多了。”

“我一点儿都没有长胖，”我说，“体重还轻了一些。晚上你在时我的胃口或许好些，但早上你一离开我的胃口就差了！”

“上帝保佑她的小心脏！”约翰使劲地抱了我一下，“她想生病就生病吧！但现在我们要争分夺秒地睡觉，明天早上再谈！”

“那你打算走啦？”我郁闷地问道。

“哎呀，亲爱的，我怎么能呢？只有三个星期了，然后趁詹妮收拾房子时，我们走几天，好好享受一次短途旅行。真的，亲爱的，你好多了！”

“或许身体是好多了——”我刚一开口便咽了回去，因为约翰坐直了身子，严厉而责备地看着我，我无法再继续。

“亲爱的，”他说，“我请求你，为了我，为了我们的孩子，也为你自己，你一刻也不要让那个念头再进入你的头脑！对你这种性情的人来说，没有比这种幻想更危险、更魅惑的了，这是错误和愚蠢的幻想。我作为一名内科医生这样对你说，难道你还不能信任我吗？”

关于此事我便不再提及，很快我们就睡了。他以为我先睡着了，但我没有。我躺在床上有好几小时，试图确认墙纸的表层和背后的图案是一起移动，还是分开移动。

在白天看来，这样的图案缺乏连贯性，毫无规则可言，让正常人都感到愤怒。

墙纸的颜色本就丑陋至极、变化多端，令人恼火，而墙纸的图案更是极大的折磨。

你以为你已经看透了它，但正当你顺利地追随它时，它却向后翻了个筋斗，躲开你的追逐。它打了你一记耳光，把你撞翻在地，然后践踏你。这就像是一场噩梦。

墙纸的表层图案是华丽的阿拉伯式花纹，令人联想到一种菌类。如果你能想象一串串伞菌的样子，无穷无尽的伞菌在发育抽芽，绵延卷绕着——噢，就是那样的东西。

有时候，它就是那样！

墙纸有一个显著的特征，只有我一个人注意到了，那就是它会随着光线变化。

阳光从东边的窗子照进时——我总是会观察第一束长直的光线——图案在这光线里变化得如此之快，让人难以相信。

所以我总是观察它。

在月光下——如果有月亮的话，房间整晚都会月光朗照——我简直认不出那是同一张墙纸了。

晚上，在任何一种光线下——在暮色下，在烛光下，或是在灯光下，而最可怖的是在月光下，墙纸都变成了栏杆！我是指表层图案，而图案后面的那个女人真是清晰可见。

很长一段时间，我都没有意识到墙纸后面那模糊的图案是什么，而现在我非常确定它是一个女人。

日光下，她温顺、安静。我想，正是那图案使她一动不动。这真令人困惑，也让我长时间地默不作声。

我现在总是躺着。约翰说这对我的身体有好处，而且我要尽量多睡。

他确实形成了一个习惯，每餐过后都让我躺一小时。

我相信这是个很坏的习惯，因为你瞧，我并没有睡着。

而且那是欺骗的温床，因为我没有告诉他们我醒着——噢，不！

事实上我有点儿害怕约翰了。

他有时显得很奇怪，甚至詹妮的神情也令人费解。

偶尔我闪过一个念头，可以说是一种科学假设吧——或许就是因为墙纸！

我曾经在约翰不经意的时候观察过他。我以最若无其事的借口突然走进房间，有好几次发现他正盯着墙纸！詹妮也是如此。有一次我发现詹妮把手放在墙纸上。

她不知道我在房间里，而我极力克制自己，用一种平静得不能再平静的声调问她，她在对墙纸做什么。而她转过身来，好像窃贼被人捉住一样，看上去有点儿恼羞成怒——质问我为什么这样吓唬她！

她说，任何东西碰到墙纸都会沾上污色，我发现我所有的衣物和约翰的衣服上都有黄色污渍，希望我们更小心些！

听起来是不是很合情合理？其实我知道她正在研究那图案，可我坚信除了我没有谁能发现它的秘密！

* * *

与以往相比，目前的生活令人兴奋许多。你瞧，我有更多值得期盼和观察的东西。我的胃口确实变好了，人也比从前更安静了。

约翰见我状况改善，高兴极了！前几天，他甚至笑了笑，说我看上去活力四射，尽管房间里的墙纸还在。

我笑着转移了话题。我无意告知他正是因为墙纸——他会取笑我的，甚至有可能把我带走。

在解开墙纸的秘密之前，我还不想离开。租约还剩一个星期，我想时间是够用了。

我感觉好多了！晚上我睡眠不多，观察图案的发展实在有趣；但是白天我睡眠充足。

白天，墙纸显得无聊又令人困惑。

伞菌总是吐出新芽，到处都是新的黄色。尽管我认真地数过它们的数量，却永远也数不清。

那墙纸有着最奇怪的黄色！它使我想起见过的所有的黄色东西——不是毛茛那种黄花，而是污秽的、恶劣的黄色东西。

而且那墙纸还有一个特点——它的气味！我们一走进房间我就闻到了，但由于通风和阳光充足，那气味不算难闻。现在一个星期里都是雾雨天气，不管窗户是关还是开，气味总是经久不散。

这气味缓缓地爬满了整幢房子。

我发现这气味盘旋在餐厅里，悄悄潜入起居室，隐藏在大厅，埋伏在楼梯上等待我。

它渗入了我的头发。

甚至我出门骑马时，如果我趁其不备突然回头——也会闻到那个气味！

而且它还是如此奇特的味道！我花了几小时分析它，想弄清它闻起来像什么。

一开始，它并不浓郁，并且非常柔和，却是我遇到过的最微妙和最持久的味道。

现在天气潮湿，它就变得强烈，晚上我醒过来时发现它正悬在我上方。

起初，这气味总困扰我。我曾认真地想过烧掉房子——为了捕捉到这气味。

不过现在我习惯它了。我能想到的唯一与之相似的就是那墙纸的颜色！一种黄色的气味。

墙上有一个非常滑稽的痕迹，在下面很低的地方，靠近踢脚板。那是一道沿墙延展、环绕整个房间的条纹。它从除了床以外的家具后面绕过，长直而平坦，似乎被摩擦过一次又一次。

我好奇它是如何形成的，又是谁干的，他们为什么这样做。一圈，一圈，又一圈；一圈，一圈，又一圈——看得我头晕目眩！

终于，我还是发现了什么。

通过夜晚的长时间观察，在墙纸图案的诸多变化中，我终于发现了它的秘密。

表层图案果然在动——难怪！是图案后面的女人在摇动它！

有时候我觉得图案后面有很多很多女人；有时候又觉得只有一个，她飞快地来回匍匐而行，动作震动了整个图案。

遇到墙上的明处，她就安静不动；遇到暗处，她就抓住栏杆，使劲地摇动。

她一直努力想爬出来。然而没有人能从那图案里爬出来——图案勒死了她们，我想这就是墙纸上有多头颅的原因。

她们穿过来了，然而图案扼杀了她们，将她们倒吊起来，勒得她们眼珠上翻！

如果把那些头颅盖住或截掉，图案就远远没有那么可怕了。

我猜，那个女人在白天爬了出去！

我会告诉你为什么——悄悄告诉你——我见过她！

透过我房间的每一扇窗，我都能看见她！

这是同一个女人，我知道，因为她总是爬行，而其他被困住的女

人不在白天爬行。

我看见她在那条长长的林荫小径里，来来回回地爬行。我看见她在暗处的葡萄藤架下，环绕整个花园爬行。

我看见她沿着树下那条长道一直爬行，一有马车过来，她就躲入黑莓藤下。

我丝毫不想责怪她。被人发现大白天的在爬行，她必定感到非常羞耻！

我在白天爬行时总是锁上门。晚上我不能这样做，因为我知道约翰会立刻起疑心。

约翰最近也很反常，我不想去激怒他。我真希望他能搬到另一个房间！另外，我不想让任何除了我以外的人在晚上把那个女人放出来。

我时常好奇自己能否同时透过所有窗户看见她。

但是无论我转身有多快，只能在一个时刻观察一扇窗户。

而且尽管我总能看见她，她却可能爬得更快，超过我转身的速度！

有时候我看着她爬到空旷的乡间，速度快得像被强风吹动的云影。

要是能把表层的图案同下面的剥离出来，那多好啊！我打算尝试一下，一点点地剥。

我还发现了另一件有趣的事情，但现在我不想说！轻信他人是不好的。

我只有两天时间来剥掉这墙纸了，而且我相信约翰已经有所察觉了。我不喜欢他的眼神。

我听到他问詹妮许多关于我的专业性问题。詹妮也给他做了很详细的汇报。

她说我白天睡得很多。

约翰知道我晚上睡眠很不好，尽管我是那么安静！

他也问了我本人各种各样的问题，还假装充满爱意与柔情。

好像我无法看穿他似的！

不过他这样做我也不奇怪，毕竟在这墙纸下睡了三个月。

尽管只有我对墙纸产生了兴趣，但我确信，不知不觉中约翰和詹

妮也被墙纸影响到了。

太好啦！这是最后一天，不过时间够用了。约翰今晚将待在镇上，并且要到晚上才出发。

詹妮想与我一起睡——狡猾的东西！但我告诉她，我独自一人睡肯定会休息得好一些。

这是聪明的借口，因为我根本不是一个人！月夜初始，那可怜的东西就开始匍匐而行、摇动图案，我便立即起来跑过去帮她。

我拉她摇，我摇她拉，天亮之前我们剥掉了好几码墙纸。

一长条墙纸，有我本人那么高，绕房半圈那么长。

太阳升起了，那讨厌的图案开始嘲笑我，我宣布我今天就要把它结束！

我们明天就要离开了，他们正把我房间里所有的家具搬回楼下，恢复到出租前的状态。

詹妮惊讶地看着墙壁，但我欢快地告诉她，我这么做纯粹是出于对那邪恶墙纸的厌恶。

她笑着说她乐意自己来做，而我绝不能累倒。

她那样说是多么违心啊！

但我就在这里，除了我，没有人能触摸这墙纸——任何人都不行！

她想让我离开房间——她的用意太明显了！但我说现在房间这样安静、空荡和干净，我想要躺下来，尽可能再睡一会儿，晚餐时也不要叫醒我——我醒来后会叫她的。

她只好走了，所有的用人都走了，东西也都搬走了，除了那个被钉住的大床架，以及床架上那张原本就有的帆布床垫。

今晚我们将睡在楼下，明天乘船回家。

我很喜欢这个房间，现在它又空了。

这个床架磨损得很厉害！

想想那些孩子曾在这里怎样嬉闹过！

但是我必须着手工作了。

我锁上门，把钥匙扔到了楼下的门前小路上。

我不想出去，约翰回来之前我也不想让任何人进来。

我要让他大吃一惊。

我拿了一根绳子上楼，詹妮并没有发觉。假如那个女人真的从墙纸里出来了，试图逃离，我可以绑住她！

但是我忘记了，如果不站在什么东西上，我伸手够不到那么高！
这张床动不了！

我试图把床抬起来，推过去，直到累得一瘸一拐，我气急败坏地咬下一小块床角，却弄伤了自己的牙齿。

我站在地板上把够得着的墙纸全撕了下来。墙纸黏得吓人，而图案也享受着这种胶着！那些被勒下的头颅，凸起的眼睛，以及摇摆着滋生的伞菌，正发出嘲讽的尖叫声！

我愤怒得无以复加，要尝试些疯狂的举动。跳窗将是英勇之举，可是栏杆实在太坚固了，根本没必要去尝试。

而我也不会这么做。当然不会。我非常清楚，走出这一步是不恰当的，还可能被人误解。

我甚至都不想往窗外看——外面有那么多女人在爬行，而且她们爬得飞快。

我不知道她们是否像我一样，也是从那墙纸里爬出来的。

但是我现在已经被我悄悄藏匿的那根绳子牢牢地捆住了——你休想把我拉到那条路上！

我觉得到了晚上我应该回到那图案后面去，但这可不容易做到！

从墙纸里走出来，待在这个大房间里，我可以随意爬行，可真是件乐事！

我不想出去。即使詹妮叫我，我也不出去。

出去后你只能在地面上爬行，而且一切都是绿色而不是黄色的。

然而，在这里我可以在地板上顺畅地爬行，环绕墙壁的那条长长的污渍与我齐肩，所以我不会迷失方向。

哎呀，约翰在门口！

没有用的，年轻人，你打不开门！

他嚷叫，砸门，好大声！

他在大叫着让人拿一把斧头来。

砸烂那扇美丽的门将是一件可耻的事！

“约翰，亲爱的！”我用最温柔的声音说，“钥匙在楼下门前的台阶旁，在芭蕉叶下面！”

这让他沉默了片刻。

然后他轻声细语地说：“开门，我亲爱的！”

“我打不开门，”我说，“钥匙在楼下门前的芭蕉叶下面！”

我又说了一遍，非常温柔和缓地重复了好几遍。我反反复复地说，他只好下楼去看。当然他找到了钥匙，走了进来。他却突然止步在门口。

“怎么回事？”约翰大叫，“天哪，你在干什么？”

我一边不动声色地爬行着，一边扭头去看他。

“我终于出来了，”我说，“不管你和詹妮怎么反对！我已经把大部分墙纸撕下来了，你们无法把我放回去！”

那个男人为什么就昏倒了呢？他确实昏过去了，正好倒在了墙边，挡住了我的爬行之路，所以每次我都只能从他身上爬过去！

摇椅

一处摇曳的太阳光点，一个信号光源，在一片普通杂乱的房屋中间，在一条城市窄巷所有的沉闷昏暗之中，立刻吸引了我们的视线。

低矮的屋檐自水泥墙中伸出，落日发出一道明亮的光线，水平地穿越其下，落在窗边女孩的金色头发上。

她坐在一把高背摇椅上慢慢地前后摇晃，黄铜底座随着晃动闪闪发光。她的头始终没有抬起来，但她头发上的点点光芒却把街道点亮了。

我们两人停了下来，盯着这幅画面，这时就看见了楼下窗户上有一个小标牌——“房屋出租，配有家具”。怀着共同的憧憬，我们穿过马路，敲了敲暗淡的大门。

缓慢均匀的脚步声从里面传来，门开了，一阵少女柔和的笑声戛然而止——我们看到的是一位老妇人，面容呆滞，毫无表情，眼神无光。

是的，她有房间出租。是的，我们可以去看看。不，不提供服务。不，不提供餐食。她带着我们上了楼，一路这样单调地低语。这幢房子在一条穷街陋巷里，再普通不过，丝毫不突出，跟其他的房子没什么不同。

她带我们看了两个紧挨着的房间，与大多数同类房间相比，既不好，也不坏。房间更没有什么引人注目之处，除了窗边那把还在轻轻摇晃的黄铜包边大椅子。

那个金发女孩却不见了。

我幻想着里屋传来了少女长袍的窸窣声——一阵浅笑——但是这个公寓房间的门是锁着的。我问那个老妇人，我们是否可以看看其他房间，她说，她没有其他房间可租。

我和哈尔在一旁商量了几句，便决定租下这两个房间，立刻搬进去。我们没有理由不这样做。我们正在寻找住处时，那道晃动的光线吸引了我们，住宿条件完全对得起我们出得起的价格。我们当场成交，又回到原来破旧的旅馆去拿了几样行李，当晚就重新安顿下来。

哈尔和我都是年轻的记者——“穷苦文人”，我们是一群奋斗的有志者中的一员，我们追求文学，就像从前扈从和侍卫向往骑士身份一样。我们正在赢得功名的路上。目前为止这仍是一项缓慢的事业，令人不快，报酬很低——我肯定这正像扈从和侍卫的工作：提供卑贱的服务，日复一日地保养骑士的盔甲；主人骑马的时候，他们长时间步行。然而扈从至少对他的主人和领主心怀敬意，而我们呢，唉！在我们这个行业里，我们有着充分的理由对位高者嗤之以鼻；并且坚信，当我们身处同样的职位后，我们的所作所为会高尚得多！

这或许纯粹是一种文学本能——当代用文字糊口的作家对“素材”的攫取，又或许是另一种——被无名美人莫名吸引的本能。反正不管是什么原因，这个地方吸引了我们，我们就来了。

从婴儿时期就开始的友谊把我们两人联系在一起，坚不可摧。哈尔是一个快乐、缺乏想象力而头脑清醒的人，我是一个敏感又浪漫的人，这也使得我们的关系更加亲密。

我们对彼此有着家庭生活般无所畏惧的坦诚，但也尊重彼此的私人空间，因此我们之间的关系也一直张弛有度。

我们兴致勃勃地研究了新住处。前面的房间是哈尔的，相当大，空荡荡的。后面的房间是我的，相当小，也空荡荡的。

我相信，他比较喜欢那个房间，是因为有窗户和摇椅。我喜欢另一个，是因为那扇锁着的门。我们两人都对这些偏好闭口不提。

“你确定你不想要这个房间吗？”哈尔问道。或许，他是意识到了自己的选择有一种隐秘的动机。

“不想，真的，”我带着同样的保留态度说道，“你房间里只看得到街道，而我的窗外有真正的‘风景’。我唯一嫉妒的是你那把椅子！”

“不管白天还是晚上，你随时都可以来啊，坐在椅子上摇吧，”他大度地说，“它舒服极了，虽然外表黑乎乎的。”

这是一把舒服的椅子，非常舒服的椅子，我们两人都经常用它。椅背很高，顶部略微向前弯曲，四个方角很重。这些方角、摇杆的两头、焊在扶手上的尖尖的巨大把手，以及其他每一个节点和包角，都用黄铜和椅身嵌合。

“可以用作攻城锤 [3] ！”哈尔说。

他坐在椅子上抽烟，在窗边缓慢而惬意地摇晃着。而我懒洋洋地躺在床脚边，看着一轮苍白的新月慢慢从西边的屋顶落下。

月亮终于落出了视线，房间变得越来越暗，我只能看见，在暗淡的天空下，哈尔英俊的脑袋和那弧形的椅背一起慢慢地来回移动。

“莫里斯，是什么把我们突然带到这里的？”他在黑暗中问道。

“三个原因，”我回答，“我们需要住处，这里条件合适，还有一个美丽的脑袋。”

“没错，”他说，“还有别的吗？”

“即使有，你也不会承认它的存在，我逻辑严谨的朋友。但我觉得在这件事上，还有某种冲动，或者至少是吸引力，并不完全来自那金色头发。”

“这次我同意你，”哈尔说，“我自己也有同样的感觉，即使我不轻易受这类冲动的影响。”

我们沉默了片刻。我可能闭上了眼睛——也许比我想象的要久，但似乎就在下一秒，有什么东西轻轻拂过我的胳膊，而我看到哈尔坐在他的大椅子上，在我身旁摇晃着。

“对不起，”看见我吃了一惊，他说，“这把椅子显然会‘走路’，我以前也见到过。”

我也是，我见过它移动到地毯上，但现在这儿没有地毯，我想我应该脱离梦境了。

他将那把沉重的椅子拉回窗边，然后我们准备就寝。

我们的门开着，可以隔空交谈。但很快我就睡着了，睡得很沉，一觉到天亮。我一定是做了一个相当逼真的梦，因为哈尔说我在他的椅子上摇晃了半夜，他说在星光下能清楚地看到我的轮廓。

“不，”我说，“是你在做梦。那把摇椅深深烙印在你脑子里啦。”

“那就当它是梦吧，”他快活地回答，“噩梦总比矛盾强，吸血鬼总比吵架好！好啦，我们去吃早餐吧！”

日子一天天过去，我们很奇怪那位迷人的金发女孩竟然踪影全无。但我们只是默默好奇着，谁也没有向对方提起此事。

有时我听见她在我隔壁的房间里轻轻地走动，或者在屋子里什么地方轻声笑着。相比之下，那母亲缓慢而均匀的脚步其实更加频繁，可就连她也不常露面。

据我所知，我们两人都只从街上看到过那女孩，因为她仍然会坐在窗边我们的椅子上。在理论上，这种行为是不被许可的，尤其是我们还在门上落了锁时，而她的出现则说明她还有一把钥匙。不，也可能是通过我房间的那扇门！我没有将这个想法说出来。每当我们从窗外看见她晃着摇椅时，我们都不会抱怨，而是偷偷飞快地跑上楼梯，希望吓她一跳。但我们从未成功过，只有那张椅子时不时地仍在摇

晃，有时我也会想象有一股淡淡的甜蜜气味萦绕未散，一种令人悲伤又挑逗人的奇怪味道。但是有一天，我以为在房间里的是哈尔，便唐突地冲了进去。也就是在那时，我见到了她。那不过是惊鸿一瞥——身影迅疾、轻盈、无声地拂过——她消失在我自己的房间里。我跟着她，为自己的突然闯入致歉，但我没能追上她。那满怀妒意的门又锁上了。

每当被我们看到时，我们房东太太的漂亮女儿显然非常害羞。而奇怪的是，当我们不在时，她又显得十分自得。

我终究是看到了她，仅这一眼就会让我尽情地原谅她。她的美是一种奇特的美，无限迷人，又无限迷惑。我暗自赞叹，怀着痛苦的热盼，渴望再见她一面。但是我从没对哈尔说起我把她吓了一跳——这对那个女孩儿似乎不公平！她可能有充分的理由进到我们房间。也许我还能再见到她。

我开始找这样或那样的借口早早地回家，趁哈尔不在的时候，我又假借各种各样的理由进入他的房间。

不过，直到经历了无数次这样的突袭之后，我发现每每我以为他人在城里时，却能在他的房间里找到他。而他那些不必要的解释中，也多了一些牵强。直到那时我才开始怀疑，或许他和我一样，也在寻找着这同样一个身影。

不久我就确认了这个想法。一个日落时分，我正走到街角处——在打开的窗子的黑暗边框里，那个明亮的脑袋正有节奏地摆动。哈尔就在楼下的马路上。她向窗外看，笑了。他走进房子，上了楼。

我加快了脚步。我正好看到她停止晃动，那漂亮的脑袋转过去，哈尔站在她身后的阴影里。

我越过门，穿过街道，走了一小时、两小时——在某处吃完夜宵，到睡觉时间才回来。我心如刀绞，竭力想用理性说服自己，却失败了。或许哈尔和我有着同等的权利见她，但我依旧对他感到出奇的愤怒。

我回来的时候，灯光从白色的窗帘后面照过来，大椅子的影子矗立在那里一动不动，与另一个影子交错——是哈尔在抽烟。我走上楼去。

他热情洋溢地迎接我，问我为何回来这么晚，我在哪里吃的晚饭。他快活得不自然。我们之间忽然有了一种可怕的相互隐瞒。他什么也没说，我什么也没问，我们沉默地去睡觉了。

我责怪他对我们的神秘美人只字不提，但同样，我对自己那次见面也是守口如瓶。我左思右想，猜测他到底见过她几次面，她是否跟

他说过话，她告诉了他什么，她待了有多久。

我整夜辗转反侧，哈尔也睡不着，我听见他在离我们很近的窗前和床边摇了好几个小时，我从来不知道有一把摇椅能像它一样“行走”。

快到早晨的时候，持续的嘎吱声和摇摆声令我神经崩溃，快要发作。

“看在上帝的分儿上，哈尔，停下来吧，去睡觉！”

“什么？”传来带着睡意的声音。

“别犯傻！”我说，“你摇个不停，我一夜都没合眼。快停下来，去睡觉吧。”

“去睡觉！我整晚都睡在床上，我希望你也是！你能别自己晃着椅子，还怪到我头上来吗？”

而在我们对话期间，我依旧听见他一直摇呀摇，摇呀摇，就在大厅门口！

我悄悄地站起身，走进房间，想给这不合时宜开玩笑的人一个惊吓，把他当场抓住。

两个房间都注满了月色映射下的暗淡粼光。在黑暗中我也了解这房间的模样，可是我刚进门就被绊了一下，重重地摔倒了。

哈尔立刻下床开灯。

“我亲爱的小男孩，你受伤了吗？”

我受伤了，这完全是他的错，因为椅子不在我以为的地方，而是紧临着我卧室的门。他一定是听见我进来的声音，便立即从摇椅跳回了床上。我生硬地拒绝了他的帮助，一瘸一拐地回到自己那无眠的枕头上。我的脚踝撞在一根焊了黄铜的摇杆上，疼得要命。我从未见过那样伤人的椅子——又大又重，十分不平衡，每一个连接处和边角都包裹着黄铜。哈尔和我以前都因为这个椅子受过罪，尤其是在黑暗中，我们忘了那把椅子究竟身处何处，但没有哪一次撞得像这次这么疼。哈尔不像是玩这种把戏的人，我带着受伤的心灵和脚踝爬上床，翻来覆去，昏昏欲睡，做着梦，时不时地惊醒，直到早晨。

尽管语气十分友善，但哈尔还是坚持说他睡着了，是我整晚都在摇。我真的开始生他的气了。

“这玩笑实在太过分了，”我终于说，“我不在意玩笑，即使很伤人，但总要有限度。”

“是的，我承认。”他意味深长地说。我们不再继续这个话题。

几天过去了。哈尔又与那个金发少女见了几次面，这是我从街上看见的。而除了痛苦地目睹这一切，我只是徒劳地等待。

这是难以忍受的，几乎比哈尔和我日益疏远的关系还要难以忍受，这深深地刺痛了我。我想，我们两人最终会十分乐意各奔东西，但谁也不愿意让另一个人独享这房间、这椅子、这未知的美丽。

一天早晨我偶然回到家，发现那个面容呆滞的房东太太正在整理房间。我尽力想讨好她，却是白费心思。

“你那把老式椅子真好看。”我说道。而她站在那里用围裙机械地擦拭黄铜包角。

她看着那在暗中闪闪发光的東西，几乎是带着一抹骄傲。

“是的，”她说，“一把好椅子！”

“有些年头了？”我追问道。

“是的，非常老了。”她简短地回答。

“但是我以为摇椅是现代美国的发明？”我说。

她冷漠地看着我。

“这是西班牙的，”她说，“西班牙橡木，西班牙皮革，西班牙黄铜，西班牙……”我没有听清最后一个词，她也不再多说，就离开了房间。

尽管坐起来很放松，很舒服，这把椅子本身却相当古怪，很不稳当。摇杆的后面又长又尖，总像是在伏击粗心大意的人；前端却骤然缩短。椅背那么高，顶上那么重，这重量和前面的短摇杆，让摇椅以令人吃惊的力度轻松却猛烈地向前倾斜。

这是我的经验之谈，每当我碰到这把摇椅，它就会突然倒在我身上。哈尔也深受其害。我们身上都伤痕累累，但两人谁也不愿把椅子搬走，只因为她会一晚又一晚地坐在椅子上，在夕阳的金色余晖中摇晃。

于是，每天晚上我们都早早地下班，各自匆匆赶回家，各走各的路，走到那条肮脏的街道，走到那扇神圣的窗下。

我不可能永远忍受下去。当哈尔先回家的时候，我在楼下的街道徘徊，透过我们的窗户可以看见那个可爱的脑袋和他的脑袋紧贴在一起。当我先回来的时候，却只能看到楼上的匆匆一瞥——一个令人迷惑的微笑——除此之外，再也没有别的。我走进房间时，她总是消失得无影无踪，徒留房间里牢牢锁着的内门。

有时我甚至捕捉到门闩的咔嗒声，听到另一边宽松长袍的沙沙

声。有时，这种日复一日的失望，这种希望屡次落空的苦痛，驱使我跪在那扇门前，求她给我开门，用人类痛苦的心灵所能想到的每一种热烈的情话和劝告的言语对她哭诉。

哈尔现在既不跟我说话，也不看我一眼，只有刻意的礼貌和冷淡。既然他已经当着我的面说下谎言，我又怎能再坦诚相待？

一天晚上，我从街上看见他坐在那把椅子上，在宽阔平坦的太阳光影里，那个美丽的脑袋搭在他肩上。我忍无可忍了。假如他赢了，而且赢得如此彻底，我只要求跟她说一次话，然后跟他们两人从此永别。我重重地爬上楼梯，大声敲门，在哈尔的应和声中旋即进入房间，却发现他一个人坐着抽烟——是的，就在刚才搂着她的那把椅子上抽烟！

他刚刚才点燃那根雪茄，一个蒙蔽我眼睛的小动作。

“听着，哈尔，”我说，“我受不了了。我能否请求你一件事？让我看她一次，就一次，好让我跟她说一声再见，然后我就会从你们眼前消失！”

哈尔站起身，直视我的眼睛。他把整根雪茄扔出窗外，走到离我两英尺内的地方。

“你疯了吗？”他说，“我问她！我！我这辈子从来没有跟她说过话！而你——”他停住，转身而去。

“我什么？”我不顾一切地发问。

“你每天都见她，跟她说话，我不用把我亲眼所见全都重复一遍！”

“你不用，真的，”我说，“它甚至会让你更加无法自圆自说。在这个房间里我只见过她一次，转瞬即逝的一瞥——一句话也没有说。而我经常从街上看见她——跟你在一起！”

他脸色变得煞白，从我身边走到窗前，又转过身来。

“我从来没有在这个房间里见过她，哪怕是你所说的瞬间一瞥。我经常从街上看见她——跟你在一起！”

我们望着对方。

“你的意思是说，”我慢慢地问他，“我刚才并没有看见你坐在窗边的那把椅子上，还把她搂在怀里吗？”

“停！”他叫道，猛然挥手，却狠狠地打在了椅背的包角上。他机械地擦去手上三角伤口的血迹，目不转睛地盯着我。

“我看见你了。”我说。

“你没有！”他说。

我慢慢地转身走进我的房间。我不忍心告诉那个人，那个比兄弟还亲的人，他在撒谎。

我把头埋在手掌中，在床上坐了下来。不久我听见哈尔的门开了又关，我听见楼梯上他的脚步声，大门在他身后砰地关上了。他走了，我不知道他去了哪里。就算他正在走向死亡，就算我的一言一语能够拯救他，我也会保持沉默。我不知道自己在那里坐了多久，被无望的爱、嫉妒和仇恨所包围。

突然，从空房间的一片寂静中，传来了那把大椅子平稳摇动的嘎吱声。也许——一定是！我一跃而起，悄无声息地打开门。她坐在窗前，看向窗外，而且——是的——她给了窗下的某人一个飞吻。啊，她是多么美丽啊！多么美丽！我向她走近一步。我伸出手，我说了些自己都不知所以的话——突然，楼梯上传来了哈尔快步走来的声音。

她也听到了，她看了我一眼，微妙、神秘、胜利的一眼。而就在哈尔进门时，她从我身边溜了过去，溜进了我的房间。他看见她离开了。他径直朝我走来，我想他会原地把我打倒。

“别挡我的道，”他叫道，“我要跟她谈谈。难道我见的还不够吗？（他用受伤的手朝窗户指了指）让我过去！”

“她不在那儿，”我回答，“她已经去另一个房间了。”

我们的身旁响起一阵低低的笑声，一阵微弱的、柔和的、银铃般的笑声，几乎近在我的耳边。

哈尔用力推开我，猛地打开门，走了进去——房间是空的。

“你把她藏在哪里了？”他反问道。我冷冷地指着另一扇门。

“这么说她的房间和你的房间是相通的，是吗？”他苦笑着嘀咕，“难怪你更喜欢‘风景’！也许我也能打开它？”他把手放在门闩上。

我微笑，因为痛苦的经验告诉我它总是锁着的，对我所有的祈祷和恳求都无动于衷。让他像曾经的我那样跪在那儿苦苦哀求吧！但是门闩在他的手下打开了！我跑到他身边，一起朝里面看——一个壁橱，小得可怜，又空又浅，像空棺材！

他转向我，脸色因愤怒而发白，就像我的脸因恐惧而发白。我脑子里想的不是他。

“你对她做了什么？”他叫道。然后轻蔑地说——“我竟然停下来质问一个骗子！”

我没有理他，而是走向另一个房间——那把大椅子在窗边摇晃着。

他跟在我后面，失望得发狂。他的手放在摇晃的椅背上，手指用力地紧紧抓住它，直到指甲都发白了。

“你要离开这个地方吗？”他说。

“不。”我说。

“我不会再跟一个骗子、一个叛徒一起生活下去了。”他说。

“那你只能自杀。”我说。

他低声咒骂了一句，扑向我，但脚被长摇杆绊了一下，重重地摔倒了。

我心中涌起一股巨大的仇恨，如此强烈，以至于几乎想在他躺倒的身上踩一脚，让他像狗一样死去——我极力克制才从他身边转身，离开了房间。

我回来的时候，天已经亮了。清早寂静，太阳还没有升起，屋顶、墙壁和路面上却铺满了明亮的强光。我在楼下驻足，找到房东太太，告诉她我即将离开。我敲了一扇又一扇门，试着打开；我进了一个又一个房间，彻底搜查了一番。在整幢房子里，从地窖到阁楼，除了我们的房间外，其他房间什么家具也没有，没有人住过的痕迹。到处都是灰尘，灰尘，遍布蜘蛛网。除此之外，别无他物。

我的心奇怪地一沉，回到我们自己的门口。

我清楚地听见了房间里房东太太缓慢而均匀的脚步声，还有那柔和的、低低的笑声。我冲了进去。

房间里毫无生命的痕迹，两个房间都是。

是的，什么生命都没有。因为，当我怀着心中对哈尔所有的情感冲到他在窗下的所躺之处时，我发现他已经死了。

死了，而且死得惨烈至极。三个重重的标记——拳头的击打形成了三个深深的三角形裂口。我站起来——连那把椅子也不见了！

又是那窃窃私语的笑声。我绝望地逃离了那恐怖的房子。

我从街上瞥了一眼那扇致命的窗户，我的目光战栗。

冉冉升起的太阳给所有的屋顶都镀上了金，水平的光线打在对面建筑物高高的玻璃窗格上。窗边那把大椅子，那甜美的面孔，那垂下的眼睛，还有那晃动的金色脑袋，都反射出一缕宁静的光辉。

老水

那湖水，平滑如镜地躺在水平的金色光线里。树木覆盖的湖岸投下长长的阴影，铺满了水面，那里一片漆黑，深不可测。湖的东岸有一处尖耸的小悬崖，它那明亮的倒影顺着水面铺展开来。

一只平静的独木舟慢慢地划过开阔的金色水面，由一双熟练的手臂迅疾而平稳地向前推去。

“多么强壮！多么辉煌！啊！她就像一位女武神！”那位诗人说道。奥斯古德太太抬起头，用欣赏的目光望着那深色的高大身躯。

“你不知道你这样说我有多高兴！”她温柔地说，“我也有这样的感觉，却没有天赋把它们付诸文字。而埃伦又是如此现实。”

“是你的女儿就一定会有诗意的灵魂。”他回答道，沉静地笑着。

“我真希望是这样。但我对这一点从来都没有信心！她小时候，我总是给她读诗。可她对诗没有兴趣——除非是她所谓的‘故事诗’。一旦她可以自己拿主意了，她就选择了科学。”

“诗就在那里。”他一边说着，眼睛盯着那光滑的褐色手臂——它离他越来越近。“那种姿势！那种动作！它就是诗性本身——还有那身体！她的身体就是一首诗！”

奥斯古德太太注视着那精准的着陆，那强劲的拉力带动独木舟越过滚柱 [4]，向上进入小船屋。“埃伦是如此现实！”她低声说道，“她甚至不承认自己的美丽。”

“她还没有觉醒，”诗人呢喃说，“还没有觉醒！”他的大眼睛似乎闪烁着希望的光芒。

“她也很勇敢，”母亲接着说，“她并不是真喜欢水，只是强迫自己到水面上去。我想她心里很害怕——但不愿承认。噢，埃伦！到这里来吧，亲爱的。这是潘达克斯特先生——那位诗人。”

埃伦伸出她褐色的手，手冰凉；她的手还有点儿湿，因为才在水边匆匆洗过。他热情地紧握了一下，对她划独木舟的技巧表示钦佩。

“哦，那没什么，”女孩儿说，“划独木舟非常容易。”

“你能教我吗？”他问，“我会是个最听话的学生。”

她狐疑地上下打量他那魁梧的身躯。他无疑是很健壮的，粗壮的四肢定然意味着力量，但他缺乏一种来自长期训练的平衡感以及一种自信的敏捷。

“你不会划桨吧？”她说。

“原谅我的无知吧——我从未坐上过那精巧纤细的小船。但我很乐意试试。”

“潘达克斯特先生主要在欧洲活动，比在美国待的时间多，”她母亲急忙插嘴道，“我亲爱的，不是所有人都喜爱这项运动。我相信如果你有兴趣，我女儿会非常乐意教你的，潘达克斯特先生。”

“当然，”埃伦说，“我可以尝试着教他一下。你想明天早晨开始吗？我通常很早就出发了。”

“我很愿意，”他说，“我们将一起向极光问好。”

“是曙光吧，亲爱的先生。”她母亲带着歉意，微笑地提示道。

“噢，是的，”女孩儿表示同意并对母亲说，“我还是认得出极光的，妈妈。晚饭做好了吗？”

“等你穿好衣服我们就可以用餐了，”母亲说，“穿上你的蓝色连衣裙，亲爱的——浅色的那件。”

“好啊。”埃伦说着轻快地跑上小径。

“多美呀！多美呀！”他喃喃地说，目光追寻着她飞逝的身影。“啊，夫人！你有这样一个女儿，这对你该多么有意义啊！看到你自己的青春——转瞬即逝——又重现在你眼前！”他说着，低头赞赏地瞥了一眼女主人的轮廓。

晚餐时分，奥斯古德夫人穿着一件有点儿古典的长裙出现在餐桌前，漂亮的头发上粗野地绑着些金饰。她满意地看着自己的女儿，在一片迷雾般的蓝色中，像年轻的朱诺 [5] 一样闪亮。埃伦兼具母亲的美貌和父亲的力量。她身材高大，流畅优雅的线条下藏着有力的肌肉。她的举止像一位王后，又带着一种健康女学生活泼烂漫的神情。一位健康的女学生，这确实就是埃伦。

她的食欲如此旺盛，她母亲几乎害怕这会令诗人有些不满，但很快发现诗人也正尽情享用着厨师准备的餐点。埃伦也观察他，她坦率地对诗人的用餐习惯表现出了些许异议，指出诗人糖果和奶油吃得太多，而且似乎过于喜欢喝咖啡和利口酒。

“埃伦从来不喝咖啡，”他们坐在豪华的起居室时，奥斯古德太太解释说，“我想是出于训练的考虑。”

“妈妈！我们还处在训练期！”女孩抗议道，“尽管不是正式的——因为没有比赛——但是我喜欢保持良好的状态。我在学校是尾桨手，品达克斯特先生，我在学校是尾桨手。”

“是潘达克斯特，亲爱的。”她母亲低声说。

这个魁梧的男人拿起了他的第二杯咖啡，坐在了女孩儿旁边。

“我的景仰之情无以言表，”他说着，身体前倾，“你像瑙西卡 [6]，像阿塔兰忒 [7]，像我梦中的那些女人！”

她对他公开的赞美并没有感到不快——即使是健美的女孩也会对恭维感到愉悦——尽管她接受得有些尴尬。

“我不相信梦。”她说。

“不，”他表示赞成，“不——人们也绝不该相信梦。可是——难道你从来没有反复做过一个梦吗？一个会重复的梦？”

“我做过噩梦，”她承认说，“恐怖的梦，但不是同样的梦。”

“在可怕的梦里，你梦到了什么？”

“野兽，”她立刻回答，“扑向我的巨兽！我跑啊跑啊——啊！”

奥斯古德太太抿了一口咖啡，看着他们。眼前这位是前途无量的诗人，他代表了她少女时代所渴望的一切，而这一切都是她那位极富有的工厂主丈夫身上所缺乏的。真希望她的女儿能弥补这个遗憾！

“他们说那些梦来自我们遥远的过去，”她说，“你相信吗，潘达克斯特先生？”

“是的，”他赞同地说，“来自我们这一物种演化早期的记忆，来自深藏已久的恐惧与痛苦的岁月。”

“那我们产生的‘似曾相识’的奇怪感觉，和反复的梦是同一种东西吗？”

“这人们还不知道，”他说，“有人说，这是由于一半大脑在思考中出现了片刻的延迟。我不知道，对我来说，把一个人突然产生的似曾相识的感觉解读为对前世生活的模糊记忆，会更加神秘，更加有趣。”他看着埃伦，仿佛她从他的前世中走出来。“你有过那种感觉吗，奥斯古德小姐？”

那个女孩儿有点儿羞怯地笑了。“在一件事上我有过，”她说，“那就是我怕水的原因。”

“居然怕水！你！一个水中女神！”

“哦，我当然没有放任这种恐惧。但这是我唯一感到紧张的事

情。我从小就有这种感觉——那种恐怖的感觉！”

她打了个寒战，问他是否想听听音乐。

“啊！你还会弹奏吗？”

她欢快地笑了。“我只会用自动钢琴，或其他某种自动乐器。我可以开始了吗？”

“等一下，”他说，“马上。但是，你可否告诉我这个关于可怕东西的梦？我非常非常感兴趣。”

“噢，不算什么啊，”她说，“我没有梦见它，真的——它是在我醒着的时候出现的。只有两三次——有一次是在我十岁或十一岁的时候，那以后还有一两次。是水——漆黑、平静、光滑的水——在我身下。我无法摆脱它。我想要——然后什么东西抓住了我——啊！”

她决然地站起身，走到乐谱架前。“如果那是我过去的记忆，我一定是曾被一只愤怒的猩猩过早地了结了！总之我不喜欢水，除非是一片汪洋大海。我该演奏什么呢？”

他本想第二天早晨天一亮就起来，却没有醒。当他往外看时，那只独木舟已经轻快地往家划来，正好赶上吃早餐。

她嘲笑他的懒惰，却答应以后给他补上这一课，并且很高兴地发现他会打网球。他穿着白色法兰绒长裤，看上去很帅气。事实上他的外表比他的球艺更令人赞赏，他被女孩儿打得落花流水，直至近乎发怒。

奥斯古德太太在他们打得精彩的时候，会偶尔在一旁高兴地观看一阵；有时候为了能让他们俩单独多待一会儿，则会找各种借口离开。

他私下向她提出一个问题，担心对于独木舟来说，自己会不会太重了。但她让他放宽心。

“哦，不必担心，真的，潘达克斯特先生，这是一只特别宽的独木舟，里面还有气囊——它不会下沉的。”这是她父亲为她亲手做的。“我父亲也是一个大块头，他很喜欢划独木舟。”

于是这位健壮的诗人被缓缓地领到船的中央，女孩儿递给他一支船桨。

看不到漂亮的女导师让他沮丧，所以他提议两人换一下位置。

“不，真不行！”她说，“把另一支桨也给你？——还不到时候吧！”

他提议能否至少面对着她。听了这话，她顽皮地笑了，告诉他最

好先学会划桨前进，然后再试着向后划。

“如果你想看我，你可以另找一只独木舟，试着跟上我吧。”她微笑着补充。直到听了这句话，他才宣布自己会对她的命令绝对服从。

他占满了那小小的藤制船椅，像她一样卷起袖子。她把桨交给他，给他演示应该怎样握着它。尽管她拼命地掌舵，他用力地划桨，小船仍左右摆动，引得她默默地笑了。

“别这么用力！”她说，“你比我有力量，你的桨又伸得太远了，让我们的船晃来晃去的。”

他稍微用了一点儿耐心就掌握了这门艺术，足以成为一名合格的舵手，但她不相信他能驾驭船尾。平静湖面上的所有美景都无法平复他看不见她的懊恼。不过他又想，她能看见他。或许这就是她把他留在前面的原因！——想到这点，他就坐得更直了。

她确实挺喜欢他那匀称的身躯，可是她瞧不上他的笨拙，而且对他手臂和双手上浓密的黑色汗毛感到深深的厌恶。

他厌倦了独木舟。他不能转头深情地注视她，也不能说些甜蜜的话；换言之，相处的效果并不好。打网球时，她发挥很稳，总是赢得比赛，这也令他厌倦。她不喜欢高尔夫球；他不会骑马；她开车时，她的手、眼睛和所有的注意力都集中在汽车上。所以他只能提议，一起去散步。

“你一定要在这美妙的树林里散散步，”他说，“我在许多方面都技不如人，但我起码可以走路！”

“好吧。”她愉快地同意了，然后和他一起在乡间漫步，轻快而不知疲倦。

她母亲在一旁屏息观察。这个大眼睛男人有着天鹅绒般的声音，柔软胡须下是两片红唇，她是彻底为他倾倒了。她认为他的诗歌极为精妙动听，埃伦却认为它“毫无实际用途”。

“他究竟想把那些古老的传说改写成什么呢？”当母亲试图赢得她的某种赞赏时，埃伦这样说，“难道现在就没有足够的东西可写了吗——一定要回到那些从不存在的人身上，写别人故事里的人物？”

“它们是世界诗歌素材的一部分，我亲爱的。民间传说、种族神话，它们关乎我们的世界意象。”

“好吧，我不喜欢关于世界意象的诗歌，仅此而已。就像木乃伊一样，是陈腐的，精心打扮的！”

“我感到很遗憾！”她母亲有些恼怒地说，“我们在此荣幸地迎来了我们最伟大的诗人之一——或许就是最伟大的诗人。我的亲生孩子却

没有能力欣赏他的美妙作品。你真像你父亲！”

“好吧，我也无能为力，”埃伦说，“我不喜欢那些愚蠢老套的故事，讲的都是那些不做实事，脑子里只有恋爱和谋杀的人！他们没有理智，没有勇气，毫不体面！”

她母亲设法使她承认诗人其他作品的价值。

“没有用的，妈妈！或许你心里有你的诗人，并从中得到所有审美的愉悦。我当然会对他以礼相待。但我不喜欢他写的东西。”

“亲爱的，你不喜欢他的《每日抒情诗》和《森林》吗？”

“不喜欢，妈妈，连那些也不行。我相信他从未真正看过日出——除非他是特意起床，像照相机一样站着记录！还有森林！哎呀，他都分不清这棵树和那棵树！”

她母亲几乎对她绝望了。但这位诗人并不气馁。

“啊！奥斯古德夫人！既然我有幸得到你的信任，我只有感谢你，并且试试我的运气。这个萌芽的灵魂是如此美丽——她的花苞还未开放，紧紧闭着，甚至有些坚硬！但是当她的玫瑰花瓣绽开的时候……”

然而，他并没有把自己的秘密向奥斯古德太太和盘托出，只是一种温柔、诗意的比喻来形容开花是为了什么。他没有告诉她自己内心正在酝酿的激情的风暴，这样沸腾的强度会使那个温和的灵魂极度惊恐，或许会使她怀疑自己的选择是否明智。

奥斯古德夫人仍然处于一种热切而克制的情感状态中，几乎对埃伦只字不提，生怕惊吓到她，却希望女孩儿能和这个伟大的灵魂一起找到幸福。

与此同时，那个伟大的灵魂继续在他的道路上前进着，运用他所了解的每一种艺术——对此他经验颇丰——去触碰身边那个拥有红褐色肌肤的仙女的心。

她天真又年轻。她深陷于自己的冷漠之中而无法真正欣赏他所付出的辛苦，更不用说同情了。而且她还以戏弄他为乐，伤害了他却毫无觉察，就像一个顽皮的孩子。她取笑他打网球、划桨和开车不行；她承认或许他高尔夫球打得不错，但她本人并不喜欢高尔夫球——这项运动太慢了；她甚至嘲笑他的林间散步。

“他并不想走路！”一天吃晚餐时，她兴高采烈地对她母亲说，“他只是想去一个地方，把自己优雅地安顿在一棵树下，给我读一些关于爱洛伊丝、阿拉明塔 [8] 或什么人的故事；都是苗条、白皙、金色鬈发的美人，还有她们是如何为爱而殉情的！”

她坦率地嘲笑他。他也和她一起笑，但他的内心深处炽热又黑暗。他越是追求，越是挫败，对她的欲望也就越强烈。这份爱持续的时间已经比平常要久了。他那势不可当的求爱，从来没有像现在这样被轻巧地回避和置之不理。

“今天吃过晚饭以后，你愿意和我一起去散步吗？”他提议说，“今晚有最圣洁的月亮——而我也无法看书，不能给你读诗。月光落在你的湖面上，一定会奇妙得可人，你说是吗，奥斯古德太太？”

“的确是这样。”奥斯古德太太热情地表示同意，不满地望着女孩——女孩仍沉浸在对金发的阿拉明塔的回忆里，小声地咯咯笑个不停——“带他去悬崖边散步吧，埃伦，一定要试着欣赏美啊！”

“好的，妈妈，”埃伦说，“我会乖乖的。”

她在月色下散步，是如此乖驯。她温柔，富有同情心，如此真诚地想与他达成一致。他的感情因此过于强烈，于是失去了判断力，他捉住她的手，吻了一下。她震惊得说不出话来，惊吓着把他推开。

“哎呀，潘达克斯特先生！你在想什么啊！”

然后他向她倾诉衷肠。他告诉她，他是多么爱她——疯狂地，热烈地，不可抗拒地。他恳求她听他诉说。

“啊！你这年轻的戴安娜！你不知道我有多痛苦！你这么年轻，这么冷淡！这么圣洁美丽！别那么残忍！听我说！说你愿意做我的妻子！给我一个吻！只一个！”

她年轻，冷淡，残忍，却不自知。她嘲笑他，无情地嘲笑，然后转身走了。

他跟着她，血脉偾张，声音因强烈的感情而颤抖。他抓住她的手，又把她拉了过来。她低低地叫了一声，挣脱了他，跑走了。他狂热地、发病地跟在后面，冲向她，抓住她，紧紧抱住她。

“你会爱我的！你会的！”他叫道。他的手热得发烫，在颤抖。他紧紧地抱住她，把她的脸转向他。

“我才不会！”她挣扎着叫道，“让我走！我恨你！我告诉你，我恨你！你真——恶心！”她尽可能地把她推得很远。

他们已经到了房子对面的小悬崖顶上。巨大的黑松林悬在他们头上，宽大的树枝温柔地摇摆。

脚下的水面躺在阴影里，平滑，油黑。

女孩低头看了看水面，紧张的身体突然打了个寒战。她发出一声低低的悲叹，用双手捂住脸。

“啊！”他叫道，“这是你的命运！我们的命运！我们前世经历过！假如我们不能生活在一起，我们就要死在一起！”

他把她拉进怀里，疯狂地、热烈地吻她，然后一起纵身跃进了黑色的湖水中。

“幸好我会游泳，”埃伦一边说，一边匆匆赶回家，“可他不会。这个可怜的人！噢，这个可怜的人！他一定是疯了！”

The Yellow Wall- Paper

It is very seldom that mere ordinary people like John and myself secure ancestral halls for the summer.

A colonial mansion, a hereditary estate, I would say a haunted house, and reach the height of romantic felicity – but that would be asking too much of fate!

Still I will proudly declare that there is something queer about it.

Else, why should it be let so cheaply? And why have stood so long untenanted?

John laughs at me, of course, but one expects that in marriage.

John is practical in the extreme. He has no patience with faith, an intense horror of superstition, and he scoffs openly at any talk of things not to be felt and seen and put down in figures.

John is a physician, and perhaps – (I would not say it to a living soul, of course, but this is dead paper and a great relief to my mind –) perhaps that is one reason I do not get well faster.

You see he does not believe I am sick!

And what can one do?

If a physician of high standing, and one's own husband, assures friends and relatives that there is really nothing the matter with one but temporary nervous depression – a slight hysterical tendency – what is one to do?

My brother is also a physician, and also of high standing, and he says the same thing.

So I take phosphates or phosphites – whichever it is, and tonics, and journeys, and air, and exercise, and am absolutely forbidden to 'work' until I am well again.

Personally, I disagree with their ideas

Personally, I believe that congenial work, with excitement and change, would do me good.

But what is one to do?

I did write for a while in spite of them; but it does exhaust me a good deal – having to be so sly about it, or else meet with heavy opposition.

I sometimes fancy that in my condition if I had less opposition and more society and stimulus – but John says the very worst thing I can do is to think about my condition, and I confess it always makes me feel bad.

So I will let it alone and talk about the house.

The most beautiful place! It is quite alone, standing well back from the road, quite three miles from the village. It makes me think of English places that you read about, for there are hedges and walls and gates that lock, and lots of separate little houses for the gardeners and people.

There is a delicious garden! I never saw such a garden – large and shady, full of box- bordered paths, and lined with long grape-covered arbors with seats under them.

There were greenhouses, too, but they are all broken now.

There was some legal trouble, I believe, something about the heirs and co- heirs; anyhow, the place has been empty for years.

That spoils my ghostliness, I am afraid, but I don't care – there is something strange about the house – I can feel it.

I even said so to John one moonlight evening, but he said what I felt was a draught , and shut the window.

I get unreasonably angry with John sometimes. I'm sure I never used to be so sensitive. I think it is due to this nervous condition.

But John says if I feel so, I shall neglect proper self- control; so I take pains to control myself – before him, at least, and that makes me very tired.

I don't like our room a bit. I wanted one downstairs that opened on the piazza and had roses all over the window, and such pretty old- fashioned chintz hangings! but John would not hear of it.

He said there was only one window and not room for two beds, and no near room for him if he took another.

He is very careful and loving, and hardly lets me stir without special direction.

I have a schedule prescription for each hour in the day; he takes all care from me, and so I feel basely ungrateful not to value it more.

He said we came here solely on my account, that I was to have perfect rest and all the air I could get. 'Your exercise depends on your strength, my dear,' said he, 'and your food somewhat on your appetite; but air you can absorb all the time.' So we took the nursery at the top of the house.

It is a big, airy room, the whole floor nearly, with windows that look all ways, and air and sunshine galore. It was nursery first and then playroom and gymnasium, I should judge; for the windows are barred for little children, and there are rings and things in the walls.

The paint and paper look as if a boys' school had used it. It is stripped off – the paper – in great patches all around the head of my bed, about as far as I can reach, and in a great place on the other side of the room low down. I never saw a worse paper in my life.

One of those sprawling flamboyant patterns committing every artistic sin.

It is dull enough to confuse the eye in following, pronounced enough to constantly irritate and provoke study, and when you follow the lame uncertain curves for a little distance they suddenly commit suicide – plunge off at outrageous angles, destroy themselves in unheard of contradictions.

The color is repellant, almost revolting; a smouldering unclean yellow, strangely faded by the slow- turning sunlight.

It is a dull yet lurid orange in some places, a sickly sulphur tint in others.

No wonder the children hated it! I should hate it myself if I had to live in this room long.

There comes John, and I must put this away, – he hates to have me write a word.

We have been here two weeks, and I haven't felt like writing before, since that first day.

I am sitting by the window now, up in this atrocious nursery, and there is nothing to hinder my writing as much as I please, save lack of strength.

John is away all day, and even some nights when his cases are serious.

I am glad my case is not serious!

But these nervous troubles are dreadfully depressing.

John does not know how much I really suffer. He knows there is no reason to suffer, and that satisfies him.

Of course it is only nervousness. It does weigh on me so not to do my duty in any way!

I meant to be such a help to John, such a real rest and comfort, and here I am a comparative burden already!

Nobody would believe what an effort it is to do what little I am able, – to dress and entertain, and order things.

It is fortunate Mary is so good with the baby. Such a dear baby!

And yet I cannot be with him, it makes me so nervous.

I suppose John never was nervous in his life. He laughs at me so about this wall- paper!

At first he meant to repaper the room, but afterwards he said that I was letting it get the better of me, and that nothing was worse for a nervous patient than to give way to such fancies.

He said that after the wall- paper was changed it would be the heavy bedstead, and then the barred windows, and then that gate at the head of the stairs, and so on.

'You know the place is doing you good,' he said, 'and really, dear, I don't care to renovate the house just for a three months' rental.'

'Then do let us go downstairs,' I said, 'there are such pretty rooms there.'

Then he took me in his arms and called me a blessed little goose, and said he would go down to the cellar, if I wished, and have it whitewashed into the bargain.

But he is right enough about the beds and windows and things.

It is an airy and comfortable room as any one need wish, and, of course, I would not be so silly as to make him uncomfortable just for a whim.

I'm really getting quite fond of the big room, all but that horrid paper.

Out of one window I can see the garden, those mysterious deep- shaded arbors, the riotous old- fashioned flowers, and bushes and gnarly trees.

Out of another I get a lovely view of the bay and a little private wharf belonging to the estate. There is a beautiful shaded lane that runs down there from the house. I always fancy I see people walking in these numerous paths and arbors, but John has cautioned me not to give way to fancy in the least. He says that with my imaginative power and habit of story- making, a nervous weakness like mine is sure to lead to all manner of excited fancies, and that I ought to use my will and good sense to check the tendency. So I try.

I think sometimes that if I were only well enough to write a little it would relieve the press of ideas and rest me.

But I find I get pretty tired when I try.

It is so discouraging not to have any advice and companionship about my work. When I get really well, John says we will ask Cousin Henry and Julia down for a long visit; but he says he would as soon put fireworks in my pillow- case as to let me have those stimulating people about now.

I wish I could get well faster.

But I must not think about that. This paper looks to me as if it knew what a vicious influence it had!

There is a recurrent spot where the pattern lolls like a broken neck and two bulbous eyes stare at you upside down.

I get positively angry with the impertinence of it and the everlastingness. Up and down and sideways they crawl, and those absurd, unblinking eyes are everywhere. There is one place where two breadths didn't match, and the eyes go all up and down the line, one a little higher than the other.

I never saw so much expression in an inanimate thing before, and we all know how much expression they have! I used to lie awake as a child and get more entertainment and terror out of blank walls and plain furniture than most children could find in a toy- store.

I remember what a kindly wink the knobs of our big, old bureau used to have, and there was one chair that always seemed like a strong friend.

I used to feel that if any of the other things looked too fierce I could always hop into that chair and be safe.

The furniture in this room is no worse than inharmonious, however, for we had to bring it all from downstairs. I suppose when this was used as a playroom they had to take the nursery things out, and no wonder! I never saw such ravages as the children have made here.

The wall- paper, as I said before, is torn off in spots, and it sticketh closer than a brother – they must have had perseverance as well as hatred.

Then the floor is scratched and gouged and splintered, the plaster itself is dug out here and there, and this great heavy bed which is all we found in the room, looks as if it had been through the wars.

But I don't mind it a bit – only the paper.

There comes John's sister. Such a dear girl as she is, and so careful of me! I must not let her find me writing.

She is a perfect and enthusiastic housekeeper, and hopes for no better profession. I verily believe she thinks it is the writing which made me sick!

But I can write when she is out, and see her a long way off from these windows.

There is one that commands the road, a lovely shaded winding road, and one that just looks off over the country. A lovely country, too, full of great elms and velvet meadows.

This wallpaper has a kind of subpattern in a different shade, a particularly irritating one, for you can only see it in certain lights, and not clearly then.

But in the places where it isn't faded and where the sun is just so – I can see a strange, provoking, formless sort of figure, that seems to skulk about behind that silly and conspicuous front design.

There's sister on the stairs!

Well, the Fourth of July is over! The people are all gone and I am tired out. John thought it might do me good to see a little company, so we just had mother and Nellie and the children down for a week.

Of course I didn't do a thing. Jennie sees to everything now.

But it tired me all the same.

John says if I don't pick up faster he shall send me to Weir Mitchell in the fall.

But I don't want to go there at all. I had a friend who was in his hands once, and she says he is just like John and my brother, only more so!

Besides, it is such an undertaking to go so far.

I don't feel as if it was worth while to turn my hand over for anything, and I'm getting dreadfully fretful and querulous.

I cry at nothing, and cry most of the time.

Of course I don't when John is here, or anybody else, but when I am alone.

And I am alone a good deal just now. John is kept in town very often by serious cases, and Jennie is good and lets me alone when I want her to.

So I walk a little in the garden or down that lovely lane, sit on the porch under the roses, and lie down up here a good deal.

I'm getting really fond of the room in spite of the wallpaper. Perhaps because of the wall-paper.

It dwells in my mind so!

I lie here on this great immovable bed – it is nailed down, I believe – and follow that pattern about by the hour. It is as good as gymnastics, I assure you. I start, we'll say, at the bottom, down in the corner over there where it has not been touched, and I determine for the thousandth time that I will follow that pointless pattern to some sort of a conclusion.

I know a little of the principle of design, and I know this thing was not arranged on any laws of radiation, or alternation, or repetition, or symmetry, or anything else that I ever heard of.

It is repeated, of course, by the breadths, but not otherwise.

Looked at in one way each breadth stands alone, the bloated curves and flourishes – a kind of 'debased Romanesque' with delirium tremens – go waddling up and down in isolated columns of fatuity.

But, on the other hand, they connect diagonally, and the sprawling outlines run off in great slanting waves of optic horror, like a lot of wallowing seaweeds in full chase.

The whole thing goes horizontally, too, at least it seems so, and I exhaust myself in trying to distinguish the order of its going in that direction.

They have used a horizontal breadth for a frieze, and that adds wonderfully to the confusion.

There is one end of the room where it is almost intact, and there, when the crosslights fade and the low sun shines directly upon it, I can almost fancy radiation after all, – the interminable grotesques seem to form around a common centre and rush off in headlong plunges of equal distraction.

It makes me tired to follow it. I will take a nap I guess.

I don't know why I should write this.

I don't want to.

I don't feel able.

And I know John would think it absurd. But I must say what I feel and think in some way – it is such a relief!

But the effort is getting to be greater than the relief.

Half the time now I am awfully lazy, and lie down ever so much.

John says I mustn't lose my strength, and has me take cod liver oil and lots of tonics and things, to say nothing of ale and wine and rare meat.

Dear John! He loves me very dearly, and hates to have me sick. I tried to have a real earnest reasonable talk with him the other day, and tell him how I wish he would let me go and make a visit to Cousin Henry and Julia.

But he said I wasn't able to go, nor able to stand it after I got there; and I did not make out a very good case for myself, for I was crying before I had finished.

It is getting to be a great effort for me to think straight. Just this nervous weakness I suppose.

And dear John gathered me up in his arms, and just carried me upstairs and laid me on the bed, and sat by me and read to me till it tired my head.

He said I was his darling and his comfort and all he had, and that I must take care of myself for his sake, and keep well.

He says no one but myself can help me out of it, that I must use my will and self-control and not let any silly fancies run away with me.

There's one comfort, the baby is well and happy, and does not have to occupy this nursery with the horrid wallpaper.

If we had not used it, that blessed child would have! What a fortunate escape! Why, I wouldn't have a child of mine, an impressionable little thing, live in such a room for worlds.

I never thought of it before, but it is lucky that John kept me here after all, I can stand it so much easier than a baby, you see.

Of course I never mention it to them any more – I am too wise, – but I keep watch of it all the same.

There are things in that paper that nobody knows but me, or ever will.

Behind that outside pattern the dim shapes get clearer every day.

It is always the same shape, only very numerous.

And it is like a woman stooping down and creeping about behind that pattern. I don't like it a bit. I wonder – I begin to think – I wish John would take me away from here!

It is so hard to talk with John about my case, because he is so wise, and because he loves me so.

But I tried it last night.

It was moonlight. The moon shines in all around just as the sun does.

I hate to see it sometimes, it creeps so slowly, and always comes in by one window or another.

John was asleep and I hated to waken him, so I kept still and watched the moonlight on that undulating wallpaper till I felt creepy.

The faint figure behind seemed to shake the pattern, just as if she wanted to get out.

I got up softly and went to feel and see if the paper did move, and when I came back John was awake.

'What is it, little girl?' he said. 'Don't go walking about like that – you'll get cold.'

I thought it was a good time to talk, so I told him that I really was not gaining here, and that I wished he would take me away.

'Why, darling!' said he, 'our lease will be up in three weeks, and I can't see how to leave before.'

'The repairs are not done at home, and I cannot possibly leave town just now. Of course if you were in any danger, I could and would, but you really are better, dear, whether you can see it or not. I am a doctor, dear, and I know. You are gaining flesh and color, your appetite is better, I feel really much easier about you.'

'I don't weigh a bit more,' said I, 'nor as much; and my appetite may be better in the evening when you are here, but it is worse in the morning when you are away!'

'Bless her little heart!' said he with a big hug, 'she shall be as sick as she pleases! But now let's improve the shining hours by going to sleep, and talk about it in the morning!"

"And you won't go away?" I asked gloomily.

"Why, how can I, dear? It is only three weeks more and then we will take a nice little trip of a few days while Jennie is getting the house ready. Really, dear, you are better!"

"Better in body perhaps -" I began, and stopped short, for he sat up straight and looked at me with such a stern, reproachful look that I could not say another word.

"My darling," said he, "I beg of you, for my sake and for our child's sake, as well as for your own, that you will never for one instant let that idea enter your mind! There is nothing so dangerous, so fascinating, to a temperament like yours. It is a false and foolish fancy. Can you not trust me as a physician when I tell you so?"

So of course I said no more on that score, and we went to sleep before long. He thought I was asleep first, but I wasn't, and lay there for hours trying to decide whether that front pattern and the back pattern really did move together or separately.

On a pattern like this, by daylight, there is a lack of sequence, a defiance of law, that is a constant irritant to a normal mind.

The color is hideous enough, and unreliable enough, and infuriating enough, but the pattern is torturing.

You think you have mastered it, but just as you get well underway in following, it turns a back-somersault and there you are. It slaps you in the face, knocks you down, and tramples upon you. It is like a bad dream.

The outside pattern is a florid arabesque, reminding one of a fungus. If you can imagine a toadstool in joints, an interminable string of toadstools, budding and sprouting in endless convolutions – why, that is something like it.

That is, sometimes!

There is one marked peculiarity about this paper, a thing nobody seems to notice but myself, and that is that it changes as the light changes.

When the sun shoots in through the east window – I always watch for that first long, straight ray – it changes so quickly that I never can quite believe it.

That is why I watch it always.

By moonlight – the moon shines in all night when there is a moon – I wouldn't know it was the same paper.

At night in any kind of light, in twilight, candlelight, lamplight, and worst of all by moonlight, it becomes bars! The outside pattern I mean, and the woman behind it is as plain as can be.

I didn't realize for a long time what the thing was that showed behind, that dim sub- pattern, but now I am quite sure it is a woman.

By daylight she is subdued, quiet. I fancy it is the pattern that keeps her so still. It is so puzzling. It keeps me quiet by the hour.

I lie down ever so much now. John says it is good for me, and to sleep all I can.

Indeed he started the habit by making me lie down for an hour after each meal.

It is a very bad habit I am convinced, for you see I don't sleep.

And that cultivates deceit, for I don't tell them I'm awake – O no!

The fact is I am getting a little afraid of John.

He seems very queer sometimes, and even Jennie has an inexplicable look.

It strikes me occasionally, just as a scientific hypothesis, – that perhaps it is the paper!

I have watched John when he did not know I was looking, and come into the room suddenly on the most innocent excuses, and I've caught him several times looking at the paper! And Jennie too. I caught Jennie with her hand on it once.

She didn't know I was in the room, and when I asked her in a quiet, a very quiet voice, with the most restrained manner possible, what she was doing with the paper – she turned around as if she had been caught stealing, and looked quite angry – asked me why I should frighten her so!

Then she said that the paper stained everything it touched, that she had found yellow smooches on all my clothes and John's, and she wished we would be more careful!

Did not that sound innocent? But I know she was studying that pattern, and I am determined that nobody shall find it out but myself!

Life is very much more exciting now than it used to be. You see I have something more to expect, to look forward to, to watch. I really do eat better, and am more quiet than I was.

John is so pleased to see me improve! He laughed a little the other day, and said I seemed to be flourishing in spite of my wall-paper.

I turned it off with a laugh. I had no intention of telling him it was because of the wall- paper – he would make fun of me. He might even want to take me away.

I don't want to leave now until I have found it out. There is a week more, and I think that will be enough.

I'm feeling ever so much better! I don't sleep much at night, for it is so interesting to watch developments; but I sleep a good deal in the daytime.

In the daytime it is tiresome and perplexing.

There are always new shoots on the fungus, and new shades of yellow all over it. I cannot keep count of them, though I have tried conscientiously.

It is the strangest yellow, that wall- paper! It makes me think of all the yellow things I ever saw – not beautiful ones like buttercups, but old foul, bad yellow things.

But there is something else about that paper – the smell! I noticed it the moment we came into the room, but with so much air and sun it was not bad. Now we have had a week of fog and rain, and whether the windows are open or not, the smell is here.

It creeps all over the house.

I find it hovering in the dining- room, skulking in the parlor, hiding in the hall, lying in wait for me on the stairs. It gets into my hair.

Even when I go to ride, if I turn my head suddenly and surprise it – there is that smell!

Such a peculiar odor, too! I have spent hours in trying to analyze it, to find what it smelled like.

It is not bad – at first, and very gentle, but quite the subtlest, most enduring odor I ever met.

In this damp weather it is awful, I wake up in the night and find it hanging over me.

It used to disturb me at first. I thought seriously of burning the house – to reach the smell.

But now I am used to it. The only thing I can think of that it is like is the color of the paper! A yellow smell.

There is a very funny mark on this wall, low down, near the mopboard. A streak that runs round the room. It goes behind every piece of furniture, except the bed, a long, straight, even smooch, as if it had been rubbed over and over.

I wonder how it was done and who did it, and what they did it for. Round and round and round – round and round and round – it makes me dizzy!

I really have discovered something at last.

Through watching so much at night, when it changes so, I have finally found out.

The front pattern does move – and no wonder! The woman behind shakes it!

Sometimes I think there are a great many women behind, and sometimes only one, and she crawls around fast, and her crawling shakes it all over.

Then in the very bright spots she keeps still, and in the very shady spots she just takes hold of the bars and shakes them hard.

And she is all the time trying to climb through. But nobody could climb through that pattern – it strangles so; I think that is why it has so many heads.

They get through, and then the pattern strangles them off and turns them upside down, and makes their eyes white!

If those heads were covered or taken off it would not be half so bad.

I think that woman gets out in the daytime!

And I'll tell you why – privately – I've seen her!

I can see her out of every one of my windows!

It is the same woman, I know, for she is always creeping, and most women do not creep by daylight.

I see her in that long shaded lane, creeping up and down. I see her in those dark grape arbors, creeping all around the garden.

I see her on that long road under the trees, creeping along, and when a carriage comes she hides under the blackberry vines.

I don't blame her a bit. It must be very humiliating to be caught creeping by daylight!

I always lock the door when I creep by daylight. I can't do it at night, for I know John would suspect something at once.

And John is so queer now, that I don't want to irritate him. I wish he would take another room! Besides, I don't want anybody to get that woman out at night but myself.

I often wonder if I could see her out of all the windows at once.

But, turn as fast as I can, I can only see out of one at one time.

And though I always see her, she may be able to creep faster than I can turn!

I have watched her sometimes away off in the open country, creeping as fast as a cloud shadow in a high wind.

If only that top pattern could be gotten off from the under one! I mean to try it, little by little.

I have found out another funny thing, but I shan't tell it this time! It does not do to trust people too much.

There are only two more days to get this paper off, and I believe John is beginning to notice. I don't like the look in his eyes.

And I heard him ask Jennie a lot of professional questions about me. She had a very good report to give.

She said I slept a good deal in the daytime.

John knows I don't sleep very well at night, for all I'm so quiet!

He asked me all sorts of questions, too, and pretended to be very loving and kind.

As if I couldn't see through him!

Still, I don't wonder he acts so, sleeping under this paper for three months.

It only interests me, but I feel sure John and Jennie are secretly affected by it.

Hurrah! This is the last day, but it is enough. John is to stay in town over night, and won't be out until this evening.

Jennie wanted to sleep with me – the sly thing! but I told her I should undoubtedly rest better for a night all alone.

That was clever, for really I wasn't alone a bit! As soon as it was moonlight and that poor thing began to crawl and shake the pattern, I got up and ran to help her.

I pulled and she shook, I shook and she pulled, and before morning we had peeled off yards of that paper.

A strip about as high as my head and half around the room.

And then when the sun came and that awful pattern began to laugh at me, I declared I would finish it to- day!

We go away to- morrow, and they are moving all my furniture down again to leave things as they were before.

Jennie looked at the wall in amazement, but I told her merrily that I did it out of pure spite at the vicious thing.

She laughed and said she wouldn't mind doing it herself, but I must not get tired.

How she betrayed herself that time!

But I am here, and no person touches this paper but me, – not alive !

She tried to get me out of the room – it was too patent! But I said it was so quiet and empty and clean now that I believed I would lie down again and sleep all I could; and not to wake me even for dinner – I would call when I woke.

So now she is gone, and the servants are gone, and the things are gone, and there is nothing left but that great bedstead nailed down, with the canvas mattress we found on it.

We shall sleep downstairs to- night, and take the boat home tomorrow.

I quite enjoy the room, now it is bare again.

How those children did tear about here!

This bedstead is fairly gnawed!

But I must get to work.

I have locked the door and thrown the key down into the front path.

I don't want to go out, and I don't want to have anybody come in, till John comes.

I want to astonish him.

I've got a rope up here that even Jennie did not find. If that woman does get out, and tries to get away, I can tie her!

But I forgot I could not reach far without anything to stand on!

This bed will not move!

I tried to lift and push it until I was lame, and then I got so angry I bit off a little piece at one corner – but it hurt my teeth.

Then I peeled off all the paper I could reach standing on the floor. It sticks horribly and the pattern just enjoys it! All those strangled heads and bulbous eyes and waddling fungus growths just shriek with derision!

I am getting angry enough to do something desperate. To jump out of the window would be admirable exercise, but the bars are too strong even to try.

Besides I wouldn't do it. Of course not. I know well enough that a step like that is improper and might be misconstrued.

I don't like to look out of the windows even – there are so many of those creeping women, and they creep so fast.

I wonder if they all come out of that wall- paper as I did?

But I am securely fastened now by my well- hidden rope – you don't get me out in the road there!

I suppose I shall have to get back behind the pattern when it comes night, and that is hard!

It is so pleasant to be out in this great room and creep around as I please!

I don't want to go outside. I won't, even if Jennie asks me to.

For outside you have to creep on the ground, and everything is green instead of yellow.

But here I can creep smoothly on the floor, and my shoulder just fits in that long smooch around the wall, so I cannot lose my way.

Why there's John at the door!

It is no use, young man, you can't open it!

How he does call and pound!

Now he's crying for an axe.

It would be a shame to break down that beautiful door!

'John dear!' said I in the gentlest voice, 'the key is down by the front steps, under a plantain leaf!'

That silenced him for a few moments.

Then he said – very quietly indeed, 'Open the door, my darling!'

'I can't,' said I. 'The key is down by the front door under a plantain leaf!'

And then I said it again, several times, very gently and slowly, and said it so often that he had to go and see, and he got it of course, and came in. He stopped short by the door.

'What is the matter?' he cried. 'For God's sake, what are you doing!'

I kept on creeping just the same, but I looked at him over my shoulder.

'I've got out at last,' said I, 'in spite of you and Jane! And I've pulled off most of the paper, so you can't put me back!'

Now why should that man have fainted? But he did, and right across my path by the wall, so that I had to creep over him every time!

The Rocking- Chair

A waving spot of sunshine, a signal light that caught the eye at once in a waste of commonplace houses, and all the dreary dimness of a narrow city street.

Across some low roof that made a gap in the wall of masonry, shot a level, brilliant beam of the just- setting sun, touching the golden head of a girl in an open window.

She sat in a high- backed rocking- chair with brass mountings that glittered as it swung, rocking slowly back and forth, never lifting her head, but fairly lighting up the street with the glory of her sunlit hair.

We two stopped and stared, and, so staring, caught sight of a small sign in a lower window – 'Furnished Lodgings.' With a common impulse we crossed the street and knocked at the dingy front door.

Slow, even footsteps approached from within, and a soft girlish laugh ceased suddenly as the door opened, showing us an old woman, with a dull, expressionless face and faded eyes.

Yes, she had rooms to let. Yes, we could see them. No, there was no service. No, there were no meals. So murmuring monotonously, she led the way up- stairs. It was an ordinary house enough, on a poor sort of street, a house in no way remarkable or unlike its fellows.

She showed us two rooms, connected, neither better nor worse than most of their class, rooms without a striking feature about them, unless it was the great brass- bound chair we found still rocking gently by the window.

But the gold- haired girl was nowhere to be seen.

I fancied I heard the light rustle of girlish robes in the inner chamber – a breath of that low laugh – but the door leading to this apartment was locked, and when I asked the woman if we could see the other rooms she said she had no other rooms to let.

A few words aside with Hal, and we decided to take these two, and move in at once. There was no reason we should not. We were looking for lodgings when that swinging sunbeam caught our eyes, and the accommodations were fully as good as we could pay for. So we closed our bargain on the spot, returned to our deserted boarding-house for a few belongings, and were settled anew that night.

Hal and I were young newspaper men, 'penny-a-liners,' part of that struggling crowd of aspirants who are to literature what squires and pages were to knighthood in olden days. We were winning our spurs. So far it was slow work, unpleasant and ill-paid – so was squireship and pagehood, I am sure; menial service and laborious polishing of armor; long running afoot while the master rode. But the squire could at least honor his lord and leader, while we, alas! had small honor for those above us in our profession, with but too good reason. We, of course, should do far nobler things when these same spurs were won!

Now it may have been mere literary instinct – the grasping at 'material' of the pot-boiling writers of the day, and it may have been another kind of instinct – the unacknowledged attraction of the fair unknown; but, whatever the reason, the place had drawn us both, and here we were.

Unbroken friendship begun in babyhood held us two together, all the more closely because Hal was a merry, prosaic, clear-headed fellow, and I sensitive and romantic.

The fearless frankness of family life we shared, but held the right to unapproachable reserves, and so kept love unstrained.

We examined our new quarters with interest. The front room, Hal's, was rather big and bare. The back room, mine, rather small and bare.

He preferred that room, I am convinced, because of the window and the chair. I preferred the other, because of the locked door. We neither of us mentioned these prejudices.

'Are you sure you would not rather have this room?' asked Hal, conscious, perhaps, of an ulterior motive in his choice.

'No, indeed,' said I, with a similar reservation; 'you only have the street and I have a real "view" from my window. The only thing

I begrudge you is the chair!'

'You may come and rock therein at any hour of the day or night,' said he magnanimously. 'It is tremendously comfortable, for all its black looks.'

It was a comfortable chair, a very comfortable chair, and we both used it a great deal. A very high- backed chair, curving a little forward at the top, with heavy square corners. These corners, the ends of the rockers, the great sharp knobs that tipped the arms, and every other point and angle were mounted in brass.

'Might be used for a battering- ram!' said Hal.

He sat smoking in it, rocking slowly and complacently by the window, while I lounged on the foot of the bed, and watched a pale young moon sink slowly over the western housetops.

It went out of sight at last, and the room grew darker and darker till I could only see Hal's handsome head and the curving chair- back move slowly to and fro against the dim sky.

'What brought us here so suddenly, Maurice?' he asked, out of the dark.

'Three reasons,' I answered. 'Our need of lodgings, the suitability of these, and a beautiful head.'

'Correct,' said he. 'Anything else?'

'Nothing you would admit the existence of, my sternly logical friend. But I am conscious of a certain compulsion, or at least attraction, in the case, which does not seem wholly accounted for, even by golden hair.'

'For once I will agree with you,' said Hal. 'I feel the same way myself, and I am not impressionable.'

We were silent for a little. I may have closed my eyes, – it may have been longer than I thought, but it did not seem another moment when something brushed softly against my arm, and Hal in his great chair was rocking beside me.

'Excuse me,' said he, seeing me start. 'This chair evidently "walks," I've seen 'em before.'

So had I, on carpets, but there was no carpet here, and I thought I was awake.

He pulled the heavy thing back to the window again, and we went to bed.

Our door was open, and we could talk back and forth, but presently I dropped off and slept heavily until morning. But I must have dreamed most vividly, for he accused me of rocking in his chair half the night, said he could see my outline clearly against the starlight.

'No,' said I, 'you dreamed it. You've got that rockingchair on the brain.'

'Dream it is, then,' he answered cheerily. 'Better a nightmare than a contradiction; a vampire than a quarrel! Come on, let's go to breakfast!'

We wondered greatly as the days went by that we saw nothing of our golden-haired charmer. But we wondered in silence, and neither mentioned it to the other.

Sometimes I heard her light movements in the room next mine, or the soft laugh somewhere in the house; but the mother's slow, even steps were more frequent, and even she was not often visible.

All either of us saw of the girl, to my knowledge, was from the street, for she still availed herself of our chair by the window. This we disapproved of, on principle, the more so as we left the doors locked, and her presence proved the possession of another key. No; there was the door in my room! But I did not mention the idea. Under the circumstances, however, we made no complaint, and used to rush stealthily and swiftly up-stairs, hoping to surprise her. But we never succeeded. Only the chair was often found still rocking, and sometimes I fancied a faint sweet odor lingering about, an odor strangely saddening and suggestive. But one day when I thought Hal was there I rushed in unceremoniously and caught her. It was but a glimpse – a swift, light, noiseless sweep – she vanished into my own room. Following her with apologies for such a sudden entrance, I was too late. The envious door was locked again.

Our landlady's fair daughter was evidently shy enough when brought to bay, but strangely willing to take liberties in our absence.

Still, I had seen her, and for that sight would have forgiven much. Hers was a strange beauty, infinitely attractive yet infinitely perplexing. I marveled in secret, and longed with painful eagerness for another meeting; but I said nothing to Hal of my surprising her – it did not seem fair to the girl! She might have some good reason for going there; perhaps I could meet her again.

So I took to coming home early, on one excuse or another, and inventing all manner of errands to get to the room when Hal was not in.

But it was not until after numberless surprises on that point, finding him there when I supposed him downtown, and noticing something a little forced in his needless explanations, that I began to wonder if he might not be on the same quest.

Soon I was sure of it. I reached the corner of the street one evening just at sunset, and – yes, there was the rhythmic swing of that bright head in the dark frame of the open window. There also was Hal in the street below. She looked out, she smiled. He let himself in and went up- stairs.

I quickened my pace. I was in time to see the movement stop, the fair head turn, and Hal standing beyond her in the shadow.

I passed the door, passed the street, walked an hour – two hours – got a late supper somewhere, and came back about bedtime with a sharp and bitter feeling in my heart that I strove in vain to reason down. Why he had not as good a right to meet her as I it were hard to say, and yet I was strangely angry with him.

When I returned the lamplight shone behind the white curtain, and the shadow of the great chair stood motionless against it. Another shadow crossed – Hal – smoking. I went up.

He greeted me effusively and asked why I was so late. Where I got supper. Was unnaturally cheerful. There was a sudden dreadful sense of concealment between us. But he told nothing and I asked nothing, and we went silently to bed.

I blamed him for saying no word about our fair mystery, and yet I had said none concerning my own meeting. I racked my brain with questions as to how much he had really seen of her; if she had talked to him; what she had told him; how long she had stayed.

I tossed all night and Hal was sleepless too, for I heard him rocking for hours, by the window, by the bed, close to my door. I never knew a rocking- chair to 'walk' as that one did.

Towards morning the steady creak and swing was too much for my nerves or temper.

'For goodness' sake, Hal, do stop that and go to bed!'

'What?' came a sleepy voice.

'Don't fool!' said I, 'I haven't slept a wink to- night for your everlasting rocking. Now do leave off and go to bed.'

'Go to bed! I've been in bed all night and I wish you had! Can't you use the chair without blaming me for it?'

And all the time I heard him rock, rock, rock, over by the hall door!

I rose stealthily and entered the room, meaning to surprise the ill- timed joker and convict him in the act.

Both rooms were full of the dim phosphorescence of reflected moonlight; I knew them even in the dark; and yet I stumbled just inside the door, and fell heavily.

Hal was out of bed in a moment and had struck a light.

'Are you hurt, my dear boy?'

I was hurt, and solely by his fault, for the chair was not where I supposed, but close to my bedroom door, where he must have left it to leap into bed when he heard me coming. So it was in no amiable humor that I refused his offers of assistance and limped back to my own sleepless pillow. I had struck my ankle on one of those brass-tipped rockers, and it pained me severely. I never saw a chair so made to hurt as that one. It was so large and heavy and ill-balanced, and every joint and corner so shod with brass. Hal and I had punished ourselves enough on it before, especially in the dark when we forgot where the thing was standing, but never so severely as this. It was not like Hal to play such tricks, and both heart and ankle ached as I crept into bed again to toss and doze and dream and fitfully start till morning.

Hal was kindness itself, but he would insist that he had been asleep and I rocking all night, till I grew actually angry with him.

'That's carrying a joke too far,' I said at last. 'I don't mind a joke, even when it hurts, but there are limits.'

'Yes, there are!' said he, significantly, and we dropped the subject.

Several days passed. Hal had repeated meetings with the gold-haired damsel; this I saw from the street; but save for these bitter glimpses I waited vainly.

It was hard to bear, harder almost than the growing estrangement between Hal and me, and that cut deeply. I think that at last either one of us would have been glad to go away by himself, but neither was willing to leave the other to the room, the chair, the beautiful unknown.

Coming home one morning unexpectedly, I found the dull-faced landlady arranging the rooms, and quite laid myself out to make an impression upon her, to no purpose.

'That is a fine old chair you have there,' said I, as she stood mechanically polishing the brass corners with her apron.

She looked at the darkly glittering thing with almost a flash of pride.

'Yes,' said she, 'a fine chair!'

'Is it old?' I pursued.

'Very old,' she answered briefly.

'But I thought rocking- chairs were a modern American invention?' said I.

She looked at me apathetically.

'It is Spanish,' she said, 'Spanish oak, Spanish leather, Spanish brass, Spanish -.' I did not catch the last word, and she left the room without another.

It was a strange ill- balanced thing, that chair, though so easy and comfortable to sit in. The rockers were long and sharp behind, always lying in wait for the unwary, but cut short in front: and the back was so high and so heavy on top, that what with its weight and the shortness of the front rockers, it tipped forward with an ease and a violence equally astonishing.

This I knew from experience, as it had plunged over upon me during some of our frequent encounters. Hal also was a sufferer, but in spite of our manifold bruises, neither of us would have had the chair removed, for did not she sit in it, evening after evening, and rock there in the golden light of the setting sun.

So, evening after evening, we two fled from our work as early as possible, and hurried home alone, by separate ways, to the dingy street and the glorified window.

I could not endure forever. When Hal came home first, I, lingering in the street below, could see through our window that lovely head and his in close proximity. When I came first, it was to catch perhaps a quick glance from above – a bewildering smile – no more. She was always gone when I reached the room, and the inner door of my chamber irrevocably locked.

At times I even caught the click of the latch, heard the flutter of loose robes on the other side; and sometimes this daily disappointment, this constant agony of hope deferred, would bring me to my knees by that door begging her to open to me, crying to her in every term of passionate endearment and persuasion that tortured heart of man could think to use.

Hal had neither word nor look for me now, save those of studied politeness and cold indifference, and how could I behave otherwise to him, so proven to my face a liar?

I saw him from the street one night, in the broad level sunlight, sitting in that chair, with the beautiful head on his shoulder. It was more than I could bear. If he had won, and won so utterly, I would ask but to speak to her once, and say farewell to both forever. So I heavily climbed the stairs, knocked loudly, and entered at Hal's 'Come in!' only to find him sitting there alone, smoking – yes, smoking in the chair which but a moment since had held her too!

He had but just lit the cigar, a paltry device to blind my eyes.

'Look here, Hal,' said I, 'I can't stand this any longer. May I ask you one thing? Let me see her once, just once, that I may say good-bye, and then neither of you need see me again!'

Hal rose to his feet and looked me straight in the eye. Then he threw that whole cigar out of the window, and walked to within two feet of me.

'Are you crazy,' he said. 'I ask her! I! I have never had speech of her in my life! And you -' He stopped and turned away.

‘And I what?’ I would have it out now whatever came.

‘And you have seen her day after day – talked with her – I need not repeat all that my eyes have seen!’

‘You need not, indeed,’ said I. ‘It would tax even your invention. I have never seen her in this room but once, and then but for a fleeting glimpse – no word. From the street I have seen her often – with you!’

He turned very white and walked from me to the window, then turned again.

‘I have never seen her in this room for even such a moment as you own to. From the street I have seen her often – with you ! ’

We looked at each other.

‘Do you mean to say,’ I inquired slowly, ‘that I did not see you just now sitting in that chair, by that window, with her in your arms?’

‘Stop!’ he cried, throwing out his hand with a fierce gesture. It struck sharply on the corner of the chair- back. He wiped the blood mechanically from the three- cornered cut, looking fixedly at me.

‘I saw you,’ said I.

‘You did not!’ said he.

I turned slowly on my heel and went into my room. I could not bear to tell that man, my more than brother, that he lied.

I sat down on my bed with my head on my hands, and presently I heard Hal’s door open and shut, his step on the stair, the front door slam behind him. He had gone, I knew not where, and if he went to his death and a word of mine would have stopped him, I would not have said it. I do not know how long I sat there, in the company of hopeless love and jealousy and hate.

Suddenly, out of the silence of the empty room, came the steady swing and creak of the great chair. Perhaps – it must be! I sprang to my feet and noiselessly opened the door. There she sat by the window, looking out, and – yes – she threw a kiss to some one below. Ah, how beautiful she was! How beautiful! I made a step toward her. I held out my hands, I uttered I know not what – when all at once came Hal’s quick step upon the stairs.

She heard it, too, and, giving me one look, one subtle, mysterious, triumphant look, slipped past me and into my room just as Hal burst in. He saw her go. He came straight to me and I thought he would have struck me down where I stood.

'Out of my way,' he cried. 'I will speak to her. Is it not enough to see?' – he motioned toward the window with his wounded hand – 'Let me pass!'

'She is not there,' I answered. 'She has gone through into the other room.'

A light laugh sounded close by us, a faint, soft, silver laugh, almost at my elbow.

He flung me from his path, threw open the door, and entered. The room was empty.

'Where have you hidden her?' he demanded. I coldly pointed to the other door.

'So her room opens into yours, does it?' he muttered with a bitter smile. 'No wonder you preferred the "view"! Perhaps I can open it too?' And he laid his hand upon the latch.

I smiled then, for bitter experience had taught me that it was always locked, locked to all my prayers and entreaties. Let him kneel there as I had! But it opened under his hand! I sprang to his side, and we looked into – a closet, two by four, as bare and shallow as an empty coffin!

He turned to me, as white with rage as I was with terror. I was not thinking of him.

'What have you done with her?' he cried. And then contemptuously – 'That I should stop to question a liar!'

I paid no heed to him, but walked back into the other room, where the great chair rocked by the window.

He followed me, furious with disappointment, and laid his hand upon the swaying back, his strong fingers closing on it till the nails were white.

'Will you leave this place?' said he.

'No,' said I.

'I will live no longer with a liar and a traitor,' said he.

'Then you will have to kill yourself,' said I.

With a muttered oath he sprang upon me, but caught his foot in the long rocker, and fell heavily.

So wild a wave of hate rose in my heart that I could have trampled upon him where he lay – killed him like a dog – but with a mighty effort I turned from him and left the room.

When I returned it was broad day. Early and still, not sunrise yet, but full of hard, clear light on roof and wall and roadway. I stopped on the lower floor to find the landlady and announce my immediate departure. Door after door I knocked at, tried and opened; room after room I entered and searched thoroughly; in all that house, from cellar to garret, was no furnished room but ours, no sign of human occupancy. Dust, dust, and cobwebs everywhere. Nothing else.

With a strange sinking of the heart I came back to our own door.

Surely I heard the landlady's slow, even step inside, and that soft, low laugh. I rushed in.

The room was empty of all life; both rooms utterly empty.

Yes, of all life; for, with the love of a lifetime surging in my heart, I sprang to where Hal lay beneath the window, and found him dead.

Dead, and most horribly dead. Three heavy marks – blows – three deep, three-cornered gashes – I started to my feet – even the chair had gone!

Again the whispered laugh. Out of that house of terror I fled desperately.

From the street I cast one shuddering glance at the fateful window.

The risen sun was gilding all the housetops, and its level rays, striking the high panes on the building opposite, shone back in a calm glory on the great chair by the window, the sweet face, down-dropped eyes, and swaying golden head.

Old Water

The lake lay glassy in level golden light. Where the long shadows of the wooded bank spread across it was dark, fathomless. Where the little cliff rose on the eastern shore its bright reflection went down endlessly.

Slowly across the open gold came a still canoe, sent swiftly and smoothly on by well- accustomed arms.

'How strong! How splendid! Ah! she is like a Valkyr!' said the poet; and Mrs Osgood looked up at the dark bulk with appreciative eyes.

'You don't know how it delights me to have you speak like that!' she said softly. 'I feel those things myself, but have not the gift of words. And Ellen is so practical.'

'She could not be your daughter and not have a poetic soul,' he answered, smiling gravely.

'I'm sure I hope so. But I have never felt sure! When she was little I read to her from the poets, always; but she did not care for them – unless it was what she called "story poetry." And as soon as she had any choice of her own she took to science.'

'The poetry is there,' he said, his eyes on the smooth brown arms, now more near. 'That poise! That motion! It is the very soul of poetry – and the body! Her body is a poem!'

Mrs Osgood watched the accurate landing, the strong pull that brought the canoe over the roller and up into the little boathouse. 'Ellen is so practical!' she murmured. 'She will not even admit her own beauty.'

'She is unawakened,' breathed the poet – 'Unawakened!' And his big eyes glimmered as with a stir of hope.

'It's very brave of her, too,' the mother went on. 'She does not really love the water, and just makes herself go out on it. I think in her heart she's afraid – but will not admit it. O Ellen! Come here

dear. This is Mr Pendexter – the Poet.'

Ellen gave her cool brown hand; a little wet even, as she had casually washed them at the water's edge; but he pressed it warmly, and uttered his admiration of her skill with the canoe.

'O that's nothing,' said the girl. 'Canoeing's dead easy.'

'Will you teach it to me?' he asked. 'I will be a most docile pupil.'

She looked up and down his large frame with a somewhat questioning eye. It was big enough surely, and those great limbs must mean strength; but he lacked something of the balance and assured quickness which speaks of training.

'Can't you paddle?' she said.

'Forgive my ignorance – but I have never been in one of those graceful slim crafts. I shall be so glad to try.'

'Mr Pendexter has been more in Europe than America,' her mother put in hastily, 'and you must not imagine, my dear, that all men care for these things. I'm sure that if you are interested, my daughter will be very glad to teach you, Mr Pendexter.'

'Certainly,' said Ellen. 'I'll teach him in two tries. Want to start tomorrow morning? I'm usually out pretty early.'

'I shall be delighted,' he said. 'We will greet Aurora together.'

'The Dawn, dear,' suggested her mother with an apologetic smile.

'O yes,' the girl agreed. 'I recognize Aurora, mama. Is dinner ready?'

'It will be when you are dressed,' said her mother. 'Put on your blue frock, dear – the light one.'

'All right,' said Ellen, and ran lightly up the path.

'Beautiful! Beautiful!' he murmured, his eyes following her flying figure. 'Ah, madam! What it must be to you to have such a daughter! To see your own youth – but a moment passed – repeated before your eyes!' And he bent an admiring glance on the outlines of his hostess.

Mrs Osgood appeared at dinner in a somewhat classic gown, her fine hair banded with barbaric gold; and looked with satisfaction at her daughter, who shone like a juvenile Juno in her misty blue. Ellen had her mother's beauty and her father's strength. Her frame was large, her muscles had power under their flowing grace of line. She carried herself like a queen, but wore the cheerful unconscious air of a healthy schoolgirl, which she was.

Her appetite was so hearty that her mother almost feared it would pain the poet, but she soon observed that he too showed full appreciation of her chef's creations. Ellen too observed him, noting with frank disapproval that he ate freely of sweets and creams, and seemed to enjoy the coffee and liqueurs exceedingly.

'Ellen never takes coffee,' Mrs Osgood explained, as they sat in the luxurious drawing room, 'she has some notion about training I believe.'

'Mother! I am training!' the girl protested. 'Not officially – there's no race on; but I like to keep in good condition. I'm stroke at college, Mr Pindexter.'

'Pindexter, dear,' her mother whispered.

The big man took his second demitasse, and sat near the girl.

'I can't tell you how much I admire it,' he said, leaning forward. 'You are like Nausicaa – like Atalanta – like the women of my dreams!'

She was not displeased with his open admiration – even athletic girls are not above enjoying praise – but she took it awkwardly.

'I don't believe in dreams,' she said.

'No,' he agreed, 'No – one must not. And yet – have you never had a dream that haunts you – a dream that comes again?'

'I've had bad dreams,' she admitted, 'horrid ones; but not the same dream twice.'

'What do you dream of when your dreams are terrible?'

'Beasts,' she answered promptly. 'Big beasts that jump at me! And I run and run – ugh!'

Mrs Osgood sipped her coffee and watched them. There was no young poet more promising than this. He represented all that her own girlhood had longed for – all that the highly prosperous mill-owner she married had utterly failed to give. If her daughter could have what she had missed!

'They say those dreams come from our remote past,' she suggested. 'Do you believe that, Mr Pendexter?'

'Yes,' he agreed, 'from our racial infancy. From those long buried years of fear and pain.'

'And when we have that queer feeling of having been there before – isn't that the same thing?'

'We do not know,' said he. 'Some say it is from a moment's delay in action of one- half of the brain. I cannot tell. To me it is more mysterious, more interesting, to think that when one has that wonderful sudden sense of previous acquaintance it means vague memories of a former life.' And he looked at Ellen as if she had figured largely in his previous existence. 'Have you ever had that feeling, Miss Osgood?'

The girl laughed rather shamefacedly. 'I've had it about one thing,' she said. 'That's why I'm afraid of water.'

'Afraid of water! You! A water goddess!'

'O, I don't encourage it, of course. But it's the only thing I ever was nervous about. I've had it from childhood – that horrid feeling!'

She shivered a little, and asked if he wouldn't like some music.

'Ah! You make music too?'

She laughed gaily. 'Only with the pianola – or the other machine. Shall I start it?'

'A moment,' he said. 'In a moment. But tell me, will you not, of this dream of something terrible? I am so deeply interested.'

'Why, it isn't much,' she said. 'I don't dream it, really – it comes when I'm awake. Only two or three times – once when I was about ten or eleven, and twice since. It's water – black, still, smooth water – way down below me. And I can't get away from it. I want to – and then something grabs me – ugh!'

She got up decidedly and went to the music stand. 'If that's a relic of my past I must have been prematurely cut off by an enraged ape! Anyhow, I don't like water – unless it's wild ocean. What shall I play?'

He meant to rise next morning with the daylight, but failed to awaken; and when he did look out he saw the canoe shooting lightly home in time for breakfast.

She laughed at him for his laziness, but promised a lesson later, and was pleased to find that he could play tennis. He looked well in his white flannels, in fact his appearance was more admirable than his playing, and the girl beat him till he grew almost angry.

Mrs Osgood watched delightedly on occasions where watching was agreeable, and on other occasions she took herself off with various excuses, and left them much together.

He expressed to her privately a question as to whether he was not too heavy for the canoe, but she reassured him.

'O, no, indeed, Mr Pendexter; it's a specially wide canoe, and has air chambers in it – it can't sink.' Her father had made it for her. 'He's a heavy man himself, and loves canoeing.'

So the stalwart poet was directed to step softly into the middle, and given the bow paddle.

It grieved him much that he could not see his fair instructress, and he proposed that they change places.

'No, indeed!' she said. 'Trust you with the other paddle? – Not yet!'

Could he not at least face her, he suggested. At which she laughed wickedly, and told him he'd better learn to paddle forward before he tried to do it backward.

'If you want to look at me you might get another canoe and try to follow,' she added, smiling; whereat he declared her would obey orders absolutely.

He sat all across the little rattan bow seat, and rolled up his sleeves as she did. She gave him the paddle, showed him how to hold it, and grinned silently as his mighty strokes swung them to right or left, for all her vigorous steering.

'Not so hard!' she said. 'You are stronger than I, and your stroke is so far out you swing me around.'

With a little patience he mastered the art sufficiently to wield a fairly serviceable bow paddle, but she would not trust him with the stern; and not all the beauties of the quiet lake consoled him for losing sight of her. Still, he reflected, she could see him. Perhaps that was why she kept him there in front! – and he sat straighter at the thought.

She did rather enjoy the well proportioned bulk of him, but she had small respect for his lack of dexterity, and felt a real dislike for the heavy fell of black hair on his arms and hands.

He tired of canoeing. One cannot direct speaking glances over one's shoulder, nor tender words; not with good effect, that is. At tennis he found her so steadily victor that he tired of that too. Golf she did not care for; horses he was unfamiliar with; and when she ran the car her hands and eyes and whole attention were on the machine. So he begged for walking.

'You must having charming walks in these woods,' he said. 'I own inferiority in many ways – but I can walk!'

'All right,' she cheerily agreed, and tramped about the country with him, brisk and tireless.

Her mother watched breathlessly. She wholly admired this ox-eyed man with the velvet voice, the mouth so red under his soft mustache. She thought his poetry noble and musical beyond measure. Ellen thought it was 'no mortal use.'

'What on earth does he want to make over those old legends for, anyway!' she said, when her mother tried to win her to some appreciation. 'Isn't there enough to write about today without going back to people who never existed anyhow – nothing but characters out of other people's stories?'

'They are parts of the world's poetic material, my dear; folklore, race-myths. They are among our universal images.'

'Well, I don't like poetry about universal images, that's all. It's like mummies – sort of warmed over and dressed up!'

'I am so sorry!' said her mother, with some irritation. 'Here we are honored with a visit from one of our very greatest poets – perhaps the greatest; and my own child hasn't sense enough to appreciate his beautiful work. You are so like your father!'

'Well, I can't help it,' said Ellen. 'I don't like those foolish old stories about people who never did anything useful, and hadn't an idea in their heads except being in love and killing somebody! They had no sense, and no courage, and no decency!

Her mother tried to win her to some admission of merit in his other work.

'It's no use, mama! You may have your poet, and get all the esthetic satisfaction you can out of it. And I'll be polite to him, of course. But I don't like his stuff.'

'Not his "Lyrics of the Day," dear? And "The Woods"?'

'No, mumsy, not even those. I don't believe he ever saw a sunrise – unless he got up on purpose and set himself before it like a camera! And woods! Why he don't know one tree from another!'

Her mother almost despaired of her; but the poet was not discouraged.

'Ah! Mrs Osgood! Since you honor me with your confidence I can but thank you and try my fate. It is so beautiful, this budding soul – not opened yet! So close – so almost hard! But when its rosy petals do unfold -'

He did not, however, give his confidence to Mrs Osgood beyond this gentle poetic outside view of a sort of floricultural intent. He told her nothing of the storm of passion which was growing within him; a passion of such seething intensity as would have alarmed that gentle soul exceedingly and make her doubt, perhaps, the wisdom of her selection.

She remained in a state of eager but restrained emotion; saying little to Ellen lest she alarm her, but hoping that the girl would find happiness with this great soul.

The great soul, meanwhile, pursued his way, using every art he knew – and his experience was not narrow – to reach the heart of the brown and ruddy nymph beside him.

She was ignorant and young. Too whole- souled in her indifference to really appreciate the stress he labored under; much less to sympathize. On the contrary she took a mischievous delight in teasing him, doing harm without knowing it, like a playful child. She teased him about his tennis playing, about his paddling, about his driving; allowed that perhaps he might play golf well, but she didn't care for golf herself – it was too slow; mocked even his walking expeditions.

'He don't want to walk!' she said gaily to her mother one night at dinner. 'He just wants to go somewhere and arrange himself gracefully under a tree and read to me about Eloise, or Araminta or somebody; all slim and white and wavy and golden-haired; and how they killed themselves for love!'

She laughed frankly at him, and he laughed with her; but his heart was hot and dark within him. The longer he pursued and failed the fiercer was his desire for her. Already he had loved longer than was usual to him. Never before had his overwhelming advances been so lightly parried and set aside.

'Will you take a walk with me this evening after dinner?' he proposed. 'There is a most heavenly moon – and I cannot see to read to you. It must be strangely lovely – the moonlight – on your lake, is it not, Mrs Osgood?'

'It is indeed,' she warmly agreed, looking disapprovingly on the girl, who was still giggling softly at the memory of golden-haired Araminta. 'Take him on the cliff walk, Ellen, and do try to be more appreciative of beauty!'

'Yes, mama,' said Ellen, 'I'll be good.'

She was so good upon the moonlit walk; so gentle and sympathetic, and so honestly tried to find some point of agreement, that his feelings were too much for his judgment, and he seized her hand and kissed it. She pushed him away, too astonished for words.

'Why, Mr Pendexter! What are you thinking of!'

Then he poured out his heart to her. He told her how he loved her – madly, passionately, irresistably. He begged her to listen to him.

'Ah! You young Diana! You do not know how I suffer! You are so young, so cold! So heavenly beautiful! Do not be cruel! Listen to me! Say you will be my wife! Give me one kiss! Just one!'

She was young, and cold, and ignorantly cruel. She laughed at him, laughed mercilessly, and turned away.

He followed her, the blood pounding in his veins, his voice shaken with the intensity of his emotions. He caught her hand and drew her toward him again. She broke from him with a little cry, and ran. He followed, hotly, madly; rushed upon her, caught her, held her fast.

'You shall love me! You shall!' he cried. His hands were hot and trembling, but he held her close and turned her face to his.

'I will not!' she cried, struggling. 'Let me go! I hate you, I tell you. I hate you! You are – disgusting!' She pushed as far from him as he could.

They had reached the top of the little cliff opposite the house. Huge dark pines hung over them, their wide boughs swaying softly.

The water lay below in the shadow, smooth and oil- black.

The girl looked down at it, and a sudden shudder shook her tense frame. She gave a low moan and hid her face in her hands.

'Ah!' he cried. 'It is your fate! Our fate! We have lived through this before! We will die together if we cannot live together!'

He caught her to him, kissed her madly, passionately, and together they went down into the black water.

'It's pretty lucky I could swim,' said Ellen, as she hurried home. 'And he couldn't. The poor man! O, the poor man! He must have been crazy!'

The Reckoning

曼斯蒂夫人窗外的景色

曼斯蒂夫人窗外的景色谈不上多么引人注目，但至少对她来说，那景色是引人入胜、美丽动人的。曼斯蒂夫人所住之处是纽约一栋寄宿公寓三楼靠后的那个房间。在夜里，人行道上依旧摆放着灰桶 [1]，要是昆图斯·库尔提乌斯 [2] 还活着，人行道砖石之间的缝隙大到他都会感觉吃惊不已 [3]。曼斯蒂夫人已故的丈夫以前是一间规模庞大的批发商行里的售货员，因为她的独生女儿嫁到了加利福尼亚，也没钱长途跋涉来纽约探望母亲，所以丈夫死后，就只剩下曼斯蒂夫人孤身一人。或许曼斯蒂夫人也可以搬到西岸和她女儿团聚，可她们到目前为止已经分开多年，丝毫没有融入彼此社交圈的需求了。且长期以来，她俩的交流也仅限于几封敷衍的通信往来，女儿的信字里行间透露着冷漠，曼斯蒂夫人的信回得也困难——因为痛风，她的右手已经变得越来越僵硬。就算她强烈地渴望女儿能够陪伴在旁，可曼斯蒂夫人日渐虚弱的身体，让她就连从街上爬三层楼梯回到自己房内都感到恐惧，这样的状态肯定会让她在尝试如此漫长的旅途前夕犹豫不决，而或许就算不编造这些理由，她也早已理所当然地接受了自己得在纽约独自生活。

当然，她也算不上孤单，因为时不时地，还是会有一些朋友辛苦地爬楼，到她房间来，但是随着年纪的增长，她们来得也越来越少了。曼斯蒂夫人从来都不算是一个很热爱社交的人，丈夫还健在的那些日子里，他的陪伴对曼斯蒂夫人来说就绰绰有余了。多年来，她内心深处一直抱有能够回到乡村里生活的渴望，在那儿搭个鸡舍，再建个花园，但是随着年龄的增长，这个想法已渐渐淡去。这位不善言谈的老女人心中仅存的那一丝柔软之处，留给了植物和动物。或许就是这一丝柔软，让她对自己窗外的景色拥有如此炙热的情感。乍眼一看，这景色即便在最善于发现美的人眼中，恐怕都很难找到任何可取之处。

曼斯蒂夫人所处的有利位置是一个略微突出的弓形窗，她在这里种了一盆常春藤，还有一串看上去不太健康的鳞茎植物。从这里看上去，最先映入眼帘的是自己房间的后院，但她能瞥到的范围十分有限。当然，她还是能看到窗下臭椿树最顶端的那些枝干，也能知道每年荷包牡丹多早就在弯茎上挂出一簇簇粉红的心形花朵。

但她更感兴趣的是后面的院子。因为院子大部分和寄宿公寓相连，长期以来都是又脏乱又嘈杂，在一周的某些日子里，总会挂满各种各样的衣物和磨损的桌布。尽管如此，曼斯蒂夫人还是在自己所俯视的这片远景中找到了许多值得欣赏的地方。的确，院子里有很多石子瓦砾，人行道的缝隙间杂草丛生，春天的时候，除了晾衣绳上零零散散晾着的衣裳间露出的绿叶，没有任何荫蔽之处。曼斯蒂夫人不喜欢院子的这块地方，但她热爱其他部分——绿意盎然的那部分。凌乱的院子已经让她习以为常，那些破烂的木桶、空瓶子，还有没人打扫的小路也不再令她感到恼火。她拥有一种自我愉悦的能力，让自己可以沉浸在眼前景色中美好的那一面。

就在紧邻的圈地里，不是正有一棵木兰花在四月水蓝色的晴空下绽放出它那轮廓分明、洁白如雪的花朵？以及在不远处，每年一到五月，不是还有那淡紫色的紫藤花一浪接着一浪地从篱笆上冒出头来？更远的地方，一棵七叶树从它宽大的扇形叶片上举出了烛台一样淡黄色和粉色的花朵，而就在它对面的院子里，一到六月则会弥漫着丁香花那甜美的香气；它看起来并不打眼，尽管生长环境对它十分不利，却依旧不屈不挠。

如果说曼斯蒂夫人望向窗外，首先注意到的是自然景色，那么除此之外，窗外所有的房子和里面居住的人们的个性，对她来说，则更有吸引力。她非常不喜欢对面医生家最近挂上的那个芥末黄色的窗帘，不过，医生家后面那座房子的老砖块刷上一层新漆的时候，却令她脸上洋溢着喜悦。那座房子的住户并不经常在后窗露脸，可是透过窗户，总能看见他家的用人。曼斯蒂夫人多次表示那是一帮吵吵嚷嚷的荡妇，她了解她们的行为举止，且对此十分反感。但新粉刷房子里安静的厨师则得到了曼斯蒂夫人最深切的同情，女主人总是欺负她，而她在入夜后总会悄悄地去投喂流浪猫。有一次，曼斯蒂夫人的心情被疏忽的女佣给破坏了，女佣足足有两天忘记投喂交由她照看的鸚鵡。到了第三天，尽管右手患有痛风，曼斯蒂夫人还是拿起笔写了封信，信的开头是这样的：“夫人，你的鸚鵡已经三天没有吃饭了……”正在此时，健忘的女佣拿着一杯瓜子出现在了窗前。

但在曼斯蒂夫人更深的思绪中，最让她感到愉悦的是院子深处那道越发狭窄的深景。薄暮时分，当远处褐石尖顶看上去就像是和西边流动的黄晕融为一体时，她喜欢让自己的思绪迷走于多年前欧洲之行的那段模糊记忆当中。在她的想象里，那段回忆现已沦为一片关于朦胧尖塔和梦幻天空的苍白幻影。或许，曼斯蒂夫人内心深处实际上是个艺术家，在任何场合，她都能敏感地留意到普通人所注意不到的颜色变化。在早春的绿意中，她最喜欢的是下雪天的黄昏，在硫黄色天空的映衬下，那错落有致的树枝所拼凑出的黑色格子。她同样享受的还有三月份阳光灿烂的融雪天。每到这时，大地便会一点点从冰雪里

探出脑袋，就像是一张白色吸墨纸上散落的墨迹。更美好的是那朦胧的树影，虽然还没长出叶子，但都臃肿起来，不像冬天那样利落。她甚至饶有兴致地观察着远处工厂烟囱的一尾轻烟。当工厂关闭、烟雾消失后，这片风景中也便少了一个细节。

曼斯蒂夫人长时间坐在窗边并不是无所事事。她有时候读书，也织过无数双袜子，可就如同大海包围着孤单的岛屿一样，窗外的景色才真正占据着她的生活，也定义了她的生活。当难得有客人来时，她依旧会沉浸在对面正在清洗的窗户中不愿回神，或者很难从对某位邻居花床中那些绿点点——不知道它们会不会长成风信子——的仔细观察中抽离，而与此同时，她还要假装对访客某个从未谋面的孙子的逸事表示关心。曼斯蒂夫人真正的陪伴来自院子里的居民：那些风信子、木兰花；那只绿色的鸚鵡；那个喂猫的女佣；在芥末黄色窗帘后学习到深夜的医生；还有一同冥想的知己——那飘浮在夕阳之中的教堂塔尖。

四月的一天，曼斯蒂夫人正坐在老地方，手边放着正在织的活儿，眼睛盯着窗外，圆圆的云朵散落在湛蓝色天空中。一阵敲门声后，她的房东太太走了进来。曼斯蒂夫人不太喜欢她的房东，可还是礼貌性地迎房东进了屋。可今天似乎比起往常更难让她把目光从窗外的蓝天和绽放的木兰花上转移到桑普森夫人那张无趣的脸上，曼斯蒂夫人清楚地意识到自己费了很大的力气才把注意力拉回来。

“桑普森夫人，木兰花今年比往年开得要早。”她罕见地因为冲动脱口而出，因为她很少会提到自己生活中感兴趣的事。首先，这话题恐怕对她的访客来说没有任何吸引力，其次，她缺乏表达的能力，就算想要表达也没有办法说出自己的内心感受。

“什么花，曼斯蒂夫人？”房东太太一边问，一边在房间里四处张望，想要找到曼斯蒂夫人说那句话的原因。

“隔壁院子的木兰花——在布莱克的院子里。”曼斯蒂夫人又说了一次。

“真的吗？我都不知道那里有棵木兰。”桑普森夫人一脸不在乎地说。曼斯蒂夫人吃惊地看着她——她竟然不知道隔壁院子有一棵木兰！

“对了，”桑普森夫人继续道，“说起布莱克夫人，我想起来了，房屋扩建下周就要开工了。”

“开什么工？”这次轮到曼斯蒂夫人问了。

“房屋扩建。”桑普森夫人朝着自己忽视的木兰花那个方向点了点头，“你肯定知道布莱克夫人要给她的房子扩建的事儿吧？曼斯蒂夫

人，你肯定知道的。我听说一直要把房子扩建到院墙根那儿。我是不知道在这种困难时期她哪儿来的钱能支付得起这么大规模的扩建，但是她总是对盖房子很痴迷。她之前在十七号大街开了一所寄宿公寓，有一次在往外装拱形窗还是干什么的时候差点儿伤着自己，我以为那次能让她彻底断了盖房子的念头，但我猜这大概就像喝酒一样，是种病。无论如何，扩建工程星期一就开始了。”

曼斯蒂夫人脸色变得无比苍白。她说话总是很慢，所以房东太太没留意到她听完自己讲话之后漫长的停顿。最后曼斯蒂夫人说：“你知道扩建要盖多高吗？”

“这是最诡异的地方。扩建的部分要一直盖到和主楼的楼顶一样高，哎呀，怎么会这样？”

曼斯蒂夫人又停顿了一下。“这不会给你带来巨大的不便吗，桑普森夫人？”她问道。

“要我说的确会，但我说了也没有用。据我所知，如果有人想要扩建，没有哪条法律能够阻止他们。”曼斯蒂夫人听到后，安静了下来。“说了也没用，”桑普森夫人又重复了一次，“但如果我是教会成员，扩建的事要是把伊莱扎·布莱克的身体搞坏，我也不会替她难过。好吧，曼斯蒂夫人，再见啦，我很高兴你住得很舒服。”

很舒服——很舒服！剩下老妇人独自一人后，她又转身面对着窗户。那天的景色是多么的美丽啊！蔚蓝的天空上飘着朵朵白云，大地上的万物被天空映衬得那么明净祥和。臭椿刚披上一件淡淡的黄绿色新衣，风信子含苞欲放，而木兰花则比以往任何时候都更像是雪花石膏雕刻出的玫瑰花饰。很快地，紫藤花将要绽放，随后就是七叶树，但这都没她什么事儿了。在她的视线和它们之间，很快就会升起一堵泥灰砖墙，不久就连教堂的塔尖也会消失，而她那洋溢着幸福的世界将会被抹杀殆尽。曼斯蒂夫人把那天晚上送来的餐盘原封不动地退了回去。她在窗前提徊，直到夕阳在风中消失于暗黄的暮色之中，随后她上床就寝，躺在床上却彻夜未眠。

第二天一大早，她就起床了，站在窗前。窗外下着雨，可即使透过斜挂着的薄纱，窗外的景色依旧散发着它独特的魅力——雨水对树木是十分有益的。她前一天就注意到臭椿上已积满了尘土。

“我当然也可以搬走。”曼斯蒂夫人大声地说，然后从窗口转过身来，环顾了一下她的房间。当然，她也能搬走，正如她也能活生生地被人把皮剥掉一样。但无论经历哪一样，她还能活下来的概率都是微乎其微的。这房间对于她的幸福而言，虽然远没有窗外景色来得重要，但也是她人生的一部分。她在这里住了十七年了，她知道墙纸上的每一处污渍、地毯上的每一个裂缝；光线以某种方式洒落在她的版

画上，书架上所有的书本早已变得破旧不堪，她的鳞茎和常春藤已经习惯了它们的窗口，知道该靠着哪个方向更接近阳光。“我们都已经老得搬不动了。”她说。

那天下午就放晴了。外面湿漉漉又亮闪闪的，那一大片蓝色穿透破碎的残云再次现身，臭椿水光闪闪，花坛里的泥土看起来肥沃而温暖。今天是星期四，下个星期一房屋扩建的工程就要开始了。

星期天下午的时候，当布莱克夫人正在地下室忙着收集食材给寄宿客人准备晚餐之际，有人给她送来了一张卡片。这张嵌着黑边的卡片上写着曼斯蒂夫人的名字。

“桑普森夫人那里的一位寄宿客人，我猜可能是想搬家。好吧，黛娜，明年扩建完工后我可以给她一个房间，”布莱克夫人说，“告诉那位女士，我马上就上楼去。”

布莱克夫人发现曼斯蒂夫人站在长长的起居室里，里面摆放着许多小雕像和椅套。在这座房子里，她坐不下来。

布莱克夫人急忙弯下腰打开记账本，这个动作扬起了一团灰尘，然后她朝来客走去。

“很高兴见到你，曼斯蒂夫人，请坐。”女房东的声音十分洪亮，这嗓音绝对出自一位能够负担得起扩建的女人。曼斯蒂夫人没有办法，只能坐下。

“夫人，请问，我有什么能帮到你的吗？”布莱克夫人接着说，“我的房子现在都住满了，不过我打算扩建，而——”

“我想跟你说的就是关于那个扩建的事情。”曼斯蒂夫人突然开口说道，“我是个贫穷的女人，布莱克夫人，而我从来也没多快乐过。我必须先跟你说说我自己的事——这样才能让你理解。”

布莱克夫人吃了一惊，不过很快就镇静下来，顺从地听着这段突如其来地插话。

“我从来没有得到过我想要的，”曼斯蒂夫人接着说，“失望总是一个接着一个到来。多年以来，我一直想住到乡下去，我一直梦想着，可我们一直没能做到。我们的房子没有向阳的窗户，所以我所有的植物都死了。我女儿好多年前结婚搬走了——再说，她和我喜欢的东西从来都不一样。然后我的丈夫去世了，留下我孤单一人。这已经是十七年前的事了。我搬到桑普森夫人那儿，从那以后，我就一直住在那里。你也能看得出来，我变得有点儿虚弱了，而我也经常不出门，只有在天气好的时候，如果我覺得好一点儿才出去。所以你能够理解为什么我经常坐在我的窗户外——就是三楼的后窗。”

“好吧，曼斯蒂夫人，”布莱克夫人慷慨地说，“我向你保证，可以给你一间在后面的房间。新房间，就是扩——”

“但是我不想搬家，我不能搬家，”曼斯蒂夫人几乎要喊了起来，“而我来就是想告诉你，如果你扩建了房子，我的窗户就看不到任何景色了——没有任何景色！你明白吗？”

布莱克夫人以为自己碰到了疯子，而她总是听说疯子必须要哄着来。“我的天，我的天，”她一边说一边把椅子往后推了一点儿，“这太糟糕了，不是吗？为什么我从来没想到这一点。肯定的，曼斯蒂夫人，扩建会影响到你窗外的景色。”

“你真的懂？”曼斯蒂夫人惊了一下。

“我当然可以理解。而我对此也非常抱歉。但是，曼斯蒂夫人，你别担心。我想我们能够好好地这件事给解决了。”

曼斯蒂夫人从她的座椅上站了起来，而布莱克夫人溜向了门口。

“你说解决是什么意思，难道你的意思是我能够说服你改变扩建的主意？噢，布莱克夫人，听我说，我银行里有两千美元的存款，而我，我知道我能给你一千美元，如果——”曼斯蒂夫人停了下来，泪水滚落到她的脸颊上。

“好吧，好吧，曼斯蒂夫人，你不用担心。”布莱克夫人安抚地说道，“我肯定我们能够解决的。我很抱歉，不能继续待在这里和你聊下去，现在正是一天中最忙的时候，要准备晚——”

布莱克夫人的手已经伸到了门把上，但曼斯蒂夫人突然一下子用力抓住她的手腕。

“你没有给我一个确切的答复。你的意思是你接受了我的提议吗？”

“哎呀，曼斯蒂夫人，我会再考虑一下的，我肯定会。我无论如何也不会惹你生气的——”

“但我听说施工明天就要开始了。”曼斯蒂夫人非常坚持。

布莱克夫人犹豫了一下：“明天不会开始的，我向你保证，我今天晚上就给那些工人传话。”曼斯蒂夫人把她的手腕抓得更紧了。

“你不会是在骗我吧？”她说。

“不——不，”布莱克夫人结结巴巴地说，“曼斯蒂夫人，你怎么能这么想我呢？”

慢慢地，曼斯蒂夫人紧握的手松开了，她从敞开的门走了出去。“一千美元——”她停在大厅里重复了一次，然后她自己走出门

外，一瘸一拐地走下台阶，靠在铸铁栏杆上。

“我的老天爷，”布莱克夫人惊叹着关上了大厅的门，并把门闩上，“我以前从来不知道那个老妇人是个疯子！而她看起来非常安静，也很优雅。”

曼斯蒂夫人当晚睡得很好，但第二天一大早，她就被锤砸的声音吵醒了。她赶紧以最快的速度走到窗前，向外看，发现布莱克夫人的院子里到处都是工人。有的工人把砖块从厨房搬到院子里，其他人则开始动手拆除布莱克夫人房子每层楼都有的老式木阳台装饰。曼斯蒂夫人意识到自己被欺骗了。起初，她想把自己的烦恼告诉桑普森夫人，但很快一股深深的挫败感占据了她的思绪，她回到床上，不再理会外面所发生的一切。

不过到了下午，她觉得自己必须要了解最坏的那一步。她下了床，穿好了衣服。这对她来说是一项艰巨的任务，因为她的双手比往常更加僵硬，而那些钩子和纽扣似乎都在躲着她。

坐在窗前时，她看见窗外工人已经把阳台上半部分拆掉了，而砖块也比早上多了很多。其中一个男人——一个满脸浮肿的工人——捡起了一朵木兰花放在鼻子前闻了闻，然后把花丢在了地上。另一个男人，在搬砖的途中直接踩在这朵花上。

“吉姆，小心点，”一个男人对另外一个抽烟斗的男人喊道，“如果你把火柴扔到这些装满废纸的木桶附近，你还没能反应过来，可能就已经把这个危险的老房子给烧光了。”曼斯蒂夫人把头伸出窗外，看到在木阳台下有几个装了废纸的木桶，还有一些垃圾。

工程终于在暮色降临的时候停了下来。落日是如此完美，玫红色的余晖徘徊于西边的天际，让远处的教堂尖顶更加美轮美奂。当天色变暗的时候，曼斯蒂夫人拉下窗帘，以她一直以来有条不紊的方式点起了灯。她总是亲手把煤油装满再把灯点着，那壶煤油则一直存放在橱柜里一个锌盖架子上。煤油灯亮起来，充满灯光的房间立刻呈现出像平常一样宁静的样子。那些书本、画作以及植物，就像它们的主人一样，在又一个安静的夜晚要准备休息了。而曼斯蒂夫人就像往常一样，把扶手椅拉到桌子边上，开始织起袜子来。

这天夜晚，她没能睡着。变天了，屋外刮起了狂风，乌云密集，遮挡了空中的繁星。曼斯蒂夫人两三次起身，看向窗外，但是除了对面窗户里还亮着的那一两盏灯外，什么都看不清楚。最后这些灯光也熄灭了。曼斯蒂夫人一直在等这些灯光熄灭，此刻她穿起了衣服。她显然是非常着急，因为她只在睡衣外披了一件薄薄的晨衣，头上裹了一条围巾，然后打开壁橱的门，小心翼翼地拿出了那壶煤油。她把一把火柴塞进口袋，更加小心地打开了自己的房门。没过多久，在楼下

大厅里汽油灯微弱灯光的引领下，她摸索着走下了黑暗的楼梯，最后到达了楼梯底层，开始更加艰难地朝着漆黑一片的地下室走去。不过她在这里可以移动得更自由一些，因为在这里被听到的风险要小一点儿，而她毫不迟疑地设法打开了通向院子的铁门。她从地下室走出来，当她在晾衣绳下颤抖地摸索前行时，一阵冷风突然袭来。

那天清晨三点钟的时候，一阵火警警报把消防车带到了布莱克夫人的门口，同样也把桑普森夫人那些受到惊吓的房客带到了他们的窗口。布莱克夫人房子后面的木阳台烧起来了，而曼斯蒂夫人也在这群观望着火势的人群当中，她穿着薄薄的晨衣，把头探出了敞开的窗户外边。

不过火很快就被扑灭了，房子里那些惊慌失措的住户，之前穿着单薄的衣服逃出来了，天亮时分又重新回到住处，发现除了碎掉的玻璃窗和被烟熏黑的屋顶之外，房子并没有什么大碍。事实上，这场火最大的受害人是曼斯蒂夫人，第二天早晨，人们发现她气喘吁吁的，患上了肺炎，正如所有人所说，以她这个年纪还穿着晨衣把身子伸出窗外，这个结果也是意料之中的。很容易就能看得出她病得很重，但谁也没想到医生的诊断结果会是如此严重。那天晚上聚集在桑普森夫人桌前的每个人脸色都非常凝重和不安。并没有任何一个房客十分了解曼斯蒂夫人，“她总是独来独往”，正如她们所说，似乎觉得自己比其他房客都要高上一等。但是有人死在这所房子里总归是不太好，正如有位夫人对另外一位所说：“我亲爱的，这也很有可能发生在你我身上。”

但这就发生在了曼斯蒂夫人身上，她正在慢慢死去，就像她曾经活过那样，就算不是孤单一人，也是孤独的。医生派来了一位训练有素的护士，而桑普森太太时不时踩着低沉的步子走过来看看。但对于曼斯蒂夫人来说，这两个人都像是梦中人物一样遥远而虚幻。一整天下来她什么话也没说，但当有人问她女儿住址的时候，她摇了摇头。有时候护士留意到她在聚精会神地听着什么声音，没能听到后，就又昏睡过去了。

第二天天亮的时候，她的状态更差了。护士叫来了桑普森夫人，当她俩朝着这老太太俯下身的时候，她们看到她的嘴唇在动。

“扶我起来，扶我下床。”她轻声说道。

她们用手臂把她撑起来，她用僵硬的手指指向窗户。

“噢，那扇窗户——她想要坐在窗户边。她以前在那里一坐就是一天，”桑普森夫人解释道，“我想，这对她也没什么坏处吧？”

“现在什么都无所谓了。”护士说。

她们把曼斯蒂夫人扶到窗边，把她放在她的椅子上。窗外天刚亮，是一个让人感到喜悦的春日黎明，虽然木兰花和七叶树还在暗影中沉睡，但教堂的尖顶早已染上了一层金色的光芒。布莱克夫人的院子里一片寂静。阳台上烧焦的木头还躺在掉下来的地方。很明显，自从那场火灾后，工人们还没有继续他们的工作。木兰花又开出了几朵雕塑般立体的花朵，窗外的景色毫发无伤。

曼斯蒂夫人呼吸起来很辛苦，每呼吸一次都更加困难。她试图让她们把窗户打开，可她们并没有听懂。如果她能尝一口窗外的空气，臭椿那沁人心脾的芳香，会让她放松很多。可至少窗外的风景还在——教堂尖顶现在金光灿灿的，天空的颜色已经从蓝灰变成湛蓝，一天的开始是从东边到西边一丝丝被点亮的，就连木兰花现在也晒到了阳光。

曼斯蒂夫人的头向后一倒，在微笑中离开了人世。就在那一天，房子的扩建工程又恢复了。

第一章

“新实施的婚姻法将是：你不应对自我不忠。”

表示赞同的呢喃声响起，填满整个画室。当她丈夫从临时搭建的讲台上走下来时，克莱门特·韦斯托尔的太太透过烟雾看见他融入到一群对他表示祝贺的女士当中。韦斯托尔对于“新伦理学”的非正式发言为他吸引来了一群精神匮乏的热情拥护者，用他自己的话说，这群人喜欢别人把精神食粮切好喂到嘴边。这一系列的发言并非计划好的。众所周知，韦斯托尔的思想属于“先锋派”，但是迄今为止，他并没有打算公开宣扬这些先锋思想。在他妻子看来，一直以来，他几乎是小心翼翼地不让自己的个人观点给自己的专业地位带来不良影响。然而，他近期表现出越来越武断的倾向让人疑惑。他发起了挑战，在公众社会的面前炫耀自己的个人准则，而且两性关系的话题肯定能吸引大量的眼球。有几个欣赏他的朋友说服他把自己晚餐后的谈资总结成一系列的演讲，在范·西德伦的画室里发表，让这些观点可以面向更多的听众。

赫伯特·范·西德伦夫妇在社交世界中安身立命的根本，便是他们所拥有的这间画室。范·西德伦画作的主要价值在于充当妻子聚会场所的背景装饰，使他妻子的午后聚会有别于其他在纽约那些长长的客厅里所举办的枯燥乏味的活动，也让她有机会给朋友们提供威士忌苏打而不是茶水。对范·西德伦夫人而言，她非常擅长于利用人体模型和画架所创造出的氛围。而如果时不时地，她觉得这种假象难以维持，甚至沮丧到希望赫伯特能再画些画时，她便会迅速地找来一些有才华的新鲜血液，加强一点儿艺术气氛，缓解此时的脆弱心理。也就是在寻找这种外援的时候，她逮住了韦斯托尔，哄着他——出乎他妻子的意料——让他倍感荣幸地变成了自己骗局中的一位参与者。在范·西德伦的圈子里，人们能够微妙感觉到，所有的大胆妄为都被看成是艺术性的。一位宣称婚姻是不道德的教师，就像是一位把草地画成紫色、天空画成绿色的画家一样与众不同。而范·西德伦那一帮人已经厌倦了艺术和行为上传统的色彩搭配。

茱莉亚·韦斯托尔一直以来都对婚姻的不道德性有着自己的看法，

或许她的确早已把她的丈夫纳为门徒。在他们的婚姻初期，她在心里对于丈夫不愿意宣称自己是新信条追随者这件事是感到怨恨的。她一直都更倾向于指责丈夫在道德方面是怯懦的，他根本没能履行二人婚姻理应坚持的信念。那是她第一次萌发了想要公开自己信仰的念头，正如普通女人一样，她想把自己的不服从变成合法的。现在她有了不同的感觉。她根本无法解释这些变化，可作为一个女人，她是永远不会允许自己的冲动无法得到合理解释的。为了使自己的冲动得到合理的解释，她说她不介意表达自己信念的文章被俗人所曲解。抱持着这样的想法，她开始觉得几乎所有人都是粗俗的。当然，她也觉得几乎没有什么人值得她去信赖，值得她去向他们阐释如此深奥的学说。然而也恰在此时，韦斯托尔决定抛开他保持沉默的原则，选择从隐私的制高点上走下来，开始站在街角兜售自己的信念。

在这种情况下，是尤娜·范·西德伦无意之中把韦斯托尔夫人摇摆不定的怨恨招惹到了自己身上。首先，这女孩儿根本就不应该出现在那里。光是一想到一个年轻的女孩儿竟然能够被允许去听这样的讲话，韦斯托尔夫人就觉得“可怕”——她发现自己又置身于过时的女性主义词汇之中——简直太“可怕”了。尤娜抽烟、偶尔抿一口鸡尾酒的这些行为，丝毫没有玷污她那光彩夺目的单纯形象，反而使她看上去更像是父母庸俗行为的受害者，而不是他们的帮凶。茱莉亚·韦斯托尔感到非常无助，她觉得必须得做点什么——有人应该要跟这女孩儿的母亲聊聊。而正在此时，尤娜溜到她身旁。

“哦，韦斯托尔夫人，刚才的演讲太棒了！”尤娜用清澈的大眼睛盯着她：“我想，你相信他所说的全部？”她的语气中带有一丝神圣的力量。

“全部……全部什么，我亲爱的孩子？”

女孩儿脸上露出了光彩。“关于更高级的生活……个人更自由的拓展……忠于自我的法则。”她流利地背诵出来。

韦斯托尔夫人大吃一惊，脸涨得通红。

“我亲爱的尤娜，”她说，“你根本不理解这是怎么一回事！”

范·西德伦小姐瞪大双眼，脸渐渐红了起来，回答道：“那么，您理解吗？”她喃喃说道。

韦斯托尔夫人笑了。“并不总是能理解……或并不能完全理解！但是我想喝点茶，麻烦你了。”

尤娜带着她来到了分发无酒精饮品的角落，茱莉亚接过她的茶，更仔细地打量着这个女孩儿。这不是一张未经世故、天真无邪的脸庞，毕竟在青春岁月的朦胧美好之下，棱角分明的轮廓也逐渐形成。

她想起来尤娜大概是二十六岁，好奇她为什么尚未结婚。要是能有许多好的想法作为嫁妆该多好！如果想法可以成为现代女孩儿嫁妆的一部分……

韦斯托尔夫人被自己的想法吓了一跳。仿佛就像是一个陌生人借用了自己的声音在说话：她觉得自己就像是被什么神奇的心理腹语术给骗了。她突然觉得房间里闷得透不过气来。尤娜的茶太甜了，她放下茶杯，四处张望，寻找韦斯托尔——和他的双目对视已经成为她面对一切不确定性时的避难所。现在，她找到了韦斯托尔的眼睛，但是她感到它们只是擦身而过而已，它们顺带把她捎上了一次更远大的飞行。她跟随着这班飞机，而它载着她来到了尤娜退避到的一个角落里——范·西德伦太太认为是这个热闹角落促成了她周六的聚会。韦斯托尔先生没过多久，就追赶上自己眼神的脚步，在女孩儿身边找到了一席之地。女孩儿倾身向前，急切地说着什么，他向后靠着，带着轻蔑的微笑听着，仿佛那笑容能将尤娜的吹捧过滤掉，让他能够在享用最大剂量的奉承之余，又不显现出自己对它的饥渴。茱莉亚对这个微笑的定义让她脸部的肌肉抽搐了一下。

在回家的路上，冬日的黄昏时分，街上没多少人，韦斯托尔突然像个小男孩儿似的握住了他妻子的胳膊：“我有没有让他们开了一点儿眼界？我有没有把你让我说的告诉他们？”他开心地问道。

几乎是无意识地，她把自己的胳膊从他的手中抽了出来。“我想让你说的……？”

“为什么，你不是——一直以来都？”她从他的语气里可以听出来，他是真的很吃惊。“不知怎么的，我觉得你……之前……还挺责怪我不愿意更公开地谈论……有时候，你几乎让我觉得我这么做是在为了私利而牺牲原则。”

她停顿了一会儿没答话，然后她平静地说：“是什么让你决定不再继续……？”

她又感到了一丝丝的惊讶。“为什么？为了能取悦你！”他回答得似乎太轻松了。“那我希望你不要继续了。”她突然说。他本来步伐飞快，突然停了下来，然后她感受到他在黑暗之中盯着自己看。

“不再继续——？”

“请你叫辆马车吧，我累了。”她突然之间觉得全身疲惫，不想再继续这个话题。

他立刻开始嘘寒问暖起来。那房间里热得要命……然后是那些可恶的烟味……他有一两次注意到她看上去脸色煞白——下个周六她不能再来了。她感到自己要彻底投降了，就像她往常一样，屈服于他对

她关怀的暖意之中，清楚地意识到自己放任心中女性柔弱的部分，轻轻地依靠在他内心中的男性特质上。

他把她扶进马车，黑暗之中，她把手偷偷伸进他的手中。眼中泛起了一两滴泪珠，她任由它们淌落脸颊。为想象出来的麻烦而哭泣是多么诱人的一件事啊！

当晚吃完晚饭后，出乎她意料的是，他把话题又带回到自己的演讲上。他讲话时结合了两种技巧，一种是当男性遇到让他感到不适问题时表现出厌恶情绪，另一种是近乎于女性化回避问题的说话方式。而她知道，如果他再回到这个话题上来，一定有什么特殊的原因。

“你似乎并不在乎我下午说的话。我解释得很不清楚吗？”

“不——你说得非常清楚。”

“那你说我不想我继续是什么意思？”

她紧张地瞥了他一眼，弄不清他的意图加深了她内心的无助感。

“我想我不愿意在公众场合听到讨论这些事。”

“我搞不懂你了。”他大叫。她再一次感到他的惊讶是发自内心的，这使她自己的态度显得有些暧昧不明。她不确定自己是否了解自己。

“难道你不想解释一下？”他的语气中有一丝不耐烦。

她的双眼游走于熟悉的客厅之中，这里曾是无数个夜晚中他们交换心声的地方。那些昏暗的灯、那些挂着金属版画的朴素墙面，浅色的春季花朵散落在各种威尼斯玻璃花瓶和老塞夫勒碗里。不知为何，她回想起在第一次婚姻中度过了无数夜晚的那所公寓——房间里有一大堆红木家具和室内饰品，壁炉上方挂着的画是一个罗马农民，客厅后方两扇折叠门之间放着一个希腊奴隶的大理石雕像。

她从未能与那个房间建立任何深入的联系，她和那个房间的关系，不会比一个旅客和火车站之间的关系来得更亲密。而此刻，当她环顾着这个与她有着最亲密关系的环境时——她为了这个房间而离开了另外那个房间——她被似曾相识的陌生感和不适感吓到了。那些画、那些花朵和那些老瓷器柔和的色调，看上去似乎仅仅是一种表面精致的象征，和生活之中深层的意义毫无关联。

突然之间，她听到她的丈夫重复了一次他的问题。

“我不确定我是否能解释。”她支支吾吾地说。

他把扶手椅向前拉了拉，这样就能隔着壁炉正对着她。台灯的灯光照在他那轮廓分明的脸上，那张脸看上去有一种肤浅的灵敏度，和

房间里表面上精致的摆设完全是同一种性质。

“难道说你不再相信我们的理念了？”他问。

“我们的理念指的是——”

“我正在传授的理念。你和我都应该支持的理念，”他停顿了一下，“我们的婚姻就建立在那些理念之上。”

血液涌到头上，她的双颊变得通红。那么他这么做是有自己的理由的——她现在敢肯定他有自己的理由。在他们十年的婚姻里，二人中没有哪个人经常停下来思考过彼此婚姻所立足的那个理念。人们隔多久才会把自己家的地下室挖开去检查地基呢？根基当然还在那里——整个房子都建立在根基之上——但是人们住在楼上，而不是住在地下室里。的确，一开始是她坚持偶尔回顾一下当时的情况——扼要重述一下坚持该道路的理由，时不时宣称一下自己信奉的是称之为个人独立的宗教理念。但她早已不再想坚持任何这些理想的标准，而是坦率而自然地接受了她的婚姻，就像它是建立在心灵原始需要的基础上的，并不需要特别的认可来解释或证明它是正当的。

“我当然还相信我们的理念！”她惊呼。

“那么我再说一遍，我搞不懂。应该尽可能地公开我们对婚姻的看法是你理论的一部分。在这方面你的想法已经改变了吗？”

她犹豫了一下：“这取决于具体情况——取决于是对哪些人公开。范·西德伦找来的那帮人根本不在乎信条的真伪。他们只是图个新鲜。”

“而恰好我们正是在这样一群人中相遇，了解到彼此内心之中的真实感受。”

“那不一样。”

“怎么不一样？”

“首先，我那时已经不是年轻姑娘了。年轻姑娘在……在这种时候……出现在这样的场合、听人们讨论这样的事情是完全不合适的……”

“我以为你觉得从不在年轻女性面前探讨这些问题才是这个社会最严重的错误之一，但那都无关紧要，因为我根本不记得在今天的听众里有看到任何年轻女性……”

“除了尤娜·范·西德伦！”

他轻轻地转过身，用胳膊肘子把台灯往后推了推。

“噢，范·西德伦小姐……当然……”

“为什么是当然？”

“她是那家人的女儿……难道你要让家庭教师和她一起离开？”

“如果我有女儿，肯定不会允许这样的事情在我家里发生的！”

韦斯托尔捋着他的胡子，面带微笑往后靠了一下。“我想范·西德伦小姐有足够的 ability 照顾好自己。”

“没有一个女孩儿知道该如何照顾自己——直到一切已经为时太晚。”

“而你却故意地阻止她得到最可靠的自卫手段？”

“你所说的‘最可靠的自卫手段’是什么？”

“对涉及婚姻牵绊时人性本能的相关知识的初步了解。”

她做了一个不耐烦的动作：“你愿意娶那种女孩儿作为妻子吗？”

“很乐意——如果她在其他方面是我喜欢的类型的话。”

她又从另一个角度继续这场争辩。

“如果你觉得这样的演讲不会影响年轻女性，那你就大错特错了。尤娜正处于一种极度可笑的亢奋之中……”她说了一半，突然停了下来，不知道自己为什么要说这句话。

韦斯托尔重新打开了一本杂志，在他们开始讨论之前，他把杂志先放到了一边。“你告诉我的话是对我演讲才能的极大恭维——但恐怕你高估了它的影响。我能向你保证，范·西德伦小姐不需要别人替她思考问题。她绝对有自己思考的能力。”

“你似乎对她的心理状态非常了解！”他妻子一时没忍住回击道。

他从正在翻的页面上静静地抬起头来。“我希望如此，”他回答，“她引起了我的兴趣。”

第二章

如果被误解能获得勋章，那茱莉亚·韦斯托尔离开第一任丈夫的时候，没能获此殊荣。当时每个人都愿意原谅她，甚至还想为她辩护。她的社交圈都认为约翰·阿蒙特简直是“让人无法忍受”，所有的女主人一想到再也不用邀请他一同进餐都松了一口气。

她第一次离婚并不涉及任何丑闻——夫妻双方甚至都没有婉转地指控对方触犯了什么。阿蒙特夫妇的确有责任把他们的忠诚奉献给自己所在的州，毕竟在他们的法律辖区里，公开遗弃是可以作为离婚理由的，而且该理由还能如此开明地得以阐释，以至于“遗弃”的种子开

就算说她朋友们为她行为辩解的理由听上去比她自己对此事的阐述显得更为简单粗暴，但两种解释都得出了同一种结论：约翰·阿蒙特根本让人无法忍受。这两者之间唯一的区别在于，对他的妻子来说，他的“无法忍受”要比起他社交方面的拙劣表现更难以容忍一些。她曾经以嘲讽的方式为自己的婚姻“辩护”说，至少这样一来她就不用坐在他身旁用餐。只是她当时并没有意识到，为了不用坐在他身旁用餐将要付出多大的代价。约翰·阿蒙特的确让人无法忍受，但他让人无法忍受的痛处在于，他让身边的人除了变成像他一样的人之外，别无他选。在无意识的淘汰过程中，他把所有自己觉得不需要的东西都排除在他的世界之外，就好像他已经变成了一种只能满足他个人需求存活的气候。这似乎暗示着他的自私自利是故意的，但是阿蒙特完全不是刻意而为之。他就像是动物或者小孩儿一样完全凭借本能。正是他天性之中孩子气的特质，让他的妻子对他的评价暂时有点儿摇摆不定。有没有可能他只是发育不良，是他的成长过程比普通人要来得更长，是他艰辛的成长过程被推迟了吗？他偶尔会表现出一种精明，也正是这种精明让人推翻了他很迟钝这一说法，觉得他“并不傻”。恰恰，这种特质让他的妻子最忍受不了。即使对于博物学家来说，当他的推论因为他所研究的生物的形式和功能出现了不可预料的反常现象而受到干扰时，该情景也是十分令人恼火的。对一个妻子来说更是如此，因为不可避免的，她对自己的评价总与她对丈夫的判断息息相关！

束缚之中，这种感觉让她满心绝望。如果婚姻指的是需要用漫长的一生去偿在无知时欠下的债务，那它就是对人性的犯罪。她可不会同流合污维持这种伪装，她一直以来都是这种伪装的受害者：这种伪装就是男人和女人被迫进入一段最狭隘的个人关系之中，还必须在里面待到人生尽头。虽然他们可能就像幼苗时缠绕在树干上的铁圈困不住成年的大树一样，彼此个性的空间早已容不下对方。

她第一次从道德方面感到愤怒的时候，恰巧遇见了克莱门特·韦斯托尔。她立即就看出来自己引起了他的“兴趣”，并且对这一发现感到非常排斥，生怕有任何影响将她再次拉回到传统关系的束缚之中。为了避免危险，她几乎是以一种粗鲁急躁的态度把自己的观点告诉了他。让她感到惊讶的是，她发现他和自己的想法一致。她被这位追求者的坦率所吸引，他在追求自己的同时，也承认他并不相信婚姻。她最大胆的举动似乎并没有吓着他：她所感受到的他早就发现了，而他俩得到了同一个结论。人们成长的速度不同，对一个人来说很容易适应的束缚可能很快就会让另一个人感到不适。这就是离婚的目的：重新调整个人关系。只要双方必要的磨合期一过，彼此就能够获得尊严与和谐。再也不需要为了维持不完美的婚姻而卑微地退让和纵容；再也不需要为了维持不完美的婚姻永久地牺牲个人的优雅和道德尊严。在婚姻合约中的双方都要尽心尽力，必须达到自我发展的最高标准，违反者会以失去另一方的尊重和爱意论处。落后的那一方不能拖先进一方的后腿，而是必须要努力进步，否则只能独自一人停留在低等水平上。和谐婚姻唯一的必要条件是坦率地承认这一事实，并在缔约双方之间达成一项庄严的协议——对自己忠诚。当双方步调不再一致的时候，一刻也不会再继续生活在一起。对自己的不忠才是新的通奸行径。

正如韦斯托尔之前提醒她的那样，他们的婚姻建立在这样的共识之上。婚礼只是对于社会偏见无关紧要的让步：既然离婚的大门已开，没有一个婚姻应该成为牢笼，因此婚姻合同也不再涉及任何有损自尊的内容。他们感情的属性尽可能地避免了这样的偶然性发生在他们身上。因此对他们来说，也更容易以开放的态度来讨论这些问题。而茱莉亚的安全感使她对于韦斯托尔的承诺有种柔情的坚持，他答应一旦不再爱她，就会提出重获自由的要求。在某种意义上，交换这样的誓言似乎使他们成为新法律的拥护者，成为在个人自由遭到禁锢的国度里的先驱：他们觉得自己从某种程度上来讲，好像在没有殉道的情况下获得了至福 [4]。

当茱莉亚回顾过往的时候，她意识到，从理论上讲这一直是她对婚姻的态度。在她毫无意识的情况下，正是她和韦斯托尔在一起十年的幸福生活，不知不觉间使她对这段姻缘产生了另一种看法。更确切地说，是回归到过去那种，有强烈的依赖感和占有欲的原始本能，这

种回归让她只要察觉到一丝变化的迹象，就会热血沸腾。改变？重新开始？他们用愚蠢的专业术语就是这么说的吗？“破坏”，甚至是“根绝”——这撕裂了与另一个人交织在一起的无数纤维。另一个人？但他不是别人！他和她是一体的，这是一种神秘的感觉，而正是这神秘的感觉赋予了婚姻意义。新法律不是为他们制定的，而是为那些本来就不和谐、被迫进入到一段让人耻笑的婚姻之中的男女制定的。她觉得有必要宣扬的福音与她自己的情况无关……她叫来医生，告诉他自己肯定需要安神剂。

她按时按点地服用安神剂，但这药对她的恐惧起不到镇静作用。她不知道自己在害怕些什么，而这反而让她更难逃脱开自己的焦虑。她丈夫没有再重提周六演讲的话题。他和往常不同，变得非常和蔼体贴，急躁的脾气也有所软化，在体贴的同时略带羞涩，但这种恶心的感觉让她更害怕。她对自己说，正是因为她的脸色不好——因为他知道医生和安神剂的事——他才表现出顺从于她的想法，表现出这种急于把她从道德草案中屏蔽掉的态度，但这一解释只是为新的推论扫清了道路。

这周过得很慢，很空虚，就像是一个漫长的周日。周六早上，邮差送来了范·西德伦太太的一张字条。“亲爱的茱莉亚，是否可以请你让韦斯托尔先生比平常早来半小时，因为在他的‘演讲’之后，会有些音乐表演。”他妻子读到这字条的时候，韦斯托尔正要出门去办公室。她打开客厅的门，把他叫回来告诉他这个消息。

他瞥了一眼字条，把它扔在一边。“真麻烦！我得提早结束壁球。好吧，我想这也是无可奈何的事。你能写信告诉他们没问题吗？”

茱莉亚犹豫了一会儿，她的手僵硬地放在她靠着的椅背上。

“你打算继续这些演讲？”她问。

“我……为什么不呢？”他回答。而这一次，她意识到他的惊讶显得有点儿虚伪，这种想法让她找到了接下来要说的话。

“你之前说你开始这些演讲是为了取悦我……”

“然后？”

“上周我告诉你它们并不能让我高兴。”

“上周？……噢……”他看上去在努力回忆，“我以为那时你只是太紧张了，你第二天就叫了医生。”

“我需要的不是医生，而是你的保证……”

“我的保证？”

突然之间，她感到地板在她身下崩塌了。她滑落到椅子上，喉咙哽咽，她想说的话、她的理由就像置身洪流之中的稻草一般，从她口中溜走。

“克莱门特！”她大喊道，“难道你知道我讨厌那些讲话还不够吗？”

他转身关上他们身后的门，然后走到她身边坐下。“你讨厌的是什​​么？”他轻声问道。

她竭尽全力重新组织语言表达自己的论点。

“我无法忍受你说得好像……好像……我们的婚姻……就像其他的婚姻一样……就像那种错误的婚姻一样。那天下午，我听到你在那里，在那些爱打听别人闲话的人面前，宣称丈夫和妻子只要感到厌倦了……或是在和其他人约会……就有权利离开彼此……”

韦斯托尔面无表情地坐在那里，他的双眼直直地盯着地毯上的一个图案。

“那就是说，你已经不认同这个观点了？”他等她停下来之后说道，“你不再认为丈夫和妻子……在这种情况下是有理由分开的？”

“在这种情况下？”她结结巴巴地说，“不是……我还是相信的……可是我们如何替其他人做决定？我们怎么知道具体的情况是什么……”

他打断了她：“我以为这是我们信条的根本条款，即婚姻所产生的特殊情况不应妨碍个人自由的充分履行。”他停了一会儿：“我还以为这是你离开阿蒙特的理由呢。”

她的脸一下子红上了额头。在争论时进行人身攻击并不太像他的作风。

“这的确是我的理由。”她简单地说。

“好吧，那么……为什么你现在不愿意承认它的有效性呢？”

“我没有……我没有不承认……我只是说没人能够替别人做判断。”

他做了一个不耐烦的动作。“这简直令人毛骨悚然。你的意思是说，你需要的时候教义为你的目的服务，现在你却拒绝接受它。”

“好吧！”她大喊，脸上又烧了起来，“如果我就是呢？那对我们来说有什么所谓？”

韦斯托尔从椅子上站了起来，脸色煞白，他站在妻子面前，就像是陌生人。

“对我来说有所谓，”他低声说，“因为我并不拒绝接受它。”

“那么……？”

“而且因为我已经打算引用……”

他停顿了一下，深深地吸了一口气。她静静地坐着，几乎被自己的心跳声给震聋了。

“……它作为我接下来行动的全部理由。”

茱莉亚依旧面无表情。“你的行动是什么？”她问道。

他清了清喉咙：“我打算让你履行你的承诺。”

刹那间，房间里晃动起来，变得一片昏暗。然后她的视力突然之间变得敏锐得让人备受煎熬。她周围的每一个细节都在朝她逼近：时钟的嘀嗒声、斜射在墙上的阳光、她抓在手中椅子扶手的硬度，这些东西刺伤着她每一种知觉。

“我的承诺……”她迟疑了一下。

“我们共同协议之中你承诺的那部分，如果其中有一方希望得到解脱，另一方就放对方自由。”

她又沉默了。他等了一会儿，紧张地变换着姿势。然后，他略带恼怒地说：“你还承认这个协议吧？”

这个问题让她大吃一惊。她骄傲地抬起头说：“我承认这个协议。”

“那么……你不打算否认它？”

壁炉中的一块圆木向前倒了下来，他机械地上前把它推回去。

“不，”她回答得很缓慢，“我不打算否认它。”

他没有立刻回话。他留在炉边，胳膊肘搁在壁炉架上。他的手旁边放着一个小翡翠杯子，那是他们在某个结婚周年纪念日的时候送给她的。她模糊地想知道此刻他是否注意到了那个杯子。

“那么，你是打算离开我了？”她最后说。

他的手势似乎是在对这种暗示的粗鄙表示反对。

“去和其他人结婚？”

他的眼神和手又表示起抗议。她站起来，站在他面前。

“你何必害怕告诉我？是尤娜·范·西德伦吗？”

他陷入了沉默。

“我祝你好运。”她说。

第三章

她抬起头，发现自己独自一人在房间里。她不记得他是什么时候、是怎样离开房间的，也不记得在那之后自己在这里坐了多久。壁炉里的火苗还在冒着烟，但是斜着投射在墙上的阳光已经消失不见。

她第一个清醒的意识是她并没有食言，她履行了二人之间协议的每一个字。她并没有大哭小叫，没有徒劳地借助过往的回忆，没有试图拖延或者逃跑。她径直大步地走向了枪口。

既然一切都结束了，她嫌恶地发现自己还活着。她看了看四周，试图恢复自己对现实的掌控。她的身份在身体衰弱的过程中渐渐消失，似乎伴随着晕厥，已经悄然离她而去了。“这是我的房间——这是我的房子。”她听到自己喃喃自语。她的房间？她的房子？她几乎都能听到周围的墙壁在嘲笑自己。

她站了起来，浑身上下每一根骨头都感到疲惫不堪。房间里的寂静让她害怕。现在她记起来好久之前听到前门关上的声音——那声音突然之间在她脑中再次响起。她丈夫肯定是那时候离开房子的——她的丈夫？她已经不知道该用什么称呼他——最简单的词语也有恶毒的一面。她又瘫倒在椅子上，一种奇怪的脆弱之感向她袭来。时钟敲响十下——才十点！她突然意识到还没有点餐……还是说他们晚上要出去用餐？晚餐……外出用餐……那毫无意义的措辞抓着她不放！她必须要像另外一个人那样思考，她要把自己变成一个和这里过去熟悉的所有日常彻底脱离的人，必须要逐渐了解另外这个人的习惯和想法，就像一个人要窥探出奇怪的动物的生活习性……

钟表又敲响了——十一点。她再次站起来，走到门口，她想上楼回到自己的房间里去。她的房间？她又被这个词嘲笑了一次。她打开门，穿过狭窄的门厅，走上楼梯。路过时，她看到韦斯托尔的手杖和雨伞——他的一双手套摆在门厅的桌子上。一切都没有改变，两面墙之间的楼梯上铺着同样的地毯，当她走到楼梯口时，映入眼帘的还是同样的一幅法国旧版画，嵌在又黑又窄的画框里。这种视觉上接连不断的场景让她忍无可忍。她内心深处有一个巨大的裂口，而外部的一切依旧是如此平静和熟悉。她必须远离这一切，才能够尝试着思考。但是一走进自己的房间，她坐在沙发上，恍惚的感觉便开始笼罩着她……

她的视野逐渐清晰起来。在这段时间里发生了许多事情——情绪、争论和思想的激烈交锋——反叛者冲动的怒火又重新燃烧起来。起初，她试图把这些混乱的力量团结、组织起来。如果她能控制住内

心的骚乱，一定有什么方法可以改善这一切。生命不能因为一时的心血来潮、一个幻想，就这样突然被中断。法律本身会支持她，会保护她。法律？她能对法律提什么要求呢？她成了自己选择的囚犯：她是自己的立法者，她是自己所制定的法典注定的受害者。但是这是荒唐可笑的，是不能容忍的——这是一个疯狂的错误，不能让她为此负责！她所蔑视的法律仍然存在，也许还能执行……执行，但目的在于什么呢？她能让法律把韦斯托尔拴在她身边吗？当她要求得到自由的时候，她被允许自由地离开——难道她不该表现得比她之前所要求的更宽宏大量吗？宽宏大量？这个词以它的讽刺鞭笞着她——当一个人在为生命而战时，是不需要装腔作势的！她会威胁、她会摇尾乞怜、她会用甜言蜜语去哄骗……为了保住幸福，她愿意放弃一切。啊，但是困难重重啊！法律帮不了她——她背弃自己的信仰也帮不了她。她是她所抛弃的理论的受害者。就好像是她被自己制造的一台巨大的机器卷进轮子里，磨成了碎片……

她发现自己出门时已是下午了。她漫无目的地匆匆走着，生怕遇见熟悉的面孔。这种日子就是最能反映真实的美国的日子：阳光明媚，金光闪闪，照出了街道上没有打扫干净的地方，暴露出我们建筑的拥挤。这些街道看上去光秃秃的，十分丑陋，所有的东西都很显眼，闪闪发光。她叫住一辆过路的马车，给出了范·西德伦太太的地址。她不知道是什么原因导致了这个行为，但她突然下定决心要说出来、要大声地警告。现在想拯救自己已经太迟了——但或许她还能提醒那个年轻女孩儿点什么。那辆双轮马车嘎吱嘎吱地驶过第五大街，她目不斜视地坐在车里，避免被认出来。到了范·西德伦家的门口，她跳下马车，按响了门铃。行动使她的头脑清醒了，她感到平静和镇定。她现在清楚地知道自己想说什么了。

两位女士都出去了……侍女站在那儿等着茱莉亚递上卡片。茱莉亚嘟囔了一声，转身离开门口，在人行道上逗留了一会儿。然后她想起她还没有给车夫付钱。她从钱包里掏出一美元递给他。他摸着帽子示了示意，然后就赶着马车走了，把她一个人留在空荡荡的长街上。她徘徊着往西边走去，走到一条陌生的大道上，在这里她不大可能遇见熟人。漫无目的的感觉又回来了。有一次在一个下午，她发现自己置身于百老汇大街的洪流中，掠过花里胡哨的商店和色彩鲜艳的戏剧海报，一连串毫无意义的面孔从她面前朝相反的方向一一消失……

一阵眩晕的感觉突然袭来，她想起自己从早上起就没吃过东西。她拐进一条满是破旧房子的小巷，被弯曲的栏杆围了起来，栏杆后面放着一排排的灰桶。在地下室的一扇窗户上她看到了“女士餐厅”的招牌：一块馅饼和一盘甜甜圈靠在满是灰尘的玻璃窗上，就像民族博物馆里的石化食品。她走了进去，一个嘴巴轮廓不明显、眼睛很大的年轻女人在窗边给她收拾出一张桌子。桌上铺着红白相间的棉布，上面

摆着的装饰是一只又大又重的玻璃杯，里面放着一束芹菜，盐瓶里装满了灰白色的盐块。茱莉亚点了茶，等了好长时间都没上来。她很高兴能够远离街道上的嘈杂和混乱。天花板很低的房间里空无一人，两三个瘦削的女服务员懒洋洋地站在后面，一起盯着她窃窃私语。最后，茶水装在一个脏兮兮的金属茶壶里端了上来。茱莉亚倒了一杯匆忙喝下去。茶又黑又苦，但它就像是万灵药一样流过她的血管。她兴奋得几乎头晕目眩。啊，她实在是太累了，累得筋疲力尽！

她又喝了一杯，茶变得越来越黑、越来越苦，现在她的头脑又清醒了。她觉得就像是站在范·西德伦家的台阶上时那么精力充沛、那么果断——但她并不打算再回到那里。她现在看到了这样的企图是徒劳的——这可能使她蒙受耻辱……遗憾的是她不知道下一步该怎么办。冬季短暂的白昼即将过去，她意识到自己不能在餐馆里待太久，不然就会引起别人的注意。她付了茶钱，走到街上。路灯已经亮起来了，地下室里的一家店铺把长方块状的煤气灯影投射在裂开的人行道上。暮色中，这条街的样子有一种不祥的感觉，她急忙向第五大街走去。她不习惯一个人在这个时候外出。

在第五大街的拐角处，她停下来，站在那里看着川流不息的马车。最后一个警察看见了她，示意要带她过马路。她本不想过马路，但不知不觉地跟着过了马路，没多久就发现自己来到了更远的街角。她在那儿又停了一会儿，但是她觉得警察在看着她，这让她急匆匆地跑到最近的一条小街上去……之后她迷迷糊糊地走了好长时间……夜幕降临了，透过一辆辆驶过的马车窗户，她不时地瞥见一件巨大的晚礼服，或是一件闪闪发光的歌剧斗篷……

突然之间，她发现自己来到了一条熟悉的街道上。她静静地站了一会儿，急促地喘着气。她刚刚转过这个拐角的时候并没有注意它通向哪里，但现在，她看见前面几码远的地方是她曾经住过的房子——她第一任丈夫的房子。百叶窗都拉上了，窗户和门上方的横梁上只有一抹模糊的光线。当她站在那里时，她听到身后有一阵脚步声，一个男人朝房子的方向走了过去。他走得很慢，脚步有着中年人的沉重之感。他的脑袋稍稍缩在两肩之间，大衣的毛皮领子上露出脖子上的红色皱褶。他穿过街道，走上了房子的台阶，拿出一把钥匙，开门进去了……

眼前没有别人。茱莉亚在墙角的栏杆上靠了好久，眼睛盯着房子的前面。身体疲倦的感觉又回来了，但是浓茶仍然在她的血管里跳动着，使她的大脑格外清醒。不久之后，她听到又有脚步声走近了，她赶紧往前走，也穿过马路，跨上了房子的台阶。把她带到那儿去的那种冲动随着按下电铃后的急促声响，继续延长了一段时间——然后她突然感到虚弱和颤抖，抓住栏杆支撑着自己。门开了，一个年轻的男

仆站在门槛上，他的表情看上去略微稚嫩。茱莉亚立刻知道他会让她进去的。

“我看到阿蒙特先生刚刚进去了，”她说，“你能让他见我一下吗？”

男仆犹豫了一下：“女士，我想阿蒙特先生已经上楼更衣准备用晚餐了。”

茱莉亚走进门厅。“我敢肯定他会见我的——我不会耽搁他太久。”她说。

她说这些话的时候很平静、很有权威，一个好的仆人是不会把这种语气搞错的。男仆的手伸到了客厅门上。

“女士，我会告诉他的。请问，该如何称呼您？”

茱莉亚抖了一下，她没想到这一点。“就说是一位女士吧。”她漫不经心地回答。

男仆有点儿动摇，茱莉亚还以为自己败下阵来，但就在此时，门从里面开了，约翰·阿蒙特走进了门厅。他一看见她就猛然后退，他那红润的脸吓得变成了土黄色，然后血液又重新涌了回来，让他太阳穴上的血管肿胀起来，使他厚厚的耳垂变得通红。

茱莉亚已经很久没有见过他了，她对他外貌的变化感到吃惊。他变得又肿又胖，被一大团肉包裹起来。但是这是她无意间注意到的，她唯一有意识的想法是，既然现在和他面对面地见到了，在他听完自己想说的话之前一定不能让他逃走。她身体里的每一丝血脉都因急切要讲的话而激烈地跳动着。

他往后退的时候，她朝他走去。“我有话必须对你说。”她说。

阿蒙特满脸通红、结结巴巴地犹豫起来。茱莉亚瞥了一眼仆人，她的表情像是在警告。从“现场”离开的本能压倒了其他所有的冲动，阿蒙特慢吞吞地说：“请往这边走，好吗？”

他跟着她走进客厅，关上了门。茱莉亚往前走着，模模糊糊地意识到至少房间没有任何变化：时间并没有减低它给人带来的恐怖感觉。康塔迪娜 [5] 的味道依旧徘徊在烟囱壁上，希腊奴隶挡住了内室的门槛。关于这地方的回忆再次鲜活起来——一开始是从黄色缎子窗帘的每一个褶裥里开始，然后游走于红木家具的夹角之间。

但是，当大脑之中某个分支正在传递这些信息的时候，她的整个意识都努力集中在支配阿蒙特的意志上。她怕他会拒绝听自己说话，这种恐惧就像高烧一样，在她脑中沸腾起来。她感到自己的计划在恐惧之前慢慢融化，在她滚烫的渴望之中，每一个词句、每一个论点在

相互碰撞。她一时之间说不出话来，她想着自己可能还没来得及说话就会被推出门外。但正当她努力想找话说的时候，阿蒙特把一把椅子推到她前面，平静地说：“你不太好。”

他的声音使她镇定下来。这声音既不友好，也不冷酷——它使你大脑的判断和思考悬在那儿，等候意料不到的事态发展。她靠在椅背上，深深地吸了一口气。

“要叫他们给你准备点什么吗？”他继续说，礼貌之中带着一丝冷漠与尴尬。

茱莉亚做出了恳求的手势。“不……不需要……谢谢你。我很好。”

他本打算按铃的手停在半空，然后转向茱莉亚：“那么，我能问……？”

“是的，”她打断他，“我到这里来是因为我想见你。有些事我必须告诉你。”

阿蒙特继续打量着她。“我对此感到惊讶，”他说，“我本以为你有任何想要沟通的内容，都可以通过我们的律师。”

“我们的律师！”她突然微微笑了起来，“我不认为他们能帮得了我……这次不行。”

阿蒙特面露难色：“如果有什么需要帮忙的问题……当然……”

奇怪的是，她突然想到，以前有个衣衫褴褛的混混儿拿着认捐簿出现在他们的门口时，她曾看到过这种表情。也许他认为她为了博取他的同情——甚至是为了钱——想让他捐款……想到这里，她又笑了起来。她看到他的神色慢慢变得困惑起来。他所有的面部表情变化都是缓慢的，她突然记起，正是那种表情使她提出了离婚，从而不用再见到那种惹人烦的情景。她第一次意识到自己一直以来太残忍了。“是有需要帮助的问题，”她用比较柔和的声调说，“你只需要听我说完就是帮助我了……我想告诉你一件事……”

阿蒙特还是没有放弃抵抗。“写信……的话不是更容易？”他建议说。

她摇了摇头。“没时间写了……而且也不会太久的。”她抬起头，二人四目相对。“我的丈夫已经离开我了。”她说。

“韦斯托尔……？”他结结巴巴地说，脸色又变得通红。

“是的。今天早上。就像我离开你一样，因为他已经厌倦我了。”

这些话的音量比在耳边私语大不了多少，可又像是响亮到填满了

整个房间。阿蒙特朝门口看了一眼，然后他那窘迫的目光又回到茱莉亚身上。

“我很抱歉。”他尴尬地说。

“谢谢你。”她呢喃了一句。

“但是我看不出……”

“不……但过一会儿……你就会……你就不能听我说完吗？拜托！”她本能地改变了姿势，让自己挡在他和门之间。“事情是今天早上发生的，”她气喘吁吁地接着说，“我从来没有怀疑过什么……我以为我们……非常幸福……他突然对我说他厌倦我了……他更喜欢另一个女孩儿……他去找她了……”当她说话的时候，潜伏在她心头的痛苦又一次笼罩着她，把其他所有的情绪都排除在外了。她眼睛开始疼痛，喉咙也肿了起来，两颗痛苦的眼泪从脸上流淌而下。

阿蒙特显得越来越拘谨。“这……这很不幸。”他开口，“但我想说的是法律……”

“法律？”她讽刺地回答，“当他要求得到自己的自由的时候？”

“你没有义务给他自由。”

“你也没有义务给我自由——但是你给了。”他做了一个不同意她的看法的手势。

“你明白法律帮不了你的忙——是吗？”她接着说，“这就是我现在看到的。法律代表的是物质权利——在此之外，它无能为力。如果我们不承认内在规律……不承认爱所创造的责任……爱与被爱……那就没有什么能阻止我们传播势如破竹的毁灭……不是吗？”她悲哀地抬起头来，眼神流露出孩子般的迷惑不解。“这就是我现在看到的……我想告诉你的。他离开我是因为他厌倦了……但我并没有厌倦，我不明白他为什么会感到厌倦。这就是可怕的地方——不理解，不明白这是什么意思。但我一整天都在想这件事，而我又记起了一些事——那些我没有注意到的事情……当你和我……”她走近他，用一种难以言表的目光盯着他：“我现在明白了，你当时根本不理解……是吗？”

两人的目光在恍然大悟之中相遇：二人之间的那层面纱似乎被揭开了。阿蒙特的嘴唇在颤抖着。

“不，”他回答，“我不理解。”

她轻声叫了起来，几乎是胜利的声音。“我就知道！我就知道！你不理解……你试图告诉过我……但是却什么都没说……你看到自己的生活分崩离析……你的世界离你而去……而你什么都说不出，也动不了！”

她又滑落到之前靠着的椅子上。“现在我知道了……现在我知道了。”她重复着。

“我很替你难过。”她听到阿蒙特结结巴巴地说。她很快抬起头来：“这不是我来的目的。我不想让你为我感到难过。我是来请求你原谅我的……原谅我当时并不理解你的不理解……这就是我想说的全部。”她站起身来，迷茫地觉得差不多该结束了，用手摸索着伸向门口。

阿蒙特面无表情地站在那里。她转向他，脸上带着无力的笑容。

“你原谅我了吗？”

“没什么好原谅的——”

“那你愿意和我握手告别？”虽然感觉很无力也不情愿，但她还是握到了他的手。

“再见。”她重复了一次，“我现在理解了。”

她打开门，走到门厅离去。正当她要出去的时候，阿蒙特冲动地向前迈了一步，可是就在此时，男仆明显非常尽职，从后面走了出来准备让她出去。她听到阿蒙特退了回去。男仆猛一下把门打开，然后她发现自己身处于屋外的黑暗之中。

Mrs Manstey's View

The view from Mrs Manstey's window was not a striking one, but to her at least it was full of interest and beauty. Mrs Manstey occupied the back room on the third floor of a New York boarding-house, in a street where the ash- barrels lingered late on the sidewalk and the gaps in the pavement would have staggered a Quintus Curtius. She was the widow of a clerk in a large wholesale house, and his death had left her alone, for her only daughter had married in California, and could not afford the long journey to New York to see her mother. Mrs Manstey, perhaps, might have joined her daughter in the West, but they had now been so many years apart that they had ceased to feel any need of each other's society, and their intercourse had long been limited to the exchange of a few perfunctory letters, written with indifference by the daughter, and with difficulty by Mrs Manstey, whose right hand was growing stiff with gout. Even had she felt a stronger desire for her daughter's companionship, Mrs Manstey's increasing infirmity, which caused her to dread the three flights of stairs between her room and the street, would have given her pause on the eve of undertaking so long a journey; and without perhaps formulating these reasons she had long since accepted as a matter of course her solitary life in New York.

She was, indeed, not quite lonely, for a few friends still toiled up now and then to her room; but their visits grew rare as the years went by. Mrs Manstey had never been a sociable woman, and during her husband's lifetime his companionship had been all-sufficient to her. For many years she had cherished a desire to live in the country, to have a hen- house and a garden; but this longing had faded with age, leaving only in the breast of the uncommunicative old woman a vague tenderness for plants and animals. It was, perhaps, this tenderness which made her cling so fervently to her view from her window, a view in which the most optimistic eye would at first have failed to discover anything admirable.

Mrs Manstey, from her coign of vantage (a slightly projecting bow- window where she nursed an ivy and a succession of unwholesome- looking bulbs), looked out first upon the yard of her own dwelling, of which, however, she could get but a restricted glimpse. Still, her gaze took in the topmost boughs of the ailanthus below her window, and she knew how early each year the clump of dicentra strung its bending stalk with hearts of pink.

But of greater interest were the yards beyond. Being for the most part attached to boarding- houses they were in a state of chronic untidiness and fluttering, on certain days of the week, with miscellaneous garments and frayed table- cloths. In spite of this Mrs Manstey found much to admire in the long vista which she commanded. Some of the yards were, indeed, but stony wastes, with grass in the cracks of the pavement and no shade in spring save that afforded by the intermittent leafage of the clotheslines. These yards Mrs Manstey disapproved of, but the others, the green ones, she loved. She had grown used to their disorder; the broken barrels, the empty bottles and paths unswept no longer annoyed her; hers was the happy faculty of dwelling on the pleasanter side of the prospect before her.

In the very next enclosure did not a magnolia open its hard white flowers against the watery blue of April? And was there not, a little way down the line, a fence foamed over every May by lilac waves of wistaria? Farther still, a horse- chestnut lifted its candelabra of buff and pink blossoms above broad fans of foliage; while in the opposite yard June was sweet with the breath of a neglected syringa, which persisted in growing in spite of the countless obstacles opposed to its welfare.

But if nature occupied the front rank in Mrs Manstey's view, there was much of a more personal character to interest her in the aspect of the houses and their inmates. She deeply disapproved of the mustard- colored curtains which had lately been hung in the doctor's window opposite; but she glowed with pleasure when the house farther down had its old bricks washed with a coat of paint. The occupants of the houses did not often show themselves at the back windows, but the servants were always in sight. Noisy slatterns, Mrs Manstey pronounced the greater number; she knew their ways and hated them. But to the quiet cook in the newly painted house, whose mistress bullied her, and who secretly fed the stray cats at nightfall, Mrs Manstey's warmest sympathies were given. On one occasion her feelings were racked by the neglect of a house- maid, who for two days forgot to feed the parrot committed to her care. On the third day, Mrs Manstey, in spite of her gouty hand, had just penned a letter, beginning: 'Madam, it is now three days since your parrot has been fed,' when the forgetful maid appeared at the window with a cup of seed in her hand.

But in Mrs Manstey's more meditative moods it was the narrowing perspective of far- off yards which pleased her best. She loved, at twilight, when the distant brown- stone spire seemed melting in the fluid yellow of the west, to lose herself in vague memories of a trip to Europe, made years ago, and now reduced in her mind's eye to a pale phantasmagoria of indistinct steeples and dreamy skies. Perhaps at heart Mrs Manstey was an artist; at all events she was sensible of many changes of color unnoticed by the average eye, and dear to her as the green of early spring was the black lattice of branches against a cold sulphur sky at the close of a snowy day. She enjoyed, also, the sunny thaws of March, when patches of earth showed through the snow, like ink- spots spreading on a sheet of white blotting- paper; and, better still, the haze of boughs, leafless but swollen, which replaced the clear- cut tracery of winter. She even watched with a certain interest the trail of smoke from a far- off factory chimney, and missed a detail in the landscape when the factory was closed and the smoke disappeared.

Mrs Manstey, in the long hours which she spent at her window, was not idle. She read a little, and knitted numberless stockings; but the view surrounded and shaped her life as the sea does a lonely island. When her rare callers came it was difficult for her to detach herself from the contemplation of the opposite window- washing, or the scrutiny of certain green points in a neighboring flower- bed which might, or might not, turn into hyacinths, while she feigned an interest in her visitor's anecdotes about some unknown grandchild. Mrs Manstey's real friends were the denizens of the yards, the hyacinths, the magnolia, the green parrot, the maid who fed the cats, the doctor who studied late behind his mustard-colored curtains; and the confidant of her tenderer musings was the church- spire floating in the sunset.

One April day, as she sat in her usual place, with knitting cast aside and eyes fixed on the blue sky mottled with round clouds, a knock at the door announced the entrance of her landlady. Mrs Manstey did not care for her landlady, but she submitted to her visits with ladylike resignation. To- day, however, it seemed harder than usual to turn from the blue sky and the blossoming magnolia to Mrs Sampson's unsuggestive face, and Mrs Manstey was conscious of a distinct effort as she did so.

'The magnolia is out earlier than usual this year, Mrs Sampson,' she remarked, yielding to a rare impulse, for she seldom alluded to the absorbing interest of her life. In the first place it was a topic not likely to appeal to her visitors and, besides, she lacked the power of expression and could not have given utterance to her feelings had she wished to.

'The what, Mrs Manstey?' inquired the landlady, glancing about the room as if to find there the explanation of Mrs Manstey's statement.

'The magnolia in the next yard – in Mrs Black's yard,' Mrs Manstey repeated.

'Is it, indeed? I didn't know there was a magnolia there,' said Mrs Sampson, carelessly. Mrs Manstey looked at her; she did not know that there was a magnolia in the next yard!

'By the way,' Mrs Sampson continued, 'speaking of Mrs Black reminds me that the work on the extension is to begin next week.'

'The what?' it was Mrs Manstey's turn to ask.

'The extension,' said Mrs Sampson, nodding her head in the direction of the ignored magnolia. 'You knew, of course, that Mrs Black was going to build an extension to her house? Yes, ma'am. I hear it is to run right back to the end of the yard. How she can afford to build an extension in these hard times I don't see; but she always was crazy about building. She used to keep a boarding-house in Seventeenth Street, and she nearly ruined herself then by sticking out bow- windows and what not; I should have thought that would have cured her of building, but I guess it's a disease, like drink. Anyhow, the work is to begin on Monday.'

Mrs Manstey had grown pale. She always spoke slowly, so the landlady did not heed the long pause which followed. At last Mrs Manstey said: 'Do you know how high the extension will be?'

'That's the most absurd part of it. The extension is to be built right up to the roof of the main building; now, did you ever?'

Mrs Manstey paused again. 'Won't it be a great annoyance to you, Mrs Sampson?' she asked.

'I should say it would. But there's no help for it; if people have got a mind to build extensions there's no law to prevent 'em, that I'm aware of.' Mrs Manstey, knowing this, was silent. 'There is no help for it,' Mrs Sampson repeated, 'but if I am a church member, I wouldn't be so sorry if it ruined Eliza Black. Well, good- day, Mrs Manstey; I'm glad to find you so comfortable.'

So comfortable – so comfortable! Left to herself the old woman turned once more to the window. How lovely the view was that day! The blue sky with its round clouds shed a brightness over everything; the ailanthus had put on a tinge of yellow- green, the hyacinths were budding, the magnolia flowers looked more than ever like rosettes carved in alabaster. Soon the wistaria would bloom, then the horse- chestnut; but not for her. Between her eyes and them a barrier of brick and mortar would swiftly rise; presently even the spire would disappear, and all her radiant world be blotted out. Mrs Manstey sent away untouched the dinner- tray brought to her that evening. She lingered in the window until the windy sunset died in bat- colored dusk; then, going to bed, she lay sleepless all night.

Early the next day she was up and at the window. It was raining, but even through the slanting gray gauze the scene had its charm – and then the rain was so good for the trees. She had noticed the day before that the ailanthus was growing dusty.

‘Of course I might move,’ said Mrs Manstey aloud, and turning from the window she looked about her room. She might move, of course; so might she be flayed alive; but she was not likely to survive either operation. The room, though far less important to her happiness than the view, was as much a part of her existence. She had lived in it seventeen years. She knew every stain on the wall-paper, every rent in the carpet; the light fell in a certain way on her engravings, her books had grown shabby on their shelves, her bulbs and ivy were used to their window and knew which way to lean to the sun. ‘We are all too old to move,’ she said.

That afternoon it cleared. Wet and radiant the blue reappeared through torn rags of cloud; the ailanthus sparkled; the earth in the flower- borders looked rich and warm. It was Thursday, and on Monday the building of the extension was to begin.

On Sunday afternoon a card was brought to Mrs Black, as she was engaged in gathering up the fragments of the boarders’ dinner in the basement. The card, black- edged, bore Mrs Manstey’s name.

‘One of Mrs Sampson’s boarders; wants to move, I suppose. Well, I can give her a room next year in the extension. Dinah,’ said Mrs Black, ‘tell the lady I’ll be upstairs in a minute.’

Mrs Black found Mrs Manstey standing in the long parlor garnished with statuettes and antimacassars; in that house she could not sit down.

Stooping hurriedly to open the register, which let out a cloud of dust, Mrs Black advanced to her visitor.

‘I’m happy to meet you, Mrs Manstey; take a seat, please,’ the landlady remarked in her prosperous voice, the voice of a woman who can afford to build extensions. There was no help for it; Mrs Manstey sat down.

‘Is there anything I can do for you, ma’am?’ Mrs Black continued. ‘My house is full at present, but I am going to build an extension, and – ’

‘It is about the extension that I wish to speak,’ said Mrs Manstey, suddenly. ‘I am a poor woman, Mrs Black, and I have never been a happy one. I shall have to talk about myself first to – to make you understand.’

Mrs Black, astonished but imperturbable, bowed at this parenthesis.

Mrs Black, astonished but imperturbable, bowed at this parenthesis.

‘I never had what I wanted,’ Mrs Manstey continued. ‘It was always one disappointment after another. For years I wanted to live in the country. I dreamed and dreamed about it; but we never could manage it. There was no sunny window in our house, and so all my plants died. My daughter married years ago and went away – besides, she never cared for the same things. Then my husband died and I was left alone. That was seventeen years ago. I went to live at Mrs Sampson’s, and I have been there ever since. I have grown a little infirm, as you see, and I don’t get out often; only on fine days, if I am feeling very well. So you can understand my sitting a great deal in my window – the back window on the third floor – ’

‘Well, Mrs Manstey,’ said Mrs Black, liberally, ‘I could give you a back room, I dare say; one of the new rooms in the ex – ’

‘But I don’t want to move; I can’t move,’ said Mrs Manstey, almost with a scream. ‘And I came to tell you that if you build that extension I shall have no view from my window – no view! Do you understand?’

Mrs Black thought herself face to face with a lunatic, and she had always heard that lunatics must be humored.

‘Dear me, dear me,’ she remarked, pushing her chair back a little way, ‘that is too bad, isn’t it? Why, I never thought of that. To be sure, the extension will interfere with your view, Mrs Manstey.’

‘You do understand?’ Mrs Manstey gasped.

‘Of course I do. And I’m real sorry about it, too. But there, don’t you worry, Mrs Manstey. I guess we can fix that all right.’

Mrs Manstey rose from her seat, and Mrs Black slipped toward the door.

‘What do you mean by fixing it? Do you mean that I can induce you to change your mind about the extension? Oh, Mrs Black, listen to me. I have two thousand dollars in the bank and I could manage, I know I could manage, to give you a thousand if – ’ Mrs Manstey paused; the tears were rolling down her cheeks.

‘There, there, Mrs Manstey, don’t you worry,’ repeated Mrs Black, soothingly. ‘I am sure we can settle it. I am sorry that I can’t stay and talk about it any longer, but this is such a busy time of day, with supper to get – ’

Her hand was on the door- knob, but with sudden vigor Mrs Manstey seized her wrist.

‘You are not giving me a definite answer. Do you mean to say that you accept my proposition?’

‘Why, I’ll think it over, Mrs Manstey, certainly I will. I wouldn’t annoy you for the world – ’

‘But the work is to begin to- morrow, I am told,’ Mrs Manstey persisted.

Mrs Black hesitated. ‘It shan’t begin, I promise you that; I’ll send word to the builder this very night.’ Mrs Manstey tightened her hold.

‘You are not deceiving me, are you?’ she said.

‘No – no,’ stammered Mrs Black. ‘How can you think such a thing of me, Mrs Manstey?’

Slowly Mrs Manstey’s clutch relaxed, and she passed through the open door. ‘One thousand dollars,’ she repeated, pausing in the hall; then she let herself out of the house and hobbled down the steps, supporting herself on the cast- iron railing.

‘My goodness,’ exclaimed Mrs Black, shutting and bolting the hall- door, ‘I never knew the old woman was crazy! And she looks so quiet and ladylike, too.’

Mrs Manstey slept well that night, but early the next morning she was awakened by a sound of hammering. She got to her window with what haste she might and, looking out, saw that Mrs Black’s yard was full of workmen. Some were carrying loads of brick from the kitchen to the yard, others beginning to demolish the old-fashioned wooden balcony which adorned each story of Mrs Black's house. Mrs Manstey saw that she had been deceived. At first she thought of confiding her trouble to Mrs Sampson, but a settled discouragement soon took possession of her and she went back to bed, not caring to see what was going on.

Toward afternoon, however, feeling that she must know the worst, she rose and dressed herself. It was a laborious task, for her hands were stiffer than usual, and the hooks and buttons seemed to evade her.

When she seated herself in the window, she saw that the workmen had removed the upper part of the balcony, and that the bricks had multiplied since morning. One of the men, a coarse fellow with a bloated face, picked a magnolia blossom and, after smelling it, threw it to the ground; the next man, carrying a load of bricks, trod on the flower in passing.

'Look out, Jim,' called one of the men to another who was smoking a pipe, 'if you throw matches around near those barrels of paper you'll have the old tinder-box burning down before you know it.' And Mrs Manstey, leaning forward, perceived that there were several barrels of paper and rubbish under the wooden balcony.

At length the work ceased and twilight fell. The sunset was perfect and a roseate light, transfiguring the distant spire, lingered late in the west. When it grew dark Mrs Manstey drew down the shades and proceeded, in her usual methodical manner, to light her lamp. She always filled and lit it with her own hands, keeping a kettle of kerosene on a zinc-covered shelf in a closet. As the lamp-light filled the room it assumed its usual peaceful aspect. The books and pictures and plants seemed, like their mistress, to settle themselves down for another quiet evening, and Mrs Manstey, as was her wont, drew up her armchair to the table and began to knit.

That night she could not sleep. The weather had changed and a wild wind was abroad, blotting the stars with close-driven clouds. Mrs Manstey rose once or twice and looked out of the window; but of the view nothing was discernible save a tardy light or two in the opposite windows. These lights at last went out, and Mrs Manstey, who had watched for their extinction, began to dress herself. She was in evident haste, for she merely flung a thin dressing- gown over her night- dress and wrapped her head in a scarf; then she opened her closet and cautiously took out the kettle of kerosene. Having slipped a bundle of wooden matches into her pocket she proceeded, with increasing precautions, to unlock her door, and a few moments later she was feeling her way down the dark staircase, led by a glimmer of gas from the lower hall. At length she reached the bottom of the stairs and began the more difficult descent into the utter darkness of the basement. Here, however, she could move more freely, as there was less danger of being overheard; and without much delay she contrived to unlock the iron door leading into the yard. A gust of cold wind smote her as she stepped out and groped shiveringly under the clothes- lines.

That morning at three o'clock an alarm of fire brought the engines to Mrs Black's door, and also brought Mrs Sampson's startled boarders to their windows. The wooden balcony at the back of Mrs Black's house was ablaze, and among those who watched the progress of the flames was Mrs Manstey, leaning in her thin dressing- gown from the open window.

The fire, however, was soon put out, and the frightened occupants of the house, who had fled in scant attire, reassembled at dawn to find that little mischief had been done beyond the cracking of window panes and smoking of ceilings. In fact, the chief sufferer by the fire was Mrs Manstey, who was found in the morning gasping with pneumonia, a not unnatural result, as everyone remarked, of her having hung out of an open window at her age in a dressing- gown. It was easy to see that she was very ill, but no one had guessed how grave the doctor's verdict would be, and the faces gathered that evening about Mrs Sampson's table were awe- struck and disturbed. Not that any of the boarders knew Mrs Manstey well; she 'kept to herself,' as they said, and seemed to fancy herself too good for them; but then it is always disagreeable to have anyone dying in the house and, as one lady observed to another: 'It might just as well have been you or me, my dear.'

But it was only Mrs Manstey; and she was dying, as she had lived, lonely if not alone. The doctor had sent a trained nurse, and Mrs Sampson, with muffled step, came in from time to time; but both, to Mrs Manstey, seemed remote and unsubstantial as the figures in a dream. All day she said nothing; but when she was asked for her daughter's address she shook her head. At times the nurse noticed that she seemed to be listening attentively for some sound which did not come; then again she dozed.

The next morning at daylight she was very low. The nurse called Mrs Sampson and as the two bent over the old woman they saw her lips move.

'Lift me up – out of bed,' she whispered.

They raised her in their arms, and with her stiff hand she pointed to the window.

'Oh, the window – she wants to sit in the window. She used to sit there all day,' Mrs Sampson explained. 'It can do her no harm, I suppose?'

'Nothing matters now,' said the nurse.

They carried Mrs Manstey to the window and placed her in her chair. The dawn was abroad, a jubilant spring dawn; the spire had already caught a golden ray, though the magnolia and horse-chestnut still slumbered in shadow. In Mrs Black's yard all was quiet. The charred timbers of the balcony lay where they had fallen. It was evident that since the fire the builders had not returned to their work. The magnolia had unfolded a few more sculptural flowers; the view was undisturbed.

It was hard for Mrs Manstey to breathe; each moment it grew more difficult. She tried to make them open the window, but they would not understand. If she could have tasted the air, sweet with the penetrating ailanthus savor, it would have eased her; but the view at least was there – the spire was golden now, the heavens had warmed from pearl to blue, day was alight from east to west, even the magnolia had caught the sun.

Mrs Manstey's head fell back and smiling she died.

That day the building of the extension was resumed.

The Reckoning

I

‘The marriage law of the new dispensation will be: Thou shalt not be unfaithful – to thyself.’

A discreet murmur of approval filled the studio, and through the haze of cigarette smoke Mrs Clement Westall, as her husband descended from his improvised platform, saw him merged in a congratulatory group of ladies. Westall’s informal talks on ‘The New Ethics’ had drawn about him an eager following of the mentally unemployed – those who, as he had once phrased it, liked to have their brain- food cut up for them. The talks had begun by accident. Westall’s ideas were known to be ‘advanced,’ but hitherto their advance had not been in the direction of publicity. He had been, in his wife’s opinion, almost pusillanimously careful not to let his personal views endanger his professional standing. Of late, however, he had shown a puzzling tendency to dogmatize, to throw down the gauntlet, to flaunt his private code in the face of society; and the relation of the sexes being a topic always sure of an audience, a few admiring friends had persuaded him to give his after- dinner opinions a larger circulation by summing them up in a series of talks at the Van Sideren studio.

The Herbert Van Siderens were a couple who subsisted, socially, on the fact that they had a studio. Van Sideren’s pictures were chiefly valuable as accessories to the mise en scène which differentiated his wife’s ‘afternoons’ from the blighting functions held in long New York drawing- rooms, and permitted her to offer their friends whiskey- and- soda instead of tea. Mrs Van Sideren, for her part, was skilled in making the most of the kind of atmosphere which a lay- figure and an easel create; and if at times she found the illusion hard to maintain, and lost courage to the extent of almost wishing that Herbert could paint, she promptly overcame such moments of weakness by calling in some fresh talent, some extraneous re- enforcement of the ‘artistic’ impression. It was in quest of such aid that she had seized on Westall, coaxing him, somewhat to his wife's surprise, into a flattered participation in her fraud. It was vaguely felt, in the Van Sideren circle, that all the audacities were artistic, and that a teacher who pronounced marriage immoral was somehow as distinguished as a painter who depicted purple grass and a green sky. The Van Sideren set were tired of the conventional color- scheme in art and conduct.

Julia Westall had long had her own views on the immorality of marriage; she might indeed have claimed her husband as a disciple. In the early days of their union she had secretly resented his disinclination to proclaim himself a follower of the new creed; had been inclined to tax him with moral cowardice, with a failure to live up to the convictions for which their marriage was supposed to stand. That was in the first burst of propagandism, when, womanlike, she wanted to turn her disobedience into a law. Now she felt differently. She could hardly account for the change, yet being a woman who never allowed her impulses to remain unaccounted for, she tried to do so by saying that she did not care to have the articles of her faith misinterpreted by the vulgar. In this connection, she was beginning to think that almost every one was vulgar; certainly there were few to whom she would have cared to entrust the defense of so esoteric a doctrine. And it was precisely at this point that Westall, discarding his unspoken principles, had chosen to descend from the heights of privacy, and stand hawking his convictions at the street- corner!

It was Una Van Sideren who, on this occasion, unconsciously focused upon herself Mrs Westall's wandering resentment. In the first place, the girl had no business to be there. It was 'horrid' – Mrs Westall found herself slipping back into the old feminine vocabulary – simply 'horrid' to think of a young girl's being allowed to listen to such talk. The fact that Una smoked cigarettes and sipped an occasional cocktail did not in the least tarnish a certain radiant innocence which made her appear the victim, rather than the accomplice, of her parents' vulgarities. Julia Westall felt in a hot helpless way that something ought to be done – that some one ought to speak to the girl's mother. And just then Una glided up.

'Oh, Mrs Westall, how beautiful it was!' Una fixed her with large limpid eyes. 'You believe it all, I suppose?' she asked with seraphic gravity.

‘All – what, my dear child?’

The girl shone on her. ‘About the higher life – the freer expansion of the individual – the law of fidelity to one’s self,’ she glibly recited.

Mrs Westall, to her own wonder, blushed a deep and burning blush.

‘My dear Una,’ she said, ‘you don’t in the least understand what it’s all about!’

Miss Van Sideren stared, with a slowly answering blush. ‘Don’t you, then?’ she murmured.

Mrs Westall laughed. ‘Not always – or altogether! But I should like some tea, please.’

Una led her to the corner where innocent beverages were dispensed. As Julia received her cup she scrutinized the girl more carefully. It was not such a girlish face, after all – definite lines were forming under the rosy haze of youth. She reflected that Una must be six- and- twenty, and wondered why she had not married. A nice stock of ideas she would have as her dower! If they were to be a part of the modern girl’s trousseau -

Mrs Westall caught herself up with a start. It was as though some one else had been speaking – a stranger who had borrowed her own voice: she felt herself the dupe of some fantastic mental ventriloquism. Concluding suddenly that the room was stifling and Una’s tea too sweet, she set down her cup and looked about for Westall: to meet his eyes had long been her refuge from every uncertainty. She met them now, but only, as she felt, in transit; they included her parenthetically in a larger flight. She followed the flight, and it carried her to a corner to which Una had withdrawn – one of the palmy nooks to which Mrs Van Sideren attributed the success of her Saturdays. Westall, a moment later, had overtaken his look, and found a place at the girl’s side. She bent forward, speaking eagerly; he leaned back, listening, with the depreciatory smile which acted as a filter to flattery, enabling him to swallow the strongest doses without apparent grossness of appetite. Julia winced at her own definition of the smile.

On the way home, in the deserted winter dusk, Westall surprised his wife by a sudden boyish pressure of her arm. ‘Did I open their eyes a bit? Did I tell them what you wanted me to?' he asked gaily.

Almost unconsciously, she let her arm slip from his. 'What I wanted - ?'

'Why, haven't you - all this time?' She caught the honest wonder of his tone. 'I somehow fancied you'd rather blamed me for not talking more openly - before - . You almost made me feel, at times, that I was sacrificing principles to expediency.'

She paused a moment over her reply; then she asked quietly: 'What made you decide not to - any longer?'

She felt again the vibration of a faint surprise. 'Why - the wish to please you!' he answered, almost too simply.

'I wish you would not go on, then,' she said abruptly.

He stopped in his quick walk, and she felt his stare through the darkness.

'Not go on - ?'

'Call a hansom, please. I'm tired,' broke from her with a sudden rush of physical weariness.

Instantly his solicitude enveloped her. The room had been infernally hot - and then that confounded cigarette smoke - he had noticed once or twice that she looked pale - she mustn't come to another Saturday. She felt herself yielding, as she always did, to the warm influence of his concern for her, the feminine in her leaning on the man in him with a conscious intensity of abandonment.

He put her in the hansom, and her hand stole into his in the darkness. A tear or two rose, and she let them fall. It was so delicious to cry over imaginary troubles!

That evening, after dinner, he surprised her by reverting to the subject of his talk. He combined a man's dislike of uncomfortable questions with an almost feminine skill in eluding them; and she knew that if he returned to the subject he must have some special reason for doing so.

'You seem not to have cared for what I said this afternoon. Did I put the case badly?'

'No - you put it very well.'

‘Then what did you mean by saying that you would rather not have me go on with it?’

She glanced at him nervously, her ignorance of his intention deepening her sense of helplessness.

‘I don’t think I care to hear such things discussed in public.’

‘I don’t understand you,’ he exclaimed. Again the feeling that his surprise was genuine gave an air of obliquity to her own attitude. She was not sure that she understood herself.

‘Won’t you explain?’ he said with a tinge of impatience.

Her eyes wandered about the familiar drawing- room which had been the scene of so many of their evening confidences. The shaded lamps, the quiet- colored walls hung with mezzotints, the pale spring flowers scattered here and there in Venice glasses and bowls of old Sèvres, recalled, she hardly knew why, the apartment in which the evenings of her first marriage had been passed – a wilderness of rosewood and upholstery, with a picture of a Roman peasant above the mantelpiece, and a Greek slave in ‘statuary marble’ between the folding- doors of the back drawing- room. It was a room with which she had never been able to establish any closer relation than that between a traveler and a railway station; and now, as she looked about at the surroundings which stood for her deepest affinities – the room for which she had left that other room – she was startled by the same sense of strangeness and unfamiliarity. The prints, the flowers, the subdued tones of the old porcelains, seemed to typify a superficial refinement which had no relation to the deeper significances of life.

Suddenly she heard her husband repeating his question.

‘I don’t know that I can explain,’ she faltered.

He drew his armchair forward so that he faced her across the hearth. The light of a reading- lamp fell on his finely drawn face, which had a kind of surface- sensitiveness akin to the surface- refinement of its setting.

‘Is it that you no longer believe in our ideas?’ he asked.

‘In our ideas – ?’

‘The ideas I am trying to teach. The ideas you and I are supposed to stand for.' He paused a moment. 'The ideas on which our marriage was founded.'

The blood rushed to her face. He had his reasons, then – she was sure now that he had his reasons! In the ten years of their marriage, how often had either of them stopped to consider the ideas on which it was founded? How often does a man dig about the basement of his house to examine its foundation? The foundation is there, of course – the house rests on it – but one lives above- stairs and not in the cellar. It was she, indeed, who in the beginning had insisted on reviewing the situation now and then, on recapitulating the reasons which justified her course, on proclaiming, from time to time, her adherence to the religion of personal independence; but she had long ceased to feel the want of any such ideal standards, and had accepted her marriage as frankly and naturally as though it had been based on the primitive needs of the heart, and required no special sanction to explain or justify it.

'Of course I still believe in our ideas!' she exclaimed.

'Then I repeat that I don't understand. It was a part of your theory that the greatest possible publicity should be given to our view of marriage. Have you changed your mind in that respect?'

She hesitated. 'It depends on circumstances – on the public one is addressing. The set of people that the Van Siderens get about them don't care for the truth or falseness of a doctrine. They are attracted simply by its novelty.'

'And yet it was in just such a set of people that you and I met, and learned the truth from each other.'

'That was different.'

'In what way?'

'I was not a young girl, to begin with. It is perfectly unfitting that young girls should be present at – at such times – should hear such things discussed –'

'I thought you considered it one of the deepest social wrongs that such things never are discussed before young girls; but that is beside the point, for I don't remember seeing any young girl in my audience to-day –'

'Except Una Van Sideren!'

He turned slightly and pushed back the lamp at his elbow.

‘Oh, Miss Van Sideren – naturally – ’

‘Why naturally?’

‘The daughter of the house – would you have had her sent out with her governess?’

‘If I had a daughter I should not allow such things to go on in my house!’

Westall, stroking his mustache, leaned back with a faint smile. ‘I fancy Miss Van Sideren is quite capable of taking care of herself.’

‘No girl knows how to take care of herself – till it’s too late.’

‘And yet you would deliberately deny her the surest means of self- defense?’

‘What do you call the surest means of self- defense?’

‘Some preliminary knowledge of human nature in its relation to the marriage tie.’

She made an impatient gesture. ‘How should you like to marry that kind of a girl?’

‘Immensely – if she were my kind of girl in other respects.’

She took up the argument at another point.

‘You are quite mistaken if you think such talk does not affect young girls. Una was in a state of the most absurd exaltation – ’ She broke off, wondering why she had spoken.

Westall reopened a magazine which he had laid aside at the beginning of their discussion. ‘What you tell me is immensely flattering to my oratorical talent – but I fear you overrate its effect. I can assure you that Miss Van Sideren doesn’t have to have her thinking done for her. She’s quite capable of doing it herself.’

‘You seem very familiar with her mental processes!’ flashed unguardedly from his wife.

He looked up quietly from the pages he was cutting.

‘I should like to be,’ he answered. ‘She interests me.’

If there be a distinction in being misunderstood, it was one denied to Julia Westall when she left her first husband. Every one was ready to excuse and even to defend her. The world she adorned agreed that John Arment was 'impossible,' and hostesses gave a sigh of relief at the thought that it would no longer be necessary to ask him to dine.

There had been no scandal connected with the divorce: neither side had accused the other of the offense euphemistically described as 'statutory.' The Arments had indeed been obliged to transfer their allegiance to a State which recognized desertion as a cause for divorce, and construed the term so liberally that the seeds of desertion were shown to exist in every union. Even Mrs Arment's second marriage did not make traditional morality stir in its sleep. It was known that she had not met her second husband till after she had parted from the first, and she had, moreover, replaced a rich man by a poor one. Though Clement Westall was acknowledged to be a rising lawyer, it was generally felt that his fortunes would not rise as rapidly as his reputation. The Westalls would probably always have to live quietly and go out to dinner in cabs. Could there be better evidence of Mrs Arment's complete disinterestedness?

If the reasoning by which her friends justified her course was somewhat cruder and less complex than her own elucidation of the matter, both explanations led to the same conclusion: John Arment was impossible. The only difference was that, to his wife, his impossibility was something deeper than a social disqualification. She had once said, in ironical defense of her marriage, that it had at least preserved her from the necessity of sitting next to him at dinner; but she had not then realized at what cost the immunity was purchased. John Arment was impossible; but the sting of his impossibility lay in the fact that he made it impossible for those about him to be other than himself. By an unconscious process of elimination he had excluded from the world everything of which he did not feel a personal need: had become, as it were, a climate in which only his own requirements survived. This might seem to imply a deliberate selfishness; but there was nothing deliberate about Arment. He was as instinctive as an animal or a child. It was this childish element in his nature which sometimes for a moment unsettled his wife's estimate of him. Was it possible that he was simply undeveloped, that he had delayed, somewhat longer than is usual, the laborious process of growing up? He had the kind of sporadic shrewdness which causes it to be said of a dull man that he is 'no fool'; and it was this quality that his wife found most trying. Even to the naturalist it is annoying to have his deductions disturbed by some unforeseen aberrancy of form or function; and how much more so to the wife whose estimate of herself is inevitably bound up with her judgment of her husband!

Arment's shrewdness did not, indeed, imply any latent intellectual power; it suggested, rather, potentialities of feeling, of suffering, perhaps, in a blind rudimentary way, on which Julia's sensibilities naturally declined to linger. She so fully understood her own reasons for leaving him that she disliked to think they were not as comprehensible to her husband. She was haunted, in her analytic moments, by the look of perplexity, too inarticulate for words, with which he had acquiesced in her explanations.

These moments were rare with her, however. Her marriage had been too concrete a misery to be surveyed philosophically. If she had been unhappy for complex reasons, the unhappiness was as real as though it had been uncomplicated. Soul is more bruisable than flesh, and Julia was wounded in every fiber of her spirit. Her husband's personality seemed to be closing gradually in on her, obscuring the sky and cutting off the air, till she felt herself shut up among the decaying bodies of her starved hopes. A sense of having been decoyed by some world-old conspiracy into this bondage of body and soul filled her with despair. If marriage was the slow life-long acquittal of a debt contracted in ignorance, then marriage was a crime against human nature. She, for one, would have no share in maintaining the pretense of which she had been a victim: the pretense that a man and a woman, forced into the narrowest of personal relations, must remain there till the end, though they may have outgrown the span of each other's natures as the mature tree outgrows the iron brace about the sapling.

It was in the first heat of her moral indignation that she had met Clement Westall. She had seen at once that he was 'interested,' and had fought off the discovery, dreading any influence that should draw her back into the bondage of conventional relations. To ward off the peril she had, with an almost crude precipitancy, revealed her opinions to him. To her surprise, she found that he shared them. She was attracted by the frankness of a suitor who, while pressing his suit, admitted that he did not believe in marriage. Her worst audacities did not seem to surprise him: he had thought out all that she had felt, and they had reached the same conclusion. People grew at varying rates, and the yoke that was an easy fit for the one might soon become galling to the other. That was what divorce was for: the readjustment of personal relations. As soon as their necessarily transitive nature was recognized they would gain in dignity as well as in harmony. There would be no farther need of the ignoble concessions and connivances, the perpetual sacrifice of personal delicacy and moral pride, by means of which imperfect marriages were now held together. Each partner to the contract would be on his mettle, forced to live up to the highest standard of self-development, on pain of losing the other's respect and affection. The low nature could no longer drag the higher down, but must struggle to rise, or remain alone on its inferior level. The only necessary condition to a harmonious marriage was a frank recognition of this truth, and a solemn agreement between the contracting parties to keep faith with themselves, and not to live together for a moment after complete accord had ceased to exist between them. The new adultery was unfaithfulness to self.

It was, as Westall had just reminded her, on this understanding that they had married. The ceremony was an unimportant concession to social prejudice: now that the door of divorce stood open, no marriage need be an imprisonment, and the contract therefore no longer involved any diminution of self-respect. The nature of their attachment placed them so far beyond the reach of such contingencies that it was easy to discuss them with an open mind; and Julia's sense of security made her dwell with a tender insistence on Westall's promise to claim his release when he should cease to love her. The exchange of these vows seemed to make them, in a sense, champions of the new law, pioneers in the forbidden realm of individual freedom: they felt that they had somehow achieved beatitude without martyrdom.

This, as Julia now reviewed the past, she perceived to have been her theoretical attitude toward marriage. It was unconsciously, insidiously, that her ten years of happiness with Westall had developed another conception of the tie; a reversion, rather, to the old instinct of passionate dependency and possessorship that now made her blood revolt at the mere hint of change. Change? Renewal? Was that what they had called it, in their foolish jargon? Destruction, extermination rather – this rending of a myriad fibers interwoven with another's being! Another? But he was not other! He and she were one, one in the mystic sense which alone gave marriage its significance. The new law was not for them, but for the disunited creatures forced into a mockery of union. The gospel she had felt called on to proclaim had no bearing on her own case ... She sent for the doctor and told him she was sure she needed a nerve tonic.

She took the nerve tonic diligently, but it failed to act as a sedative to her fears. She did not know what she feared; but that made her anxiety the more pervasive. Her husband had not reverted to the subject of his Saturday talks. He was unusually kind and considerate, with a softening of his quick manner, a touch of shyness in his consideration, that sickened her with new fears. She told herself that it was because she looked badly – because he knew about the doctor and the nerve tonic – that he showed this deference to her wishes, this eagerness to screen her from moral drafts; but the explanation simply cleared the way for fresh inferences.

The week passed slowly, vacantly, like a prolonged Sunday. On Saturday the morning post brought a note from Mrs Van Sideren. Would dear Julia ask Mr Westall to come half an hour earlier than usual, as there was to be some music after his 'talk'? Westall was just leaving for his office when his wife read the note. She opened the drawing-room door and called him back to deliver the message.

He glanced at the note and tossed it aside. 'What a bore! I shall have to cut my game of racquets. Well, I suppose it can't be helped. Will you write and say it's all right?'

Julia hesitated a moment, her hand stiffening on the chair-back against which she leaned.

'You mean to go on with these talks?' she asked.

'I – why not?' he returned; and this time it struck her that his surprise was not quite unfeigned. The perception helped her to find words.

‘You said you had started them with the idea of pleasing me – ’

‘Well?’

‘I told you last week that they didn’t please me.’

‘Last week? – Oh – ’ He seemed to make an effort of memory. ‘I thought you were nervous then; you sent for the doctor the next day.’

‘It was not the doctor I needed; it was your assurance – ’

‘My assurance?’

Suddenly she felt the floor fail under her. She sank into the chair with a choking throat, her words, her reasons slipping away from her like straws down a whirling flood.

‘Clement,’ she cried, ‘isn’t it enough for you to know that I hate it?’

He turned to close the door behind them; then he walked toward her and sat down. ‘What is it that you hate?’ he asked gently.

She had made a desperate effort to rally her routed argument.

‘I can’t bear to have you speak as if – as if – our marriage – were like the other kind – the wrong kind. When I heard you there, the other afternoon, before all those inquisitive gossiping people, proclaiming that husbands and wives had a right to leave each other whenever they were tired – or had seen some one else – ’

Westall sat motionless, his eyes fixed on a pattern of the carpet.

‘You have ceased to take this view, then?’ he said as she broke off. ‘You no longer believe that husbands and wives are justified in separating – under such conditions?’

‘Under such conditions?’ she stammered. ‘Yes – I still believe that – but how can we judge for others? What can we know of the circumstances – ?’

He interrupted her. ‘I thought it was a fundamental article of our creed that the special circumstances produced by marriage were not to interfere with the full assertion of individual liberty.’ He paused a moment. ‘I thought that was your reason for leaving Arment.’

She flushed to the forehead. It was not like him to give a personal turn to the argument.

‘It was my reason,’ she said simply.

‘Well, then – why do you refuse to recognize its validity now?’

‘I don’t – I don’t – I only say that one can’t judge for others.’

He made an impatient movement. ‘This is mere hair- splitting. What you mean is that, the doctrine having served your purpose when you needed it, you now repudiate it.’

‘Well,’ she exclaimed, flushing again, ‘what if I do? What does it matter to us?’

Westall rose from his chair. He was excessively pale, and stood before his wife with something of the formality of a stranger.

‘It matters to me,’ he said in a low voice, ‘because I do not repudiate it.’

‘Well – ?’

‘And because I had intended to invoke it as – ’

He paused and drew his breath deeply. She sat silent, almost deafened by her heart- beats.

‘ – as a complete justification of the course I am about to take.’

Julia remained motionless. ‘What course is that?’ she asked.

He cleared his throat. ‘I mean to claim the fulfillment of your promise.’

For an instant the room wavered and darkened; then she recovered a torturing acuteness of vision. Every detail of her surroundings pressed upon her: the tick of the clock, the slant of sunlight on the wall, the hardness of the chair- arms that she grasped, were a separate wound to each sense.

‘My promise – ’ she faltered.

‘Your part of our mutual agreement to set each other free if one or the other should wish to be released.’

She was silent again. He waited a moment, shifting his position nervously; then he said, with a touch of irritability: ‘You acknowledge the agreement?’

The question went through her like a shock. She lifted her head to it proudly. 'I acknowledge the agreement,' she said.

'And – you don't mean to repudiate it?'

A log on the hearth fell forward, and mechanically he advanced and pushed it back.

'No,' she answered slowly, 'I don't mean to repudiate it.'

There was a pause. He remained near the hearth, his elbow resting on the mantelshelf. Close to his hand stood a little cup of jade that he had given her on one of their wedding anniversaries. She wondered vaguely if he noticed it.

'You intend to leave me, then?' she said at length.

His gesture seemed to deprecate the crudeness of the allusion.

'To marry some one else?'

Again his eye and hand protested. She rose and stood before him.

'Why should you be afraid to tell me? Is it Una Van Sideren?'

He was silent.

'I wish you good luck,' she said.

III

She looked up, finding herself alone. She did not remember when or how he had left the room, or how long afterward she had sat there. The fire still smoldered on the hearth, but the slant of sunlight had left the wall.

Her first conscious thought was that she had not broken her word, that she had fulfilled the very letter of their bargain. There had been no crying out, no vain appeal to the past, no attempt at temporizing or evasion. She had marched straight up to the guns.

Now that it was over, she sickened to find herself alive. She looked about her, trying to recover her hold on reality. Her identity seemed to be slipping from her, as it disappears in a physical swoon. 'This is my room – this is my house,' she heard herself saying. Her room? Her house? She could almost hear the walls laugh back at her.

She stood up, weariness in every bone. The silence of the room frightened her. She remembered, now, having heard the front door close a long time ago: the sound suddenly re-echoed through her brain. Her husband must have left the house, then – her husband ? She no longer knew in what terms to think: the simplest phrases had a poisoned edge. She sank back into her chair, overcome by a strange weakness. The clock struck ten – it was only ten o'clock! Suddenly she remembered that she had not ordered dinner ... or were they dining out that evening? Dinner – dining out – the old meaningless phraseology pursued her! She must try to think of herself as she would think of some one else, a some one dissociated from all the familiar routine of the past, whose wants and habits must gradually be learned, as one might spy out the ways of a strange animal ...

The clock struck another hour – eleven. She stood up again and walked to the door: she thought she would go upstairs to her room. Her room? Again the word derided her. She opened the door, crossed the narrow hall, and walked up the stairs. As she passed, she noticed Westall's sticks and umbrellas: a pair of his gloves lay on the hall table. The same stair- carpet mounted between the same walls; the same old French print, in its narrow black frame, faced her on the landing. This visual continuity was intolerable. Within, a gaping chasm; without, the same untroubled and familiar surface. She must get away from it before she could attempt to think. But, once in her room, she sat down on the lounge, a stupor creeping over her ...

Gradually her vision cleared. A great deal had happened in the interval – a wild marching and countermarching of emotions, arguments, ideas – a fury of insurgent impulses that fell back spent upon themselves. She had tried, at first, to rally, to organize these chaotic forces. There must be help somewhere, if only she could master the inner tumult. Life could not be broken off short like this, for a whim, a fancy; the law itself would side with her, would defend her. The law? What claim had she upon it? She was the prisoner of her own choice: she had been her own legislator, and she was the predestined victim of the code she had devised. But this was grotesque, intolerable – a mad mistake, for which she could not be held accountable! The law she had despised was still there, might still be invoked ... invoked, but to what end? Could she ask it to chain Westall to her side? She had been allowed to go free when she claimed her freedom – should she show less magnanimity than she had exacted? Magnanimity? The word lashed her with its irony – one does not strike an attitude when one is fighting for life! She would threaten, grovel, cajole ... she would yield anything to keep her hold on happiness. Ah, but the difficulty lay deeper! The law could not help her – her own apostasy could not help her. She was the victim of the theories she renounced. It was as though some giant machine of her own making had caught her up in its wheels and was grinding her to atoms ...

It was afternoon when she found herself out- of- doors. She walked with an aimless haste, fearing to meet familiar faces. The day was radiant, metallic: one of those searching American days so calculated to reveal the shortcomings of our street- cleaning and the excesses of our architecture. The streets looked bare and hideous; everything stared and glittered. She called a passing hansom, and gave Mrs Van Sideren's address. She did not know what had led up to the act; but she found herself suddenly resolved to speak, to cry out a warning. It was too late to save herself – but the girl might still be told. The hansom rattled up Fifth Avenue; she sat with her eyes fixed, avoiding recognition. At the Van Siderens' door she sprang out and rang the bell. Action had cleared her brain, and she felt calm and self- possessed. She knew now exactly what she meant to say.

The ladies were both out ... the parlor- maid stood waiting for a card. Julia, with a vague murmur, turned away from the door and lingered a moment on the sidewalk. Then she remembered that she had not paid the cab- driver. She drew a dollar from her purse and handed it to him. He touched his hat and drove off, leaving her alone in the long empty street. She wandered away westward, toward strange thoroughfares, where she was not likely to meet acquaintances. The feeling of aimlessness had returned. Once she found herself in the afternoon torrent of Broadway, swept past tawdry shops and flaming theatrical posters, with a succession of meaningless faces gliding by in the opposite direction ...

A feeling of faintness reminded her that she had not eaten since morning. She turned into a side- street of shabby houses, with rows of ash- barrels behind bent area- railings. In a basement window she saw the sign Ladies' Restaurant : a pie and a dish of doughnuts lay against the dusty pane like petrified food in an ethnological museum. She entered, and a young woman with a weak mouth and a brazen eye cleared a table for her near the window. The table was covered with a red and white cotton cloth and adorned with a bunch of celery in a thick tumbler and a salt- cellar full of grayish lumpy salt. Julia ordered tea, and sat a long time waiting for it. She was glad to be away from the noise and confusion of the streets. The low- ceilinged room was empty, and two or three waitresses with thin pert faces lounged in the background staring at her and whispering together. At last the tea was brought in a discolored metal teapot. Julia poured a cup and drank it hastily. It was black and bitter, but it flowed through her veins like an elixir. She was almost dizzy with exhilaration. Oh, how tired, how unutterably tired she had been!

She drank a second cup, blacker and bitterer, and now her mind was once more working clearly. She felt as vigorous, as decisive, as when she had stood on the Van Siderens' door- step – but the wish to return there had subsided. She saw now the futility of such an attempt – the humiliation to which it might have exposed her ... The pity of it was that she did not know what to do next. The short winter day was fading, and she realized that she could not remain much longer in the restaurant without attracting notice. She paid for her tea and went out into the street. The lamps were alight, and here and there a basement shop cast an oblong of gas- light across the fissured pavement. In the dusk there was something sinister about the aspect of the street, and she hastened back toward Fifth Avenue. She was not used to being out alone at that hour.

At the corner of Fifth Avenue she paused and stood watching the stream of carriages. At last a policeman caught sight of her and signed to her that he would take her across. She had not meant to cross the street, but she obeyed automatically, and presently found herself on the farther corner. There she paused again for a moment; but she fancied the policeman was watching her, and this sent her hastening down the nearest side- street ... After that she walked a long time, vaguely ... Night had fallen, and now and then, through the windows of a passing carriage, she caught the expanse of an evening waistcoat or the shimmer of an opera cloak ...

Suddenly she found herself in a familiar street. She stood still a moment, breathing quickly. She had turned the corner without noticing whither it led; but now, a few yards ahead of her, she saw the house in which she had once lived – her first husband's house. The blinds were drawn, and only a faint translucence marked the windows and the transom above the door. As she stood there she heard a step behind her, and a man walked by in the direction of the house. He walked slowly, with a heavy middle-aged gait, his head sunk a little between the shoulders, the red crease of his neck visible above the fur collar of his overcoat. He crossed the street, went up the steps of the house, drew forth a latch-key, and let himself in ...

There was no one else in sight. Julia leaned for a long time against the area-rail at the corner, her eyes fixed on the front of the house. The feeling of physical weariness had returned, but the strong tea still throbbed in her veins and lit her brain with an unnatural clearness. Presently she heard another step draw near, and moving quickly away, she too crossed the street and mounted the steps of the house. The impulse which had carried her there prolonged itself in a quick pressure of the electric bell – then she felt suddenly weak and tremulous, and grasped the balustrade for support. The door opened and a young footman with a fresh inexperienced face stood on the threshold. Julia knew in an instant that he would admit her.

‘I saw Mr Arment going in just now,’ she said. ‘Will you ask him to see me for a moment?’

The footman hesitated. ‘I think Mr Arment has gone up to dress for dinner, madam.’

Julia advanced into the hall. ‘I am sure he will see me – I will not detain him long,’ she said. She spoke quietly, authoritatively, in the tone which a good servant does not mistake. The footman had his hand on the drawing-room door.

‘I will tell him, madam. What name, please?’

Julia trembled: she had not thought of that. ‘Merely say a lady,’ she returned carelessly.

The footman wavered and she fancied herself lost; but at that instant the door opened from within and John Arment stepped into the hall. He drew back sharply as he saw her, his florid face turning sallow with the shock; then the blood poured back to it, swelling the veins on his temples and reddening the lobes of his thick ears.

It was long since Julia had seen him, and she was startled at the change in his appearance. He had thickened, coarsened, settled down into the enclosing flesh. But she noted this insensibly: her one conscious thought was that, now she was face to face with him, she must not let him escape till he had heard her. Every pulse in her body throbbed with the urgency of her message.

She went up to him as he drew back. 'I must speak to you,' she said.

Arment hesitated, red and stammering. Julia glanced at the footman, and her look acted as a warning. The instinctive shrinking from a 'scene' predominated over every other impulse, and Arment said slowly: 'Will you come this way?'

He followed her into the drawing-room and closed the door. Julia, as she advanced, was vaguely aware that the room at least was unchanged: time had not mitigated its horrors. The contadina still lurched from the chimneybreast, and the Greek slave obstructed the threshold of the inner room. The place was alive with memories: they started out from every fold of the yellow satin curtains and glided between the angles of the rosewood furniture. But while some subordinate agency was carrying these impressions to her brain, her whole conscious effort was centered in the act of dominating Arment's will. The fear that he would refuse to hear her mounted like fever to her brain. She felt her purpose melt before it, words and arguments running into each other in the heat of her longing. For a moment her voice failed her, and she imagined herself thrust out before she could speak; but as she was struggling for a word Arment pushed a chair forward, and said quietly: 'You are not well.'

The sound of his voice steadied her. It was neither kind nor unkind – a voice that suspended judgment, rather, awaiting unforeseen developments. She supported herself against the back of the chair and drew a deep breath.

'Shall I send for something?' he continued, with a cold embarrassed politeness.

Julia raised an entreating hand. 'No – no – thank you. I am quite well.'

He paused midway toward the bell, and turned on her. 'Then may I ask – ?'

'Yes,' she interrupted him. 'I came here because I wanted to see you. There is something I must tell you.'

Arment continued to scrutinize her. 'I am surprised at that,' he said. 'I should have supposed that any communication you may wish to make could have been made through our lawyers.'

'Our lawyers!' She burst into a little laugh. 'I don't think they could help me – this time.'

Arment's face took on a barricaded look. 'If there is any question of help – of course – '

It struck her, whimsically, that she had seen that look when some shabby devil called with a subscription- book. Perhaps he thought she wanted him to put his name down for so much in sympathy – or even in money ... The thought made her laugh again. She saw his look change slowly to perplexity. All his facial changes were slow, and she remembered, suddenly, how it had once diverted her to shift that lumbering scenery with a word. For the first time it struck her that she had been cruel. 'There is a question of help,' she said in a softer key; 'you can help me; but only by listening ... I want to tell you something ... '

Arment's resistance was not yielding. 'Would it not be easier to – write?' he suggested.

She shook her head. 'There is no time to write ... and it won't take long.' She raised her head and their eyes met. 'My husband has left me,' she said.

'Westall – ?' he stammered, reddening again.

'Yes. This morning. Just as I left you. Because he was tired of me.'

The words, uttered scarcely above a whisper, seemed to dilate to the limit of the room. Arment looked toward the door; then his embarrassed glance returned to Julia.

'I am very sorry,' he said awkwardly.

'Thank you,' she murmured.

‘But I don’t see – ’

‘No – but you will – in a moment. Won’t you listen to me? Please!’ Instinctively she had shifted her position, putting herself between him and the door. ‘It happened this morning,’ she went on in short breathless phrases. ‘I never suspected anything – I thought we were – perfectly happy ... Suddenly he told me he was tired of me ... there is a girl he likes better ... He has gone to her ... ’ As she spoke, the lurking anguish rose upon her, possessing her once more to the exclusion of every other emotion. Her eyes ached, her throat swelled with it, and two painful tears ran down her face.

Arment’s constraint was increasing visibly. ‘This – this is very unfortunate,’ he began. ‘But I should say the law – ’

‘The law?’ she echoed ironically. ‘When he asks for his freedom?’

‘You are not obliged to give it.’

‘You were not obliged to give me mine – but you did.’

He made a protesting gesture.

‘You saw that the law couldn’t help you – didn’t you?’ she went on. ‘That is what I see now. The law represents material rights – it can’t go beyond. If we don’t recognize an inner law ... the obligation that love creates ... being loved as well as loving ... there is nothing to prevent our spreading ruin unhindered ... is there?’ She raised her head plaintively, with the look of a bewildered child. ‘That is what I see now ... what I wanted to tell you. He leaves me because he’s tired ... but I was not tired; and I don’t understand why he is. That’s the dreadful part of it – the not understanding: I hadn’t realized what it meant. But I’ve been thinking of it all day, and things have come back to me – things I hadn’t noticed ... when you and I ... ’ She moved closer to him, and fixed her eyes on his with the gaze which tries to reach beyond words. ‘I see now that you didn’t understand – did you?’

Their eyes met in a sudden shock of comprehension: a veil seemed to be lifted between them. Arment’s lip trembled.

‘No,’ he said, ‘I didn’t understand.’

She gave a little cry, almost of triumph. ‘I knew it! I knew it! You wondered – you tried to tell me – but no words came ... You saw your life falling in ruins ... the world slipping from you ... and you couldn't speak or move!

She sank down on the chair against which she had been leaning. 'Now I know – now I know,' she repeated.

'I am very sorry for you,' she heard Arment stammer.

She looked up quickly. 'That's not what I came for. I don't want you to be sorry. I came to ask you to forgive me ... for not understanding that you didn't understand ... That's all I wanted to say.' She rose with a vague sense that the end had come, and put out a groping hand toward the door.

Arment stood motionless. She turned to him with a faint smile.

'You forgive me?'

'There is nothing to forgive – '

'Then you will shake hands for good- bye?' She felt his hand in hers: it was nerveless, reluctant.

'Good- bye,' she repeated. 'I understand now.'

She opened the door and passed out into the hall. As she did so, Arment took an impulsive step forward; but just then the footman, who was evidently alive to his obligations, advanced from the background to let her out. She heard Arment fall back. The footman threw open the door, and she found herself outside in the darkness.

地毯上的花纹

我写过几篇稿子，赚过一点儿小钱，我甚至没准儿有时会动一动这样的心思：我本人要比那些居高临下之人眼里的我更为出色。不过，在略微追溯了一番我的路径（这习惯纯属无事生非，因为我走过的路并不算太长）之后，我把乔治·考威克气喘吁吁、忧心忡忡地跑来找我帮忙的那个晚上，算作我真正的起点。他写的东西比我多，赚过的小钱也比我多，不过在我看来，有时他会错过几个抖机灵的机会。不过，在那天晚上，我只能向他表示，他从来都不会错过一个做好事的机会。他请我替那份专门刊登学究文章的周刊《中点》——因其出刊时间位于每周中点而得名——备一篇稿，原先这稿约是他接的，现在他把文章的素材用一根结实的绳子扎成一捆，放在我桌上，我不禁一阵狂喜。我扑上去抓住了这个机会——抓住了那部作品的第一卷——至于我的朋友何以有此诉求，我没怎么留心他的解释。这份活儿显然适合我来接，有什么样的解释会比这一条更关键呢？以前我写过休·维里克，但是没有一个字发在《中点》上——在那里，我主要是炮制一点儿跟女士和小诗人有关的零碎。这是维里克的新小说，试读本，无论这本书对他的名声能起到多大或者多小的作用，我反正是当即明白，这事对我的名声能产生怎样的影响。非但如此，虽说我向来是一拿到他的书就要先睹为快的，但眼下我有了个特别的理由，恨不得马上读到他的作品：我收到了一份请柬，下周日去布里奇斯，简恩斯太太的便笺里提到维里克先生也会来。我正年轻，能见到像他这样有名的人物，难免激动，难免天真地相信，在这样的场合，必须好好显摆一下，我对他的“近作”是了然于胸的。

考威克本来答应给它写一篇书评，到头来却连读一遍的时间都没有，他被一则消息折腾得六神无主——一转念的工夫他便做了决定——要搭夜班邮船去巴黎。他收到一封来自格温德琳·埃尔梅的电报，回复他前一封表示想飞奔过去施以援手的信。对于格温德琳·埃尔梅，我已有所耳闻。我从未见过她，却也有点儿概念，大致说来，只要她母亲一死，考威克便能娶她。那位老太太眼下似乎很有可能成全他：从国外回来的路上，因为在气候或者某种“疗法”上出了点糟糕的岔子，她突然病倒。她的女儿孤立无援，惊恐万状，急着赶回家，又害怕路上遇险，于是接受了朋友的帮助，而我却暗自相信，恐怕埃尔梅太太一看到他就能缓过来。至于他自己确信什么，那几乎是昭然若揭

了，反正他相信的事显然跟我相信的事不一样。他给我看过格温德琳的照片，他说她算不得漂亮，但很有意思。她在十九岁那年出版了一部三卷本长篇小说——《内心深处》，他在《中点》上写过十分精彩的评论。对于我现在的跃跃欲试，他深表谢意，并且担保我们在谈论的那家杂志也会同样满怀热忱；末了，他一只手扶在门上，跟我说：“你当然没有问题，你知道。”他看出我多少有点儿迷糊，就加了一句：“我的意思是，你不会犯傻吧。”

“犯傻——对维里克！对于他，除了感叹聪明绝顶以外，我还能有什么想法？”

“呃，这不就是犯傻吗？‘聪明绝顶’到底是什么意思？看在上帝的分儿上，你得尽力懂得他。不能因为我们俩如此交接，就对他不利。请按照我谈论他的方式谈论他，如果你能做到的话。”

我踌躇片刻。“你的意思是，他在这些人里绝对是老大——诸如此类？”

考威克几乎在哀号了。“哦，你知道，我一般不会这样给他们排座次的，在艺术的婴儿期才会来这套！可他给我如此罕有的愉悦，那感觉——”他沉吟片刻——“有某种东西。”

我又困惑起来。“那感觉，请问，是什么？”

“我亲爱的朋友，这就是我想让你说的呀！”

甚至在他砰的一声关上门之前，我已经拿起那本书，准备把那种感觉说出来了。我读着维里克的书熬到半夜，考威克也不可能有我这么上心。维里克聪明绝顶——我坚持这一点，不过他在这些人里怎么也不能算是老大。不过，我在文章里并没有提及这些人。我颇为自得，觉得这一回应该是摆脱了艺术的婴儿期。“不错，”他们在办公室里热烈宣告，当那一期出版时，我觉得我有了与那位大人物会面的资本。这事给了我一两天的信心——紧接着信心又坠落。我想象过他津津有味地读我的文章的画面，但是，如果考威克都不满意，那维里克本人又怎么会满意呢？我真的琢磨过，有时候，爱慕者的热情甚至比写作者的胃口还要显而易见。无论如何，考威克从巴黎写来了一封郁郁寡欢的信：埃尔梅太太缓过来了，而我根本就没有说出维里克给了他怎样的感觉。

二

布里奇斯之行让我洞察更深。就我当场亲眼所见，休·维里克委实教人无从揣摩，以至于我不禁为自己事先对此缺乏思想准备而汗颜。即便他看来情绪不错，也并不是因为他读过我那篇文章；事实上，我相信在那个周日上午，他根本就没读过——尽管《中点》已经在三天

前出街，并且，我确信它就在某张镀金桌子上的那个傲气而挺括的期刊花园中怒放，这张堆满期刊的桌子看起来有点儿像是车站里的杂志摊。他给我留下的印象就是如此，所以我很想让他读一读。为了达到这个目的，我的手鬼鬼祟祟地给杂志原先或许不够理想的位置做了点儿修正，挪到既引人注目，又不显得太刻意地方。实话说，我甚至还观察了一下我的这番动作有没有什么效果，然而直到午餐时分，看来还是白忙了一场。

此后，在我们一群人闲庭信步之际，我有半个小时都跟在这位大人物身边——或许多少也是用了点儿花招的，他的和蔼可亲让我越发蠢蠢欲动，我对他做出了如此特殊而恰当的评论，真不希望他对此一无所知。而他似乎并不渴望什么恰当的评论；相反，在他的话语中，我捕捉不到一丁点儿愤愤不平的怨言——反正凭着我涉世不深的阅历，没有一点儿能让我听出端倪的信号。最近对他的赞誉越来越多，正如我们在《中点》中指出的那样，看到这些好评令他脱颖而出，真是一桩快意之事。他当然不算流行，但我断定，他之所以总是和颜悦色，原因之一恰恰是他的成功并不取决于作品是否流行。从某种角度看，他也算领风气之先，至少评论界骤然加速，奋力赶上他的步伐。我们终于发现他是多么聪明，而他就此失去了神秘感，只能随遇而安。我在他身边漫步，恨不得告诉他，世人揭开了他神秘的面纱，而我在其中起了多少作用；有那么一瞬间，要不是同行的某位女士在他另一侧的手肘边抢到个位置，以某种较为自私的劲头向他倾诉，我也许已经把这事儿做成了。真叫人沮丧：我几乎觉得她这是故意跟我本人作对了。

就我本人而言，确乎有一两句话掠过舌尖，关于在适当的时间用适当的词语之类，不过，事后想起，我庆幸这话没有讲出口，因为我们回到屋里，聚在一起喝茶时，我发现刚刚没跟我们一起出门的简太太 [1] 正伸长胳膊挥舞着《中点》杂志。她刚才闲来无事，随手拿起来，发现了那一篇，顿时兴高采烈。我看得出来，某些男人做了便是错的事情，若是换到女人身上，常常倒是一件值得庆幸的事。实际上，她是把我自己没能办到的事给做成了。“这里有几条小小的、甜美的真理，值得一说，”我听到她如此宣称，并把杂志塞给壁炉边一对神情茫然的夫妻。休·维里克跟我们一起散完步之后，上楼去换了衣服，他刚刚再度露面，简太太就把杂志从那对夫妻手里抢了回来。“我知道你向来是不看这类玩意儿的，不过这回你确实需要看看。你还没看过？那你一定得看。此人确实懂你，抓住了我一向的感觉，你知道的。”简太太眼波流转，那眼神确乎想把她一向的感觉传递出来，可她还是加了一句，说她终究难以表达。而杂志上的那个人用某种震撼人心的方式表达了出来。“就看看这里，还有那里，我画过的地方，看看他是怎么把那感觉提炼出来的。”她果真把我文章里

最亮的部分标出来给他看。如果说，当时我多多少少被她逗乐的话，那么维里克本人就完全可能被她逗得乐不可支。当着我们所有人的面，简太太想要大声读几句，维里克顿时就表现出他有多么忍俊不禁。他和和气气地从她手里抽走了那本杂志，就此打消了她的念头——无论如何，我喜欢他用这一招。等他换礼服时，他会把杂志带上楼，顺便看一看。半小时之后，他果然这么做了——当他回自己房间的时候，我看到杂志就拿在他手里。就在那一刻，为了让简太太开心，我跟她提起，我就是这篇书评的作者。我断定，我确实让她开了心，但是，也许，不像我原先期盼的那么开心。既然这位作者“只不过是而已”，那么事情就显得没什么了不起了。这么一来，我岂不是非但没有替自己增光添彩，反而使这篇文章为之失色吗？这位太太反正向来是一惊一乍的。这不要紧，我唯一在意的是，维里克此刻待在卧室的炉火边，那文章会让他作何感想。

晚餐席间，我一直留心着蛛丝马迹，试图想象他的眼睛里闪烁着更为愉悦的光彩。然而，让我失望的是，简太太并没有给我一点儿可以证实的机会。我本指望她会得意扬扬地在餐桌上大呼小叫，当众问他，她有没有说错。宴会的场地很大——还有一些从外面来的人，不过，我以前还从来没有见过有哪张餐桌长到连简太太都招呼不过来的地步。正当我在认真寻思，这回碰到了一张长得仿佛无穷无尽的桌子，恐怕是要剥夺我的机会了，坐在我边上的客人，一位亲爱的女士——她是教区牧师的妹妹博伊尔小姐，健壮而刚硬——灵光一闪，拿出非凡的勇气向维里克发问，后者坐在她对面，但不是正对面，所以他回答的时候，两个人的身体都只能向前靠。她不事矫揉，直接打听他对简太太的“歌颂”作何感想，文章她已经读过了——只是没有把文章跟坐在她右侧的客人联系在一起。我竖起耳朵听他的回话，他嘴里塞满面包，轻快地接口，答案让我呆若木鸡：“哦，过得去吧——反正就是那套胡说八道呗。”

维里克说话的当口，我们四目相对，好在博伊尔小姐的大惊失色掩饰了我的惊讶。“你是说，他的说法并不公正？”这位了不起的女士说。

维里克笑出了声，我很高兴我居然也能跟着一起笑。“这篇文章很迷人。”他回答我们。

博伊尔小姐的下巴往前伸，横跨了半张桌布的宽度。“哦，你真够深邃的！”她穷追不舍。

“像海一样深！我想宣告的是，这位作者看不出——”恰在此时，一盘菜从他肩上传过来，我们只能等他拿好自己的那份菜再说。

“看不出什么？”我的邻座继续追问。“什么都看不出。”

“天哪——真蠢啊！”

“一点儿都不，”维里克又笑起来。“没人能看到。”

有位离他较远的女士跟他搭讪，博伊尔小姐便又坐回原位，跟我说话。“没人看得出一点儿东西！”她兴高采烈地宣布，对此，我只能回答说虽然我过去也常常这么想，但是，无论如何，现在我反而用这种想法来证明自己具有某种惊人的眼力。我没有告诉她这篇文章是我写的，我还看到简太太在桌子的另一头忙忙碌碌，没有听到维里克刚才说了什么。

饭后我处处避开他，因为我得承认，他在我眼里显得既残忍又自负，他流露的真实想法也让我痛苦。“那套胡说八道”——那可是我敏锐而精巧的研究成果！对他钦佩之余，难免略有保留，就因为如此，他心里便怨恨到这种地步吗？我原以为他为人沉着，而他也确实足够沉着，表面如同坚硬的抛光玻璃盒子，里面装着精致而无用的虚荣心。我着实气恼，唯一聊以安慰的是，既然没人能看出什么来，那乔治·考威克也跟我一样被关在了门外。不过，在女士们散去之后，这点安慰并不足以让我以得体的仪态——我是说，穿着一件斑点外套，哼着小曲——走进吸烟室去。我多少有点儿沮丧地走向卧室，却在过道上又撞上维里克先生，他刚刚又上楼换了衣服，此刻正从自己的房间里出来。他正哼着小曲，身穿一件斑点外套，看到我那瞬间悚然一惊，猛地收住了那股子得意劲儿。

“我亲爱的年轻人，”他嚷起来，“能找到你真是太好了！刚刚晚餐时跟博伊尔小姐的一番话，怕是伤到了你，这实在不是我的本意啊。仅仅半小时之前，我才听简太太说起你便是《中点》上那篇小小的评论的作者。”

我并不同意，说这事也伤不到我的骨头，可他一路跟我到门口，手按在我肩膀上，好心好意地想摸摸我有没有骨折。他听说我上楼来是想就寝的，便恳求我允许他跨进门来跟我聊几句，说说他先前对我的文章作如是评价，究竟是什么意思。显然，他确实怕我受到伤害，而我一旦体察到他的担忧，一切在我眼里似乎突然就有所不同了。我那廉价的评论顿时飞入虚空，即便是我那文章里的精华，在他本人的光环辉映之下，也显得平淡无奇。他当时的形象此刻依然历历在目，他就站在我房间里的小地毯上，在壁炉火光的映照下，他那件斑点外套，精致而清朗的脸庞，都熠熠生辉，闪烁着某种急欲对年轻人表达善意的渴望。我不知道他起初想说什么，但是我估计，看到我为之释然的样子，他颇受触动，进而兴奋起来，将心底深处的言语调动到唇边。就这样，他很快就跟我说了那些话，事后我才得知，这话里包含了以前他从没跟任何人说过的意思。对于他这番慷慨的冲动，我一向有公允的看法：那纯粹是出于后悔，因为他无意中怠慢了一个地位比

他低微的文人，而且还是一个正对他褒奖有加的文人。为了有所弥补，他才会与我平等对话，并且出于我们同样最为珍视的理由。时间也好，地点也好，那份意料之外也好，都加深了这样的印象：没有比他这一招更有效的办法了。

三

“我不太懂得怎么跟你解释，”他说，“正是因为你给我写的书评颇有点儿智慧，正是因为你那非同俗流的敏锐，才会激发那种感觉——对我而言，这也有一段长久的渊源，请你相信我——出于一时冲动，我跟那位好太太说了那样的话，你听来自然不入耳。报纸杂志我是向来不看的，除非有人塞给我，这一篇便是如此——塞给我看的总是最好的朋友！不过我以前有时候也会看看——十年前吧。我敢说，一般而言，那时的文章要蠢得多。无论如何，在我看来，那些文章都完美地错过了我小小的主旨，不过，无论是轻拍我的背还是给我的小腿踢上一脚，都是同样值得赞赏的。无论何时，我若是碰巧朝它们瞥上一眼，它们总是照样光彩夺目——我是说，照样美妙绝伦地抓不住要点。你没抓住，我亲爱的朋友，虽然你的自信无与伦比。你聪明绝顶，你的文章也十分好看，但这些却没有让事实发生一丁点儿变化。恰恰是因为跟你们这些冉冉上升的年轻人在一起，”维里克笑道，“我才最深切地感到自己有多么失败！”

我怀着热切的兴趣听他讲，他说得越多，我的兴趣越是浓厚。“你失败——天哪！那么你所谓的‘小小主旨’，到底是什么呢？”

“在经过多年劳碌之后，我难道非得把这一点告诉你不成？”这句亲切的嗔怪——诙谐而夸张——蕴含着某种意味，使得我这个一向狂热追求真理的年轻人脸涨得通红，一直红到头发根。如今我跟以前一样懵然无知，不过，在某种程度上，我已经对自己的愚钝习以为常了。然而，在那一刻，维里克那欢乐的语调却让我在自己眼里，或许也在他眼里，成了个罕有的大傻瓜。那一刻，我正准备嚷起来：“啊，对啊，别告诉我——为了我的面子，为了我们这一行的面子，不要说！”而他却径自往下说，他的举止神态表明，他已经看穿了我的心思，至于我们是否终有一天能把面子找补回来，他自有看法。“说到我那小小的主旨，我的意思是——我该怎么说呢？——就是那个特别的原因，我之所以要写书，主要就是为了这个。每一个作家不是都有这样特别的原因吗？那个让他全神贯注的东西，若不是要努力达成这个目标，他根本就不会去写作，那是他真正的激情，对他而言，唯有在这部分，艺术的火焰才燃烧得最为激烈。对，就是这样！”

我思忖片刻——也就是说，我跟着他，保持着一段恭敬的距离，

几乎上气不接下气。我给迷住了——你可以说轻而易举，不过，无论如何，我可不打算丢盔弃甲。“你的描述当然很美，可你描述的东西却并未因此变得清晰可见。”

“我向你保证，你一旦恍然大悟，它就会清晰可见。”我发现，我们这个话题充满魅力，在我同伴身上也激起了与我一样强烈的情感。“无论如何，”他继续说，“我能代表自己说话：在我的作品中，总有那么一个观念，要是没有它，我对整个工作都不会有一丁点儿兴趣。它是作品最好、最完整的内涵，它能在作品中得以贯彻，我认为，这胜利应该归功于持久的耐心和巧妙的设计。这话我应该留给别人说；可是偏偏没人能把我们正在聊的话题准确地说出来。我那点小小的花招，从一本书延伸到另一本，至于其他种种，相对而言不过浮于表象而已。我那些书，叙述的顺序也好，形式也好，结构也好，或许总有一天会让内行的人看出门道，发现将它们合在一起，就能完整地体现作品的内涵。所以它自然是评论家们应该去寻觅的东西。我突然觉得，”我的客人微笑着补了一句，“它甚至应该是评论家们必须找到的东西。”

这似乎确实成了一种责任。“你管它叫‘小花招’？”

“这只是我的谦辞而已。究其实质，这是一个精巧的体系。”

“你相信你已经把这种体系建构出来了？”

“我建构这种体系的方式，便是我平生聊以自慰之事。”

我踌躇片刻。“难道你不觉得自己应该——稍稍——向评论家施以援手吗？”

“施以援手？我的每一笔每一画，不都是在施以援手吗？我对着他茫然的面孔，大声吼叫着我的意图。”说到这里，维里克又笑出了声，一只手搭在我肩膀上，表明他的话并不是冲着我个人的面相。

“可你说到了内行。既然如此，那要成为内行，总得有个先入门的过程吧。”

“天啊，除此之外，所谓的批评还能是什么呢？”这话恐怕又让我脸红了，可是我也找到了抵挡的办法：我不断重申，就一个普通人的认知而言，他对于那“一线真谛”的描述未免太过粗疏，难以理解。“那是因为你从来就没窥见一二，”他回敬我，“但凡你看到一眼我们正在谈及的要素，它马上就会实实在在地占据你整个视野。对我而言，它就像这个壁炉上的大理石一样清晰实在。更何况，评论家可不是什么普通人：如果他是的话，那么请问，他跑到邻居的花园里忙活什么呢？你本人就绝不是一个普通人，你们所有人‘存在的理由’^[2]是——

你们都是抓得住精妙奥义的小精灵。如果说我的头等大事是一个

秘密，那也只是因为它本身就是个秘密——这项令人惊叹的事业将它塑造成了一个秘密。我不仅从未采取过一丁点儿预警措施来保守这个秘密，而且做梦都没想过会出现这样的出人意料的局面。但凡我有所预料，我就没有心思再继续下去了。事实上，我自己也是在完成作品的同时，才渐渐明白过来的。”

“现在你很喜欢它？”我斗胆问道。

“我的作品？”

“你的秘密。一回事。”

“你既如此猜测，”维里克答道，“就证明你和我一样聪明！”在这话的鼓励下，我说他显然已经与那个秘密难舍难分了，而他也承认，如今这确实成了他生活中的一大乐趣。“我活着，几乎就是为了看看它到底会不会被人发现。”他看着我，仿佛在发起一项半开玩笑的挑战，他眼睛深处似乎有什么东西在向外窥视。“不过我也无须担忧——没人发现得了。”

“你把我整个人都点燃了，以前我可从未这样过，”我宣称，“你让我下定决心，做不到，毋宁死。”紧接着我又问：“这是什么圈内人士的机密吗？”

这话让他面色一沉——他伸出一只手仿佛要道晚安。“啊，亲爱的朋友，这事儿可不是用廉价的新闻语言就能描述清楚的。”

我当然知道他喜欢吹毛求疵，可是我们这番话聊下来，我也能感觉到他多少暴露了一些心事。我心有不甘——紧紧抓住他的手。“那我就不用这种说法好了，”我说，“最终我会在文章里宣告我的发现，不过，我敢说，如果不用这个词儿，那我还得下好多苦功夫。话说回来，为了让我快点度过这场‘难产’，你就不能给朋友一点儿线索吗？”此时我觉得自己放松多了。

“我为整个作品付出的努力清晰可见，给过线索啦——每一页，每一行，每个字母。那玩意儿就像笼中的小鸟、钩上的鱼饵、鼠夹上的奶酪一般具体。它塞在每一卷里，正如你的脚塞进你的鞋。它统治着每一行，它挑选了每个词，它给每一个字母i画上那个点，它给每一个逗号找到合适的位置。”

我挠挠头。“这种东西究竟存在于文体中，还是观念中？是一种形式的要素，还是情感的要素？”

他再度宽宏大量地握了握我的手，我顿时觉得刚才的问题粗糙浅陋，我对概念的区分显得可怜巴巴。“晚安，亲爱的孩子——别操心这事了。不管怎么说，你确实很像一个研究员。”

“是不是有一点儿小聪明反而会把这事儿搞砸？”我还是不肯放过他。

他犹豫了一下。“呃，你的身体里有一颗心脏。心脏是一种形式的要素呢，还是情感的要素？我的主张是，在我的作品中，迄今还没人提到的东西就像是生命的器官。”

“我明白——这是关于生命的观念，某种哲学。除非，”我热切地接着往下说，一个也许更让人快乐的想法冒出来，“某种你在文体中设计的游戏，某些你在语言中追求的东西。也许是对字母p的使用偏好！”我说着说着便信口开河起来。“papa（爸爸），potatoes（土豆），prunes（西梅）——诸如此类？”他得体地由着我胡说，只是表示我没有选对字母。不过他已经不觉得这事有什么意思了，我能看出他渐生倦意。然而，还有一句话我非得追问一下。“你能不能，执笔在手，亲自把它清清楚楚地写下来——给它命名，为它修辞，将它条分缕析？”

“哦，”他近乎热烈地叹了口气，“如果我是你们这些‘执笔在手’的家伙，就好了！”

“毫无疑问，这对你会是个很好的机会。可是，为什么，就因为我们这些家伙没做你自己也做不到的事，你就要鄙视我们呢？”

“做不到？”他瞪大了眼睛。“在这二十卷作品里，难道我没有把这事做到吗？我用我的方式做到了，”他继续说，“走你的吧，别用你那套方式。”

“我们的方式真是无比艰辛呢。”我有气无力地说。

“我的方式也一样！我们各选各的路。谁也不用强迫谁。你不想下楼抽根烟吗？”

“算了。我想把这事琢磨透。”

“那么明天早上你就要揭穿我，让我‘一丝不挂’了？”

“且看我能做点什么吧，我睡觉的时候也要琢磨琢磨。不过还有一句话，”我继续说，此时我们已经离开了房间——我又跟着他沿着走廊走了几步，“这不同凡响的‘整体意图’，我是按照你的说法——这是我能引诱你对此做出的最生动的描述——也就是说，总体上看，它是一种被掩埋的珍宝？”

他脸上闪着光。“好吧，就这么说吧，尽管这话也许不应该我来说。”

“胡说！”我笑起来，“你明明对此深感自豪。”

“呃，我本不想告诉你，不过这份喜乐确实发自我的灵魂！”

“你是说，它是稀世绝美之物？”

他再次犹豫了一会儿。“全世界最美妙的东西！”我们打住了，他扔下这些言辞，便离我而去，然而，我的目光仍然热切地追着他来到走廊的尽头，于是他转过头，一眼看见我困惑的脸庞。见状，他热诚地，其实在我看来是近乎不安地摇摇头，挥挥手指。“放弃吧——放弃吧！”

这并不是挑战——这是满含父爱的忠告。假如我手头有他的某本书，我就会把近来满怀信仰、忙忙碌碌的过程再重复一遍——我会彻夜研读他的作品。凌晨三点，我还是睡不着，进而想起，他对简太太而言是如何不可或缺，于是我拿起一支蜡烛，偷偷下楼。却发现整栋房子里看不到一行他的作品，反正我找不到。

四

回到城里，我狂热地把他的书都收齐了；我按着顺序把每本都单独挑出来，挑灯夜读。如此这般，我度过了发疯般的一个月，有几件事在这段时间里接连发生。其中之一，也就是最后发生的那件，我不妨先提一提，就是我听从了维里克的忠告：我扔掉了我那荒唐的企图。此事我确实无能为力，事实证明这样做满盘皆输。不管怎么说，正如他自己察觉的那样，我一向都是喜欢他的，眼下的情形，只不过是那乍现的灵光和徒劳的心血损害了我的一腔热爱而已。我非但没能一鼓作气，挖出整体意图，而且还发现，就连以前那些能让我乐在其中的次要内涵，都踪影匿影。他的书甚至不再像以前那样让我入迷，这一番寻寻觅觅令我愤懑不已，以至于我没法对它们再抱有什么好感。没有新添什么乐趣，反而减少了种种快意。因为自从我没法参透作者的暗示之后，我当然就认定，原先我以职业的眼光来感知这些作品，如今为了维护体面，这一套是再也不能拿出来说了。我一无所知——人人都一无所知。真丢人，不过我能忍——现在最多是让我有点儿气恼而已。到头来这事甚至令我厌倦，于是我把我的困惑归咎于——我得承认这想法有悖情理——维里克耍了我。被掩埋的珍宝只是个恶作剧，所谓的整体意图是荒诞不经的装腔作势。

不过，在此期间，最重要的一件事是我把自己的这番遭遇告诉了乔治·考威克，这个消息让他颇为震撼。他终于回来了，可不幸的是埃尔梅太太也回来了，因此，在我看来，他的婚礼尚属空中楼阁。我在布里奇斯经历的逸事让他激动不已。这种说法与他的感觉完全吻合，从一开始他就认为，维里克的作品里含有某种用眼睛无法看透的东西。我说，把书印出来，就是特意为了让你用眼睛看的，他立马就指责我因为深感挫败而心怀不满。我们俩的交往，历来就是这么愉快而自由的。维里克跟我提到的那一点，恰恰就是他考威克想让我在书评

里表达的东西。我提议说，既然如今我已经提供了帮助，他一定准备自己来畅所欲言了吧，而他坦白承认，他还得有更深入的理解，才能着手做这件事。当初要是他来给这部新作写评论，他会说，在这位作家的叙事艺术的最深层面，显然还有某些特质有待解读。我连这样的暗示都没有，难怪作家并不觉得受到了褒奖！我问考威克，关于作家所说的他那精美微妙的奥义，他究竟作何感想，考威克的回答无疑是激情满怀的：“这可不是说给俗人听的——这可不是说给俗人听的！”他已经抓住了什么东西的尾巴，他会努力拽，把它整个拽出来。他不放过维里克与我的这番奇怪的密谈的所有细枝末节，把我说成是最走运的那种人，同时又列举了半打问题，说真希望我当时能机灵一点儿，能把这些问题提出来。然而，在另一方面，他又不想知道太多——那会破坏静观其变的乐趣。当我们俩见面时，我的乐趣尚未丧失殆尽，但彼时我已经能预见那结果，而考威克也看出我已窥见端倪。至于我，同样也看出他马上要干的一件事，就是冲出门去，把这个故事讲给格温德琳听。

在我跟考威克谈话之后的第二天，我惊讶地收到一张来自休·维里克的便条，他说起在一本杂志上偶然看到一篇我署名的文章，不由得想起我们在布里奇斯的会面。“我兴致勃勃地读完，”他写道，“由此回忆起我们在你卧室壁炉边的愉快的对话。进而，我开始琢磨自己有多么冒失，非要把可能会对你造成负担的知识压在你身上。如今冲动已过，我简直无法想象当初何以如此激动，居然一反常态。以前，无论把话题扩展到怎样的程度，我都从来没有提过我那个小秘密，而且以后我也永远不会再说起这个奥秘了。偶然间，我对你直言相告，那份坦率远远超过以前此事进入我的游戏时所达到的程度，以至于我发觉这个游戏——我是说玩游戏时享受的乐趣——因此而蒙受巨大的损失。简而言之，如果你能听懂的话，我把我的娱乐活动搞砸了。我真的不想透露给任何人，我相信你们这些聪明的年轻人管那个叫‘要诀’。这当然是一种自私的焦虑，我告诉你这一点，也许这说法对你有点价值。如果你乐意迁就我，就不要把我透露的事情再说给别人听。就当我的精神错乱好了——这是你的权利；但是不要把个中缘由告诉任何人。”

这番交流还有下文，次日一早我就斗胆驱车直奔维里克家门。那些年他住在肯辛顿广场的一栋朴实的老房子里。他马上接待了我，我一进门就发现，我并未丧失逗他开心的能力。他一看见我的面孔就笑起来，因为我脸上的表情无疑显得颇为不安。我太轻率了——我后悔不已。“我已经告诉别人了，”我喘着粗气说，“而且我断定，那人已经转告他人！更何况，那是个女人。”

“就是你告诉的那位？”

“不是，另一位。我相信，他肯定已经告诉了她。”

“这对她能有什么好处——对我也一样！女人永远也弄不懂这些的。”

“没错，可是她会走到哪儿说到哪儿：她要做的，就是你不愿意它发生的事情。”

维里克思忖片刻，不过并没像我担心的那样惊慌失措，在他看来，既然伤害已经造成，那就是他应得的。“没关系——别担心。”

“我会尽力，我向你保证，不让我们俩谈的事情再扩散出去。”

“很好，你尽力就好。”

“同时，”我继续说，“乔治·考威克得到了这个要诀，就他而言，倒是真有可能会有所收获的。”

“那可就是个大日子了。”

我跟他说起考威克有多么聪明，对维里克是多么欣赏，对我这件逸事又是抱有怎样浓厚的兴趣。我并未渲染我们各自的判断有多大分歧，只是提到我的朋友已经认定，在某些特定的事情上他要比大多数人都看得深远。他就和我在布里奇斯时一样热血沸腾。而且他正在跟那位年轻女士相爱，也许这两位凑到一起，能把某些疑问解开。

维里克似乎为之一动。“你是说他们快要结婚了吗？”

“我敢说迟早会有这一天。”

“那可能对他们有点好处，”他只好承认，“不过我们得给他们一点儿时间！”

我说到我又狠下了一番功夫，也承认处处碰壁，于是他又翻出以前的忠告念叨起来：“放弃吧，放弃吧！”他显然认为我在心智上并不具备从事这番冒险的条件。我待了半小时，他生性善良，可我不得不说他的情绪很不稳定。他曾一时兴起便畅所欲言，也曾一时低落便懊悔不已，如今又换了一种情绪，开始变得无动于衷。如此反复无常，使得我越发相信，关于那个“要诀”的事，其中并无太多玄机。但我还是想法让他回答了几个问题，尽管他显然很不耐烦。在他本人看来，毫无疑问，那个让我们不胜迷惘的东西，明明是清晰可见的。那玩意儿，我猜想，就藏在最初的规划中；宛若波斯地毯上的一个复杂的纹样 [3]。当我使用这个意象时，他表示高度赞赏，而他自己则用了另一种说法。“它就是那根线，”他说，“把我的珍珠穿起来的那根！”他之所以要给我写那张便条，是因为他真的不想给我们一丁点儿帮助——我们之间的这种相处方式完美到无从触及。他早已养成习惯，心安理得地听天由命，所以如果要破解这魔咒，那只能靠它自身的某种

力量，不攻自破。如今，他在这最后一次会面时的样子仍历历在目——因为此后我再也没跟他说过话——他就是那种独步游戏禁地、确信安全无虞之人。我移步走开，心里不禁纳闷，他自己又是从哪里搞来“要诀”的呢？

五

当我跟乔治·考威克说起维里克给我的告诫时，他的反应让我觉得，只要对他审慎应对的能力稍有怀疑，就几乎对他是一种侮辱了。他当时确实马上转告了格温德琳，格温德琳回应热烈，这种态度本身就能保证她必会谨言慎行。如今他们俩的所有心思都用来研究这个问题，这种消遣方式何其珍贵，他们根本不舍得与众人分享。他们似乎本能地抓住了维里克关于娱乐性的高见。不过，尽管他们在智力上颇为自负，但我在此事上可能提供的进一步线索毕竟唾手可得，他们还不至于骄傲到对此漠不关心。他们确实具有“艺术气质”，而我的这位同人一碰到艺术问题便能让自己如此兴奋，这一点也给我带来新鲜的震撼。他时而称之为文学，时而称之为生活，归根结底都是一回事。从他的话里，我现在似有所悟，他同时也要代表格温德琳讲话。话说埃尔梅太太的境况一有好转，好歹给了女儿一点儿空闲，他便特地安排，把我介绍给她。我记得，在八月里的某个周日，我们相聚在切尔西的一座拥挤的房子里，我不禁再次嫉妒起考威克能有这么一位心气相通的朋友。那些我永远不会跟他说的话，他却是可以跟她说的。其实她这人毫无幽默感，她把脑袋歪向一边的样子很好看，她是那种你想——那个词儿怎么说的——就是你想要“搅乱”的人，这种人靠自学就能掌握匈牙利语。她没准儿跟考威克就是用匈牙利语来交谈的；她跟他的朋友说话，极少用英文，这一点让人印象深刻。考威克后来告诉我，我显然并不乐意把维里克跟我说的话一五一十都讲出来，这让她颇为不悦。我承认，我觉得我已经对那番指示有过深思熟虑：难道我没有判定，这全是白费工夫，必将找不到出路吗？他们对这些话如此重视，让我好生气恼，弄得我的怀疑好像成了什么有毒的东西。

这说法看起来不太友善，也可能因为我看见一个只能带给我懊恼的实验却让别人深深着迷，便觉得受到了侮辱。我被排除在外，周围寒气逼人，而他们却置身于傍晚的壁炉边、灯光下，忙于追踪捕猎，可那号角明明是我吹响的。他们做的事情跟我一样，只是更刻意更善解人意——他们从头开始，把作者细细研读。这事急不得——考威克说——未来就在他们眼前，作品的魅力只会越来越大。他们会一页一页地读他，就像读一部经典名著，将他慢慢吸入肺腑，让他整个沉淀下去。若非深陷爱河，我想，他们是不太可能像上足了发条这般亢奋的：可怜的维里克的内涵给了他们无穷无尽的机会，好把他们年轻的脑袋凑在一起。然而，它代表了考威克特别乐于钻研的那类问题，勾

引出他那种特殊的、富于洞察力的耐心，如果他活下去，就会给出更震撼人心、想必也更富有成效的例子。用维里克的话说，他至少是那种“抓得住精妙奥义的小精灵”。我们始于争论，但我很快就看出，若非我稍稍出手相助，他这番昏头昏脑的热情必会饱受挫折。他会像我一样，闻到误导的气味就跳起来——看到新的光便拍手称快，然后眼看着翻飞的书页掀起一阵风，将烛火吹灭。我告诉他，维里克平平无奇，只是个疯子，怀抱着某种癫狂的理论，认定莎士比亚的内涵晦涩神秘。对此，他答道，如果我们听到莎士比亚本人说自己晦涩神秘，那他会马上接受这种说法。至于现在这件事，情况完全不同——我们别无凭据，只有“不屑一顾先生”的话。我马上反驳，说看到他连维里克先生的话都如此重视，真是目瞪口呆。于是，他说他想知道我是不是把维里克先生的话当成了谎言。我当时郁郁不乐、心灰意懒，其实本来并不打算说得这么过头，可还是坚持说，在相反的情况得到证实之前，我会将它视为过于深情的想象。我得承认，我并没有说出——当时我还不太知道——我的所有感想。在内心深处，用埃尔梅小姐的说法，我是颇为不安的，也是抱着某种期望的。在我仓皇失措的状态的核心——因为我那出于习惯的好奇心在灰烬中生生不息——是一种尖锐的直觉，觉得考威克也许终究会从哪里突围而出。他为了替自己的轻信辩护，反复强调：从很久以前开始，他在研究这位天才时，就捕捉到些许不知就里的气味和线索，微弱的音符似有若无地飘过。这正是难得之处、迷人之处：它是如此完美地契合我所报告的内容。

尽管有几次我回到切尔西的那座小房子，但我敢说，我去的两个目的是同等重要的，既打听埃尔梅小姐的母亲病情，也想知道关于维里克有什么进展。在我的想象中，考威克就像一位棋手，眉头紧锁，一言不发，在需要灯光照明的整个冬天里，低下头盯着棋盘，运筹帷幄。我的想象逐渐填满整个画面，挥之不去。一个如幽灵般的身影出现在桌对面，淡淡的轮廓勾勒出一位生性和蔼、胸有成竹却也略显疲态的对手——他靠在椅子上，双手插在口袋里，俊朗优雅的脸上挂着笑容。紧跟在考威克身后的是个姑娘，起初她看起来苍白而消瘦，多看几眼以后渐渐觉得她颇为秀美，她靠在他肩上，紧盯着他的一招一式。他抓起一颗棋子，攥在手里，在棋盘的某个小方格上方盘旋了一会儿，然后失望地长叹一声，又把棋子放回原位。见状，那位年轻女士不安地稍稍变换姿势，以某种拼尽全力且相当诡异的方式久久凝视对面那位轮廓模糊的对手。早在此事刚刚开始时，我就问过他们，若是能跟维里克亲密接触，会不会有助于他们大功告成。鉴于情况如此特殊，我当然有理由把他们介绍给维里克。考威克立即回答，在他准备好祭品之前，实在无意靠近祭坛。他完全同意我们的朋友的说法，追猎既是出于乐趣，也是为了荣誉——他要用自己的来复枪，把野兽撂倒。我问他，埃尔梅小姐是否也热衷射击之道，他思忖片刻之后说：“不是，我真是羞于启齿，她其实想铺设陷阱。若能见他一

面，她什么都愿意；她说她想再讨一条线索来。对于此事，她实在有些病态了。可是她得恪守规则——她不能见他！”他加重语气补了一句。我猜想他们是不是在这个问题上吵过几句——这种疑虑并没有被他打消，因为他只是一再对我嚷：“她对文学的热情高得难以置信，你知道——真是异想天开！”我想起他说过她以斜体感知，用大写思索。“哦，待我将他的谜底揭开之时，”他还说，“你知道，我就会去敲他的门。我宁愿如此——请你相信我。我要听他亲口说出来：‘你是对的，我的孩子，这回你做到了！’他将给我这位胜者加冕——戴上批评界的桂冠。”

与此同时，既然在伦敦生活，就难免有不少与这位杰出小说家不期而遇的机会，他确实躲开了好几个。不过，随着维里克无限期离开英国——据报上说是去南方，原因与他太太的健康有关，她已经因病退隐很长一段时间了——这个危险也消失了。布里奇斯的会面之后，已经过去了一年——还不止一年，可我再也没有见过他。我想，内心深处，我是深感羞愧的——我不愿意让他想起，尽管我无可救药地错过了他的要旨，但“思维敏锐”的名声还是很快压得我不胜负荷。这一层顾虑给我惹来不少麻烦，弄得我不敢踏进简太太的房子，甚至，当她出于好意，不顾我向来礼数不周的毛病，第二次暗示我、邀请我去她那美丽的宅院时，我也只能拒绝。有一回，我注意到她在维里克的陪同下出席一场音乐会，而且也确信他们都看到了我，可我还是溜之大吉，没跟他们狭路相逢。那一次，我走在雨中，一路上被雨水溅湿，只觉得我别无选择，即便如此，我记得我当时对自己说，这样做很难，甚至未免残忍。我非但失去了那些书，而且也失去了这个人：对我而言，书和书的作者都已经给毁了。我也知道哪种损失最让我遗憾。毕竟我爱人，还是胜于爱书。

六

在我们的朋友离开英国之后，又过了六个月，素来以文字为生的乔治·考威克签下一纸合同，打算写一部书，而为了完成这项工作，他得离开一段时间，还得踏上一段艰苦的旅程——他居然会接受，这可真让我吃惊。起因是他的姐夫当上了一份外省大报的编辑，而这份外省大报，出于某种天马行空的心血来潮，构思了把“特派专员”送到印度去的计划。特派员在如今的“大都会报刊”上渐成时尚，而前面提及的这份报纸一定是觉得，它在人们心目中留下的“乡下小弟”的印象实在是太久了。当一名记者动静不小，考威克并不善于此道，可这是他姐夫的事情，而且，当某项任务并非他所长时，反而恰恰会成为他欣然接受的理由。他打算赶超“大都会报刊”，他严阵以待，防止笔下学究气泛滥，费尽心机地糟蹋文字的品味。没人知道——那些违反原则的事儿都是他自愿的。除了报销他的生活费用之外，他还会得到一笔

合适的酬劳，我发觉自己也能帮上他的忙，帮这本平平常常、有利可图的书，做出看起来还说得过去的安排——找了家平平常常、有利可图的出版社。顺理成章地，我做出了这样的推断：他明显是想赚点钱，而这跟他想与格温德琳·埃尔梅共结连理的愿望并非没有关系。我知道，她的母亲之所以反对，主要是因为他资产匮乏，也没有什么能赚大钱的手段。然而，说来也巧，上次我见到他时，随口说了句什么，牵扯到他和我们那位年轻小姐分手的问题，他着重强调的话吓了我一跳：“啊，你知道，我和她根本没订过婚啊！”

“就是没有公开吧，”我答道，“因为她母亲不喜欢你。可是，我一直以为，你们私下里是有默契的。”

“呃，也算有过吧。不过现在没有了。”讲到这里他便打住了，只说埃尔梅太太居然又能站起来了，这可真是非同寻常——我猜想，这话指明了一个道理，私下达成的默契几乎百无一用，除非医生也入了伙。我擅自做了更为缜密的推断，想来那姑娘多半已经用某种方式疏远他了。好吧，即便他会因此转变性情，比如妒火中烧，那也不太会妒忌到我头上。真要是那样的话——且不说这个假设有多么荒唐——那他就不会一走了之，反而让我们俩有机会在一起。我们任性地虚掷了他走之前的那段时光，没有提那被掩埋的宝藏，从他的沉默里——我那矜持克制的腔调就是从他那学来的——我能得出一个尖锐的结论。他的勇气已经一落千丈，他的热情也和我一样烟消云散——至少他把这样的表象留给我去揣摩。并不仅仅是他做不到的问题；一旦他明确承认失败，也许会让我得意扬扬，这种可能性是他无法面对的。他其实没必要害怕的，可怜的家伙，因为那时我已经觉得没有一丁点儿得意的必要了。实际上，我并没有指责他垮掉，我觉得这一点足以表明我的宽厚，因为一想到他已经放弃这场游戏，我就比以往任何时候都感觉到我对他有多么依赖。如果考威克一溃千里，我就永远不会知道真相了；如果连他都没用的话，那任何人都不会有用了。实际情况并不是我已经没了求知欲，渐渐地，我的好奇心不仅又开始作痛，而且已经成了绵延于朝朝暮暮的熟悉的折磨。毫无疑问，在有些人看来，这样一种折磨，并不见得会比疾病给人带来的痛苦更为自然，话说回来，毕竟我自己也不明白，我有什么必要在这种情况下提到他们。无论如何，在与我这件逸事扯得上关系的那几位——不管正常与否——看来，文学是一场关乎技术的游戏，而技术就意味着勇气，勇气则意味着荣誉，荣誉意味着激情，意味着人生。押在桌上的赌注是一种特别的东西，而我们的轮盘赌就是不停旋转的思绪，但是我们围坐在绿色的赌桌周围，像蒙特卡罗的冷血赌徒一样聚精会神。如此说来，格温德琳·埃尔梅，那一张苍白的脸庞和那一双全神贯注的眼睛，正是那种你会在“机遇殿堂”^[4]里遇上的纤瘦女子。在考威克离开的那段日子里，我意识到，她的行为生动地诠释了这个比喻。我得承

认，她全身心浸淫于写作艺术的方式过于奢侈。她显然受困于自己的激情，在她面前，我觉得自己几乎毫无热情。我又拿出了《内心深处》——那是一片沙漠，她置身于其中便迷失了自我，不过，她同时也在沙漠里挖出一个精美的洞穴——更惊人的是，考威克把她从这洞里拽了出来。

三月初，我收到她发来的一封电报，于是我马上赶到切尔西区，她见到我劈头就是一句：“他懂了，他懂了！”

我看得出，她的激动是如此深切强烈，所以她指的一定是那件天大的事。“维里克的观念？”

“他的整体意图。乔治的电报是从孟买发来的。”

她把电报在那里摊开，虽然简洁，却力重千钧。“我已发现 [5]。浩瀚无边。”仅此而已——为了省钱，他没有署名。对她此时迸发的情感我感同身受，可我自己挺失望的。“他没有说那是什么。”

“他怎么能说呢——在一封电报里说吗？他会写下来的。”

“可他是怎么知道的呢？”

“你是问他怎么知道这是真货？哦，我相信，等你亲眼看到，就会知道了。‘凭步态便足以证明她是女神！’ [6] ”

“埃尔梅小姐，你给我带来这样的消息，真是大好人啊！”——我格外兴奋，极尽言辞。“不过，想想看，在毗湿奴 [7] 的神殿里找到我们的女神！多么神奇啊，置身于那样迥然不同、异常强烈的诱惑中，乔治居然还能一头钻到那件事里去！”

“他并没有钻进去，我知道，是那事情自己浮现的，六个月来他庄严地将它抛在脑后，如今它就像一头母老虎从丛林中跃出，向他扑过去。他随身没有带一本书——每一页都被他，就像我一样，记在心里。它们在他心里共同作用，直到某时某地，当他的心思完全不在这上面时，它们所有高超复杂的机关，都突然形成唯一正确的组合。地毯上的花纹悄然浮现。他知道结局终究会这样呈现，这就是真正的原因——你完全无法理解，不过我想我现在可以告诉你了——他之所以去，我之所以同意他去，就是为了这个。我们知道这样的变化会有用——不同的想法，不同的场景，会带来必要的触动，带来神奇的震撼。我们周密地、绝妙地盘算过。所有的元素都在他脑中盘旋，只须一次新鲜而强烈的经历带来的‘震撼’ [8]，它们就会碰撞出火花来。”反正她本人是火花四溅了——她脸上真的在发光。我结结巴巴地念叨了几句关于无意识精神活动的词儿，而她只管接着自己的话头说：“他会直接回来——这事成了，他就回来了。”

“你是说，去见维里克吗？”

“见维里克——也来见我。想想吧，他会告诉我什么！”

我犹豫了。“说印度的事儿吗？”

“胡扯！说维里克啊——说地毯上的花纹。”

“可是，照你的说法，这事儿当然应该写在信上才对。”

她思索的样子就像是一个灵感勃发之人，我不禁想起很久以前考威克跟我说过，她的面孔耐人寻味。“既然它‘浩瀚无边’，那也许一封信都写不下呢。”

“也许是写不下，如果那尽是些浩瀚无边的蠢话。假如他没有抓住那种能够塞进一封信的东西，那他就没有抓住真谛。按照维里克本人对我的说辞，这‘花纹’恰恰是能塞进一封信的。”

“好吧，一个小时前我给乔治发了电报——就两个词儿。”格温德琳说。

“我是否能冒昧地问问是哪两个词儿？”

她犹豫不决，不过最后还是说了出来。“好人儿，写信。”

“好！”我嚷道，“我得让这事定下来——我要给他拍一样的电报。”

七

然而，我的电报并非跟她一模一样——我用了别的词代替“好人儿”。后来发现，似乎还是我用的昵称比较合适，因为当我们后来收到我们那位旅人的信时，我们只不过，或者说完全是，被他吊了一下胃口。他志得意满，容光焕发，把他的发现说得石破天惊一般，然而他的狂喜只是让事情本身更显得含含糊糊罢了——在他把想法呈交给最高权威之前，不会透露任何细节。他扔掉了特派任务，扔掉了他原本要写的书，扔掉了一切，一心只想马上赶到热那亚海岸边的拉帕罗 [9]，维里克正好在那里。我给考威克写了一封信，寄往亚丁 [10]，等着他过去收——我恳求他能稍许缓解悬在我心里的疑团。此后又过了好多个无聊的日子，我写给他的简短电报发到孟买后也迟迟没有回音，最后终于来了一封电报，表示他收到了那封信，显然，他是想用这封电报作为对我先后两次联络的回应。电文上寥寥数语，用法文的法文、时下流行的法文写成，考威克通常是拿这个来标榜自己并不是个老古板。对于某些人而言，这样做可能会起到反作用，不过，他的电文大致意思可以这样翻译：“保持耐心。我想看着它突然从天而降时，你脸上是什么表情！”

“Tellement envie de voir ta tête！” [11] ——这就是我不得不坐

下来面对的局面。其实我压根谈不上“坐下来”，因为我好像记得自己当时躁动不安，在切尔西的小房子和我自己的住所之间来回穿梭。我们都不耐烦，不管是格温德琳还是我，不过我总是希望她那边能更有灵感。在这段时间里，我们这几个囊中羞涩之人，扔了大把大把的钱在电报和出租马车上，我满心指望着发现者和被发现者在会合之后，能马上从拉帕罗发来新消息。这段时间似乎长得遥遥无期，但是，某一天，天色已晚，我听到一辆双轮出租马车向我家门飞驰而来，从那股子冲劲里，多少能猜出来人是乐于慷慨分享的。我的心都提到了嗓子眼儿，赶紧跳到窗口——立马看到一位年轻女子站在马车踏脚板上，热切地抬头看着我的房子。她一看到我就用力挥舞一张纸，那动作就像是在情节剧里，有人在绞刑架下挥动着手帕和缓刑令。

“刚见维里克——分毫不差。拥抱我——留我住一个月。”我在她那张纸上就读到这几个字，坐在高处座位上的马车夫冲着我咧开嘴笑了笑。我一时兴奋，好好打赏了他一番，而她也激动得顾不上心疼钱了，直到车夫驾车离去，我们才开始散步聊天。天知道，我们以前就聊得够多的了，但这回着实振奋人心。我们想象着拉帕罗的整个场景，想象他先是写信要求拜见，信里还提到了我的名字；这画面是我描述的，毕竟我比我身边这位朋友有更多的材料可以用。当我们故意停在橱窗、眼睛却并不往里面看的时候，我能感觉到她在认认真真听我的一字一句。有一件事我们很清楚：如果他在那里住下，跟维里克展开更充分的交流，那么他至少应该给我们写一封信，帮我们挺过这最后一点儿被拖延的时光。我们固然理解他为什么要在当地逗留，但是，在我看来，我们俩都能看出对方其实讨厌这样的局面。我们都心知肚明的那封信到底还是来了，是写给格温德琳的，为了让她省掉专程来一趟的麻烦，我及时上门拜访。她没有把信念出来，原因不言自明。不过她把信上的主要内容向我重述了一遍。信里有一句引人注目的话，他告诉她，等他们结婚之后，他会把她想知道的事情，一五一十全告诉她。

带万丈光芒，让你自惭形秽。而且，即便是置身于这个时代的深不见底的庸俗中——人人缺乏品位，个个遭到污染，感官迟钝闭塞——也没有一丁点儿理由忽视它。它伟大，却又是那么简单；它简单，却又是那么伟大——而它终将被我们知晓，这经历殊为难得。他暗示，这样的经历着实迷人，他渴望趁着新鲜劲儿将其饮尽，一滴都不放过，所以始终在源头打转。格温德琳把这些只言片语向我随意抛洒的时候显然容光焕发，她自恃比我更有把握，所以得意扬扬。于是我回过头来说起婚事的问题，忍不住问她，刚才她让我大吃一惊的话是不是意味着他们本来就已经订了婚。

“我当然订了婚！”她答道，“你不知道吗？”她看起来十分惊讶，但是更惊讶的人是我，因为考威克以前讲述的情况正好与此相反。不过我没有提那老话，只是提醒她，在这个问题上，她也好，考威克也好，都没把我当自己人，况且，对于她母亲的禁令，我并非不知情。在心底深处，这两位全然不同的说法让我颇为不安，但是，没过多久，我又觉得考威克毕竟是最不该怀疑的人。于是不禁自问，这位姑娘是不是临场即兴创作了一纸婚约——或是把一份旧的拿来拼凑修补，或是草草来一份新的——只为了达成她渴望的心满意足的效果。她一定具有我所缺乏的急智，不过她立刻回答了我，从而把她的情况稍稍挑明了一点儿：“事情其实是这样，我们曾经以为，在妈妈的有生之年，当然是无法有所作为的。”

“然而现在你认为可以无须理会妈妈是否同意了？”

“啊，也许还不用到那一步！”我还在纳闷会到哪一步，她就继续说下去：“可怜的人儿，她也许得吞下这剂药啦。确实，你知道，”她又笑起来，补充说，“她真的得吃下去了！”考虑到所有与此相关之人的想法，我完全明白这个主意有多大的分量。

八

这辈子没有别的事比这件更让我恼火的了：在考威克抵达英国时，我意识到自己没法跑去将此事了结。我突然得去一趟德国，因为弟弟身染重病，他当初不顾我的劝阻执意去慕尼黑，拜在一位大师门下，学习肖像油画。那个给他提供资助的近亲曾经威胁说：但凡他拿出什么似是而非的借口，要到巴黎去寻求更为高尚的真理——不知为何，在一位居住在切尔滕纳姆的姑妈看来，巴黎就是邪恶的学校，是可怕的地狱——那她就要把资助一笔勾销。当时我对这种偏见就颇为反感，如今由它导致的深度伤害也显现出来了——首先，实际上，不去巴黎并没有让这个聪明、羸弱又傻头傻脑的孩子免于肺充血之苦。其次，此事逼得我只能远远地离开伦敦。那几周过得异常焦虑，我满脑子就在琢磨，但凡我们当初选择的是巴黎，那我就能跑过去见考威

克了。其实，从各方面看，这种假设都是不成立的：为了让我弟弟康复，我们俩都有一大堆事情要忙，他病足三个月，在此期间我没有离开他半步，末了，我们又不得不面对严禁回到英国的医嘱。出于气候方面的考虑是无法置之不理的，而他的状态也难以独自应付这局面。于是我把他带到意大利梅拉诺，在那里跟他共度了一个夏天，尽量举例教会他如何恢复工作，而另一种愤懑焦虑的情绪却在我心里渐渐滋长，我努力不让他看出来。

到头来，整件事成了一系列诡异地互相交织的现象的开端，把这些现象放在一起看——我只能这样看待它们——在我的记忆里，它们构成了绝佳的例证，表明命运有时会着手处置世人的欲念，从而使其灵魂受惠，这是确凿无疑的。我们此时心心念念的结局终究浅陋平庸——尽管我觉得那结局也值得郑重其事地说一说——相比之下，这些事件所具有的种种意义当然更为重要。无论如何，我承认，当时我被“流放”在外的恶果，主要就是在这样的角度下呈现在我面前的。甚至，当乔治·考威克从拉帕罗回来，用一种我并不赞成的方式给我写信时，由于我被那种我称为“欲念”的情绪所支配，所以起初我确实认为，这事一点儿也不能让那种情绪有所缓解。他的信起不到一丁点儿镇静剂的作用，如今回想起来我倒必须承认，他当时肯定是希望有此功效的。此后，事情的进展也并未井然有序，因而也无法弥补原先的缺憾。他当时已经开始着手为一家季刊撰文，要写一篇关于维里克作品的定评，这番详尽彻底的研究，唯一仅存的举足轻重的评论，将会点亮新的光芒，将会宣告——哦，静谧无声，悄然宣告！——那无从想象的真谛。换言之，它将细细描摹地毯上的花纹，勾勒每一个盘旋的纹样，再现每一种色泽。按我这位朋友的说法，最终成果将是最伟大的文学肖像，而他对我的要求也颇为善意，只要不提问打扰他就好，等着他把杰作挂到我眼前。他很给我面子，宣称除了那位超然物外、安坐在那里等着被人画的大人物之外，我是他个人最乐意效劳的鉴赏家。因此我得当个好孩子，在演出万事俱备之前，不要想方设法从幕布底下偷窥：我现在愈是坐得气定神闲，将来就愈是乐在其中。

我竭尽全力坐得气定神闲，然而，当我在《泰晤士报》上看到可怜的埃尔梅太太突然去世的消息时，还是忍不住跳了起来。那时我已经在慕尼黑待了一两个礼拜，而据我所知，考威克尚未抵达伦敦。我马上写信给格温德琳询问详情，她回信说家母在被心力衰竭的阴影笼罩多年之后终于倒下。她没有说，但我冒昧地揣测她话里有话，考虑到她的婚姻和她的渴望——就跟我的渴望相差无几，这倒不失为一种解决方式，比原来预想中的情况更为迅速，也比让老太太吞下苦药更为彻底。我坦率承认，当时——因为我一再收到她的信——我从格温德琳的话里读出了某些不同寻常的意味，而在她沉默不语的部分，甚至能读出更加不同凡响的内容。此刻我手中握着笔，回首当时情状，

那种极为古怪的感觉再度涌来，它不仅绵延数月，而且我不由自主地成了某种被胁迫着旁观的人。我的所有生活似乎都躲在我双眼的庇护所里，而随着事件推进，我瞪大的眼睛似乎根本无法挪开视线。某些日子里，我想给休·维里克写信，干脆求他发发善心算了。但我更深切地感到，我还不至于落到这么不堪的地步——何况，以我的所作所为，他要是把我赶走也是十分得体的。埃尔梅太太一死，考威克便立刻回来了。就在那个月里，他与那位他爱过又放弃过的年轻女子“安安静静地”结了婚——我看得出来，这种安静就跟他打算在文章里宣布他的“意外收获”一样悄无声息。顺便说一句，我之所以要用“放弃”这个词儿，是因为后来我渐渐确信，他当初去印度，在孟买发来那条重大新闻时，他们俩之间根本没有什么确凿的誓约。当她在跟我言之凿凿地说订过婚时，其实还不存在什么婚约。不过话说回来，他一回国当然就订了婚。这一对幸福的人儿直奔托基 [12] 度蜜月，在那里，可怜的考威克一时鲁莽，突然带着他年轻的新娘驾车出游。这事他可不在行：以前我们一起坐过一趟轻便马车，因此对这一点我心知肚明。这一回他让他的伴侣坐在轻便马车的高座上，驾车在德文郡的群山疾驰，在其中一座看起来最惬意的山上，他把已经脱缰（千真万确）的马拽住，却用力过猛，以至于车上的人都被甩到前方，他头部着地，情状可怖。他当场就死了，格温德琳幸免于难，没有受伤。

个秘密！”

不对她抱以最强烈的同情，是不可能的事，所以我回到英国以后就对她无微不至。她母亲的去世倒是让她财力丰厚，于是她搬到了一个生活更方便的区域。然而她的损失毕竟惨重，探望她也教人不胜悲伤。而且我也从来没有产生过那样的念头，认为拥有一条技术上的秘诀、一点儿文学经验，就能够抵消她的悲伤。不过，说来诡异，当我见过她几次之后，我忍不住相信自己多少窥见了一点儿这样古怪的事情。我得马上做个说明，以前也有一些别的事情是我忍不住要相信，或者至少是忍不住要去想象的。既然我向来觉得自己对这类事并不是很清楚原委，那么，对于眼前说到的这个问题，我就权且假定她的记忆毫无瑕疵。她深受打击，孑然一身，却也擅长社交，如今，在深切的悼亡中，她的优雅风范愈显成熟，哀伤却无一句怨言，洋溢着某种不容争辩的美，让人觉得她过着一种富有独特尊严和美感的生活。起初，我说服自己，在那场大灾之后的一周里，她以沉默回应我的诉求，我并非没有意识到那个时机是很不合适的，不久以后，我应该就能打破这个僵局了。当然，她的沉默让我多少有点震惊——越寻思当然就越疑惑不解，尽管我努力解释（有时也能成功），把问题归咎于高尚的情感、出于迷信的忌惮和某种出于忠诚的教养。当然，与此同时，维里克的秘密的身价又在无形中被大大提高，尽管这个谜本来似乎已经够昂贵的了。我不妨谦卑地承认，考威克太太出人意料的态度在钉子上敲了最后一下，把我那不幸的念想牢牢钉住，将它转化成我永远为之魂牵梦绕的迷思。

然而这只是让我行事更狡猾、更灵巧而已，于是我等了一段时间以后再旧事重提。在这段时间里不乏大量推测，其中有一条颇为有趣：考威克对他那年轻的朋友一直守口如瓶，要等到他们之间的亲密关系的最后一道障碍被扫除之后才松口——只有到那时他才会亮出底牌。格温德琳是否从他那里得到提示，如果要她亮出底牌，也唯有建立诸如此类的崭新的关系以后才能如愿？是不是唯有展现在丈夫和妻子——永结同心的爱人——眼前，地毯上的花纹才能被发现或者描述出来？在某种神秘莫测的氛围中，我突然想起当初在肯辛顿广场，我提起考威克会对他爱上的姑娘言无不尽，于是维里克回了一句话，这话是能替这种可能性增添一点儿色彩的。也许话里并无深意，却足以让我踌躇——若是为了得到自己想要的东西，我是否有必要娶考威克太太为妻。为了拥有她的知识，我是否准备好付出这样的代价？啊，那样可真够疯狂的！——至少，在我茫然无措的时候，我是这么跟自己说的。与此同时，我能看见她不愿意传递的火炬仍在她记忆的密室里燃烧——在她双眸流转之间，一道光倾泻而下，照亮她那孤独的宅

邸。时间过去将近六个月时，我完全确信，这温暖的画面对她而言能构成怎样的补偿。我们一遍又一遍地说起那个把我们连接在一起的男人——谈起他的才华，他的性格，他的个人魅力，他的特定成就，他那可怕的厄运，甚至还说到他的那场伟大研究有个清晰的目标，想要成就一幅精妙绝伦的文学画像，成为类似于评论界的凡·戴克 [13] 或者委拉斯开兹 [14] 那样的人物。她多次向我表示，凭着她的倔强和虔诚，她将缄默不语，她绝不会打破沉默，除非把它交给“合适的人”（照她的说法）去打破。然而那个时刻终究还是来了。某天晚上，我和她坐在一起，比平常坐得更久，我坚定地把手搭在她的胳膊上。“说吧，到底是什么？”

她一直预料我会有这样的举动，所以做好了准备。许久，她缓慢而无声地摇头，脸上浮现的慈悲仅仅是因为穷于言辞。虽则慈悲，她还是向我猛地扔出了那句最宏大、最锋利、最冷酷的“永不”！在我屡屡遭到拒绝的一生中，还从来没有当面领受过这样的打击。我承受了这严酷的打击，并且感觉到眼泪随之涌入眼眶。于是，我们坐了一会儿，互相对视，然后我慢慢起身。我在寻思有朝一日她是否能接受我，但我没把这话说出来。我一边把帽子抚平，一边说：“我知道接下来该怎么想。没事！”

她朦胧的微笑中堆积着某种针对我的孤傲而鄙夷的怜悯，接着，她开口，那话音仿佛此刻仍在我耳畔回响。“那是我的命啊！”我站在门口时，她又加了一句，“你侮辱了他！”

“你说维里克吗？”

“我说的是辞世之人！”

走到大街上，我便意识到她的指责不无公正之处。是啊，那是她的命——我也意识到了，然而，随着时过境迁，她的生命又为另一种兴趣匀出了空间。考威克去世一年半之后，她出版了她的第二部长篇小说——单卷本，名为《征服》，我赶忙去弄了一本，希望在其中能找到一点儿泄露天机的回音或者一张正在偷窥的脸。结果我只是发现，这一部比她年轻时写的那本要好得多，我觉得这表明她曾有过比以往更好的伴侣。作为一种颇为复杂精致的织物，这条地毯的花纹是它独有的；但这花纹并不是我在寻找的那种花纹。我给这本书写了一篇评论投给《中点》，却惊讶地从编辑部那里得知，已经有另一篇书评上了版。待杂志出街，我毫不犹豫地认定，这篇俗气而过火的文章出自德雷顿·迪恩的手笔，此人昔日也得算是考威克的一个朋友，直到最近几周才跟他的遗孀相识。我算是很早便弄到了一本初版，而迪恩显然比我更早。尽管如此，以往考威克善于替华而不实之物镀上一层金，如此轻灵的手法迪恩是没有的——他就只会把金箔金线什么的瞎堆一气，看起来污迹斑斑。

六个月之后，《通行权》面市，那是我们救赎自己的最后机会，尽管我们当时并不知情。这本书完全是维里克旅居海外的那段时间里写的，在一百来篇短评中备受赞扬，不外乎是那一套傻里傻气的陈词滥调。我弄来一本——自我标榜那是最早的一本，拿着书直接去找考威克夫人。这本书我也只能派到这点用场了，至于《中点》杂志难免要为这本书唱的赞歌，我就留给某个头脑更敏锐、脾性更温和的人去操心吧。“可是书我已经有了，”格温德琳说，“德雷顿·迪恩真是好心，昨天就给我带了一本，我刚读完。”

“昨天？他下手怎么能这么快？”

“他干什么都能这么快！他打算替《中点》写篇书评。”

“他——德雷顿·迪恩——评论维里克？”我没法相信我的耳朵。

“为什么不呢？反正一种无知跟另一种无知之间，并没有高下之分。”

我心生畏怯，不过还是马上说：“你应该自己评论他啊！”

“我才不评论别人呢，”她笑起来，“我是被人评论的！”

恰在此时，门被猛然推开。“啊，对，你的评论家来了！”德雷顿·迪恩赫然出现，两条长腿，高高的脑门。他来一是打听她对《通行权》有何评价，二是带来一个特别要紧的消息。几份晚报都登了一份关于本书作者的电报，说是他在罗马罹患疟疾。起初并不觉得严重，但是经过一系列并发症，如今病况急转直下，令人忧虑。

实际上，那种忧虑的情绪，我是直到最后一刻才渐渐有所感知的。面对这些消息，考威克太太显然是关切的，但这份关切并没能掩盖她骨子里的超然物外，这态度委实让我震撼——由此可见，她的独立精神之彻底到了怎样的程度。这种独立乃是基于她的知识，如今已经没有什么能摧毁这种知识了，也没有什么能改变它了。地毯上的花纹也许还得再添一两道螺旋，可是判词其实已经写好。作家也许将走向坟墓，她便成了这世上最不需要他继续存在的那个人——就好像她成了他最偏爱的继承人。这让我想起，在某个特定的时刻——考威克去世之后——我发现她原先想亲眼见到维里克的渴望是如何一落千丈。她不用见到他，就已经得到了她想要的东西。我认定，假如她没有得到它，那她就会不遗余力，非得亲自去试探他，她会提出种种高妙的见解，在这方面通常男人比女人更容易领会，而对我而言，这些见解则会构成某种威慑。然而，我得马上补一句，尽管有这样令人反感的对比，但这并不意味着，我自己的心思不够暧昧复杂。一想到维里克也许已处于弥留之际，我心里就碾过一阵痛楚——那感觉是如此

辛酸，我居然仍旧那么自相矛盾地依赖着他。我忍受着痛楚，仍然控制住自己，尽管如此矜持世故的姿态对我也算是种补偿，却毕竟使得我和他只能被阿尔卑斯山和亚平宁山脉隔开。然而，日渐衰微的情势又让我隐隐察觉，没准儿到最后我会陷入绝望，忍不住跑去见他。当然，实际上我决不应该做这样的事。就这样，我停了五分钟，而我那两位同伴还在谈论这本新书，当德雷顿·迪恩问我有什么看法时，我站起身，回答说讨厌休·维里克，根本读不下去。离去时我心里很有把握，只要门在我身后一关上，迪恩就会一口咬定我这人太过肤浅。至于他那位女主人，对这说法至少是不会反驳的。

以下我使用更为简明扼要的调子，追溯此后发生的一连串无比诡异之事。三周之后便传来了维里克的死讯，这一年将尽时他妻子又跟着去世。这位可怜的太太我从未见过，但我有过一个无聊的想法，假若她能在他之后活得更长——长到足以让旁人合乎礼仪地觐见她，那我没准儿就能接近她，提出我那点虚弱的、如火星般转瞬即逝的恳求。她是否知情？如果她知情，那会不会说出来？完全可以预见，她不止有一个理由保持沉默。可是，后来，与她天人永隔之后，我觉得放弃确实是我的宿命。我被永久地困在了我的迷思中——我的监狱看守们已经把钥匙带走了。我发觉自己就像关进地牢的囚犯一样迷迷糊糊，直到考威克太太成为德雷顿太太，也不知时光流逝了多久。透过铁窗，我早已预见了这个结局，不过此事的进程不失得体，并未操之过急，而我们的友谊也早已坠入谷底。他们俩都是那么“知书达理”，在别人眼里自然是天造地设的一对，但我比别人更能估算出新娘在这段联姻中奉献出多少财富。纵观种种“文学圈婚姻”——报纸就是这么描述的——还从来没有哪位女士拿出过如此华丽的嫁妆。我的反应足够迅速，马上开始寻找这桩婚事的果实——我是指那种你能在丈夫身上一眼看出“先兆症状”的果实。既然认定新娘的嫁妆光彩夺目，我便以为能看到他展现出与其增值的财富相匹配的风采来。我知道他的“财富”原先有多少——我显然能从他那篇评论《通行权》的文章里掂出分量来。如今他恰巧站在一个我恰巧（甚至更为恰巧）够不到的位置上，于是我月复一月地在各种可能相关的期刊上寻找可怜的考威克没能发布的重要信息，现在这份责任已经落到了他的继承者手里。那位如今已经再嫁的寡妇，终将在重燃烈焰的壁炉边打破唯有再嫁的寡妇才能打破的沉默，而迪恩便会像彼时彼刻的考威克那样，像彼时彼刻的格温德琳那样，被新添的知识熊熊燃烧。好吧，他无疑会熊熊燃烧，但那团火却不会成为公之于众的烈焰。我将那些期刊一一浏览，终究是徒劳：德雷顿·迪恩倒是洋洋洒洒地四处泼墨，却没有哪一页上有我日思夜想的那一篇。他下笔染指种种话题，却从未与维里克有关。他长于讲述别人或者“畏惧”或者“忽略”（如他所言）的真相，却从未讲述如今我唯一看重的真相。我在那些被报纸称为“文学圈”的场合里频频遇见这对夫妇——我已经暗示过多次，我们这些人生来唯

有在这样的圈子里才玩得转。正逢格温德琳第三部长篇出版，她越发专注于在圈里奔忙，而我自己则认为这部作品比不上前一部，持这样的看法当然会被圈里视为异己。作品逊色是因为她的伴侣比以前逊色吗？如果说，她的秘密（按照她的说法）便是她的生命——这一点，从她越来越容光焕发的样子就能窥见端倪，她那因为意识到自己享有特权而流露的优越感，被她优美而仁厚的举止巧妙化解，使得她的容貌教人过目难忘——那么，迄今为止，它并未对她的作品产生直接影响。那只是让人——一切都只不过让人——越发觊觎它，只是用某种更美好更微妙的神秘感将它打磨得圆润光亮。

因此，我目不转睛地凝视着她丈夫：我对他的打扰也许让他颇为不安。我甚至缠着他跟我对话。难道他不知情？难道他没有理所当然地得到它？——这问题在我脑中盘旋。他当然知情，否则他就不会那么古怪地反过来也盯着我。他的妻子跟他说过我想要什么，于是，面对我的无能，他和蔼可亲地觉得这是一件好笑的事。他并没有笑出来——他不怎么爱笑：他的套路就是在言谈中以空洞茫然（就像他的大脑门一样空洞茫然）来应对我的恼怒，这样一来我便会粗率地暴露自己。事情总是这样：我怀着坚定的信念，毅然从那些杳无人烟的空旷地带转身离去，那些地方似乎在地理位置上互相补足，共同象征着德雷顿·迪恩在表达能力和风格气度上的匮乏。他根本就没有本事利用他已经知晓的秘密，他其实没有能力继承考威克留下的责任。于是我做出更进一步的假设——这是我唯一瞥见的开心事。我认定，这份责任对他而言并没有什么魅力。他不感兴趣，他不关心。没错，我相信他蠢得根本无法领会我所缺少的东西能带来怎样的快乐，想到这一点我不禁深感安慰。无论事前事后，他都是那么愚不可及，而这一点也使得环绕在那不解之谜周围的金色光泽愈显深邃。不过，我当然也考虑到，他妻子也许曾给他强加过几条清规戒律。我首先得提醒自己，既然维里克已经撒手人寰，那最要紧的动机便随之消散。他固然留名于世，能从那些可能实现的举措中获得赞誉——但毕竟肉身消逝，再也不能表态了。唉，除了他之外，谁还能有这个权威呢？

夫妻俩生了两个孩子，然而第二个让母亲送了命。打击过后，我似乎又看到了一丁点儿似有若无的机会。我心里几乎想猛扑过去，但出于礼貌还是等了一段时间，最后我的机会终于以某种看起来有利可图的方式降临了。德雷顿夫人死后一年左右，我在一家小俱乐部里的吸烟室里见到了德雷顿·迪恩，我们俩都是这家俱乐部的会员，但是我有好几个月——也许是因为我很少去——没见过他了。房间里空无一人，机会难得。为了一劳永逸地了结这件事，我故意提出要给他点好处，我觉得这是他一直都想要的。

“我甚至比你更早就认识了你已故的妻子，”我开口道，“你一定得让我把长久以来一直积压在心头的话说出来。我乐意接受任何你认为合适的条件，来换取你肯定已经从乔治·考威克那里得来的信息——你知道，这可怜的人儿在他平生最快乐的日子，从休·维里克那里直接得到了这条信息。”

他就像一尊黯淡无光的、具有颇相学特征的半身像那样看了我一眼。“信息——？”

“就是维里克的秘密啊，我的好人儿——他那些作品的整体意图：把珍珠穿起来的那根线，被掩埋的珍宝，地毯上的花纹。”

他开始脸红——脑袋上隆起的地方眼看着就要冒出一串数字来[15]。“维里克的书有整体意图？”

这下轮到我跳起来。“你的意思不是你不知道这件事吧？”一时间我还以为他在耍我。“迪恩太太知道这件事，按照她的说法，她是直接从考威克那里听来的，而考威克耗尽心力、苦苦追查，才终于找到了洞口，这让维里克本人也深感快慰。洞口究竟在哪里？他婚后便和盘托出——而且只告诉一个人——而这个人，当这样的境况再度重演时，一定告诉了你。我理所当然地认为，考威克去世之后她成了那个知识的唯一的托管人，一定会准许你分而享之，作为维系你们之间关系的最高特权之一，难道我想错了吗？我只知道那知识价值连城，我想要你理解的是：如果你也能恩准我得其门而入，那你真是对我做了莫大的善事，我将为此感激不尽。”

他的脸终于涨得通红，我敢说他已经开始琢磨我是不是神志不清了。渐渐地，他跟上了我的思路，至于我自己，瞪大眼睛盯着他，我的惊讶比先前更为鲜活。然后他开口说话：“我不知道我们在说些什么。”

他不是在演戏——这是荒诞的真相。“她没有告诉你——？”

“没说过什么关于休·维里克的话。”

我大吃一惊。房间在旋转。它是如此珍贵，连这样的关系都难以得到！“以你的名誉起誓？”

“以我的名誉起誓。你他妈的出什么问题了？”他吼道。

“我惊呆了——我很失望。我原本想从你那里打探到真相的。”

“不在我这里！”他尴尬地笑起来，“即使——”

“如果是的话，你就会让我得到它了——哦，是啊，毕竟是人之常情。不过我相信你。我懂——我懂了！”我继续说。眼看着轮子转了一整圈，我才意识到我那巨大的幻觉，关于这可怜的人儿的态度举

止，我原先的看法是错的。虽然我无法明说，但我看得真切：他太太并不觉得他值得被点醒。在我看来，这发生在一个认为他值得嫁的女人身上，真是件怪事。最终我找到了一点儿可以自圆其说的理由：她嫁给他，不可能是因为他悟性过人。她嫁给他，是出于别的考虑。

如今他倒是在某种程度上被点醒了，可这样一来，他越发惊讶、越发慌张了：他寻思了一会儿，把我的故事和他飞快的回顾做了一番比较。最终，尽管有气无力，他还是努力维持着体面，他说：“你提到的事情，我还是第一次听说。德雷顿·迪恩太太有什么未曾提及的——更不要说什么不能提及的——关于休·维里克的知识，我想你这么说是搞错了。假如这种知识与他的文学风格密切相关，她当然会希望它被善加利用。”

“它确实给用上了。她自己用的。她亲口告诉我，她就靠它‘活着’呢。”

我话一出口就后悔了，他的脸色骤然苍白，就好像刚刚挨了我的打似的。“啊，‘活着’——！”他喃喃地说，猛地转过脸不看我。

我的悔恨是真心的。我一只手搭在他肩膀上。

“请你原谅我——我错了。你其实并不知道那件我以为你知道的事情。如果我猜得对，那你本来是会帮我一把的。我也曾经自有一番理由，以为站在你的立场上，也可能会满足我的要求。”

“你的理由？”他重复了一遍，“你有什么理由？”

我注视着他，犹疑不定，思前想后。“你过来，坐在我身边，我来告诉你。”我拉着他坐上一张沙发，又点燃一支雪茄，开始讲述维里克那一回从云端倏然降落。我向他细细描述那一连串异乎寻常的意外事件，尽管它们起初也曾带来一道微光，但直到此时此刻，它们始终把我笼罩在一团黑暗中。总之，我把我在这里写下的事情，全都告诉了他。他听着，越听越入神，而我也渐渐惊讶地意识到，从他突然发出的惊叹看，从他提出的问题看，归根到底，他并不是那种不配得到他太太信任的人啊。他突然察觉到她并不信任他，这种感觉在那一刻让他好生烦恼。不过，我看到，起初那出于震惊的悸动先是渐渐消散，接着又再度聚拢，汇成一波波讶异而好奇的浪花——我完全可以断定，这些浪花最终会跟我自己内心中掀起的那股达到最高点的狂怒的潮水分道扬镳。不妨这么说吧，今时今日，作为欲望难以达成的受害者，我们俩之间并没有高下之分。这个可怜人的景况差不多成了我的安慰，时不时地，我觉得这完全可以算是我的报复。

[1] 即前文说到的“简恩斯太太”的昵称。（说明：书中脚注均为

译者注。)

[2] 引号中的原文为法语：raison d'être。

[3] 这是本篇中第一次出现直接对应标题的文字，原文是a complex figure in a Persian carpet，直译便是指波斯地毯上的复杂花纹。事实上，这种花纹通常因为烦琐而密集，并不能一眼就看清其纹理，因此a figure in the carpet如今也常用来比喻那些不是能马上判断清晰的事物。

[4] 指赌场。

[5] 原文为希腊语Eureka，即“我发现了”的意思。相传阿基米德根据比重原理测出金子纯度时曾说过这个词，从此成为典故，常用来表达对重大发现的惊叹。

[6] 原文为拉丁文Vera incessu patuit dea，引自古罗马诗人维吉尔叙述埃涅阿斯在特洛伊陷落之后经历的史诗《埃涅阿斯纪》。

[7] 印度教主神之一，守护之神。

[8] 原文为法语词secousse。

[9] 意大利风景区。

[10] 亚丁是也门首都，也是世界著名的港口。

[11] 此处的法语就是前面已经翻译成英文的电文的后半句：“真想看看你脸上会是什么表情！”作者在翻译之后又把原文列在这里，加以强调。从法语的原文看，这个句子的口吻比较随意、强烈、口语化，有比较明显的戏谑意味。

[12] 英国西南部原德文郡的南部海滨城市。

[13] 凡·戴克（1599-1641），佛兰德斯画家，英王查尔斯一世的宫廷画师，作品尤以贵族肖像画著称。

[14] 委拉斯开兹（1599-1660），按照发音又作贝拉斯克斯，但委拉斯开兹是他约定俗成的译名。委拉斯开兹出生于西班牙塞维利亚，是17世纪西班牙影响最大的现实主义画家，他同样以肖像画闻名于世。

[15] 颅相学家认为头盖骨上隆起的部分是才能的象征，此处显然是呼应前文的比喻——说迪恩就像一尊“具有颅相学特征”的半身像。

译后记

毫无疑问，亨利·詹姆斯是我的翻译生涯里遭遇的最难啃的骨头之一。《螺丝在拧紧》之后，我再次面对他的中篇小说《地毯上的花纹》，既跃跃欲试，又一筹莫展。

一筹莫展是因为，詹姆斯的文本，无论是对其语法的理解层面，还是对其意义的阐释层面，都有着让人深感受挫的难度。第一遍读下来，小说里的情节和人物都如鬼魅般忽明忽灭，躲开一切明确的结论——你横竖抓不住什么。十九世纪末英美文学圈的生态，隐约在小说中现出轮廓，有时细节纤毫毕现，有时又仿佛置身于半透明的罩子里，被看不见的手夸张而剧烈地摇晃。显然，这不是一部以古典现实主义准则构建的小说，它具有某种詹姆斯笔下特有的迂回而不安的现代性。

跃跃欲试是因为，这一篇虽然译成中文后仅三万字，却在詹姆斯的写作生涯中具有非常独特的风格和相当特殊的地位。小说首次发表于一八九六年一月号的《大都会》月刊（Cosmopolis），这本杂志虽然只存在了三年，却有过不小的排场：总部在伦敦，且在柏林、巴黎和圣彼得堡同时发行当地的版本，很吻合小说中描述的当时杂志期刊日益“国际化”的风潮。同年，这篇小说被收入詹姆斯的中短篇小说集《尴尬种种》（Embarrassments），英国版与美国版同时面市。回过头来看，《地毯上的花纹》是这本书里影响最大的篇目，而标题“地毯上的花纹”（The Figure in the Carpet）也渐渐成了一个被后世频繁引用的文学典故。英国小说家、评论家福特·马多克斯·福特（Ford Madox Ford）曾经说过，自从这篇小说出版之后，詹姆斯的同龄人就开始追求“地毯上的花纹”，希望能将原本复杂难辨的“花纹”变成清晰可鉴的物质实体。在发表于一九四一年的散文中，T.S.艾略特几乎把同样的话又说了一遍：“如今，我们都在寻找‘地毯上的花纹’。”

小说的第一人称叙述者，是个赚过一点儿稿费却苦于在圈里寂寂无名的写手。明显比他更为资深、主要以写评论为主的考威克因为来不及完成著名作家维里克的新作的书评，把这个机会转给了“我”。“我”以为抓到了在文学圈里进阶的机会，不料却像是一头撞进了一座迷宫。维里克对于这篇评论不屑一顾，并且抛出了一系列炫目的名词和意象，引诱“我”追逐对于其作品的终极破解：

在他本人看来，毫无疑问，那个让我们不胜迷惘的东西，明明是

清晰可见的。那玩意儿，我猜想，就藏在最初的规划中；宛若波斯地毯上的一个复杂的纹样。当我使用这个意象时，他表示高度赞赏，而他自己则用了另一种说法。“它就是那根线，”他说，“把我的珍珠穿起来的那根！”

此后的情节发展就进入了詹姆斯最善于营造的诡异疯狂的叙事链。“我”对于维里克（毋宁说是小说这种文体）的“整体意图”的追寻，注定要像《螺丝在拧紧》中那个关于“庄园里有没有鬼”的命题那样，经受百般折磨，经受“真谛”在眼前闪现又幻灭的海市蜃楼般的瞬间。洞悉维里克的秘密的人（或者说“我”以为洞悉秘密之人）一个接一个遭遇不测。詹姆斯得心应手地折磨着读者的耐心，在人物细节和对话里嵌入可以引发多重理解/误解的隐喻。熟悉詹姆斯套路的读者，几乎在小说写到一半时就能判断：直到结尾，我们也得不到答案。

但我们还是会一口气读完它。我们知道，像很多具有元小说特质的现代主义作品一样，这是一个用来阐述小说观念的小说。小说里的小说家和评论家的关系，是一种近乎猫捉老鼠的关系。小说文本的“整体意图”被层层包裹，被繁复衍生，被渐渐失去节制地神秘化。批评家疯狂地追逐它，而小说家则似乎一直在使用各种障眼法躲开这种追逐，这样的关系越来越具有奇特的仪式感。地毯上到底有没有花纹，这并不重要；重要的是，作者、批评家和读者的兴趣和精力，在这个过程中被刺激、被撩拨，同时也被消解，被损耗——像表演，像爱情，像生死。作为由古典主义向现代主义过渡的代表人物，詹姆斯对于时代风气的观察，对于小说作为一种叙事游戏的深层思考，都渗透在文本的肌理中。

在这篇小说里先后出现的几个命运多舛的人物，我们无法确认哪一个更能让詹姆斯产生代入感；我们同样无法确认詹姆斯是否要通过《地毯上的花纹》表达现代小说家和批评家的使命和宿命。（是使命多一点儿，还是宿命多一点儿？）可以确定的是，詹姆斯之后的写作者，越来越深切地体验到他在这篇小说里传达的那种时而狂喜、时而虚无的复杂感受。第二次世界大战结束之后陆续涌现的文学名词和小说流派，可能比此前的总和都更多。对于普通读者而言，弄清现代主义究竟在哪个时间点进入后现代主义，“后殖民”与“新历史”分别代表什么意思，或者推理小说究竟分出多少亚类型，并没有太明显的意义。社会现实的动荡和传播方式的剧变，使得小说作者与读者之间的信任感渐趋微妙。叙事套路仿佛已经穷尽，连“生活比小说更精彩”都成了老生常谈。小说家进退两难，时而希望勇往直前，沿着文体实验的道路越走越远；时而又希望重温现实主义的荣光，回归古老的故事传统。

在现代文学的语境中，小说家与批评家，作品的创造者和诠释者，他们之间究竟有没有可能实现真正意义上的默契，密码有没有可能被完美破解？我们从这个既抽象又具体甚至有时候颇具哥特风格的故事里，看不到詹姆斯对此有任何乐观的表示。故事的荒诞走向甚至让人联想到那个著名的思想实验：两位将军A和B各自盘踞在两座山顶，需要同时攻击山谷处的敌人，但他们之间的通信只能穿过敌方阵线进行。A给B发了个信息：“明天出击？”B回答：“可以。”但B不知道自己的回复有没有到达，而A必须给B发送另外一条信息来确认已经收到了B之前的信息，从而确保B会行动——实际上，为了达成完美的共识，他们需要发送无穷无尽的信息。

《地毯上的花纹》就在这种看不见尽头的努力沟通中戛然而止。然而，也许，无论是密码被（简化地）破解，还是因为无法破解而失去对破解的渴望，都会使小说的魔法黯然失色。这真是个绕不出去的悖论，但叙事艺术的奇迹和荣光，也恰恰蕴含在这悖论中。毕竟，詹姆斯狡黠地在绝境中也留着一星微暗的火：

如果说，她的秘密（按照她的说法）便是她的生命——这一点，从她越来越容光焕发的样子就能窥见端倪，她那因为意识到自己享有特权而流露的优越感，被她优美而仁厚的举止巧妙化解，使得她的容貌教人过目难忘——那么，迄今为止，它并未对她的作品产生直接影响。那只是让人——一切都只不过让人——越发觊觎它，只是用某种更美好更微妙的神秘感将它打磨得圆润光亮。

The Figure in the Carpet

I

I had done a few things and earned a few pence – I had perhaps even had time to begin to think I was finer than was perceived by the patronising; but when I take the little measure of my course (a fidgety habit, for it's none of the longest yet) I count my real start from the evening George Corvick, breathless and worried, came in to ask me a service. He had done more things than I, and earned more pence, though there were chances for cleverness I thought he sometimes missed. I could only however that evening declare to him that he never missed one for kindness. There was almost rapture in hearing it proposed to me to prepare for The Middle, the organ of our lucubrations, so called from the position in the week of its day of appearance, an article for which he had made himself responsible, and of which, tied up with a stout string, he laid on my table the subject. I pounced upon my opportunity – that is on the first volume of it – and paid scant attention to my friend's explanation of his appeal. What explanation could be more to the point than my obvious fitness for the task? I had written on Hugh Vereker, but never a word in The Middle, where my dealings were mainly with the ladies and the minor poets. This was his new novel, an advance copy, and whatever much or little it should do for his reputation I was clear on the spot as to what it should do for mine. Moreover if I always read him as soon as I could get hold of him I had a particular reason for wishing to read him now: I had accepted an invitation to Bridges for the following Sunday, and it had been mentioned in Lady Jane's note that Mr Vereker was to be there. I was young enough for a flutter at meeting a man of his renown, and innocent enough to believe the occasion would demand the display of an acquaintance with his 'last'.

Corvick, who had promised a review of it, had not even had time to read it; he had gone to pieces in consequence of news requiring – as on precipitate reflection he judged – that he should catch the night-mail to Paris. He had had a telegram from Gwendolen Erme in answer to his letter offering to fly to her aid. I knew already about Gwendolen Erme; I had never seen her, but I had my ideas, which were mainly to the effect that Corvick would marry her if her mother would only die. That lady seemed now in a fair way to oblige him; after some dreadful mistake about a climate or a 'cure' she had suddenly collapsed on the return from abroad. Her daughter, unsupported and alarmed, desiring to make a rush for home but hesitating at the risk, had accepted our friend's assistance, and it was my secret belief that at sight of him Mrs Erme would pull round. His own belief was scarcely to be called secret, it discernibly at any rate differed from mine. He had showed me Gwendolen's photograph with the remark that she wasn't pretty but was awfully interesting; she had published at the age of nineteen a novel in three volumes, 'Deep Down', about which, in The Middle, he had been really splendid. He appreciated my present eagerness and undertook that the periodical in question should do no less; then at the last, with his hand on the door, he said to me: 'Of course you'll be all right, you know.' Seeing I was a trifle vague he added: 'I mean you won't be silly.'

'Silly – about Vereker! Why what do I ever find him but awfully clever?'

'Well, what's that but silly? What on earth does "awfully clever" mean? For God's sake try to get at him. Don't let him suffer by our arrangement. Speak of him, you know, if you can, as I should have spoken of him.'

I wondered an instant. 'You mean as far and away the biggest of the lot – that sort of thing?'

Corvick almost groaned. 'Oh you know, I don't put them back to back that way; it's the infancy of art! But he gives me a pleasure so rare; the sense of – he mused a little – 'something or other.'

I wondered again. 'The sense, pray, of what?'

'My dear man, that's just what I want you to say!'

Even before he had banged the door I had begun, book in hand, to prepare myself to say it. I sat up with Vereker half the night; Corvick couldn't have done more than that. He was awfully clever – I stuck to that, but he wasn't a bit the biggest of the lot. I didn't allude to the lot, however; I flattered myself that I emerged on this occasion from the infancy of art. 'It's all right,' they declared vividly at the office; and when the number appeared I felt there was a basis on which I could meet the great man. It gave me confidence for a day or two – then that confidence dropped. I had fancied him reading it with relish, but if Corvick wasn't satisfied how could Vereker himself be? I reflected indeed that the heat of the admirer was sometimes grosser even than the appetite of the scribe. Corvick at all events wrote me from Paris a little ill-humouredly. Mrs Erme was pulling round, and I hadn't at all said what Vereker gave him the sense of.

II

The effect of my visit to Bridges was to turn me out for more profundity. Hugh Vereker, as I saw him there, was of a contact so void of angles that I blushed for the poverty of imagination involved in my small precautions. If he was in spirits it wasn't because he had read my review; in fact on the Sunday morning I felt sure he hadn't read it, though The Middle had been out three days and bloomed, I assured myself, in the stiff garden of periodicals which gave one of the ormolu tables the air of a stand at a station. The impression he made on me personally was such that I wished him to read it, and I corrected to this end with a surreptitious hand what might be wanting in the careless conspicuity of the sheet. I'm afraid I even watched the result of my manoeuvre, but up to luncheon I watched in vain.

When afterwards, in the course of our gregarious walk, I found myself for half an hour, not perhaps without another manoeuvre, at the great man's side, the result of his affability was a still livelier desire that he shouldn't remain in ignorance of the peculiar justice I had done him. It wasn't that he seemed to thirst for justice; on the contrary I hadn't yet caught in his talk the faintest grunt of a grudge – a note for which my young experience had already given me an ear. Of late he had had more recognition, and it was pleasant, as we used to say in The Middle, to see how it drew him out. He wasn't of course popular, but I judged one of the sources of his good humour to be precisely that his success was independent of that. He had none the less become in a manner the fashion; the critics at least had put on a spurt and caught up with him. We had found out at last how clever he was, and he had had to make the best of the loss of his mystery. I was strongly tempted, as I walked beside him, to let him know how much of that unveiling was my act; and there was a moment when I probably should have done so had not one of the ladies of our party, snatching a place at his other elbow, just then appealed to him in a spirit comparatively selfish. It was very discouraging: I almost felt the liberty had been taken with myself.

I had had on my tongue's end, for my own part, a phrase or two about the right word at the right time, but later on I was glad not to have spoken, for when on our return we clustered at tea I perceived Lady Jane, who had not been out with us, brandishing The Middle with her longest arm. She had taken it up at her leisure; she was delighted with what she had found, and I saw that, as a mistake in a man may often be a felicity in a woman, she would practically do for me what I hadn't been able to do for myself. 'Some sweet little truths that needed to be spoken,' I heard her declare, thrusting the paper at rather a bewildered couple by the fireplace. She grabbed it away from them again on the reappearance of Hugh Vereker, who after our walk had been upstairs to change something. 'I know you don't in general look at this kind of thing, but it's an occasion really for doing so. You haven't seen it? Then you must. The man has actually got at you, at what I always feel, you know.' Lady Jane threw into her eyes a look evidently intended to give an idea of what she always felt; but she added that she couldn't have expressed it. The man in the paper expressed it in a striking manner. 'Just see there, and there, where I've dashed it, how he brings it out.' She had literally marked for him the brightest patches of my prose, and if I was a little amused Vereker himself may well have been. He showed how much he was when before us all Lady Jane wanted to read something aloud. I liked at any rate the way he defeated her purpose by jerking the paper affectionately out of her clutch. He'd take it upstairs with him and look at it on going to dress. He did this half an hour later – I saw it in his hand when he repaired to his room. That was the moment at which, thinking to give her pleasure, I mentioned to Lady Jane that I was the author of the review. I did give her pleasure, I judged, but perhaps not quite so much as I had expected. If the author was 'only me' the thing didn't seem quite so remarkable. Hadn't I had the effect rather of diminishing the lustre of the article than of adding to my own? Her ladyship was subject to the most extraordinary drops. It didn't matter; the only effect I cared about was the one it would have on Vereker up there by his bedroom fire.

At dinner I watched for the signs of this impression, tried to fancy some happier light in his eyes; but to my disappointment Lady Jane gave me no chance to make sure. I had hoped she'd call triumphantly down the table, publicly demand if she hadn't been right. The party was large – there were people from outside as well, but I had never seen a table long enough to deprive Lady Jane of a triumph. I was just reflecting in truth that this interminable board would deprive me of one when the guest next me, dear woman – she was Miss Poyle, the vicar's sister, a robust unmodulated person – had the happy inspiration and the unusual courage to address herself across it to Vereker, who was opposite, but not directly, so that when he replied they were both leaning forward. She enquired, artless body, what he thought of Lady Jane's 'panegyric', which she had read – not connecting it however with her right-hand neighbour; and while I strained my ear for his reply I heard him, to my stupefaction, call back gaily, his mouth full of bread: 'Oh it's all right – the usual twaddle!'

I had caught Vereker's glance as he spoke, but Miss Poyle's surprise was a fortunate cover for my own. 'You mean he doesn't do you justice?' said the excellent woman.

Vereker laughed out, and I was happy to be able to do the same. 'It's a charming article,' he tossed us.

Miss Poyle thrust her chin half across the cloth. 'Oh you're so deep!' she drove home.

'As deep as the ocean! All I pretend is that the author doesn't see –' But a dish was at this point passed over his shoulder, and we had to wait while he helped himself.

'Doesn't see what?' my neighbour continued.

'Doesn't see anything.'

'Dear me – how very stupid!'

'Not a bit,' Vereker laughed again. 'Nobody does.'

The lady on his further side appealed to him and Miss Poyle sank back to myself. 'Nobody sees anything!' she cheerfully announced; to which I replied that I had often thought so too, but had somehow taken the thought for a proof on my own part of a tremendous eye. I didn't tell her the article was mine; and I observed that Lady Jane, occupied at the end of the table, had not caught Vereker's words.

I rather avoided him after dinner, for I confess he struck me as cruelly conceited, and the revelation was a pain. 'The usual twaddle' – my acute little study! That one's admiration should have had a reserve or two could gall him to that point? I had thought him placid, and he was placid enough; such a surface was the hard polished glass that encased the bauble of his vanity. I was really ruffled, and the only comfort was that if nobody saw anything George Corvick was quite as much out of it as I. This comfort however was not sufficient, after the ladies had dispersed, to carry me in the proper manner – I mean in a spotted jacket and humming an air – into the smoking-room. I took my way in some dejection to bed; but in the passage I encountered Mr Vereker, who had been up once more to change, coming out of his room. He was humming an air and had on a spotted jacket, and as soon as he saw me his gaiety gave a start.

'My dear young man,' he exclaimed, 'I'm so glad to lay hands on you! I'm afraid I most unwittingly wounded you by those words of mine at dinner to Miss Poyle. I learned but half an hour ago from Lady Jane that you're the author of the little notice in The Middle.'

I protested that no bones were broken; but he moved with me to my own door, his hand, on my shoulder, kindly feeling for a fracture; and on hearing that I had come up to bed he asked leave to cross my threshold and just tell me in three words what his qualification of my remarks had represented. It was plain he really feared I was hurt, and the sense of his solicitude suddenly made all the difference to me. My cheap review fluttered off into space, and the best things I had said in it became flat enough beside the brilliancy of his being there. I can see him there still, on my rug, in the firelight and his spotted jacket, his fine clear face all bright with the desire to be tender to my youth. I don't know what he had at first meant to say, but I think the sight of my relief touched him, excited him, brought up words to his lips from far within. It was so these words presently conveyed to me something that, as I afterwards knew, he had never uttered to anyone. I've always done justice to the generous impulse that made him speak; it was simply compunction for a snub unconsciously administered to a man of letters in a position inferior to his own, a man of letters moreover in the very act of praising him. To make the thing right he talked to me exactly as an equal and on the ground of what we both loved best. The hour, the place, the unexpectedness deepened the impression: he couldn't have done anything more intensely effective.

III

'I don't quite know how to explain it to you,' he said, 'but it was the very fact that your notice of my book had a spice of intelligence, it was just your exceptional sharpness, that produced the feeling – a very old story with me, I beg you to believe – under the momentary influence of which I used in speaking to that good lady the words you so naturally resent. I don't read the things in the newspapers unless they're thrust upon me as that one was – it's always one's best friend who does it! But I used to read them sometimes – ten years ago. I dare say they were in general rather stupider then; at any rate it always struck me they missed my little point with a perfection exactly as admirable when they patted me on the back as when they kicked me in the shins. Whenever since I've happened to have a glimpse of them they were still blazing away – still missing it, I mean, deliciously. You miss it, my dear fellow, with inimitable assurance; the fact of your being awfully clever and your article's being awfully nice doesn't make a hair's breadth of difference. It's quite with you rising young men,' Vereker laughed, 'that I feel most what a failure I am!'

I listened with keen interest; it grew keener as he talked. 'You a failure – heavens! What then may your "little point" happen to be?'

'Have I got to tell you, after all these years and labours?' There was something in the friendly reproach of this – jocosely exaggerated – that made me, as an ardent young seeker for truth, blush to the roots of my hair. I'm as much in the dark as ever, though I've grown used in a sense to my obtuseness; at that moment, however, Vereker's happy accent made me appear to myself, and probably to him, a rare dunce. I was on the point of exclaiming 'Ah yes, don't tell me: for my honour, for that of the craft, don't!' when he went on in a manner that showed he had read my thoughts and had his own idea of the probability of our some day redeeming ourselves. 'By my little point I mean – what shall I call it? – the particular thing I've written my books most for. Isn't there for every writer a particular thing of that sort, the thing that most makes him apply himself, the thing without the effort to achieve which he wouldn't write at all, the very passion of his passion, the part of the business in which, for him, the flame of art burns most intensely? Well, it's that !'

I considered a moment – that is I followed at a respectful distance, rather gasping. I was fascinated – easily, you'll say; but I wasn't going after all to be put off my guard. 'Your description's certainly beautiful, but it doesn't make what you describe very distinct.'

'I promise you it would be distinct if it should dawn on you at all.' I saw that the charm of our topic overflowed for my companion into an emotion as lively as my own. 'At any rate,' he went on, 'I can speak for myself: there's an idea in my work without which I wouldn't have given a straw for the whole job. It's the finest fullest intention of the lot, and the application of it has been, I think, a triumph of patience, of ingenuity. I ought to leave that to somebody else to say; but that nobody does say it is precisely what we're talking about. It stretches, this little trick of mine, from book to book, and every thing else, comparatively, plays over the surface of it. The order, the form, the texture of my books will perhaps some day constitute for the initiated a complete representation of it. So it's naturally the thing for the critic to look for. It strikes me,' my visitor added, smiling, 'even as the thing for the critic to find.'

This seemed a responsibility indeed. 'You call it a little trick?'

'That's only my little modesty. It's really an exquisite scheme.'

'And you hold that you've carried the scheme out?'

'The way I've carried it out is the thing in life I think a bit well of myself for.'

I had a pause. 'Don't you think you ought – just a trifle – to assist the critic?'

'Assist him? What else have I done with every stroke of my pen? I've shouted my intention in his great blank face!' At this, laughing out again, Vereker laid his hand on my shoulder to show the allusion wasn't to my personal appearance.

‘But you talk about the initiated. There must therefore, you see, be initiation.’

‘What else in heaven’s name is criticism supposed to be?’ I’m afraid I coloured at this too; but I took refuge in repeating that his account of his silver lining was poor in something or other that a plain man knows things by. ‘That’s only because you’ve never had a glimpse of it,’ he returned. ‘If you had had one the element in question would soon have become practically all you’d see. To me it’s exactly as palpable as the marble of this chimney. Besides, the critic just isn’t a plain man: if he were, pray, what would he be doing in his neighbour’s garden? You’re anything but a plain man yourself, and the very raison d’être of you all is that you’re little demons of subtlety. If my great affair’s a secret, that’s only because it’s a secret in spite of itself – the amazing event has made it one. I not only never took the smallest precaution to keep it so, but never dreamed of any such accident. If I had I shouldn’t in advance have had the heart to go on. As it was, I only became aware little by little, and meanwhile I had done my work.’

‘And now you quite like it?’ I risked.

‘My work?’

‘Your secret. It’s the same thing.’

‘Your guessing that,’ Vereker replied, ‘is a proof that you’re as clever as I say!’ I was encouraged by this to remark that he would clearly be pained to part with it, and he confessed that it was indeed with him now the great amusement of life. ‘I live almost to see if it will ever be detected.’ He looked at me for a jesting challenge; something far within his eyes seemed to peep out. ‘But I needn’t worry – it won’t!’

‘You fire me as I’ve never been fired,’ I declared; ‘you make me determined to do or die.’ Then I asked: ‘Is it a kind of esoteric message?’

His countenance fell at this – he put out his hand as if to bid me good night. ‘Ah my dear fellow, it can’t be described in cheap journalese!’

I knew of course he’d be awfully fastidious, but our talk had made me feel how much his nerves were exposed. I was unsatisfied – I kept hold of his hand. ‘I won’t make use of the expression then,’

I said, 'in the article which I shall eventually announce my discovery, though I dare say I shall have hard work to do without it. But meanwhile, just to hasten that difficult birth, can't you give a fellow a clue?' I felt much more at my ease.

'My whole lucid effort gives him the clue – every page and line and letter. The thing's as concrete there as a bird in a cage, a bait on a hook, a piece of cheese in a mouse-trap. It's stuck into every volume as your foot is stuck into your shoe. It governs every line, it chooses every word, it dots every i, it places every comma.'

I scratched my head. 'Is it something in the style or something in the thought? An element of form or an element of feeling?'

He indulgently shook my hand again, and I felt my questions to be crude and my distinctions pitiful. 'Good night, my dear boy – don't bother about it. After all, you do like a fellow.'

'And a little intelligence might spoil it?' I still detained him.

He hesitated. 'Well, you've got a heart in your body. Is that an element of form or an element of feeling? What I contend that nobody has ever mentioned in my work is the organ of life.'

'I see – it's some idea about life, some sort of philosophy. Unless it be,' I added with the eagerness of a thought perhaps still happier, 'some kind of game you're up to with your style, something you're after in the language. Perhaps it's a preference for the letter P!' I ventured profanely to break out. 'Papa, potatoes, prunes – that sort of thing?' He was suitably indulgent: he only said I hadn't got the right letter. But his amusement was over; I could see he was bored. There was nevertheless something else I had absolutely to learn. 'Should you be able, pen in hand, to state it clearly yourself – to name it, phrase it, formulate, it?'

'Oh,' he almost passionately sighed, 'if I were only, pen in hand, one of you chaps!'

'That would be a great chance for you of course. But why should you despise us chaps for not doing what you can't do yourself?'

'Can't do?' He opened his eyes. 'Haven't I done it in twenty volumes? I do it in my way,' he continued. 'Go you and don't do it in yours.'

‘Ours is so devilish difficult,’ I weakly observed.

‘So’s mine! We each choose our own. There’s no compulsion. You won’t come down and smoke?’

‘No. I want to think this thing out.’

‘You’ll tell me then in the morning that you’ve laid me bare?’

‘I’ll see what I can do; I’ll sleep on it. But just one word more,’ I added. We had left the room – I walked again with him a few steps along the passage. ‘This extraordinary “general intention,” as you call it – for that’s the most vivid description I can induce you to make of it – is then, generally, a sort of buried treasure?’

His face lighted. ‘Yes, call it that, though it’s perhaps not for me to do so.’

‘Nonsense!’ I laughed. ‘You know you’re hugely proud of it.’

‘Well, I didn’t propose to tell you so; but it is the joy of my soul!’

‘You mean it’s a beauty so rare, so great?’

He waited a little again. ‘The loveliest thing in the world!’ We had stopped, and on these words he left me; but at the end of the corridor, while I looked after him rather yearningly, he turned and caught sight of my puzzled face. It made him earnestly, indeed I thought quite anxiously, shake his head and wave his finger. ‘Give it up – give it up!’

This wasn’t a challenge – it was fatherly advice. If I had had one of his books at hand I’d have repeated my recent act of faith – I’d have spent half the night with him. At three o’clock in the morning, not sleeping, remembering moreover how indispensable he was to Lady Jane, I stole down to the library with a candle. There wasn’t, so far as I could discover, a line of his writing in the house.

IV

Returning to town I feverishly collected them all; I picked out each in its order and held it up to the light. This gave me a maddening month, in the course of which several things took place. One of these, the last, I may as well immediately mention, was that

I acted on Vereker's advice: I renounced my ridiculous attempt. I could really make nothing of the business; it proved a dead loss. After all I had always, as he had himself noted, liked him; and what now occurred was simply that my new intelligence and vain preoccupation damaged my liking. I not only failed to run a general intention to earth, I found myself missing the subordinate intentions I had formerly enjoyed. His books didn't even remain the charming things they had been for me; the exasperation of my search put me out of conceit of them. Instead of being a pleasure the more they became a resource the less; for from the moment I was unable to follow up the author's hint I of course felt it a point of honour not to make use professionally of my knowledge of them. I had no knowledge – nobody had any. It was humiliating, but I could bear it – they only annoyed me now. At last they even bored me, and I accounted for my confusion – perversely, I allow – by the idea that Vereker had made a fool of me. The buried treasure was a bad joke, the general intention a monstrous pose .

The great point of it all is, however, that I told George Corvick what had befallen me and that my information had an immense effect on him. He had at last come back, but so, unfortunately, had Mrs Erme, and there was as yet, I could see, no question of his nuptials. He was immensely stirred up by the anecdote I had brought from Bridges; it fell in so completely with the sense he had had from the first that there was more in Vereker than met the eye. When I remarked that the eye seemed what the printed page had been expressly invented to meet he immediately accused me of being spiteful because I had been foiled.

Our commerce had always that pleasant latitude. The thing Vereker had mentioned to me was exactly the thing he, Corvick, had wanted me to speak of in my review. On my suggesting at last that with the assistance I had now given him he would doubtless be prepared to speak of it himself he admitted freely that before doing this there was more he must understand. What he would have said, had he reviewed the new book, was that there was evidently in the writer's inmost art something to be understood. I hadn't so much as hinted at that: no wonder the writer hadn't been flattered! I asked Corvick what he really considered he meant by his own supersubtlety, and, unmistakably kindled, he replied: 'It isn't for the vulgar – it isn't for the vulgar!' He had hold of the tail of something:

he would pull hard, pull it right out. He pumped me dry on Vereker's strange confidence and, pronouncing me the luckiest of mortals, mentioned half a dozen questions he wished to goodness I had had the gumption to put. Yet on the other hand he didn't want to be told too much – it would spoil the fun of seeing what would come. The failure of my fun was at the moment of our meeting not complete, but I saw it ahead, and Corvick saw that I saw it. I, on my side, saw likewise that one of the first things he would do would be to rush off with my story to Gwendolen.

On the very day after my talk with him I was surprised by the receipt of a note from Hugh Vereker, to whom our encounter at Bridges had been recalled, as he mentioned, by his falling, in a magazine, on some article to which my signature was attached. 'I read it with great pleasure,' he wrote, 'and remembered under its influence our lively conversation by your bedroom fire. The consequence of this has been that I begin to measure the temerity of my having saddled you with a knowledge that you may find something of a burden. Now that the fit's over I can't imagine how I came to be moved so much beyond my wont. I had never before mentioned, no matter in what state of expansion, the fact of my little secret, and I shall never speak of the mystery again. I was accidentally so much more explicit with you than it had ever entered into my game to be, that I find this game – I mean the pleasure of playing it – suffers considerably. In short, if you can understand it, I've rather spoiled my sport. I really don't want to give anybody what I believe you clever young men call the tip. That's of course a selfish solicitude, and I name it to you for what it may be worth to you. If you're disposed to humour me don't repeat my revelation. Think me demented – it's your right; but don't tell anybody why.'

The sequel to this communication was that as early on the morrow as I dared I drove straight to Mr Vereker's door. He occupied in those years one of the honest old houses in Kensington Square. He received me immediately, and as soon as I came in I saw I hadn't lost my power to minister to his mirth. He laughed out at sight of my face, which doubtless expressed my perturbation. I had been indiscreet – my compunction was great. 'I have told somebody,' I panted, 'and I'm sure that person will by this time have told somebody else! It's a woman, into the bargain.'

‘The person you’ve told?’

‘No, the other person. I’m quite sure he must have told her.’

‘For all the good it will do her – or do me! A woman will never find out.’

‘No, but she’ll talk all over the place: she’ll do just what you don’t want.’

Vereker thought a moment, but wasn’t so disconcerted as I had feared: he felt that if the harm was done it only served him right. ‘It doesn’t matter – don’t worry.’

‘I’ll do my best, I promise you, that your talk with me shall go no further.’

‘Very good; do what you can.’

‘In the meantime,’ I pursued, ‘George Corvick’s possession of the tip may, on his part, really lead to something.’

‘That will be a brave day.’

I told him about Corvick’s cleverness, his admiration, the intensity of his interest in my anecdote; and without making too much of the divergence of our respective estimates mentioned that my friend was already of opinion that he saw much further into a certain affair than most people. He was quite as fired as I had been at Bridges. He was moreover in love with the young lady: perhaps the two together would puzzle something out.

Vereker seemed struck with this. ‘Do you mean they’re to be married?’

‘I dare say that’s what it will come to.’

‘That may help them,’ he conceded, ‘but we must give them time!’

I spoke of my own renewed assault and confessed my difficulties; whereupon he repeated his former advice: ‘Give it up, give it up!’ He evidently didn’t think me intellectually equipped for the adventure. I stayed half an hour, and he was most good-natured, but I couldn’t help pronouncing him a man of unstable moods. He had been free with me in a mood, he had repented in a mood, and now in a mood he had turned indifferent. This general levity helped me to believe that, so far as the subject of the tip went, there wasn't much in it. I contrived however to make him answer a few more questions about it, though he did so with visible impatience. For himself, beyond doubt, the thing we were all so blank about was vividly there. It was something, I guessed, in the primal plan; something like a complex figure in a Persian carpet. He highly approved of this image when I used it, and he used another himself. 'It's the very string,' he said, 'that my pearls are strung on!' The reason of his note to me had been that he really didn't want to give us a grain of succour – our density was a thing too perfect in its way to touch. He had formed the habit of depending on it, and if the spell was to break it must break by some force of its own. He comes back to me from that last occasion – for I was never to speak to him again – as a man with some safe preserve for sport. I wondered as I walked away where he had got his tip.

V

When I spoke to George Corvick of the caution I had received he made me feel that any doubt of his delicacy would be almost an insult. He had instantly told Gwendolen, but Gwendolen's ardent response was in itself a pledge of discretion. The question would now absorb them and would offer them a pastime too precious to be shared with the crowd. They appeared to have caught instinctively at Vereker's high idea of enjoyment. Their intellectual pride, however, was not such as to make them indifferent to any further light I might throw on the affair they had in hand. They were indeed of the 'artistic temperament', and I was freshly struck with my colleague's power to excite himself over a question of art. He'd call it letters, he'd call it life, but it was all one thing. In what he said I now seemed to understand that he spoke equally for Gwendolen, to whom, as soon as Mrs Erme was sufficiently better to allow her a little leisure, he made a point of introducing me. I remember our going together one Sunday in August to a huddled house in Chelsea, and my renewed envy of Corvick's possession of a friend who had some light to mingle with his own. He could say things to her that I could never say to him. She had indeed no sense of humour and, with her pretty way of holding her head on one side, was one of those persons whom you want, as the phrase is, to shake, but who have learnt Hungarian by themselves. She conversed perhaps in Hungarian with Corvick; she had remarkably little English for his friend. Corvick afterwards told me that I had chilled her by my apparent indisposition to oblige them with the detail of what Vereker had said to me. I allowed that I felt I had given thought enough to that indication: hadn't I even made up my mind that it was vain and would lead nowhere? The importance they attached to it was irritating and quite envenomed my doubts.

That statement looks unamiable, and what probably happened was that I felt humiliated at seeing other persons deeply beguiled by an experiment that had brought me only chagrin. I was out in the cold while, by the evening fire, under the lamp, they followed the chase for which I myself had sounded the horn. They did as I had done, only more deliberately and sociably – they went over their author from the beginning. There was no hurry, Corvick said – the future was before them and the fascination could only grow; they would take him page by page, as they would take one of the classics, inhale him in slow draughts and let him sink all the way in. They would scarce have got so wound up, I think, if they hadn't been in love: poor Vereker's inner meaning gave them endless occasion to put and to keep their young heads together. None the less it represented the kind of problem for which Corvick had a special aptitude, drew out the particular pointed patience of which, had he lived, he would have given more striking and, it is to be hoped, more fruitful examples. He at least was, in Vereker's words, a little demon of subtlety. We had begun by disputing, but I soon saw that without my stirring a finger his infatuation would have its bad hours. He would bound off on false scents as I had done – he would clap his hands over new lights and see them blown out by the wind of the turned page. He was like nothing, I told him, but the maniacs who embrace some bedlamitical theory of the cryptic character of Shakespeare. To this he replied that if we had had Shakespeare's own word for his being cryptic he would at once have accepted it. The case there was altogether different – we had nothing but the word of Mr Snooks. I returned that I was stupefied to see him attach such importance even to the word of Mr Vereker. He wanted thereupon to know if I treated Mr Vereker's word as a lie. I wasn't perhaps prepared, in my unhappy rebound, to go so far as that, but I insisted that till the contrary was proved I should view it as too fond an imagination. I didn't, I confess, say – I didn't at that time quite know – all I felt. Deep down, as Miss Erme would have said, I was uneasy, I was expectant. At the core of my disconcerted state – for my wonted curiosity lived in its ashes – was the sharpness of a sense that Corvick would at last probably come out somewhere. He made, in defence of his credulity, a great point of the fact that from of old, in his study of this genius, he had caught whiffs and hints of he didn't know what, faint wandering notes of a hidden music. That was just the rarity, that was the charm: it fitted so perfectly into what I reported.

If I returned on several occasions to the little house in Chelsea I dare say it was as much for news of Vereker as for news of Miss Erme's ailing parent. The hours spent there by Corvick were present to my fancy as those of a chessplayer bent with a silent scowl, all the lamplit winter, over his board and his moves. As my imagination filled it out the picture held me fast. On the other side of the table was a ghostlier form, the faint figure of an antagonist good-humouredly but a little wearily secure – an antagonist who leaned back in his chair with his hands in his pockets and a smile on his fine clear face. Close to Corvick, behind him, was a girl who had begun to strike me as pale and wasted and even, on more familiar view, as rather handsome, and who rested on his shoulder and hung on his moves. He would take up a chessman and hold it poised a while over one of the little squares, and then would put it back in its place with a long sigh of disappointment. The young lady, at this, would slightly but uneasily shift her position and look across, very hard, very long, very strangely, at their dim participant. I had asked them at an early stage of the business if it mightn't contribute to their success to have some closer communication with him. The special circumstances would surely be held to have given me a right to introduce them. Corvick immediately replied that he had no wish to approach the altar before he had prepared the sacrifice. He quite agreed with our friend both as to the delight and as to the honour of the chase – he would bring down the animal with his own rifle. When I asked him if Miss Erme were as keen a shot he said after thinking: 'No, I'm ashamed to say she wants to set a trap. She'd give anything to see him; she says she requires another tip. She's really quite morbid about it. But she must play fair – she shan't see him!' he emphatically added. I wondered if they hadn't even quarrelled a little on the subject – a suspicion not corrected by the way he more than once exclaimed to me: 'She's quite incredibly literary, you know – quite fantastically!' I remember his saying of her that she felt in italics and thought in capitals. 'Oh when I've run him to earth,' he also said, 'then, you know, I shall knock at his door. Rather – I beg you to believe. I'll have it from his own lips: "Right you are, my boy; you've done it this time!" He shall crown me victor – with the critical laurel.'

Meanwhile he really avoided the chances London life might have given him of meeting the distinguished novelist; a danger, however, that disappeared with Vereker's leaving England for an indefinite absence, as the newspapers announced – going to the south for motives connected with the health of his wife, which had long kept her in retirement. A year – more than a year – had elapsed since the incident at Bridges, but I had had no further sight of him. I think I was at bottom rather ashamed – I hated to remind him that, though I had irremediably missed his point, a reputation for acuteness was rapidly overtaking me. This scruple led me a dance; kept me out of Lady Jane's house, made me even decline, when in spite of my bad manners she was a second time so good as to make me a sign, an invitation to her beautiful seat. I once became aware of her under Vereker's escort at a concert, and was sure I was seen by them, but I slipped out without being caught. I felt, as on that occasion I splashed along in the rain, that I couldn't have done anything else; and yet I remember saying to myself that it was hard, was even cruel. Not only had I lost the books, but I had lost the man himself: they and their author had been alike spoiled for me. I knew too which was the loss I most regretted. I had taken to the man still more than I had ever taken to the books.

VI

Six months after our friend had left England George Corvick, who made his living by his pen, contracted for a piece of work which imposed on him an absence of some length and a journey of some difficulty, and his undertaking of which was much of a surprise to me. His brother-in-law had become editor of a great provincial paper, and the great provincial paper, in a fine flight of fancy, had conceived the idea of sending a 'special commissioner' to India. Special commissioners had begun, in the 'metropolitan press,' to be the fashion, and the journal in question must have felt it had passed too long for a mere country cousin. Corvick had no hand, I knew, for the big brush of the correspondent, but that was his brother-in-law's affair, and the fact that a particular task was not in his line was apt to be with himself exactly a reason for accepting it. He was prepared to out- Herod the metropolitan press; he took solemn precautions against priggishness, he exquisitely outraged taste. Nobody ever knew it – that offended principle was all his own. In addition to his expenses he was to be conveniently paid, and I found myself able to help him, for the usual fat book, to a plausible arrangement with the usual fat publisher. I naturally inferred that his obvious desire to make a little money was not unconnected with the prospect of a union with Gwendolen Erme. I was aware that her mother's opposition was largely addressed to his want of means and of lucrative abilities, but it so happened that, on my saying the last time I saw him something that bore on the question of his separation from our young lady, he brought out with an emphasis that startled me: 'Ah I'm not a bit engaged to her, you know!'

'Not overtly,' I answered, 'because her mother doesn't like you. But I've always taken for granted a private understanding.'

'Well, there was one. But there isn't now.' That was all he said save something about Mrs Erme's having got on her feet again in the most extraordinary way – a remark pointing, as I supposed, the moral that private understandings were of little use when the doctor didn't share them. What I took the liberty of more closely inferring was that the girl might in some way have estranged him. Well, if he had taken the turn of jealousy for instance it could scarcely be jealousy of me. In that case – over and above the absurdity of it – he wouldn't have gone away just to leave us together. For some time before his going we had indulged in no allusion to the buried treasure, and from his silence, which my reserve simply emulated, I had drawn a sharp conclusion. His courage had dropped, his ardour had gone the way of mine – this appearance at least he left me to scan. More than that he couldn't do; he couldn't face the triumph with which I might have greeted an explicit admission. He needn't have been afraid, poor dear, for I had by this time lost all need to triumph. In fact I considered I showed magnanimity in not reproaching him with his collapse, for the sense of his having thrown up the game made me feel more than ever how much I at last depended on him. If Corvick had broken down I should never know; no one would be of any use if he wasn't. It wasn't a bit true I had ceased to care for knowledge; little by little my curiosity not only had begun to ache again, but had become the familiar torment of my days and my nights. There are doubtless people to whom torments of such an order appear hardly more natural than the contortions of disease; but I don't after all know why I should in this connection so much as mention them. For the few persons, at any rate, abnormal or not, with whom my anecdote is concerned, literature was a game of skill, and skill meant courage, and courage meant honour, and honour meant passion, meant life. The stake on the table was of a special substance and our roulette the revolving mind, but we sat round the green board as intently as the grim gamblers at Monte Carlo. Gwendolen Erme, for that matter, with her white face and her fixed eyes, was of the very type of the lean ladies one had met in the temples of chance. I recognised in Corvick's absence that she made this analogy vivid. It was extravagant, I admit, the way she lived for the art of the pen. Her passion visibly preyed on her, and in her presence I felt almost tepid. I got hold of 'Deep Down' again: it was a desert in which she had lost herself, but in which too she had dug a wonderful hole in the sand – a cavity out of which Corvick had still more remarkably pulled her.

Early in March I had a telegram from her, in consequence of which I repaired immediately to Chelsea, where the first thing she said to me was 'He has got it, he has got it!'

She was moved, as I could see, to such depths that she must mean the great thing. 'Vereker's idea?'

'His general intention. George has cabled from Bombay.'

She had the missive open there; it was emphatic though concise. 'Eureka. Immense.' That was all – he had saved the cost of the signature. I shared her emotion, but I was disappointed. 'He doesn't say what it is.'

'How could he – in a telegram? He'll write it.'

'But how does he know?'

'Know it's the real thing? Oh I'm sure that when you see it you do know. Vera incessu patuit dea !'

'It's you, Miss Erme, who are a "dear" for bringing me such news!' – I went all lengths in my high spirits. 'But fancy finding our goddess in the temple of Vishnu! How strange of George to have been able to go into the thing again in the midst of such different and such powerful solicitations!’

‘He hasn’t gone into it, I know; it’s the thing itself, let severely alone for six months, that has simply sprung out at him like a tigress out of the jungle. He didn’t take a book with him – on purpose; indeed he wouldn’t have needed to – he knows every page, as I do, by heart. They all worked in him together, and some day somewhere, when he wasn’t thinking, they fell, in all their superb intricacy, into the one right combination. The figure in the carpet came out. That’s the way he knew it would come and the real reason – you didn’t in the least understand, but I suppose I may tell you now – why he went and why I consented to his going. We knew the change would do it – that the difference of thought, of scene, would give the needed touch, the magic shake. We had perfectly, we had admirably calculated. The elements were all in his mind, and in the secousse of a new and intense experience they just struck light.’ She positively struck light herself – she was literally, facially luminous. I stammered something about unconscious cerebration, and she continued: ‘He’ll come right home – this will bring him.’

‘To see Vereker, you mean?’

‘To see Vereker – and to see me. Think what he’ll have to tell me!’

I hesitated. ‘About India?’

‘About fiddlesticks! About Vereker – about the figure in the carpet.’

‘But, as you say, we shall surely have that in a letter.’

She thought like one inspired, and I remembered how Corvick had told me long before that her face was interesting. ‘Perhaps it can’t be got into a letter if it’s “immense”.’

‘Perhaps not if it’s immense bosh. If he has hold of something that can’t be got into a letter he hasn’t hold of the thing. Vereker’s own statement to me was exactly that the “figure” would fit into a letter.’

‘Well, I cabled to George an hour ago – two words,’ said Gwendolen.

‘Is it indiscreet of me to ask what they were?’

She hung fire, but at last brought them out. ‘“Angel, write.”’
‘Good!’ I cried. ‘I’ll make it sure – I’ll send him the same.’

VII

My words however were not absolutely the same – I put something instead of ‘angel’; and in the sequel my epithet seemed the more apt, for when eventually we heard from our traveller it was merely, it was thoroughly to be tantalised. He was magnificent in his triumph, he described his discovery as stupendous; but his ecstasy only obscured it – there were to be no particulars till he should have submitted his conception to the supreme authority. He had thrown up his commission, he had thrown up his book, he had thrown up everything but the instant need to hurry to Rapallo, on the Genoese shore, where Vereker was making a stay. I wrote him a letter which was to await him at Aden – I besought him to relieve my suspense. That he had found my letter was indicated by a telegram which, reaching me after weary days and in the absence of any answer to my laconic dispatch to him at Bombay, was evidently intended as a reply to both communications. Those few words were in familiar French, the French of the day, which Corvick often made use of to show he wasn’t a prig. It had for some persons the opposite effect, but his message may fairly be paraphrased. ‘Have patience; I want to see, as it breaks on you, the face you’ll make!’ ‘Tellement envie de voir ta tête!’ – that was what I had to sit down with. I can certainly not be said to have sat down, for I seem to remember myself at this time as rattling constantly between the little house in Chelsea and my own. Our impatience, Gwendolen’s and mine, was equal, but I kept hoping her light would be greater. We all spent during this episode, for people of our means, a great deal of money in telegrams and cabs, and I counted on the receipt of news from Rapallo immediately after the junction of the discoverer with the discovered. The interval seemed an age, but late one day I heard a hansom precipitated to my door with the crash engendered by a hint of liberality. I lived with my heart in my mouth and accordingly bounded to the window – a movement which gave me a view of a young lady erect on the footboard of the vehicle and eagerly looking up at my house. At sight of me she flourished a paper with a movement that brought me straight down, the movement with which, in melodramas, handkerchiefs and reprieves are flourished at the foot of the scaffold.

‘Just seen Vereker – not a note wrong. Pressed me to bosom – keeps me a month.’ So much I read on her paper while the cabby dropped a grin from his perch. In my excitement I paid him profusely and in hers she suffered it; then as he drove away we started to walk about and talk. We had talked, heavens knows, enough before, but this was a wondrous lift. We pictured the whole scene at Rapallo, where he would have written, mentioning my name, for permission to call; that is I pictured it, having more material than my companion, whom I felt hang on my lips as we stopped on purpose before shop- windows we didn’t look into. About one thing we were clear: if he was staying on for fuller communication we should at least have a letter from him that would help us through the dregs of delay. We understood his staying on, and yet each of us saw, I think, that the other hated it. The letter we were clear about arrived; it was for Gwendolen, and I called on her in time to save her the trouble of bringing it to me. She didn’t read it out, as was natural enough; but she repeated to me what it chiefly embodied. This consisted of the remarkable statement that he’d tell her after they were married exactly what she wanted to know.

‘Only then , when I’m his wife – not before,’ she explained. ‘It’s tantamount to saying – isn’t it? – that I must marry him straight off!’ She smiled at me while I flushed with disappointment, a vision of fresh delay that made me at first unconscious of my surprise. It seemed more than a hint that on me as well he would impose some tiresome condition. Suddenly, while she reported several more things from his letter, I remembered what he had told me before going away. He had found Mr Vereker deliriously interesting and his own possession of the secret a real intoxication. The buried treasure was all gold and gems. Now that it was there it seemed to grow and grow before him; it would have been, through all time and taking all tongues, one of the most wonderful flowers of literary art. Nothing, in especial, once you were face to face with it, could show for more consummately done . When once it came out it came out, was there with a splendour that made you ashamed; and there hadn’t been, save in the bottomless vulgarity of the age, with every one tasteless and tainted, every sense stopped, the smallest reason why it should have been overlooked. It was great, yet so simple, was simple, yet so great, and the final knowledge of it was an experience quite apart. He intimated that the charm of such an experience, the desire to drain it, in its freshness, to the last drop, was what kept him there close to the source. Gwendolen, frankly radiant as she tossed me these fragments, showed the elation of a prospect more assured than my own. That brought me back to the question of her marriage, prompted me to ask if what she meant by what she had just surprised me with was that she was under an engagement.

‘Of course I am!’ she answered. ‘Didn’t you know it?’ She seemed astonished, but I was still more so, for Corvick had told me the exact contrary. I didn’t mention this, however; I only reminded her how little I had been on that score in her confidence, or even in Corvick’s and that moreover I wasn’t in ignorance of her mother’s interdict. At bottom I was troubled by the disparity of the two accounts; but after a little I felt Corvick’s to be the one I least doubted. This simply reduced me to asking myself if the girl had on the spot improvised an engagement – vamped up an old one or dashed off a new – in order to arrive at the satisfaction she desired. She must have had resources of which I was destitute, but she made her case slightly more intelligible by returning presently: ‘What the state of things has been is that we felt of course bound to do nothing in mamma’s lifetime.’

‘Ah it mayn’t come to that!’ I wondered what it might come to, and she went on: ‘Poor dear, she may swallow the dose. In fact, you know,’ she added with a laugh, ‘she really must !’ – a proposition of which, on behalf of every one concerned, I fully acknowledged the force.

VIII

Nothing more vexatious had ever happened to me than to become aware before Corvick’s arrival in England that I shouldn’t be there to put him through. I found myself abruptly called to Germany by the alarming illness of my younger brother, who, against my advice, had gone to Munich to study, at the feet indeed of a great master, the art of portraiture in oils. The near relative who made him an allowance had threatened to withdraw it if he should, under specious pretexts, turn for superior truth to Paris – Paris being somehow, for a Cheltenham aunt, the school of evil, the abyss. I deplored this prejudice at the time, and the deep injury of it was now visible – first in the fact that it hadn't saved the poor boy, who was clever, frail and foolish, from congestion of the lungs, and second in the greater break with London to which the event condemned me. I'm afraid that what was uppermost in my mind during several anxious weeks was the sense that if we had only been in Paris I might have run over to see Corvick. This was actually out of the question from every point of view: my brother, whose recovery gave us both plenty to do, was ill for three months, during which I never left him and at the end of which we had to face the absolute prohibition of a return to England. The consideration of climate imposed itself, and he was in no state to meet it alone. I took him to Meran and there spent the summer with him, trying to show him by example how to get back to work and nursing a rage of another sort that I tried not to show him.

The whole business proved the first of a series of phenomena so strangely interlaced that, taken all together – which was how I had to take them – they form as good an illustration as I can recall of the manner in which, for the good of his soul doubtless, fate sometimes deals with a man's avidity. These incidents certainly had larger bearings than the comparatively meagre consequence we are here concerned with – though I feel that consequence also a thing to speak of with some respect. It's mainly in such a light, I confess, at any rate, that the ugly fruit of my exile is at this hour present to me. Even at first indeed the spirit in which my avidity, as I have called it, made me regard that term owed no element of ease to the fact that before coming back from Rapallo George Corvick addressed me in a way I objected to. His letter had none of the sedative action I must today profess myself sure he had wished to give it, and the march of occurrences was not so ordered as to make up for what it lacked. He had begun on the spot, for one of the quarterlies, a great last word on Vereker's writings, and this exhaustive study, the only one that would have counted, have existed, was to turn on the new light, to utter – oh so quietly! – the unimagined truth. It was in other words to trace the figure in the carpet through every convolution, to reproduce it in every tint. The result, according to my friend, would be the greatest literary portrait ever painted, and what he asked of me was just to be so good as not to trouble him with questions till he should hang up his masterpiece before me. He did me the honour to declare that, putting aside the great sitter himself, all aloft in his indifference, I was individually the connoisseur he was most working for. I was therefore to be a good boy and not try to peep under the curtain before the show was ready: I should enjoy it all the more if I sat very still.

I did my best to sit very still, but I couldn't help giving a jump on seeing in The Times, after I had been a week or two in Munich and before, as I knew, Corvick had reached London, the announcement of the sudden death of poor Mrs Erme. I instantly, by letter, appealed to Gwendolen for particulars, and she wrote me that her mother had yielded to long- threatened failure of the heart. She didn't say, but I took the liberty of reading into her words, that from the point of view of her marriage and also of her eagerness, which was quite a match for mine, this was a solution more prompt than could have been expected and more radical than waiting for the old lady to swallow the dose. I candidly admit indeed that at the time – for I heard from her repeatedly – I read some singular things into Gwendolen's words and some still more extraordinary ones into her silences. Pen in hand, this way, I live the time over, and it brings back the oddest sense of my having been, both for months and in spite of myself, a kind of coerced spectator. All my life had taken refuge in my eyes, which the procession of events appeared to have committed itself to keep astare. There were days when I thought of writing to Hugh Vereker and simply throwing myself on his charity. But I felt more deeply that I hadn't fallen quite so low – besides which, quite properly, he would send me about my business. Mrs Erme's death brought Corvick straight home, and within the month he was united 'very quietly' – as quietly, I seemed to make out, as he meant in his article to bring out his trouvaille – to the young lady he had loved and quitted. I use this last term, I may parenthetically say, because I subsequently grew sure that at the time he went to India, at the time of his great news from Bombay, there had been no positive pledge between them whatever. There had been none at the moment she was affirming to me the very opposite. On the other hand he had certainly become engaged the day he returned. The happy pair went down to Torquay for their honeymoon, and there, in a reckless hour, it occurred to poor Corvick to take his young bride for a drive. He had no command of that business: this had been brought home to me of old in a little tour we had once made together in a dog- cart. In a dog- cart he perched his companion for a rattle over Devonshire hills, on one of the likeliest of which he brought his horse, who, it was true, had bolted, down with such violence that the occupants of the cart were hurled forward and that he fell horribly on his head. He was killed on the spot; Gwendolen escaped unhurt.

I pass rapidly over the question of this unmitigated tragedy, of what the loss of my best friend meant for me, and I complete my little history of my patience and my pain by the frank statement of my having, in a postscript to my very first letter to her after the receipt of the hideous news, asked Mrs Corvick whether her husband mightn't at least have finished the great article on Vereker. Her answer was as prompt as my question: the article, which had been barely begun, was a mere heartbreaking scrap. She explained that our friend, abroad, had just settled down to it when interrupted by her mother's death, and that then, on his return, he had been kept from work by the engrossments into which that calamity was to plunge them. The opening pages were all that existed; they were striking, they were promising, but they didn't unveil the idol. That great intellectual feat was obviously to have formed his climax. She said nothing more, nothing to enlighten me as to the state of her own knowledge – the knowledge for the acquisition of which I had fancied her prodigiously acting. This was above all what I wanted to know: had she seen the idol unveiled? Had there been a private ceremony for a palpitating audience of one? For what else but that ceremony had the nuptials taken place? I didn't like as yet to press her, though when I thought of what had passed between us on the subject in Corvick's absence her reticence surprised me. It was therefore not till much later, from Meran, that I risked another appeal, risked it in some trepidation, for she continued to tell me nothing. 'Did you hear in those few days of your blighted bliss,' I wrote, 'what we desired so to hear?' I said 'we' as a little hint; and she showed me she could take a little hint. 'I heard everything,' she replied, 'and I mean to keep it to myself!'

It was impossible not to be moved with the strongest sympathy for her, and on my return to England I showed her every kindness in my power. Her mother's death had made her means sufficient, and she had gone to live in a more convenient quarter. But her loss had been great and her visitation cruel; it never would have occurred to me moreover to suppose she could come to feel the possession of a technical tip, of a piece of literary experience, a counterpoise to her grief. Strange to say, none the less, I couldn't help believing after I had seen her a few times that I caught a glimpse of some such oddity. I hasten to add that there had been other things I couldn't help believing, or at least imagining; and as I never felt I was really clear about these, so, as to the point I here touch on, I give her memory the benefit of the doubt. Stricken and solitary, highly accomplished and now, in her deep mourning, her maturer grace and her uncomplaining sorrow, incontestably handsome, she presented herself as leading a life of singular dignity and beauty. I had at first found a way to persuade myself that I should soon get the better of the reserve formulated, the week after the catastrophe, in her reply to an appeal as to which I was not unconscious that it might strike her as mistimed. Certainly that reserve was something of a shock to me – certainly it puzzled me the more I thought of it and even though I tried to explain it (with moments of success) by an imputation of exalted sentiments, of superstitious scruples, of a refinement of loyalty. Certainly it added at the same time hugely to the price of Vereker's secret, precious as this mystery already appeared. I may as well confess abjectly that Mrs Corvick's unexpected attitude was the final tap on the nail that was to fix fast my luckless idea, convert it into the obsession of which I'm for ever conscious.

But this only helped me the more to be artful, to be adroit, to allow time to elapse before renewing my suit. There were plenty of speculations for the interval, and one of them was deeply absorbing. Corvick had kept his information from his young friend till after the removal of the last barrier to their intimacy – then only had he let the cat out of the bag. Was it Gwendolen's idea, taking a hint from him, to liberate this animal only on the basis of the renewal of such a relation? Was the figure in the carpet traceable or describable only for husbands and wives – for lovers supremely united? It came back to me in a mystifying manner that in Kensington Square, when I mentioned that Corvick would have told the girl he loved, some word had dropped from Vereker that gave colour to this possibility. There might be little in it, but there was enough to make me wonder if I should have to marry Mrs Corvick to get what I wanted. Was I prepared to offer her this price for the blessing of her knowledge? Ah that way madness lay! – so I at least said to myself in bewildered hours. I could see meanwhile the torch she refused to pass on flame away in her chamber of memory – pour through her eyes a light that shone in her lonely house. At the end of six months I was fully sure of what this warm presence made up to her for. We had talked again and again of the man who had brought us together – of his talent, his character, his personal charm, his certain career, his dreadful doom, and even of his clear purpose in that great study which was to have been a supreme literary portrait, a kind of critical Vandyke or Velasquez. She had conveyed to me in abundance that she was tongue-tied by her perversity, by her piety, that she would never break the silence it had not been given to the ‘right person,’ as she said, to break. The hour however finally arrived. One evening when I had been sitting with her longer than usual I laid my hand firmly on her arm. ‘Now at last what is it?’

She had been expecting me and was ready. She gave a long slow soundless headshake, merciful only in being inarticulate. This mercy didn’t prevent its hurling at me the largest finest coldest ‘Never!’ I had yet, in the course of a life that had known denials, had to take full in the face. I took it and was aware that with the hard blow the tears had come into my eyes. So for a while we sat and looked at each other; after which I slowly rose. I was wondering if some day she would accept me; but this was not what I brought out. I said as I smoothed down my hat: ‘I know what to think then. It’s nothing!’

A remote disdainful pity for me gathered in her dim smile; then she spoke in a voice that I hear at this hour. ‘It’s my life !’ As I stood at the door she added: ‘You’ve insulted him!’

‘Do you mean Vereker?’

‘I mean the Dead!’

I recognised when I reached the street the justice of her charge. Yes, it was her life – I recognised that too; but her life none the less made room with the lapse of time for another interest. A year and a half after Corvick’s death she published in a single volume her second novel, 'Overmastered,' which I pounced on in the hope of finding in it some tell-tale echo or some peeping face. All I found was a much better book than her younger performance, showing I thought the better company she had kept. As a tissue tolerably intricate it was a carpet with a figure of its own; but the figure was not the figure I was looking for. On sending a review of it to The Middle I was surprised to learn from the office that a notice was already in type. When the paper came out I had no hesitation in attributing this article, which I thought rather vulgarly overdone, to Drayton Deane, who in the old days had been something of a friend of Corvick's, yet had only within a few weeks made the acquaintance of his widow. I had had an early copy of the book, but Deane had evidently had an earlier. He lacked all the same the light hand with which Corvick had gilded the gingerbread – he laid on the tinsel in splotches.

X

Six months later appeared 'The Right of Way', the last chance, though we didn't know it, that we were to have to redeem ourselves. Written wholly during Vereker's sojourn abroad, the book had been heralded, in a hundred paragraphs, by the usual ineptitudes. I carried it, as early a copy as any, I this time flattered myself, straightway to Mrs Corvick. This was the only use I had for it; I left the inevitable tribute of The Middle to some more ingenious mind and some less irritated temper. 'But I already have it,' Gwendolen said. 'Drayton Deane was so good as to bring it to me yesterday, and I've just finished it.'

'Yesterday? How did he get it so soon?'

'He gets everything so soon! He's to review it in The Middle.'

'He – Drayton Deane – review Vereker?' I couldn't believe my ears.

'Why not? One fine ignorance is as good as another.'

I winced but I presently said: 'You ought to review him yourself!'

'I don't "review,"' she laughed. 'I'm reviewed!'

Just then the door was thrown open. 'Ah yes, here's your reviewer!' Drayton Deane was there with his long legs and his tall forehead: he had come to see what she thought of 'The Right of Way,' and to bring news that was singularly relevant. The evening papers were just out with a telegram on the author of that work, who, in Rome, had been ill for some days with an attack of malarial fever. It had at first not been thought grave, but had taken, in consequence of complications, a turn that might give rise to anxiety. Anxiety had indeed at the latest hour begun to be felt.

I was struck in the presence of these tidings with the fundamental detachment that Mrs Corvick's overt concern quite failed to hide: it gave me the measure of her consummate independence. That independence rested on her knowledge, the knowledge which nothing now could destroy and which nothing could make different. The figure in the carpet might take on another twist or two, but the sentence had virtually been written. The writer might go down to his grave: she was the person in the world to whom – as if she had been his favoured heir – his continued existence was least of a need. This reminded me how I had observed at a particular moment – after Corvick's death – the drop of her desire to see him face to face. She had got what she wanted without that. I had been sure that if she hadn't got it she wouldn't have been restrained from the endeavour to sound him personally by those superior reflections, more conceivable on a man's part than on a woman's, which in my case had served as a deterrent. It wasn't however, I hasten to add, that my case, in spite of this invidious comparison, wasn't ambiguous enough. At the thought that Vereker was perhaps at that moment dying there rolled over me a wave of anguish – a poignant sense of how inconsistently I still depended on him. A delicacy that it was my one compensation to suffer to rule me had left the Alps and the Apennines between us, but the sense of the waning occasion suggested that I might in my despair at last have gone to him. Of course I should really have done nothing of the sort. I remained five minutes, while my companions talked of the new book, and when Drayton Deane appealed to me for my opinion of it I made answer, getting up, that I detested Hugh Vereker and simply couldn't read him. I departed with the moral certainty that as the door closed behind me Deane would brand me for awfully superficial. His hostess wouldn't contradict that at least.

I continue to trace with a briefer touch our intensely odd successions. Three weeks after this came Vereker's death, and before the year was out the death of his wife. That poor lady I had never seen, but I had had a futile theory that, should she survive him long enough to be decorously accessible, I might approach her with the feeble flicker of my plea. Did she know and if she knew would she speak? It was much to be presumed that for more reasons than one she would have nothing to say; but when she passed out of all reach I felt renouncement indeed my appointed lot. I was shut up in my obsession for ever – my gaolers had gone off with the key. I find myself quite as vague as a captive in a dungeon about the time that further elapsed before Mrs Corvick became the wife of Drayton Deane. I had foreseen, through my bars, this end of the business, though there was no indecent haste and our friendship had rather fallen off. They were both so 'awfully intellectual' that it struck people as a suitable match, but I had measured better than any one the wealth of understanding the bride would contribute to the union. Never, for a marriage in literary circles – so the newspapers described the alliance – had a lady been so bravely dowered. I began with due promptness to look for the fruit of the affair – that fruit, I mean, of which the premonitory symptoms would be peculiarly visible in the husband. Taking for granted the splendour of the other party's nuptial gift, I expected to see him make a show commensurate with his increase of means. I knew what his means had been – his article on 'The Right of Way' had distinctly given one the figure. As he was now exactly in the position in which still more exactly I was not I watched from month to month, in the likely periodicals, for the heavy message poor Corvick had been unable to deliver and the responsibility of which would have fallen on his successor. The widow and wife would have broken by the rekindled hearth the silence that only a widow and wife might break, and Deane would be as aflame with the knowledge as Corvick in his own hour, as Gwendolen in hers, had been. Well, he was aflame doubtless, but the fire was apparently not to become a public blaze. I scanned the periodicals in vain: Drayton Deane filled them with exuberant pages, but he withheld the page I most feverishly sought. He wrote on a thousand subjects, but never on the subject of Vereker. His special line was to tell truths that other people either 'funked,' as he said, or overlooked, but he never told the only truth that seemed to me in these days to signify. I met the couple in those literary circles referred to in the papers: I have sufficiently intimated that it was only in such circles we were all constructed to revolve. Gwendolen was more than ever committed to them by the publication of her third novel, and I myself definitely classed by holding the opinion that this work was inferior to its immediate predecessor. Was it worse because she had been keeping worse company? If her secret was, as she had told me, her life – a fact discernible in her increasing bloom, an air of conscious privilege that, cleverly corrected by pretty charities, gave distinction to her appearance – it had yet not a direct influence on her work. That only made one – everything only made one – yearn the more for it; only rounded it off with a mystery finer and subtler.

XI

It was therefore from her husband I could never remove my eyes: I beset him in a manner that might have made him uneasy. I went even so far as to engage him in conversation. Didn't he know, hadn't he come into it as a matter of course? – that question hummed in my brain. Of course he knew; otherwise he wouldn't return my stare so queerly. His wife had told him what I wanted and he was amiably amused at my impotence. He didn't laugh – he wasn't a laugher: his system was to present to my irritation, so that I should crudely expose myself, a conversational blank as vast as his big bare brow. It always happened that I turned away with a settled conviction from these unpeopled expanses, which seemed to complete each other geographically and to symbolise together Drayton Deane's want of voice, want of form. He simply hadn't the art to use what he knew, he literally was incompetent to take up the duty where Corvick had left it. I went still further – it was the only glimpse of happiness I had. I made up my mind that the duty didn't appeal to him. He wasn't interested, he didn't care. Yes, it quite comforted me to believe him too stupid to have joy of the thing I lacked. He was as stupid after as he had been before, and that deepened for me the golden glory in which the mystery was wrapped. I had of course none the less to recollect that his wife might have imposed her conditions and exactions. I had above all to remind myself that with Vereker's death the major incentive dropped. He was still there to be honoured by what might be done – he was no longer there to give it his sanction. Who alas but he had the authority?

Two children were born to the pair, but the second cost the mother her life. After this stroke I seemed to see another ghost of a chance. I jumped at it in thought, but I waited a certain time for manners, and at last my opportunity arrived in a remunerative way. His wife had been dead a year when I met Drayton Deane in the smokingroom of a small club of which we both were members, but where for months – perhaps because I rarely entered it – I hadn't seen him. The room was empty and the occasion propitious. I deliberately offered him, to have done with the matter for ever, that advantage for which I felt he had long been looking.

'As an older acquaintance of your late wife's than even you were,' I began, 'you must let me say to you something I have on my mind. I shall be glad to make any terms with you that you see fit to name for the information she must have had from George Corvick – the information, you know, that had come to him, poor chap, in one of the happiest hours of his life, straight from Hugh Vereker.'

He looked at me like a dim phrenological bust. 'The information –?'

'Vereker's secret, my dear man – the general intention of his books: the string the pearls were strung on, the buried treasure, the figure in the carpet.'

He began to flush – the numbers on his bumps to come out. 'Vereker's books had a general intention?'

I started in my turn. 'You don't mean to say you don't know it?' I thought for a moment he was playing with me. 'Mrs Deane knew it; she had it, as I say, straight from Corvick, who had, after infinite search and to Vereker's own delight, found the very mouth of the cave. Where is the mouth? He told after their marriage – and told alone – the person who, when the circumstances were reproduced, must have told you. Have I been wrong in taking for granted that she admitted you, as one of the highest privileges of the relation in which you stood to her, to the knowledge of which she was after Corvick's death the sole depositary? All I know is that that knowledge is infinitely precious, and what I want you to understand is that if you'll in your turn admit me to it you'll do me a kindness for which I shall be lastingly grateful.'

He had turned at last very red; I dare say he had begun by thinking I had lost my wits. Little by little he followed me; on my own side I stared with a livelier surprise. Then he spoke. 'I don't know what you're talking about.'

He wasn't acting – it was the absurd truth. 'She didn't tell you –?'

'Nothing about Hugh Vereker.'

I was stupefied; the room went round. It had been too good even for that! 'Upon your honour?'

'Upon my honour. What the devil's the matter with you?' he growled.

'I'm astounded – I'm disappointed. I wanted to get it out of you.'

'It isn't in me!' he awkwardly laughed. 'And even if it were –'

'If it were you'd let me have it – oh yes, in common humanity. But I believe you. I see – I see!' I went on, conscious, with the full turn of the wheel, of my great delusion, my false view of the poor man's attitude. What I saw, though I couldn't say it, was that his wife hadn't thought him worth enlightening. This struck me as strange for a woman who had thought him worth marrying. At last I explained it by the reflection that she couldn't possibly have married him for his understanding. She had married him for something else.

He was to some extent enlightened now, but he was even more astonished, more disconcerted: he took a moment to compare my story with his quickened memories. The result of his meditation was his presently saying with a good deal of rather feeble form: 'This is the first I hear of what you allude to. I think you must be mistaken as to Mrs Drayton Deane's having had any unmentioned, and still less any unmentionable, knowledge of Hugh Vereker. She'd certainly have wished it – should it have borne on his literary character – to be used.'

'It was used. She used it herself. She told me with her own lips that she "lived" on it.'

I had no sooner spoken than I repented of my words; he grew so pale that I felt as if I had struck him. 'Ah "lived" –!' he murmured, turning short away from me.

My compunction was real; I laid my hand on his shoulder. 'I beg you to forgive me – I've made a mistake. You don't know what I thought you knew. You could, if I had been right, have rendered me a service; and I had my reasons for assuming that you'd be in a position to meet me.

'Your reasons?' he echoed. 'What were your reasons?'

I looked at him well; I hesitated; I considered. 'Come and sit down with me here and I'll tell you.' I drew him to a sofa, I lighted another cigar and, beginning with the anecdote of Vereker's one descent from the clouds, I recited to him the extraordinary chain of accidents that had, in spite of the original gleam, kept me till that hour in the dark. I told him in a word just what I've written out here. He listened with deepening attention, and I became aware, to my surprise, by his ejaculations, by his questions, that he would have been after all not unworthy to be trusted by his wife. So abrupt an experience of her want of trust had now a disturbing effect on him; but I saw the immediate shock throb away little by little and then gather again into waves of wonder and curiosity – waves that promised, I could perfectly judge, to break in the end with the fury of my own highest tides. I may say that today as victims of unappeased desire there isn't a pin to choose between us. The poor man's state is almost my consolation, there are really moments when I feel it to be quite my revenge.

巴塔哥尼亚

1833年12月6日

小猎犬号航离拉普拉塔河，离开了它混浊的水道。我们将驶向位于巴塔哥尼亚的海岸线上的德西雷港。在深入航程以前，我必须先整理一下在海上的种种观察。

有几次是在小猎犬号距离拉普拉塔河口数英里 [1] 之处，另外几次则是在巴塔哥尼亚北部的海岸边，我们遇到了被昆虫团团包围的情况。有一天傍晚，在距离圣布拉斯湾大约10英里的地方，数量庞大的蝴蝶成群结队，覆盖了视线所及的全部天空。即使借助单筒望远镜，也看不见蝶群中有任何一丝缝隙。水手们大喊大叫：“下蝴蝶雪啦。”而这也确实是当时的景象。现场的蝴蝶种类并不单一，不过大多为同一物种，非常接近但区别于普通的英国红点豆粉蝶（Colias edusa）。其中夹杂着一些蛾类和蜂类与蝴蝶共舞；还有只漂亮的星步甲（Calosoma）飞上了船。有证据表明，有人曾在远海抓到过几次这种甲虫；然而眼前这情景可大为罕见，因为大多数步甲科（Carabidae）昆虫很少甚至从不飞行。那日的天气一直晴朗平静，前一天也同样如此，只有几丝轻盈而多变的微风。因此我们推测这些虫子不可能是从大陆吹来的，而是自行飞来的。起初，数量巨大、密密团团的豆粉蝶（Colias）似乎又一次证明了那些记录在册的小红蛱蝶（Vanessa cardui）的迁徙。但其他种类昆虫的出现使之非同寻常，并且很难解释。日落之前，从北面吹来了一阵强风，而这无疑会使数以万计的蝴蝶和其他昆虫就此毙命。

另有一回，在离科连特斯角17英里远的地方，我往水里抛了一张网，捕捞深海生物。收网后，我相当意外地发现里面有数量可观的甲虫，即使远在外海，咸水也没有对它们造成太多的伤害。我遗失了部分标本，但保存下来的则分别属于切眼龙虱（Colymbetes）、平基龙虱（Hydroporus）、毛跗牙甲（Hydrobius）（两个种）、锥须步甲（Notaphus）、黑步甲（Cynucus）、新麻萤叶甲（Adimonia）和圣蜚螂（Scarabæus）。起初，我以为这些虫子是被风从海岸边吹来的，但经过反复思考，鉴于这八个种类的甲虫里，有四种是水生，另外两种也有部分水栖习性，我觉得它们最有可能是随着一小股水流从科连特斯角附近的湖泊中一路漂流进入大海的。无论出于哪种假设，在距离最近陆地17英里的地方，发现昆虫在开阔的海面有活力地游动，都是非常有趣的现象。曾有几处记录显示有昆虫被风从巴塔哥尼

亚海岸吹来的现象。库克船长就观察到过，而最近一次，金船长在冒险号上也遇到了。昆虫被吹离海岸的原因极有可能是缺乏遮蔽，在既没有树又没有山的情况下，一只正在飞翔的昆虫很容易被吹向大海。在所有远离陆地观察到的昆虫中，最令我惊讶的是一只体形较大的蝗虫[飞蝗 (Acrydium) [2]]。它飞上小猎犬号时，我们正迎风驶向佛得角群岛，而离得最近的一块陆地，是不完全在季风风向上的布兰科角，位于非洲海岸线上，距我们有370英里之远。

有好几回，当船只位于拉普拉塔河口范围之内时，帆缆上便会结满飞航的蜘蛛的网。有一天（1832年11月1日）我特别留意了这一现象。那天天气晴朗无云，早晨的空气中满是一片片毛乎乎的网，就好像身处英格兰的秋天。船离陆地有60英里，一阵稳定而轻柔的微风顺着我们的航向吹拂。有无数的小蜘蛛，体长约1/10英寸 [3]，呈暗红色，黏着在一张张网上。我估计这艘船上一定有数千只小蜘蛛。它们刚接触帆索的时候，总是凭一根单独的蛛丝来固着，而不是停留在絮状的网上。这些网看起来就像是许多根单独的蛛丝纠缠在一起。这些蜘蛛都是同一个属种，有雌有雄，同时还有一些幼蛛，体形较小，颜色也更暗淡。对此我不再赘述，在我看来，它似乎并不属于拉特雷耶 [4] 分类系统中的任何一属。这小小的搭船客一落到船上就四处跑来跑去，异常活泼；有时会故意坠下来，然后再沿着同一根蛛丝往上爬；有时候则在角落的绳索间织一个小小的不规则的网。它在水面上相当灵活地移动，受到惊吓的时候会抬起前腿，摆出一副防御的姿态。这些蜘蛛最初抵达时似乎极为口渴，用一对突出的颚叶急切地喝着水；斯特拉克曾经观察到一模一样的情形：或许这是由于这些小小的虫子经过了一片干燥而稀薄的空气而来？它似乎能无穷无尽地吐丝。在观察某些悬垂在独根蛛丝上的小蜘蛛时，有好几回我都看到，哪怕是最轻微的一阵风也能把它们横吹出去，瞬间消失不见。另有一回（25日）环境情况类似，我反复观察到同一属种的小蜘蛛，不论是被放置还是自己爬行，只要到了一片微微隆起的高地，便会抬起腹部，往前射出一根蛛丝，然后沿侧面滑走，速度之快，令人百思不得其解。我以为我看到了小蜘蛛在做出上述准备动作之前，用最纤细的蛛丝把腿黏在了一起，然而我并不能确定这一观察是否正确。

有一天，就在圣菲，我得到一个更好的观察相似情形的机会。有一只身长约3/10英寸的蜘蛛，外形接近于游走蛛 (Citigrade)（因此与那些借助于风从远处来的飞航的蜘蛛截然不同），它落在一根木杆的顶端，从纺器里往前喷射出四五根蛛丝。这些在阳光中闪闪发光的丝，看上去有如一根根光线；它们不是笔直的，而是曲折起伏，像被风撩动的绸面。蛛丝长度超过1码 [5]，从吐丝口向上散射出去。紧接着，蜘蛛突然离开了木杆，迅速消失在我的视线中。那天热得很，显然也没有风，但即使在这样的天气里，气流也不可能让蛛丝这般纤弱

在拉普拉塔河以南不同的航段里，我常常在船尾拖一张旗布结成的网，因此捕捞到不少稀奇古怪的生物。栉水母（Beroe）（水母的一种）的结构最为奇特，有成排颤动的触手，以及复杂但并不规则的循环系统。甲壳动物（Crustacea）有许多新奇、未见描述的属。有一种，就某方面而言类似于某些十足目的蟹类 [7]（Notopods）（或是某种蟹，为了附着在暗礁的底部，这种蟹的后足指节几乎长到了背上），有着构造十分奇异的后足。它的倒数第二节关节，并非结束于单一的钳足，而是止于三个长度不一、刚毛样的附肢，最长的一节同整条足一样长。这些钳足非常细，锯齿状地分布着极其细密的齿，一直到基部。钳足弧形的顶端是扁平的，上面排列着五个极微小的杯状结构，其功能看起来类似于墨鱼触腕上的吸盘。鉴于这种生物生活在远海，大有可能需要歇脚之处，我猜测这一美丽的构造是为了能抓住水母以及其他海洋浮游生物球形的身体。

在远离大陆的深水区，生物的数量极其稀少：南纬35度以南，除了一些栉水母，以及切甲亚纲（Entomostraca）的几种丁点大的甲壳动物，我再也没有打捞到什么别的生物了。而在离岸数英里的稍浅一些的海里，有许多种甲壳类动物，以及众多其他动物，不过只在夜间出现。在南纬56度到57度之间，合恩角以南，我往船尾撒了好几回网，然而，除了零星捞到两种体形极小的切甲亚纲动物，简直一无所获。但这一片海域，却分布着数量极为可观的鲸鱼、海豹、圆尾鲣、信天翁。对此我总是疑惑不解，距离岸边如此之远，信天翁究竟是靠什么存活的。我推测信天翁有点儿像秃鹰，能够长时间地禁食，只要饱啖一顿腐烂的鲸鱼尸体便可抵挡长久的饥饿。然而并不能简单认定，它们以鱼为生，因为，那些鱼又以何为食呢？观察大西洋中部与南北回归线之间的水域里麇集的翼足目（Pteropoda）、甲壳纲和放射虫纲（Radiata）动物，以及吞食它们的飞鱼，再加上吞食飞鱼的鲣鱼和金枪鱼，我时常灵光一现地想到，那些处于最底端的远洋生物很有可能拥有分解二氧化碳的能力，一如植物王国的成员们。

船航行在这些纬度之间，每到黑夜，海洋就会呈现出一派壮丽的

景象，美不胜收。清风微拂，白天海面上铺天盖地的浮沫，这会儿闪动着淡淡的微光。船首破开两道磷光灼烁的巨浪，而船尾则拖曳着一条乳白色的航迹。目之所及，每一道浪尖都熠熠生光，地平线上方的天穹在这些青灰色光芒的映照下，不再像其余的夜空那般晦暗不明。

我们驶向更南方，大海中几乎看不到磷光了。离开合恩角之后，记忆中只见过一回，而且这磷光也远谈不上明亮。这种情形多半与这片海域生命的匮乏息息相关。关于海洋中的磷光，在埃伦伯格写过阐述详尽的论文之后，我再对此做出自己的考察大概有点儿多此一举。然而，我或许可以补充，埃伦伯格所形容的破碎的、不规则的凝胶状颗粒，似乎是引起南北半球磷光现象的共同原因。这种颗粒非常微小，能轻易地透过细纱布；然而多数仅凭肉眼就可以分辨。把这海水放在一个玻璃杯里搅动，它就会闪闪发光，但如果往表面皿里倒上些许，就很少见它发亮。埃伦伯格认为，这些颗粒都有一定程度的应激性。而我的观察，有一些是在刚取出海水后就直接进行的，得出了截然不同的结论。我还要指出，有一天夜间，在用过渔网后，我任其晾得半干，12个小时后再次使用它时，竟发现渔网的表面就和刚从海水里捞出来时一样闪着亮光。在这种情况下，颗粒是不太可能存活这么久的。我的笔记里还记录过我养的一只和平水母（Dianæa），在它死后，盛放它的水开始发光。当海浪闪耀着绿色的光亮时，我认为这大体上确实是由微小的甲壳动物发出的。而且，毫无疑问，仍然有许许多多的浮游生物会在活着的时候发出磷光。

有两回，我观察到在离水面相当远的深处海水在发着光。就在拉普拉塔河口附近，一片片地，呈圆形或卵形，直径在2到4码之间，轮廓清晰，散发着稳定、黯淡的光，而周围的海水只是偶尔闪烁一下。这些发光区看上去就像是月亮或者别的什么发光体的倒影，它们的边缘随着海面的起伏而曲折。我们这艘船吃水达13英尺 [8] 深，驶过这些发光区，却并没有搅散它们。由此我们可以推测，这些生物聚集在比船底还深得多的海里。

费尔南多·迪诺罗尼亚群岛附近的海水一阵一阵地闪着光，看上去很像是一条大鱼疾速地穿过一片发光的海水所造成。水手们也确实是这么认为的，可那个时候，基于闪光出现的频率及其迅疾的速度，我倒是对此持有几分怀疑。就观察到的现象总体而言，我早已说过，这一情形在温暖的区域比在寒冷的区域要更加常见。我有时候会设想，大气扰动的电磁状态极利于产生这种发光现象。当然，比起寻常天气，经过数天风平浪静的日子之后，这种发光现象最为强烈，因为此时的海水中聚集了各种各样的生物。我观察到充满凝胶颗粒的海水总是很混浊，而发光现象基本上都是由于和大气接触的海水被搅动而导致的，因此我一直倾向于认为磷光是源于有机颗粒的分解，在这一过程中（该过程差不多可以被称为呼吸作用）海洋得到了净化。

12月23日

我们抵达了德塞阿多港，就在南纬47度，巴塔哥尼亚海岸上。溪水深入内陆约20英里，时宽时窄。小猎犬号停泊在溪水入口内几英里之处，正对着古老的西班牙定居点的废墟。

我当晚就登上了岸。初次来到任何未知的土地总是令人兴奋的，尤其像这一回，风光景物都显得卓然殊异。在大约200到300英尺之间的高处，成片的斑岩之上，一块宽阔的台地延展开去，这正是典型的巴塔哥尼亚地貌。地面相当平坦，由浑圆的鹅卵石间杂着发白的泥土构成。瘦而坚韧如金属丝一般棕褐色的草，东一丛西一丛地散布着，间或夹有一些低矮多刺的灌木丛。天气干爽宜人，晴空如碧，少有云翳。站在任何一块荒凉台地的中央望出去，总有一边的视线为陡壁所阻挡，那是一块更高的台地，但同样地平缓、萧索；而另一边的景致则朦胧不定，地表受热蒸腾而起的气流让一切变得如海市蜃楼般缥缈。

有许多宽阔、底部平坦的山谷横穿台地，谷里的灌木丛尤为繁茂。如今这片土地的排水量显然不足以冲击出这般庞大的沟渠。在一些山谷里，一棵棵古老、矮小的树生长在干涸的河道正中，它们伫立在那里，仿佛为了证明自打洪水从此地奔流而去后，又有多少时间消逝如斯。地面上的贝壳表明，砾石台地是在最近一世 [9] 才上升到海平面之上的；而山谷也正是在那一时期由缓慢消退的水流冲击而成的。自从气候干旱以来，人们可能在这些台地之间走上几天，却看不见丝毫水的踪迹。即使在斑岩山脚下，也只有几口小小的水井，盛着少量半腐臭的咸水。

在这样一片土地上，西班牙定居点的命运很快就见分晓了。一年中大部分时间干旱的气候，以及游牧的印第安人时不时地怀有敌意的袭击，迫使殖民者废弃了尚未完工的建筑。不过，已见雏形的风格也显示出旧时期西班牙强烈而自由的气息。对于美洲南纬41度以南地区全部的殖民努力皆以悲剧告终。“饥荒港” [10] 这一名字透露出有数百个受难者在此苟延残喘、苦不堪言的种种，其中仅有一人幸存下来，讲述了这一苦难。在巴塔哥尼亚海岸的圣约瑟夫湾，西班牙人设了一个小小的定居点，印第安人在一个星期日袭击了他们，几乎屠戮了整支殖民队伍，只有两人幸免于难，并在游牧部落里做了多年的俘虏。我曾在内格罗河与其中一人交谈，彼时，他也已至耄耋之年。

巴塔哥尼亚的动物种群和它的植物种群一样寥落。在贫瘠的台地上，大致能看到有些黑色的甲虫[异跗节类 (Heteromera)]慢吞吞地爬来爬去，偶尔有一只蜥蜴飞快地从这一头蹿到另一头。至于鸟类，我们看到了三只吃腐肉的鹰，在山谷里则有几种雀鸟和以昆虫为食的鸟。黑脸鹮 (Ibis malanops) [11] (据说在非洲中部也有分布) 常见

于不毛之地。在它们的胃里我发现了蝗虫、蝉、蜥蜴甚至蝎子。一年里总有一段时间，它们成群生活，另一段时间里则成对出行；它们的叫声响亮而奇异，有点儿像原驼的嘶鸣声。

对于后者我将于此阐述一番，这一相当常见的物种，是巴塔哥尼亚台地上典型的四足动物。有些博物学家认为原驼与大羊驼是同一种动物，前者是后者的野生状态，是东方骆驼在南美洲的远亲。它的大小与驴子相仿，修长的四肢使得身形更高，而脖颈则极长。原驼遍布南美洲的整个温带地区，从林木葱茏的火地岛，到整个巴塔哥尼亚地区、拉普拉塔的山区，以及智利，甚至到秘鲁山脉。尽管偏爱在较高处生活，在这些地区它却不如它的近亲小羊驼一般繁盛。在南巴塔哥尼亚的台地上，它们的数量较其他地区要多得多。通常它们以小群生活，数量从6头到30头不等；但在圣克鲁斯的河岸边，我们看到一个原驼群，至少有500头之多。在麦哲伦海峡的北海岸，它们的数量也十分庞大。

总体而言，原驼野性十足，也异常警觉。斯托克斯先生曾经告诉我，有一天他透过单筒望远镜看到一群原驼，虽然距离遥远，单凭肉眼根本不可能准确辨认，但能看出它们显然已经受惊，正全速奔逃。猎手经常能第一时间捕捉到原驼的踪迹，他们隔着很远就能听见原驼奇异、尖厉而带有警戒意味的嘶鸣声。倘若猎手留心察看，极有可能会瞧见一群原驼在远处的山坡上站成一排。当猎手逐步接近，原驼会发出更多的嘶叫，然后沿着狭窄、被踩平的小径转移到邻近的一座山上，尽管看起来像是在慢慢跑动，实则速度飞快。倘若猎手碰巧撞见一头落单的原驼，或者只是几头在一起，它们多半会一动不动，专注地盯着猎人；接着或许会迈开几码，转过头来再度盯视。它们胆怯的表现何以如此不同？它们是不是错把远处的人当成了它们的主要天敌美洲狮？还是好奇战胜了胆怯？原驼很好奇这点确凿无疑，如果一个人躺在地上，做出滑稽的动作，像是双足在空中蹬踢，它们几乎总是会渐挪渐近，探个究竟。这个小招数被我们的猎手反复地成功实践，有时甚至还能开上几枪，因为这全都被当成了滑稽行径的一部分。在火地岛的山里，以及其他地区，我不止一次地瞧见原驼在有人靠近以后，嘶鸣吼叫，昂首腾跳，样子极其古怪，而这显然是故作姿态，以进为防。原驼相当容易驯养，我曾看见过一些养在房子附近被驯化的，不过也是和它们在野地里一样，处于放养状态。这种状态下的原驼十分勇猛，随时会以双膝从背后对人发起攻击。据说，这种攻击的动机源于对雌性的争风吃醋。尽管如此，野生的原驼却毫无防卫的意识；仅凭一条狗便能看住体形庞大的原驼，直到猎人赶来。从许多方面来看，它们的生物习性比较接近羊群中的羊。因此，当骑手从各个方向接近原驼的时候，它们会立刻陷入混乱，不晓得从哪个方位奔逃。这使得印第安人的狩猎变得轻而易举，因为它们很容易被驱赶到

一个中心点，被团团包围。

原驼很喜欢下水：在巴尔德斯港，好几次都有人目击到原驼从一个岛游向另一个岛。拜伦在他的游记里曾写道，他看到原驼在喝咸水。而我们的几位长官也同样瞧见，一群原驼似乎正从布兰科角附近的一个盐水湖里饮用咸水。我揣测，在这片土地的某些地方，如果它们不饮用咸水的话，就根本无水可喝。正午时分，它们常待在浅碟形的洼地里，在尘土中滚来滚去。雄性原驼总是打架，有一天，两头原驼和我擦身而过，它们尖声嘶叫，正在极力撕咬对方；有几头被射杀的原驼，兽皮上还有深深的咬痕。驼群有时候似乎会结队前去探险：在布兰卡港，距离海岸30英里的地区内，原驼是十分罕见的。有一天我观察到三四十头原驼的足迹，呈直线通往一条泥泞的咸水溪。随后，它们想必是察觉到了自己正在接近大海，于是便以一种骑兵队的规整步伐突然转了个方向，和它们来时一样笔直得像条线一般地往回走了。原驼有一个奇特的习性，令我相当费解：它们会连续若干日把粪便拉在同一个地方，形成明显的一堆。我曾见过其中的一堆，直径有8英尺，想必数量庞大。弗雷奇尔认为这一习性是原驼和美洲驼共有的；这对于使用粪便为燃料的印第安人极为有用，免去了收集的麻烦。

原驼似乎对于死亡的地点也有偏好。在圣克鲁斯河岸的一些特定区域内，地面上骨头累累，一片惨白，这些地点通常灌木丛生，全都靠近河边。在其中一处，我数到了约十几个头骨。我特意研究了这些骨头，它们看起来不像我以前见过的零星散落的骨头，那些骨头要么被啃噬过，要么就被折断了，似乎都是被猛兽拖到一起的。而这些骨头却不一样，从大多数骨头来看，这些原驼必定在死之前爬到了灌木底下，或者隐在灌木丛中。拜诺先生告诉我，在上一次旅程中，他在里奥加耶戈斯河岸注意到了一模一样的情形。我并不全然理解此中缘故，不过在圣克鲁斯，我观察到受伤的原驼无不走向了河边。在佛得角群岛的圣贾哥，我记得悬崖下面，一条与世隔绝幽深的沟壑里，集聚着数量可观的山羊骨头：当时我们都惊叫起来，认为这大概是岛上所有山羊的坟场了。我提及这些不足挂齿的事情，是因为在某些情况下，它们或许能解释数量不少、完好无损的骨头出现在山洞里或者河流冲积层中这一现象；同样地，也能说明何以在沉积矿床中一些哺乳动物比其他动物更为常见。圣克鲁斯任何一场大洪水都会冲刷出许多原驼的骨头，但大概连一根美洲狮、鸵鸟或狐狸的骨头都没有。我还观察到，几乎每一种水禽在受伤时都会到岸边等待死亡，也正是出于这一原因，在化石中很少见到鸟类的尸体。

1834年1月9日

天黑之前，小猎犬号停泊在圣胡利安港宽绰的港口里，距德西雷港南端约110英里。海港南边，一座高达90英尺的悬崖切断了上述构造的平原。它的表层散布着现代的海洋贝壳。与其他任何地区截然不同，这块地面被一层薄薄的、不平整的微红色淤泥所覆盖，包含一些小粒的钙质结核。这层淤泥有点儿类似于南美洲潘帕斯大草原上的那种，而且很有可能源于早先经此地入海的一条小溪流，还有点儿像如今还存在于港口前端的那种泥滩地。在某一处，这些淤泥填满了地面的空隙处及山谷，几乎蔓延至碎石层之下，而就在这层碎石中，也藏有很多大型的动物骨头。如同布兰卡港的情形，这些骨头所属的动物一定生活在贝壳出现很久以后的一段时期里，而这些贝壳至今还留存于该海岸。对于这一点我们基本可以确定，因为阶地或者台地较低的地质层的形成必然晚于它上面那几层，而在较高的两层地质层的表面，正散布着现代的海洋贝壳。从大陆最近一次抬升100英尺所产生的自然界的小小变化来看，在那些动物被埋藏的年代，气候以及巴塔哥尼亚总体环境，与今天相比几乎是一模一样的。根据这两个年代的贝壳种类来判断，关于这些动物出现时间的结论也站得住脚。难题紧随而来，在南纬49度15分这般恶劣的荒漠里，大型的四足动物是如何生存下来的呢？当时我对此一筹莫展，不清楚这些遗骸属于哪些动物。然而，当欧文先生察看这些骨头的时候，谜题却很快解开了：他判断这些骨头能拼出的动物的一部分，与原驼或者美洲驼是同一系的，但体形和真正的骆驼一样大。由于现存的所有骆驼科动物都生活在不毛之地，我们或许可以断定这是灭绝的一种。颈椎的结构，椎动脉所需的横突上未见穿孔，揭示了它与骆驼科的相关性；然而，该结构的另外一些部位，却是非常规的。

现今，存在于啮齿动物目的这种联系，在南美洲最为明显，这是由于该物种的数量庞大，物种多样化，加之个体数量繁多。根据同样的规律，我们应该能在化石中找到它们的代表。欧文先生揭示了谱系遥远的箭齿兽是怎样由这一规律联系起来的，所以，在另一种大型动物中，发现这种类似的亲缘关系，也并非不可能。

啮齿类动物与在布兰卡港附近被人发现的水豚有着几乎相同尺寸的牙齿，这也是值得记录的一点。

尽管难免遇见一些异常的例外，物种演变的法则，还是引起了一位爱好哲思的博物学家极为浓厚的兴趣。人们第一次明确观察到这一法则是在澳大利亚，在那里有一个山洞中，有人发现了各种已灭绝的大型袋鼠以及其他有袋目哺乳动物的化石遗迹。在美洲，哺乳动物中最显著的变化是几种乳齿象、一种大象以及某种马的消亡。这些厚皮兽早先似乎遍布全世界，就像今天的鹿和羚羊那样。如果布封知道这些巨大的犰狳、美洲驼、大型啮齿动物，以及灭绝的厚皮兽类动物，他的结论或许会更为准确，即美洲丧失了它的创造力，而不是美洲从未拥有过创造力。

对于这片大陆的更迭变化，我们不可能不感受到深深的惊讶。以前，这里和非洲南部一样，巨大的兽类来来往往，如今我们却只能看到獾、原驼、犰狳和水豚；这些动物同它们之前的物种相比，都只是一些小矮种。其中大多数已灭绝的四足动物，即使不是全部，大多也都生活在一个非常近的时期，与现存的软体动物是同时代的物种。自它们绝迹以来，这片土地的自然环境并没有发生什么大的变化。那又是何种因素让这么多的生灵灭绝了呢？在南美洲潘帕斯大草原上，这些遗骸集中的大坟场，并没有经受涂炭的痕迹，反而平缓安宁，少有可见的变化。在布兰卡港，我努力设想，早先的贫齿类动物和今天的亲缘种一样，生活在干旱的不毛之地，就像如今在周边环境。曾经，基于巴塔哥尼亚地区发现了大量美洲驼化石，我猜想这种和骆驼相似的动物曾经生活在巴塔哥尼亚地区。但由于该地区并没有发生过明显的气候变化，我曾对这一猜想感到疑惑。如今通过对美洲驼习性的揣摩，这种猜想奇异地得到了证实。不过，我们又该如何解释化石中出现的那种马的消亡呢？那些如今遍布了千万只西班牙殖民者所引进牲畜的平原曾经也经历过草场退化吗？在有些地区，我们可以认为，后来引进的一些物种吃光了以前动物的食物，这或许导致了它们的灭绝。但我们很难相信犰狳吃尽了巨大的大地獭的食物，水豚吃光了箭齿兽的食物，或者说原驼吃掉了那种很像骆驼的动物的食物。虽然从灭绝种群到现存动物发生的变化是微小的，但是鉴于我们对影响现存物种生存及健康（比如传染病之类的）的生理环境理解都相当有限，任何关于已灭绝物种的生存和灭亡原因的讨论都具有更大的不确定性。

人们倾向于相信物种的更替可以简单地归结为气候和食物的变化，天敌的引进以及其他物种数量的增长。但我们或许可以继续追问，这些变化是否在同一世内，席卷了整个北半球，以至于毁灭了西班牙海岸、西伯利亚平原以及北美洲的大象[真猛犸象（Elephas primigenus）]，同样地，还有分布范围几乎不亚于前者的野牛[原始牛（Bos urus）]？这样的变化能终结分布在欧洲和南美洲科迪勒拉山脉东坡的狭齿乳齿象（Mastodon angustidens）和化石中那种马的生命吗？如果答案是肯定的话，那这些变化就如同地球普遍降温一样具有全球性的影响，并且可以归结为地理环境的变化或者地球核心温度的降低。不过对于这些假设，我们还必须解决一个难题，即如何解释这些假想中的变化虽然不足以影响到在欧洲和南美洲的软体动物，却还是毁灭了多种分布于如今描述为寒冷、温和、热带气候地区的四足动物！这些灭绝的情形迫使我想起关于某些果树（我并不想做任何切近的类比），有人称，尽管这些果树嫁接在幼嫩的茎上，种植在不同的环境里，施以肥沃的养料，但还是在同一个时期全都枯萎凋零了。尽管是在不同时期萌发的，在这些例子里，成千上万的芽（或者说个体胚芽）都拥有一个相同的生命周期。对于大多数动物来说，每一种动物的个体看起来似乎是独立的，然而该种内的所有动物又遵循共同的法则，一如那些数量可观的单个的芽和树，或是植形动物（Zoophyte）中的珊瑚水螅。

在此还有另外一个观察需要补充。我们发现整个生物链都是以特殊的结构联结在一起的，隶属于一定的区域；但我们却很难认定这些架构只适用于某种特定的气候或者土地；否则，不同类型的动物被人类引进后，就不会繁衍得如此顺畅，甚至引起本土物种的灭绝。基于这些原因，我们认为，物种的灭绝，正如它们的诞生，并不完全取决于它们所处的地理环境（由物理条件变化而引起）。眼前我们能确定无疑的是，对于已经灭绝的生命个体及种群，它们的生命周期已经结束。

4月13日

小猎犬号停泊在圣克鲁斯河河口之内。这条河位于圣胡利安港以南约60英里处。在最近一次航行中，斯托克斯船长逆流而上30英里，但很快由于缺乏补给，被迫返航了。除了那趟航行时所发现的，我们对这条大河所知甚少。菲茨罗伊船长决心只要时间允许，就尽可能沿着河道而行。18日这天，三艘小艇起航，携带了三周的食品补给。船队有25人——这是一支足以抵挡一大群印第安人的力量。凭着强烈的涨潮，又加上天气晴好，我们的航行非常顺利，很快就喝到了新鲜的

淡水，并且在晚间摆脱了潮汐的影响。

河流在此处呈一片宽阔的景象，非常优美，即使到了我们最后抵达的最上游，河流的宽度也几乎没有缩小。它大约有300到400码宽，中间深及17英尺。流速很快，从头到尾保持了每小时4到6节（海里/小时）的速度，这或许是它最显著的特点了。河水湛蓝，但略带一丝混浊，并不像第一眼看上去那么澄澈透亮。河床上布满了鹅卵石，与海滩和周边平原上那些鹅卵石非常接近。尽管河道弯曲，它流经的一座山谷却笔直地往西延伸。这座山谷宽窄不一，从5到10英里不等；两旁是阶梯形的台地，在大部分地方以500英尺一层的高度往上递增，而对面的谷壁与之惊人地对称。

4月19日

激流湍湍，显然完全没可能划桨或者扬帆前行。因此三艘小艇被头尾相连地紧紧系在了一起，每艘船上留下两个人，其余的人则到岸上拉纤。菲茨罗伊船长的总体安排十分妥帖，人人都工作得更顺手，也人人都搭得上手，因此我要讲述一下其中门道。这支队伍的所有人被分成轮替的两班，每班人轮换着拉纤一个半小时。每艘船的长官都和船员生活在一起，吃同一种食物，也睡在同一顶帐篷里，因此船与船之间各自独立。日落之后，遇到的第一处长有灌木的平地，会被选为我们的过夜地。每一队的每个船员轮番做饭。船一拖上岸，伙夫就生起火来；另外两个人则搭建帐篷；舵手从船上递物品；其余的人则把这些东西运到帐篷里，收集柴火。就这般井然有序，不到一个半小时，便万事俱备，只等着过夜了。始终有两个船员和一位长官一起值夜，他们负责看管船只、维护篝火，以及防备印第安人。队伍中的每个人每晚轮值一小时。

这一天，我们只前行了一段很短的距离，因为航路上有许多荆棘丛生的小岛，其间的水道极浅。

4月20日

我们越过了多岛的河段，开始工作。我们的日常跋涉虽然十分艰苦，但每天大致能抵达平均直线距离在10英里的地方，总的来说可能有15到20英里。远离昨天过夜之处，我们面对的便是全然未知的土地了，因为斯托克斯船长就是自此返航的。我们瞧见远处有浓烟升起，发现了一匹马的尸骨，因此我们知道印第安人就在附近。第二天（21日）早上发现了一群马奔腾而过的足迹，也观察到许多长矛在地面上拖曳的印痕。基本上可以判断，他们一定在夜间来侦察过我们。没过多久，我们来到一处地方，那里大人、孩子和马匹的足迹犹新，显然这一队人马刚刚渡河而去。

4月29日

站在一处高地上，我们兴奋地看见科迪勒拉山脉那积雪皑皑的峰顶于晦暗不明的云雾中若隐若现。在接下来的几天里，我们行程迟缓，因为河道曲折，还散落着各种古老的板岩和花岗岩的巨大碎块。在此处，河谷周围的台地高度可达1100英尺，而且地貌特征发生了明显的改变。浑圆的斑岩鹅卵石中混杂了许多巨大、棱角分明的玄武岩和上述两种岩石的碎块。我注意到的第一块漂砾距离最近的山有67英里；另一块，漂移的距离相对较近，有5码见方，从砾石地上耸起5英尺高。它的边缘棱角突出，体积庞然，起先我还误以为这是一块未经漂移的巨石，拿出指南针来观测它的节理 [12] 走向。此处的台地不似靠近海边的平原那般平整，然而也几乎没有迹象表明它们曾遭遇过剧烈的变动。我认为，在这种情况下，冰川运动是唯一合理的结论，即当这片土地还在水下时，冰川的移动使岩石呈现出此种形态。但针对这一话题，我还将进行更详细的讨论。

在过去的两天里，我们看到了马匹的足迹，还有几样属于印第安人的小物件——像是斗篷的残片以及一束鸵鸟羽毛——不过它们似乎被遗弃在地上很久了。印第安人最近刚渡河的地方与这里相距遥远，其间的这一片土地似乎人迹罕至。起初，鉴于这里原驼数量颇丰，我对此感到相当讶异；但是我随后又想到这一片的地面多石，没有打过马掌的马会在追猎中迅速败下阵来，因此这一处少见印第安人也就没那么令人惊讶了。尽管如此，我还是在这片中心的两处地方发现了一些小石堆，在我看来它们不像是偶然落在那里堆成的。它们被摆放成尖尖的一堆，凸立于最高的火山岩悬崖边缘，与德西雷港附近的石堆很像，但规模要小一点儿。

5月4日

菲茨罗伊船长决定不再让船往上游航行了。河道曲折蜿蜒，水流汹涌湍急；这片土地的景观也不足以吸引人前行。到处都是同样的物产，到处都是同样单调的景致。这时我们距离大西洋140英里，离最近的太平洋臂弯约有60英里。河谷在这一段上游处扩展成一个宽阔的盆地，北面 and 南面以玄武岩台地为界，前方则是一列白雪覆盖的科迪勒拉山脉。然而，我们相当遗憾地望着这些宏伟的大山，因为我们只能去想象它们的景致和物候，而不能如愿地站在山顶，俯瞰底下的平原。要尝试继续溯游而上，不仅是对时间的一种浪费，我们的补给也难以支撑。我们已连续数日只能吃半份口粮。尽管这点粮食对于大多数人的确足矣，但在我们一天的艰苦跋涉后，实在难以果腹。那些从未经此饥饿的人，才会说什么食宜七分饱、食轻宜消化的好处，快算

了吧。

5月5日

我们在日出之前就起航下行了。我们顺流而下，航速迅疾，大致保持了每小时10节的速率。在这一天里我们走了相当于上行时耗费五天半艰苦跋涉的航程。8日，在经历了21天的探险后，我们抵达了小猪犬号。除我以外，人人都有这样那样的不满意；但于我而言，这一趟航程让我饱览了巴塔哥尼亚第三纪地质构造中最有趣的一部分。

火地岛

1832年12月17日

在结束了巴塔哥尼亚的考察之后，我打算说一说初抵火地岛的情形。正午刚过，我们绕过圣地亚哥角，进入了著名的勒梅尔海峡。我们紧靠火地岛航行，然而埃斯塔多斯岛 [13] 那怪石嶙峋、凶险的轮廓却在云雾中隐约可见。下午时分，我们在顺遂湾抛锚停泊。在驶入海湾时，我们便见到了这个蛮荒之地的典型居民。一群火地岛人停歇于突出在海里的尖岬上，身子半掩在枝蔓横生的密林里；当我们经过时，他们突然跳了出来，挥舞着破破烂烂的斗篷，向我们大声地喊叫。这些土著人追着船跑，刚到傍晚就见他们亮起了火把，接着又听见了他们狂野的呼喊声。港湾里的水相当澄澈，被一片低矮平缓的泥板岩山半围着，山上浓荫覆盖，幽林一直延伸到水边。只凭一瞥我就知道，眼前的风景与往日所见的其他景致截然不同。晚上刮起了一阵大风，从山顶刮来的风暴横扫过我们。这时候要还是在海上就糟糕透了，因此我们称这个给了我们庇护的港湾为“顺遂湾”。

清晨，船长派出了一个小队与火地岛人沟通。当我们迎着他们的欢呼声向前时，四个土著人代表中的一个上前迎向我们，极为热烈地对着我们大吼大叫，想要引导我们从哪里登陆。我们上岸后，他们看起来十分警戒，然而还是一边喋喋不休，一边快速地比画着手势。毫无疑问，这是我见识过的最稀奇、最有趣的情景了。我无法相信野蛮人和文明人之间的差距竟有这么大，它比野生动物和家养动物之间的差距要大得多，因为人的进化力要更强一些。领头说话的是一位老人，看起来像是一族之长；另外三位则是身强力壮的年轻人，约有6英尺高。妇人和孩子已经被送走了。这些火地岛人与更西边那些矮小、不幸的可怜人是完全不同的人种。他们在外貌上要出色得多，看起来更接近于麦哲伦海峡的巴塔哥尼亚人。他们唯一的衣服是一件原驼皮制成的披风，毛面朝外；他们就把披风挂在肩膀上，身子半遮挡半袒露着。他们的皮肤是乌沉沉的赤铜色。

老人头上缠着一圈白色羽毛的头带，略微拢住了他毛糙、纠结的黑发。他的脸上画着两道粗粗的横纹；一道鲜红色，从一只耳朵延伸到另一只耳朵，还覆盖了上嘴唇；另一道，像是白垩画的，在第一道的上方平行地展开，因此连眼睑也染成了白色。另外三个人中有两个的脸上装饰着木炭画的黑色粉状条纹。这几个人待在一起活像舞台上演出的魔鬼，诸如《魔弹射手》之类的。

他们的姿态卑微，脸上则带着狐疑、惊讶和恐惧的表情。我们赠送给他们几块红色的布匹，他们立刻就围在了脖子上，这才变得友好起来。这情谊是通过老人拍打我们的胸部来表达的，同时，他们还发出咯咯响的声音，就像人们在喂食小鸡。我和老人一道走路，这证明友谊的仪式重复了数次；最后以在我前胸后背同时重重地击打三下而告终。然后他向我袒露胸部，让我礼尚往来，待我做过这一套之后，他显得十分称心满意。这些人的语言，在我们听来根本不算是吐字。库克船长曾把它比作是一个人清嗓子发出的声音，然而毫无疑问，没有一个欧洲人会在清嗓子时发出这么多粗糙、刺耳、咯咯作响的声音。

他们是极为出色的模仿者：每当我们咳嗽，或者打哈欠，或者做出什么古怪动作，他们立刻就照样学起来。我们这边的人开始挤眉弄眼；然而一个年轻的火地岛人（整张脸都涂黑了，只在眼睛这里横抹了一道白色的带状纹）成功地做出了一个更骇人的鬼脸。他们能分毫不差地重复我们对他们说的一字一句，还能把这些单词记上好一阵子。可是我们欧洲人都知道，要分辨一门外语中不同的发音有多难。比如说，我们中有哪一位，能跟读一句美洲印第安人超过三个单词的句子呢？未开化的人似乎都拥有这种非凡的模仿能力。有人曾经跟我说过差不多同样的话，南非的卡非人有一模一样搞笑的模仿习惯；同样的，澳大利亚原住民很久以来都以擅于仿照、描绘别人的步态而闻名，并且以此来辨别外来者。这等天赋又该如何解释？这是否是由于与那些长期处于文明状态的人相比，所有那些未开化的人都有着更加熟练的洞察方式和更加灵敏的感官？

当我们这伙人唱起歌时，火地岛人惊讶得仿佛要跌坐在地。他们以同样惊诧的表情看着我们跳舞，不过有一个小伙子，在我们邀请他时，毫不抵触地跳了一小段华尔兹。虽然他们表面看起来并不适应欧洲文化，但他们还是知道并且害怕我们的火器；没有东西能诱惑他们用手去摸一把枪。他们十分渴求刀子，用西班牙语“库奇亚”来称呼这些刀子。他们还用动作来比画他们想要的东西，看起来就像嘴里叼着一块鲸脂，然后假装用刀去切，而不是用手撕扯。

观察这些人对待杰米·巴顿（一个火地岛人，在前一趟探险中被带到了英格兰）的举止十分有意思。他们立即意识到了杰米和我们的不同，并就此相互之间热烈地讨论起来。老人对杰米发表了长篇大论，似乎想要邀请他与他们生活在一起。可是杰米只听得懂一丁点儿他们的语言，此外，也根本看不上他的同胞们。当约克·明斯特（另一个到过英格兰的火地岛人）来到岸上时，他们同样注意到了他，并告诉他应该刮胡子了；尽管他脸上并没有多少胡楂，而我们则全都胡子拉碴。他们仔细察看他的肤色，还拿他和我们的做比较。我们中有一位的手臂露了出来，他们对白皙的肤色惊讶不已，十分艳羡。我们

认为他们误把两三位身材更矮小、长相更俊俏的长官错认为我们这伙人里的女士了，尽管他们也留着大胡子。火地岛人当中最高的一位对于有人注意到他的身高显然颇为自得。当他与船上个子最高的那位背对背站着的时候，还极力站在高一点儿的地方，拼命踮着脚。他张开嘴显露他的牙齿，偏过头展示他的侧颜；他乐意之至地做着这些事，我敢说，他一定以为自己是火地岛最俊俏的男子。等我们最初的大惊小怪过去之后，这些原住民每时每刻表现出来的混杂着惊讶和模仿的反应则成为最为搞笑、最为有意思的事。

第二天，我试图深入探索这一地区。火地岛或许称得上是多山地区，它的一部分沉在了海里，因此原本是山谷的地方，就变成了水深不见底的小洲和海湾。除了西海岸寸草不生的山坡，其余山坡从与水面相接的地方开始便被茫茫林海所覆盖。树木生长到1000至1500英尺的高度；随后是一条泥煤带，分布着矮小的高山植物；再往上则是终年不化的积雪了，按照金船长的记录，麦哲伦海峡的雪线高度为3000到4000英尺。想要在这片土地上找到哪怕是1英亩 [14] 平整的地都稀罕至极。我只记得在饥荒港附近有一小块平地，另一块面积大得多的则位于戈里路德附近。这两块平地以及其他平地上，地面全都覆盖着一层厚厚的沼泽泥煤。即使在森林里，地面也密覆着大量缓慢腐化的植被，浸透了水，脚一踏上去就会往下陷。

在密林中我几乎寸步难行，于是便改道，沿着一条山中径流探寻。起初，飞瀑横流，枯木倒地，简直举步维艰；不过水流冲刷两岸，溪床很快就变得宽一些了。我继续沿着崎岖、多石的岸边缓慢走了一个小时，壮丽的景色令我不虚此行。昏朦幽暗、深不见底的峡谷完美地呼应了无处不在的剧烈变动的痕迹。峡谷两侧尽是一些嶙峋的巨石和折断的树；而其余的树，虽然还直立着，但也已经从中间腐烂，随时可能倒下来。这种生机盎然的树和倒伏的枯树纠葛缠绕在一起的状态让我想起了热带雨林——然而还是有所不同，因为在这一片死寂的荒野之中，看起来是死亡主宰了一切，而非生机。我顺着水流的方向走，来到了一处地方，大滑坡给这里的山坡清出了一片直着向下的空地。沿着这条路，我攀登到相当高的地方，得以视角颇佳地一览周遭树林。这些树全都属于一个种类——桦状假水青冈木（Fagus betuloides），而其他种类的山毛榉和林仙树的数量简直可以忽略不计了。这种树的叶子终年不落，然而叶片的颜色呈一种颇为奇异的棕绿色，略微泛出一点儿黄色。由于这里的整个景观都是这个色调，便显得阴郁、沉闷，即使在阳光的映照下，也未见几多活力。

麦哲伦海峡

12月21日

小猎犬号再次起航。在接下来的几天里，受益于一阵难得的轻柔东风，航行异常顺利，我们离巴讷费尔茨越来越近了，船驶过欺骗角怪石嶙峋的海岬，又在3点钟绕过了风雨剥蚀的合恩角。当天夜里风平浪静，月色朗朗，宜于眺望远处，看山是如何在视线中越来越高。

火地岛人两度来袭，我们不胜其扰。由于岸上有不少器械、衣物，也不乏人手，我们觉得很有必要把他们吓走。头一回，在他们还离得相当远的时候，我们开了几炮。最滑稽可笑的是，我们从单筒望远镜里瞧见，每当炮弹落到水里，这些印第安人就捡起石块，勇敢地进行反击，朝我们的船投掷石头，尽管我们相隔约1.5英里！接着我们派出了一条小船，命令是用火枪横扫一气，但要避免射中。火地岛人藏身在树后面；对于我们的每一次射击，他们都会射箭回击，然而，所有的箭都不能到达船所在的范围之内，船上的长官指着他们哈哈大笑。这使得火地岛人怒火中烧，他们枉然地挥动着斗篷，恼怒不已。最后，他们看到枪弹击倒了树木，才落荒而逃；而我们也获得了和平与安宁。

上一回，当小猎犬号2月份泊在此地的时候，我在一个早晨4点钟出发去攀登塔恩山，这座山有2600英尺高，是邻近地区的最高点。我们划了一条小船到山脚下（不过并非最佳登山地点），然后开始了我们的登山之旅。森林从高水位线处开始生长，而在最初的两个钟头里，我几乎完全丧失了爬到山顶的希望。森林过于茂密，我们必须不断地求助于指南针；尽管是在山区，然而每一处地标都彻底地给遮蔽了。在一座座幽深的峡谷里，死亡一般的荒凉景象无法用言语来形容。峡谷外狂风大作，但在这些沟壑里，甚至没有一丝风来撩动最高的树木上的树叶。处处都阴暗、寒冷、潮湿，就算是真菌、苔藓和蕨类植物都不能生长。在这些山谷里几乎寸步难行，它们完全被巨大的、朽败的树干给横七竖八地堵住了。每当人们经过这些天然形成的木桥时，膝盖时常会陷入腐烂的木头里，行进的道路也会因此中断。而别的时候，当你想要倚上一棵牢靠的树时，却错愕地发现这树只是一堆摇摇欲坠的腐物，轻轻一碰便会散落。终于，我们置身于一片矮小的树丛中，接着很快就抵达了裸露的山脊处，顺着它，我们爬向了山顶。眼前是一派典型的火地岛风貌——不规则的山脉连绵起伏，间杂着斑驳的积雪，底下是黄绿色的幽深山谷，还有一道道海湾杂乱无

章地切断了陆地。风相当大，冷得刺骨，雾气弥漫不散，因此我们并没有在山顶上停留很久。下山的行程不像上山那般艰难，体重使我们不自觉地向下滑去，而所有的下滑和跌落都是向着下山的正确方向。

地质学中出现的最棘手的问题，起码是近几年来最棘手的问题，是如何解释西伯利亚动物标本的完好保存。一方面已确凿无疑的是，这些动物尸体并非被水流从远处携带而来，另一方面也被认为几乎无疑的是，这些动物生活的时代，气候与现在大相径庭，周围地区不可能出现冰雪，如同恒河绝无可能结冰一般。莱尔先生曾在《地质学原理》中就这一问题进行了大量的阐述：他指出现在那些向北流去的河流可能将动物尸体携带到了同一方向；他表示（引自洪堡）那些栖息于最炎热地区的动物有时候会漫游到相当远的地方；他同时提出，当动物分属不同种时，不可妄断同一属的动物就拥有同样的生活习性。而他的贡献最大的地方则体现在他清晰地指出了这一地的气候可能经历了由海岛性向极端气候的转变，这种转变是陆地抬升的结果，而最近新发掘的证据也证明了这种地质变化的存在。

在本书稍前一些的章节里，我曾竭力证明，就食物的数量而言，毫无疑问可以推断这些大型的四足动物可以生活在不毛之地，这些地区只稀稀落落地出产些植物。而大象和犀牛身上覆盖的皮毛，则证明了它们至少能够在寒冷的气候中生存（尽管这一点颇有争议，生活在最炎热地区的有些动物也身披厚厚的皮毛）。我认为难有证据可以证明，在之前的纪年里，当厚皮动物广泛地分布于世界大部分地区时，其中有些种类会不适应北部区域，这就像现在鹿和其他几种动物的分布一样离奇。如果我们认为在上述陆地抬升运动发生之前，西伯利亚的气候和如今南半球的气候相似（这一假设与其他的证据并不矛盾），那么当我们把如今北半球的现象放入相似的南半球的环境中思考时，我们可以得出以下结论：首先，早先的气候并不十分寒冷；其次，积雪并没有在一段很长的时期里不间断地覆盖地面（在南美55度到56度的极端地区情况并非如此）；再次，植物，与今天同纬度地区的植物相比，体现了更强烈的热带特征；最后，在具备如此条件的区域再向北一小段距离（甚至还未到帕拉斯发现完整犀牛尸体的地点），就可能出现永久冻土；因此，任何一种动物的尸体一旦埋在地表下几英尺之处，它都将被保存数个世纪之久。

洪堡和莱尔都曾提及，如今，永久冻土带延伸至北纬62度，任何动物漂流进冻土带内，万一凑巧被埋在地表数英尺底下，便会无限期地得以保存。同样的情形发生在被河流冲刷而来的尸体上；而那些灭绝的哺乳动物或许正是这样葬身的。对我来说，这一理论只差一步就能完成，并且能够以一种比几个早先提出的理论更简洁的方式来解释

这一现象。根据莱尔先生的描述，西伯利亚平原上堆积着来自世世代代动物的数不清的骨化石，毫无疑问这地层是从浅海或是河口堆积起来的。而正如比齐在埃舍尔茨湾的游记里曾描述的，这一过程也适用于美洲的西北海岸：那里的地质构造看起来与沿海常见的新近抬升的自然沉积相同，而我曾在同一片大陆的南部海岸见到过这种沉积。还有一点确定的是，西伯利亚遗骸只在河流截断平原之处暴露。这一事实，再加上全新世抬升的证据，说明这一过程似乎与发生在南美洲潘帕斯大草原的情形极其类似：也就是说，那些尸体是在早先漂流进入的大海，而遗骸是随后被逐步积累的沉积层包裹起来的。从那以后这些地层抬高；随着河流冲刷出它们的河道，掩埋的骨骼也就逐渐暴露。

那么这里，难点来了：尸体在海底是如何被保存的呢？值得引起充分注意的是，被保全的动物尸体并不常见，也并不会因为它们所处极北之地就变得容易保存。居维叶提到比林航海记中曾记载了在勒拿河以及茵迪吉尔卡河河口之间的岛屿上发现了大量的大象、野牛和犀牛的骨头，其数量是别处无可比拟的。甚至有这样的说法——除了一些由岩石组成的小山丘，整个地区都是由沙子、冰块和骨头构成的。这些岛屿位于亚当斯发现骨肉完好的猛犸象之处的北面，在维柳依河更向北10度的地方，而在维柳依河中也发现了保存完好的犀牛。对于发现的骨头，我们推测尸体漂浮到更深的大海，在那里它们停留在海底，肉身腐烂分解。但是针对第二种更为特殊的情形，腐败似乎被中止了，尸体很有可能迅速地被随之积累起来的沉积物覆盖住。或许有人会提出疑问，在那些底部终年冰冻的浅海，数英尺深的泥土温度是否高于华氏32度（零摄氏度）？但我们需要记住的是，要使盐水结冰，需要比零摄氏度更低的温度；而在海水深处的淤泥，温度一定相当之低，与那些夏天短暂但炎热地区的冰冻带底下的土层一模一样。如果这些条件得以满足，那么埋藏这些灭绝的四足动物就容易理解了，并且理解它们先前生存环境的主要难题也被解决了。

茎是圆的，黏糊、滑溜，直径很少能达到1英寸。数根海带合在一起，就强壮到足以支撑起几块分散的大石头了，在切入内陆的海峡里，它们正是依附在这样的石块上生长的。而这些石块有的非常沉重，它们被拉到水面后，几乎不可能凭一人之力把它们搬到船上去。

库克船长在他第二次探险中说过，在凯尔盖朗地区，“一部分这种海藻长度达到了不可思议的地步，尽管它的茎还没有人的拇指那么粗。我曾提到过，在它们生长的有些浅滩里，我们用一根24英寻 [15] 长的线都没有探到底。因此，水下的深度，一定超过了这个数字。由于这种海藻并不是垂直生长的，而是和海底形成了一个很小的锐角，并且它的主体随后在海面上大幅度地伸展开去，我可以很有把握地说其中有些的长度达到了60英寻以上。”虽然在福克兰群岛（马尔维纳斯群岛）以及火地岛周围，宽广无边的海藻常常从10到15英寻深的水里突然冒出，但我不认为任何植物的茎能像库克船长所记录的那样，长达360英尺。它分布的地理范围相当广大；从合恩角附近最南端的小群岛，到东海岸的最北边（据斯托克斯先生提供给我的信息）南纬43度都有所发现——而在西边，南纬42度的智鲁岛，它的数量也颇为可观，但还不到繁茂的程度。它可能还略微往北延伸了一点儿，但很快被别的物种所取代。因此我们认为它分布的范围南北延伸15度；而据对这一物种相当熟悉的库克记载，他在凯尔盖朗地区也发现了这种生物，因此它分布的经度范围横跨了至少140度。

而海藻也成为其他数量令人惊讶的物种赖以生存的植物。光是描述栖居在这种海藻群落里的动物，大约就能写成鸿篇大论。除了漂浮在海面上的以外，几乎每一片叶子上都厚厚地结了一层珊瑚虫的硬壳，叶子几乎变成了白色。我们发现了这些栖息着珊瑚虫的叶子构成异常精巧复杂，有一些栖息着简单的水螅一样的珊瑚虫，另外一些则寄居着器官更复杂的种类，以及漂亮的群居海鞘。在叶片平滑的表面上还黏附着各种各样的笠状螺、马蹄螺、无壳软体动物，以及一些蚌类。无数计的甲壳类动物时常出没于植株的各个部位。要是把庞大、纠缠在一起的根部摇晃一番，就会有一堆小鱼、贝类、墨鱼、各种螃蟹、海胆、海星、美丽的海参（有一些呈现为裸鳃亚目软体动物的外形）、三角涡虫，以及形状殊异的蠕动的沙蚕，纷纷披落。我再三碰到这种海藻，每一根枝叶上都会发现新的、奇特的动物组合。我曾提到过在智鲁岛，这种海藻并不十分繁茂，因此并不能见到数量庞大的贝类、珊瑚虫类，以及甲壳类动物，但仍然有一些板枝介类动物和数种群居的海鞘类动物，而后者，与火地岛的海鞘动物种类并不相同。在这里，我们发现石衣藻比起寄居在它那里的动物，分布的范围要广泛得多。

我只能把南半球这些繁茂的水中森林与热带地区的陆地森林做比较。如果后者在任何地方遭到毁灭，我相信，其动物的种类消失的数

量之巨，不会比在同样情况下，海藻灭绝引起的动物消亡更多。在这种植物的叶片之间生活着无数种鱼类，它们在别的地方找不到食物和庇护所。由于它们的灭亡，大量的鸬鹚、潜鸟，以及其他以鱼为食的鸟类、海獭、海豹和鼠海豚也会随即覆灭，那么最终，火地岛的野蛮人——这片悲惨土地的悲惨主人，同类相残的情形就会变本加厉，其人口会减少，或许也将绝种了。

6月8日

我们一大早就起了锚，离开了饥荒港。菲茨罗伊船长决定离开麦哲伦海峡，沿着前不久才发现的玛格达伦海峡而行。我们的航线设定为正南方，顺着我此前提到过的晦暗通道而下，仿佛要驶向另一个更糟糕的世界。一路顺风，但空气并不清明，因此我们错过了不少奇异的景观。群山间乌云滚滚，从山顶到山脚皆云倾雾缭。从团团浓云间瞥见的景致令人兴味盎然：参差起伏的山尖、形如圆锥的积雪、一碧如洗的冰川、苍白天空下分明的天际线，远近高低，各有不同。就在这一派风光中，我们在图恩角抛了锚，靠近当时正隐在云雾中的萨缅托峰。就在高耸、几近直立的山脚下，我们的小港湾这里，有一座废弃的棚屋，它形单影只，提醒我们曾经有人漫游到这一带荒无人烟的地区，而在这，他又是如何无可比拟地渺小、卑微。大自然所创造的没有生命的作品——石、冰、雪、风和水——彼此间相互争斗，但又联合起来与人为敌——在这里，它们拥有了绝对的权威。

6月9日

清晨，我们十分喜悦地看到一层薄雾从萨缅托峰冉冉升起，而山峰在我们眼前逐渐显露。这座山是火地岛最高的山峰之一，海拔6800英尺。山脚下，大约整个山体高度的1/8覆盖着幽暗的树林，再往上则是一片积雪，一直延伸到山顶。这铺天盖地的冰雪从不融化，仿佛命定要 and 这世界一起地久天长，呈现出一派崇高甚至超然卓异的光景。这座山峰的轮廓格外清晰、分明。由于雪白、闪耀的山表反射了十分充足的光线，山体上没有一处被阴影笼罩；而那些切断天际的雪线也明晰可辨：因此山体如同鲜明的浮雕般凸现出来。有好几条冰川蜿蜒而下，从积雪区绵延到海岸边：或许可以把它们比作冰封的尼亚加拉大瀑布；而这些凝结的蓝色瀑布也完全可以和湍湍而流的飞瀑媲美。夜晚，我们抵达海峡的西部；然而这里的水太深了，我们找不到可抛锚之处。因此我们不得不离岸前行，在大海的这条狭长的臂弯里，熬过长达14个小时的伸手不见五指的暗黑夜晚。

6月10日

黎明，我们竭力驶入了开阔的太平洋。这里的西海岸通常由低

矮、和缓、颇为贫瘠的花岗岩和绿岩小山丘构成。约翰·纳伯勒爵士把一处地方称为“南部废墟”，因为这“看起来是多么萧疏的一方土地”，恐怕他所言确实。数不清的礁石散布在主岛之外，壮阔的大海掀起长长的骇浪，永无停歇地冲击着它们。我们从东、西弗里斯岛之间驶出，从那里略微往北，碎浪飞珠溅玉，这一带的大海因此被称为“银河”。陆地上的人只消看一眼这里的海岸，就会在一整个礼拜里都陷入关于沉船、海难和死亡的噩梦；伴随着眼前的景象，我们就此与火地岛永远作别。

Patagonia

December 6th, 1833 – The Beagle sailed from the Rio Plata, never again to enter its muddy stream. Our course was directed to Port Desire, on the coast of Patagonia. Before proceeding any further, I will here put together a few observations made at sea.

Several times when the ship has been some miles off the mouth of the Plata, and at other times when off the shores of Northern Patagonia, we have been surrounded by insects. One evening, when we were about ten miles from the Bay of San Blas, vast numbers of butterflies, in bands or flocks of countless myriads, extended as far as the eye could range. Even by the aid of a glass it was not possible to see a space free from butterflies. The seamen cried out ‘it was snowing butterflies’, and such in fact was the appearance. More species than one were present, but the main part belonged to a kind very similar to, but not identical with, the common English Colias edusa. Some moths and hymenoptera accompanied the butterflies; and a fine Calosoma flew on board. Other instances are known of this beetle having been caught far out at sea; and this is the more remarkable, as the greater number of the Carabidæ seldom or never take wing. The day had been fine and calm, and the one previous to it equally so, with light and variable airs. Hence we cannot suppose that the insects were blown off the land, but we must conclude that they voluntarily took flight. The great bands of the Colias seem at first to afford an instance like those on record of the migrations of Vanessa cardui; but the presence of other insects makes the case distinct, and not so easily intelligible. Before sunset, a strong breeze sprung up from the north, and this must have been the cause of tens of thousands of the butterflies and other insects having perished.

On another occasion, when 17 miles off Cape Corrientes, I had a net overboard to catch pelagic animals. Upon drawing it up, to my surprise I found a considerable number of beetles in it, and although in the open sea, they did not appear much injured by the salt water. I lost some of the specimens, but those which I preserved, belonged to the genera, colymbetes, hydroporus, hydrobius (two species), notaphus, cynucus, adimonia, and scarabæus. At first, I thought that these insects had been blown from the shore; but upon reflecting that out of the eight species, four were aquatic, and two others partly so in their habits, it appeared to me most probable that they were floated into the sea, by a small stream which drains a lake near Cape Corrientes. On any supposition, it is an interesting circumstance to find insects, quite alive, swimming in the open ocean, 17 miles from the nearest point of land. There are several accounts of insects having been blown off the Patagonian shore. Captain Cook observed it, as did more lately Captain King in the Adventure. The cause probably is due to the want of shelter, both of trees and hills, so that an insect on the wing with an off- shore breeze, would be very apt to be blown out to sea. The most remarkable instance I ever knew of an insect being caught far from the land, was that of a large grasshopper (Acrydium), which flew on board, when the Beagle was to windward of the Cape de Verd Islands, and when the nearest point of land, not directly opposed to the trade- wind, was Cape Blanco on the coast of Africa, 370 miles distant.

On several occasions, when the vessel has been within the mouth of the Plata, the rigging has been coated with the web of the Gossamer Spider. One day (November 1st, 1832) I paid particular attention to the phenomenon. The weather had been fine and clear, and in the morning the air was full of patches of the flocculent web, as on an autumnal day in England. The ship was sixty miles distant from the land, in the direction of a steady though light breeze. Vast numbers of a small spider, about one- tenth of an inch in length, and of a dusky red colour were attached to the webs. There must have been, I should suppose, some thousands on the ship. The little spider when first coming in contact with the rigging, was always seated on a single thread, and not on the flocculent mass. This latter seems merely to be produced by the entanglement of the single threads. The spiders were all of one species, but of both sexes, together with young ones. These latter were distinguished by their smaller size, and more dusky colour. I will not give the description of this spider, but merely state that it does not appear to me to be included in any of Latreille's genera. The little aeronaut as soon as it arrived on board, was very active, running about; sometimes letting itself fall, and then reascending the same thread; sometimes employing itself in making a small and very irregular mesh in the corners between the ropes. It could run with facility on the surface of water. When disturbed it lifted up its front legs, in the attitude of attention. On its first arrival it appeared very thirsty, and with exerted maxillæ drank eagerly of the fluid; this same circumstance has been observed by Strack: may it not be in consequence of the little insect having passed through a dry and rarefied atmosphere? Its stock of web seemed inexhaustible. While watching some that were suspended by a single thread, I several times observed that the slightest breath of air bore them away out of sight, in a horizontal line. On another occasion (25th) under similar circumstances, I repeatedly observed the same kind of small spider, either when placed, or having crawled, on some little eminence, elevate its abdomen, send forth a thread, and then sail away in a lateral course, but with a rapidity which was quite unaccountable. I thought I could perceive that the spider before performing the above preparatory steps, connected its legs together with the most delicate threads, but I am not sure, whether this observation is correct.

One day, at St Fe, I had a better opportunity of observing some similar facts. A spider which was about three- tenths of an inch in length, and which in its general appearance resembled a Citigrade (therefore quite different from the gossamer), while standing on the summit of a post, darted forth four or five threads from its spinners. These glittering in the sunshine, might be compared to rays of light; they were not, however, straight, but in undulations like a film of silk blown by the wind. They were more than a yard in length, and diverged in an ascending direction from the orifices. The spider then suddenly let go its hold, and was quickly borne out of sight. The day was hot and apparently quite calm; yet under such circumstances the atmosphere can never be so tranquil, as not to affect a vane so delicate as the thread of a spider's web. If during a warm day we look either at the shadow of any object cast on a bank, or over a level plain at a distant landmark, the effect of an ascending current of heated air will almost always be evident. And this probably would be sufficient to carry with it so light an object as the little spider on its thread. The circumstance of spiders of the same species but of different sexes and ages, being found on several occasions at the distance of many leagues from the land, attached in vast numbers to the lines, proves that they are the manufacturers of the mesh, and that the habit of sailing through the air, is probably as characteristic of some tribe, as that of diving is of the Argyroneta. We may then reject Latreille's supposition, that the gossamer owes its origin to the webs of the young of several genera, as Epeira or Thomisa: although, as we have seen that the young of other spiders do possess the power of performing aerial voyages.

During our different passages south of the Plata, I often towed astern a net made of bunting, and thus caught many curious animals. The structure of the Beroe (a kind of jelly fish) is most extraordinary, with its rows of vibratory ciliæ, and complicated though irregular system of circulation. Of Crustacea, there were many strange and undescribed genera. One, which in some respects is allied to the Notopods (or those crabs which have their posterior legs placed almost on their backs, for the purpose of adhering to the under side of ledges), is very remarkable from the structure of its hind pair of legs. The penultimate joint, instead of being terminated by a simple claw, ends in three bristle-like appendages of dissimilar lengths, the longest equalling that of the entire leg. These claws are very thin, and are serrated with teeth of an excessive fineness, which are directed towards the base. The curved extremities are flattened, and on this part five most minute cups are placed, which seem to act in the same manner as the suckers on the arms of the cuttle-fish. As the animal lives in the open sea, and probably wants a place of rest, I suppose this beautiful structure is adapted to take hold of the globular bodies of the Medusæ, and other floating marine animals.

In deep water, far from the land, the number of living creatures is extremely small: south of the latitude 35° , I never succeeded in catching any thing besides some beroe, and a few species of minute crustacea belonging to the Entomostraca. In shoaler water, at the distance of a few miles from the coast, very many kinds of crustacea and some other animals were numerous, but only during the night. Between latitudes 56° and 57° south of Cape Horn the net was put astern several times; it never, however, brought up any thing besides a few of two extremely minute species of Entomostraca. Yet whales and seals, petrels and albatross, are exceedingly abundant throughout this part of the ocean. It has always been a source of mystery to me, on what the latter, which live far from the shore, can subsist. I presume the albatross, like the condor, is able to fast long; and that one good feast on the carcass of a putrid whale lasts for a long siege of hunger. It does not lessen the difficulty to say, they feed on fish; for on what can the fish feed? It often occurred to me, when observing how the waters of the central and intertropical parts of the Atlantic, swarmed with Pteropoda, Crustacea, and Radiata, and with their devourers the flying- fish, and again with their devourers the bonitos and albigores, that the lowest of these pelagic animals perhaps possess the power of decomposing carbonic acid gas, like the members of the vegetable kingdom.

While sailing in these latitudes on one very dark night, the sea presented a wonderful and most beautiful spectacle. There was a fresh breeze, and every part of the surface, which during the day is seen as foam, now glowed with a pale light. The vessel drove before her bows two billows of liquid phosphorus, and in her wake she was followed by a milky train. As far as the eye reached, the crest of every wave was bright, and the sky above the horizon, from the reflected glare of these livid flames, was not so utterly obscure, as over the rest of the heavens.

As we proceed further southward, the sea is seldom phosphorescent; and off Cape Horn, I do not recollect more than once having seen it so, and then it was far from being brilliant. This circumstance probably has a close connexion with the scarcity of organic beings in that part of the ocean. After the elaborate paper by Ehrenberg, on the phosphorescence of the sea, it is almost superfluous on my part to make any observations on the subject. I may however add, that the same torn and irregular particles of gelatinous matter, described by Ehrenberg, seem in the southern as well as in the northern hemisphere, to be the common cause of this phenomenon. The particles were so minute as easily to pass through fine gauze; yet many were distinctly visible by the naked eye. The water when placed in a tumbler and agitated gave out sparks, but a small portion in a watch- glass, scarcely ever was luminous. Ehrenberg states, that these particles all retain a certain degree of irritability. My observations, some of which were made directly after taking up the water, would give a different result. I may also mention, that having used the net during one night I allowed it to become partially dry, and having occasion twelve hours afterwards, to employ it again, I found the whole surface sparkled as brightly as when first taken out of the water. It does not appear probable in this case, that the particles could have remained so long alive. I remark also in my notes, that having kept a Medusa of the genus Dianæa, till it was dead, the water in which it was placed became luminous. When the waves scintillate with bright green sparks, I believe it is generally owing to minute crustacea. But there can be no doubt that very many other pelagic animals, when alive, are phosphorescent.

On two occasions I have observed the sea luminous at considerable depths beneath the surface. Near the mouth of the Plata some circular and oval patches, from 2 to 4 yards in diameter, and with defined outlines, shone with a steady, but pale light; while the surrounding water only gave out a few sparks. The appearance resembled the reflection of the moon, or some luminous body; for the edges were sinuous from the undulation of the surface. The ship, which drew thirteen feet water, passed over, without disturbing, these patches. Therefore we must suppose that some animals were congregated together at a greater depth than the bottom of the vessel.

Near Fernando Noronha the sea gave out light in flashes. The appearance was very similar to that which might be expected from a large fish moving rapidly through a luminous fluid. To this cause the sailors attributed it; at the time, however, I entertained some doubts, on account of the frequency and rapidity of the flashes. With respect to any general observations, I have already stated that the display is very much more common in warm than in cold countries. I have sometimes imagined that a disturbed electrical condition of the atmosphere was most favourable to its production. Certainly I think the sea is most luminous after a few days of more calm weather than ordinary, during which time it has swarmed with various animals. Observing that the water charged with gelatinous particles is in an impure state, and that the luminous appearance in all common cases is produced by the agitation of the fluid in contact with the atmosphere, I have always been inclined to consider that the phosphorescence was the result of the decomposition of the organic particles, by which process (one is tempted almost to call it a kind of respiration) the ocean becomes purified.

December 23rd – We arrived at Port Desire, situated in lat. 47°, on the coast of Patagonia. The creek runs for about twenty miles inland, with an irregular width. The Beagle anchored a few miles within the entrance in front of the ruins of an old Spanish settlement.

The same evening I went on shore. The first landing in any new country is very interesting, and especially when, as in this case, the whole aspect bears the stamp of a marked and individual character. At the height of between 200 and 300 feet, above some masses of porphyry, a wide plain extends, which is truly characteristic of Patagonia. The surface is quite level, and is composed of well-rounded shingle mixed with a whitish earth. Here and there scattered tufts of brown wiry grass are supported, and still more rarely some low thorny bushes. The weather is dry and pleasant, for the fine blue sky is but seldom obscured. When standing in the middle of one of these desert plains, the view on one side is generally bounded by the escarpment of another plain, rather higher, but equally level and desolate; and on the other side it becomes indistinct from the trembling mirage which seems to rise from the heated surface.

The plains are traversed by many broad, flat-bottomed valleys, and in these the bushes grow rather more abundantly. The present drainage of the country is quite insufficient to excavate such large channels. In some of the valleys ancient stunted trees, growing in the very centre of the dry watercourse, seem as if placed to prove how long a time had elapsed, since any flood had passed that way. We have evidence, from shells lying on the surface, that the plains of gravel have been elevated within a recent epoch above the level of the sea; and we must look to that period for the excavation of the valleys by the slowly retiring waters. From the dryness of the climate, a man may walk for days together over these plains without finding a single drop of water. Even at the base of the porphyry hills, there are only a few small wells containing but little water, and that rather saline and half putrid.

In such a country the fate of the Spanish settlement was soon decided; the dryness of the climate during the greater part of the year, and the occasional hostile attacks of the wandering Indians, compelled the colonists to desert their half-finished buildings. The style, however, in which they were commenced, showed the strong and liberal hand of Spain in the old time. The end of all the attempts to colonize this side of America south of 41°, have been miserable. At Port Famine, the name expresses the lingering and extreme sufferings of several hundred wretched people, of whom one alone survived to relate their misfortunes. At St Joseph's bay, on the coast of Patagonia, a small settlement was made; but during one Sunday the Indians made an attack and massacred the whole party, excepting two men, who were led captive many years among the wandering tribes. At the Rio Negro I conversed with one of these men, now in extreme old age.

The zoology of Patagonia is as limited as its Flora. On the arid plains a few black beetles (Heteromera) might be seen slowly crawling about, and occasionally a lizard darting from side to side. Of birds we have three carrion hawks, and in the valleys a few finches and insect feeders. The Ibis malanops (a species said to be found in central Africa) is not uncommon on the most desert parts. In the stomachs of these birds I found grasshoppers, cicadæ, small lizards, and even scorpions. At one time of the year they go in flocks, at another in pairs: their cry is very loud and singular, and resembles the neighing of the guanaco.

I will here give an account of this latter animal, which is very common, and is the characteristic quadruped of the plains of Patagonia. The Guanaco, which by some naturalists is considered as the same animal with the Llama, but in its wild state, is the South American representative of the camel of the East. In size it may be compared to an ass, mounted on taller legs, and with a very long neck. The guanaco abounds over the whole of the temperate parts of South America, from the wooded islands of Tierra del Fuego, through Patagonia, the hilly parts of La Plata, Chile, even to the Cordillera of Peru. Although preferring an elevated site, it yields in this respect to its near relative the Vicuna. On the plains of Southern Patagonia, we saw them in greater numbers than in any other part. Generally they go in small herds, from half a dozen to thirty together; but on the banks of the St Cruz we saw one herd which must have contained at least 500. On the northern shores of the Strait of Magellan they are also very numerous.

Generally the guanacoës are wild and extremely wary. Mr Stokes told me, that he one day saw through a glass a herd of these beasts, which evidently had been frightened, running away at full speed, although their distance was so great that they could not be distinguished by the naked eye. The sportsman frequently receives the first intimation of their presence, by hearing, from a long distance, the peculiar shrill neighing note of alarm. If he then looks attentively, he will perhaps see the herd standing in a line on the side of some distant hill. On approaching them, a few more squeals are given, and then off they set at an apparently slow, but really quick canter, along some narrow beaten track to a neighbouring hill. If, however, by chance he should abruptly meet a single animal, or several together, they will generally stand motionless, and intently gaze at him; then perhaps move on a few yards, turn round, and look again. What is the cause of this difference in their shyness? Do they mistake a man in the distance for their chief enemy the puma? Or does curiosity overcome their timidity? That they are curious is certain; for if a person lies on the ground, and plays strange antics, such as throwing up his feet in the air, they will almost always approach by degrees to reconnoitre him. It was an artifice that was repeatedly practised by our sportsmen with success, and it had moreover the advantage of allowing several shots to be fired, which were all taken as parts of the performance. On the mountains of Tierra del Fuego, and in other places, I have more than once seen a guanaco, on being approached, not only neigh and squeal, but prance and leap about in the most ridiculous manner, apparently in defiance as a challenge. These animals are very easily domesticated, and I have seen some thus kept near the houses, although at large on their native plains. They are in this state very bold, and readily attack a man, by striking him from behind with both knees. It is asserted, that the motive for these attacks is jealousy on account of their females. The wild guanacoës, however, have no idea of defence; even a single dog will secure one of these large animals, till the huntsman can come up. In many of their habits they are like sheep in a flock. Thus when they see men approaching in several directions on horseback, they soon became bewildered and know not which way to run. This greatly facilitates the Indian method of hunting, for they are thus easily driven to a central point, and are encompassed.

The guanacoës readily take to the water: several times at Port Valdes they were seen swimming from island to island. Byron, in his voyage, says he saw them drinking salt water. Some of our officers likewise saw a herd apparently drinking the briny fluid from a salina near Cape Blanco. I imagine in several parts of the country, if they do not drink salt water, they drink none at all. In the middle of the day, they frequently roll in the dust, in saucer-shaped hollows. The males fight together; two one day passed quite close to me, squealing and trying to bite each other; and several were shot with their hides deeply scored. Herds sometimes appear to set out on exploring- parties: at Bahia Blanca, where, within 30 miles of the coast, these animals are extremely unfrequent, I one day saw the tracks of thirty or forty, which had come in a direct line to a muddy salt- water creek. They then must have perceived that they were approaching the sea, for they had wheeled with the regularity of cavalry, and had returned back in as straight a line as they had advanced. The guanaco has one singular habit, which is to me quite inexplicable; namely, that on successive days they drop their dung in the same defined heap. I saw one of these heaps which was eight feet in diameter, and necessarily was composed of a large quantity. Frezier remarks on this habit as common to the guanaco as well as to the llama; he says it is very useful to the Indians, who use the dung for fuel, and are thus saved the trouble of collecting it.

The guanaco appears to have favourite spots for dying in. On the banks of the St Cruz, the ground was actually white with bones, in certain circumscribed spaces, which were generally bushy and all near the river. On one such spot I counted between ten and twenty heads. I particularly examined the bones; they did not appear, as some scattered ones which I had seen, gnawed or broken, as if dragged together by beasts of prey. The animals in most cases, must have crawled, before dying, beneath and amongst the bushes. Mr Bynoe informs me that during the last voyage, he observed the same circumstance on the banks of the Rio Gallegos. I do not at all understand the reason of this, but I may observe, that the wounded guanacos at the St Cruz, invariably walked towards the river. At St Jago in the Cape de Verd islands I remember having seen in a retired ravine a corner under a cliff, where numerous goats' bones were collected: we at the time exclaimed, that it was the burial-ground of all the goats in the island. I mention these trifling circumstances, because in certain cases they might explain the occurrence of a number of uninjured bones in a cave, or buried under alluvial accumulations; and likewise the cause, why certain mammalia are more commonly embedded than others in sedimentary deposits. Any great flood of the St Cruz, would wash down many bones of the guanaco, but probably not a single one of the puma, ostrich, or fox. I may also observe, that almost every kind of waterfowl when wounded takes to the shore to die; so that the remains of birds, from this cause alone and independently of other reasons, would but rarely be preserved in a fossil state.

january 9 th, 1834 – Before it was dark the Beagle anchored in the fine spacious harbour of Port St Julian, situated about 110 miles to the south of Port Desire. On the south side of the harbour, a cliff of about 90 feet in height intersects a plain constituted of the formations above described; and its surface is strewn over with recent marine shells. The gravel, however, differently from that in every other locality, is covered by a very irregular and thin bed of a reddish loam, containing a few small calcareous concretions. The matter somewhat resembles that of the Pampas, and probably owes its origin either to a small stream having formerly entered the sea at that spot, or to a mud- bank similar to those now existing at the head of the harbour. In one spot this earthy matter filled up a hollow, or gully, worn quite through the gravel, and in this mass a group of large bones was embedded. The animal to which they belonged, must have lived, as in the case at Bahia Blanca, at a period long subsequent to the existence of the shells now inhabiting the coast. We may feel sure of this, because the formation of the lower terrace or plain, must necessarily have been posterior to those above it, and on the surface of the two higher ones, sea- shells of recent species are scattered. From the small physical change, which the last 100 feet elevation of the continent could have produced, the climate, as well as the general condition of Patagonia, probably was nearly the same, at the time when the animal was embedded, as it now is. This conclusion is moreover supported by the identity of the shells belonging to the two ages. Then immediately occurred the difficulty, how could any large quadruped have subsisted on these wretched deserts in lat. 49° 15'? I had no idea at the time, to what kind of animal these remains belonged. The puzzle, however, was soon solved when Mr Owen examined them; for he considers that they formed part of an animal allied to the guanaco or llama, but fully as large as the true camel. As all the existing members of the family of Camelidæ are inhabitants of the most sterile countries, so may we suppose was this extinct kind. The structure of the cervical vertebræ, the transverse processes not being perforated for the vertebral artery, indicates its affinity: some other parts, however, of its structure, probably are anomalous.

The most important result of this discovery, is the confirmation of the law that existing animals have a close relation in form with extinct species. As the guanaco is the characteristic quadruped of Patagonia, and the vicuna of the snow-clad summits of the Cordillera, so in bygone days, this gigantic species of the same family must have been conspicuous on the southern plains. We see this same relation of type between the existing and fossil Ctenomys, between the capybara (but less plainly, as shown by Mr Owen) and the gigantic Toxodon; and lastly, between the living and extinct Edentata. At the present day, in South America, there exist probably nineteen species of this order, distributed into several genera; while throughout the rest of the world there are but five. If, then, there is a relation between the living and the dead, we should expect that the Edentata would be numerous in the fossil state. I need only reply by enumerating the megatherium, and the three or four other great species, discovered at Bahia Blanca; the remains of some of which are also abundant over the whole immense territory of La Plata. I have already pointed out the singular relation between the armadilloes and their great prototypes, even in a point apparently of so little importance as their external covering.

The order of rodents at the present day, is most conspicuous in South America, on account of the vast number and size of the species, and the multitude of individuals: according to the same law, we should expect to find their representatives in a fossil state. Mr Owen has shown how far the Toxodon is thus related; and it is moreover not improbable that another large animal has likewise a similar affinity.

The teeth of the rodent nearly equalling in size those of the Capybara, which were discovered near Bahia Blanca, must also be remembered.

The law of the succession of types, although subject to some remarkable exceptions, must possess the highest interest to every philosophical naturalist, and was first clearly observed in regard to Australia, where fossil remains of a large and extinct species of Kangaroo and other marsupial animals were discovered buried in a cave. In America the most marked change among the mammalia has been the loss of several species of Mastodon, of an elephant, and of the horse. These Pachydermata appear formerly to have had a range over the world, like that which deer and antelopes now hold. If Buffon had known of these gigantic armadilloes, llamas, great rodents, and lost pachydermata, he would have said with a greater semblance of truth, that the creative force in America had lost its vigour, rather than that it had never possessed such powers.

It is impossible to reflect without the deepest astonishment, on the changed state of this continent. Formerly it must have swarmed with great monsters, like the southern parts of Africa, but now we find only the tapir, guanaco, armadillo, and capybara; mere pigmies compared to the antecedent races. The greater number, if not all, of these extinct quadrupeds lived at a very recent period; and many of them were contemporaries of the existing molluscs. Since their loss, no very great physical changes can have taken place in the nature of the country. What then has exterminated so many living creatures? In the Pampas, the great sepulchre of such remains, there are no signs of violence, but on the contrary, of the most quiet and scarcely sensible changes. At Bahia Blanca I endeavoured to show the probability that the ancient Edentata, like the present species, lived in a dry and sterile country, such as now is found in that neighbourhood. With respect to the camel- like llama of Patagonia, the same grounds which, before knowing more than the size of the remains, perplexed me, by not allowing any great change of climate, now that we can guess the habits of the animal, are strangely confirmed. What shall we say of the death of the fossil horse? Did those plains fail in pasture, which afterwards were overrun by thousands and tens of thousands of the successors of the fresh stock introduced with the Spanish colonist? In some countries, we may believe, that a number of species subsequently introduced, by consuming the food of the antecedent races, may have caused their extermination; but we can scarcely credit that the armadillo has devoured the food of the immense Megatherium, the capybara of the Toxodon, or the guanaco of the camel- like kind. But granting that all such changes have been small, yet we are so profoundly ignorant concerning the physiological relations, on which the life, and even health (as shown by epidemics) of any existing species depends, that we argue with still less safety about either the life or death of any extinct kind.

One is tempted to believe in such simple relations, as variation of climate and food, or introduction of enemies, or the increased numbers of other species, as the cause of the succession of races. But it may be asked whether it is probable that any such cause should have been in action during the same epoch over the whole northern hemisphere, so as to destroy the Elephas primigenus , on the shores of Spain, on the plains of Siberia, and in Northern America; and in a like manner, the Bos urus , over a range of scarcely less extent? Did such changes put a period to the life of Mastodon angustidens , and of the fossil horse, both in Europe and on the Eastern slope of the Cordillera in Southern America? If they did, they must have been changes common to the whole world; such as gradual refrigeration, whether from modifications of physical geography, or from central cooling. But on this assumption, we have to struggle with the difficulty that these supposed changes, although scarcely sufficient to affect molluscous animals either in Europe or South America, yet destroyed many quadrupeds in regions now characterized by frigid, temperate , and warm climates! These cases of extinction forcibly recall the idea (I do not wish to draw any close analogy) of certain fruit- trees, which, it has been asserted, though grafted on young stems, planted in varied situations, and fertilized by the richest manures, yet at one period, have all withered away and perished. A fixed and determined length of life has in such cases been given to thousands and thousands of buds (or individual germs), although produced in long succession. Among the greater number of animals, each individual appears nearly independent of its kind; yet all of one kind may be bound together by common laws, as well as a certain number of individual buds in the tree, or polypi in the Zoophyte.

I will add one other remark. We see that whole series of animals, which have been created with peculiar kinds of organization, are confined to certain areas; and we can hardly suppose these structures are only adaptations to peculiarities of climate or country; for otherwise, animals belonging to a distinct type, and introduced by man, would not succeed so admirably, even to the extermination of the aborigines. On such grounds it does not seem a necessary conclusion, that the extinction of species, more than their creation, should exclusively depend on the nature (altered by physical changes) of their country. All that at present can be said with certainty, is that, as with the individual, so with the species, the hour of life has run its course, and is spent.

april 13th – The Beagle anchored within the mouth of the Santa Cruz. This river is situated about 60 miles south of Port St Julian. During the last voyage, Captain Stokes proceeded 30 miles up, but then, from the want of provisions, was obliged to return. Excepting what was discovered at that time, scarcely any thing was known about this large river. Captain FitzRoy now determined to follow its course as far as time would allow. On the 18th, three whale- boats started, carrying three weeks' provisions; and the party consisted of twenty- five souls – a force which would have been sufficient to have defied a host of Indians. With a strong flood- tide, and a fine day, we made a good run, soon drank some of the fresh water, and were at night nearly above the tidal influence.

The river here assumed a size and appearance, which, even at the highest point we ultimately reached, was scarcely diminished. It was generally from 300 to 400 yards broad, and in the middle about 17 feet deep. The rapidity of the current, which in its whole course runs at the rate of from 4 to 6 knots an hour, is perhaps its most remarkable feature. The water is of a fine blue colour, but with a slight milky tinge, and not so transparent as at first sight would have been expected. It flows over a bed of pebbles, like those which compose the beach and surrounding plains. Although its course is winding, it runs through a valley which extends in a direct line to the westward. This valley varies from 5 to 10 miles in breadth; it is bounded by step- formed terraces, which rise in most parts one above the other to the height of 500 feet, and have on the opposite sides a remarkable correspondence.

april 19th – Against so strong a current, it was of course quite impossible to row or sail. Consequently the three boats were fastened together head and stern, two hands left in each, and the rest came on shore to track. As the general arrangements, made by Captain FitzRoy, were very good for facilitating the work of all, and as all had a share of it, I will describe the system. The party, including everyone, was divided into two spells, each of which hauled at the tracking line alternately for an hour and a half. The officers of each boat lived with, ate the same food, and slept in the same tent with their crew, so that each boat was quite independent of the others. After sunset, the first level spot where any bushes were growing, was chosen for our night's lodging. Each of the crew took it in turns to be cook. Immediately the boat was hauled up, the cook made his fire; two others pitched the tent; the coxswain handed the things out of the boat; the rest carried them up to the tents, and collected firewood. By this order, in half an hour, every thing was ready for the night. A watch of two men and an officer was always kept, whose duty it was to look after the boats, keep up the fire, and guard against Indians. Each in the party had his one hour every night.

During this day we tracked but a short distance, for there were many islets, covered by thorny bushes, and the channels between them were shallow.

April 20th – We passed the islands and set to work. Our regular day's march, although it was hard enough, carried us on an average only 10 miles in a straight line, and perhaps 15 or 20 altogether. Beyond the place where we slept last night the country is completely terra incognita, for it was there that Captain Stokes turned back. We saw in the distance a great smoke, and found the skeleton of a horse, so we knew that Indians were in the neighbourhood. On the next morning (21st) tracks of a party of horse, and marks left by the trailing of the chuzos were observed on the ground. It was generally thought they must have reconnoitred us during the night. Shortly afterwards we came to a spot, where from the fresh footsteps of men, children, and horses, it was evident the party had crossed the river.

april 29th – From some high land we hailed with joy the white summits of the Cordillera, as they were seen occasionally peeping through their dusky envelope of clouds. During the few succeeding days, we continued to get on slowly, for we found the river- course very tortuous, and strewn with immense fragments of various ancient slaty rocks, and of granite. The plain bordering the valley had here attained an elevation of about 1,100 feet, and its character was much altered. The well- rounded pebbles of porphyry were in this part mingled with many immense angular fragments of basalt and of the rocks above mentioned. The first of these erratic blocks which I noticed, was 67 miles distant from the nearest mountain; another which had been transported to rather a less distance, measured 5 yards square, and projected 5 feet above the gravel. Its edges were so angular, and its size so great, that I at first mistook it for a rock in situ, and took out my compass to observe the direction of its cleavage. The plains here were not quite so level as those nearer the coast, but yet, they betrayed little signs of any violent action. Under these circumstances, it would be difficult, as it appears to me, to explain this phenomenon on any theory, excepting through that of transport by ice while the country was under water. But this is a subject to which I shall again recur.

During the two last days we met with signs of horses, and with several small articles which had belonged to the Indians, – such as parts of a mantle and a bunch of ostrich feathers – but they appeared to have been lying long on the ground. Between the place where the Indians had so lately crossed the river and this neighbourhood, though so many miles apart, the country appears to be quite unfrequented. At first, considering the abundance of the guanacoës, I was surprised at this; but it is explained by the stony nature of the plains, which would soon disable an unshod horse from taking part in the chase. Nevertheless, in two places in this very central region, I found small heaps of stones, which I do not think could have been accidentally thrown together. They were placed on points, projecting over the edge of the highest lava cliff, and they resembled, but on a small scale, those near Port Desire.

May 4th – Captain FitzRoy determined to take the boats no higher. The river had a winding course, and was very rapid; and the appearance of the country offered no temptation to proceed any further. Every where we met with the same productions, and the same dreary landscape. We were now 140 miles distant from the Atlantic, and about 60 from the nearest arm of the Pacific. The valley in this upper part expanded into a wide basin, bounded on the north and south by the basaltic platforms, and fronted by the long range of the snow-clad Cordillera. But we viewed these grand mountains with regret, for we were obliged to imagine their form and nature, instead of standing, as we had hoped, on their crest, and looking down on the plain below. Besides the useless loss of time which an attempt to ascend any higher would have cost us, we had already been for some days on half allowance of bread. This, although really enough for any reasonable men, was, after our hard day's march, rather scanty food. Let those alone who have never tried it, exclaim about the comfort of a light stomach and an easy digestion. 5th – Before sunrise we commenced our descent. We shot down the stream with great rapidity, generally at the rate of 10 knots an hour. In this one day we effected what had cost us five-and-a-half hard days' labour in ascending. On the 8th, we reached the Beagle after our twenty-one days' expedition. Every one excepting myself had cause to be dissatisfied; but to me the ascent afforded a most interesting section of the great tertiary formation of Patagonia.

Tierra del Fuego

December 17th, 1832 – Having now finished with Patagonia, I will describe our first arrival in Tierra del Fuego. A little after noon we doubled Cape St Diego, and entered the famous strait of Le Maire. We kept close to the Fuegian shore, but the outline of the rugged, inhospitable Staten land was visible amidst the clouds. In the afternoon we anchored in the Bay of Good Success. While entering we were saluted in a manner becoming the inhabitants of this savage land. A group of Fuegians partly concealed by the entangled forest, were perched on a wild point overhanging the sea; and as we passed by, they sprang up, and waving their tattered cloaks sent forth a loud and sonorous shout. The savages followed the ship, and just before dark we saw their fire, and again heard their wild cry. The harbour consists of a fine piece of water half surrounded by low rounded mountains of clay- slate, which are covered to the water's edge by one dense gloomy forest. A single glance at the landscape was sufficient to show me, how widely different it was from any thing I had ever beheld. At night it blew a gale of wind, and heavy squalls from the mountains swept past us. It would have been a bad time out at sea, and we, as well as others, may call this Good Success Bay.

In the morning, the Captain sent a party to communicate with the Fuegians. When we came within hail, one of the four natives who were present advanced to receive us, and began to shout most vehemently, wishing to direct us where to land. When we were on shore the party looked rather alarmed, but continued talking and making gestures with great rapidity. It was without exception the most curious and interesting spectacle I had ever beheld. I could not have believed how wide was the difference, between savage and civilized man. It is greater than between a wild and domesticated animal, in as much as in man there is a greater power of improvement. The chief spokesman was old, and appeared to be the head of the family; the three others were powerful young men, about 6 feet high. The women and children had been sent away. These Fuegians are a very different race from the stunted miserable wretches further to the westward. They are much superior in person, and seem closely allied to the famous Patagonians of the Strait of Magellan. Their only garment consists of a mantle made of guanaco skin, with the wool outside; this they wear just thrown over their shoulders, as often leaving their persons exposed as covered. Their skin is of a dirty coppery red colour.

The old man had a fillet of white feathers tied round his head, which partly confined his black, coarse, and entangled hair. His face was crossed by two broad transverse bars; one painted bright red reached from ear to ear, and included the upper lip; the other, white like chalk, extended parallel and above the first, so that even his eyelids were thus coloured. Some of the other men were ornamented by streaks of black powder, made of charcoal. The party altogether closely resembled the devils which come on the stage in such plays as Der Freischutz.

Their very attitudes were abject, and the expression of their countenances distrustful, surprised, and startled. After we had presented them with some scarlet cloth, which they immediately tied round their necks, they became good friends. This was shown by the old man patting our breasts, and making a chuckling kind of noise, as people do when feeding chickens. I walked with the old man, and this demonstration of friendship was repeated several times; it was concluded by three hard slaps, which were given me on the breast and back at the same time. He then bared his bosom for me to return the compliment, which being done, he seemed highly pleased. The language of these people, according to our notions, scarcely deserves to be called articulate. Captain Cook has compared it to a man clearing his throat, but certainly no European ever cleared his throat with so many hoarse, guttural, and clicking sounds.

They are excellent mimics: as often as we coughed or yawned, or made any odd motion, they immediately Charles Darwin 32 imitated us. Some of our party began to squint and look awry; but one of the young Fuegians (whose whole face was painted black, excepting a white band across his eyes) succeeded in making far more hideous grimaces. They could repeat with perfect correctness, each word in any sentence we addressed them, and they remembered such words for some time. Yet we Europeans all know how difficult it is to distinguish apart the sounds in a foreign language. Which of us, for instance, could follow an American Indian through a sentence of more than three words? All savages appear to possess, to an uncommon degree, this power of mimicry. I was told almost in the same words, of the same ludicrous habits among the Caffres: the Australians, likewise, have long been notorious for being able to imitate and describe the gait of any man, so that he may be recognized. How can this faculty be explained? is it a consequence of the more practised habits of perception and keener senses, common to all men in a savage state, as compared to those long civilized?

When a song was struck up by our party, I thought the Fuegians would have fallen down with astonishment. With equal surprise they viewed our dancing; but one of the young men, when asked, had no objection to a little waltzing. Little accustomed to Europeans as they appeared to be, yet they knew, and dreaded our fire-arms; nothing would tempt them to take a gun in their hands. They begged for knives, calling them by the Spanish word 'cuchilla'. They explained also what they wanted, by acting as if they had a piece of blubber in their mouth, and then pretending to cut instead of tear it.

It was interesting to watch the conduct of these people towards Jemmy Button (one of the Fuegians who had been taken, during the former voyage, to England): they immediately perceived the difference between him and the rest, and held much conversation between themselves on the subject. The old man addressed a long harangue to Jemmy, which it seems was to invite him to stay with them. But Jemmy understood very little of their language, and was, moreover, thoroughly ashamed of his countrymen. When York Minster (another of these men) came on shore, they noticed him in the same way, and told him he ought to shave; yet he had not twenty dwarf hairs on his face, whilst we all wore our untrimmed beards. They examined the colour of his skin, and compared it with ours. One of our arms being bared, they expressed the liveliest surprise and admiration at its whiteness. We thought that they mistook two or three of the officers, who were rather shorter and fairer (though adorned with large beards), for the ladies of our party. The tallest amongst the Fuegians was evidently much pleased at his height being noticed. When placed back to back with the tallest of the boat's crew, he tried his best to edge on higher ground, and to stand on tiptoe. He opened his mouth to show his teeth, and turned his face for a side view; and all this was done with such alacrity, that I dare say he thought himself the handsomest man in Tierra del Fuego. After the first feeling on our part of grave astonishment was over, nothing could be more ludicrous or interesting than the odd mixture of surprise and imitation which these savages every moment exhibited.

The next day I attempted to penetrate some way into the country. Tierra del Fuego may be described as a mountainous country, partly submerged in the sea, so that deep islets and bays occupy the place where valleys should exist. The mountain sides (except on the exposed western coast) are covered from the water's edge upwards by one great forest. The trees reach to an elevation of between 1,000 and 1,500 feet; and are succeeded by a band of peat, with minute alpine plants; and this again is succeeded by the line of perpetual snow, which, according to Captain King, in the Strait of Magellan descends to between 3,000 and 4,000 feet. To find an acre of level land in any part of the country is most rare. I recollect only one little flat near Port Famine, and another of rather larger extent near Goeree Road. In both these cases, and in all others, the surface was covered by a thick bed of swampy peat. Even within the forest the ground is concealed by a mass of slowly putrefying vegetable matter, which, from being soaked with water, yields to the foot.

Finding it nearly hopeless to push my way through the wood, I followed the course of a mountain torrent. At first, from the waterfalls and number of dead trees, I could hardly crawl along; but the bed of the stream soon became a little more open, from the floods having swept the broken and rocky banks; and was amply repaid by the grandeur of the scene. The gloomy depth of the ravine well accorded with the universal signs of violence. On every side were lying irregular masses of rock and up- torn trees; other trees, though still erect, were decayed to the heart and ready to fall. The entangled mass of the thriving and the fallen reminded me of the forests within the tropics; – yet there was a difference; for in these still solitudes, Death, instead of Life, seemed the predominant spirit. I followed the water- course till I came to a spot where a great slip had cleared a straight space down the mountain side. By this road I ascended to a considerable elevation, and obtained a good view of the surrounding woods. The trees all belong to one kind, the Fagus betuloides, for the number of the other species of beech, and of the Winter's bark, is quite inconsiderable. This tree keeps its leaves throughout the year; but its foliage is of a peculiar brownish- green colour, with a tinge of yellow. As the whole landscape is thus coloured, it has a sombre, dull appearance; nor is it often enlivened by the rays of the sun.

Strait of Magellan

December 21st – The Beagle got under way: and on the succeeding day, favoured to an uncommon degree by a fine easterly breeze, we closed in with the Barnevelts, and, running past Cape Deceit with its stony peaks, about three o'clock doubled the weather beaten Cape Horn! The evening was calm and bright and means of judging of the distance, how the mountain appeared to rise in height.

The Fuegians twice came and plagued us. As there were many instruments, clothes, and men on shore, it was thought necessary to frighten them away. The first time, a few great guns were fired, when they were far distant. It was most ludicrous to watch through a glass the Indians, as often as the shot struck the water, take up stones, and as a bold defiance, throw them towards the ship, though about a mile and a half distant! A boat was then sent with orders to fire a few musket- shot wide of them. The Fuegians hid themselves behind the trees; and for every discharge of the musket they fired their arrows: all, however, fell short of the boat, and the officer as he pointed at them laughed. This made the Fuegians frantic with passion, and they shook their mantles in vain rage. At last seeing the balls cut and strike the trees, they ran away; and we were left in peace and quietness.

On a former occasion, when the Beagle was here in the month of February, I started one morning at four o'clock to ascend Mount Tarn, which is 2,600 feet high, and is the most elevated point in this immediate neighbourhood. We went in a boat to the foot of the mountain (but not to the best part), and then began our ascent. The forest commences at the line of high- water mark, and during the two first hours I gave over all hopes of reaching the summit. So thick was the wood, that it was necessary to have constant recourse to the compass; for every landmark, though in a mountainous country, was completely shut out. In the deep ravines, the death-like scene of desolation exceeded all description; outside it was blowing a gale, but in these hollows, not even a breath of wind stirred the leaves of the tallest trees. So gloomy, cold, and wet was every part, that not even the fungi, mosses, or ferns, could flourish. In the valleys it was scarcely possible to crawl along, they were so completely barricaded by the great mouldering trunks, which had fallen down in every direction. When passing over these natural bridges, one's course was often arrested by sinking knee deep into the rotten wood; at other times, when attempting to lean against a firm tree, one was startled by finding a mass of decayed matter ready to fall at the slightest touch. We at last found ourselves among the stunted trees, and then soon reached the bare ridge, which conducted us to the summit. Here was a view characteristic of Tierra del Fuego; – irregular chains of hills, mottled with patches of snow, deep yellowish- green valleys, and arms of the sea intersecting the land in many directions. The strong wind was piercingly cold, and the atmosphere rather hazy, so that we did not stay long on the top of the mountain. Our descent was not quite so laborious as our ascent; for the weight of the body forced a passage, and all the slips and falls were in the right direction.

The perfect preservation of the Siberian animals, perhaps presented, till within a few years, one of the most difficult problems which geology ever attempted to solve. On the one hand it was granted, that the carcasses had not been drifted from any great distance by any tumultuous deluge, and on the other it was assumed as certain, that when the animals lived, the climate must have been so totally different, that the presence of ice in the vicinity was as incredible, as would be the freezing of the Ganges. Mr Lyell in his Principles of Geology has thrown the greatest light on this subject, by indicating the northerly course of the existing rivers with the probability that they formerly carried carcasses in the same direction; by showing (from Humboldt) how far the inhabitants of the hottest countries sometimes wander; by insisting on the caution necessary in judging of habits between animals of the same genus, when the species are not identical; and especially by bringing forward in the clearest manner the probable change from an insular to an extreme climate, as the consequence of the elevation of the land, of which proofs have lately been brought to light.

In a former part of this volume, I have endeavoured to prove, that as far as regards the quantity of food, there is no difficulty in supposing that these large quadrupeds inhabited sterile regions, producing but a scanty vegetation. With respect to temperature, the woolly covering both of the elephant and the rhinoceros seems at once to render it at least probable (although it has been argued that some animals living in the hottest regions are thickly clothed) that they were fitted for a cold climate. I suppose no reason can be assigned why, during a former epoch, when the pachydermata abounded over the greater part of the world, some species should not have been fitted for the northern regions, precisely as now happens with deer and several other animals. If, then, we believe that the climate of Siberia, anteriorly to the physical changes above alluded to, had some resemblance with that of the southern hemisphere at the present day – a circumstance which harmonizes well with other facts, as I think has been shown by the imaginary case, when we transported existing phenomena from one to the other hemisphere – the following conclusions may be deduced as probable: first, that the degree of cold formerly was not excessive; secondly, that snow did not for a long time together cover the ground (such not being the case at the extreme parts 55° – 56° of S. America); thirdly, that the vegetation partook of a more tropical character than it now does in the same latitudes; and lastly, that at but a short distance to the northward of the country thus circumstanced (even not so far as where Pallas found the entire rhinoceros), the soil might be perpetually congealed: so that if the carcass of any animal should once be buried a few feet beneath the surface, it would be preserved for centuries.

Both Humboldt and Lyell have remarked, that at the present day, the bodies of any animals, wandering beyond the line of perpetual congelation which extends as far south as 62° , if once embedded by any accident a few feet beneath the surface, would be preserved for an indefinite length of time: the same would happen with carcasses drifted by the rivers; and by such means the extinct mammalia may have been entombed. There is only one small step wanting, as it appears to me, and the whole problem would be solved with a degree of simplicity very striking, compared with the several theories first invented. From the account given by Mr Lyell of the Siberian plains, with their innumerable fossil bones, the relics of many successive generations, there can be little doubt that the beds were accumulated either in a shallow sea, or in an estuary. From the description given in Beechey's voyage of Eschscholtz Bay, the same remark is applicable to the north-west coast of America: the formation there appears identical with the common littoral deposits recently elevated, which I have seen on the shores of the southern part of the same continent. It seems also well established, that the Siberian remains are only exposed where the rivers intersect the plain. With this fact, and the proofs of recent elevation, the whole case appears to be precisely similar to that of the Pampas: namely, that the carcasses were formerly floated into the sea, and the remains covered up in the deposits which were then accumulating. These beds have since been elevated; and as the rivers excavate their channels the entombed skeletons are exposed.

Here then, is the difficulty: how were the carcasses preserved at the bottom of the sea? I do not think it has been sufficiently noticed, that the preservation of the animal with its flesh was an occasional event, and not directly consequent on its position far northward. Cuvier refers to the voyage of Billing as showing that the bones of the elephant, buffalo, and rhinoceros, are nowhere so abundant as on the islands between the mouths of the Lena and Indigirka. It is even said that excepting some hills of rock, the whole is composed of sand, ice, and bones. These islands lie to the northward of the place where Adams found the mammoth with its flesh preserved, and even 10° north of the Wiljui, where the rhinoceros was discovered in a like condition. In the case of the bones we may suppose that the carcasses were drifted into a deeper sea, and there remaining at the bottom, the flesh decomposed. But in the second and more extraordinary case, where putrefaction seems to have been arrested, the body probably was soon covered up by deposits which were then accumulating. It may be asked, whether the mud a few feet deep, at the bottom of a shallow sea which is annually frozen, has a temperature higher than 32°? It must be remembered how intense a degree of cold is required to freeze salt water; and that the mud at some depth below the surface, would have a low mean temperature, precisely in the same manner as the subsoil on the land is frozen in countries which enjoy a short but hot summer. If this be possible, the entombment of these extinct quadrupeds is rendered very simple; and with regard to the conditions of their former existence, the principal difficulties have, I think, already been removed.

There is one marine production, which from its importance is worthy of a particular history. It is the kelp or Fucus giganteus of Solander. This plant grows on every rock from low- water mark to a great depth, both on the outer coast and within the channels. I believe, during the voyages of the Adventure and Beagle , not one rock near the surface was discovered, which was not buoyed by this floating weed. The good service it thus affords to vessels navigating near this stormy land is evident; and it certainly has saved many a one from being wrecked. I know few things more surprising than to see this plant growing and flourishing amidst those great breakers of the western ocean, which no mass of rock, let it be ever so hard, can long resist. The stem is round, slimy, and smooth, and seldom has a diameter of so much as an inch. A few taken together are sufficiently strong to support the weight of the large loose stones to which in the inland channels they grow attached; and some of these stones are so heavy, that when drawn to the surface they can scarcely be lifted into a boat by one person.

Captain Cook, in his second voyage, says, that at Kerguelen Land 'some of this weed is of a most enormous length, though the stem is not much thicker than a man's thumb. I have mentioned, that on some of the shoals upon which it grows, we did not strike ground with a line of 24 fathoms. The depth of water, therefore, must have been greater. And as this weed does not grow in a perpendicular direction, but makes a very acute angle with the bottom, and much of it afterwards spreads many fathoms on the surface of the sea, I am well warranted to say that some of it grows to the length of sixty fathoms and upwards.' Certainly at the Falkland Islands, and about Tierra del Fuego, extensive beds frequently spring up from 10- and 15- fathom water. I do not suppose the stem of any other plant attains so great a length as 360 feet, as stated by Captain Cook. Its geographical range is very considerable; it is found from the extreme southern islets near Cape Horn, as far north, on the eastern coast (according to information given me by Mr Stokes), as lat. 43° – and on the western it was tolerably abundant, but far from luxuriant, at Chiloe, in lat. 42°. It may possibly extend a little further northward, but is soon succeeded by a different species. We thus have a range of 15° in latitude; and as Cook, who must have been well acquainted with the species, found it at Kerguelen Land, no less than 140° in longitude.

The number of living creatures of all orders, whose existence intimately depends on the kelp, is wonderful. A great volume might be written, describing the inhabitants of one of these beds of seaweed. Almost every leaf, excepting those that float on the surface, is so thickly incrustated with coral- lines, as to be of a white colour. We find exquisitely- delicate structures, some inhabited by simple hydra- like polypi, others by more organized kinds, and beautiful compound Ascidiaë. On the flat surfaces of the leaves various patelliform shells, Trochi, uncovered molluscs, and some bivalves are attached. Innumerable crustacea frequent every part of the plant. On shaking the great entangled roots, a pile of small fish, shells, cuttle- fish, crabs of all orders, sea- eggs, star- fish, beautiful Holothuriæ (some taking the external form of the nudibranch molluscs), Planariæ, and crawling nereidous animals of a multitude of forms, all fall out together. Often as I recurred to a branch of the kelp, I never failed to discover animals of new and curious structures. In Chiloe, where, as I have said, the kelp did not thrive very well, the numerous shells, coral- lines, and crustacea were absent; but there yet remained a few of the flustraceæ, and some compound Ascidiaë; the latter, however, were of different species from those in Tierra del Fuego. We here see the fucus possessing a wider range than the animals which use it as an abode.

I can only compare these great aquatic forests of the southern hemisphere with the terrestrial ones in the intertropical regions. Yet if the latter should be destroyed in any country, I do not believe nearly so many species of animals would perish, as, under similar circumstances, would happen with the kelp. Amidst the leaves of this plant numerous species of fish live, which nowhere else would find food or shelter; with their destruction the many cormorants, divers, and other fishing birds, the otters, seals, and porpoises, would soon perish also; and lastly, the Fuegian savage, the miserable lord of this miserable land, would redouble his cannibal feast, decrease in numbers, and perhaps cease to exist.

June 8th – We weighed anchor early in the morning, and left Port Famine. Captain FitzRoy determined to leave the Strait of Magellan by the Magdalen channel, which had not long been discovered. Our course lay due south, down that gloomy passage which I have before alluded to, as appearing to lead to another and worse world. The wind was fair, but the atmosphere was very thick; so that we missed much curious scenery. The dark ragged clouds were rapidly driven over the mountains, from their summits nearly to their bases. The glimpses which we caught through the dusky mass were highly interesting: jagged points, cones of snow, blue glaciers, strong outlines marked on a lurid sky, were seen at different distances and heights. In the midst of such scenery we anchored at Cape Turn, close to Mount Sarmiento, which was then hidden in the clouds. At the base of the lofty and almost perpendicular sides of our little cove, there was one deserted wigwam, and it alone reminded us that man sometimes wandered in these desolate regions. But it would be difficult to imagine a scene where he seemed to have less claims, or less authority. The inanimate works of nature – rock, ice, snow, wind, and water – all warring with each other, yet combined against man – here reigned in absolute sovereignty.

June 9th – In the morning we were delighted by seeing the veil of mist gradually rise from Sarmiento, and display it to our view. This mountain, which is one of the highest in Tierra del Fuego, has an elevation of 6,800 feet. Its base, for about an eighth of its total height, is clothed by dusky woods, and above this a field of snow extends to the summit. These vast piles of snow, which never melt, and seem destined to last as long as the world holds together, present a noble and even sublime spectacle. The outline of the mountain was admirably clear and defined. Owing to the abundance of light reflected from the white and glittering surface, no shadows are cast on any part; and those lines which intersect the sky can alone be distinguished: hence the mass stood out in the boldest relief. Several glaciers descended in a winding course, from the snow to the sea- coast: they may be likened to great frozen Niagaras; and perhaps these cataracts of blue ice are to the full as beautiful as the moving ones of water. By night we reached the western part of the channel; but the water was so deep that no anchorage could be found. We were in consequence obliged to stand off and on, in this narrow arm of the sea, during a pitch- dark night of fourteen hours long.

June 10th – In the morning we made the best of our way into the open Pacific. The Western coast generally consists of low, rounded, quite barren, hills of granite and greenstone. Sir John Narborough called one part South Desolation, because it is 'so desolate a land to behold'; and well indeed might he say so. Outside the main islands there are numberless scattered rocks, on which the long swell of the open ocean incessantly rages. We passed out between the East and West Furies, and a little further northward there are so many breakers that the sea is called the Milky Way. One sight of such a coast is enough to make a landsman dream for a week about shipwreck, peril, and death; and with this sight, we bade farewell for ever to Tierra del Fuego.

第一章

我的末日就要来了。最近，我饱受心绞痛的折磨，医生告诉我，正常情况下，我的生命只剩下寥寥数月。除非，在被诅咒了拥有罕有的心智之外，我还不幸拥有了罕见的体质，不然我将在不久后摆脱这尘世生命的痛苦重担。不过要是我没能摆脱，要是我还可以活到大多数渴望并且能够活到的那个岁数，我就能一探究竟，看看希望的落空是否会比预言的实现让人更感痛苦。因为，我已经预见到了我何时死亡，预见到了我生命最后时刻发生的每一件事。

从现在开始一个月后的那一天，也就是1850年9月20日那天，我将会坐在这把椅子上，就在这间书房里，在夜晚十点整，渴望着死亡，不断袭来的洞察和预见将我折磨得疲惫不堪，幻觉和希望都不再出现。我看着壁炉里一条蓝色火舌正在升起，我的灯即将燃烧殆尽，就在那一刻，我的胸口会迎来可怕的收缩。窒息感来临之前，我的时间只够伸手猛烈地拉铃。没有人会回应我的铃声。我知道为什么。我的两个仆人是一对情人，那时他们刚刚争吵完。我拉铃的两个小时前，女管家怒气冲冲地跑出房子，她要佩里以为她去投水自尽了。佩里最终警觉了，为了找她也离开了房子。年轻的洗碗女工在一条长凳上睡着了，她从来不回应铃声，铃声叫不醒她。窒息的感觉加重了，我的灯熄灭了，带来一股难闻的味道，我费尽全身力气又一次扑向了铃铛。我渴望生命，但却无人来救。我曾经渴望未知的世界，但那股渴望已经消散了。上帝啊，让我继续活在这已知的世界，让我继续被已知的世界折磨吧，我会心满意足。绞痛和窒息给我带来痛苦□土地、田野、鸦巢下铺着鹅卵石的小溪、雨后的新鲜气息、早晨透过卧室窗户的阳光，还有霜降时屋内温暖的壁炉，难道这些也要永远被黑暗吞噬吗？

黑暗，还是黑暗，没有痛苦，只有黑暗。而在黑暗中我一直在向前穿梭□我的思绪一直处在黑暗中，但感觉在向前持续移动.....

在死亡降临前，我要用仅存的安宁和气力讲述我奇异的经历。我从未向任何人袒露过这一切，也从未对人们的同情心抱有太大期望。不过，死亡可能让世人在评价我们时带着几分同情、些许温柔和宽容

□活着的人不会得到宽恕，活着的人不会得到迁就和尊重，对于活人的所有温情都像雨点一样消散在了无情的东风中。留给你的机会只有一个，遇到那心灵善良的人，你该摧残他；遇到那眼睛仍温情脉脉、小心翼翼地望着你的人，你该以冷若冰霜的眼神回敬他；耳朵是通向灵魂这座神龛深处的柔弱信使，要是遇到那耳朵还能听得出善意语句的人，你就该摆出一副冰冷的礼仪规范，说上几句暗藏讥讽的赞美，或者端着艳羡的冷漠态度拒他于千里之外；要是遇到一个头脑仍热情地维持正义、期盼着兄弟般感情的人，你该抓紧用你不怀好意的评判、琐碎的对比、看似无心的信口雌黄打击他。这样，他的心灵会逐渐麻木，直到“激烈的愤怒再也无法伤害心灵”^[1]，眼睛再也不会流露满怀期待的神色，耳朵会听而不闻，头脑不再回应那些祈求，也不再思考。这样，你的话语才有了用武之地，你会记得并同情那些失败者付出的艰辛，你会尊敬那些已经完成的工作，你会原谅错误，你会心甘情愿地忘掉错误。

这些都是琐碎无用又幼稚的说辞，我为什么要思考这些？对我来说，这毫无意义，在我死后，我没有任何作品供人景仰；没有任何亲人会在我的墓前哭泣，懊悔在我生前给我造成的痛苦。我死后，恐怕只有我这一生的故事能在陌生人处换回一些同情，一些我生前从朋友处鲜少得到的同情。

和我后来不幸的人生相比，我的童年岁月还算过得不错，称得上幸福。那时的我和其他孩子一样，看不透未来。和那些孩子一样，我享受着当下时光的快乐，也享受着对未来无限憧憬的甜蜜。我那温柔的母亲还在我身边。即使是现在，岁月蹉跎，一想起她把我放在膝盖上温柔地抚摸我，我都可以朦胧地回忆起当时的感觉□她的双臂环抱着我，脸颊紧贴着我的脸颊。小时候，有段时间我患了眼疾，看不见东西，她就从早到晚地抱着我。母亲对我的爱无人能及，可她却过早地离开了我，还是孩子的我已感到生命被一股寒意侵蚀。和母亲去世前一样，我还是经常在马夫的照看下，骑着一匹白色的小马驹。可是，我上马时再也没有人热切地看着我，骑马回来时再也没有人等着拥抱我。其他孩子若是在七八岁时失去了母亲，他们的思念也许并不会像我这样强烈，因为他们生命中的其他乐趣还将继续，而我却是个异常敏感的孩子。我记得，我很容易被丁点儿声响弄得又焦虑又激动，马厩里马匹踏地板的回声、马夫们瓮声瓮气的说话声、父亲的马车一停到院子的拱门下就引来的阵阵犬吠声，以及提示午餐和晚餐的铃声，这些都会刺激到我。我父亲的房子毗邻一个有军营驻扎的乡村，军队操练时稳健的踏步声时而传来，让我颤抖着啜泣。可这声音一旦消失，我又盼望它再来。

我想，父亲大概认为我是个有些奇怪的孩子，所以不怎么喜欢我，尽管他完成一个父亲的责任时一丝不苟。就算如此，他也已经人

到中年，是两个孩子的父亲。我的母亲是他的继室，他们结婚时父亲已经四十五岁了。他是一个坚定不移、从不屈服又极度有纪律的人，是一个从里到外地地道道的银行家；又是一个活跃的地主，渴望在全郡获得影响力。他一成不变，从不受天气的影响，从来没经历过忧郁，也不知道什么叫作兴高采烈。我很敬畏他，只要他在身边，我就会变得更加懦弱敏感。这恰恰让他相信，必须用不同于教育我兄长的那套常规方式教育我。我兄长是个高个子的年轻人，当时已经进入了伊顿公学。他将成为我父亲的代言人和继承人，当然，为了结交权贵他必须上伊顿公学和牛津大学。我父亲并不否认阅读拉丁讽刺作家或希腊剧作家的作品有助于获取贵族地位，不过，他其实并不怎么尊重这些“已故的贵族幽灵”。在读过波特翻译的埃斯库罗斯，粗略看过弗朗西斯译成英文的贺拉斯后，他觉得他自己已经完全有资格对这些作品评论论足了。他不屑于这些，他欣赏的是另一类事物，他最近涉足矿产投资，因此便更觉得科学教育才是对次子最有用的教育。特别是对我这样一个又害羞又敏感的男孩儿来说，我根本不适合去读弱肉强食的公立学校。莱瑟尔先生坚信这一点。莱瑟尔先生是一个戴眼镜的肥胖男人。一天，他肥胖的双手夹住我瘦小的头颅，带着科学研究的怀疑态度在我头上这里敲敲那里按按，随后，他用肥大的手指按住我的太阳穴把我推开，透过那副亮闪闪的眼镜打量着我。他额头紧锁，看来对这番审视并不满意，一边用拇指扫着我的眉毛一边对我父亲说：“他的不足之处是这里，先生□那里，还有这里。”他扶住我头颅的上半部分补充道：“但这里又过度了。缺陷部分一定要激发出来，而过度的部分要给予压制。”

我瑟瑟发抖，一部分在于我模模糊糊地感到自己被当作批判的对象了；一部分在于我为自己第一次的愤怒感到坐立难安，我憎恨这个戴眼镜的硕大男人，他随意地拉拽我的头颅，好像在讨价还价中试图廉价买下它。

我不清楚莱瑟尔先生和后来父亲用在我身上的那套教育体系到底有多大关系，但有一件事儿是肯定的，那就是私人教师、历史、自然科学、现代语言都是用来修补我先天不足的工具。由于我对机械一窍不通，他们就安排我整日和机器相处；我的思维中没有清晰的分类，他们就认为我需要系统地学习动物学和植物学。我渴望了解人类行为和人类情感，他们却把我的生活中塞满机械能量、元素和电子、磁力现象。如果是先天健全的男孩儿，带着他们运行正常的器官，定能从这些睿智教师的辅导中受益匪浅，他们将毫无疑问地对电磁现象滋生无限的兴趣，就像每个周四晚上老师努力想让我感受到的一样。事实上，对于他们所教授的科学知识，我依旧保持着相当的无知，其程度甚至可以匹敌被古典学院驱逐的最差的学生。暗地里，我偷偷地阅读普鲁塔克、莎士比亚和堂吉珂德，一边读一边任由我的思绪飘荡。我

的教师告诉我，“一个受过教育的人与文盲的区别在于，他知道为什么水往低处流”。可我却无意成为这样一个受过教育的人，我喜欢流水，能够一连几个小时地观察它，听它从鹅卵石中蜿蜒流过的汨汨声，喜欢看它浇灌亮绿色的水草。我不想知道它流淌的原理，我所确信的是，如此美丽的事物背后一定有更深层次的原因。

还是不要再说这段往事了吧。我想我说的已足以证明，我的天性是敏感而不讲求实际的，我又是在这样一个对我天性不利的环境中成长，因此我不可能长成一个快乐健康的人。十六岁那年，我被送往日内瓦完成学业，这种改变为我带来了快乐。当我们从汝拉山上下来，第一次看到夕阳落在阿尔卑斯山脉的山顶，我觉得那里仿佛是天堂的入口。好似沉醉于甘甜的美酒中一般，那三年的时光在无尽的狂喜中度过，而大自然也向我展示了她百般的婀娜。也许你会以为，我如此年轻就能领略自然之美，我必定是个诗人。可惜，我的命运没有这般幸运。诗人会倾吐他的诗歌，而且他坚信他的诗歌会被那敏锐的耳朵采撷，得到灵魂的回应，迟早会在世间传诵。但是，敏感多情的诗人要是失去了声音，要是他的情感无法用语言表达出来，比如，阳光明媚的时候他在河岸看到水面波光粼粼之景只能默默流泪；或者，一旦有人说了几句难听的话、给了他一个坏脸色，他就寝食难安，内心的激情便无从释放，与人相处时，他便越发感到孤独。只有傍晚时分，行舟湖上，朝着中心泊去时，我的孤独感才有所减淡。那时，天空，闪着光辉的山峦，广阔的蓝色湖面，这一切景色将我环抱。自母亲过世，我就再也没能感受到这样的疼爱了。我会像让·雅克 [2] 一样，躺在小舟里，任凭它自由地漂荡。我看着天边褪去的霞光作别一座又一座的山巅，就像先知的烈火马车驶过，驶向光生出的地方。直到雪白的山顶变得灰暗，如同死尸，我才不得不起程返回，因为，我被看管得很严，他们不准许我晚上四处游荡。虽然在日内瓦求学的同龄人很多，但因为性情，大家在选择朋友时并不青睐我。不过，我还是结交了一个朋友，更让人想不到的是，他的志趣与我完全相反。我称呼他为查尔斯·麦尼埃，他的真实姓氏是一个后来颇有名气的英国姓，因为他拥有英国血统。他是个孤儿，在学医期间只能靠一点儿可怜的补贴过活，而他在医学上很有天赋。真是奇怪啊！我是个头脑糊涂、易受影响、不善观察、不求甚解又整日陷入沉思中的人，我居然会被这样一个对科学饱含激情的青年吸引。不过，我们之间的友谊并不是靠智力维系，这友谊的源泉能让愚钝的人和智慧的人结交，也能让异想天开的人和脚踏实地的人亲近，我们的友谊来源于共同的情感。查尔斯家境贫寒、相貌丑陋，只能招来日内瓦社会的嘲笑，被社交生活拒之门外。我看他和我一样被人孤立，当然，我们被孤立的原因不同，这使得我对他生出一种夹杂着同情的厌恶，受此驱使，我小心翼翼地接近他。可以这么说，在我们大相径庭的习惯差异所能允许的范围内，我们萌发了同志情谊。查尔斯很少休息，在他休息时，我们会

一起爬萨莱沃山，或者一起乘船去沃韦，我迷迷糊糊地听他讲他正在进行的各种大胆的实验和发现。一边听他讲，我一边看沿途蓝色的水面、天空优美的浮云，一边听鸟儿婉转鸣叫、远方冰川融化之声。他很清楚，我听得三心二意，但他喜欢这样和我交谈，即便是狗啊、鸟啊爱我们，我们不也愿意向它们抒发自己的愿景和雄心吗？而我之所以说起这段友情，是因为这与我后面要讲的那段离奇、恐怖的经历有关。

我的这段相对幸福的时光因为一场严重的疾病中断了，我几乎回忆不起生病时的情形，只能隐隐约约记得当时的痛苦，父亲时不时地会来床边陪伴我。随后就是单调乏味的疗养期。随着体力慢慢恢复，我的生活也逐渐有些变化，渐渐地我可以远游。在我记得比较清楚的日子里，有一天，父亲坐在我身边的沙发上，对我说：“等你身体好点儿的时候，拉蒂默，我要带你跟我回家。这趟旅行会让你轻松愉快，这对你有好处。我会带你去蒂罗尔和奥地利，你会游历很多地方。我们的邻居菲尔莫尔一家会一起去，艾尔弗雷德将在巴塞尔和我们会合，我们会一起去维也纳，回来的时候路过布拉格……”

话还没说完，父亲就被叫走了，我的思绪停留在布拉格上。我有一种莫名其妙的感觉，一幅新颖、奇妙的图景展现在眼前：一座城市沐浴在阳光中，好像是几个世纪之前的夏日阳光仍在这里徘徊。这阳光已经陈旧了，它长年累月承受着夜晚露水的洗涤或突降云雨的冲荡；它照耀着一个布满灰尘、疲惫不堪又历经沧桑的伟大民族，这民族注定要活在陈旧的记忆中，如同那些被废黜、抛弃的国王，他们的金缕玉衣已经变成破衣烂衫。这城市看上去如此干渴，那宽阔的河水在我看来也如同一条金属块儿。沿着那座望不到尽头的桥，我从那些雕塑空洞的眼神下走过。这些雕塑已经发黑，他们穿着古老的衣服，戴着神圣的王冠，在我眼中，他们才是这座城市真正的居民和真正的主人，而那些熙熙攘攘、微不足道的男男女女，他们忙进忙出，其实只是暂时来叨扰这座城的游客。这些表情严肃的石头人，我想，他们是已经故去的古人的祖先，他们矗立在饱受风霜的建筑里拜谒宫廷。这些宫殿曾经繁华却已失色彩，它们的屋顶连成一条单调的天际线。这些雕塑在空气陈旧的教堂里疲惫地做礼拜，他们没有恐惧也没有希望，等待他们的只有衰老却永生的命运。在永恒的白昼下，他们靠着刻板的习俗生活着，没有夜晚的休憩，亦无清晨的新生。

突然一阵金属碰撞的叮当声让我打了一个寒战，屋内的摆设重新出现在我的意识里，原来，皮埃尔开门给我药剂的时候一块火烙铁正好掉落，发出了那声响。我的心脏开始不规则地猛烈跳动，我让皮埃尔把药放在旁边，说我一会就喝。

留我只身一人的时候，我马上开始回想刚才是不是睡着了。这一

切是不是梦境？我对一个陌生城市的幻境竟会如此清晰，此前我从未想象过这样一个城市，幻境却清晰到我能看见一盏星星样式的多彩灯在人行道上洒下了一块彩虹色的光斑。我从未看过关于布拉格的绘画，它在我头脑里只是个名字，我隐隐约约记得一些和它有关的历史事件，一些说不清的帝国辉煌和宗教战争。

我从未做过这样的梦，以往我总是受噩梦侵扰，其他梦的内容杂乱无章，梦到的也是寻常的事物，我常常为此感到不安。但我不相信刚刚我只是睡着了，我清楚地记得那幻境如何一步步降临到我身上，像是在模糊的视线中形成了新的图景，又好似太阳升起时掀开了清晨雾水形成的面纱，大地的景色逐渐清晰。在我开始意识到这幻境的时候，我同时也能感知到，皮埃尔告诉我父亲菲尔莫尔先生正在等他，随后我父亲迅速离开了房间。不，这不是梦，一种让我颤抖的狂喜使我想到，这难道是我体内的诗人本性苏醒了？迄今为止，这诗人的本性只是让我受多愁善感的折磨，如今，它终于要显现为即兴的创造力了吗？是啊，一定是这样，凭着诗人的本性，荷马看到了特洛伊的平原，但丁看到了死者的炼狱，弥尔顿看到了摔向地面的撒旦。难道是疾病给我的体质带来了喜人的变化，让我的神经变得更稳定，带走了体内愚钝的杂质？我读到过这类效果，至少在小说里读过。不，在真实的传记里我也曾读过，某些疾病会让头脑更稳定专注，有些疾病则会升华头脑的活力。诺瓦利斯不是随着肺结核的加重，感到他的灵感也越来越强了吗？

这个幸福的想法一直萦绕在我心头，我觉得我可以通过延伸自己的思维测试一下这种新的能力。幻境出现的时候，我父亲正说到我们要去布拉格。我全然不信，这幻境会是那城市的真实呈现。我相信，或者说我希望，那是我新解放的天才在瞬间描摹出的景象，其中的色彩则来自以往的记忆。如果我让思绪停留在另一座城市上，比如威尼斯，我对它的熟悉远胜过布拉格，也许同样的事情会再次发生。我集中精力将思绪交会在威尼斯上，我调动那些诗意的记忆来激发想象力，努力让自己感到身在威尼斯，如我此前想象身在布拉格一样。然而，没有用。我的头脑只是在为卡纳莱托的版画上色，它们就挂在我那间旧卧室的墙壁上。我脑海中形成的图像并不稳定，而我的头脑不停地找寻更生动的形象，我必须动用必要的手段有意识地努力才能看到形象或光影。这只是我毫无想象力的主动努力，我并没有全神贯注地进入这幅画中，所有的形象也没有不自觉地向我涌来，和半个小时前的那次经历完全不同。我有些灰心，但同时我也知道灵感总是断断续续到来的。

一连几天，我处在兴奋的渴望中，渴望着我的新天赋能再发生一次。我让思绪飘荡在知识的海洋中，希望它能找到某个对象将我沉睡的天才重新唤醒。但是，不，我的世界和从前一样灰暗，那一束神奇

的光没有再来，尽管我怀着颤抖的渴望找寻着它。

每天，父亲都会陪我乘着车游览一段，散一段时间的步，并且随着我逐渐恢复，距离也越来越远。一天傍晚，他和我约好第二天中午十二点接我，我们可以一起去挑音乐盒和富裕的英国人在日内瓦常买的物品。他本就是十分守时的人，放在银行家里，他也算最守时的一个，为此，我总是紧张张张地准备好，在约定的时间等着他。但让我意外的是，到了十二点一刻钟的时候他仍未出现。作为一个正在恢复期的病人，我本就无所事事，而为了支撑自己应对这趟外出，我更是刚刚饮下了一些补药，这使得我越发地不耐烦。

我实在没法坐着保持体力，就在屋里来回踱步，看着窗外的罗纳河从深蓝色的湖水中流出来，脑子里想的是各种可能绊住父亲和我会面的原因。

突然我感觉到父亲到了房子里，但并非独自一人，他身边有两个人。奇怪！我没有听见脚步声，没有看到门打开，但我确实看到了父亲。在他右手边是我们的邻居菲尔莫尔夫人，虽然已经五年没见，我还记得很清楚。她是一个普通的中年女性，身着丝绸和开司米料子的衣服。父亲左手边的女士还不满二十岁，身材高挑、纤细，身姿如柳条一般，一头华丽的金色长发编成俏皮的样式。对那苗条的身材、瘦小的脸庞、薄薄的嘴唇来说，这一头发髻形成的王冠可能过于沉重了。但这脸庞的表情却不是女孩子会有的青涩神情，她棱角分明，暗灰色的眼睛目光锐利、不停地转动，又满是挖苦人的神情。这双眼睛带着几分笑意好奇地打量着我，我感到一种痛苦，好似一股冷风刮伤了我。那暗绿色的裙子、暗绿色的袖子好像在她的淡金色头发旁围成一个边界，让我想到女水妖 [3]，我脑子里满是德语诗歌，这个苍白、有着致命眼神的女人，穿着绿色的衣服，好像从长着莎草的冰冷河水中出生，是一条古老河流的女儿。

“啊，拉蒂默，你一定等我很久了……”父亲说。

在我听到这句话时，眼前所有的人都消失了，我面前除了那扇竖在门口的中国屏风外什么都没有。我感到寒冷，开始打战，只能向前踉跄几步栽进沙发里。这奇怪的新能力再次显现……但这究竟是不是一种能力？这难道不是一种病吗？一种间歇性的狂想症，让我的头脑陷入不健康的活跃状态，让我清醒的时光变得更加贫瘠？我的亲眼所见使我感到一种不真实的晕眩感，我痉挛般地扑向铃铛，好似那要挣脱噩梦的人。我摇了两次铃，皮埃尔一脸惊恐地赶来。

“先生，你不舒服吗？[4]”他焦虑不安地问。

“我不能再等了，皮埃尔。”我说。就像一个醉酒的人努力清醒一样，我用强调的语气尽力把话说得清楚：“我想父亲一定出事了，他

一向守时。快跑去贝尔格酒店看看他在不在那儿。”

皮埃尔立刻走出房间，走时安慰着说了一句“好的，先生 [5] ”。在这简短清醒的对话后，我立刻感觉好了一些。为了进一步安抚自己，我走进和客厅相连的卧室，打开盛放古龙香水的箱子，取出一瓶香水，非常小心地取下软木塞，然后将这提神的液体擦在双手、额头和鼻翼下。我从这香气中得到一种新的喜悦，因为我是用缓慢、细致的动作得到的它，而不是什么奇怪的、突发的疯狂。我已经感到一种恐惧，那种无法适应简单人类生活的人才会有恐惧。

我一边享受着香气，一边走回客厅。和我离开时不同的是，这时客厅里已有人在。在中国屏风前站着的是我父亲，他右手边是菲尔莫尔夫人，而左手边正是那纤瘦的金发女孩儿。女孩儿表情热切、眼神锐利地盯着我，带着几分笑意好奇地打量着我。

“啊，拉蒂默，你一定等我很久了……”父亲说。

我什么都听不见、什么都感觉不到了，直到我重新意识到自己低头躺在沙发上，皮埃尔和父亲在我身边。等我彻底恢复后，父亲走出房间，很快又折回来，说：“我去向女士们告知你的情况，拉蒂默。她们在隔壁屋里等着。今天我们要推迟采购活动了。”

一会儿他说：“那位年轻的女士是伯莎·格兰特，菲尔莫尔夫人的侄女，她是个孤儿。菲尔莫尔一家领养了她，他们住在一起。我们回家后她就是我们的邻居了，也许还能是更近一层的关系。我猜，她和艾尔弗雷德之间有些情愫，既然菲尔莫尔会像对待女儿一样为她提供一切，他们结合我会很高兴。我也是刚想到，你还不知道她和菲尔莫尔一家一起生活了。”

他没提我刚才见到她时晕倒的事儿，我也绝不会告诉他原因□我不愿意向任何人泄露原因，他们很可能把这当成可悲的怪癖，尤其不愿意告诉我父亲，他很可能以后会一直怀疑我精神不正常。

我不想再讲这些经历的细节了。我详细地描述了这两件事，因为这对我后来的人生有确定无疑、清晰可辨的影响。

这次经历之后，很快，我想就是在第二天，我意识到我那病态的敏感性进入了一个新阶段，在我和其他人那些慵懒琐碎的接触中还未曾遇到这种情况。那就是，我的头脑会被他人的大脑活动入侵，一个接一个，凡是我碰巧接触到的人无一例外。那些乏味的相识，比如菲尔莫尔夫人，他们游移不定、无关紧要的想法和情绪，会像一件跑调的乐器纠缠不休地发出怪音，或像一只被困住的昆虫一样弄出大噪声，强行压在我的意识上。不过，这让人不快的敏感只是偶尔发作，只要同伴的灵魂离开我，就能获得片刻安宁，那时，我疲惫的神经就会得到舒缓。如果不是我预见的语言和行动与他人的内心活动确有关

联，我会认为这只是我过于活跃的想象力的又一表现。这强加于我的意识要是来自我不关心的普通人，只会让我疲惫不堪、心烦意乱。可一旦来自与我关系亲密的身边人，这意识会带给我强烈的痛苦与悲伤，如同我撕开他们的灵魂，看到那些理智的谈论、优雅的关切、机智的话语，还有善良的行为——所有这一切构成人性格的网络被一种显微视野撕开——我看到网络背后，那些无聊透顶的愚蠢，那些强忍不发的自我主义，那些幼稚、卑鄙、模糊又反复无常的记忆之间的混乱战争，那些好逸恶劳、没有常性的思绪。在这网络之上，人的语言和行为如叶片一般，而藏在叶片之下的是一个发酵堆。

在巴塞尔，兄长艾尔弗雷德和我们会合了，他如今是一个英俊自信的二十六岁男人了，和虚弱、敏感又无所事事的我形成鲜明对比。我知道，人们眼中的我拥有着半女性化的、魅影般的美色，日内瓦多如牛毛的肖像画家常常请我当模特，在一幅糅合了想象和虚构的日常生活画中，他们还按照我的样子画了一位已故的吟游诗人。可是，我厌恶我的外貌，只有把它当作是诗性天才的一种展现，才能让我与之妥协。可是，如今我也不再怀有这种幻想，我在自己的脸上只能看到一种病态身体的印记，我这种身体生来就只能被动地受罪——一个人要写作诗歌、接受崇高感受必须体魄健壮，过于羸弱的身体是无法承担这一重任的。艾尔弗雷德几乎从小就和我分离，他现在的性格和外形，在我看来尤为陌生，但他尽力对我显出友善的样子，好似一个好兄长。他是一个幽默而自信的人，并且展现出这类性格典型的浮于表面的善意，因此他几乎没有敌人，也从未受到他人的挑战。我知道，以我的性格，即使我们的欲望没有重合，我也还免不了要嫉妒他。或者，假使我是一个健康的人，慷慨自信，又有乐善好施的好品德，我也还是要嫉妒他的。因为，我们天生就在性格上互相排斥。几周来，他成为我憎恨的对象，看到他走进房间，尤其是听到他讲话，我就仿佛听到了金属的摩擦声一般，忍不住地想要磨牙。和其他人相比，我病态的意识更加强烈地专注于他的思想和情绪。他的骄傲自负，他的居高临下，他自以为是地认为伯莎爱他，还有他半是可怜半是轻蔑地对待我，这些都让我恼火气愤。我对这些情绪的感知，不是来自语调、言辞和微小动作，不是心思敏感、天性多疑的人的捕风捉影，而是直接、赤裸裸地感受到了这一切。

我们是敌人，我们的欲望相撞了，尽管他对此还一无所知。我还没有讲过和伯莎·格兰特熟识一些后，她对我造成的影响。之所以如此，主要在于，她是我接触的所有人中唯一的例外，她游离在我那不幸的洞察力天赋之外。关于伯莎我总是处在一种不确信的状态，我可以观察她的面部表情，思考表情的意义；我可以怀着真实的无知询问她对一些事物的看法；我可以听她讲话，带着希冀或恐惧找寻她的微笑。对我来说，她具有一种无法被看透命运的魅力。我说过，伯莎对

我的影响主要源于她的这种例外，因为，抽象而言，对于一个羞怯、爱空想又情绪激动的年轻人而言，伯莎几乎能算得上最没有魅力的那一类女性。她头脑锐利，态度讥讽，缺乏想象力，过早地愤世嫉俗，对所有壮丽的场景都不为所动，始终保持批评态度。她喜欢肢解我钟爱的所有诗歌，对德国诗歌尤其轻蔑不屑，须知德国诗歌可是我那时的心头肉。当时，我还没办法弄清我对她是种什么样的感情。这不是一种普通的少年崇拜，因为她，包括她头发的颜色在内，她的一切都是我理想中美好女性的对立面。她无意追求崇高、实现美善，而这两点，即使是在我最迷恋她的时候，也始终是最看重的品格。但是，一个人要是有着病态敏感的天性，又无时无刻不渴望得到他人的同情和支持，那么，她这样一个自私自利、缺乏热情的人就能如暴君般控制这个人。在独立自信的人看来，一个人的沉默不语可以为他的意见增值。要是能征服一个吹毛求疵、讽刺挖苦的批评家，他就会感到额外的胜利感。这也无怪，在一位充满热情又深陷自我怀疑的青年眼中，坚守内心秘密的女性之脸就会变成神龛，他会观察、守候着这张脸，就像这神龛里供奉的是掌握他命运的善良神明。那激情澎湃的年轻人无法想象，引得自己热血沸腾的那个人居然内心毫无波澜，在感情上麻木不仁。他想，的确，她的情绪可能有些虚弱，若隐若现，也不大活跃，但她一定是具备这些情绪的，它们可以随时被调动起来。有时，在幸福的妄想中他甚至认为，既然他看不到丝毫的情绪表现，也许她内在的情绪力量更为强大。这种效果，如我所言，在我身上激起了最强烈的感受，伯莎是我唯一无法探究其秘密的人，我对她少年的幻想才得以维持。毫无疑问，我对她的痴迷也有另一些因素，那微妙的身体吸引会欺骗我们，让我们对她们产生错误的心理预期，让那些画精灵的画家爱上与精灵大相径庭的凶悍、肥胖且满脸雀斑的女人。

当时，我并不相信她真的打算嫁给我兄长，因为尽管他百般殷勤地待她，尽管他和父亲已决定促成这段良缘，但毕竟两人之间还没有公开地谈及婚嫁，还没有明确地对外宣布。伯莎习惯性地和我的兄长打情骂俏，接受他的殷勤，这一举动透露出她知道他的心意。但是，她最微妙的表情与言辞□女性的一些无可指摘的小细节，却让我认为，其实她暗地里在取笑他，她认为他和我一样，也是一个花花公

子，她以令其扫兴为乐。当着我兄长的面，她会公开地爱抚我，仿佛我过于年轻、过于虚弱，根本不会被看成一位情人，这正符合兄长眼中我的形象。但我相信，每当她用玩笑的态度一边轻轻拍着我的卷发一边取笑我的引语，她的内心一定为她在她身上所激起的波澜感到快乐。只有当着朋友们的面她才会这样抚摸我，我们二人独处时，她反倒会与我离得远些。她还会时不时地抓住机会，在语言和行动上刺激我，让我愚蠢又怯懦地期待着，她对我怀有胜于兄长的感情。她为何不听从心意呢？和我兄长比，我的条件没有那么优越，不过，我也有一笔财富，比她年轻不到一岁，何况，她也能够继承财产，并且很快就将进入可以自己做选择的年龄。

我时而充满希望，时而充满恐惧，我被她如此控制，在她身边的每一天都是甜蜜的折磨。她干下的一件事尤其让我为她发狂。我们在维也纳的那段时间恰逢她二十岁生日，她非常喜欢首饰，我们大家都竭力在这座日耳曼巴黎城的珠宝商铺挑选珠宝，作为她的生日礼物。我准备的礼物自然不是最昂贵的，礼物是一枚蛋白石戒指。蛋白石是我最钟爱的宝石，它如同有灵魂一般，会害羞脸红，也会变得苍白。在把礼物送给伯莎时，我这样向她解释着，并且还告诉她蛋白石象征着诗人的天性，会随着天光的变化和女人眼波的流转而起伏。傍晚时，她着装典雅，招摇地穿戴上所有生日礼物，却唯独没有戴我赠予她的那份礼物。我满眼热切地盯着她的手指，却找不到那块蛋白石。那天晚上我没有机会问她，到了第二天，我看她早餐后独自坐在窗边，就对她说：“你不屑于戴我那可怜兮兮的蛋白石。我本该记得，你是看不起诗人天性的。我本该送你珊瑚或者绿松石的，或者其他什么不透明、不会变化的石头，那就好了。”“我看不起？”她一边答道，一边从胸口拉出那条她常戴在脖子上的细细的金链，项链的尾端挂着我送她的戒指。“说实在的，它有点儿弄疼我了，”她带着她常有的暧昧微笑说，“我把它戴在了那么隐秘的地方，不过，既然你诗人的天性如此愚钝，竟然希望我把它戴在外面，我可不受这份罪了。”

她把戒指从项链上取下，戴在手指上，仍旧挂着那种微笑。我顿时感到血涌上我的脸颊，想恳求她照原样戴它，可是一句话也讲不出来。

这件事彻底愚弄了我。两天来，只要伯莎不在，我就把自己锁在屋里反复回味这个让我痴迷的场景，回味它隐含的各种意义。

这里我要提一句，两个月来，我经历的快乐和痛苦是如此强烈、如此新奇，我感觉好像过了漫长的一生。这段时间，我病态地参与他人的头脑活动，持续地受此折磨，一会儿是我的父亲，一会儿是我兄长，一会儿是菲尔莫尔夫人或是她的丈夫，一会儿又是我们的德国向导，他们的意识流涌向我，如同无法摆脱的耳鸣声。不过，我自己的

冲动和思想是不受这些干扰的。这就好像我的听力得到超自然力量的加强，别人感觉寂静无声，在我听来却是震耳欲聋。我被迫卷入他人的灵魂，这给我带来的疲惫和恶心只有一种办法可以消除，那就是我对伯莎的无知，还有我对她日渐增长的激情——我对她的无知极大地助长了这激情，抑或是，这激情就源于我对她的无知。在可怕的已知沙漠中，她是我神秘的绿洲。我从不让自己的病态显露出来，也不会说反常的话、做反常的事，只有一次例外，那时我对兄长怀着尤其强烈的敌意，我聪明地预见到他准备好打算说的话，先他一步说了出来。有时，他说话会装腔作势地停顿一下，他刚说到第二个词就停下来，我对他既不耐烦又很嫉妒，就顺口说出他后面的话，好像我们两人都提前背好了词。转眼间，他的脸色就变了，看上去十分震惊，也很懊恼。我刚说完话就感到了警觉，这话出现在这个情境中绝非理所当然，不可能随意猜到，我唯恐对他语言的预测会暴露我是一个特殊的人，一个看似安静却被恶魔附体的人，这样的人会让所有人惊恐、避之不及，尤其是伯莎。不过，和往常一样，我还是高估了我的言行对他人的影响，所有人都把我的打断视为一次粗俗无礼的行为，看在我神经脆弱的面子上原谅了我。

对现实世界附加的意识几乎时时刻刻纠缠着我，不过，和伯莎第一次见面时的那种清晰的预见却没有再发生过，与此同时，我急不可耐地想知道我对布拉格的预见是否真实。在我送出蛋白石戒指之后不久，我们再一次游览了曾多次造访的利希滕山宫殿。我一向不能连续地欣赏多幅绘画，因为绘画，只要是有力量的绘画，一两幅作品就会耗尽我的精力，使我无法继续思考。这天早晨，我一直在欣赏乔尔乔内的那幅画，画中女人长着可怕的眼睛，人们说这是卢克雷齐娅·波吉亚的画像。我驻足在画作前，慢慢地欣赏它。画像中那张面孔狡黠、无情得过于真实，这让我着迷。突然，一种奇特而有害的感受向我袭来，好像长久以来我吸入了致命的毒气，毒气就要发作。也许当时若不是大家决定离开，我根本就不会从那张画像前抽身。艾尔弗雷德和菲尔莫尔先生为一幅肖像画打了赌，大家决定去贝尔维迪尔画廊看看究竟谁胜谁负。我迷迷糊糊地跟着大家，对周身的一切没有了知觉，直到大家都走去画廊，我就不再继续跟着了——我不愿再看画了。我走向大阳台，大家商量好，他们两人解决矛盾的时候其他人可以在花园里散步。我坐在这里小憩，对周围花园的意识已经模糊了，远处是城市和绿色的山丘。为了躲避走来的哨兵，我起身走到开阔的石头路上，想到花园的边上坐一坐。正当我走上沙砾小路的时候，我感到一只手臂挽着我的手臂，一只纤细小手轻轻搂着我的腰。同时，一种叫人痴醉的麻木感席卷我的全身，就像我在卢克雷齐娅·波吉亚的注视下所产生的那种感受的延续，或者说这正是那种感受的高潮。花园、夏日的天空，我对伯莎的手臂挽着我手臂的意识，所有这一切都消失了，我好像一下子掉入了黑暗，从中逐渐升起一个微小的火光，

我感觉，我身处家中的书房，正坐在父亲的皮椅上。有我熟悉的壁炉□旁边是喜欢看柴火燃烧的狗们□黑色大理石烟囱中间是白色大理石徽章，徽章中心描画的是垂死的克利奥佩特拉。强烈而无望的痛苦压迫着我的灵魂，这时火光更明亮了些，是伯莎持着一柄蜡烛走近我□伯莎，我的妻子，有着一双残酷冷漠的眼睛，戴着绿色的宝石，白色的礼服裙子也镶着绿色的边，她头脑里每一个憎恨的想法都呈现在我面前：“疯子，白痴！你怎么不自杀呢？……”那一刻我如同身在地狱。我看到她的灵魂毫无怜悯心，满是赤裸裸的恶俗和尖酸刻薄的仇恨，也感到这灵魂如空气般包裹着我，而我不得不呼吸这样的空气。为什么她手里拿着蜡烛，站在我面前，用那冷酷而轻蔑的眼睛盯着我看？而她胸前那闪闪发光的蛇，像一个似曾相识的魔鬼。我周身颤抖，我鄙视这个女人赤裸的灵魂、刻薄的思想。但我在她面前感到无力，滴血的心脏似乎被她紧紧攥着，她仿佛要一直攥着这心脏，直到它流尽最后一滴鲜血。她是我的妻子，可我们憎恨着彼此。渐渐地，壁炉、昏暗的藏书室、蜡烛的光亮都消失了，它们都淹没在背景的光亮中，留在视网膜上的黑色图像只有那条钻石眼睛的绿蛇。随后，我感到自己的眼睑在颤抖，白昼的光重新打亮我，我看到了花园，我听到了说话声，我坐在贝尔维迪尔的台阶上，我的朋友们就在身边。

这次丑陋的预见扰得我心绪不宁，我一连生病了好几天，让我们在维也纳多待了些时日。这次场景不断重现，让我惊恐万分，而且所有微小的细节也跟着不断重现，好像它们已经烙印在我的记忆里。然而，人类心灵的疯狂就在于它受短暂欲望的驱使，一想到伯莎就要属于我，我就感到一种疯狂的、地狱般的快乐，因为她第一次出现在我面前的那个预见已成现实，这让我确信，我对未来的可怕预见并非我病态头脑的游戏，与外在现实没有联系。只有一件事可能挑战我那可怕的预见力，那就是我对布拉格的预见是错误的，而布拉格就是我们下一站行程要去的城市，我对此十分期待。

直到我恢复了此前对伯莎的痴迷，我才重新与她接触。我害怕我会在她心里读到那个成熟的伯莎，那个作为我妻子的伯莎的想法。伯莎，这个年轻的女子，她的内心对我来说仍是秘密□我会在她的抚摸下颤抖，她在我身边我就着迷，我渴望能确认她对我的爱。在干渴的感受面前，毒药也变得不足为惧了。不，我和以前一样嫉妒我的兄长，和以前一样对他那种居高临下的做事方式感到不快，我的自尊心、我病态的敏感性和以前一样，对任何冒犯行为都无可救药地畏缩惧怕，即使是一粒灰尘掉入眼睛也会畏缩惧怕。未来，不过是一个想法，即使对未来的预见让我颤抖，和当下感情的力量□我对伯莎的爱，我对兄长的厌恶和嫉妒相比，也不足道。

老故事说，人们把自己卖给了古老的诱惑者撒旦，用血签订了契约，便冲向那杯满足他们灵魂饥渴的酒。他们认为后果只会发生在遥

远的将来。这种激情野蛮而强烈，并不因为一个黑暗的影子要从此跟随在他们身边而怯懦分毫。通向智慧的道路没有捷径，没有已经铺好的路，几百年来我们有无数的创造发明，但直到今天，我们的灵魂仍须走在满是荆棘的荒野之地，必须孤独地踩在这样的土地上，脚上鲜血淋漓，哭泣着喊着求救，正如我们的先辈所艰难探索的那样。

我头脑里琢磨着如何才能战胜我的情敌——我的兄长，我还是那么胆小，不知道伯莎真实的感受，不敢贸然采取行动，让她主动说明心意。我想，如果我对布拉格的预见是真的，我就会对伯莎对我的感情有更多的自信。然而，我又怕预见是真的！我仔细观察她的言辞、表情。她的抚摸是我的福音，但在这瘦弱的伯莎身后始终站着那个丰满些的伯莎，她有严苛的眼神、冷酷的嘴唇，我看透她赤裸裸的自私灵魂，她不再是那个迷人的秘密，而是一个看得清清楚楚的事实，这事实不断压迫着我的眼界。读到此处的读者，你难道不同情我吗？你难道想象不出，在我体内有两种意识同时存在，如同两条平行流淌的河流，永远不会融汇在一起，不会披上同一个色彩？不过，你一定理解，预见与激情相撞会产生的那种不祥感受，我的预见就如同这不祥预感一般，只是更为强烈而转变为了一种恐惧。你也一定理解，和冲动相比，思想是多么无力，一旦将预见储存为记忆，它们也就化为思想，如影子一般苍白无力，可我的手却由那些鲜活的、我所爱的人紧握着。

在后来的日子里，我怀着悔恨想，如果当初我预见的内容丰富些，或者预见到的是别的事物——如果当初我的预见没有那么丑陋，它毒化了激情却不足以杀死激情，又或者除了我所见的，我能预见到我和兄长生前最后一次相见的情景，一种柔和的力量就会改变我对他的感情——骄傲和憎恨就会转化为怜悯，我对他隐藏的罪恶也会减少。不过，这只是我们人类聊以自慰的东西。我们试图相信，我们内在的自我本可以轻易融化，只是自身知识的浅薄才会妨碍我们的慷慨、我们的敬畏、我们的虔诚，妨碍我们对同伴施以同情。一旦我们终结了自我主义，我们就会变得温柔，变得愿意为他人奉献。我身上的自我主义是以这种方式终结的，我对胜利的苦苦追求是由另一个人的失败促成的，这胜利来得突然，让我打冷战，因为它是死神冰冷的手带来的。

我们到达布拉格的时候正值夜晚时分，我很高兴，这意味着几个小时里我们都看不清这座城市，那个决定我命运的可怕时刻就会迟些到来。由于我们在布拉格不会久留，要很快赶去德累斯顿，大家提议第二天一早出发浏览一下城市全貌，赶在暑气上升前去看一些特别重要的景点，因为当时正值八月，天气又热又干。不过，到了那天早晨，女士们梳洗得很迟，我父亲压着火，尽量表现得客客气气，大家还是能看出他这份不满，直到上午晚些时候我们才上了马车。走进犹

太人区的时候，我的心情略感快慰。我们原计划参观那古老的犹太会堂，它位于城市中一个平整、封闭的地方，我原以为大家会在这里一直待到又累又热无法游览的时候，那样我们就会匆匆返回，就会错过沿途街道的景色。这样，我就又拥有一天的悬念□对一个充满恐惧的灵魂来说，只有悬念能带来一些慰藉的希望。不过，当我站在这座犹太会堂那些黑色带穹棱的拱顶下时，圣灯七柄瘦弱的蜡烛照出犹太会堂微弱的轮廓，我们的犹太导游伸手拿起律法书，用古老的语言读给我们听□我感到一阵颤抖，这座奇怪的建筑及其微弱的灯，这座中世纪犹太教幸存下来的有些凋敝的古迹，都与我之前的预见有着相同的特征。那些有点儿变黑的、布满尘土的基督教圣人像立在高大的穹顶之下，被硕大的蜡烛点亮，它们在人们心中激起一种带有宽慰的轻蔑，又带着这种轻蔑看向更加枯竭、地狱般的人间。

如我所料，我们一离开犹太人区，年长的人就要回酒店。但现在，和预想的不同，我没有为此高兴，相反，我有一种压倒一切的冲动要赶去看那座桥，立刻终结我一直想要推延的悬念。我异常坚定地告诉大家，我要下马车一个人走走，他们不必带我先回去。我父亲认为，这不过是我那“诗人胡闹”的又一例证，他反对我独自一人在暑天散步，这会伤害我的身体。见我坚持，他生气地说，我尽可以由着性子无理取闹，但施密特（我们的向导）必须跟着我。我同意这个安排，和施密特出发去看那座桥。我正穿过一座雄伟壮观的古老大门的拱道，这拱道直通那座桥，突然被一种颤抖附身，正午的炎炎烈日之下我感到一股冰冷。但我继续前行，我在找寻某样东西，一个能唤回那次预见景象的某样东西。就是它□一盏星星样式的多彩灯在人行道上洒下一块块彩虹色的光斑。

第二章

秋日结束之前，庄园里山毛榉的棕色树叶仍繁茂地挂在树梢上，兄长和伯莎订婚了，大家都觉得，来年春天早些时候他们会举行婚礼。除了在布拉格的那座桥上的一瞬间我确定伯莎有一天会成为我的妻子，其余时刻，我体质中的胆小多疑仍然使我不敢行动，我反复练习爱的表白，却一直说不出口。我内心深处的矛盾仍旧存在，我既渴求伯莎能亲口吐露对我的爱，又害怕她的蔑视和拒绝会像酸一样腐蚀我。即便对遥远的未来有十足的把握，又有什么用呢？我颤抖于当下的眼神，我饥渴于当下的快乐，我受制于当下的恐惧。就这样，日子一天天过去了：我目睹了伯莎的订婚，听人们谈论着她的婚事。仿佛我身处一个清醒的噩梦中，我知道这个梦会消失，可我像被他人扼住喉咙一般无法呼吸。

我经常和伯莎在一起，她带着几分戏谑对我屈尊降贵，我们在一

起也不会招致兄长的嫉妒。我不在她身边时，白天的时光都用来游荡、散步或远足，或者把自己和那些并没有在读的书关在一起□书已经无法吸引我的注意力了。我的自我意识已经到达无以复加的强度，我的情绪会上演戏剧，强迫进入我的思想，对痛苦的思考□而不是痛苦本身□令我落泪。我为自己命运的悲壮感到哀伤沉痛，这命运精心设计好如何让我痛苦，却没理清怎么让我快乐，对我来说，未来的罪恶剥夺了我此时此刻的欢愉，未来的美好却不能安抚我此时此刻的渴求与恐惧。在这苦行中，真正的诗人会感受到咏诵大量诗句带来的甜美，也会为他的种种悲伤塑造意象，但我却只是沉默地忍受着。

我如此醉生梦死地度日，却没有任何人来责备我，我知道父亲是怎么看我的：“那孩子终究一事无成，他会在无关紧要的事儿上浪费大把青春，靠着留给他的一点儿收入生活，我是不会操心为他谋一个职业的。”

十一月初的一个和煦的早晨，碰巧我站在门廊外轻抚那条懒散的老狗恺撒。这是一条老得几乎要瞎的纽芬兰狗，是唯一一条亲近我的狗□狗一般都会绕开我，到身边更快乐的人们那里摇尾乞怜。这时，马夫把兄长那匹狩猎时骑的马牵来。兄长也来到门口，他容光焕发、胸膛宽厚、自信十足，他自我感觉真是一个不错的人，他本可以靠着他的本钱更傲慢无礼地对待我们的。

“拉蒂默，老伙计，”他带着几分同情和热忱对我说，“真遗憾啊，你不经常带着猎狗跑一跑！对情绪低落的人来说，这可是世上最好的事儿！”

“情绪低落！”看着他走远，我愤怒地想，“这就是你这种粗俗狭隘的人会用的词儿，用来描述你理解不了的东西，你和你的马一样蠢。对你们这样的人而言，世上的好事便是心甘情愿的无聊、心智健康的自私以及伪装成好脾气的自满，而这些就是你们通向幸福的关键。”

很快我就想到，我比他更自私，只不过我的自私会带来痛苦，不会带来享受。但是，我恼怒地洞察到艾尔弗雷德那自负的灵魂，他没有怀疑也没有恐惧，没有未满足的渴望，亦无多愁善感导致的折磨，这些却构成了我生活的网络，这割断了我与他所有的感情纽带。这个男人无须怜悯，无须爱，他感受不到这些高尚的力量，如同岩石感受不到晶莹露水的轻抚。他不会遇到什么不幸的事情，要是他没有和伯莎结婚，也是因为他找到了更舒服的生活。

离我们的大门不足半里远就是菲尔莫尔先生的房子，每次我一得知兄长去了别处，就跑去看伯莎是否在家。那天晚些时候我走去那里。非常凑巧她独自一人在家，难得我们一起到开阔的场地上散步，而她平时则鲜少踏足整齐的碎石子路之外的地方。我记得，十一月份

低沉的阳光照在她金色的头发上，在我眼里她如同一个美丽的精灵，她轻快地边走边跳，和平时一样和我开玩笑，有时我听得很高兴，有时我听得很难过，这就是伯莎那谜一样的内在自我显露给我的样子。今天，难过的情绪占了上风，刚刚和兄长分开时他那颐指气使的劲儿让我嫉妒、憎恨。突然，我打断她，几乎用一种粗暴的态度对她说：“伯莎，你怎么可以爱艾尔弗雷德？”这话吓了她一跳。

她惊讶地看了我一会儿，很快恢复了淡淡的微笑，讥讽地回答：“为什么你会觉得我爱他？”

“你怎么能这么问，伯莎？”

“怎么？你的聪明才智告诉我我必须爱我未来的丈夫？那可是世上最难过的事。我可能会和他争吵，我可能会为他充满嫉妒，我可能会把家务弄得一团糟。轻微而默不作声的蔑视能让生活优雅许多。”

“伯莎，这不是你真实的感受。你为什么以欺骗我为乐，编造这愤世嫉俗的说辞？”

“我不需要费这个劲儿撒谎来骗你，我的小塔索 [6]（这是她取笑我时经常叫的名字）。欺骗一个诗人的最好办法是告诉他实话。”

她正十分大胆地测试这警句的真实性，有那么一瞬间，我预见的影子——那个我已经洞悉其灵魂的伯莎——出现在我和这个光彩照人的女孩儿之间，这嬉笑精灵的感情对我仍是个谜。我想我可能身体发抖了，或者用什么别的方式泄露了我这一瞬间的恐惧。

“塔索！”她说，抓住我的手臂，看着我的脸，“你真的开始觉察出我是一个铁石心肠的女孩儿了吗？我想，你连半个诗人都不配当，你居然会相信我说的实话。”

游荡在我们之间的那个影子离开了。面前的这个女孩儿纤细的手指握着我，她精灵般有魅力的脸庞望着我的脸庞——我想，她正对我流露出一种此前从未公开承认的兴趣——这个呼吸温暖的人又一次占据了感官和想象力，她犹如一段仙人的乐章，刚刚有那么一瞬，这乐章被汹涌的海浪声盖过，如今这乐章又回来了。这一瞬间甘之若饴，我仿佛是一个青年人，做了中年人的梦，醒来发现自己仍是青年人一样。我忘记了一切，只记得我的激情，我眼含热泪地说：“伯莎，你能在我们新婚时爱我吗？哪怕你的爱只是那么一会儿，我也会高兴的。”

她十分震惊，放开我的手离开了我，这让我马上意识到自己的古怪和罪恶的轻率。

“原谅我，”等我恢复了说话能力后，我马上说，“我不知道我在说什么。”

“啊，塔索疯狂的症状又开始了，我明白了，”她平静地答道□她比我恢复得快，“让他回家吧，让他头脑变得清醒吧。我必须回家了，太阳要落山了。”

我离开了她，对自己满是懊恼。如果她细想我的失言，可能认为我的精神状态不正常，这是我最怕的一种怀疑。除此之外，我为刚才明目张胆的卑鄙行径感到羞愧，我居然对兄长的未婚妻说出这样的话。我缓慢地游荡回家，没有从大门的门房走，而是通过一扇小门走进庄园。我走近房子的时候看到一个人全速从马厩跑出来穿过庄园。家里难道出事了吗？不，可能只是我父亲又蛮横地做了什么安排。尽管如此，我没有什么明确的目的，还是加快了脚步，很快我就到家了。我就不描述家里发生的事情了。我的兄长去世了□他从马上摔下来，当场死于脑震荡。

我走进他躺着的屋子，父亲坐在他身边，脸上是沉痛的绝望。自从我们回家后，我一直躲避着父亲，我们的天性存在着巨大差异，对他内心世界的窥视会给我带来持续的痛苦。但是眼下，我走近他，悲伤地站在他身边，一句话也没说，我感到一种全新的因素把我们融为一体，我们以前从未如此亲近。我的父亲在这巧取豪夺的金钱世界属于那种最成功的人士，他从未体验过多愁善感的痛苦，也不曾忍受疾病。他所经历过的最大的痛苦就是他第一位妻子的死亡。不过，他随后很快与我母亲结婚，据那时年幼的我的观察，小时候母亲去世后一周，他就恢复如常了。但眼下，终于，他也感到了悲痛□人老年时的悲剧尤其痛苦，骄傲与希望有多狭隘、有多单调，骄傲与希望的毁灭就会带来多大的打击。他的儿子马上就要结婚了，下次选举时还很有可能当选区代表。这样一个儿子本身就是他每年购买土地、壮大宅院的最大动力。要是没有个动力，失去了目的，年复一年做着同样的事就是苦差。也许，年迈时世俗中的悲剧要比青年时代失落的激情所带来的悲剧要更加痛苦。

我看到父亲心中的孤寂，对他产生了深切的同情，这引发了一种全新的感情。这段感情不断地成长壮大，尽管在兄长去世后的一两个月里他用一种怪异的憎恨表情看待我，也不曾阻碍我对他感情的日渐深厚。若不是因为我对他的同情软化了我□这是我第一次体会到深刻的同情□我就会被他的态度刺伤。他把长子的继承权移交给了我，仿佛忍受着命运的强迫，命运强迫他必须把我当作一个重要的人来照顾，这让他感到受辱不悦。他不是出于自愿，而是出于责任，开始为我忧虑。死亡空出了一个位子，让一个被父母忽视的孩子得到了垂爱，想必所有拥有类似经历的孩子都能理解我此时的处境。

出于同情我对他也很有耐心，这使得我处处遵从他的意愿，逐渐地赢得了他的青睐。虽然我比兄长的性格懦弱些，但他开始努力让我

尽量填补兄长的位置并以此为乐。而逐渐地，他也开始接受我成为伯莎的丈夫这一不断浮现的可能，他甚至想让我和他的儿媳伯莎同他一起生活，这是他不曾为我兄长考虑过的。我对父亲的温柔感情使得这段时光成为自我童年时代以来最快乐的时间。这也是最后的几个月里，我得以保留了对伯莎爱的甜美幻觉，我渴望，我怀疑，我希冀她能爱我。自我兄长去世后，她意识到了什么新的可能，和我保持着距离。同样，我也被一种双重的约束限制着，一方面我要小心处置跟兄长有关的记忆，另一方面我担忧她会怎么看待我说过的那些唐突话。但是，我们各自的缄默竖立起的额外屏障，反而让我更为她神魂颠倒。□无论人的内在如何贫瘠，只要这面纱足够厚实。我们的灵魂需要一些隐秘、不确定的东西来维持怀疑、维持希望、维持努力，这些就是生命的氧气。如果今天以后的整个未来都在我们面前展开，全人类的兴趣就会凝聚在明天到来之前的这几个小时，我们会拼命追逐这最后一个清晨、最后一个下午；我们会勇猛地冲进交易所做最后一次投机，以把握住最后一次胜利或最后一次失望；我们会在预言到来前拥有大量的政治先知，预测仅存的二十四小时中的一次危机或一次和平。想象一下，对人类头脑来说，如果一切命题都不证自明，只有一个例外，唯有等到夏日终结才能弄清这个命题，那么在等待的这段时间里，这唯一的命题就会成为所有疑问、所有假说、所有辩论的中心。艺术与哲学、文学与科学，都会如蜜蜂一般围绕这个命题，这命题包裹着如甘甜蜂蜜般的不确定性，而鉴于落日时分他们的快乐就要终结，他们对这一命题便更加热切。我们的动机、我们的精神活动不会因这一命题未来的虚无而休止，只要我们的心脏还在跳动，只要我们的肌肉还能感受刺激，这种精神活动就会延续。

伯莎，这纤瘦、浅色头发的女孩儿，在这一刻，她的思想和情绪对我而言都还是谜。对我这能看透身边人的头脑、疲惫不堪的人来说，她是那唯一有吸引力的“今日”，是日落之前都能保持神秘的“假想命题”，是我天性中所有的坚信和怀疑唯一而狭窄的出口，我的信赖和猜忌纷纷涌向她。

她使我相信她是爱我的。她没有改变之前打趣的语气和那半开玩笑、高人一等的态度，却能弄得我神魂颠倒，让我以为她离不开我，只要我不在身边她就寝食难安，我心甘情愿地臣服于她这戏谑的暴君。一个女人竟能如此轻易地迷惑我们！只要话说一半，来一次出人意外的沉默，甚至轻而易举地演一出无理取闹，就能让我们像服用了大麻一样飘飘然。除了微妙的、不易察觉的种种迹象外，她还为我编织出了一个幻想，那就是，一直以来在潜意识里她爱我胜于爱艾尔弗雷德。不过，像我兄长这样闯荡世界的男人的青睐，对于她这样一个无知又焦虑敏感的年轻女性而言，有着巨大的吸引力。她优雅地自嘲她的虚荣和野心。除了我兄长自身的优点，我现在占有了他一切的优

势，而即使我曾经在预见这一刻时怀有忧愁，又有什么关系呢？在我们甜美的幻觉中，我们不也没有忘记真实的残酷吗？就好像看着美妙的光影时，我们也没有忘记它们是由华而不实的玻璃碎屑发出的。

艾尔弗雷德去世十八个月后，四月一个寒冷萧瑟的早晨我们结婚了。那天既有冰雹也有阳光，伯莎穿着白色丝绸的衣裙，上面有着淡绿色边饰，她的头发和脸庞略显苍白，整个人看上去如同清晨的仙子。我父亲比他预想的还要高兴：他确信，婚礼会把我的性格最终改造成他想要的样子，让我学会务实，变得通人情，这样才能在心智正常的社会中立足。伯莎的世故圆滑、敏捷机智颇得他的欢心，他确信，我一定会受她约束，变成她想要的样子，因为我只有二十一岁，疯狂地爱着她。可怜的父亲！他的这些愿望仅仅维持到我们婚后一年，当时我们的感情还没有完全消散，而父亲在这时中风，也不会饱受失望之苦。

随后发生的故事我要快些讲了，不能如之前那般描述我的内心经验了。我们要像人们熟识后那样，只谈论外部发生了什么，内在的感受和情绪只留待推测。

我们回家后，每日宾客盈门、迎来送往，家里举办了许多奢华的晚宴，我们新置办的用具光鲜亮丽，引得邻居们十分艳羡。我父亲一直隐藏着他日益增长的财富，直到我的婚礼期间才展现出来。熟人们尽可以自由地品评，我这个继承人、新郎官身材过于弱不禁风。这样的日子使我精疲力竭，人们的虚情假意和陈词滥调我都得忍受两遍，内心世界和外在世界各自经历一遍，若不是我仍沉浸在初恋的甜美醉意中，这些事情都会令我抓狂。一对新郎和新娘，被象征财富的种种奢华包裹，整日在社交生活中忙碌，抓住仅有的独处时间仓促爱抚。他们如此为未来的婚姻生活做准备，如同即将进入修道院的新人在最后一刻花天酒地□体验着现在与未来极大的反差。

在这门庭若市令人兴奋的几个月里，伯莎的内在自我仍旧隐藏在我的洞察之外，我仍旧只能通过她的言谈举止推测她的思想，我仍旧十分好奇我的言语、行为是否取悦她，仍旧渴望听她讲一句亲密的话，仍旧夸张地解读她微笑背后的深意。不过，我已经觉察出她对我的态度变了。有时候，她的态度真是傲慢无礼、冰冷僵硬，如同我们婚礼那天上午穿透阳光的冰雹，她的寒冷刺骨伤透了我的心，这种变化只能从她巧妙地回避与我单独散步、单独共进晚餐中体会出来，而这些原本都是我所期盼的。这些深深地伤害了我，我的心灵从未遭受过如此打击，我预感到快乐的生活即将结束了。不过，我仍旧依靠着伯莎，渴望享受幸福的最后一缕光辉。尽管这光辉就要永远地消逝了，我仍旧渴望着、找寻着夕阳那因为降临的夜晚而更显魅力的余晖。

我记得，我怎么能忘呢？依赖与希望彻底摒弃我的那个时刻，伯莎对我日渐疏远。这原本造成了我的痛苦，在那一刻看来，却变成了快乐，如一个肢体瘫痪的人留恋最后一次感到疼痛一般。这一刻发生在父亲的最后一次病痛结束之后。父亲最后一次生病时，我们不得不远离社交生活，只剩下彼此相互依偎。一切都发生在父亲去世的那天傍晚。那天晚上，一直遮蔽伯莎灵魂的面纱第一次被掀开了。在我身边的所有人中，唯有这面纱被赋予了神秘、怀疑和期盼的可能性。也许，自我爱她以来，那天是第一次，我对她的爱恋被另外一种更深邃的感情冲淡了。父亲去世时，我一直守候在那张床前：我目睹了他的灵魂最后一次颤抖地回顾他一生挥霍的财富，我紧握住他的手让他最后一次体会到爱。当我们体会到了那极致的痛苦时，我们个人的恋爱又算些什么呢？而当我们再次从死亡面前走开，在我们的体验中，我们与每一个生者的关系就变成了整个自然和人类整体命运的一部分。

我抱着这种想法，走去伯莎的起居室找她。她背对着门，身体前倾靠在沙发椅上，从沙发椅的后面能看到她浓密的淡黄色卷发垂肩，衬出她纤细的脖子。我记得，我转身关门的一刹那，一股寒意侵袭了我，我开始颤抖，模模糊糊地感到我遭人怨恨、深陷孤独，这感受虽然模糊却很强烈，好像一种预兆。我知道那一刻我是什么神情，因为，伯莎抬起冷酷的灰色眼睛望着我时，我洞见到她如何看我：在她眼中，我是一个可怜的幽灵预见者，青天白日里我被鬼魂缠身，树叶纹丝不动时一阵阴风却让我战栗不止，我对人们寻常渴望的事物一概没有兴趣，却热切地追求那月光。我们面对面僵持着，审判着对方。可怕的光明终于降临到我身上，在这光明下我清楚地看到，遮蔽着我灵魂的那一团黑暗之后并没有一处田园风景，只有一堵空虚无聊的墙。那以后，在越发令人厌恶的岁月中，我彻底看清这个女人狭隘的灵魂，看清那些卑微的小诡计、无聊的小脾气。曾经，我愿意相信，这些都只是忸怩的多愁善感，是智慧和潜在的情感发生冲突时的表现。我看到，少女的那几许轻柔飘浮的虚荣心已转变为女人的伎俩，转变为精心设计的卖弄风情、诡计多端的自私自利。我看到，少女的厌恶和反感转变为女性的残忍憎恨，仅仅为了自己发脾气而给别人施加痛苦。

伯莎，按她自己的感受来说，也吃到了幻想破灭的苦头。她本以为，疯狂的诗人激情会让我成为她的奴隶，这样，作为她的奴隶我会按照她的心意办事。以她最为浅薄、缺乏想象力的本性，她不知道，多愁善感的人并非性格软弱。她本以为，我的无能会将我置于她的股掌之中，却发现我并不轻易顺从她。我们的位置调过来了。结婚前，她完全控制了我的想象力，那是因为她对我是个谜，我看不透她，我造出一种思想安在她身上当成是她的，并为此颤抖癫狂。现如今，她的灵魂一览无余，我被迫知道了她隐秘的动机，知道她说话办事前的

所有小伎俩，除了让我感到寒心、厌恶外，她对我无能为力。她无能为力，是因为她没有逼我就范的筹码。我没有野心在世俗中争得上游，无意于在社交生活中左右逢源，她那狭隘的头脑能想象到的所有诱惑我都无动于衷，因此，我究竟为什么而活，她根本想不出。

有这样一个丈夫，她真是可怜，全世界都这么想。一个像伯莎这样典雅、美妙的女人，她在清晨时对唤醒她的仆人报以微笑，在舞会上展现身姿风采，能够机敏地应答——这一点在外人看来是女人智慧的表现，她获得了所有人的同情。她的丈夫看上去病恹恹的，不务正业，一些人甚至揣测我精神错乱。甚至家里的仆人都向她投以尊重和怜悯。我们之间从来不争吵，我们的疏远、厌恶只藏在彼此心里。如果女主人经常出门，看上去不喜欢与男主人相处，这对于一个可怜人来说不是很正常吗？男主人是个怪人。我对仆人一向善良、公正，不过，他们对我有点儿畏惧，有点儿轻蔑地可怜我，因为，他们这个阶层的男男女女对人缺乏独立的判断，易受其他人所持观念的影响，而他们用经验分辨人的性格。他们看待人就像看待硬币，认为那些像流通货币一样被人们广泛称赞的人即是更好的个体。

一段时间后，我几乎从不干涉伯莎的生活习惯，可伯莎还是强烈地憎恨我。可能是我不自觉地泄露了什么，她开始怀疑我具有看穿人的病态能力——至少每隔一段时间我能神奇地看穿她的思想和意图——她开始惧怕我，时不时地，不是惧怕我就是蔑视我。她一直考虑如何摆脱我这梦魇，如何与我彻底斩断联系。我曾像一个白痴一般被她看不起，如今却像审判长一样让她恐惧，她恨我。很长一段时间里，她希望，我那可怜的性格有一天会逼我自杀。不过，我的天性是不会让我自杀的。我深信，我受不可见的力量控制，无法靠自己的力量求得解脱。我对自己的命运是完全被动的。我唯一的欲望已经耗尽，再没有冲动凌驾于理性之上了。因此，我从没想过要彻底和她分居，因为那样做就是把我们的疏远弄得世人皆知。我为什么要改弦更张呢？我眼下的痛苦就是我曾经强烈意愿的后果。一个仍有欲望要满足的人会寻求改变，可我已没有了欲望。不过，我和伯莎还是分离得越来越远。对于富人而言，在婚姻内分开生活并不是一件难事。

我的几句话就描述了我们几年来的生活。仇恨与罪恶缓慢却丑陋地积累出那么多苦难，最后居然囊括在一句话中！人们就是靠着这简短的一句话，总结评价彼此的人生。他们把同伴的经历浓缩，用干练的词句下了审判，这么做能让他们感到自己是多么智慧、多么善良，用几个精挑细选的谓语动词就说出了那些困扰他们的诱惑。一个人倘若从未体会过冰冷的失望，从未感受过头脑和心灵的悸动，没有时而惊恐不安、时而虚妄自负，不知何为后悔、何为绝望，才会一笔带过七年的蹉跎岁月。我们只是死记硬背下词语，并不熟谙词语的内涵，唯有经历过血的洗礼才能真的理解它们，把它们写入我们的神经。

不过，我要加快说完我的故事了。对那一点就通的人，我应该说得简洁些；对那永远也理解不了其中道理的人，我也该说得简洁些。

我父亲去世几年后，一月的一个傍晚，我在藏书室里挨着壁炉坐着，壁炉里的火光有些暗淡，我坐在父亲的那把皮椅上，这时伯莎出现在门口，手持一柄蜡烛，走向我。我认得她穿的这件礼服裙子，壁炉上的蜡烛光洒在她白色的裙子和绿色的珠宝首饰上，壁炉上的圆形装饰画内是垂死的克利奥佩特拉。外出前她为什么来找我呢？我从未在藏书室见过她，几个月来这是我的地盘。为什么她要拿着那柄蜡烛站在我面前，眼睛冷酷轻蔑地紧盯着我？她胸前那只闪耀的珠宝蛇如熟悉的魔鬼。有那么一刻，我觉得眼前的景象印证了我在维也纳的预见，它代表了我命运中的一个可怕危机，但在伯莎的头脑中我什么都没看见，她站在我面前，对坐在面前痛苦不堪的我投以最大的鄙视：“白痴，蠢货，你怎么不自杀呢？……”这就是她的想法。最后，她的想法回到她要办的事情上。她用语言把这些事项说出来。她要说的明显是件小事，与我的预见和紧张情绪完全不相称，滑稽可笑得令人扫兴。

“我雇了一个新女佣。弗莱彻要结婚了，她要我来找你吧莫尔顿的酒馆和农场给她丈夫。我也愿意如此。你现在就得答应，她明天一早就动身，快着点儿吧，我还得走呢。”

“很好，你答应她吧，”我无所谓地说。伯莎马上离开了藏书室。

我总是怕见新人，更怕见一个俗气、无知又琐碎的人，他的精神活动会消耗我的洞见，弄得我疲惫不堪。我尤其怕见这个新女仆，宣布她来的时机很特殊，我不禁把她和我的命运联系起来：我隐隐地害怕她会和我的人生戏剧有关，某种令人作呕的预见会让我将她视作邪恶的天才。最终，我不可避免地见到了她，隐隐的恐惧变为确定无疑的厌恶。这个阿切尔夫人，她是一个高个子、体型瘦长的黑眼睛女人，长着一张足够俊朗的脸，在她粗糙坚硬的秉性之上增加了一种令人作呕、明目张胆、自以为是的媚态。这足以让我躲着她，更何况她总是鄙视地琢磨我。我很少见到她，但我知道她很快成为她女主人的心腹。八九个月之后，我开始意识到，伯莎的头脑里对这个女人有一种混合着恐惧与依恋的复杂感情，这种感情与她梳妆室里那些烛光摇曳、难以名状的场景有关，与伯莎内室里那些翻箱倒柜的事情有关。我和我妻子的见面越发简短，而且很少能够单独见面，因此我无法更确切地知道她到底在想些什么。我们对过去的回忆因为思维的快速运动而变得简短，有时，这些回忆如此失真，与外部现实毫无相似性，就像形态各异的东方字母让人根本难以联想起它们所代表的物体。

此外，过去的一年多，我的头脑发生了一种越发明显的变化。我对周围人思想的洞察逐渐变得不清楚，断断续续的，那些拥堵在我头

脑中的双重意识也与我和接触到的周围的人变得无关了。我体内一切属于自己的部分都在慢慢走向死亡，因此，我也在逐渐失去能感受到个人激情和他人感情投影的感官。我虽从洞察人心的疲惫活动中解脱出来，但却越发能预测外在世界的发展了。这种感受就好像我与人类同伴的关系逐渐僵死，我与那无生命的世界的关系越发亲密一样。我的不幸逐渐平息，从悲壮的激情走向日常无聊的痛苦。与此相对，我越是远离人群，就越是频繁、生动地看到我曾经对布拉格的预见□怪异的都市；铺满沙子的平原；庞大的古迹；午夜天空中异常明亮的星辰；连绵的山脉；午后阳光穿过郁郁葱葱的树冠，在野草丛生的幽静处洒下一块块光斑。我置身于这些景色之中，在所有景色中有一样东西比其他任何东西都更重要，它是一样不可知又不值得怜悯的东西。不断的痛苦已经将我体内的宗教信仰消解了，对于最可悲的人而言，对于既无法爱人也得不到爱的人而言，没有任何宗教信仰的可能，我不可能崇拜什么，除非是崇拜邪恶。除此之外，不断闪现的是我对死亡的预见，疼痛、窒息、最后一搏时的情景不断闪现，我徒劳地想挽回生命。

到了第七年年底，我完全失去了洞察的能力，除了我自己的意识之外，再也不会病态地认知他人的意识了，再也不会被迫侵犯他人的内心世界，我转而沉浸在自己孤独的未来中。伯莎意识到我变了。出乎我的意料，她最近好像一直找机会与我相处，我们之间滋生出一种新的关系，可以冷淡地说说话，这是那些彼此礼貌相待却不可能挽回感情的夫妻常有的姿态。我疲惫地接受了这种关系，不想仔细探究她这么做的动机究竟是什么。不过，我还是忍不住感到她的举止仪态、面部表情都透露出一种胜利、兴奋的感情，这种感情难以言表，不过能让人感到她对什么事情充满期待，或者说她在充满希冀地等待着什么。我最为满意的是她的内在自我又一次遮蔽起来，有一次我几乎要欢喜地陶醉了，我低落的时候回了她的话却没说中她的所思所想，这泄露出我完全不知道她刚刚在说什么。有一天我犯了这样的错，我清楚地记得她的眼神和微笑，她说：“我原以为你长了透视眼，你为此很刻薄地对待其他长了透视眼的人，想要独占这能力，但现在我知道你比任何人都更愚蠢。”

我什么都没说。我突然想到，她近来对我的搅扰可能是想测验我是否能看透她的秘密，但我立刻停止了想这事，我对她的动机、行动毫不关心，她想找什么乐子都可以，我无意去干涉她。我灵魂的深处对人仍有怜悯，伯莎是个活生生的人，她也可能被什么痛苦缠身。

就在那段时间发生了一件改变我沉闷生活的事，给了我一种新的乐趣，而我原以为我不会在生活中找到任何乐趣了。查尔斯·麦尼埃要来看我了，他写信说工作过于繁重，要来英国放松，他想见我。麦尼埃在欧洲有了名气，不过，他给我的信说了许多我们早年的事儿，

他感激我的同情。他能记得这些，这和他高尚的性格分不开，我也感到他的到来会让我暂时重新回到旧时那快乐的时光。

他来了，我们又开始两人单独远游。不过，没有山脉、冰川和广阔的蓝色湖泊了，我们只能在山坡、池塘和人造园林中游玩，我们能走多远走多远。时光改变了我们，把我们塑造成完全不同的样子！麦尼埃如今是社会上显赫的人物，高贵的夫人会对他曲意逢迎，那些假意自夸对脑科学感兴趣的贵族会与他结交。我很清楚，我的变化让他震惊，他十分巧妙地强忍住，不探究我的身体情况和生活境况，而是用迷人的社交能力让我们的重逢欢欣愉悦。伯莎很惊讶，这位宾客会出人意料地有魅力，她原以为他只是名气大些罢了，于是使尽浑身解数卖弄她的风情和才华。显然，她成功赢得了他的仰慕，麦尼埃对她殷勤周到，赞美之词溢于言表。他的到来对我十分有益，尤其是我们又能一起单独地散步远足，他向我倾诉他的职业生涯。不止一次，他向我提到疾病对心理的影响，我突然想到，如果他住的时间够长，我很可能向他讲述我命运的秘密。难道他的科学就没有给我的解药吗？难道对我这种情况，他那博学洽闻的头脑就不会藏着某种理解和同情吗？不过，这种想法只是偶然闪现，在成为一种愿望前已经消失了。我惧怕让另外一个人知道我的秘密，我有一种不理性的本能，这本能要我用隐瞒这层外衣把自己裹得严严实实。看透他人的秘密后，我更觉得需要保守好自己的秘密。

“不，”他回答，“她得的是腹膜炎，是致命的，和我诊治过的许多人情况差不多。但是，我要告诉你我在想什么。我想拿这个女人做一次实验，如果你允许的话。我不会伤害她，不会让她痛苦，我会等到她完全失去知觉的时候做实验。我想在她心脏停止跳动几分钟后，把血输入到她的动脉，看看有什么效果。这个实验我已经在患了同样病

症的动物身上做了一次又一次，结果十分令人震惊，我想在人类身上尝试。我带着必要的管子，装在我的箱子里，其他的设备都可以很快准备。我会用自己的血，从我的手臂上取出来。我确定这个女人不会活过今晚，我要你答应做我的实验助手。我没办法自己完成，但在乡下医生里找一个助手可能不合适。这件事可能被说得粗鄙荒唐，弄得沸沸扬扬到处传播。”

“你和我的妻子说过这事了吗？”我说，“她对这个女人看起来有一种特殊的感情，这是她最喜爱的女仆。”

“实话告诉你，”麦尼埃说，“我不想让她知道这件事。女人在这些事上是说不通的，何况，到时候这个女仆身体上可能会产生一些令人惊讶的反应。你和我要一起熬夜了，得时刻准备好。一旦出现某些症状我会带你进去，时机成熟的时候我们必须把其他所有人赶出房间。”

我不必再讲我们对这件事的对话了。他很详尽地说明了细节，克服了我对这些事的反感，让我对他实验的结果怀着一种敬畏、好奇的复杂心理。

我们准备好了一切，他指示我如何当一个助手。他没有告诉伯莎，他十分确定阿切尔熬不过这个晚上，他努力劝说她让病人自己好好休息一个晚上。但她很倔强，预感到死亡已经临近，她以为麦尼埃是为了保护她的神经让她离开。她拒绝离开病房。麦尼埃和我一起在藏书室等着，他不断地去病房，回来告诉我病情发展如他所料。有一次他对我说：“你知道这女人为什么令她的女主人心怀不满吗？女主人待她这么好。”

“我想她生病前，她们之间有什么误会。你为什么问这个？”

“因为在我过去观察的五六个小时里，我猜，她没有恢复的希望了。有一种奇怪的动机推着她要说什么，不过疼痛和虚弱让她说不出话。她的眼睛里有一种可怕的神情，她一直用那种眼神看着她的主人。而这种病的患者往往到最后一刻都保持着头脑清醒。”

“这女人会有恶毒的想法，我一点儿都不惊讶。”我说，“对她，我一向不信任也不喜欢，但她有办法赢得她主人的欢心。”这之后，他沉默了，看着壁炉里的火陷入沉思，随后起身又上楼去了。这次比平时待的时间久一些，他回来的时候，悄悄对我说：“现在来吧。”

我随他进入那间死神徘徊的屋子。我进屋的时候，在床四周的黑色幔布的映衬下，伯莎苍白的脸色缓和了一些。看我进来，她连忙身子向前，随后一脸愤怒、迷惑地看着麦尼埃。他一边抬起手示意安静，一边紧紧盯着这垂死的女人，测量她的脉搏。这张脸苍白瘦削、毛骨悚然，额头挂着冰冷的汗珠，眼睑下垂几乎盖住了她大而黑的眼

睛。一两分钟后，麦尼埃走向床的另一侧伯莎站的地方，用一贯温柔礼貌的语气请求她离开病人，交由我们照顾，一切都会为病人处理好，她如今已经不可能感受到周围人的温存了。伯莎在犹豫，显然她愿意相信他的保证，愿意听从他的安排。她看着那张可怕的、垂死的面容，好像要读出某种信息证实麦尼埃的保证。有那么一刻已经下垂的眼睑又抬了起来，好像，这双眼睛正看着伯莎，不过眼神茫然而空洞。伯莎全身战栗了一下，她又回到病人的枕边，巧妙地暗示她不会离开屋子。

眼睑再也没有抬起来。我看着伯莎，她正看着垂死之人的脸。她身着一件昂贵的睡衣，一顶蕾丝帽半遮着金色的头发，穿着这身衣服的她一如既往地优雅，宛如现代贵族生活画像中的人。我问我自己，为何我曾经会认为这样一个女人也是由母亲所生、拥有童年记忆、能够感受痛苦、需要人宠爱呢？那一刻，她的面貌表情异常地尖刻，她的眼睛异常地冷酷、焦虑，她看上去像一个残忍的神明，这个女仆和死亡的赛跑则是她的一场精神盛宴。而当女仆咽下最后一口气，当死亡的黑色头纱已经在这女人身上完全落下时，从伯莎尖刻的面容后闪耀出一丝光芒。伯莎和这个女人之间到底有什么秘密呢？我把眼睛从她身上转开，生怕我恢复了洞悉的能力，那样我就会被迫得知这两个没有爱意的女人到底在想什么。我感到，伯莎期待着死亡会守住她的秘密，我感谢上天，这秘密对我仍是个谜。

麦尼埃轻声说：“她死了。”他把胳膊伸向伯莎，她顺从地走出了屋子。

我想，是她命令了两个女随从到屋子来，让原来那个年轻的随从离开了。她们进来的时候，麦尼埃已经切开了枕头上那条瘦长、僵硬的脖子的动脉，我赶走了随从，让她们在远处等着我们摇铃，我说，医生要做个手术，他不确定病人是否死亡。在随后的二十分钟里我忘记了一切，只记得麦尼埃和让他专注的实验，我想，他的感官已经隔离了一切与实验无关的声音和图像。我的任务，首先是保持人工呼吸，直到完成输血。不过很快麦尼埃接替了我。我能看到生命神奇又缓慢地回来了，胸口开始起伏，吸气越来越强烈，眼睑在颤抖，灵魂好像也回来了。人工呼吸停止后，呼吸仍在继续，嘴唇开始运动。

就在那时，我听到门把手转动了。我猜，伯莎从那些被支走的女人那里听说了什么，可能她隐约感到了恐惧，因为，她神色警觉地进来。她走近床脚，发出了一声哀鸣。

死去女人的眼睛大睁着，眼看着她，她认出了她，带着仇恨地认出了她。突然一股强力让伯莎以为已经永远静止的手指指向了她。那张憔悴的脸动了，喘着粗气的声音急切地说□

“你计划毒杀你的丈夫……毒药放在黑色橱柜里……我为你弄到的……你嘲笑我，在背地里说我的坏话，让别人厌恶我……因为你嫉妒……你知道错了吗……现在？”

嘴唇仍在小声说着什么，但是已经听不出声音了。很快，什么声音都没有了，只有微小的动作：火焰跃升了起来，又更快地熄灭了。这可怜女人的心中满是憎恨和报复；生命的灵魂弹拨了一下和弦，就一去不复返了。上帝啊！这就是复活吗……就是为了醒来倾倒在未被平息的欲望，让双唇发泄未能说出的诅咒，让肌肉完成犯了一半的罪恶吗？

伯莎脸色苍白地站在床脚边，浑身颤抖、无能为力、无计可施，像狡猾野兽的藏身之处被迅猛的火焰围困了一般。麦尼埃也瘫在那里动不了，对他来说，那一刻生命不再是一个科学问题。而对我来说，这一幕和我生命里发生的其他事情基调一样，恐惧与我常相伴，而这一刻新的启示也不过是旧有的疼痛在新的场景中重新出现。

那以后伯莎和我分居了，她住在她自己的宅院里，掌管着我们一半的财富，我则游荡在海外，直到现在，我来到德文郡居住，等待死亡。伯莎接受人们的怜悯和仰慕；我能举出什么来反对这个有魅力的女人呢？除我以外所有人都喜欢和她相处，没有人看到那间屋子里发生的场景，除了麦尼埃，而麦尼埃答应我他活着就不会说出那个秘密。

有那么一两次，我疲于奔波了，驻足在一个喜爱的地方。我的心灵奔向男人、女人和孩子们，他们的面孔日渐熟悉起来，但我担心旧时的洞察力会回来，又急忙离开。我一直奔走，一直活在这种未知的存在之中，这种未知已经向我揭晓，但我却让它隐藏在天地之间那移动的幕布后。直到最后，疾病抓住了我，迫使我留在此处休息，迫使我依靠我的仆人。然后，洞察力的诅咒——我的双重意识回来了，而且再也没有离开过我。我知道仆人们所有狭隘的思想、他们微弱的尊敬和他们将要耗尽的怜悯。

今天是1850年9月20日。我知道我刚刚写下的这个日期，这串数字如同一个熟识很久的碑文。我无数次在书桌的这一页纸上见到它们，在我最后死亡前的挣扎开始的时候。

女作家写的蠢故事 [7]

女作家写的蠢故事内容丰富，风格多样。按照愚蠢的不同特质，它包含了浅薄空洞型、单调涣散型、一片虔诚型、迂腐卖弄型等多种文风。然而，所有这些展示女性愚昧的作品中，有一个分支流派数量最为庞大，我们暂且管它叫女帽类小说 [8]。此类蠢故事往往是这样开始的：女主角是一位继承人或颇有家产的贵族夫人，与她交往甚密的几位情人包括一位桀骜不驯的准男爵，一位和善亲切的公爵，以及一位魅力四射的侯爵家骄子；牧师或诗人追求者在远处为她叹着气；当然，她身后还跟着一群各式各样的仰慕者，书里只是轻描淡写地带过。通常来说，这位女主角的眼睛闪耀着美丽的光泽，头脑机智非凡；她的鼻子挺拔，就像她的品性那样端庄；她有着宛如女低音的嗓子，思维敏捷；她穿戴讲究，笃信宗教。跳舞时，她宛如曼妙的西尔芙精灵；读起书来更是了不得，能读懂原版的《圣经》 [9]。另外一种女主角拥有所有这些美好品质，只不过她不是继承人，也没有万贯家财，但她总是有跻身上流社会的机缘，总是能毫无疏漏地在众多追求者中挑选出最优秀的结婚对象，并最终成为大家眼中正直不阿、极具传统家庭观念的贤良淑女。放荡男人面对她机智的言语常常无力还击，只好保持沉默，甚至因为她辞藻华丽的谴责而开始深深地自省；诚然，这些女主角都爱长篇大论、滔滔不绝，她们退回到自己卧室的那一刻便是她们高谈阔论的开始。人们能从她文章的字里行间看出她的伶牙俐齿，从她的谈吐中感受到她的诙谐和巧思。人们都知道她思想深刻洞察万物，能够看透浅薄哲学家提出的理论，而她那绝妙的直觉就像钟表，只需有人按下启动，便能自然而然地运行，参透万物。事实上，男人在她身边只是扮演了跑龙套的戏份。然而时不时地，你又能从书中某些暗示里感受到男女主人公之间的暧昧关系，这让你又欣慰了几分，重新确认了男人在现实世界中的重要作用。不过，在该女主角领衔主演的这部漫长人生影片中，男人存在的最终目的也只不过是扮演了女主角的护送者而已。男人们或是在舞会上看见她的身姿而目眩神迷，或是在某次花展上被她迷住，或是在一次骑行中被她高贵的驭马术所征服，或是在教堂瞥见她庄重又甜美的姿态。总之，她给人的感觉、她展现出来的才智以及她带有蕾丝花边的衣饰都全方位地符合了男性心中理想的女神形象。尽管如此，在故事的开头女主角也总是会错误地嫁给一个邪恶的准男爵，丈夫的阴谋诡计让她饱受情感折磨。但是，即使是死神也在心中为我们完美的女主角保留着柔

情，一定会在恰当的时候出面，用死亡解决她的困境。可怜的男爵一定会在某次决斗中战死，躺在床上的他奄奄一息，请求妻子一定要再嫁给自己最爱的人，就当是对将死的自己的一种恩赐，并且已经自作主张给她的情人派送了信件。在情节进展到这一步之前，我们也跟随高贵、可爱、有才的女主角一起体验了她之前诸多的糟糕时光。不过，我们最终也能获得满足感，毕竟看到她还是能够掩面在精致的刺绣镶边手绢中哭泣；能够晕倒在价值连城的高档坐垫上；乘着马车匆忙赶来，她也依旧容光焕发；因高烧剃去了头发，大病痊愈后，女主角的秀发也只会更加丰盈。

在淑女小说家笔下，有且仅有这高贵而时尚的社会，这倒是让我们免去了一个极为严重的担忧。我们曾经猜测，淑女小说家们都是穷困潦倒的女人，她们写作小说的原因与她们去应聘家庭女教师一样——她们实在找不到别的“女性化”生存之道了。基于这样的假设，我们即使发现小说语句啰唆、情节离奇，也会因为心中的同情而原谅这些瑕疵，就像看到盲人售卖的粗糙针垫和睡帽——我们会告诉自己，这些物品虽有缺陷，但是我们所付的钱却能解救那些穷苦女性。我们想象着那些寂寞的单身女性为了生存而苦苦写作，妻子们为了偿还丈夫的债务、女儿们为了给生病的父亲买件礼物而孜孜不倦地辛勤生产着“作品”，仿佛在进行某种伟大的英雄主义行动。在这样的印象下，我们对于淑女小说的评价就比较含蓄了：她的小说有语病，但她的写作动机却无可指责；她的想象力平庸无奇，但她坚持不懈的精神令人感动。似乎，我们因作者的困境而原谅了她们的白痴故事，因为眼泪而相信了那些废话。但事实并不是这样！我们的这种想法以及类似冠冕堂皇的观点都被新的发现所否定了。女作家的这些小说是在完全不同于我们想象的状态下写出来的。这些女作家出行都坐马车，只透过车窗和卖东西的小贩交谈；她们视工人阶级为自己的附属物；她们觉得五百英镑的年薪简直少得可怜；贝尔格莱维亚区和“豪华大别墅”的一切才是真实的生活；而男性若不是一位有身份地位的政治家，或者至少是个拥有大片土地的地主，那她们甚至连看都不愿看一眼。很显然，她们是坐在优雅的闺房里，用紫罗兰颜色的墨水和红宝石笔尖的钢笔写作的人；她们对出版商的评价完全不在乎，她们一点儿都不穷困潦倒，拮据的是她们的脑容量。她们所描绘的上流社会的确惟妙惟肖，令人羡慕，但同时，她们的文字却流露出对其他阶层的陌生。如果我们把她们对贵族老爷、太太的描绘称为不准确，那她们对文人、商贩和农民的描述简直就是荒谬了，但她们的聪明才智还是秉持着公平的原则，以同样的离谱描绘着她们确实听过、看过和未曾听过、看过的东西。

我们认为，应该很少有女性根本不曾见过五岁以下的小孩，但是最近有一部自称“源自真人真事”的女帽类小说《补偿》

(Compensation) 中，却有一个才四岁半的小女孩在以奥西恩风格 [10] 的口吻说话：

“我太开心了，亲爱的外婆！我遇到了一个如此令人心旷神怡的人，他就像所有美好的事物——像芬芳的花朵，像从本洛蒙德山上看到的景致——噢！不！比这还要美。我一想到他、见到他就感觉非常非常幸福。他唱歌时就像妈妈那样温柔。他的前额如同远方的大海一般，”小女孩手指向蔚蓝的地中海继续说道，“没有边际；又像温暖的夏夜里，我抬头仰望天空时最爱的那一丛星星……不要这样看着我啊，你现在的额头就像是被阳光照射、被风吹皱了的罗蒙湖面，我最喜欢平静湖面上的阳光了……就像现在，天上飘着些深色云朵，阳光冲破云层，瞬间就给旁边的丛林和紫色的岩石镀上了金色，它们倒映在湖面上，显得那么美丽。

文中的神童小女孩完全展现了一个成人在醉酒后才有的滔滔不绝，此时，就算我们被告知她是一个死而复生的人，生来就拥有一长段的记忆，我们也不会惊讶。故事一次次地告诉我们，文中的小女孩就是这样一个富有创造力并且自认为是天才的神童，而且她足够幸运，遇上了一个同样“最具独创性”的令她倾心的天才爱人。

按照书中所写，这位神童的爱人虽然与她“在权势和才智”上都惊人地相似，但“在宗教信仰和发育上”却更胜一筹。她把他当作自己的“挚爱”(Agape)——一个她从希腊文《圣经》中读到并一直喜爱的词。得益于她对学习语言的超常天赋，她用原版语言阅读了所有宗教经典”。当然，希腊语和希伯来语对于女主角来说易如反掌，要她讲梵语也不过是小菜一碟。事实上，除了说不好英语，她能准确无误地用其他任何语言交流。她不仅会跳波尔卡舞，还通晓数国语言，她简直就是一位穿着裙子的外交家。可怜的男人们！你们有几个看得懂希伯来文，你们恐怕和博林布鲁克一样，在“大致了解了一点儿那门语言，熟悉了由那门语言写成的重要作品的名称”后，就会开始吹嘘；而你们着迷的那些女人，却可以用每一种闪族语言在心里说你们的坏话呢。然而，我们都知道这样一个道理，故事中的女主角常常还拥有一个“美丽而小巧的脑袋”，也许正是这种对服装和仪态的关注启发了她们的早慧。因此，我们可以猜想，对于女主角而言，学习东方语言就如蝴蝶轻啜花蜜那样轻巧，更不用说学习和她们母语相近的其他欧洲语言了。另外，女主角的博学一定深不可测，虽然作者的头脑倒是能够一眼望到底。

在另外一本女帽类小说《劳拉·盖伊》(Laura Gay) 中，女主角并不精通希腊语和希伯来语，但她对拉丁古典文学的熟稔弥补了这一缺点。她熟读“亲爱的老维吉尔”、“优雅的贺拉斯”、“仁慈的西塞罗”，以及“令人愉悦的李维”，各种经典烂熟于心。旁征博引拉丁经典

对劳拉而言是如此理所当然的一件事，在与一群形形色色的男女出去野餐时，她心想：“我从来不知道高贵如男性也会在这件事情上产生嫉妒。”书中继续写道：“若在场的多数人是理智且高贵的绅士，他们必定不会对这种引用产生嫉妒感；但在场的若都是温德姆小姐和雷德福先生这种普通之流，那么就必须要牺牲一下自己引用的天性了。”但我想，无论是高贵的少数男性，还是无知又愚蠢的大多数人，都愿意谈话中少一些这种无聊又毫无关联的引用。在男女混合的聚会场所，有教养的男性和女性都很少谈论拉丁名著，他们即使熟读“仁慈的西塞罗”，即便是“令人愉悦的李维”几欲脱口而出，也能在平常的谈话交流中控制自己的学识。然而，对于书中的盖伊小姐来说，用西塞罗的拉丁经典讲话几乎是她最平易近人的交流方式了。一次在帕拉丁山上，她对一众观光客做出了如下脉络清晰、内容全面而丰富的评论：

真理只能是完全客观的，因为即使在宗教经典中，当真理偶尔通过主观方式被展现时，它都会多多少少沾染了些迷信的色彩；而在罗马天主教的教条中，这种无知、利益、古老偶像崇拜造成的偏见以及权威，都逐渐堆积在了真理之上，并把罗马天主教变成了一场拥有众多信徒的迷信。而又有多少人，能够拥有等量的热情、勇气和智慧去剖开这堆积在真相之上的垃圾，在一团废墟中找到藏身其中的珍珠呢。

如果仔细想想，我们或许见过很多比劳拉·盖伊更加清新脱俗、思维深刻的女性，但是肯定没遇见过如此不合时宜发表长篇大论的。有一位刚刚爱上她的贵族牧师正是因为听了以上那一段深沉的评论，开始有些怀疑她是不是个独立思考的女性，担心不好把控。但是他错了！当劳拉难过时，贵族牧师温柔地想“唤起她平时忘却了的记忆，一个她在痛苦时分力量和慰藉的储藏地，而这个储藏地，除非我们也被生活的苦难狠狠压榨，否则，也是同样会被我们所遗忘的”。我们在文中读到，她确实找到了这个神圣的储藏地，连同她的茶壶一起找到的。在《劳拉·盖伊》的珠光宝气、香车鬓影之外，的确还存在着一些正统的风味，但是这种正统却被她“仁慈的西塞罗”“热爱分析的性格”所破坏了。

相比之下，《补偿》一书更具教条主义风格，但是其中堆砌了更多势利世俗以及荒诞的插曲，以迎合虔诚但轻浮的读者的喜好。书中的女主角琳达比劳拉·盖伊更深思、更聪敏，她已经出入了社交场合，因此也有更多、地位更显赫的情人；书中还引入了各种邪恶但令人着迷的女人，甚至包括一个法国悍妇；作者不遗余力地为小说创作各种引人入胜的故事，其桥段堪比最为悖德伦理故事。事实上，这本书就是一个大杂烩：有舞会、有苏格兰人的预言、罗杰斯先生的早

餐、意大利强盗、临终时的皈依、聪明绝顶的女作家、意大利情人、毒杀老妇人，而这些情节描写又被佐以对“信仰和人类未来”的讨论，因“最为新颖的思想”而更具风味。书中的女作家苏珊·巴顿小姐是个天才，她提起笔“写小说时一挥而就”，而即使她已经拒绝了多桩好婚事，即使年纪大到已经足够当琳达的母亲（因为她曾拒绝了琳达的父亲），但她最终该是能够与一位年轻的伯爵喜结良缘，情定这位女主角曾拒绝过的情人。

当然，天才和道德高尚这两种品质只有在财富可观的人身上才不显得乏味；同样，虔诚，有时候为了显得有必要 [11] ，也必须融入“社会”，在最好的圈子里展示才能合乎礼仪。

《阶级与美女》（Rank and Beauty）是一本更加浅薄、宗教色彩相对较弱的女帽类小说。书中是这样写我们的女主角的：“即使她出身卑微，如果她继承了她父亲的风骨、她母亲的美貌，具有符合她年龄的奔放与热情，这些特质将最终升华成敢爱敢恨的勇气，她的后代会觉得这些是他们能够得到的最好的财富。”这位青春热血的年轻女士在读父亲的报纸时爱上了首相先生。通过头版新闻和“议会辩论概要”，首相先生在温德姆小姐的想象中就已经闪耀特异如一颗明星，然而这颗星星对于身居乡村无足轻重的温德姆小姐而言，自是可望而不可即的。但是，温德姆小姐迅速凭借自己的力量成为乌姆弗拉维尔女爵，当她搬进春日公园的豪宅之时，她的美貌和成就惊艳了世人，而正如你所想，她不久就将会碰到她的爱慕对象 [12] 了。可能“首相”一词总让你想起满脸皱纹、一身赘肉的六十多岁的老头儿，但是请赶紧摆脱这种印象吧，鲁伯特·康威勋爵“在他几乎还是青年时就被委以重任，处理全人类最为紧要的事务”，而他也符合我们的女主角在阅读了头版新闻和议会辩论概要后所产生的每一则幻想：

门又打开了，鲁伯特·康威走了进来。伊夫琳小姐抬头看了一眼，这一眼就足够了！他完全没让她失望。这一眼似乎就像是她之前一直盯着一幅画看，而现在画中人竟然从画中走了出来的感觉。他身姿挺拔，气度非凡，像凡·戴克画中的人物，像一位骑士——他高尚的骑士祖先们，和她幻想中的他形容相似的骑士们，曾在遥远的古时和乌姆弗拉维尔家族在远方的战场上并肩作战，讨伐异教徒。这些都是真实的吗？

当然不是。

渐渐地，书中越来越明显地展示，首相先生对她动心了。这发生在乌姆弗拉维尔小姐在温莎堡觐见女王的时候□

这是她在王宫的最后一晚了，骑马回来后，温德姆先生带着她和一群伙伴到围墙顶上看风景。她倚在城墙上，站在高处向下俯瞰风

景，鲁伯特正在她身边。她感叹道：“这风景真是无与伦比的美丽啊！”

“是很美！要是没有到这高处来就离开了应该会很遗憾！这次旅行觉得高兴吗？”

“简直令人陶醉！为女王而生，为女王而死，为女王尽忠！”

“哈！”他大声应道，情感突然激昂，脸上灵光一现，仿佛终遇知音。

这种“脸上灵光一现”为第三卷末尾他们最终结婚埋下了伏笔，但是在那美满的结局之前，勒特雷尔·威彻利先生恶毒的诡计在二人之间造成了许多复杂的误会。这位威彻利先生是一位天才诗人，在各方面都是个非凡的角色。他不仅是浪漫的诗人，潇洒的浪子，还是个愤世嫉俗的才子。他对乌姆弗拉维尔女士的极端爱慕穷尽了他辛辣的口才，使得他在谈话中显得极为愚笨。当她拒绝了他，这位先生竟然冲进灌木林在泥里打滚，并且开始了最为邪恶和煞费苦心的报复历程。他伪装成一位冒牌医师，并且成为家庭医生，他相信伊夫琳总有一天会生病，会召唤他需要他的照料。最终，他的计划泡汤，他写了一封长信跟她道别，信中洋溢着他的满腹才华：

噢，亲爱的小姐，当你沉浸在美好和喜悦中时，你能否想起，给你写信的我，这痛苦的灵魂？当你镀金的游轮在宽阔繁华的世界里顺流而下，你能否透过世界上最甜蜜的音乐——你的颂歌——听到来自远方的，我的叹息？

总之，虽然故事浅薄空洞，但是和其他两部小说比较起来，大家还是更喜欢这本《阶级与美女》。作者写的对话更加自然生动；她对于自己的无知十分坦诚，没有卖弄学问；我们只需要简单地相信女主角的惊人智慧，而不用被迫阅读她在谈话中对怀疑论者与哲学家的驳斥、她对宇宙谜题的解答。

女帽类小说的作者们在写作措辞上都十分雷同。在她们的小小说中，总有一位女士或者绅士反派像见血封喉树般阴险毒辣；爱人总有着富有男子气概的胸膛，大脑总是可以联想起许许多多；内心却总是空虚寂寞；所有的活动都别有目的；所有的伙伴都可以托付性命；所有的童年都将伴随终身；每一次西沉的太阳都被比作将军白头，每一次霁晴都是雨水被收纳进了太阳光辉的胸膛；所有人都视生命为一则伤感的恩惠；而人人也都在对话中使用阿尔比恩 [13] 和斯科舍 [14] 这种名称。这些人物的道德评价也惊人地相似，例如“所有人，无论贫富，都会被不好的榜样所影响，这是个令人忧伤的事实”；“读者在任

何一本不起眼的书中都能获取有用的信息”；“邪恶总是能打着美德的幌子横行”；“本性中的美好和高尚一定存在着，并且能够被赏识，因为小说写得再喧嚣浮夸，也没那么容易欺骗熟读何为人性的读者”；以及“我们只有被伤害过，才能学会原谅”等等。毫无疑问，这些评论在有一部分读者看来是犀利、辛辣的。我们常常看到一些读者手握铅笔一遍又一遍地在书上做标注，他们用精致的手写体在一旁写道：“太对了”，表达对勇敢直言的淑女作家坚定的赞成，并且加上许多的感叹号表示强调。这些小说对话的语言特点在于使用很多具有独创性的倒装句，并且刻意避免日常生活中的平凡用语。愤怒的年轻人这样惊呼：“就是这样，我认为！”；再听听晚餐前半小时，一位年轻女士和她的邻居谈论她第一次读莎士比亚的经历：“我偷偷溜进公园里，坐在绿色的树冠下，兴高采烈地阅读着这位如同魔术大师般的人所写的带给人无限惊喜的书页。”但是此类女帽类小说家最显著的贡献在于她们的哲学思考。例如《劳拉·盖伊》的女作者让女主和男主最终结婚，她进一步升华了他们的结合：“那些眼睛长期盯着物质，看不见人类身上其他方面的怀疑论者们，如果能够全心全意地投入到这样一场极乐中去，就会发现一个人的灵魂和肉体源自不同的起源，其本质也是不一样的。”淑女小说家似乎能看到除却物质层面的其他内容，她们不局限于观察现象，而是偶尔能透过现象洞察本体；自然，她们就比其他任何人更能反驳那些富有盛名的怀疑论者。不过，坚持人的灵魂和肉体是一致的这一怀疑论学派，我们倒也很少听说。

在淑女作家所写的愚蠢小说中，还有一种“神谕体”最令人惋惜叹气，这类小说致力于阐释作者自己的宗教观点、哲学见解和道德观念。类似于那种把愚蠢的言论和行为视为对上帝旨意的传达的迷信，在女性中似乎还广泛流传着这样一种认知，她们认为最无知、最缺乏常识的人却最能传达神的启示。通过她们的写作来判断，总有那么一些女作家认为，对科学和生活的完全无知，是认识复杂的道德及理论难题的最好途径。显然，她们解决类似难题的秘诀都像这样：准备一个女性角色空空的头脑，往里填充对哲学和文学零零碎碎的一知半解，佐以社会僵化而错误的认识把这颗头脑烘焙成型，淑女作家不时地把这颗头脑端上桌来暗示这其中的智慧，并在某些尴尬而不必要的时刻，用她们水平有限的英语把这其中的思想传达出来，装在盘中供读者享用。你很少能碰见一个“神谕体”的淑女小说家会质疑她自己对神学问题的判断能力，她从不会怀疑自己，自认为能极精确地分辨出不同教派间的善恶；她们能准确地指出人类何以堕落到了如今的境地，并且对所有哲学家表示遗憾，因为他们不曾有机会向她请教。当真正伟大的作家谦逊地将自己的经历写进小说，展示人和物最本真的样子时，神谕体女作家就会认为这种写作辜负了他们的才能：“他们并没有解决什么重大问题啊”□于是乎她时刻准备着，通过讲述一个爱情故事来弥补所谓的伟大作家们的缺陷，通过富裕家庭的女士先生们

经历上流社会特有的种种磨难，来传达一整套关于生命的理论和对于神学的完整指南；这故事对基督教独特的见解能使自然神论者、皮由兹 [15] 以及极端新教徒都晕头转向，这种新的理论被浓缩进字里行间，在三百三十页的书页中铺展开来。你会觉得，这些小说中的先生和女士们，与你曾经碰到过的人完全不一样。因为，在通常情况下，一个女作家描写她同胞和真实生活的能力，与她谈论上帝的能力成反比；而她把读者导向精神世界的方法则是向他们展现出一幅完全不符合实际的现实生活的图景。

《一个谜团：来自乌尔克里庄园档案中的一页》（The Enigma: A Leaf from the Chronicles of Wolchorley House，后文简称《谜团》）是我们能见到的最典型的“神谕体”小说。书中“谜团”的困难程度无异于解释邪恶的存在，而要解答这一谜团，也正需要我们淑女作家才有的超凡的才智。作者已经在小说的第一页提出了难题，答案也欲隐欲现。留着乌黑头发、生机勃勃的年轻女士说：“生命就是一团难以解开的谜团”；而顶着褐色头发的另一位温柔女士，对着自己正在临摹的圣母像说：“那儿似乎曾有解决这一难题的方法”。这种小说的风格 of 虚无缥缈自然适应了它目的的崇高，我们必须承认，有些段落我们可能花了很长时间研究却仍然不懂，即使作者加入了斜体小字的解说，或许，我们必须等到智力进一步开发才能理解书中的内容吧。书中写了一位年轻的模范牧师欧内斯特，无论在什么情况下，他都能使人们回到正轨，“在全社会都变得渎神后，他开始不赞成交易类型的婚姻”，在某个晚上，“睡眠没有造访他神圣的心灵，其中汹涌着聚集而混杂的悲伤和喜悦”，以及“他不能容忍任何为交易而写成的人类文章，无论它是何种类型，被认为拥有何种价值，无论是出于尊敬抑或是阶级需要写作，他正直的灵魂都对之深恶痛绝，自欺欺人者的最后结论对于他来说只是一个神圣的谎言，因为他们‘生活在一出虚无的演出中，欺骗别人并且被人欺骗’，而他觉得自己的护经匣以及衣服上夸张的下摆并不只是一种社交摆设”。（所有的特殊字体处理都是文章中原有的，我们希望它们能帮助读者进一步理解。）文中另一位莱昂内尔先生是个模范老绅士，“他除了不散漫不颓废，人们对中世纪人物的典型印象似乎在他身上都得到了体现，将人们团结在一起的正是一种英雄主义纽带。原始信仰和真理的色彩镌刻在普通人的内心，随着法律准则的出现和积累，融入到更加广泛的兄弟情谊中，并且互相依赖，越来越臻于完美”。是的，看了这句话，你一定明白这些色彩是如何铭刻在心中，又是怎样融合成一道情谊之桥——显然这是一条彩虹——准则的出现和积累又是如何使得这座情谊之桥越来越完美。看到这里，如果你还需要进一步认识莱昂内尔先生，我们会告诉你，他的灵魂深处，“浮漾在他灵魂周围的气氛里、隐藏在他灵魂原始的脉搏中，有一种比任何科学思想都能想象到的更为极致的善与真的结合。当他在封信时，“瞧！这位好人胸膛中跳动着一颗充满真与

善的心，如同他装满爱意的双眼，充盈着对祖先的崇敬和自豪，似乎在凝视着家族那清晰的箴言——忠诚 [16]”。

淑女作家也用同样崇高的风格剔除了生活中所有琐碎事物中的庸俗。普通人可能会说休息室的桌上摆着一本莎士比亚，可是《谜团》的女作者决心迂回地表现自己的文采，会这样描述桌上的书：“那人类思想和情感的宝库，用这样一个小小的名字‘莎士比亚’引导着人类的心灵。”又比如，一位夜巡人看到某扇窗户里的灯比平常亮久了一些，感慨这些熬夜的人为何傻到有机会早睡却不珍惜；但是，作者唯恐这些事实对于我们来说太过平淡无奇，于是采用了如下这种引人注目且形而上学的方式呈现在我们面前：“他惊叹——人们在思考他人的问题时 总会 站在旁观者的角度，因此（尽管他们不赞成这种错误）他们也会在脑海中错误地假想——要是他自己，他 一定会表现得大为不同，他 一定会满怀欣喜地珍惜在房间内根本没有被当回事所得来的休息。”一位普通侍从，他小腿粗壮，说话漏风，现在正开门去迎客，作者立即抓住了这样一个机会开始描写，他是“众多被宠坏了的奴仆中的一员，就像是中了该隐一样的诅咒□成为了世间的‘流浪者’，他把个人的财富和花销作为衡量人类的标尺……噢！英格兰！所有的这些都是你病态文明的错误启发而已！”我们听说过来自卡明博士 [17] 和罗伯特·欧文 [18] 的错误启发，从皮由兹到招魂者的误导，但是之前我们还从未听说过哪种错误启发能从文明的细枝末节，从仆人每日照料的绒毛粉末般的小事中产生。

正如生活中平常的事件被提升为了令人激动的紧急时刻，小说中身着伞裙和中国式长袖 [19] 的小姐们行事方式也颇具血腥闹剧女主角的风采。《谜团》中的珀西太太是一位肤浅且虚荣的妇人，她希望自己的儿子贺勒斯能娶一位富有的女继承人：褐色头发的格雷斯；然而，和所有类似的儿子角色一样，贺勒斯爱的却是女继承人的表妹：黑头发的凯特，即便她没有任何财产；此外，格雷斯对贺勒斯本来也没有展现出任何好感。在这种情景设定下，儿子一般要么阴沉忧郁，要么脾气暴躁，母亲则时而强势主动时而尖刻易怒，而那位没有财产的灰姑娘常常夜不能寐、以泪洗面。我们已经习惯了这些套路，就像我们已经习惯了月食，不会再在无月的夜晚大声号叫敲击作响。然而，即使是遍历故事如我们，对于书中珀西太太这位处在时尚“前沿”的夫人在这种情况下的反应，也不得不大感惊讶。有一天，珀西太太碰巧看到自己的儿子贺勒斯和格雷斯在窗前谈话，距离远到根本听不见他们在谈什么，而且众所周知，即使贺勒斯向她求婚，高贵的庄园继承人格雷斯小姐根本没有任何理由会接受，但是珀西太太就直冲冲地奔了过去，紧紧抱住他们俩，她的脸色因为激动和兴奋而泛红，说道：“幸福的一幕终于上演了啊！那我现在是不是能叫你格雷斯，我的格雷斯，贺勒斯的格雷斯！我亲爱的孩子们！”贺勒斯连忙

解释，指出这只是一个误会，自己已经和凯特订了婚，于是，我们就看到了以下场景和画面：

她（珀西太太）听到这个消息后，眼睛充满怒火，声音提到了前所未有的高度——

她用嘶哑和愤怒的语气吼道：“你这个不肖子！”她双拳紧握继续说：“你自食苦果吧！低下你的头，让一位母亲的……”

“不要再骂了！”此刻，从身后传来一句低低的反驳声。这一声就像是上天派来的天使，打断了珀西太太恶毒的语言；反正她是被吓住了，停止了讲话。

而与此同时，贺勒斯正双手捂脸，悲伤地跪在母亲的脚边。

母亲的那些可怕语言很过分，已深深刺伤了他，就像是挥之不去的魔咒，将一直留存在他的心间。那一声反驳是谁说的？是他真正的守护神发话了！

站在珀西太太身后的人正是凯特，她脸色苍白，站得笔直，全身笼罩着死寂一般的镇定——她是当下唯一一个冷静的人了，她抑扬顿挫地缓慢地讲着，语气中充满悲愤和哀伤，一字一句都像是敲在人心上。

“他是做了他的决定，但是我并没有接受！所以，你不能，你也没有权利诅咒他！我现在，”此时，凯特抬起又大又黑的双眼，那眸子里闪烁着柔和的光，这也是第一次，这热情的双眸被痛苦所点亮。她伸出一只手向天起誓，“在这里对天发誓，即使以幸福为饵，以悲伤相逼，如果没有贺勒斯母亲的同意和祝福，我绝不答应贺勒斯·乌尔克里先生的求婚！”

在此处，以及在整篇小说中，作者有意营造一种混杂、迷惑，而这也正是蠢故事的典型特征。《谜团》的故事本是关于一群现代“沙龙社团”的贵族年轻人，他们跳着波尔卡舞，谈论着皮由兹运动；但同时，故事里又混杂了各种各样的角色、突发事件以及行为礼仪，像是混杂了各种不同类型爱情小说的片段。书中写了一个爱尔兰竖琴家，“宛如古时眉目如画的吟游诗人”，他来到这个普通的英国小村庄，在教堂主日学校举办的茶点庆祝会上惊艳出场。另外有一个疯狂的吉卜赛人，她穿戴着鲜红的斗篷，爱唱浪漫的歌曲，在她临终的时候还揭露了一个秘密：年轻的模范牧师欧内斯特是凯特的哥哥。而这一秘密又由一个矮小、吝啬的商人做证，这个商人爱诅咒陌生人并且对着他们发出邪恶的笑声。作者还写了一位极其正直的爱尔兰人巴

尼，他通过比对一份文件的落款日期和签名的日期证实了它是一份假文件，尽管在此之前这份文件已经通过了法庭的审核并且已经生效。谈到莱昂内尔先生的住所，那是一个古老家族留下来的乡村别墅，我们猜想，这也使得女作者的想象力就此开始跳跃到城堡和城墙，“听啊，守卫吹响了号角”，据普利斯曼·X回忆，居民夜里都住在内屋卧室；一开始，外面的风很微弱，接着风渐渐变大，把香柏的枝杈吹到了草地上，于是女作者开始了中世纪式的描述：“旗面随着声音而展开，扬起它守卫的翅膀，猫头鹰受到惊吓后在常春藤丛中用翅膀拍打着她；而苍天正透过它的‘阿尔格斯之眼’^[20]俯瞰着这个世界□

掌管无声旋律的神。

噢，听吧！守卫塔的钟敲了两声，楼下回荡着报时人‘凌晨两点’的回音。”

《谜团》中的故事就是如此混搭，就像我们在观赏一幅完全源自小朋友想象力的画：右边画着一处时髦的别墅，中间却是两个穿着盔甲的骑士在搏斗，而左边竟然画着一只咧着嘴的老虎在丛林中趴着，这些没有联系的事物被混在了一起仅仅是因为作者觉得它们各自很有特色，或者真正的原因是她在其他的画中见过这些场景，所以全部拿来据为己用。

然而，这种做作的中世纪写作风格，比起女作家的神谕体写作而言，也根本不算什么。她的神谕体内容谈论“本我”^[21]“主观”“客观”，并且明确地划定了基督教真理的边界□“右侧过量，左侧不足”，对于所有不符合这一真理的人物，作者都会用居高临下的语气介绍他们。书中通过清晰的字体变化告诉我们一位名叫茵西奎林的小姐“在这个会幕时代，功能，而非形式——作为灵魂不可避免的外在表现——微弱地吸引着她”。另一位福音派的美嘉女士，过度热衷于讲述她探访病危女性的经历，并总是高谈阔论描述她们灵魂的状况；她告诉我们，那位模范牧师“并不反对人们在表层之下，主观上想着善良，而客观上追求真实的利益”。当她说到句中的变化字体的词时，我们可以想象着她加重了音调，并且略微点了点下巴。我们在这里就不引用她别的神谕教条式段落，因为她谈及的内容太过严肃，不适宜在这里讨论。

对于《谜团》这本显然源自作者大量阅读和思考的小说而言，我们说它“愚蠢”似乎太不合适。不过，“愚蠢”这个评论的确是经过我们深思熟虑才给出的。如果我们早已认识到，接受大量的教育并不能成就一个智慧的男人，那么我们也更应该认识到，接受过一定程度的教育也不意味着是一个智慧的女性。在女性所有的愚蠢中，影响最为恶劣的形式莫过于文学，因为它固化了人们对提高女性教育水平的偏

见。当男人看到淑女们耗费光阴谈论礼帽和舞会礼服时，看到姑娘们为了爱情时而傻笑、时而神伤时，或是看到中年妇女热衷于说长道短而管不好自家孩子时，他们禁不住感叹：“上帝啊！让女孩们多读些书吧！让她们的头脑里多些有价值的东西，让她们更有事可干好吗？！”但是，当他们与一位神谕体女作家谈论几个小时，或者读了一会儿她的书之后，男人们又会这样说：“算了吧，当女人有了学识，看看她们是怎么利用这些学识的！她的知识仅仅停留在一种外在的习得，而没有被内化为自身的文化；她没有更多地思考、接触事实，从而学会谦逊、朴素地使用自己的知识；她心怀激动感受着新获取的知识，好像脑袋里装了一面镜子，时不时地看向里面沉浸在自己的‘才华’里；她形而上学的问题破坏了人们品尝松饼的胃口；她无懈可击的知识在晚宴上“挫败”了男人；她抓住舞会的机会为我们讲授物质和意识关系中的关键点。然后，再看看她写的东西！她错把模糊当深邃，将夸张的言辞看作文采，把矫揉造作等同于创造力；她在这一页还在炫耀自己的学识，眼睛却瞟向下一页，对着第三页做鬼脸，却又在第四页里歇斯底里。她肯定是读过很多伟大的男性作家的作品，以及少许伟大的女性作家的作品，但是她根本就不能分辨他们的风格和自己的风格，就像一个约克郡人分不清自己的口音和伦敦音的区别，而大言不惭正是她天生的风格。天哪！所以，一般来说，女人的资质还是像贫瘠且脆弱的土壤，经受不住什么耕种，只能生长出最微不足道的作物。”

诚然，仅根据表面观察和片面推断就得出这一结论的男人也并不是最明智的人；但我们在此不是要反驳他们的观点□我们只是指出，有很大一部分自觉标榜为知识女性代表的人确实不自觉地助推了这种观点。如果一个男人和一位真正有修养的女人交谈过，真正有修养是指那种真正吸收了学识而不是被学识所淹没的女人，那么他就不会得出以上观点了。一个真正有修养的女人，和真正有修养的男人一样，能更加公正地认识自身和自己的观点，她朴素地展示自己的学识，且不让别人感到冒犯。她不会拿知识当垫脚的高台，扬扬自得地以为站在这里便可以一览人类和事物的全貌；但她会把知识当作一个观察点，由此可对自己形成正确的评价。她不会动不动就口喷诗句或引证西塞罗，这种沉默并不是担心男性的嫉妒而做出的牺牲，相反，她认为这种展现自己记忆力和拉丁语的方式并无意义也不甚优雅。她写书不是为了哲学家困惑，或许正因为她能写出让哲学家感到愉悦的书，在谈话中，她是最不难缠的对象，因为她了解你，而又不强加给你你并不了解她的印象。她不是在教化你，而是在给你赞同□这才是有教养的最高境界。

比起小众的神谕体小说（被少数高教会派 [22] 和超验基督徒推崇），还有一种数量比较庞大的愚蠢小说我们叫作“白色圣领体” [23]

，之所以叫这个名字，因为牧师脖子上佩戴的白色硬领能展示出福音派 [24] 的思想氛围和虔诚基调。这类小说就像是页数更多的宗教宣传册，为低教会派年轻女士提供的有蜜饯风味的药品；流行小说的福音派替代，就如人们把五月集会当作是歌剧的替代。我们认为，即使是贵格教派 [25] 的小朋友，在童年时也会沉迷于玩具娃娃，不过他们玩的娃娃穿的不是俗气的亮片薄纱裙，而是身着褐色长袍，头戴煤斗形的软帽。出于同样的原因，我们也认为爱情故事对于任何一位年轻女子而言都是不可或缺的，除非这位女子来自婚姻内也没有任何性交的基督教协基会。因此，福音派的年轻女士们拥有福音派爱情故事，这样的爱情经过各种磨难之后，因为重生和赎罪而变得神圣起来。这种小说不同于神谕体小说，就像低教会派女教徒不同于高教会派女教徒一样：她们不那么傲慢，却更加无知，句法更多错误，故事更加通俗。

福音派文学的主角一般都是年轻的牧师，从中产阶级的观点来看，牧师衣服上的亚麻带对年轻女士具有双重的吸引力，就如同一位军人的肩章在他的上级和下属心中激起的两种感受的混合。这类福音派小说的男主角无一例外地都是一个忧国忧民的年轻牧师，市井的老妇们对他可能是不屑一顾，但是她们年轻的女儿们“却再也不能忘怀他的布道”，轻易就被他获取芳心；温柔的一瞥总发生在讲道坛的阶梯上，而不是在话剧包厢里；二人间的亲密交谈时常引用圣经，而不是文学类诗集；他对女主角感情的怀疑常常还发展为对她灵魂的担忧。这位牧师的背景总是很好，要么是出身于上流社会，要么家庭富裕、衣着得体□其实，福音派小说也具备其他类别小说的愚蠢之处，作者在前一页还在跟你讲赎罪，下一页又开始描写贵族的礼仪和他们的高谈阔论了。作者所描绘的上流社会只不过是她的福音派想象力的奇怪彰显罢了；但是在众多“白色圣领”小说类别中有一点是值得称赞的真实□万年不变的男主角，传福音的年轻牧师，通常是极为枯燥乏味的。

不能在这些大多数普通人的故事中展现她们的宗教观点呢？这些“大多数”普通人没钱买马车，“更别说是镶黄铜的轻便型双轮马车了”，甚至在家吃饭的时候连银制的刀叉都用不起，而且女作家们蹩脚的英语在他们看来却是极其通顺的。我们为什么不能描绘一下英国工人阶层的宗教生活，就像斯托夫人描绘的黑人宗教生活那样，一定也会很有意思。然而，事实上是，这些虔敬的女作家却还是拿一些虚伪的故事恶心我们，这些故事令我们想到刚刚皈依的世俗妇女：虽然她还是那么喜欢晚宴，但是她不再宴请花花公子而是邀请牧师；她虽仍旧沉迷于服饰，但她挑选颜色和图案的品位却变得严肃和清醒；她的言语依旧琐碎，但琐碎的言论中却充斥着福音而不是小道传闻。在《古老的灰教堂》一书中，我们同样能看到与流行小说一致的滑稽片段，各种品性不端却魅力无边的准男爵也是不会缺席的。有必要引用小说中的一段话来证明，这种出身高贵的人与斯桂尔斯小姐是相配的。这类谈话中充斥着大量字体上的变化和显而易见的暗讽。在一个夜晚，年轻的尤斯塔斯牧师为了能和勒欣顿小姐单独谈话，于是带着她去参观罗马斗兽场遗址。准男爵对此很嫉妒，于是就有了以下这段对勒欣顿的气话：

毫无疑问，勒欣顿和他在一起是十分安全的，因为他有尤斯塔斯教皇一世般的神圣指引。

他会给勒欣顿小姐说教，告诉她很多年前，就在这里，在罗马斗兽场，邪恶的异教徒放出凶猛的野兽 袭击我们的门徒保罗——噢，不！顺便说一句，我觉得我错了，那并不是门徒保罗，也并不是在罗马斗兽场。但是内容的真假没关系，他依旧可以布道，从这些离谱的故事讲到那些堕落的异教徒，描述他们不恰当的行为，并且以这样的训词结尾：“醒来吧！不要和他们同流合污”——而且我确定，勒欣顿小姐，你十分虔诚地遵守了当晚的禁令，因为我们自从到达聚会就没有看见你。可是，大家都公认今晚是个快乐且有趣的聚会，而且我们都十分感激格雷先生关于举办这个聚会的提议，既然他是如此重要的一位活动向导，我希望他可以想出其他同样令所有人 都愉快的事情来。

这种口水话以及这种口水叙述就像一幅糟糕的画，什么都没呈现出来，也没能暗示作者的用意。但是毫无疑问的是我们和蔼可亲的女作者认为这是一本极具教育意义的小说，虔诚的基督徒妈妈肯定会把这本书塞到她们女儿的手中。但一切都只是相对的，我们可能会遇到这样的美国素食者，他们平常只吃干粮，如果他们想要刺激下胃口，便会想法子找点“湿粮”来刺激刺激。所以，我们权可以把《古老的灰教堂》看作福音派小说圈子里口味独特的一味菜品，或许有的人读起来还是会觉得富有趣味和冲击力呢。

然而，可能最不具有可读性的蠢故事要数“现代仿古类” [26] 小说了。这类小说给读者讲述雅尼和佯庇 [27] 的家庭生活、亚述王西拿基立 [28] 的个人感情经历或是银匠迪米特里厄斯的内心挣扎和最终皈依。其实别的大多数蠢故事至少能够博得读者一笑，但是现代仿古类简直就是给人完全呆板和沉重的感觉，其沉闷的愚昧让人禁不住呻吟。文学女性们常常自顾自地揽下一桩仅能由世界上最杰出的天才完成的任务，这无疑是对她们不自量力的最好证明。重现过去最好的办法只能是尽可能地模仿接近——而通过这种方式，我们也或多或少地把时代精神注入到了古典形式中□

时代精神是什么？

那就是做自我精神的主宰，

由此映射出的时代精神 [29]。

我们承认有些天才对过去任何一个时期都了如指掌，他们可以通过丰富的想象力弥补“人类历史之声”里缺失的音符，并且将这些碎片重构成一个整体，从而把久远的过去呈现在欣赏能力贫乏的我们面前。这种天才的想象力十分稀有，因为它不仅要求有准确和翔实知识，而且需要极其鲜活的创造力。然而，现代仿古类女性作家总有一些适得其反的写作技巧来暴露她们平庸的资质：她们借用古人的名字，把多愁善感用在罗马修女和埃及公主身上，并且借用大量犹太主教和希腊哲学家之口说出她们自己的修辞论证。这种极度愚昧的小说最近有《亚多尼雅：犹太人驱逐史》（Adonijah, a Tale of the Jewish Dispersion，后文简称《亚多尼雅》），它和其他小说组成了一系列“结合了品味、幽默和合理原则”的故事。我们猜想《亚多尼雅》展现的是合理的原则，而品味和幽默可能只在其余几本中得以体现。小说的封面上说此书故事的情节“非同寻常地有趣”，而且前言结尾这样写道：“如果你对被驱逐的以色列人和朱迪亚人感兴趣，本书会向你提供相关重大历史事件的信息并带来别样的阅读体验。”既然书所谓的“重大历史事件”并未详细说明，因此有很多深奥的意义我们根本读不懂；然而要说被驱逐的以色列人和朱迪亚人这段历史，任何一个爱读书的学生丫头知道的都比这本小说中提供的信息要多。至于《亚多尼雅》中的爱情故事可以算是最低能的了，然而我们假定它尚且具有一定的教育意义，一是因为小说的男主角是个犹太俘虏，女主角是个罗马修女，他俩以及他们的朋友在经过“促进犹太人改变信仰协会”最简单、最快速的感化之后都皈依了基督教；二是因为作者为了让小说看起来比较复古，于是并不是用普通语来写，而采用了夸张的书面语言，例如“尼罗大帝毋庸置疑拥有天下最杰出的头脑”“这一贵族气数将尽”“他忠贞不渝的床第伴侣”“啊！对维斯塔灶神起誓！”“罗马

人，尔等听着！”等。本册书的封面上有众多名人推荐和介绍，有一句来自辛克莱小姐□“理性、智慧、虔诚的人都会坦坦荡荡地选择读这本充满想象力的小说”，据此读者可以愉快地推理，无论是多贝尼医生、米勒先生还是莫里斯先生，都是公开地阅读《亚多尼雅》，而不是将其偷偷地藏沙发垫子底下或者在桌子下断断续续地读。

俗语说：“如果自己的脑袋都是黄油做的，就别去当面包师。”变通一下也可以说，如果没有准备好接受后果，女士们就不要投身于写作事业。我们意识到，我们的评论与别的评论者的语气完全不同。那些评论者常年怀着相似的感情，就像一位月嫂一样，对着一位又一位女性小说家说我们对你的作品“欣然致敬”。我们同样也意识到，我们所批评的那些女作家已经习惯了别人对她们的夸奖：小说的措辞十分考究，描写的生活十分生动，人物性格刻画突出，风格令人着迷，而且人物的精神高尚。但是如果她们怨恨我们直白的言论，我们则建议这些女作家应该好好审视一下她们的称颂者对其他作家吝啬的表扬和吹毛求疵的批评，因为这些作家的作品，正是在不久的将来可能成为经典的那一部分。一位女性作家的作品一旦受到了适度的赞扬和严厉的批评，则证明她的天赋或是影响力得到了认可。若是用一支温度计来度量女性的才华，那么，如果这位女作家的才华本身为零，那么媒体夸奖她作品的热度可能达到沸点；若是她的才华算得上平庸，外界的称赞则能达到酷暑的温度；但倘若是她才华横溢，外界的评价热情却会降到冰点。哈丽雅特·马蒂诺 [30]、柯勒·贝尔 [31] 以及加斯克尔夫人和男性一样，得到了骑士般的待遇。如果哪个评论家真正承认女性作者在文学中的地位，那么从原则上来说，他一定得是个中立者，并且不对文学女性的作品有特殊偏好。因为如果你曾大量且不带偏见地阅读过女性所著的文学作品，你就会发现这些作品中最大的缺陷不仅仅是智性上的不足，更是一种与文学造诣息息相关的道德品质的缺失□女性作者常常容易忽略耐心刻苦伏案写作的重要性，不了解出版作品所带来的责任，难以欣赏写作艺术的神圣性。在女性大部分的著作中，由于缺乏高标准的约束而存在着大量愚昧的拼接或是拙劣的模仿，其实一丁点的自我批评就能使其原形毕露；但是，就好像听歌的人若不能正确给出评价，唱歌的人就会跑调一样；倘若听歌的人有那么一些音乐细胞，就会让唱歌的人闭上嘴。单纯地想让文字变成出版物的虚荣心似乎鼓舞了很多女性，她们错误地认为只要会写作就好像高人一等了，可是写出来的作品却充满智力和道德的退化，毫无用处，她们就是没有这一点自知之明。在这样的前提下，我们认为女性的平均智力被大部分女性文学作品所错误地代表了；极少数写作水平很高的女作家远远超出普通水平，当然，还有多数女作家的写作能力远远低于平均水平。因此，严厉的书评肩负着一项十分具有骑士精神的任务，即剥夺女性作者的虚假威望，制止她们具有迷惑性的吸引力，并且劝阻那些资质平庸的女性□就不要写小说了□这是她们作

为女性对文坛能做的唯一贡献了。

女性不经任何特殊资格证明就成为作家，其根源在于社会上的其他职业长期将女性拒之门外。看来，社会真是个十恶不赦的存在，小到有毒的咸菜，大到糟糕的文学，社会都应当对这些有害身体的物品负责。然而，社会，就像“物质”、女王陛下的政府或者其他崇高的抽象概念一样褒贬参半。如果有一个女性是为了生计而写作，那么必定有三个女性是为了名利而写作；而为了生计工作又是如此圣洁，让所有烂俗的女性小说显得与它格格不入。虽然俗语说“一切劳动必有收益”，但是我们认为女性作家的这些蠢故事并非劳动的成果，而只是一种庸庸碌碌的游手好闲。

幸运的是，我们并不需要去论证、去证明在小说这个领域，女性就不如男性。我们可以轻而易举地列出一长串已去世和健在的女性小说家名字，她们不仅仅写作优秀的小说，有的作品还能被认为是顶级的，这些作品也具有女性小说宝贵的特征，区别男性的天性和阅历。即使没有受到完整的教育，女性仍然不会被挡在写小说的门外，而其他艺术形式则没有如此简单的入门原则。就好像在任何形态下都十分美丽的水晶石，小说能以多种方式呈现，而仍然保持其魅力，只要我们在写作小说时诚恳地观察，保持幽默及热情。可是，正是因为写小说的门槛太低，才使得很多能力不够的女性也加入了写作的队伍。女性若是琴技不佳，则很难蒙混过关，假装自己富有音乐才华，因为在弹奏的过程中她需要克服实际的困难，而这也让她成了一个合格的演奏家。在一定程度上，任何一种讲求绝对技巧的艺术，都会自动抵制能力不足引发的愚蠢行为。然而，在小说写作中，即使你能力不够，也没有什么外在的条件来约束你，也不会阻碍你把愚昧的能力当作写作天赋。于是我们一次又一次地见证了拉封丹寓言中驴子的故事：它将鼻孔对准长笛，发现竟然奏出了声音，于是它激动地大叫：“我！我能吹笛子了！”在最后，我们把这个寓言故事谨献给那些想加入“写蠢故事的女作家”行列的女性读者，你们还是好自为之吧。

THE LIFTED VEIL

Chapter 1

The time of my end approaches. I have lately been subject to attacks of angina pectoris ; and in the ordinary course of things, my physician tells me, I may fairly hope that my life will not be protracted many months. Unless, then, I am cursed with an exceptional physical constitution, as I am cursed with an exceptional mental character, I shall not much longer groan under the wearisome burthen of this earthly existence. If it were to be otherwise – if I were to live on to the age most men desire and provide for – I should for once have known whether the miseries of delusive expectation can outweigh the miseries of true prevision. For I foresee when I shall die, and everything that will happen in my last moments.

Just a month from this day, on the 20th of September 1850, I shall be sitting in this chair, in this study, at ten o'clock at night, longing to die, weary of incessant insight and foresight, without delusions and without hope. Just as I am watching a tongue of blue flame rising in the fire, and my lamp is burning low, the horrible contraction will begin at my chest. I shall only have time to reach the bell, and pull it violently, before the sense of suffocation will come. No one will answer my bell. I know why. My two servants are lovers, and will have quarrelled. My housekeeper will have rushed out of the house in a fury, two hours before, hoping that Perry will believe she has gone to drown herself. Perry is alarmed at last, and is gone out after her. The little scullery- maid is asleep on a bench: she never answers the bell; it does not wake her. The sense of suffocation increases: my lamp goes out with a horrible stench: I make a great effort, and snatch at the bell again. I long for life, and there is no help. I thirsted for the unknown: the thirst is gone. O God, let me stay with the known, and be weary of it: I am content. Agony of pain and suffocation – and all the while the earth, the fields, the pebbly brook at the bottom of the rookery, the fresh scent after the rain, the light of the morning through my chamber-window, the warmth of the hearth after the frosty air – will darkness close over them for ever?

Darkness – darkness – no pain – nothing but darkness: but I am passing on and on through the darkness: my thought stays in the darkness, but always with a sense of moving onward . . . Before that time comes, I wish to use my last hours of ease and strength in telling the strange story of my experience. I have never fully unbosomed myself to any human being; I have never been encouraged to trust much in the sympathy of my fellow- men. But we have all a chance of meeting with some pity, some tenderness, some charity, when we are dead: it is the living only who indulgence and reverence are held off, like the rain by the hard east wind. While the heart beats, bruise it – it is your only opportunity; while the eye can still turn towards you with moist timid entreaty, freeze it with an icy unanswering gaze; while the ear, that delicate messenger to the inmost sanctuary of the soul, can still take in the tones of kindness, put it off with hard civility, or sneering compliment, or envious affectation of indifference; while the creative brain can still throb with the sense of injustice, with the yearning for brotherly recognition – make haste – oppress it with your illconsidered judgments, your trivial comparisons, your careless misrepresentations. The heart will by- and- by be still – ubi sæva indignatio ulterius cor lacerare nequit ; [32] the eye will cease to entreat; the ear will be deaf; the brain will have ceased from all wants as well as from all work. Then your charitable speeches may find vent; then you may remember and pity the toil and the struggle and the failure; then you may give due honour to the work achieved; then you may find extenuation for errors, and may consent to bury them.

That is a trivial schoolboy text; why do I dwell on it? It has little reference to me, for I shall leave no works behind me for men to honour. I have no near relatives who will make up, by weeping over my grave, for the wounds they inflicted on me when I was among them. It is only the story of my life that will perhaps win a little more sympathy from strangers when I am dead, than I ever believed it would obtain from my friends while I was living.

My childhood perhaps seems happier to me than it really was, by contrast with all the after- years. For then the curtain of the future was as impenetrable to me as to other children: I had all their delight in the present hour, their sweet indefinite hopes for the morrow; and I had a tender mother: even now, after the dreary lapse of long years, a slight trace of sensation accompanies the remembrance of her caress as she held me on her knee – her arms round my little body, her cheek pressed on mine. I had a complaint of the eyes that made me blind for a little while, and she kept me on her knee from morning till night. That unequalled love soon vanished out of my life, and even to my childish consciousness it was as if that life had become more chill. I rode my little white pony with the groom by my side as before, but there were no loving eyes looking at me as I mounted, no glad arms opened to me when I came back. Perhaps I missed my mother's love more than most children of seven or eight would have done, to whom the other pleasures of life remained as before; for I was certainly a very sensitive child. I remember still the mingled trepidation and delicious excitement with which I was affected by the tramping of the horses on the pavement in the echoing stables, by the loud resonance of the grooms' voices, by the booming bark of the dogs as my father's carriage thundered under the archway of the courtyard, by the din of the gong as it gave notice of luncheon and dinner. The measured tramp of soldiery which I sometimes heard – for my father's house lay near a county town where there were large barracks – made me sob and tremble; and yet when they were gone past, I longed for them to come back again.

I fancy my father thought me an odd child, and had little fondness for me; though he was very careful in fulfilling what he regarded as a parent's duties. But he was already past the middle of life, and I was not his only son. My mother had been his second wife, and he was five- and- forty when he married her. He was a firm, unbending, intensely orderly man, in root and stem a banker, but with a flourishing graft of the active landholder, aspiring to county influence: one of those people who are always like themselves from day to day, who are uninfluenced by the weather, and neither know melancholy nor high spirits. I held him in great awe, and appeared more timid and sensitive in his presence than at other times; a circumstance which, perhaps, helped to confirm him in the intention to educate me on a different plan from the prescriptive one with which he had complied in the case of my elder brother, already a tall youth at Eton. My brother was to be his representative and successor; he must go to Eton and Oxford, for the sake of making connections, of course: my father was not a man to underrate the bearing of Latin satirists or Greek dramatists on the attainment of an aristocratic position. But, intrinsically, he had slight esteem for 'those dead but sceptred spirits;' having qualified himself for forming an independent opinion by reading Potter's 'Æschylus,' and dipping into Francis's 'Horace.' To this negative view he added a positive one, derived, from a recent connection with mining speculations; namely, that a scientific education was the really useful training for a younger son. Moreover, it was clear that a shy, sensitive boy like me was not fit to encounter the rough experience of a public school. Mr Letherall had said so very decidedly. Mr Letherall was a large man in spectacles, who one day took my small head between his large hands, and pressed it here and there in an exploratory, suspicious manner – then placed each of his great thumbs on my temples, and pushed me a little way from him, and stared at me with glittering spectacles. The contemplation appeared to displease him, for he frowned sternly, and said to my father, drawing his thumbs across my eyebrows –

'The deficiency is there, sir – there; and here,' he added, touching the upper sides of my head, 'here is the excess. That must be brought out, sir, and this must be laid to sleep.'

I was in a state of tremor, partly at the vague idea that I was the object of reprobation, partly in the agitation of my first hatred – hatred of this big, spectacled man, who pulled my head about as if he wanted to buy and cheapen it.

I am not aware how much Mr Letherall had to do with the system afterwards adopted towards me, but it was presently clear that private tutors, natural history, science, and the modern languages, were the appliances by which the defects of my organisation were to be remedied. I was very stupid about machines, so I was to be greatly occupied with them; I had no memory for classification, so it was particularly necessary that I should study systematic zoology and botany; I was hungry for human deeds and human emotions, so I was to be plentifully crammed with the mechanical powers, the elementary bodies, and the phenomena of electricity and magnetism. A better-constituted boy would certainly have profited under my intelligent tutors, with their scientific apparatus; and would, doubtless, have found the phenomena of electricity and magnetism as fascinating as I was, every Thursday, assured they were. As it was, I could have paired off, for ignorance of whatever was taught me, with the worst Latin scholar that was ever turned out of a classical academy. I read Plutarch, and Shakspeare, and Don Quixote by the sly, and supplied myself in that way with wandering thoughts, while my tutor was assuring me that 'an improved man, as distinguished from an ignorant one, was a man who knew the reason why water ran down- hill.' I had no desire to be this improved man; I was glad of the running water; I could watch it and listen to it gurgling among the pebbles, and bathing the bright green water- plants, by the hour together. I did not want to know why it ran; I had perfect confidence that there were good reasons for what was so very beautiful.

There is no need to dwell on this part of my life. I have said enough to indicate that my nature was of the sensitive, unpractical order, and that it grew up in an uncongenial medium, which could never foster it into happy, healthy development. When I was sixteen I was sent to Geneva to complete my course of education; and the change was a very happy one to me, for the first sight of the Alps, with the setting sun on them, as we descended the Jura, seemed to me like an entrance into heaven; and the three years of my life there were spent in a perpetual sense of exaltation, as if from a draught of delicious wine, at the presence of Nature in all her awful loveliness. You will think, perhaps, that I must have been a poet, from this early sensibility to Nature. But my lot was not so happy as that. A poet pours forth his song and believes in the listening ear and answering soul, to which his song will be floated sooner or later. But the poet's sensibility without his voice – the poet's sensibility that finds no vent but in silent tears on the sunny bank, when the noonday light sparkles on the water, or in an inward shudder at the sound of harsh human tones, the sight of a cold human eye – this dumb passion brings with it a fatal solitude of soul in the society of one's fellow- men. My least solitary moments were those in which I pushed off in my boat, at evening, towards the centre of the lake; it seemed to me that the sky, and the glowing mountain- tops, and the wide blue water, surrounded me with a cherishing love such as no human face had shed on me since my mother's love had vanished out of my life. I used to do as Jean Jacques did – lie down in my boat and let it glide where it would, while I looked up at the departing glow leaving one mountain- top after the other, as if the prophet's chariot of fire were passing over them on its way to the home of light. Then, when the white summits were all sad and corpse-like, I had to push homeward, for I was under careful surveillance, and was allowed no late wanderings. This disposition of mine was not favourable to the formation of intimate friendships among the numerous youths of my own age who are always to be found studying at Geneva. Yet I made one such friendship; and, singularly enough, it was with a youth whose intellectual tendencies were the very reverse of my own. I shall call him Charles Meunier; his real surname – an English one, for he was of English extraction – having since become celebrated. He was an orphan, who lived on a miserable pittance while he pursued the medical studies for which he had a special genius. Strange! that with my vague mind, susceptible and unobservant, hating inquiry and given up to contemplation, I should have been drawn towards a youth whose strongest passion was science. But the bond was not an intellectual one; it came from a source that can happily blend the stupid with the brilliant, the dreamy with the practical: it came from community of feeling. Charles was poor and ugly, derided by Genevese gamins, and not acceptable in drawing-rooms. I saw that he was isolated, as I was, though from a different cause, and, stimulated by a sympathetic resentment, I made timid advances towards him. It is enough to say that there sprang up as much comradeship between us as our different habits would allow; and in Charles's rare holidays we went up the Salève together, or took the boat to Vevay, while I listened dreamily to the monologues in which he unfolded his bold conceptions of future experiment and discovery. I mingled them confusedly in my thought with glimpses of blue water and delicate floating cloud, with the notes of birds and the distant glitter of the glacier. He knew quite well that my mind was half absent, yet he liked to talk to me in this way; for don't we talk of our hopes and our projects even to dogs and birds, when they love us? I have mentioned this one friendship because of its connection with a strange and terrible scene which I shall have to narrate in my subsequent life.

This happier life at Geneva was put an end to by a severe illness, which is partly a blank to me, partly a time of dimly-remembered suffering, with the presence of my father by my bed from time to time. Then came the languid monotony of convalescence, the days gradually breaking into variety and distinctness as my strength enabled me to take longer and longer drives. On one of these more vividly remembered days, my father said to me, as he sat beside my sofa –

‘When you are quite well enough to travel, Latimer, I shall take you home with me. The journey will amuse you and do you good, for I shall go through the Tyrol and Austria, and you will see many new places. Our neighbours, the Filmores, are come; Alfred will join us at Basle, and we shall all go together to Vienna, and back by Prague’ . . .

My father was called away before he had finished his sentence, and he left my mind resting on the word Prague, with a strange sense that a new and wondrous scene was breaking upon me: a city under the broad sunshine, that seemed to me as if it were the summer sunshine of a long- past century arrested in its course – unrefreshed for ages by the dews of night, or the rushing rain-cloud; scorching the dusty, weary, time- eaten grandeur of a people doomed to live on in the stale repetition of memories, like deposed and superannuated kings in their regal gold- inwoven tatters. The city looked so thirsty that the broad river seemed to me a sheet of metal; and the blackened statues, as I passed under their blank gaze, along the unending bridge, with their ancient garments and their saintly crowns, seemed to me the real inhabitants and owners of this place, while the busy, trivial men and women, hurrying to and fro, were a swarm of ephemeral visitants infesting it for a day. It is such grim, stony beings as these, I thought, who are the fathers of ancient faded children, in those tanned time- fretted dwellings that crowd the steep before me; who pay their court in the worn and crumbling pomp of the palace which stretches its monotonous length on the height; who worship wearily in the stifling air of the churches, urged by no fear or hope, but compelled by their doom to be ever old and undying, to live on in the rigidity of habit, as they live on in perpetual mid- day, without the repose of night or the new birth of morning.

A stunning clang of metal suddenly thrilled through me, and I became conscious of the objects in my room again: one of the fire-irons had fallen as Pierre opened the door to bring me my draught. My heart was palpitating violently, and I begged Pierre to leave my draught beside me; I would take it presently.

As soon as I was alone again, I began to ask myself whether I had been sleeping. Was this a dream – this wonderfully distinct vision – minute in its distinctness down to a patch of rainbow light on the pavement, transmitted through a coloured lamp in the shape of a star – of a strange city, quite unfamiliar to my imagination? I had seen no picture of Prague: it lay in my mind as a mere name, with vaguely- remembered historical associations – ill- defined memories of imperial grandeur and religious wars.

Nothing of this sort had ever occurred in my dreaming experience before, for I had often been humiliated because my dreams were only saved from being utterly disjointed and commonplace by the frequent terrors of nightmare. But I could not believe that I had been asleep, for I remembered distinctly the gradual breaking- in of the vision upon me, like the new images in a dissolving view, or the growing distinctness of the landscape as the sun lifts up the veil of the morning mist. And while I was conscious of this incipient vision, I was also conscious that Pierre came to tell my father Mr Filmore was waiting for him, and that my father hurried out of the room. No, it was not a dream; was it – the thought was full of tremulous exultation – was it the poet's nature in me, hitherto only a troubled yearning sensibility, now manifesting itself suddenly as spontaneous creation? Surely it was in this way that Homer saw the plain of Troy, that Dante saw the abodes of the departed, that Milton saw the earthward flight of the Tempter. Was it that my illness had wrought some happy change in my organisation – given a firmer tension to my nerves – carried off some dull obstruction? I had often read of such effects – in works of fiction at least. Nay; in genuine biographies I had read of the subtilising or exalting influence of some diseases on the mental powers. Did not Novalis feel his inspiration intensified under the progress of consumption?

When my mind had dwelt for some time on this blissful idea, it seemed to me that I might perhaps test it by an exertion of my will. The vision had begun when my father was speaking of our going to Prague. I did not for a moment believe it was really a representation of that city; I believed – I hoped it was a picture that my newly- liberated genius had painted in fiery haste, with the colours snatched from lazy memory. Suppose I were to fix my mind on some other place – Venice, for example, which was far more familiar to my imagination than Prague: perhaps the same sort of result would follow. I concentrated my thoughts on Venice; I stimulated my imagination with poetic memories, and strove to feel myself present in Venice, as I had felt myself present in Prague. But in vain. I was only colouring the Canaletto engravings that hung in my old bedroom at home; the picture was a shifting one, my mind wandering uncertainly in search of more vivid images; I could see no accident of form or shadow without conscious labour after the necessary conditions. It was all prosaic effort, not rapt passivity, such as I had experienced half an hour before. I was discouraged; but I remembered that inspiration was fitful.

For several days I was in a state of excited expectation, watching for a recurrence of my new gift. I sent my thoughts ranging over my world of knowledge, in the hope that they would find some object which would send a reawakening vibration through my slumbering genius. But no; my world remained as dim as ever, and that flash of strange light refused to come again, though I watched for it with palpitating eagerness.

My father accompanied me every day in a drive, and a gradually lengthening walk as my powers of walking increased; and one evening he had agreed to come and fetch me at twelve the next day, that we might go together to select a musical box, and other purchases rigorously demanded of a rich Englishman visiting Geneva. He was one of the most punctual of men and bankers, and I was always nervously anxious to be quite ready for him at the appointed time. But, to my surprise, at a quarter past twelve he had not appeared. I felt all the impatience of a convalescent who has nothing particular to do, and who has just taken a tonic in the prospect of immediate exercise that would carry off the stimulus.

Unable to sit still and reserve my strength, I walked up and down the room, looking out on the current of the Rhone, just where it leaves the dark- blue lake; but thinking all the while of the possible causes that could detain my father.

Suddenly I was conscious that my father was in the room, but not alone: there were two persons with him. Strange! I had heard no footstep, I had not seen the door open; but I saw my father, and at his right hand our neighbour Mrs Filmore, whom I remembered very well, though I had not seen her for five years. She was a commonplace middle- aged woman, in silk and cashmere; but the lady on the left of my father was not more than twenty, a tall, slim, willowy figure, with luxuriant blond hair, arranged in cunning braids and folds that looked almost too massive for the slight figure and the small featured, thin- lipped face they crowned. But the face had not a girlish expression: the features were sharp, the pale grey eyes at once acute, restless, and sarcastic. They were fixed on me in half- smiling curiosity, and I felt a painful sensation as if a sharp wind were cutting me. The pale green dress, and the green leaves that seemed to form a border about her pale blond hair, made me think of a Water- Nixie, – for my mind was full of German lyrics, and this pale, fatal- eyed woman, with the green weeds, looked like a birth from some cold sedgy stream, the daughter of an aged river.

‘Well, Latimer, you thought me long,’ my father said . . .

But while the last word was in my ears, the whole group vanished, and there was nothing between me and the Chinese painted folding- screen that stood before the door. I was cold and trembling; I could only totter forward and throw myself on the sofa. This strange new power had manifested itself again . . . But was it a power? Might it not rather be a disease – a sort of intermittent delirium, concentrating my energy of brain into moments of unhealthy activity, and leaving my saner hours all the more barren? I felt a dizzy sense of unreality in what my eye rested on; I grasped the bell convulsively, like one trying to free himself from nightmare, and rang it twice. Pierre came with a look of alarm in his face.

‘Monsieur ne se trouve pas bien?’ he said, anxiously.

‘I’m tired of waiting, Pierre,’ I said, as distinctly and emphatically as I could, like a man determined to be sober in spite of wine; ‘I’m afraid something has happened to my father – he’s usually so punctual. Run to the Hôtel des Bergues and see if he is there.’

Pierre left the room at once, with a soothing ‘Bien, Monsieur;’ and I felt the better for this scene of simple, waking prose. Seeking to calm myself still further, I went into my bedroom, adjoining the salon, and opened a case of eau- de- Cologne; took out a bottle; went through the process of taking out the cork very neatly, and then rubbed the reviving spirit over my hands and forehead, and under my nostrils, drawing a new delight from the scent because I had procured it by slow details of labour, and by no strange sudden madness. Already I had begun to taste something of the horror that belongs to the lot of a human being whose nature is not adjusted to simple human conditions.

Still enjoying the scent, I returned to the salon, but it was not unoccupied, as it had been before I left it. In front of the Chinese folding- screen there was my father, with Mrs Filmore on his right hand, and on his left— the slim blond- haired girl, with the keen face and the keen eyes fixed on me in half- smiling curiosity.

‘Well, Latimer, you thought me long,’ my father said . . .

I heard no more, felt no more, till I became conscious that I was lying with my head low on the sofa, Pierre and my father by my side. As soon as I was thoroughly revived, my father left the room, and presently returned, saying – ‘I’ve been to tell the ladies how you are, Latimer. They were waiting in the next room. We shall put off our shopping expedition to- day.’

Presently he said, ‘That young lady is Bertha Grant, Mrs Filmore’s orphan niece. Filmore has adopted her, and she lives with them, so you will have her for a neighbour when we go home – perhaps for a near relation; for there is a tenderness between her and Alfred, I suspect, and I should be gratified by the match, since Filmore means to provide for her in every way as if she were his daughter. It had not occurred to me that you knew nothing about her living with the Filmores.’

He made no further allusion to the fact of my having fainted at the moment of seeing her, and I would not for the world have told him the reason: I shrank from the idea of disclosing to any one what might be regarded as a pitiable peculiarity, most of all from betraying it to my father, who would have suspected my sanity ever after.

I do not mean to dwell with particularity on the details of my experience. I have described these two cases at length, because they had definite, clearly traceable results in my after- lot.

Shortly after this last occurrence – I think the very next day – I began to be aware of a phase in my abnormal sensibility, to which, from the languid and slight nature of my intercourse with others since my illness, I had not been alive before. This was the obtrusion on my mind of the mental process going forward in first one person, and then another, with whom I happened to be in contact: the vagrant, frivolous ideas and emotions of some uninteresting acquaintance – Mrs Filmore, for example – would force themselves on my consciousness like an importunate, ill- played musical instrument, or the loud activity of an imprisoned insect. But this unpleasant sensibility was fitful, and left me moments of rest, when the souls of my companions were once more shut out from me, and I felt a relief such as silence brings to wearied nerves. I might have believed this importunate insight to be merely a diseased activity of the imagination, but that my prevision of incalculable words and actions proved it to have a fixed relation to the mental process in other minds. But this superadded consciousness, wearying and annoying enough when it urged on me the trivial experience of indifferent people, became an intense pain and grief when it seemed to be opening to me the souls of those who were in a close relation to me – when the rational talk, the graceful attentions, the wittily-turned phrases, and the kindly deeds, which used to make the web of their characters, were seen as if thrust asunder by a microscopic vision, that showed all the intermediate frivolities, all the suppressed egoism, all the struggling chaos of puerilities, meanness, vague capricious memories, and indolent make- shift thoughts, from which human words and deeds emerge like leaflets cover ing a fermenting heap.

At Basle we were joined by my brother Alfred, now a handsome self- confident man of six- and- twenty – a thorough contrast to my fragile, nervous, ineffectual self. I believe I was held to have a sort of half-womanish, half- ghostly beauty; for the portrait- painters, who are thick as weeds at Geneva, had often asked me to sit to them, and I had been the model of a dying minstrel in a fancy picture. But I thoroughly disliked my own physique , and nothing but the belief that it was a condition of poetic genius would have reconciled me to it. That brief hope was quite fled, and I saw in my face now nothing but the stamp of a morbid organisation, framed for passive suffering – too feeble for the sublime resistance of poetic production. Alfred, from whom I had been almost constantly separated, and who, in his present stage of character and appearance, came before me as a perfect stranger, was bent on being extremely friendly and brother- like to me. He had the superficial kindness of a good- humoured, self- satisfied nature, that fears no rivalry, and has encountered no contrarities. I am not sure that my disposition was good enough for me to have been quite free from envy towards him, even if our desires had not clashed, and if I had been in the healthy human condition which admits of generous confidence and charitable construction. There must always have been an antipathy between our natures. As it was, he became in a few weeks an object of intense hatred to me; and when he entered the room, still more when he spoke, it was as if a sensation of grating metal had set my teeth on edge. My diseased consciousness was more intensely and continually occupied with his thoughts and emotions, than with those of any other person who came in my way. I was perpetually exasperated with the petty promptings of his conceit and his love of patronage, with his self-complacent belief in Bertha Grant's passion for him, with his half-pitying contempt for me – seen not in the ordinary indications of intonation and phrase and slight action, which an acute and suspicious mind is on the watch for, but in all their naked skinless complication.

For we were rivals, and our desires clashed, though he was not aware of it. I have said nothing yet of the effect Bertha Grant produced in me on a nearer acquaintance. That effect was chiefly determined by the fact that she made the only exception, among all the human beings about me, to my unhappy gift of insight. About Bertha I was always in a state of uncertainty: I could watch the expression of her face, and speculate on its meaning; I could ask for her opinion with the real interest of ignorance; I could listen for her words and watch for her smile with hope and fear: she had for me the fascination of an unravelled destiny. I say it was this fact that chiefly determined the strong effect she produced on me: for, in the abstract, no womanly character could seem to have less affinity for that of a shrinking, romantic, passionate youth than Bertha's. She was keen, sarcastic, unimaginative, prematurely cynical, remaining critical and unmoved in the most impressive scenes, inclined to dissect all my favourite poems, and especially contemptuous towards the German lyrics which were my pet literature at that time. To this moment I am unable to define my feeling towards her: it was not ordinary boyish admiration, for she was the very opposite, even to the colour of her hair, of the ideal woman who still remained to me the type of loveliness; and she was without that enthusiasm for the great and good, which, even at the moment of her strongest dominion over me, I should have declared to be the highest element of character. But there is no tyranny more complete than that which a self- centred negative nature exercises over a morbidly sensitive nature perpetually craving sympathy and support. The most independent people feel the effect of a man's silence in heightening their value for his opinion – feel an additional triumph in conquering the reverence of a critic habitually captious and satirical: no wonder, then, that an enthusiastic self- distrusting youth should watch and wait before the closed secret of a sarcastic woman's face, as if it were the shrine of the doubtfully benignant deity who ruled his destiny. For a young enthusiast is unable to imagine the total negation in another mind of the emotions which are stirring his own: they may be feeble, latent, inactive, he thinks, but they are there – they may be called forth; sometimes, in moments of happy hallucination, he believes they may be there in all the greater strength because he sees no outward sign of them. And this effect, as I have intimated, was heightened to its utmost intensity in me, because Bertha was the only being who remained for me in the mysterious seclusion of soul that renders such youthful delusion possible. Doubtless there was another sort of fascination at work – that subtle physical attraction which delights in cheating our psychological predictions, and in compelling the men who paint sylphs, to fall in love with some bonne et brave femme , heavy- heeled and freckled.

Bertha's behaviour towards me was such as to encourage all my illusions, to heighten my boyish passion, and make me more and more dependent on her smiles. Looking back with my present wretched knowledge, I conclude that her vanity and love of power were intensely gratified by the belief that I had fainted on first seeing her purely from the strong impression her person had produced on me. The most prosaic woman likes to believe herself the object of a violent, a poetic passion; and without a grain of romance in her, Bertha had that spirit of intrigue which gave piquancy to the idea that the brother of the man she meant to marry was dying with love and jealousy for her sake. That she meant to marry my brother, was what at that time I did not believe; for though he was assiduous in his attentions to her, and I knew well enough that both he and my father had made up their minds to this result, there was not yet an understood engagement – there had been no explicit declaration; and Bertha habitually, while she flirted with my brother, and accepted his homage in a way that implied to him a thorough recognition of its intention, made me believe, by the subtlest looks and phrases – feminine nothings which could never be quoted against her – that he was really the object of her secret ridicule; that she thought him, as I did, a coxcomb, whom she would have pleasure in disappointing. Me she openly petted in my brother's presence, as if I were too young and sickly ever to be thought of as a lover; and that was the view he took of me. But I believe she must inwardly have delighted in the tremors into which she threw me by the coaxing way in which she patted my curls, while she laughed at my quotations. Such caresses were always given in the presence of our friends; for when we were alone together, she affected a much greater distance towards me, and now and then took the opportunity, by words or slight actions, to stimulate my foolish timid hope that she really preferred me. And why should she not follow her inclination? I was not in so advantageous a position as my brother, but I had fortune, I was not a year younger than she was, and she was an heiress, who would soon be of age to decide for herself.

The fluctuations of hope and fear, confined to this one channel, made each day in her presence a delicious torment. There was one deliberate act of hers which especially helped to intoxicate me. When we were at Vienna her twentieth birthday occurred, and as she was very fond of ornaments, we all took the opportunity of the splendid jewellers' shops in that Teutonic Paris to purchase her a birthday present of jewellery. Mine, naturally, was the least expensive; it was an opal ring – the opal was my favourite stone, because it seems to blush and turn pale as if it had a soul. I told Bertha so when I gave it her, and said that it was an emblem of the poetic nature, changing with the changing light of heaven and of woman's eyes. In the evening she appeared elegantly dressed, and wearing conspicuously all the birthday presents except mine. I looked eagerly at her fingers, but saw no opal. I had no opportunity of noticing this to her during the evening; but the next day, when I found her seated near the window alone, after breakfast, I said, 'You scorn to wear my poor opal. I should have remembered that you despised poetic natures, and should have given you coral, or turquoise, or some other opaque unresponsive stone.' 'Do I despise it?' she answered, taking hold of a delicate gold chain which she always wore round her neck and drawing out the end from her bosom with my ring hanging to it; 'it hurts me a little, I can tell you,' she said, with her usual dubious smile, 'to wear it in that secret place; and since your poetical nature is so stupid as to prefer a more public position, I shall not endure the pain any longer.'

She took off the ring from the chain and put it on her finger, smiling still, while the blood rushed to my cheeks, and I could not trust myself to say a word of entreaty that she would keep the ring where it was before.

I was completely fooled by this, and for two days shut myself up in my own room whenever Bertha was absent, that I might intoxicate myself afresh with the thought of this scene and all it implied. I should mention that during these two months – which seemed a long life to me from the novelty and intensity of the pleasures and pains I underwent – my diseased participation in other people's consciousness continued to torment me; now it was my father, and now my brother, now Mrs Filmore or her husband, and now our German courier, whose stream of thought rushed upon me like a ringing in the ears not to be got rid of, though it allowed my own impulses and ideas to continue their uninterrupted course. It was like a preternaturally heightened sense of hearing, making audible to one a roar of sound where others find perfect stillness. The weariness and disgust of this involuntary intrusion into other souls was counteracted only by my ignorance of Bertha, and my growing passion for her; a passion enormously stimulated, if not produced, by that ignorance. She was my oasis of mystery in the dreary desert of knowledge. I had never allowed my diseased condition to betray itself, or to drive me into any unusual speech or action, except once, when, in a moment of peculiar bitterness against my brother, I had forestalled some words which I knew he was going to utter – a clever observation, which he had prepared before hand. He had occasionally a slightly- affected hesitation in his speech, and when he paused an instant after the second word, my impatience and jealousy impelled me to continue the speech for him, as if it were something we had both learned by rote. He coloured and looked astonished, as well as annoyed; and the words had no sooner escaped my lips than I felt a shock of alarm lest such an anticipation of words – very far from being words of course, easy to divine – should have betrayed me as an exceptional being, a sort of quiet energumen, whom every one, Bertha above all, would shudder at and avoid. But I magnified, as usual, the impression any word or deed of mine could produce on others; for no one gave any sign of having noticed my interruption as more than a rudeness, to be forgiven me on the score of my feeble nervous condition.

While this superadded consciousness of the actual was almost constant with me, I had never had a recurrence of that distinct prevision which I have described in relation to my first interview with Bertha; and I was waiting with eager curiosity to know whether or not my vision of Prague would prove to have been an instance of the same kind. A few days after the incident of the opal ring, we were paying one of our frequent visits to the Lichtenberg Palace. I could never look at many pictures in succession; for pictures, when they are at all powerful, affect me so strongly that one or two exhaust all my capability of contemplation. This morning I had been looking at Giorgione's picture of the cruel-eyed woman, said to be a likeness of Lucrezia Borgia. I had stood long alone before it, fascinated by the terrible reality of that cunning, relentless face, till I felt a strange poisoned sensation, as if I had long been inhaling a fatal odour, and was just beginning to be conscious of its effects. Perhaps even then I should not have moved away, if the rest of the party had not returned to this room, and announced that they were going to the Belvedere Gallery to settle a bet which had arisen between my brother and Mr Filmore about a portrait. I followed them dreamily, and was hardly alive to what occurred till they had all gone up to the gallery, leaving me below; for I refused to come within sight of another picture that day. I made my way to the Grand Terrace, since it was agreed that we should saunter in the gardens when the dispute had been decided. I had been sitting here a short space, vaguely conscious of trim gardens, with a city and green hills in the distance, when, wishing to avoid the proximity of the sentinel, I rose and walked down the broad stone steps, intending to seat myself farther on in the gardens. Just as I reached the gravel-walk, I felt an arm slipped within mine, and a light hand gently pressing my wrist. In the same instant a strange intoxicating numbness passed over me, like the continuance or climax of the sensation I was still feeling from the gaze of Lucrezia Borgia. The gardens, the summer sky, the consciousness of Bertha's arm being within mine, all vanished, and I seemed to be suddenly in darkness, out of which there gradually broke a dim firelight, and I felt myself sitting in my father's leather chair in the library at home. I knew the fireplace – the dogs for the wood- fire – the black marble chimney- piece with the white marble medallion of the dying Cleopatra in the centre. Intense and hopeless misery was pressing on my soul; the light became stronger, for Bertha was entering with a candle in her hand – Bertha, my wife – with cruel eyes, with green jewels and green leaves on her white ball- dress; every hateful thought within her present to me . . . 'Madman, idiot! why don't you kill yourself, then?' It was a moment of hell. I saw into her pitiless soul – saw its barren worldliness, its scorching hate – and felt it clothe me round like an air I was obliged to breathe. She came with her candle and stood over me with a bitter smile of contempt; I saw the great emerald brooch on her bosom, a studded serpent with diamond eyes. I shuddered – I despised this woman with the barren soul and mean thoughts; but I felt helpless before her, as if she clutched my bleeding heart, and would clutch it till the last drop of life- blood ebbed away. She was my wife, and we hated each other. Gradually the hearth, the dim library, the candle- light disappeared – seemed to melt away into a background of light, the green serpent with the diamond eyes remaining a dark image on the retina. Then I had a sense of my eyelids quivering, and the living daylight broke in upon me; I saw gardens, and heard voices; I was seated on the steps of the Belvedere Terrace, and my friends were round me.

The tumult of mind into which I was thrown by this hideous vision made me ill for several days, and prolonged our stay at Vienna. I shuddered with horror as the scene recurred to me; and it recurred constantly, with all its minutiae, as if they had been burnt into my memory; and yet, such is the madness of the human heart under the influence of its immediate desires, I felt a wild hell-braving joy that Bertha was to be mine; for the fulfilment of my former prevision concerning her first appearance before me, left me little hope that this last hideous glimpse of the future was the mere diseased play of my own mind, and had no relation to external realities. One thing alone I looked towards as a possible means of casting doubt on my terrible conviction – the discovery that my vision of Prague had been false – and Prague was the next city on our route.

Meanwhile, I was no sooner in Bertha's society again, than I was as completely under her sway as before. What if I saw into the heart of Bertha, the matured woman – Bertha, my wife? Bertha, the girl, was a fascinating secret to me still: I trembled under her touch; I felt the witchery of her presence; I yearned to be assured of her love. The fear of poison is feeble against the sense of thirst. Nay, I was just as jealous of my brother as before – just as much irritated by his small patronising ways; for my pride, my diseased sensibility, were there as they had always been, and winced as inevitably under every offence as my eye winced from an intruding mote. The future, even when brought within the compass of feeling by a vision that made me shudder, had still no more than the force of an idea, compared with the force of present emotion – of my love for Bertha, of my dislike and jealousy towards my brother.

It is an old story, that men sell themselves to the tempter, and sign a bond with their blood, because it is only to take effect at a distant day; then rush on to snatch the cup their souls thirst after with an impulse not the less savage because there is a dark shadow beside them for evermore. There is no short cut, no patent tram-road, to wisdom: after all the centuries of invention, the soul's path lies through the thorny wilderness which must be still trodden in solitude, with bleeding feet, with sobs for help, as it was trodden by them of old time.

My mind speculated eagerly on the means by which I should become my brother's successful rival, for I was still too timid, in my ignorance of Bertha's actual feeling, to venture on any step that would urge from her an avowal of it. I thought I should gain confidence even for this, if my vision of Prague proved to have been veracious; and yet, the horror of that certitude! Behind the slim girl Bertha, whose words and looks I watched for, whose touch was bliss, there stood continually that Bertha with the fuller form, the harder eyes, the more rigid mouth, – with the barren selfish soul laid bare; no longer a fascinating secret, but a measured fact, urging itself perpetually on my unwilling sight. Are you unable to give me your sympathy – you who read this? Are you unable to imagine this double consciousness at work within me, flowing on like two parallel streams which never mingle their waters and blend into a common hue? Yet you must have known something of the presentiments that spring from an insight at war with passion; and my visions were only like presentiments intensified to horror. You have known the powerlessness of ideas before the might of impulse; and my visions, when once they had passed into memory, were mere ideas – pale shadows that beckoned in vain, while my hand was grasped by the living and the loved.

In after- days I thought with bitter regret that if I had foreseen something more or something different – if instead of that hideous vision which poisoned the passion it could not destroy, or if even along with it I could have had a foreshadowing of that moment when I looked on my brother's face for the last time, some softening influence would have been shed over my feeling towards him: pride and hatred would surely have been subdued into pity, and the record of those hidden sins would have been shortened. But this is one of the vain thoughts with which we men flatter ourselves. We try to believe that the egoism within us would have easily been melted, and that it was only the narrowness of our knowledge which hemmed in our generosity, our awe, our human piety, and hindered them from submerging our hard indifference to the sensations and emotions of our fellow. Our tenderness and self-renunciation seem strong when our egoism has had its day – when, after our mean striving for a triumph that is to be another's loss, the triumph comes suddenly, and we shudder at it, because it is held out by the chill hand of death.

Our arrival in Prague happened at night, and I was glad of this, for it seemed like a deferring of a terribly decisive moment, to be in the city for hours without seeing it. As we were not to remain long in Prague, but to go on speedily to Dresden, it was proposed that we should drive out the next morning and take a general view of the place, as well as visit some of its specially interesting spots, before the heat became oppressive – for we were in August, and the season was hot and dry. But it happened that the ladies were rather late at their morning toilet, and to my father's politely- repressed but perceptible annoyance, we were not in the carriage till the morning was far advanced. I thought with a sense of relief, as we entered the Jews' quarter, where we were to visit the old synagogue, that we should be kept in this flat, shut- up part of the city, until we should all be too tired and too warm to go farther, and so we should return without seeing more than the streets through which we had already passed. That would give me another day's suspense – suspense, the only form in which a fearful spirit knows the solace of hope. But, as I stood under the blackened, groined arches of that old synagogue, made dimly visible by the seven thin candles in the sacred lamp, while our Jewish cicerone reached down the Book of the Law, and read to us in its ancient tongue, – I felt a shuddering impression that this strange building, with its shrunken lights, this surviving withered remnant of medieval Judaism, was of a piece with my vision. Those darkened dusty Christian saints, with their loftier arches and their larger candles, needed the consolatory scorn with which they might point to a more shrivelled death- in- life than their own.

As I expected, when we left the Jews' quarter the elders of our party wished to return to the hotel. But now, instead of rejoicing in this, as I had done beforehand, I felt a sudden overpowering impulse to go on at once to the bridge, and put an end to the suspense I had been wishing to protract. I declared, with unusual decision, that I would get out of the carriage and walk on alone; they might return without me. My father, thinking this merely a sample of my usual 'poetic nonsense,' objected that I should only do myself harm by walking in the heat; but when I persisted, he said angrily that I might follow my own absurd devices, but that Schmidt (our courier) must go with me. I assented to this, and set off with Schmidt towards the bridge. I had no sooner passed from under the archway of the grand old gate leading on to the bridge, than a trembling seized me, and I turned cold under the mid- day sun; yet I went on; I was in search of something – a small detail which I remembered with special intensity as part of my vision. There it was – the patch of rainbow light on the pavement transmitted through a lamp in the shape of a star.

Chapter 2

Before the autumn was at an end, and while the brown leaves still stood thick on the beeches in our park, my brother and Bertha were engaged to each other, and it was understood that their marriage was to take place early in the next spring. In spite of the certainty I had felt from that moment on the bridge at Prague, that Bertha would one day be my wife, my constitutional timidity and distrust had continued to benumb me, and the words in which I had sometimes premeditated a confession of my love, had died away unuttered. The same conflict had gone on within me as before – the longing for an assurance of love from Bertha's lips, the dread lest a word of contempt and denial should fall upon me like a corrosive acid. What was the conviction of a distant necessity to me? I trembled under a present glance, I hungered after a present joy, I was clogged and chilled by a present fear. And so the days passed on: I witnessed Bertha's engagement and heard her marriage discussed as if I were under a conscious nightmare – knowing it was a dream that would vanish, but feeling stifled under the grasp of hard- clutching fingers.

When I was not in Bertha's presence – and I was with her very often, for she continued to treat me with a playful patronage that wakened no jealousy in my brother – I spent my time chiefly in wandering, in strolling, or taking long rides while the daylight lasted, and then shutting myself up with my unread books; for books had lost the power of chaining my attention. My self-consciousness was heightened to that pitch of intensity in which our own emotions take the form of a drama which urges itself imperatively on our contemplation, and we begin to weep, less under the sense of our suffering than at the thought of it. I felt a sort of pitying anguish over the pathos of my own lot: the lot of a being finely organised for pain, but with hardly any fibres that responded to pleasure – to whom the idea of future evil robbed the present of its joy, and for whom the idea of future good did not still the uneasiness of a present yearning or a present dread. I went dumbly through that stage of the poet's suffering, in which he feels the delicious pang of utterance, and makes an image of his sorrows.

I was left entirely without remonstrance concerning this dreamy wayward life: I knew my father's thought about me: 'That lad will never be good for anything in life: he may waste his years in an insignificant way on the income that falls to him: I shall not trouble myself about a career for him.'

One mild morning in the beginning of November, it happened that I was standing outside the portico patting lazy old Cæsar, a Newfoundland almost blind with age, the only dog that ever took any notice of me – for the very dogs shunned me, and fawned on the happier people about me – when the groom brought up my brother's horse which was to carry him to the hunt, and my brother himself appeared at the door, florid, broad- chested, and self-complacent, feeling what a good- natured fellow he was not to behave insolently to us all on the strength of his great advantages.

‘Latimer, old boy,’ he said to me in a tone of compassionate cordiality, ‘what a pity it is you don’t have a run with the hounds now and then! The finest thing in the world for low spirits!’

‘Low spirits!’ I thought bitterly, as he rode away; ‘that is the sort of phrase with which coarse, narrow natures like yours think to describe experience of which you can know no more than your horse knows. It is to such as you that the good of this world falls: ready dulness, healthy selfishness, good-tempered conceit – these are the keys to happiness.’

The quick thought came, that my selfishness was even stronger than his – it was only a suffering selfishness instead of an enjoying one. But then, again, my exasperating insight into Alfred’s self-complacent soul, his freedom from all the doubts and fears, the unsatisfied yearnings, the exquisite tortures of sensitiveness, that had made the web of my life, seemed to absolve me from all bonds towards him. This man needed no pity, no love; those fine influences would have been as little felt by him as the delicate white mist is felt by the rock it caresses. There was no evil in store for him : if he was not to marry Bertha, it would be because he had found a lot pleasanter to himself.

Mr Filmore’s house lay not more than half a mile beyond our own gates, and whenever I knew my brother was gone in another direction, I went there for the chance of finding Bertha at home. Later on in the day I walked thither. By a rare accident she was alone, and we walked out in the grounds together, for she seldom went on foot beyond the trimly-swept gravel-walks. I remember what a beautiful sylph she looked to me as the low November sun shone on her blond hair, and she tripped along teasing me with her usual light banter, to which I listened half fondly, half moodily; it was all the sign Bertha’s mysterious inner self ever made to me. To-day perhaps the moodiness predominated, for I had not yet shaken off the access of jealous hate which my brother had raised in me by his parting patronage. Suddenly I interrupted and startled her by saying, almost fiercely, ‘Bertha, how can you love Alfred?’

She looked at me with surprise for a moment, but soon her light smile came again, and she answered sarcastically, ‘Why do you suppose I love him?’

‘How can you ask that, Bertha?’

‘What! your wisdom thinks I must love the man I’m going to marry? The most unpleasant thing in the world. I should quarrel with him; I should be jealous of him; our ménage would be conducted in a very ill- bred manner. A little quiet contempt contributes greatly to the elegance of life.’

‘Bertha, that is not your real feeling. Why do you delight in trying to deceive me by inventing such cynical speeches?’

‘I need never take the trouble of invention in order to deceive you, my small Tasso’ – (that was the mocking name she usually gave me). ‘The easiest way to deceive a poet is to tell him the truth.’

She was testing the validity of her epigram in a daring way, and for a moment the shadow of my vision – the Bertha whose soul was no secret to me – passed between me and the radiant girl, the playful sylph whose feelings were a fascinating mystery. I suppose I must have shuddered, or betrayed in some other way my momentary chill of horror.

‘Tasso !’ she said, seizing my wrist, and peeping round into my face, ‘are you really beginning to discern what a heartless girl I am? Why, you are not half the poet I thought you were; you are actually capable of believing the truth about me.’

The shadow passed from between us, and was no longer the object nearest to me. The girl whose light fingers grasped me, whose elfish charming face looked into mine – who, I thought, was betraying an interest in my feelings that she would not have directly avowed, – this warm- breathing presence again possessed my senses and imagination like a returning syren melody which had been overpowered for an instant by the roar of threatening waves. It was a moment as delicious to me as the waking up to a consciousness of youth after a dream of middle age. I forgot everything but my passion, and said with swimming eyes –

‘Bertha, shall you love me when we are first married? I wouldn’t mind if you really loved me only for a little while.’

Her look of astonishment, as she loosed my hand and started away from me recalled me to a sense of my strange, my criminal indiscretion.

‘Forgive me,’ I said, hurriedly, as soon as I could speak again; ‘I did not know what I was saying.’

‘Ah, Tasso’s mad fit has come on, I see,’ she answered quietly, for she had recovered herself sooner than I had. ‘Let him go home and keep his head cool. I must go in, for the sun is setting.’

I left her – full of indignation against myself. I had let slip words which, if she reflected on them, might rouse in her a suspicion of my abnormal mental condition – a suspicion which of all things I dreaded. And besides that, I was ashamed of the apparent baseness I had committed in uttering them to my brother’s betrothed wife. I wandered home slowly, entering our park through a private gate instead of by the lodges. As I approached the house, I saw a man dashing off at full speed from the stable- yard across the park. Had any accident happened at home? No; perhaps it was only one of my father’s peremptory business errands that required this headlong haste. Nevertheless I quickened my pace without any distinct motive, and was soon at the house. I will not dwell on the scene I found there. My brother was dead – had been pitched from his horse, and killed on the spot by a concussion of the brain.

I went up to the room where he lay, and where my father was seated beside him with a look of rigid despair. I had shunned my father more than any one since our return home, for the radical antipathy between our natures made my insight into his inner self a constant affliction to me. But now, as I went up to him, and stood beside him in sad silence, I felt the presence of a new element that blended us as we had never been blent before. My father had been one of the most successful men in the money- getting world: he had had no sentimental sufferings, no illness. The heaviest trouble that had befallen him was the death of his first wife. But he married my mother soon after; and I remember he seemed exactly the same, to my keen childish observation, the week after her death as before. But now, at last, a sorrow had come – the sorrow of old age, which suffers the more from the crushing of its pride and its hopes, in proportion as the pride and hope are narrow and prosaic. His son was to have been married soon – would probably have stood for the borough at the next election. That son’s existence was the best motive that could be alleged for making new purchases of land every year to round off the estate. It is a dreary thing to live on doing the same things year after year, without knowing why we do them. Perhaps the tragedy of disappointed youth and passion is less piteous than the tragedy of disappointed age and worldliness.

As I saw into the desolation of my father's heart, I felt a movement of deep pity towards him, which was the beginning of a new affection – an affection that grew and strengthened in spite of the strange bitterness with which he regarded me in the first month or two after my brother's death. If it had not been for the softening influence of my compassion for him – the first deep compassion I had ever felt – I should have been stung by the perception that my father transferred the inheritance of an eldest son to me with a mortified sense that fate had compelled him to the unwelcome course of caring for me as an important being. It was only in spite of himself that he began to think of me with anxious regard. There is hardly any neglected child for whom death has made vacant a more favoured place, who will not understand what I mean.

Gradually, however, my new deference to his wishes, the effect of that patience which was born of my pity for him, won upon his affection, and he began to please himself with the endeavour to make me fill my brother's place as fully as my feebler personality would admit. I saw that the prospect which by- and- by presented itself of my becoming Bertha's husband was welcome to him, and he even contemplated in my case what he had not intended in my brother's – that his son and daughter- in- law should make one household with him. My softened feeling towards my father made this the happiest time I had known since childhood; – these last months in which I retained the delicious illusion of loving Bertha, of longing and doubting and hoping that she might love me. She behaved with a certain new consciousness and distance towards me after my brother's death; and I too was under a double constraint – that of delicacy towards my brother's memory, and of anxiety as to the impression my abrupt words had left on her mind. But the additional screen this mutual reserve erected between us only brought me more completely under her power: no matter how empty the adytum, so that the veil be thick enough. So absolute is our soul's need of something hidden and uncertain for the maintenance of that doubt and hope and effort which are the breath of its life, that if the whole future were laid bare to us beyond to-day, the interest of all mankind would be bent on the hours that lie between; we should pant after the uncertainties of our one morning and our one afternoon; we should rush fiercely to the Exchange for our last possibility of speculation, of success, of disappointment; we should have a glut of political prophets foretelling a crisis or a no-crisis within the only twenty- four hours left open to prophecy. Conceive the condition of the human mind if all propositions whatsoever were self- evident except one, which was to become self- evident at the close of a summer's day, but in the meantime might be the subject of question, of hypothesis, of debate. Art and philosophy, literature and science, would fasten like bees on that one proposition which had the honey of probability in it, and be the more eager because their enjoyment would end with sunset. Our impulses, our spiritual activities, no more adjust themselves to the idea of their future nullity, than the beating of our heart, or the irritability of our muscles.

Bertha, the slim, fair- haired girl, whose present thoughts and emotions were an enigma to me amidst the fatiguing obviousness of the other minds around me, was as absorbing to me as a single unknown to- day – as a single hypothetic proposition to remain problematic till sunset; and all the cramped, hemmed- in belief and disbelief, trust and distrust, of my nature, welled out in this one narrow channel.

And she made me believe that she loved me. Without ever quitting her tone of badinage and playful superiority, she intoxicated me with the sense that I was necessary to her, that she was never at ease unless I was near her, submitting to her playful tyranny. It costs a woman so little effort to besot us in this way! A half-repressed word, a moment's unexpected silence, even an easy fit of petulance on our account, will serve us as hashish for a long while. Out of the subtlest web of scarcely perceptible signs, she set me weaving the fancy that she had always unconsciously loved me better than Alfred, but that, with the ignorant fluttered sensibility of a young girl, she had been imposed on by the charm that lay for her in the distinction of being admired and chosen by a man who made so brilliant a figure in the world as my brother. She satirised herself in a very graceful way for her vanity and ambition. What was it to me that I had the light of my wretched prevision on the fact that now it was I who possessed at least all but the personal part of my brother's advantages? Our sweet illusions are half of them conscious illusions, like effects of colour that we know to be made up of tinsel, broken glass, and rags.

We were married eighteen months after Alfred's death, one cold, clear morning in April, when there came hail and sunshine both together; and Bertha, in her white silk and pale- green leaves, and the pale hues of her hair and face, looked like the spirit of the morning. My father was happier than he had thought of being again: my marriage, he felt sure, would complete the desirable modification of my character, and make me practical and worldly enough to take my place in society among sane men. For he delighted in Bertha's tact and acuteness, and felt sure she would be mistress of me, and make me what she chose: I was only twenty-one, and madly in love with her. Poor father! He kept that hope a little while after our first year of marriage, and it was not quite extinct when paralysis came and saved him from utter disappointment.

I shall hurry through the rest of my story, not dwelling so much as I have hitherto done on my inward experience. When people are well known to each other, they talk rather of what befalls them externally, leaving their feelings and sentiments to be inferred.

We lived in a round of visits for some time after our return home, giving splendid dinner- parties, and making a sensation in our neighbourhood by the new lustre of our equipage, for my father had reserved this display of his increased wealth for the period of his son's marriage; and we gave our acquaintances liberal opportunity for remarking that it was a pity I made so poor a figure as an heir and a bridegroom. The nervous fatigue of this existence, the insincerities and platitudes which I had to live through twice over – through my inner and outward sense – would have been maddening to me, if I had not had that sort of intoxicated callousness which came from the delights of a first passion. A bride and bridegroom, surrounded by all the appliances of wealth, hurried through the day by the whirl of society, filling their solitary moments with hastily- snatched caresses, are prepared for their future life together as the novice is prepared for the cloister – by experiencing its utmost contrast.

Through all these crowded excited months, Bertha's inward self remained shrouded from me, and I still read her thoughts only through the language of her lips and demeanour: I had still the human interest of wondering whether what I did and said pleased her, of longing to hear a word of affection, of giving a delicious exaggeration of meaning to her smile. But I was conscious of a growing difference in her manner towards me; sometimes strong enough to be called haughty coldness, cutting and chilling me as the hail had done that came across the sunshine on our marriage morning; sometimes only perceptible in the dexterous avoidance of a tête-à-tête walk or dinner to which I had been looking forward. I had been deeply pained by this – had even felt a sort of crushing of the heart, from the sense that my brief day of happiness was near its setting; but still I remained dependent on Bertha, eager for the last rays of a bliss that would soon be gone for ever, hoping and watching for some after-glow more beautiful from the impending night.

I remember – how should I not remember? – the time when that dependence and hope utterly left me, when the sadness I had felt in Bertha's growing estrangement became a joy that I looked back upon with longing, as a man might look back on the last pains in a paralysed limb. It was just after the close of my father's last illness, which had necessarily withdrawn us from society and thrown us more upon each other. It was the evening of my father's death. On that evening the veil which had shrouded Bertha's soul from me – had made me find in her alone among my fellow-beings the blessed possibility of mystery, and doubt, and expectation – was first withdrawn. Perhaps it was the first day since the beginning of my passion for her, in which that passion was completely neutralised by the presence of an absorbing feeling of another kind. I had been watching by my father's deathbed: I had been witnessing the last fitful yearning glance his soul had cast back on the spent inheritance of life – the last faint consciousness of love he had gathered from the pressure of my hand. What are all our personal loves when we have been sharing in that supreme agony? In the first moments when we come away from the presence of death, every other relation to the living is merged, to our feeling, in the great relation of a common nature and a common destiny.

In that state of mind I joined Bertha in her private sitting-room. She was seated in a leaning posture on a settee, with her back towards the door; the great rich coils of her pale blond hair surmounting her small neck, visible above the back of the settee. I remember, as I closed the door behind me, a cold tremulousness seizing me, and a vague sense of being hated and lonely – vague and strong, like a presentiment. I know how I looked at that moment, for I saw myself in Bertha's thought as she lifted her cutting grey eyes, and looked at me: a miserable ghost-seer, surrounded by phantoms in the noonday, trembling under a breeze when the leaves were still, without appetite for the common objects of human desire, but pining after the moonbeams. We were front to front with each other, and judged each other. The terrible moment of complete illumination had come to me, and I saw that the darkness had hidden no landscape from me, but only a blank prosaic wall: from that evening forth, through the sickening years which followed, I saw all round the narrow room of this woman's soul – saw petty artifice and mere negation where I had delighted to believe in coy sensibilities and in wit at war with latent feeling – saw the light floating vanities of the girl defining themselves into the systematic coquetry, the scheming selfishness, of the woman – saw repulsion and antipathy harden into cruel hatred, giving pain only for the sake of wreaking itself.

For Bertha too, after her kind, felt the bitterness of disillusion. She had believed that my wild poet's passion for her would make me her slave; and that, being her slave, I should execute her will in all things. With the essential shallowness of a negative, unimaginative nature, she was unable to conceive the fact that sensibilities were anything else than weaknesses. She had thought my weaknesses would put me in her power, and she found them unmanageable forces. Our positions were reversed. Before marriage she had completely mastered my imagination, for she was a secret to me; and I created the unknown thought before which I trembled as if it were hers. But now that her soul was laid open to me, now that I was compelled to share the privacy of her motives, to follow all the petty devices that preceded her words and acts, she found herself powerless with me, except to produce in me the chill shudder of repulsion – powerless, because I could be acted on by no lever within her reach. I was dead to worldly ambitions, to social vanities, to all the incentives within the compass of her narrow imagination, and I lived under influences utterly invisible to her.

She was really pitiable to have such a husband, and so all the world thought. A graceful, brilliant woman, like Bertha, who smiled on morning callers, made a figure in ball-rooms, and was capable of that light repartee which, from such a woman, is accepted as wit, was secure of carrying off all sympathy from a husband who was sickly, abstracted, and, as some suspected, crack-brained. Even the servants in our house gave her the balance of their regard and pity. For there were no audible quarrels between us; our alienation, our repulsion from each other, lay within the silence of our own hearts; and if the mistress went out a great deal, and seemed to dislike the master's society, was it not natural, poor thing? The master was odd. I was kind and just to my dependants, but I excited in them a shrinking, half-contemptuous pity; for this class of men and women are but slightly determined in their estimate of others by general considerations, or even experience, of character. They judge of persons as they judge of coins, and value those who pass current at a high rate.

After a time I interfered so little with Bertha's habits, that it might seem wonderful how her hatred towards me could grow so intense and active as it did. But she had begun to suspect, by some involuntary betrayals of mine, that there was an abnormal power of penetration in me – that fitfully, at least, I was strangely cognisant of her thoughts and intentions, and she began to be haunted by a terror of me, which alternated every now and then with defiance. She meditated continually how the incubus could be shaken off her life – how she could be freed from this hateful bond to a being whom she at once despised as an imbecile, and dreaded as an inquisitor. For a long while she lived in the hope that my evident wretchedness would drive me to the commission of suicide; but suicide was not in my nature. I was too completely swayed by the sense that I was in the grasp of unknown forces, to believe in my power of self-release. Towards my own destiny I had become entirely passive; for my one ardent desire had spent itself, and impulse no longer predominated over knowledge. For this reason I never thought of taking any steps towards a complete separation, which would have made our alienation evident to the world. Why should I rush for help to a new course, when I was only suffering from the consequences of a deed which had been the act of my intensest will? That would have been the logic of one who had desires to gratify, and I had no desires. But Bertha and I lived more and more aloof from each other. The rich find it easy to live married and apart.

That course of our life which I have indicated in a few sentences filled the space of years. So much misery – so slow and hideous a growth of hatred and sin, may be compressed into a sentence! And men judge of each other's lives through this summary medium. They epitomise the experience of their fellow-mortal, and pronounce judgment on him in neat syntax, and feel themselves wise and virtuous – conquerors over the temptations they define in well- selected predicates. Seven years of wretchedness glide glibly over the lips of the man who has never counted them out in moments of chill disappointment, of head and heart throbbings, of dread and vain wrestling, of remorse and despair. We learn words by rote, but not their meaning; that must be paid for with our life- blood, and printed in the subtle fibres of our nerves. But I will hasten to finish my story. Brevity is justified at once to those who readily understand, and to those who will never understand.

Some years after my father's death, I was sitting by the dim firelight in my library one January evening – sitting in the leather chair that used to be my father's – when Bertha appeared at the door, with a candle in her hand, and advanced towards me. I knew the ball- dress she had on – the white ball- dress, with the green jewels, shone upon by the light of the wax candle which lit up the medallion of the dying Cleopatra on the mantelpiece. Why did she come to me before going out? I had not seen her in the library, which was my habitual place, for months. Why did she stand before me with the candle in her hand, with her cruel contemptuous eyes fixed on me, and the glittering serpent, like a familiar demon, on her breast? For a moment I thought this fulfilment of my vision at Vienna marked some dreadful crisis in my fate, but I saw nothing in Bertha's mind, as she stood before me, except scorn for the look of overwhelming misery with which I sat before her . . . 'Fool, idiot, why don't you kill yourself, then?' – that was her thought. But at length her thoughts reverted to her errand, and she spoke aloud. The apparently indifferent nature of the errand seemed to make a ridiculous anticlimax to my prevision and my agitation.

'I have had to hire a new maid. Fletcher is going to be married, and she wants me to ask you to let her husband have the public-house and farm at Molton. I wish him to have it. You must give the promise now, because Fletcher is going to- morrow morning – and quickly, because I'm in a hurry.'

'Very well; you may promise her,' I said, indifferently, and Bertha swept out of the library again.

I always shrank from the sight of a new person, and all the more when it was a person whose mental life was likely to weary my reluctant insight with worldly ignorant trivialities. But I shrank especially from the sight of this new maid, because her advent had been announced to me at a moment to which I could not cease to attach some fatality: I had a vague dread that I should find her mixed up with the dreary drama of my life – that some new sickening vision would reveal her to me as an evil genius. When at last I did unavoidably meet her, the vague dread was changed into definite disgust. She was a tall, wiry, dark-eyed woman, this Mrs Archer, with a face handsome enough to give her coarse hard nature the odious finish of bold, self-confident coquetry. That was enough to make me avoid her, quite apart from the contemptuous feeling with which she contemplated me. I seldom saw her; but I perceived that she rapidly became a favourite with her mistress, and, after the lapse of eight or nine months, I began to be aware that there had arisen in Bertha's mind towards this woman a mingled feeling of fear and dependence, and that this feeling was associated with ill-defined images of candle-light scenes in her dressing-room, and the looking-up of something in Bertha's cabinet. My interviews with my wife had become so brief and so rarely solitary, that I had no opportunity of perceiving these images in her mind with more definiteness. The recollections of the past become contracted in the rapidity of thought till they sometimes bear hardly a more distinct resemblance to the external reality than the forms of an oriental alphabet to the objects that suggested them.

Besides, for the last year or more a modification had been going forward in my mental condition, and was growing more and more marked. My insight into the minds of those around me was becoming dimmer and more fitful, and the ideas that crowded my double consciousness became less and less dependent on any personal contact. All that was personal in me seemed to be suffering a gradual death, so that I was losing the organ through which the personal agitations and projects of others could affect me. But along with this relief from wearisome insight, there was a new development of what I concluded – as I have since found rightly – to be a prevision of external scenes. It was as if the relation between me and my fellow- men was more and more deadened, and my relation to what we call the inanimate was quickened into new life. The more I lived apart from society, and in proportion as my wretchedness subsided from the violent throb of agonised passion into the dulness of habitual pain, the more frequent and vivid became such visions as that I had had of Prague – of strange cities, of sandy plains, of gigantic ruins, of midnight skies with strange bright constellations, of mountain- passes, of grassy nooks flecked with the afternoon sunshine through the boughs: I was in the midst of such scenes, and in all of them one presence seemed to weigh on me in all these mighty shapes – the presence of something unknown and pitiless. For continual suffering had an nihilated religious faith within me: to the utterly miserable – the unloving and the unloved – there is no religion possible, no worship but a worship of devils. And beyond all these, and continually recurring, was the vision of my death – the pangs, the suffocation, the last struggle, when life would be grasped at in vain.

Things were in this state near the end of the seventh year. I had become entirely free from insight, from my abnormal cognisance of any other consciousness than my own, and instead of intruding involuntarily into the world of other minds, was living continually in my own solitary future. Bertha was aware that I was greatly changed. To my surprise she had of late seemed to seek opportunities of remaining in my society, and had cultivated that kind of distant yet familiar talk which is customary between a husband and wife who live in polite and irrevocable alienation. I bore this with languid submission, and without feeling enough interest in her motives to be roused into keen observation; yet I could not help perceiving something triumphant and excited in her carriage and the expression of her face – something too subtle to express itself in words or tones, but giving one the idea that she lived in a state of expectation or hopeful suspense. My chief feeling was satisfaction that her inner self was once more shut out from me; and I almost revelled for the moment in the absent melancholy that made me answer her at cross purposes, and betray utter ignorance of what she had been saying. I remember well the look and the smile with which she one day said, after a mistake of this kind on my part: ‘I used to think you were a clairvoyant and that was the reason why you were so bitter against other clairvoyants, wanting to keep your monopoly; but I see now you have become rather duller than the rest of the world.'

I said nothing in reply. It occurred to me that her recent obtrusion of herself upon me might have been prompted by the wish to test my power of detecting some of her secrets; but I let the thought drop again at once: her motives and her deeds had no interest for me, and whatever pleasures she might be seeking, I had no wish to balk her. There was still pity in my soul for every living thing, and Bertha was living – was surrounded with possibilities of misery.

Just at this time there occurred an event which roused me somewhat from my inertia, and gave me an interest in the passing moment that I had thought impossible for me. It was a visit from Charles Meunier, who had written me word that he was coming to England for relaxation from too strenuous labour, and would like to see me. Meunier had now a European reputation; but his letter to me expressed that keen remembrance of an early regard, an early debt of sympathy, which is inseparable from nobility of character: and I too felt as if his presence would be to me like a transient resurrection into a happier pre-existence.

He came, and as far as possible, I renewed our old pleasure of making tête-à-tête excursions, though, instead of mountains and glaciers and the wide blue lake, we had to content ourselves with mere slopes and ponds and artificial plantations. The years had changed us both, but with what different result! Meunier was now a brilliant figure in society, to whom elegant women pretended to listen, and whose acquaintance was boasted of by noblemen ambitious of brains. He repressed with the utmost delicacy all betrayal of the shock which I am sure he must have received from our meeting, or of a desire to penetrate into my condition and circumstances, and sought by the utmost exertion of his charming social powers to make our reunion agreeable. Bertha was much struck by the unexpected fascinations of a visitor whom she had expected to find presentable only on the score of his celebrity, and put forth all her coquetries and accomplishments. Apparently she succeeded in attracting his admiration, for his manner towards her was attentive and flattering. The effect of his presence on me was so benignant, especially in those renewals of our old tête-à-tête wanderings, when he poured forth to me wonderful narratives of his professional experience, that more than once, when his talk turned on the psychological relations of disease, the thought crossed my mind that, if his stay with me were long enough, I might possibly bring myself to tell this man the secrets of my lot. Might there not lie some remedy for me, too, in his science? Might there not at least lie some comprehension and sympathy ready for me in his large and susceptible mind? But the thought only flickered feebly now and then, and died out before it could become a wish. The horror I had of again breaking in on the privacy of another soul, made me, by an irrational instinct, draw the shroud of concealment more closely around my own, as we automatically perform the gesture we feel to be wanting in another.

When Meunier's visit was approaching its conclusion, there happened an event which caused some excitement in our household, owing to the surprisingly strong effect it appeared to produce on Bertha – on Bertha, the selfpossessed, who usually seemed inaccessible to feminine agitations, and did even her hate in a self- restrained hygienic manner. This event was the sudden severe illness of her maid, Mrs Archer. I have reserved to this moment the mention of a circumstance which had forced itself on my notice shortly before Meunier's arrival, namely, that there had been some quarrel between Bertha and this maid, apparently during a visit to a distant family, in which she had accompanied her mistress. I had overheard Archer speaking in a tone of bitter insolence, which I should have thought an adequate reason for immediate dismissal. No dismissal followed; on the contrary, Bertha seemed to be silently putting up with personal inconveniences from the exhibitions of this woman's temper. I was the more astonished to observe that her illness seemed a cause of strong solicitude to Bertha; that she was at the bedside night and day, and would allow no one else to officiate as head- nurse. It happened that our family doctor was out on a holiday, an accident which made Meunier's presence in the house doubly welcome, and he apparently entered into the case with an interest which seemed so much stronger than the ordinary professional feeling, that one day when he had fallen into a long fit of silence after visiting her, I said to him –

'Is this a very peculiar case of disease, Meunier?'

'No,' he answered, 'it is an attack of peritonitis, which will be fatal, but which does not differ physically from many other cases that have come under my observation. But I'll tell you what I have on my mind. I want to make an experiment on this woman, if you will give me permission. It can do her no harm – will give her no pain – for I shall not make it until life is extinct to all purposes of sensation. I want to try the effect of transfusing blood into her arteries after the heart has ceased to beat for some minutes. I have tried the experiment again and again with animals that have died of this disease, with astounding results, and I want to try it on a human subject. I have the small tubes necessary, in a case I have with me, and the rest of the apparatus could be prepared readily. I should use my own blood – take it from my own arm. This woman won't live through the night, I'm convinced, and I want you to promise me your assistance in making the experiment. I can't do without another hand, but it would perhaps not be well to call in a medical assistant from among your provincial doctors. A disagreeable foolish version of the thing might get abroad.'

'Have you spoken to my wife on the subject?' I said, 'because she appears to be peculiarly sensitive about this woman: she has been a favourite maid.'

'To tell you the truth,' said Meunier, 'I don't want her to know about it. There are always insuperable difficulties with women in these matters, and the effect on the supposed dead body may be startling. You and I will sit up together, and be in readiness. When certain symptoms appear I shall take you in, and at the right moment we must manage to get every one else out of the room.'

I need not give our farther conversation on the subject. He entered very fully into the details, and overcame my repulsion from them, by exciting in me a mingled awe and curiosity concerning the possible results of his experiment.

We prepared everything, and he instructed me in my part as assistant. He had not told Bertha of his absolute conviction that Arthur would not survive through the night, and endeavoured to persuade her to leave the patient and take a night's rest. But she was obstinate, suspecting the fact that death was at hand, and supposing that he wished merely to save her nerves. She refused to leave the sick-room. Meunier and I sat up together in the library, he making frequent visits to the sick-room, and returning with the information that the case was taking precisely the course he expected. Once he said to me, 'Can you imagine any cause of ill feeling this woman has against her mistress, who is so devoted to her?'

'I think there was some misunderstanding between them before her illness. Why do you ask?'

'Because I have observed for the last five or six hours – since, I fancy, she has lost all hope of recovery – there seems a strange prompting in her to say something which pain and failing strength forbid her to utter; and there is a look of hideous meaning in her eyes, which she turns continually towards her mistress. In this disease the mind often remains singularly clear to the last.'

'I am not surprised at an indication of malevolent feeling in her,' I said. 'She is a woman who has always inspired me with distrust and dislike, but she managed to insinuate herself into her mistress's favour.' He was silent after this, looking at the fire with an air of absorption, till he went up- stairs again. He stayed away longer than usual, and on returning, said to me quietly, 'Come now.'

I followed him to the chamber where death was hovering. The dark hangings of the large bed made a background that gave a strong relief to Bertha's pale face as I entered. She started forward as she saw me enter, and then looked at Meunier with an expression of angry inquiry; but he lifted up his hand as if to impose silence, while he fixed his glance on the dying woman and felt her pulse. The face was pinched and ghastly, a cold perspiration was on the forehead, and the eyelids were lowered so as almost to conceal the large dark eyes. After a minute or two, Meunier walked round to the other side of the bed where Bertha stood, and with his usual air of gentle politeness towards her begged her to leave the patient under our care – everything should be done for her – she was no longer in a state to be conscious of an affectionate presence. Bertha was hesitating, apparently almost willing to believe his assurance and to comply. She looked round at the ghastly dying face, as if to read the confirmation of that assurance, when for a moment the lowered eyelids were raised again, and it seemed as if the eyes were looking towards Bertha, but blankly. A shudder passed through Bertha's frame, and she returned to her station near the pillow, tacitly implying that she would not leave the room.

The eyelids were lifted no more. Once I looked at Bertha as she watched the face of the dying one. She wore a rich peignoir , and her blond hair was half covered by a lace cap: in her attire she was, as always, an elegant woman, fit to figure in a picture of modern aristocratic life: but I asked myself how that face of hers could ever have seemed to me the face of a woman born of woman, with memories of childhood, capable of pain, needing to be fondled? The features at that moment seemed so preternaturally sharp, the eyes were so hard and eager – she looked like a cruel immortal, finding her spiritual feast in the agonies of a dying race. For across those hard features there came something like a flash when the last hour had been breathed out, and we all felt that the dark veil had completely fallen. What secret was there between Bertha and this woman? I turned my eyes from her with a horrible dread lest my insight should return, and I should be obliged to see what had been breeding about two unloving women's hearts. I felt that Bertha had been watching for the moment of death as the sealing of her secret: I thanked Heaven it could remain sealed for me.

Meunier said quietly, 'She is gone.' He then gave his arm to Bertha, and she submitted to be led out of the room.

I suppose it was at her order that two female attendants came into the room, and dismissed the younger one who had been present before. When they entered, Meunier had already opened the artery in the long thin neck that lay rigid on the pillow, and I dismissed them, ordering them to remain at a distance till we rang: the doctor, I said, had an operation to perform – he was not sure about the death. For the next twenty minutes I forgot everything but Meunier and the experiment in which he was so absorbed, that I think his senses would have been closed against all sounds or sights which had no relation to it. It was my task at first to keep up the artificial respiration in the body after the transfusion had been effected, but presently Meunier relieved me, and I could see the wondrous slow return of life; the breast began to heave, the inspirations became stronger, the eyelids quivered, and the soul seemed to have returned beneath them. The artificial respiration was withdrawn: still the breathing continued, and there was a movement of the lips.

Just then I heard the handle of the door moving: I suppose Bertha had heard from the women that they had been dismissed: probably a vague fear had arisen in her mind, for she entered with a look of alarm. She came to the foot of the bed and gave a stifled cry.

The dead woman's eyes were wide open, and met hers in full recognition – the recognition of hate. With a sudden strong effort, the hand that Bertha had thought for ever still was pointed towards her, and the haggard face moved. The gasping eager voice said –

‘You mean to poison your husband . . . the poison is in the black cabinet . . . I got it for you . . . you laughed at me, and told lies about me behind my back, to make me disgusting . . . because you were jealous . . . are you sorry . . . now?’

The lips continued to murmur, but the sounds were no longer distinct. Soon there was no sound – only a slight movement: the flame had leaped out, and was being extinguished the faster. The wretched woman's heartstrings had been set to hatred and vengeance; the spirit of life had swept the chords for an instant, and was gone again for ever. Great God! Is this what it is to live again . . . to wake up with our unstilled thirst upon us, with our unuttered curses rising to our lips, with our muscles ready to act out their half-committed sins?

Bertha stood pale at the foot of the bed, quivering and helpless, despairing of devices, like a cunning animal whose hiding-places are surrounded by swift-advancing flame. Even Meunier looked paralysed; life for that moment ceased to be a scientific problem to him. As for me, this scene seemed of one texture with the rest of my existence: horror was my familiar, and this new revelation was only like an old pain recurring with new circumstances.

Since then Bertha and I have lived apart – she in her own neighbourhood, the mistress of half our wealth, I as a wanderer in foreign countries, until I came to this Devonshire nest to die. Bertha lives pitied and admired; for what had I against that charming woman, whom every one but myself could have been happy with? There had been no witness of the scene in the dying room except Meunier, and while Meunier lived his lips were sealed by a promise to me.

Once or twice, weary of wandering, I rested in a favourite spot, and my heart went out towards the men and women and children whose faces were becoming familiar to me: but I was driven away a gain i n t error a t t he approach of my old insight – driven away to live continually with the one Unknown Presence revealed and yet hidden by the moving curtain of the earth and sky. Till at last disease took hold of me and forced me to rest here – forced me to live in dependence on my servants. And then the curse of insight – of my double consciousness, came again, and has never left me. I know all their narrow thoughts, their feeble regard, their half-wearied pity.

It is the 20th of September 1850. I know these figures I have just written, as if they were a long familiar inscription. I have seen them on this page in my desk unnumbered times, when the scene of my dying struggle has opened upon me . . .

SILLY NOVELS BY LADY NOVELISTS

Silly novels by Lady Novelists are a genus with many species, determined by the particular quality of silliness that predominates in them – the frothy, the prosy, the pious, or the pedantic. But it is a mixture of all these – a composite order of feminine fatuity, that produces the largest class of such novels, which we shall distinguish as the mind-and-millinery species. The heroine is usually an heiress, probably a peeress in her own right, with perhaps a vicious baronet, an amiable duke, and an irresistible younger son of a marquis as lovers in the foreground, a clergyman and a poet sighing for her in the middle distance, and a crowd of undefined adorers dimly indicated beyond. Her eyes and her wit are both dazzling; her nose and her morals are alike free from any tendency to irregularity; she has a superb contralto and a superb intellect; she is perfectly well-dressed and perfectly religious; she dances like a sylph, and reads the Bible in the original tongues. Or it may be that the heroine is not an heiress – that rank and wealth are the only things in which she is deficient; but she infallibly gets into high society, she has the triumph of refusing many matches and securing the best, and she wears some family jewels or other as a sort of crown of righteousness at the end. Rakish men either bite their lips in impotent confusion at her repartees, or are touched to penitence by her reproofs, which, on appropriate occasions, rise to a lofty strain of rhetoric; indeed, there is a general propensity in her to make speeches, and to rhapsodize at some length when she retires to her bedroom. In her recorded conversations she is amazingly eloquent, and in her unrecorded conversations, amazingly witty. She is understood to have a depth of insight that looks through and through the shallow theories of philosophers, and her superior instincts are a sort of dial by which men have only to set their clocks and watches, and all will go well. The men play a very subordinate part by her side. You are consoled now and then by a hint that they have affairs, which keeps you in mind that the working-day business of the world is somehow being carried on, but ostensibly the final cause of their existence is that they may accompany the heroine on her 'starring' expedition through life. They see her at a ball, and are dazzled; at a flower-show, and they are fascinated; on a riding excursion, and they are witched by her noble horsemanship; at church, and they are awed by the sweet solemnity of her demeanour. She is the ideal woman in feelings, faculties, and flounces. For all this, she as often as not marries the wrong person to begin with, and she suffers terribly from the plots and intrigues of the vicious baronet; but even death has a soft place in his heart for such a paragon, and remedies all mistakes for her just at the right moment. The vicious baronet is sure to be killed in a duel, and the tedious husband dies in his bed, requesting his wife, as a particular favour to him, to marry the man she loves best, and having already dispatched a note to the lover informing him of the comfortable arrangement. Before matters arrive at this desirable issue our feelings are tried by seeing the noble, lovely, and gifted heroine pass through many mauvais moments, but we have the satisfaction of knowing that her sorrows are wept into embroidered pocket-handkerchiefs, that her fainting form reclines on the very best upholstery, and that whatever vicissitudes she may undergo, from being dashed out of her carriage to having her head shaved in a fever, she comes out of them all with a complexion more blooming and locks more redundant than ever.

We may remark, by the way, that we have been relieved from a serious scruple by discovering that silly novels by lady novelists rarely introduce us into any other than very lofty and fashionable society. We had imagined that destitute women turned novelists, as they turned governesses, because they had no other 'lady-like' means of getting their bread. On this supposition, vacillating syntax and improbable incident had a certain pathos for us, like the extremely supererogatory pincushions and ill-devised nightcaps that are offered for sale by a blind man. We felt the commodity to be a nuisance, but we were glad to think that the money went to relieve the necessitous, and we pictured to ourselves lonely women struggling for a maintenance, or wives and daughters devoting themselves to the production of 'copy' out of pure heroism, – perhaps to pay their husband's debts, or to purchase luxuries for a sick father. Under these impressions we shrank from criticizing a lady's novel: her English might be faulty, but, we said to ourselves, her motives are irreproachable; her imagination may be uninventive, but her patience is untiring. Empty writing was excused by an empty stomach, and twaddle was consecrated by tears. But no! This theory of ours, like many other pretty theories, has had to give way before observation. Women's silly novels, we are now convinced, are written under totally different circumstances. The fair writers have evidently never talked to a tradesman except from a carriage window; they have no notion of the working classes except as 'dependants'; they think £500 a year a miserable pittance; Belgravia and 'baronial halls' are their primary truths; and they have no idea of feeling interest in any man who is not at least a great landed proprietor, if not a prime minister. It is clear that they write in elegant boudoirs, with violet-coloured ink and a ruby pen; that they must be entirely indifferent to publishers' accounts, and inexperienced in every form of poverty except poverty of brains. It is true that we are constantly struck with the want of verisimilitude in their representations of the high society in which they seem to live; but then they betray no closer acquaintance with any other form of life. If their peers and peeresses are improbable, their literary men, tradespeople, and cottagers are impossible; and their intellect seems to have the peculiar impartiality of reproducing both what they have seen and heard, and what they have not seen and heard, with equal unfaithfulness.

There are few women, we suppose, who have not seen something of children under five years of age, yet in Compensation, a recent novel of the mind-and-millinery species, which calls itself a 'story of real life', we have a child of four and a half years old talking in this Ossianic fashion: –

'Oh, I am so happy, dear gran'mamma; – I have seen, – I have seen such a delightful person: he is like everything beautiful, – like the smell of sweet flowers, and the view from Ben Lomond; – or no, better than that – he is like what I think of and see when I am very, very happy; and he is really like mamma, too, when she sings; and his forehead is like that distant sea, ' she continued, pointing to the blue Mediterranean; 'there seems no end – no end; or like the clusters of stars I like best to look at on a warm fine night . . . Don't look so . . . your forehead is like Loch Lomond, when the wind is blowing and the sun is gone in; I like the sunshine best when the lake is smooth . . . So now – I like it better than ever . . . it is more beautiful still from the dark cloud that has gone over it, when the sun suddenly lights up all the colours of the forests and shining purple rocks, and it is all reflected in the waters below .’

We are not surprised to learn that the mother of this infant phenomenon, who exhibits symptoms so alarmingly like those of adolescence repressed by gin, is herself a phoenix. We are assured, again and again, that she had a remarkably original mind, that she was a genius, and ‘conscious of her originality’, and she was fortunate enough to have a lover who was also a genius, and a man of ‘most original mind’.

This lover, we read, though ‘wonderfully similar’ to her ‘in powers and capacity’, was ‘infinitely superior to her in faith and development’, and she saw in him the ‘ “Agape” – so rare to find – of which she had read and admired the meaning in her Greek Testament; having, from her great facility in learning languages , read the Scriptures in their original tongues .’ Of course! Greek and Hebrew are mere play to a heroine; Sanscrit is no more than a b c to her; and she can talk with perfect correctness in any language except English. She is a polking polyglot, a Creuzer in crinoline. Poor men! There are so few of you who know even Hebrew; you think it something to boast of if, like Bolingbroke, you only ‘understand that sort of learning, and what is writ about it’; and you are perhaps adoring women who can think slightly of you in all the Semitic languages successively. But, then, as we are almost invariably told, that a heroine has a ‘beautifully small head’, and as her intellect has probably been early invigorated by an attention to costume and deportment, we may conclude that she can pick up the Oriental tongues, to say nothing of their dialects, with the same aërial facility that the butterfly sips nectar. Besides, there can be no difficulty in conceiving the depth of the heroine’s erudition, when that of the authoress is so evident.

In Laura Gay , another novel of the same school, the heroine seems less at home in Greek and Hebrew, but she makes up for the deficiency by a quite playful familiarity with the Latin classics – with the ‘dear old Virgil’, ‘the graceful Horace, the humane Cicero, and the pleasant Livy’; indeed, it is such a matter of course with her to quote Latin, that she does it at a picnic in a very mixed company of ladies and gentlemen, having, we are told, ‘no conception that the nobler sex were capable of jealousy on this subject. And if, indeed,’ continues the biographer of Laura Gay, ‘the wisest and noblest portion of that sex were in the majority, no such sentiment would exist; but while Miss Wyndhams and Mr Redfords abound, great sacrifices must be made to their existence.' Such sacrifices, we presume, as abstaining from Latin quotations, of extremely moderate interest and applicability, which the wise and noble minority of the other sex would be quite as willing to dispense with as the foolish and ignoble majority. It is as little the custom of well-bred men as of well-bred women to quote Latin in mixed parties; they can contain their familiarity with 'the humane Cicero' without allowing it to boil over in ordinary conversation, and even references to 'the pleasant Livy' are not absolutely irrepressible. But Ciceronian Latin is the mildest form of Miss Gay's conversational power. Being on the Palatine with a party of sightseers, she falls into the following vein of well-rounded remark: –

Truth can only be pure objectively, for even in the creeds where it predominates, being subjective, and parcelled out into portions, each of these necessarily receives a hue of idiosyncrasy, that is, a taint of superstition more or less strong; while in such creeds as the Roman Catholic, ignorance, interest, the bias of ancient idolatries, and the force of authority, have gradually accumulated on the pure truth, and transformed it, at last, into a mass of superstition for the majority of its votaries; and how few are there, alas! whose zeal, courage, and intellectual energy are equal to the analysis of this accumulation, and to the discovery of the pearl of great price which lies hidden beneath this heap of rubbish.

We have often met with women much more novel and profound in their observations than Laura Gay, but rarely with any so inopportunately long-winded. A clerical lord, who is half in love with her, is alarmed by the daring remarks just quoted, and begins to suspect that she is inclined to free-thinking. But he is mistaken; when in a moment of sorrow he delicately begs leave to 'recall to her memory, a dépôt of strength and consolation under affliction, which, until we are hard pressed by the trials of life, we are too apt to forget', we learn that she really has 'recurrence to that sacred dépôt', together with the teapot. There is a certain flavour of orthodoxy mixed with the parade of fortunes and fine carriages in Laura Gay, but it is an orthodoxy mitigated by study of 'the humane Cicero', and by an 'intellectual disposition to analyse'.

Compensation is much more heavily dosed with doctrine, but then it has a treble amount of snobbish worldliness and absurd incident to tickle the palate of pious frivolity. Linda, the heroine, is still more speculative and spiritual than Laura Gay, but she has been 'presented', and has more, and far grander, lovers; very wicked and fascinating women are introduced – even a French lionne ; and no expense is spared to get up as exciting a story as you will find in the most immoral novels. In fact, it is a wonderful pot pourri of Almack's, Scotch second-sight, Mr Rogers's breakfasts, Italian brigands, death-bed conversions, superior authoresses, Italian mistresses, and attempts at poisoning old ladies, the whole served up with a garnish of talk about 'faith and development', and 'most original minds'. Even Miss Susan Barton, the superior authoress, whose pen moves in a 'quick decided manner when she is composing', declines the finest opportunities of marriage; and though old enough to be Linda's mother (since we are told that she refused Linda's father), has her hand sought by a young earl, the heroine's rejected lover. Of course, genius and morality must be backed by eligible offers, or they would seem rather a dull affair; and piety, like other things, in order to be comme il faut , must be in 'society', and have admittance to the best circles.

Rank and Beauty is a more frothy and less religious variety of the mind-and-millinery species. The heroine, we are told, 'if she inherited her father's pride of birth and her mother's beauty of person, had in herself a tone of enthusiastic feeling that perhaps belongs to her age even in the lowly born, but which is refined into the high spirit of wild romance only in the far descended, who feel that it is their best inheritance'. This enthusiastic young lady, by dint of reading the newspaper to her father, falls in love with the prime minister , who, through the medium of leading articles and 'the résumé of the debates', shines upon her imagination as a bright particular star, which has no parallax for her, living in the country as simple Miss Wyndham. But she forthwith becomes Baroness Umfraville in her own right, astonishes the world with her beauty and accomplishments when she bursts upon it from her mansion in Spring Gardens, and, as you foresee, will presently come into contact with the unseen objet aimé . Perhaps the words 'prime minister' suggest to you a wrinkled or obese sexagenarian; but pray dismiss the image. Lord Rupert Conway has been 'called while still almost a youth to the first situation which a subject can hold in the universe ', and even leading articles and a résumé of the debates have not conjured up a dream that surpasses the fact.

The door opened again, and Lord Rupert Conway entered. Evelyn gave one glance. It was enough; she was not disappointed. It seemed as if a picture on which she had long gazed was suddenly instinct with life, and had stepped from its frame before her. His tall figure, the distinguished simplicity of his air – it was a living Vandyke, a cavalier, one of his noble cavalier ancestors, or one to whom her fancy had always likened him, who long of yore had, with an Umfraville, fought the Paynim far beyond sea. Was this reality?

Very little like it, certainly. By and by, it becomes evident that the ministerial heart is touched. Lady Umfraville is on a visit to the Queen at Windsor, and, –

The last evening of her stay, when they returned from riding, Mr Wyndham took her and a large party to the top of the Keep, to see the view. She was leaning on the battlements, gazing from that 'stately height' at the prospect beneath her, when Lord Rupert was by her side. 'What an unrivalled view!' exclaimed she.

'Yes, it would have been wrong to go without having been up here. You are pleased with your visit?'

'Enchanted! "A Queen to live and die under", to live and die for!'

'Ha!' cried he, with sudden emotion, and with a eureka expression of countenance, as if he had indeed found a heart in unison with his own .

The 'eureka expression of countenance', you see at once to be prophetic of marriage at the end of the third volume; but before that desirable consummation, there are very complicated misunderstandings, arising chiefly from the vindictive plotting of Sir Luttrell Wycherley, who is a genius, a poet, and in every way a most remarkable character indeed. He is not only a romantic poet, but a hardened rake and a cynical wit; yet his deep passion for Lady Umfraville has so impoverished his epigrammatic talent, that he cuts an extremely poor figure in conversation. When she rejects him, he rushes into the shrubbery, and rolls himself in the dirt; and on recovering, devotes himself to the most diabolical and laborious schemes of vengeance, in the course of which he disguises himself as a quack physician, and enters into general practice, foreseeing that Evelyn will fall ill, and that he shall be called in to attend her. At last, when all his schemes are frustrated, he takes leave of her in a long letter, written, as you will perceive from the following passage, entirely in the style of an eminent literary man: –

Oh, lady, nursed in pomp and pleasure, will you ever cast one thought upon the miserable being who addresses you? Will you ever, as your gilded galley is floating down the unruffled stream of prosperity, will you ever, while lulled by the sweetest music – thine own praises, – hear the far-off sigh from that world to which I am going?

On the whole, however, frothy as it is, we rather prefer Rank and Beauty to the two other novels we have mentioned. The dialogue is more natural and spirited; there is some frank ignorance, and no pedantry; and you are allowed to take the heroine's astounding intellect upon trust, without being called on to read her conversational refutations of sceptics and philosophers, or her rhetorical solutions of the mysteries of the universe.

Writers of the mind-and-millinery school are remarkably unanimous in their choice of diction. In their novels, there is usually a lady or gentleman who is more or less of a upas tree: the lover has a manly breast; minds are redolent of various things; hearts are hollow; events are utilized; friends are consigned to the tomb; infancy is an engaging period; the sun is a luminary that goes to his western couch, or gathers the rain-drops into his refulgent bosom; life is a melancholy boon; Albion and Scotia are conversational epithets. There is a striking resemblance, too, in the character of their moral comments, such, for instance, as that 'It is a fact, no less true than melancholy, that all people, more or less, richer or poorer, are swayed by bad example'; that 'Books, however trivial, contain some subjects from which useful information may be drawn'; that 'Vice can too often borrow the language of virtue'; that 'Merit and nobility of nature must exist, to be accepted, for clamour and pretension cannot impose upon those too well read in human nature to be easily deceived'; and that, 'In order to forgive, we must have been injured'. There is, doubtless, a class of readers to whom these remarks appear peculiarly pointed and pungent; for we often find them doubly and trebly scored with the pencil, and delicate hands giving in their determined adhesion to these hardy novelties by a distinct très vrai , emphasized by many notes of exclamation. The colloquial style of these novels is often marked by much ingenious inversion, and a careful avoidance of such cheap phraseology as can be heard every day. Angry young gentlemen exclaim – ‘Tis ever thus, methinks’; and in the half hour before dinner a young lady informs her next neighbour that the first day she read Shakspeare she ‘stole away into the park, and beneath the shadow of the greenwood tree, devoured with rapture the inspired page of the great magician’. But the most remarkable efforts of the mind-and-millinery writers lie in their philosophic reflections. The authoress of Laura Gay , for example, having married her hero and heroine, improves the event by observing that ‘if those sceptics, whose eyes have so long gazed on matter that they can no longer see aught else in man, could once enter with heart and soul into such bliss as this, they would come to say that the soul of man and the polypus are not of common origin, or of the same texture’. Lady novelists, it appears, can see something else besides matter; they are not limited to phenomena, but can relieve their eyesight by occasional glimpses of the noumenon , and are, therefore, naturally better able than any one else to confound sceptics, even of that remarkable, but to us unknown school, which maintains that the soul of man is of the same texture as the polypus.

The most pitiable of all silly novels by lady novelists are what we may call the oracular species – novels intended to expound the writer’s religious, philosophical, or moral theories. There seems to be a notion abroad among women, rather akin to the superstition that the speech and actions of idiots are inspired, and that the human being most entirely exhausted of common sense is the fittest vehicle of revelation. To judge from their writings, there are certain ladies who think that an amazing ignorance, both of science and of life, is the best possible qualification for forming an opinion on the knottiest moral and speculative questions. Apparently, their recipe for solving all such difficulties is something like this: – Take a woman’s head, stuff it with a smattering of philosophy and literature chopped small, and with false notions of society baked hard, let it hang over a desk a few hours every day, and serve up hot in feeble English, when not required. You will rarely meet with a lady novelist of the oracular class who is diffident of her ability to decide on theological questions, – who has any suspicion that she is not capable of discriminating with the nicest accuracy between the good and evil in all church parties, – who does not see precisely how it is that men have gone wrong hitherto, – and pity philosophers in general that they have not had the opportunity of consulting her. Great writers, who have modestly contented themselves with putting their experience into fiction, and have thought it quite a sufficient task to exhibit men and things as they are, she sighs over as deplorably deficient in the application of their powers. ‘They have solved no great questions’ – and she is ready to remedy their omission by setting before you a complete theory of life and manual of divinity, in a love story, where ladies and gentlemen of good family go through genteel vicissitudes, to the utter confusion of Deists, Puseyites, and ultra-Protestants, and to the perfect establishment of that particular view of Christianity which either condenses itself into a sentence of small caps, or explodes into a cluster of stars on the three hundred and thirtieth page. It is true, the ladies and gentlemen will probably seem to you remarkably little like any you have had the fortune or misfortune to meet with, for, as a general rule, the ability of a lady novelist to describe actual life and her fellow-men, is in inverse proportion to her confident eloquence about God and the other world, and the means by which she usually chooses to conduct you to true ideas of the invisible is a totally false picture of the visible.

As typical a novel of the oracular kind as we can hope to meet with, is The Enigma : A Leaf from the Chronicles of Wolchorley House. The ‘enigma’ which this novel is to solve, is certainly one that demands powers no less gigantic than those of a lady novelist, being neither more nor less than the existence of evil. The problem is stated, and the answer dimly foreshadowed on the very first page. The spirited young lady, with raven hair, says, ‘All life is an inextricable confusion’; and the meek young lady, with auburn hair, looks at the picture of the Madonna which she is copying, and – ‘There seemed the solution of that mighty enigma.’ The style of this novel is quite as lofty as its purpose; indeed, some passages on which we have spent much patient study are quite beyond our reach, in spite of the illustrative aid of italics and small caps; and we must await further ‘development’ in order to understand them. Of Ernest, the model young clergyman, who sets every one right on all occasions, we read, that ‘he held not of marriage in the marketable kind, after a social desecration’; that, on one eventful night, 'sleep had not visited his divided heart, where tumultuated, in varied type and combination, the aggregate feelings of grief and joy'; and that, 'for the marketable human article he had no toleration, be it of what sort, or set for what value it might, whether for worship or class, his upright soul abhorred it, whose ultimatum, the self-deceiver, was to him THE great spiritual lie , "living in a vain show, deceiving and being deceived"; since he did not suppose the phylactery and enlarged border on the garment to be merely a social trick.' (The italics and small caps are the author's, and we hope they assist the reader's comprehension.) Of Sir Lionel, the model old gentleman, we are told that 'the simple ideal of the middle age, apart from its anarchy and decadence, in him most truly seemed to live again, when the ties which knit men together were of heroic cast. The first-born colours of pristine faith and truth engraven on the common soul of man, and blent into the wide arch of brotherhood, where the primæval law of order grew and multiplied, each perfect after his kind, and mutually interdependent.' You see clearly, of course, how colours are first engraven on a soul, and then blent into a wide arch, on which arch of colours – apparently a rainbow – the law of order grew and multiplied, each – apparently the arch and the law – perfect after his kind? If, after this, you can possibly want any further aid towards knowing what Sir Lionel was, we can tell you, that in his soul 'the scientific combinations of thought could educe no fuller harmonies of the good and the true, than lay in the primæval pulses which floated as an atmosphere around it!' and that, when he was sealing a letter, 'Lo! the responsive throb in that good man's bosom echoed back in simple truth the honest witness of a heart that condemned him not, as his eye, bedewed with love, rested, too, with something of ancestral pride, on the undimmed motto of the family – loIAUTÉ.'

The slightest matters have their vulgarity fumigated out of them by the same elevated style. Commonplace people would say that a copy of Shakspeare lay on a drawingroom table; but the authoress of The Enigma , bent on edifying periphrasis, tells you that there lay on the table, 'that fund of human thought and feeling, which teaches the heart through the little name, "Shakspeare" '. A watchman sees a light burning in an upper window rather longer than usual, and thinks that people are foolish to sit up late when they have an opportunity of going to bed; but, lest this fact should seem too low and common, it is presented to us in the following striking and metaphysical manner: 'He marvelled – as man will think for others in a necessarily separate personality, consequently (though disallowing it) in false mental premise, – how differently he should act, how gladly he should prize the rest so lightly held of within.' A footman – an ordinary Jeames, with large calves and aspirated vowels – answers the door-bell, and the opportunity is seized to tell you that he was a 'type of the large class of pampered menials, who follow the curse of Cain – "vagabonds" on the face of the earth, and whose estimate of the human class varies in the graduated scale of money and expenditure . . . These, and such as these, O England, be the false lights of thy morbid civilization!' We have heard of various 'false lights', from Dr Cumming to Robert Owen, from Dr Pusey to the Spirit-rappers, but we never before heard of the false light that emanates from plush and powder.

In the same way very ordinary events of civilized life are exalted into the most awful crises, and ladies in full skirts and manches à la chinoise, conduct themselves not unlike the heroines of sanguinary melodramas. Mrs Percy, a shallow woman of the world, wishes her son Horace to marry the auburn-haired Grace, she being an heiress; but he, after the manner of sons, falls in love with the raven-haired Kate, the heiress's portionless cousin; and, moreover, Grace herself shows every symptom of perfect indifference to Horace. In such cases, sons are often sulky or fiery, mothers are alternately manoeuvring and waspish, and the portionless young lady often lies awake at night and cries a good deal. We are getting used to these things now, just as we are used to eclipses of the moon, which no longer set us howling and beating tin kettles. We never heard of a lady in a fashionable 'front' behaving like Mrs Percy under these circumstances. Happening one day to see Horace talking to Grace at a window, without in the least knowing what they are talking about, or having the least reason to believe that Grace, who is mistress of the house and a person of dignity, would accept her son if he were to offer himself, she suddenly rushes up to them and clasps them both, saying, 'with a flushed countenance and in an excited manner' – 'This is indeed happiness; for, may I not call you so, Grace? – my Grace – my Horace's Grace! – my dear children!' Her son tells her she is mistaken, and that he is engaged to Kate, whereupon we have the following scene and tableau: –

Gathering herself up to an unprecedented height, (!) her eyes lightning forth the fire of her anger: – ‘Wretched boy!’ she said, hoarsely and scornfully, and clenching her hand. ‘Take then the doom of your own choice! Bow down your miserable head and let a mother’s –’

‘Curse not!’ spake a deep low voice from behind, and Mrs Percy started, scared, as though she had seen a heavenly visitant appear, to break upon her in the midst of her sin.

Meantime, Horace had fallen on his knees at her feet, and hid his face in his hands.

Who, then, is she – who! Truly his ‘guardian spirit’ hath stepped between him and the fearful words, which, however unmerited, must have hung as a pall over his future existence; – a spell which could not be unbound – which could not be unsaid.

Of an earthly paleness, but calm with the still, iron-bound calmness of death – the only calm one there, – Katherine stood; and her words smote on the ear in tones whose appallingly slow and separate intonation rung on the heart like the chill, isolated tolling of some fatal knell.

‘He would have plighted me his faith, but I did not accept it; you cannot, therefore – you dare not curse him. And here,’ she continued, raising her hand to heaven, whither her large dark eyes also rose with a chastened glow, which, for the first time, suffering had lighted in those passionate orbs, – ‘here I promise, come weal, come woe, that Horace Wolchorley and I do never interchange vows without his mother’s sanction – without his mother’s blessing!’

Here, and throughout the story, we see that confusion of purpose which is so characteristic of silly novels written by women. It is a story of quite modern drawing-room society – a society in which polkas are played and Puseyism discussed; yet we have characters, and incidents, and traits of manner introduced, which are mere shreds from the most heterogeneous romances. We have a blind Irish harper, ‘relic of the picturesque bards of yore’, startling us at a Sunday-school festival of tea and cake in an English village; we have a crazy gypsy, in a scarlet cloak, singing snatches of romantic song, and revealing a secret on her death-bed which, with the testimony of a dwarfish miserly merchant, who salutes strangers with a curse and a devilish laugh, goes to prove that Ernest, the model young clergyman, is Kate's brother; and we have an ultravirtuous Irish Barney, discovering that a document is forged, by comparing the date of the paper with the date of the alleged signature, although the same document has passed through a court of law, and occasioned a fatal decision. The 'Hall' in which Sir Lionel lives is the venerable country-seat of an old family, and this, we suppose, sets the imagination of the authoress flying to donjons and battlements, where 'lo! the warder blows his horn'; for, as the inhabitants are in their bedrooms on a night certainly within the recollection of Pleaceman X., and a breeze springs up, which we are at first told was faint, and then that it made the old cedars bow their branches to the greensward, she falls into this mediæval vein of description (the italics are ours): 'The banner unfurled it at the sound, and shook its guardian wing above, while the startled owl flapped her in the ivy; the firmament looking down through her "argus eyes" –

Ministers of heaven's mute melodies.

And lo! two strokes tolled from out the warder tower, and "Two o'clock" re-echoed its interpreter below.'

Such stories as this of The Enigma remind us of the pictures clever children sometimes draw 'out of their own head', where you will see a modern villa on the right, two knights in helmets fighting in the foreground, and a tiger grinning in a jungle on the left, the several objects being brought together because the artist thinks each pretty, and perhaps still more because he remembers seeing them in other pictures.

But we like the authoress much better on her mediæval stilts than on her oracular ones, – when she talks of the Ich and of 'subjective' and 'objective', and lays down the exact line of Christian verity, between 'right-hand excesses and left-hand declensions'. Persons who deviate from this line are introduced with a patronizing air of charity. Of a certain Miss Inshquine she informs us, with all the lucidity of italics and small caps, that 'function, not form, AS THE INEVITABLE OUTER EXPRESSION OF THE SPIRIT IN THIS TABERNACLED AGE, weakly engrossed her'. And à propos of Miss Mayjar, an evangelical lady who is a little too apt to talk of her visits to sick women and the state of their souls, we are told that the model clergyman is 'not one to disallow, through the super crust, the undercurrent towards good in the subject , or the positive benefits, nevertheless, to the object '. We imagine the double-refined accent and protrusion of chin which are feebly represented by the italics in this lady's sentences. We abstain from quoting any of her oracular doctrinal passages, because they refer to matters too serious for our pages just now.

The epithet 'silly' may seem impertinent, applied to a novel which indicates so much reading and intellectual activity as The Enigma ; but we use this epithet advisedly. If, as the world has long agreed, a very great amount of instruction will not make a wise man, still less will a very mediocre amount of instruction make a wise woman. And the most mischievous form of feminine silliness is the literary form, because it tends to confirm the popular prejudice against the more solid education of women. When men see girls wasting their time in consultations about bonnets and ball dresses, and in giggling or sentimental love-confidences, or middle-aged women mismanaging their children, and solacing themselves with acrid gossip, they can hardly help saying, 'For Heaven's sake, let girls be better educated; let them have some better objects of thought – some more solid occupations.' But after a few hours' conversation with an oracular literary woman, or a few hours' reading of her books, they are likely enough to say, 'After all, when a woman gets some knowledge, see what use she makes of it! Her knowledge remains acquisition, instead of passing into culture; instead of being subdued into modesty and simplicity by a larger acquaintance with thought and fact, she has a feverish consciousness of her attainments; she keeps a sort of mental pocket-mirror, and is continually looking in it at her own 'intellectuality'; she spoils the taste of one's muffin by questions of metaphysics; 'puts down' men at a dinner-table with her superior information; and seizes the opportunity of a soirée to catechize us on the vital question of the relation between mind and matter. And then, look at her writings! She mistakes vagueness for depth, bombast for eloquence, and affectation for originality; she struts on one page, rolls her eyes on another, grimaces in a third, and is hysterical in a fourth. She may have read many writings of great men, and a few writings of great women; but she is as unable to discern the difference between her own style and theirs as a Yorkshireman is to discern the difference between his own English and a Londoner's: rhodomontade is the native accent of her intellect. No – the average nature of women is too shallow and feeble a soil to bear much tillage; it is only fit for the very lightest crops.’

It is true that the men who come to such a decision on such very superficial and imperfect observation may not be among the wisest in the world; but we have not now to contest their opinion – we are only pointing out how it is unconsciously encouraged by many women who have volunteered themselves as representatives of the feminine intellect. We do not believe that a man was ever strengthened in such an opinion by associating with a woman of true culture, whose mind had absorbed her knowledge instead of being absorbed by it. A really cultured woman, like a really cultured man, is all the simpler and the less obtrusive for her knowledge; it has made her see herself and her opinions in something like just proportions; she does not make it a pedestal from which she flatters herself that she commands a complete view of men and things, but makes it a point of observation from which to form a right estimate of herself. She neither spouts poetry nor quotes Cicero on slight provocation; not because she thinks that a sacrifice must be made to the prejudices of men, but because that mode of exhibiting her memory and Latinity does not present itself to her as edifying or graceful. She does not write books to confound philosophers, perhaps because she is able to write books that delight them. In conversation she is the least formidable of women, because she understands you, without wanting to make you aware that you can’t understand her. She does not give you information, which is the raw material of culture, – she gives you sympathy, which is its subtlest essence.

A more numerous class of silly novels than the oracular, (which are generally inspired by some form of High Church, or transcendental Christianity,) is what we may call the white neck-cloth species, which represent the tone of thought and feeling in the Evangelical party. This species is a kind of genteel tract on a large scale, intended as a sort of medicinal sweetmeat for Low Church young ladies; an Evangelical substitute for the fashionable novel, as the May Meetings are a substitute for the Opera. Even Quaker children, one would think, can hardly have been denied the indulgence of a doll; but it must be a doll dressed in a drab gown and a coal-scuttle bonnet – not a worldly doll, in gauze and spangles. And there are no young ladies, we imagine, – unless they belong to the Church of the United Brethren, in which people are married without any love-making – who can dispense with love stories. Thus, for Evangelical young ladies there are Evangelical love stories, in which the vicissitudes of the tender passion are sanctified by saving views of Regeneration and the Atonement. These novels differ from the oracular ones, as a Low Churchwoman often differs from a High Churchwoman: they are a little less supercilious, and a great deal more ignorant, a little less correct in their syntax, and a great deal more vulgar.

The Orlando of Evangelical literature is the young curate, looked at from the point of view of the middle class, where cambric bands are understood to have as thrilling an effect on the hearts of young ladies as epaulettes have in the classes above and below it. In the ordinary type of these novels, the hero is almost sure to be a young curate, frowned upon, perhaps, by worldly mammas, but carrying captive the hearts of their daughters, who can ‘never forget that sermon’; tender glances are seized from the pulpit stairs instead of the opera-box; tête-à-têtes are seasoned with quotations from Scripture, instead of quotations from the poets; and questions as to the state of the heroine’s affections are mingled with anxieties as to the state of her soul. The young curate always has a background of well-dressed and wealthy, if not fashionable society; – for Evangelical silliness is as snobbish as any other kind of silliness; and the Evangelical lady novelist, while she explains to you the type of the scapegoat on one page, is ambitious on another to represent the manners and conversation of aristocratic people. Her pictures of fashionable society are often curious studies considered as efforts of the Evangelical imagination; but in one particular the novels of the White Neck-cloth School are meritoriously realistic, – their favourite hero, the Evangelical young curate, is always rather an insipid personage.

The most recent novel of this species that we happen to have before us, is The Old Grey Church. It is utterly tame and feeble; there is no one set of objects on which the writer seems to have a stronger grasp than on any other; and we should be entirely at a loss to conjecture among what phases of life her experience has been gained, but for certain vulgarisms of style which sufficiently indicate that she has had the advantage, though she has been unable to use it, of mingling chiefly with men and women whose manners and characters have not had all their bosses and angles rubbed down by refined conventionalism. It is less excusable in an Evangelical novelist, than in any other, gratuitously to seek her subjects among titles and carriages. The real drama of Evangelicalism – and it has abundance of fine drama for any one who has genius enough to discern and reproduce it – lies among the middle and lower classes; and are not Evangelical opinions understood to give an especial interest in the weak things of the earth, rather than in the mighty? Why then, cannot our Evangelical lady novelists show us the operation of their religious views among people (there really are many such in the world) who keep no carriage, ‘not so much as a brass-bound gig’, who even manage to eat their dinner without a silver fork, and in whose mouths the authoress’s questionable English would be strictly consistent? Why can we not have pictures of religious life among the industrial classes in England, as interesting as Mrs Stowe’s pictures of religious life among the negroes? Instead of this, pious ladies nauseate us with novels which remind us of what we sometimes see in a worldly woman recently ‘converted’; – she is as fond of a fine dinner table as before, but she invites clergymen instead of beaux; she thinks as much of her dress as before, but she adopts a more sober choice of colours and patterns; her conversation is as trivial as before, but the triviality is flavoured with Gospel instead of gossip. In The Old Grey Church, we have the same sort of Evangelical travesty of the fashionable novel, and of course the vicious, intriguing baronet is not wanting.

It is worth while to give a sample of the style of conversation attributed to this high-born rake – a style that in its profuse italics and palpable innuendoes, is worthy of Miss Squeers. In an evening visit to the ruins of the Colosseum, Eustace, the young clergyman, has been withdrawing the heroine, Miss Lushington, from the rest of the party, for the sake of a tête-à-tête. The baronet is jealous, and vents his pique in this way: –

There they are, and Miss Lushington, no doubt, quite safe; for she is under the holy guidance of Pope Eustace the First, who has, of course, been delivering to her an edifying homily on the wickedness of the heathens of yore, who, as tradition tells us, in this very place let loose the wild beasts on poor Saint Paul! – Oh, no! by the bye, I believe I am wrong, and betraying my want of clergy, and that it was not at all Saint Paul, nor was it here. But no matter, it would equally serve as a text to preach from, and from which to diverge to the degenerate heathen Christians of the present day, and all their naughty practices, and so end with an exhortation to ‘come out from among them, and be separate’; – and I am sure, Miss Lushington, you have most scrupulously conformed to that injunction this evening, for we have seen nothing of you since our arrival. But every one seems agreed it has been a charming party of pleasure, and I am sure we all feel much indebted to Mr Grey for having suggested it; and as he seems so capital a cicerone, I hope he will think of something else equally agreeable to all.

This drivelling kind of dialogue, and equally drivelling narrative, which, like a bad drawing, represents nothing, and barely indicates what is meant to be represented, runs through the book; and we have no doubt is considered by the amiable authoress to constitute an improving novel, which Christian mothers will do well to put into the hands of their daughters. But everything is relative; we have met with American vegetarians whose normal diet was dry meal, and who, when their appetite wanted stimulating, tickled it with wet meal; and so, we can imagine that there are Evangelical circles in which The Old Grey Church is devoured as a powerful and interesting fiction.

But, perhaps, the least readable of silly women’s novels, are the modern-antique species, which unfold to us the domestic life of Jannes and Jambres, the private love affairs of Sennacherib, or the mental struggles and ultimate conversion of Demetrius the silversmith. From most silly novels we can at least extract a laugh; but those of the modern-antique school have a ponderous, a leaden kind of fatuity, under which we groan. What can be more demonstrative of the inability of literary women to measure their own powers, than their frequent assumption of a task which can only be justified by the rarest concurrence of acquirement with genius? The finest effort to reanimate the past is of course only approximative – is always more or less an infusion of the modern spirit into the ancient form, –

Was ihr den Geist der Zeiten heisst,

Das ist im Grund der Herren eigner Geist,

In dem die Zeiten sich bespiegeln. [33]

Admitting that genius which has familiarized itself with all the relics of an ancient period can sometimes, by the force of its sympathetic divination, restore the missing notes in the ‘music of humanity’, and reconstruct the fragments into a whole which will really bring the remote past nearer to us, and interpret it to our duller apprehension, – this form of imaginative power must always be among the very rarest, because it demands as much accurate and minute knowledge as creative vigour. Yet we find ladies constantly choosing to make their mental mediocrity more conspicuous, by clothing it in a masquerade of ancient names; by putting their feeble sentimentality into the mouths of Roman vestals or Egyptian princesses, and attributing their rhetorical arguments to Jewish highpriests and Greek philosophers. A recent example of this heavy imbecility is Adonijah, a Tale of the Jewish Dispersion, which forms part of a series, ‘uniting,’ we are told, ‘taste, humour, and sound principles’. Adonijah, we presume, exemplifies the tale of ‘sound principles’; the taste and humour are to be found in other members of the series. We are told on the cover, that the incidents of this tale are ‘fraught with unusual interest’, and the preface winds up thus: ‘To those who feel interested in the dispersed of Israel and Judea, these pages may afford, perhaps, information on an important subject, as well as amusement’. Since the ‘important subject’ on which this book is to afford information is not specified, it may possibly lie in some esoteric meaning to which we have no key; but if it has relation to the dispersed of Israel and Judea at any period of their history, we believe a tolerably wellinformed school-girl already knows much more of it than she will find in this ‘Tale of the Jewish Dispersion’. Adonijah is simply the feeblest kind of love story, supposed to be instructive, we presume, because the hero is a Jewish captive, and the heroine a Roman vestal; because they and their friends are converted to Christianity after the shortest and easiest method approved by the ‘Society for Promoting the Conversion of the Jews’; and because, instead of being written in plain language, it is adorned with that peculiar style of grandiloquence which is held by some lady novelists to give an antique colouring; and which we recognize at once in such phrases as these: – ‘the splendid regnal talents undoubtedly possessed by the Emperor Nero’ – ‘the expiring scion of a lofty stem’ – ‘the virtuous partner of his couch' – 'ah, by Vesta!' – and 'I tell thee, Roman'. Among the quotations which serve at once for instruction and ornament on the cover of this volume, there is one from Miss Sinclair, which informs us that 'Works of imagination are avowedly read by men of science, wisdom, and piety'; from which we suppose the reader is to gather the cheering inference that Dr Daubeney, Mr Mill, or Mr Maurice, may openly indulge himself with the perusal of Adonijah, without being obliged to secrete it among the sofa cushions, or read it by snatches under the dinner-table.

'Be not a baker if your head be made of butter,' says a homely proverb, which, being interpreted, may mean, let no woman rush into print who is not prepared for the consequences. We are aware that our remarks are in a very different tone from that of the reviewers who, with a perennial recurrence of precisely similar emotions, only paralleled, we imagine, in the experience of monthly nurses, tell one lady novelist after another that they 'hail' her productions 'with delight'. We are aware that the ladies at whom our criticism is pointed are accustomed to be told, in the choicest phraseology of puffery, that their pictures of life are brilliant, their characters well-drawn, their style fascinating, and their sentiments lofty. But if they are inclined to resent our plainness of speech, we ask them to reflect for a moment on the chary praise, and often captious blame, which their panegyrists give to writers whose works are on the way to become classics.

No sooner does a woman show that she has genius or effective talent, than she receives the tribute of being moderately praised and severely criticized. By a peculiar thermometric adjustment, when a woman's talent is at zero, journalistic approbation is at the boiling pitch; when she attains mediocrity, it is already at no more than summer heat; and if ever she reaches excellence, critical enthusiasm drops to the freezing point. Harriet Martineau, Currer Bell, and Mrs Gaskell have been treated as cavalierly as if they had been men. And every critic who forms a high estimate of the share women may ultimately take in literature, will, on principle, abstain from any exceptional indulgence towards the productions of literary women. For it must be plain to every one who looks impartially and extensively into feminine literature, that its greatest deficiencies are due hardly more to the want of intellectual power than to the want of those moral qualities that contribute to literary excellence – patient diligence, a sense of the responsibility involved in publication, and an appreciation of the sacredness of the writer's art. In the majority of women's books you see that kind of facility which springs from the absence of any high standard; that fertility in imbecile combination or feeble imitation which a little self-criticism would check and reduce to barrenness; just as with a total want of musical ear people will sing out of tune, while a degree more melodic sensibility would suffice to render them silent. The foolish vanity of wishing to appear in print, instead of being counterbalanced by any consciousness of the intellectual or moral derogation implied in futile authorship, seems to be encouraged by the extremely false impression that to write at all is a proof of superiority in a woman. On this ground, we believe that the average intellect of women is unfairly represented by the mass of feminine literature, and that while the few women who write well are very far above the ordinary intellectual level of their sex, the many women who write ill are very far below it. So that, after all, the severer critics are fulfilling a chivalrous duty in depriving the mere fact of feminine authorship of any false prestige which may give it a delusive attraction, and in recommending women of mediocre faculties – as at least a negative service they can render their sex – to abstain from writing.

The standing apology for women who become writers without any special qualification is, that society shuts them out from other spheres of occupation. Society is a very culpable entity, and has to answer for the manufacture of many unwholesome commodities, from bad pickles to bad poetry. But society, like 'matter', and Her Majesty's Government, and other lofty abstractions, has its share of excessive blame as well as excessive praise. Where there is one woman who writes from necessity, we believe there are three women who write from vanity; and, besides, there is something so antiseptic in the mere healthy fact of working for one's bread, that the most trashy and rotten kind of feminine literature is not likely to have been produced under such circumstances. 'In all labour there is profit'; but ladies' silly novels, we imagine, are less the result of labour than of busy idleness.

Happily, we are not dependent on argument to prove that Fiction is a department of literature in which women can, after their kind, fully equal men. A cluster of great names, both living and dead, rush to our memories in evidence that women can produce novels not only fine, but among the very finest; – novels, too, that have a precious speciality, lying quite apart from masculine aptitudes and experience. No educational restrictions can shut women out from the materials of fiction, and there is no species of art which is so free from rigid requirements. Like crystalline masses, it may take any form, and yet be beautiful; we have only to pour in the right elements – genuine observation, humour, and passion. But it is precisely this absence of rigid requirement which constitutes the fatal seduction of novel-writing to incompetent women. Ladies are not wont to be very grossly deceived as to their power of playing on the piano; here certain positive difficulties of execution have to be conquered, and incompetence inevitably breaks down. Every art which has its absolute technique is, to a certain extent, guarded from the intrusions of mere left-handed imbecility. But in novel-writing there are no barriers for incapacity to stumble against, no external criteria to prevent a writer from mistaking foolish facility for mastery. And so we have again and again the old story of La Fontaine's ass, who puts his nose to the flute, and, finding that he elicits some sound, exclaims, 'Moi, aussi, je joue de la flute'; – a fable which we commend, at parting, to the consideration of any feminine reader who is in danger of adding to the number of 'silly novels by lady novelists'.

时髦婚姻 [1]

去车站的路上，威廉突然失望地想起，自己没给孩子们带任何东西。可怜的孩子！他们向来不依不饶，跑出来迎接他时，总是一样的话：“爸爸，你给我带什么啦？”他什么也没带，又不得不去火车站给他们买些糖果了。但之前的四个周六，他带的都是糖果。上周看见拿出来的又是一样的旧盒子，孩子们的脸都垮了下来。

帕迪说：“我之……之前就拿到过有红丝带的盒子了。”

约翰尼说：“我总是拿到粉色的。我讨厌粉色。”

那威廉该怎么办？这事似乎并不容易解决。从前，他可以叫辆出租车，去体面的玩具店，用五分钟为他们选点儿东西。但现在，他们已经有俄国玩具、法国玩具、塞尔维亚玩具，还有天知道哪儿来的玩具。一年多以前，伊莎贝尔就把老驴和机车之类的玩具拆烂了。因为，它们实在太“多愁善感”，“无益于培养孩子对形状的感知”。

“这点非常重要，”焕然一新的伊莎贝尔解释道，“小孩应该一开始就喜爱正确的东西，这样，今后才能节省不少时间。说真的，可怜的孩子如果得从小盯着这些可怕的东西，长大后多半会要求大人把自己送进皇家艺术学院吧。”

听她的口气，似乎对任何人来说，去皇家艺术学院一游，都肯定会立刻丧命……

“呃，我不知道，”威廉缓慢地说，“我像他们那么大时，常常拥着一块打了个结的旧毛巾入睡。”

焕然一新的伊莎贝尔看着他，眯起眼睛，微张着嘴。

“亲爱的威廉！我相信，你的确干得出这种事！”她换了种方式，哈哈大笑说。

不过，还是只能买糖果吧。威廉郁闷地想着，在兜里摸索零钱，付出租车费。他见过孩子们传递盒子分享——他们都是相当慷慨的小孩。然而伊莎贝尔珍视的朋友们则一点儿也不客气……

水果怎么样？威廉在车站里的一个水果摊前徘徊。给每人买个甜瓜如何？总不会甜瓜都得分着吃吧？或者给帕迪买个菠萝，给约翰尼

买个甜瓜？孩子们进餐时，伊莎贝尔的那些朋友几乎不可能溜进儿童室。尽管如此，威廉还是边买甜瓜，边厌恶地想象着：伊莎贝尔认识的某个年轻诗人肯定会找理由顺走一块儿，躲在儿童房门后吃。

他拎着两个笨重的包，大步朝他的那趟车走去。月台上很拥挤，列车已经进站。车门砰砰地开了又关，机车发出一声响亮的轰鸣，让匆忙来去的人们一脸茫然。威廉径直走向头等座的吸烟室，放好行李箱和包，从内袋掏出一大沓报纸，一屁股坐进角落，读了起来。

“再者，我们的客户还是很积极的……我们倾向于重新考虑……倘若……”啊，那样就好多了。威廉把扁塌的头发往后梳，腿伸过车厢地板。心中那种熟悉的啃噬感平息了。“至于我们的决定……”他拿出一支蓝色铅笔，慢慢在一段话下画线。

两个男人上车，经过他身边，朝较远的一个角落走去。一个年轻人把高尔夫球杆放在架子上，坐到他对面。列车轻轻一晃，启动了。威廉抬眼一瞥，看到炎热而明亮的车站渐行渐远。一个满脸通红的女孩追着车厢跑，一边挥手一边大喊，透着某种紧张又几近绝望的意味。“歇斯底里！”威廉没精打采地想。随后，他看见一个工人站在月台尽头，冲经过的列车咧嘴而笑，那张黑脸上满是油污。威廉想：“肮脏的生活！”然后，他便继续看起报纸来。

等再抬起头，窗外已是一片又一片田野，牲畜躲在幽暗的树下。一条宽阔的河流映入眼帘，光着身子的小孩在浅滩上泼水玩。随后，这一幕也溜走了。天空亮得苍白，一只鸟在高处滑翔，仿佛宝石上的一粒微尘。

“我们已经审查过客户的信函……”最后一句在他脑海中回荡，“我们已经审查过……”威廉把那句话读了一遍又一遍，还是徒劳无益。它似乎断在中间，田野、天空、飞翔的鸟、河水，一切都在说：“伊莎贝尔。”每周六下午，都会上演同样的场景。去见伊莎贝尔的途中，他总会展开无数想象：她在车站上，站得离其他人稍微远了一些。她坐在外面敞着门的出租车里，她在花园门边，她走过干枯的草坪，她站在门口，或门厅里。

她清透温柔的声音说：“是威廉啊。”“你好，威廉！”或“威廉来了呀！”他会碰触她冰冰的手和凉凉的脸颊。

多么精致又清凉的伊莎贝尔啊！还是个小男孩时，他就很喜欢跑进刚刚下过雨的花园，摇晃头顶的玫瑰花丛。伊莎贝尔就是那玫瑰花丛，花瓣柔软，闪闪发亮，清透凉爽。他仍是那个小男孩，如今却不再跑进花园，也不会欢笑着摇晃花丛。胸中又升起那种钝钝的、持续不断的啃噬感。他收回双腿，把报纸扔到一边，闭上了眼。

“那是什么，伊莎贝尔？是什么？”他柔声问道。他们在新房子的

卧室里，伊莎贝尔坐在梳妆台前的一张彩绘凳上，台面上堆满了黑色和绿色的小盒子。

“什么是什么，威廉？”她倾身向前，漂亮的浅色头发垂到脸上。

“啊，你知道！”站在陌生房间的中央，他觉得自己也像个陌生人。伊莎贝尔飞快地转过身面向他。

“噢，威廉！”她拿起梳子，哀求地大声说，“求你了！求你别这么一本正经、满脸悲痛的样子。你说的话、露出的表情或给出的暗示，总是在控诉我变了。就因为我开始结识志趣相投的人，出去得勤了些，真正开始热爱每样东西，你就表现得我好似——”伊莎贝尔把头发甩到身后，笑了，“好似扼杀了我们的爱情之类的。真是太荒谬！”她咬着唇，“而且，这太疯狂了，威廉。甚至这座新房子和你硬塞给我的那些仆人，也太疯狂。”

“伊莎贝尔！”

“没错，没错，从某种程度上来说，这些都是事实。”伊莎贝尔飞快地说，“你认为它们是坏兆头。噢，我知道你是这么认为的，我能感觉到！”她轻声说，“每次你上楼来，我都能感觉到。但我们不能在那个逼仄的小窝里生活了，威廉。至少现实一点儿吧！唉，孩子们待在那儿，甚至没有足够的活动空间。”

对，这话没错。每天早晨，他从卧室回来，都发现伊莎贝尔和孩子们待在后面的客厅里，不是在骑着铺在沙发后背上的豹皮，就是把伊莎贝尔的桌子当柜台，玩着商店游戏。要么，就是帕迪坐在壁炉前的地毯上，把铜质的小火铲当成船桨，划船试图逃命；与此同时，约翰尼则拿着火钳射杀海盗。每天晚上，都得把他们一个接一个地背上狭窄的楼梯，送到又胖又老的保姆那儿去。

没错，他想，那的确是座逼仄的小房子。一座有蓝色窗帘的小白房子，窗台上的花盆箱里种着矮牵牛花。威廉会在门口跟朋友们打招呼：“瞧见我们的矮牵牛花了吗？非常适合伦敦，不是吗？”

但最愚蠢、最不可思议的是：他压根没想到伊莎贝尔竟然不像自己一样开心。天哪，多蠢呀！在那些日子里，他一点儿也不知道，她其实非常讨厌那座不方便的小房子，并认为那个胖保姆在宠坏孩子们。她十分孤独，渴望结识新朋友，接触新的音乐和画作之类的东西。他们要是没去参加莫伊拉·莫里森工作室的聚会；要是离开时，莫伊拉·莫里森没说“自私的男人，我要拯救你的妻子，她就像是高雅小巧的缇坦妮雅 [2]”；如果伊莎贝尔没有跟莫伊拉去巴黎……如果……如果……

列车停在另一站——贝汀福德到了。天哪！还有十分钟他就要到

站了。威廉把报纸塞回内袋。对面的年轻人早就不见了，这会儿，另外两个也下了车。傍晚的阳光照在身着棉裙的女人和光着脚丫、微微有些晒黑的孩子身上，同时也照耀着一朵柔软光洁的黄花：花儿粗糙的叶片四处蔓延，已经爬上一片石壁。微风拂过窗口，带来大海的味道。威廉想：伊莎贝尔这周末也还是和同一群人一起吗？

他想起从前一家四口去度假的日子。为了照顾小孩，他们还带上了一个名叫罗丝的农场小姑娘。伊莎贝尔穿紧身运动套衫，头发编成辫子，看起来就跟十四岁一样。天哪！当时，他的鼻子被晒到脱皮！他们吃得真多，睡得也多，双腿交缠着，睡在那么大一一张羽毛褥子上……想到伊莎贝尔若是知道自己的这番多愁善感会有多惊恐，威廉不由得冷冷一笑。

“喂，威廉！”她果然在车站，正如他料想的那样，站得稍微离其他人远一些。威廉的心怦怦直跳——她是一个人。

“哎，伊莎贝尔！”威廉盯着她，觉得她看起来真漂亮。他得说点儿什么，“你真好看。”

“是吗？”伊莎贝尔说，“我倒不怎么觉得。快点，你那趟讨厌的列车晚点。出租车都在外面等着啦。”经过检票员身边时，她把手轻轻放在他胳膊上，“我们都来接你了，”她说，“不过，得去糖果店接博比·凯恩，我们把他留在那儿了。”

“哦！”威廉说。目前，他也只能说出这么多了。

等候的出租车开着灯。炫目的强光中，比尔·亨特和丹尼斯·格林伸开四肢摊在一边，帽子歪扣在脸上。另一边，莫伊拉·莫里森戴着顶活像巨大草莓的软帽，上蹿下跳。

“没有冰！没有冰！没有冰！”她快活地叫道。

丹尼斯附和的声音从帽子下传来：“只有鱼贩子那里能搞到冰。”

比尔·亨特冒出头，补充道：“里头还有一整条鱼呢。”

“噢，真讨厌！”伊莎贝尔哀号道。她跟威廉解释，说等待期间，几人如何如何满城找冰，“就是从黄油开始，一切都走起了下坡路。”

“我们将来得用黄油给自己行涂油礼了。”丹尼斯说，“威廉，愿汝之头，不会缺少油膏。”

“嗨，”威廉说，“我们怎么坐？我最好还是坐司机旁边吧。”

“不，博比·凯恩坐司机旁边，”伊莎贝尔说，“你坐莫伊拉和我中间。”出租车启动了，“那些神秘包裹里装的什么？”

“被砍——下——的人头！”比尔·亨特边说，边在帽子下瑟瑟发

抖。

“噢，是水果！”伊莎贝尔听起来很高兴，“明智的威廉！一个甜瓜和一个菠萝，真是太棒啦！”

“别，等一会儿，”威廉笑着说。不过，他其实很紧张，“这是我给孩子们买的。”

“噢，亲爱的！”伊莎贝尔哈哈大笑，伸手挽住他的胳膊，“不行，如果吃掉这些，他们肯定会痛苦得打滚。”她拍拍他的手，“下次你给他们带点儿别的。我拒绝与我的菠萝分开！”

“无情的伊莎贝尔！快让我闻闻它的味儿！”莫伊拉说，一把抱住威廉，哀哀地唤了声“噢！”，草莓女帽朝前掉下去，让她的声音也变得模糊不清。

“一位爱上了菠萝的夫人。”丹尼斯说。出租车停在一家带条纹遮帘的小店前。博比·凯恩抱着满怀小包裹走出来。

“真希望这些都不错，我是按颜色挑的。有些圆圆的东西看起来棒极了。瞧瞧这牛轧糖！”他欣喜若狂地嚷道，“快瞧瞧！优雅得跟芭蕾舞似的！”

可就在这时，店员走了出来。“噢！我忘了！这些都还没付钱。”博比说，一副挺害怕的样子。伊莎贝尔给了店员一张钞票，博比又喜笑颜开起来，“你好，威廉！我坐司机旁边。”于是，一身白衣，光着脑袋的他把袖子卷到肩膀上，一下子跳进座位，大喊道：“前进 [3] ！”

茶点后，趁其他人去游泳，威廉留下来跟孩子们讲和。不过，约翰尼和帕迪已经睡着了，天光那玫瑰般的红色渐暗，蝙蝠也已经出洞，游泳的人们尚未归来。威廉溜达到楼下时，女仆正拿着一盏灯穿过门厅。他跟着她进了客厅。客厅很长，漆成了黄色。威廉对面的墙上有人画了个比真人还大的年轻人：那人颤着双腿，正向一位年轻女士献上一朵大眼菊。那女人一只胳膊很短，另一只却又细又长。椅子和沙发上挂了很多黑色的布条，上面溅满了碎鸡蛋似的痕迹。无论往哪儿看，似乎都能看到装满烟蒂的烟灰缸。威廉在其中的一张扶手椅里坐下。如今，即便伸手探向身侧，似乎也不会从这个“诺亚方舟”上触碰到一只三条腿的羊、少了一边犄角的牛抑或是肥鸽子；只可能是再捞起一本看起来满是污秽诗歌的平装小书……他想起内袋里的那沓报纸，但饥饿和疲惫让他无心去读。门开了，声音从厨房传出。仆人们旁若无人地说着话，仿佛整座房子里只有他们。突然，传来一阵刺耳的大笑，接着是同样大声的嘘，仆人们终于想起他也在。威廉起身，经过落地窗，走进花园。站在阴影里，他听见去游泳的几人走上沙土路，他们的说话声打破了沉寂。

“我想，得靠莫伊拉耍耍小聪明啦。”

莫伊拉哀叹一声。

“我们周末应该搞台能放《群山少女》的留声机。”

“噢，不！噢，不！”伊莎贝尔嚷道，“那对威廉不公平。伙计们，对他好点儿！他就待到明天傍晚。”

“把他交给我吧，”博比·凯恩大声说，“我特别擅长照顾人。”

门开了又关。威廉走上阳台，几人看见了他。“你好啊，威廉！”博比·凯恩甩着毛巾，在干枯的草坪上跳跃、踮着脚尖旋转，“威廉，你没来真遗憾。那水真是棒极啦！之后我们又去了一家小酒吧，喝黑刺李金酒。”

其他人都走到房子跟前。“喂，伊莎贝尔，”博比大声说，“我今晚穿尼金斯基裙怎么样？”

“不，”伊莎贝尔说，“没人需要盛装打扮。我们快饿死啦。威廉也饿了。来吧，朋友们 [4]，去吃沙丁鱼。”

“沙丁鱼是我找到的！”莫伊拉高举着一个盒子，冲进门厅。

“一位拿着盒沙丁鱼的夫人。”丹尼斯严肃地说。

“威廉，伦敦怎么样？”比尔·亨特问。他正在拔一瓶威士忌的软木塞。

“噢，伦敦没多大变化。”威廉回答。

“美好的老伦敦。”博比边戳沙丁鱼，边十分真诚地说。

但不一会儿，大家便把威廉抛到了脑后。莫伊拉·莫里森开始琢磨一个人的腿在水下到底是什么颜色。

“我的是最浅、最浅的蘑菇色。”

比尔和丹尼斯只顾大口大口地狼吞虎咽。伊莎贝尔替大家斟满酒杯、更换盘子、寻找火柴，笑得非常开心。有一次，她说：“比尔，我真心希望你能把它画下来。”

“把什么画下来？”比尔大声问，满嘴都是面包。

“我们呀，”伊莎贝尔说，“围坐一桌的样子。再过二十年来看，一定非常迷人。”

比尔眯起眼，边嚼东西边粗鲁地说：“灯光不对，太黄了。”说完，他便继续大吃起来。可就是这副样子，伊莎贝尔似乎也很着迷。

但晚饭后，大家累得除了打哈欠，其他什么也没做。等天色足够

晚，他们便上床睡觉了……

第二天下午，威廉直到等出租车时，才得以跟伊莎贝尔独处。他把行李箱搬进门厅，伊莎贝尔离开其他人，走到他面前。她俯身提起行李箱。“真够沉的呀！”她有些尴尬地笑了笑，“我来拿吧！我帮你提到门口。”

“不用了，怎么能让你提呢？”威廉说，“怎么也不该你来提，快给我。”

“噢，请让我提吧，”伊莎贝尔说，“我想提，真的。”两人默默地朝前走，威廉觉得这会儿没什么好说的。

“到啦。”伊莎贝尔洋洋得意地说，放下手提箱，焦急地望向沙土路，“这次我似乎都没怎么见到你。”她喘着气说，“真是太短了，不是吗？我觉得你才刚来。下次——”出租车开进了视野，“希望伦敦的那些人能好好照顾你。抱歉孩子们整天都在外面，但那是尼尔小姐早就安排好的。他们肯定会特别遗憾没有见到你。可怜的威廉，这就要回伦敦了。”出租车掉了个头，“再见！”她匆匆吻了他一下，便离开了。

田野、树木和篱笆不断闪过。他们摇摇晃晃地穿过空旷晦暗的小镇，开上车站所在的陡坡。列车已经进站。威廉径直走向头等座的吸烟室，一屁股坐进角落。不过，这次他没去管那些报纸。他交叠双臂，用以抵抗那钝钝的、持续不断的啃噬感，开始在脑中给伊莎贝尔写信。

和往常一样，邮件又晚了。他们坐在屋外彩色阳伞下的长椅里。只有博比·凯恩躺在伊莎贝尔脚边的草坪上。空气沉闷又压抑，这天就如一面低垂的旗帜，丧失了活力。

“你们觉得，天堂里会有周一吗？”博比孩子气地问道。

丹尼斯嘀咕道：“天堂就是漫长的周一。”

但伊莎贝尔忍不住琢磨：昨天晚上大家吃的鲑鱼到底去哪儿了。她本想午餐吃蛋黄酱鱼，可现在……

莫伊拉已经睡着。睡觉是她的最新发现。“真是太棒了。只需闭上眼睛就行。无比美妙。”

当面色红润的邮差骑着三轮车，沿沙土路有节奏地驶来时，让人觉得那车把手真该变成船桨。

比尔·亨特放下书。“信来了。”他殷勤地说。然而，没心肝的邮差，噢，多恶毒的世界呀！只有一封信，一封厚厚的、寄给伊莎贝尔的信。此外连份报纸都没有。

“只有威廉会给我写信。”伊莎贝尔悲伤地说。

“威廉……这么快？”

“他是把结婚证书作为委婉的提醒，寄回来了吧。”

“每个人都有结婚证书吗？我还以为只有仆人们才有。”

“一页又一页！瞧瞧她！一位读信的夫人。”丹尼斯说。

亲爱的、珍贵的伊莎贝尔。威廉的信写了一页又一页。伊莎贝尔读着读着，惊讶渐渐变成窒息。到底是什么引得威廉……这封信可太奇特了……是什么让他……她觉得困惑，也越来越激动，甚至感到害怕。威廉就是这样，不是吗？真荒谬，这当然很荒谬，太可笑了。“哈哈！噢，天哪！”她在干什么呀？伊莎贝尔猛地靠回到椅子上，哈哈大笑，一直笑到不得不停下来为止。

“快，告诉我们。”其他人说，“你一定要告诉我们。”

“我正准备说呢。”伊莎贝尔咯咯笑着说。她坐直身子，拿起信，冲他们挥了挥，“快过来，”她说，“听着，它棒极了，是封情书！”

“一封情书！多棒呀！”亲爱的伊莎贝尔。可她刚开始，就被他们的笑声打断了。

“继续，伊莎贝尔，它非常完美。”

“简直是最了不起的发现。”

“噢，伊莎贝尔，一定要念下去！”

上帝保佑，亲爱的，你追求快乐时，我应该成了你的累赘吧。

“噢！噢！噢！”

“嘘！嘘！嘘！”

伊莎贝尔继续念着。等她念完，所有人都几近疯狂：博比在草地上滚来滚去，几乎啜泣起来。

“你一定得让我把它原封不动地写进新书，整篇都要写进去，”丹尼斯坚定地说，“我可以给它整整一章。”

“噢，伊莎贝尔，”莫伊拉呻吟道，“他把你搂在怀中那段，真是妙极了。”

“我一直以为，离婚案子里提到的这种信件都是瞎编的。但在这封信面前，它们简直都显得苍白无力啦。”

“给我。让我瞧瞧，我亲自读一读。”博比·凯恩说。

然而，让他们吃惊的是，伊莎贝尔把信揉成了一团。她不再大笑，反而飞快地瞥了一眼所有人，显得非常疲惫。“不，现在还不

行，现在还不行。”她结结巴巴地说。

没等他们反应过来，她已经穿过门厅冲进屋子，爬上楼梯，回到自己的卧室。她坐在床边。“真恶毒、真可憎、太糟糕、太粗鲁了。”伊莎贝尔嘟囔道。她用指关节按了按眼睛，前后晃动着身子。然后，她又看见了他们，但并非四个，更像是四十个，在她读威廉来信时，伸出双手，一脸讥讽、嘲笑和奚落。噢，她做了件多么令人憎恶的事！她怎么能做这种事！上帝保佑，亲爱的，你追求快乐时，我应该成了你的累赘吧。威廉！伊莎贝尔把脸埋进枕头。可她觉得，甚至沉重的卧室都知道，她是一个多么肤浅、虚荣的无用之人……

这时，楼下花园传来呼喊声。

“伊莎贝尔，我们要去游泳了。快来！”

“威廉之妻，快来呀！”

“走之前再叫她一次，再叫一次！”

伊莎贝尔坐起身。就是现在，现在她必须做出决定。是跟他们去，还是留在这儿给威廉写信？应该做哪样？“我得做决定了。”噢，但怎么可能还有任何疑问？她当然要留在这儿写信。

“缇坦妮雅！”莫伊拉尖声叫道。

“伊莎——贝尔？”

不，这事太难了。“我……我要跟他们去，待会儿再给威廉写信吧。另外找时间写。待会儿。现在不写。不过，我肯定会写的。”伊莎贝尔匆匆想。

于是，她用自己那焕然一新的方式，哈哈大笑着跑下楼去。

布里尔小姐

蓝天上铺散着金色，大片的光斑落在市政公园，像白葡萄酒溅在地上。虽然天气这么好，布里尔小姐还是很高兴戴上了毛皮围脖。尽管空气里一丝风也没有，但一张开嘴，便能感觉到淡淡的凉意——好似啜饮冰水前，会感觉到的那种凉意。而且，天上时不时就不知从哪儿飘下来一片树叶。布里尔小姐抬起手，摸了摸毛皮围脖。多可爱的小东西呀！再次摸到它的感觉真棒。这天下午，她才从盒子里把它拿出来，抖掉防蛀粉，好好地刷了一番，让那双昏暗的小眼睛重新焕发生气。那双忧伤的小眼睛仿佛在问：“我怎么了？”噢，又看到那双眼睛从红鸭绒垫中冲自己眨动，真是太甜美了！但那个用某种黑色材料做的鼻子，却不怎么牢固了。一定是不知怎的，被撞了一下。没关系，到时候……等非修补不可的时候，用一点儿黑色封蜡就行……小淘气鬼！没错，她真觉得这东西是个小淘气鬼。它正在她左耳旁咬自己的尾巴呢。她可以把它取下来，放在膝上抚摸。她感觉双手和胳膊一阵刺痛，但她想多半是走路的缘故。呼吸间，某种轻柔伤感——不，不能说伤感——是某种柔和的东西，似乎在胸中游走。

今天下午出来的人，比上周日多得多。乐队的声音也更大、更欢快。因为，演出季开始了。虽然一年到头，每周日乐队都会演奏，但非演出季期间，乐音绝对跟现在不同。那时，乐队仿佛只演奏给自家听。也就是说，没有外人在场的情况下，它才不在乎到底演奏得如何。指挥似乎也换了件新外套，不是吗？布里尔小姐非常肯定，那衣服就是新的。指挥脚擦着地面，挥舞着双臂，活像一只即将打鸣的大公鸡。乐队成员坐在绿色的圆形乐池里，鼓着腮帮，目光炯炯地瞪着乐谱。听，现在开始了柔和和清亮的一段——真美呀！一小串明亮欢快的调子。布里尔小姐觉得，这段肯定还会再奏一次。果不其然。她扬起头，笑了。

只有两个人跟她分享“专座”：一个是穿天鹅绒外套、双手紧紧攥着根大雕花手杖的和善老头；还有一个是坐得笔直、绣花围裙上放了团毛线的大个子老太太。他们都不说话。真扫兴！因为布里尔小姐向来期望交谈。她觉得，自己真的已经成为这方面的专家：坐在交谈的人们中间，若无其事地偷听，融入他们的生活，哪怕只是一会儿也行。

她斜瞥了一眼那对老人。或许，他们很快就会离开。上周日也不像平常一样有趣。那天，旁边是个英国人和他的妻子。男的戴了顶非常难看的巴拿马帽，女的则穿了双带扣长筒靴。其间她一直在不停地该戴眼镜，说尽管知道需要眼镜，但不管买哪种，肯定都会摔碎，也多半戴不了多久，所以买了也不会有什么好处。男人始终都很有耐心，提出各种建议：金边的、镜腿弯曲，能挂在耳朵上的，或鼻梁架内侧带小衬垫的。不，任何一款都无法让她满意。“眼镜总会从我鼻子上滑下去！”布里尔小姐真想使劲摇她几下。

那对老人仍像雕塑一样坐在长凳上。没关系，总有人群可以观察。花坛和乐队所在的圆形乐池前，一对对情侣和三五成群的人来来往往，或驻足交谈，或互相问候，要么就是从老乞丐手中买一把花。乞丐行乞的浅盘固定在栏杆上。小孩嬉笑着，在人群中蹿来蹿去。小男孩脖子上系着大大的丝绸领结，法国洋娃娃般的小女孩们则穿着天鹅绒和蕾丝衣服。有时，一个蹒跚学步的小家伙突然从树下摇摇摆摆地走出来，又突然停住脚步，瞪着眼睛，啪的一声坐到地上，直到娇小的妈妈迈开大步，如小母鸡般冲出来，骂骂咧咧地去救他。其他人则坐在长凳或绿椅上，一个又一个周日过去，几乎总是老样子。布里尔小姐常常发现，差不多所有人都有些可笑之处。他们古怪、沉默，几乎都是老人。那副凝望着某处的神情，仿佛他们刚从某个幽暗的小房间出来，或者……甚至刚从壁橱里出来。

圆形乐池后，纤长的树枝叶低垂。透过那些黄叶，能看到一线大海。海的后面是蓝色的天幕，隐约透着金光的云朵飘散其上。

当当当，嘀嗒！嘀嗒！嗒嘀嗒嘀嗒！乐队开始演奏。

两位红衣女郎走过，迎向两个穿蓝军装的小伙。四人欢笑着，凑成对儿，手挽手地走了。两个戴着滑稽草帽的农妇牵着漂亮的烟灰色毛驴，神色凝重地走了过去。一个面色苍白、神情冰冷的修女匆匆而过。一位漂亮女士走来，掉了一束紫罗兰，一个小男孩追上去，把花捡起来递给她。她接过花，却又扔掉了，仿佛它们已经被下了毒。天哪！布里尔小姐真不知道该不该欣赏这种行为！这时，在她面前，一位戴白鼬皮无檐帽的女士跟一位穿灰衣的绅士碰了头。绅士个头很高，行为拘谨，面色庄严。而那位夫人戴的白鼬皮无檐帽，是她在头发曾经金黄时买的。现在，她的头发、脸，甚至眼睛，一切都跟那顶破旧的白鼬皮帽一样，变成了灰色。她抬起戴着干净手套的手，轻轻拍了下嘴唇。如今，那只手也变成细小的黄爪了。噢，见到他，她真高兴，简直太高兴了！她就知道下午会碰上他。她绘声绘色地讲述自己去过哪儿，每一处都讲，这儿，那儿，还有沿着海边走的情景。今天天气可真不错啊，对吧？或许，他不这样认为？……可他摇摇头，点燃一支烟，慢悠悠地朝她的脸深深喷了一大口。而在她说笑着

时，他就把火柴棒一弹，继续朝前走了。只剩下戴白鼬皮无檐帽的夫人。她的笑容比任何时候都灿烂，但即便乐队，似乎也知道她是什么感觉，乐音变得更加轻柔舒缓。只有大鼓一遍又一遍地敲出：“狠心的人！狠心的人！”她要怎么做？接下来会发生什么？然而，布里尔小姐正在纳闷时，戴白鼬皮无檐帽的夫人已经抬起手，仿佛见到了什么更有趣的人；就这样，她脚步轻快地走开了。乐音再次改变，变得前所未有的快，也更活泼了。跟布里尔小姐同坐的那对老人站起身，大步离开了。那长胡子老头真好笑，虽走得一瘸一拐，却正好和上节拍，还差点儿被并排走来的四个女孩撞倒。

噢，这一切真迷人！她好享受呀！她喜欢坐在这儿，观察周遭的一切！多像一出戏剧。这就是一出戏剧。谁能相信后面的天空不是画出来的？但直到一只棕色小狗隆重地快步跑来，接着又如“剧场”小狗，一只仿佛被下了药的小家伙般，慢悠悠地跑开，布里尔小姐才恍然大悟，到底是什么让这一切如此激动人心——他们都在舞台上。他们不仅是观众，不但在看戏，也在演戏。即便她，也扮演了其中的一个角色，每周日都来。毫无疑问，她要是没来，肯定会有人注意到。终究，她也是剧中的一员。真奇怪，以前怎么没注意到这点？难怪她每周都要同一时间从家里出发——演出不能迟到啊！难怪跟她的英国小孩们讲起自己周日下午如何度过时，她会生出那般古怪又羞涩的感觉。难怪呀！布里尔小姐差点儿大笑出声。她在舞台上。她想起自己每周都花四个下午，给一位躺在花园里的病弱老绅士读报。她已经相当习惯那颗躺在棉枕上的虚弱脑袋、那双凹陷的眼睛、张开的嘴和高挺清瘦的鼻子。他如果死了，她或许好几个星期都不会注意到，也不会在意。但突然间，他知道是个女演员在给自己读报。“女演员！”苍老的头抬起，年迈的眼中两点光芒闪动，“你是——一个女演员吗？”布里尔小姐抚平报纸，仿佛那是她的台词本。然后，她温柔地说：“嗯，我当女演员已经很久啦。”

乐队已经停了一会儿，此刻又开始演奏，声音听上去温暖、和煦，却透着一丝凉意——那是什么呢？不是忧伤，不，不是忧伤，而是某种让人想放声歌唱的东西。调子越来越高，越来越高，灯亮了。布里尔小姐觉得，下一刻，所有人，整个剧团，都会开始歌唱。年轻人、欢笑着的同行之人会首先唱起来，男士们勇敢坚定的声音也会加入其中。然后，她，她也会，以及其他坐在长椅上的人，都会以伴唱的形式加入。那声音低低的，几乎没有高低起伏，那么美……那么动人……布里尔小姐热泪盈眶，微笑着看向剧团的其他成员。是的，我们理解，我们明白。她这么想着——尽管她并不知道大家究竟明白了什么。

就在这时，一个姑娘和一个小伙子走过来，坐在刚才那对老人的位置上。他们穿得很漂亮，显然正在热恋中。当然，这就是男女主人

公。他们刚刚走下男方父亲的游艇。布里尔小姐仍在无声地歌唱，也仍挂着颤抖的笑容，准备倾听他们的谈话。

“不，现在不行，”姑娘说，“别在这儿，我不行。”

“为什么不行？因为那边那个愚蠢的老家伙吗？”小伙问，“她干吗到这儿来？谁会想让她来啊？这愚蠢的老太太干吗不留在家里？”

“她的毛……毛皮围脖真滑稽，”女孩咯咯笑着说，“简直像条炸牙鳕。”

“嘿，赶紧滚吧！”小伙子气鼓鼓地嘀咕道，然后又说，“告诉我吧，亲爱的小——”

“不，这儿不行。”女孩接着说，“现在还不行。”

回家的路上，她通常会在面包店买一片蜂蜜蛋糕，作为周日对自己的特别款待。有时，这片面包里会有一颗杏仁，有时没有。有或没有，差别可大了。这样一颗杏仁，就像带回家的一份小礼物、一个惊喜，是某种完全有可能不出现的东西。有杏仁的周日，她都会匆匆赶回家，精力充沛地划燃火柴，烧好茶水。

今天，她却没去面包店，反而爬上楼梯，走进又黑又小的房间——一个壁橱一般的房间。她坐在红鸭绒垫上，坐了很长时间。放毛皮围脖的盒子就在床上。她飞快地解下围脖，看也没看，就放进盒里。然而，关上盖子时，她觉得，自己听见什么东西在哭。

陌生人

码头上的那一小群人觉得，它似乎永远都不会动了。它静静地躺在涟漪阵阵的灰色水面，那般庞大，一动不动。一圈烟雾在它上空缭绕不去，一大群海鸥尖叫着，冲向船尾排出的厨房残渣。你只能看见船上的人们走来走去，像一群苍蝇围着灰色桌布上的菜肴上下飞动。其他苍蝇则聚集在栏杆边。下层甲板闪过一道白光，可能是厨师或女服务员的围裙。某位乘客像一只黑色小蜘蛛，顺着梯子，飞快地朝驾驶台走去。

人群前方，有个看上去很壮实的中年男子。他穿着不凡，一身灰色大衣，围着灰色丝绸围巾，戴着厚厚的手套和深色软帽。他转着一把折叠起来的雨伞，大踏步地走来走去。看起来，他似乎是码头上这一小群人的首领，起到了将众人聚集起来的作用，效果介乎牧羊犬和牧羊人之间。

但他多傻啊，真是个大傻瓜，居然没有带望远镜！而且，这一群人里，竟然找不出一副望远镜。

“真奇怪，斯科特先生，我们竟然谁都没想到要带副望远镜。原本可以激起一点儿船上的反应，想办法给他们点儿信号也行啊。说‘别迟疑，请靠岸，当地人并无恶意’或者‘大伙正在欢迎你们。全部赦免！’怎样？呃？”

哈蒙德先生急切地瞥了一眼，眼神虽然十分紧张，却也非常友善、充满信任。他的眼神扫过码头上的每一个人，甚至包括懒懒靠在舷梯上的那几个老伙计。他们知道，每个人都知道，哈蒙德太太也在那艘船上。他如此激动，以至于从未怀疑：这个惊人的事实对码头上的每个人也意义非凡。这个事实温暖了他的心，让他更贴近他们。他断定，他们就是一群体面的人。舷梯旁那几个老伙计也是善良、可靠的人。天哪，那是怎样的胸膛啊！他挺起胸膛，把戴着厚手套的双手插进衣兜，掂着脚跟来回晃悠。

“是啊，过去的十个月，我太太一直待在欧洲。我们的大女儿去年结婚，她去探望她。当时，我亲自把她送到克劳福德这么远的地方。所以，我想，我最好还是到这儿来接她回去。嗯，是啊，没错。”精明的灰眸再次眯起，焦急又快速地搜寻那艘一动不动的班轮。他的大衣又没扣扣子。那块细小的奶油黄色的怀表再次被掏出

来。他第二十次……第五十次……第一百次地计算起来。

“让我想想……医生的汽艇两点十五分出发。现在刚好四点二十八分。那就是说，医生已经离开两小时十三分钟了。两小时又十三分钟呀！哟嗬！”他发出一声类似口哨的奇怪嘘声，啪地再次合上表盖，“但我认为，如果发生了什么事，应该会告诉我们的。你说对吗，加文先生。”

“噢，是呀，哈蒙德先生！我不觉得有什么……有什么值得担心的，”加文先生说着，在鞋跟上敲熄了烟斗，“与此同时——”

“的确如此！一点儿没错！”哈蒙德先生大声说，“真烦人！”他快速地走来走去，又在斯科特夫妇和加文先生间停了下来，“而且，天色越来越黑了。”他挥舞着那把折叠起来的伞，仿佛黄昏至少可以礼貌地回避一下。然而，暮色仍旧缓缓降临，如一块污渍，在水面缓缓晕开。小琼·斯科特拉了拉妈妈的手。

“我要喝茶，妈妈！”她哭喊道。

“我就知道你喝茶了，”哈蒙德先生说，“我看，所有女士都想喝茶了吧。”他友善、热切、几近慈悲的一瞥再次扫过众人。他想知道，珍妮是否正在那边客轮的交谊厅喝最后一杯茶。尽管希望如此，但他知道她不会。以她的性格，她不会离开甲板。那样的话，船上的服务员或许会给她送去一杯。不管怎样，他要是在那儿，一定设法亲自给她弄一杯。一时间，他仿佛已经上了甲板，站在她身边，以自己特有的方式俯视她，伸出小手握住杯子，喝着船上最后一杯茶……但此时此刻，他却在这儿。天知道那个该死的船长要在水中徘徊到什么时候。他又转过身，前前后后地走来走去。他一直走到出租车停车场，确定自己的车夫还在，才猛一转身，走向人群中。那些人在一箱箱的香蕉下挤作一团。小琼·斯科特仍吵着要喝茶。可怜的小家伙！他希望他身上揣了一块巧克力。

“过来，琼！”他说，“想举高高吗？”他温柔又轻巧地举起小女孩，放在一个高一些的木桶上。抱起她，把她扶稳的过程，竟奇妙地让他轻松了不少。

“坐稳啦！”他说，伸出一只胳膊稳住她。

“噢，不用担心琼，哈蒙德先生！”斯科特太太说。

“没关系，斯科特太太，一点儿也不麻烦。我很乐意。琼是我的小伙伴，是吗，琼？”

“嗯，哈蒙德先生。”琼边说边伸出手指，在他帽檐的凹陷处游走。

她却突然抓住他的耳朵，大声叫着：“看，哈蒙德先生！它动了！看，它进港了！”

天哪！真的动了。终于动了！它慢慢地、慢慢地掉转头。水面上远远传来铃声，一大股蒸汽冲入空中。海鸥拍打着翅膀，如一张张白纸屑般飞了起来。那低沉的震动究竟是来自引擎的轰鸣，还是他的心，哈蒙德先生已经说不清。不管那是什么，他都得鼓起勇气，才能承受住。这时，老船长——如今的港务长约翰逊先生胳膊下夹着个皮公文包，沿着码头大步走来。

“琼没事的，”斯科特先生说，“我来扶住她。”他来得正是时候。哈蒙德先生彻底忘了琼，快步冲上前，去迎接约翰逊老船长。

“呀，船长！”紧张又热切的声音再次响起，“你终于对我们开恩了呀。”

“哈蒙德先生，怪我可没用，”约翰逊老船长喘着气，盯着班轮说，“哈蒙德太太在船上，是吧？”

“是啊，是啊！”哈蒙德说。他始终站在港务长身边，“哈蒙德太太在那儿。哈——喽！我们现在不用等太久啦！”

巨大的班轮，在船上的叮零零响个不停的电话声中，在水拍击船体的海浪声中，重重地向他们压过来。船头劈开幽暗的水面，海水在两侧卷起大片大片的白色浪花。哈蒙德和港务长始终站在众人前头。哈蒙德摘下帽子，目光在甲板上来回搜寻——那儿挤满乘客。他挥舞着帽子，朝着对面大声呼喊“哈——喽！”，他转过身来，放声大笑，对着约翰逊老船长说着——不，什么也没说。

“看见她了吗？”港务长问。

“不，还没。冷静——等一等！”突然，在两个傻大个中间——“喂，走开，别挡道！”他用雨伞示意。然后，他看见一只手举了起来——那是一只戴着白手套的手，正在挥舞一块手帕。又过了一会儿……谢天谢地，谢天谢地！她在那儿！那就是珍妮，是哈蒙德太太，没错，是她，就是她！正站在栏杆边，微笑点头，挥舞着她的手帕。

“呀，那是头等舱——头等舱！哎呀呀！”他肯定地跺了跺脚，闪电般抽出雪茄盒，递给约翰逊老船长，“船长，来根雪茄！相当不错呢！来两根！给！”他把所有雪茄都塞进港务长的烟盒，“我旅馆还有几盒。”

“谢谢，哈蒙德先生！”约翰逊老船长喘着气说。

哈蒙德把烟盒塞回去，虽然手抖个不停，他还是稳住了自己。他

可以看向珍妮了！她就在那儿，倚在栏杆上，边跟一位女士说话，边看着他，随时准备迎接他。看着水面上的鸿沟合拢，他突然觉得站在那样巨大的船上，她显得多么娇小。他的心一阵绞痛，差点儿喊出声来。如此娇小的她，竟千里迢迢地独自来回！不过，她就是这样的人。这样才像她。她的勇气就像——此刻，船员已经上前，他们和乘客告别，降低栏杆，放下舷梯。

岸上的声音和船上的声音响起，互相问候。

“一切还好吗？”

“一切都好！”

“妈妈怎么样？”

“好多了！”

“你好，珍妮！”

“你好，埃米莉姨妈！”

“旅途还愉快吧？”

“棒极了！”

“现在用不了多久啦！”

“现在快了。”

引擎停了。船身缓缓靠近码头侧边。

“让一让，让一让，让一让！”码头工人扛着沉重的舷梯，飞快地跑了过来。哈蒙德示意珍妮待在原地。老港务长走上前，他跟在后面，完全忽略了“女士优先”之类的废话。

“您先请，船长！”他亲切地大声说道。然后，紧跟在老人身后，他顺着舷梯，大步跨上甲板，径直奔向珍妮，将她紧紧揽入怀中。

“呀，呀，呀！嗯，是呀！我们终于见面了！”他结结巴巴地念叨着，到头来也只说得出了这些话了。珍妮抬起头。用她冷淡细弱的声音，这世界上于他唯一的声响，对他说：“呀，亲爱的！你等很久了吧？”

不，没多久。或者说，不管等多久都没关系。反正，现在也等到你啦。但问题是，他还让一辆马车等在码头。她准备好出发了吗？行李到了吗？如果都准备好了，他们可以直接带着她的随身行李先走，剩下的行李丢到明天再说。他低头看向她，她仰头看他，脸上仍是熟悉的微笑。她还跟从前一样，一点儿也没变，完全是他熟悉的样子。她把小手放到他衣袖上。

“约翰，孩子们怎么样？”她问。

（去他的孩子们！）“好极了。好得不能再好了。”

“他们没给我写信吗？”

“写了，写了，当然写了！我把信留在旅馆了，你待会儿再细看吧。”

“我们不能这么快就走，”她说，“我还得跟几个人道别……最后跟船长道别。”见他沉下脸来，她了然地轻轻拧了他胳膊一把，“船长要是从驾驶台出来，希望你好好感谢人家，把你妻子照顾得如此周到。”好吧，他已经接到她。如果她想再等十分钟……他让步后，她立刻就被包围了。似乎整个头等舱的人，都想跟珍妮道别。

“再见，哈蒙德太太！我可盼着你下次来悉尼做客哦！”

“亲爱的哈蒙德太太！你不会忘了给我写信，是吧？”

“噢，哈蒙德太太，少了你，真不知道这艘船会怎么样！”

显而易见，她是船上最受欢迎的女人。她也一如既往地接受了这一切，沉着冷静，丝毫不乱。这就是小小的珍妮，真真切切的珍妮——掀开面纱，站在那里。哈蒙德从未注意过妻子的穿着。他觉得，她无论穿什么都一样。今天，他却注意到她穿了一身黑“套装”——他们是这么叫的吧？领口和袖口有白色褶边，他想，那些多半叫“饰边”。这期间，珍妮已经领着他转了一圈。

“约翰，亲爱的！”她接着说，“我来给你介绍一下……”

最后，他们终于逃离。她领着他一路去了自己的包厢。跟着珍妮走在这些她如此熟悉，他却非常陌生的走廊上，又跟着她挑开绿门帘，踏进她的舱房，感觉真快活呀。可是——真讨厌！女乘务员正蹲在地上滚地毯。

“这是最后一块了，哈蒙德太太。”女乘务员边说，边站起身，扯下袖口。

他又被介绍了一遍。珍妮和女乘务员没入过道。他听见耳语声。他想，她估计在结小费。他坐在条纹沙发上，摘掉帽子。那些是她随身带的小地毯，看起来都跟新的一样。她的所有行李都干净整洁。标签上是她清晰漂亮的小字“约翰·哈蒙德太太”。

“约翰·哈蒙德太太！”他长长地舒了口气，双臂交叉，满足地往后靠去。终于不再紧张。他觉得，自己可以永远这么坐下去，在摆脱了心上那种可怕的拉扯感之后，如释重负地叹息。危险已经过去。就是这感觉。他们又踏上了陆地。

可就在这时，珍妮的头从屋角探进来。

“亲爱的，我想去跟医生道个别，你不会介意吧？”

哈蒙德一下子跳起来。“我跟你一起去。”

“不，不，”她说，“不用麻烦。我想自己去，用不了多久。”

他还没来得及回答，她已经走了。他有点儿想追上去，但还是坐了回来。

她真的去不了多久吗？现在几点了？他掏出怀表，却什么也没看进去。珍妮这举动很奇怪，不是吗？干吗不让女乘务员代为告别呢？干吗非要自己追着船上的医生跑？就算事情要紧，她也可以从旅馆寄张便条过去。要紧？这是说——这是说她在旅途中病了？她是不是有事瞒着他？原来如此！他抓起帽子，决定立马去找那家伙。要不惜一切代价，逼问出真相！他觉得，自己刚才应该已经注意到什么了，她太冷静、太沉着。从一开始——

门帘响动。珍妮回来了。他立马站了起来。

“珍妮，你在途中病了？是吗！”

“病了？”她轻飘飘的声音嘲笑着他。她跨过地毯，走到他跟前，伸手碰着他的胸口，抬头看向他。

“亲爱的，”她说，“别吓我，我当然没生病。你为何会这么想？我看起来不健康吗？”

但哈蒙德并未看她。只要感觉到她在看自己，他就觉得没什么可担忧的。她在这儿料理事情。没关系。一切正常。

她的手轻轻按在他身上，感觉那般平静。他也把手放上去，将她的手握在自己心口。她说：“站着别动。我想看看你。我还没好好看过你呢。你的胡子刮得真漂亮，看起来——更年轻了。明显瘦了不少！单身汉生活很适合你呀。”

“很适合我！”他充满爱意地感叹道，又紧紧拥住她。一如既往，他再次觉得自己搂住了某样永远也不会属于自己的东西。她太脆弱、太珍贵，一旦放手，就会飞走。

“看在上帝的分儿上，我们赶紧出发去旅馆吧。这样，咱俩才能单独在一起呀！”他用力摇铃，叫人快点儿来看行李。

她挽着他的胳膊，跟他一起走过码头。他又可以让她挽着自己了。跟着珍妮上车，感觉都不一样了。他用红黄条纹的毯子把两人裹住，催促车夫加快速度，因为他们都还没喝茶。再也不用过没茶喝，或者得自己给自己倒茶喝的日子了。她回来了。他转向她，紧紧握着

她的手，温柔地打趣，仍是面对她才会用的那种“特别”声音：“回家很开心吧，亲爱的？”她笑了，没有费心回答，而是在马车行驶到更明亮的街后，轻轻推开了他的手。

“我们已经订下旅馆最好的房间。”他说，“用别的房间敷衍我可不行。我已经叫女服务员送了一小盆火进去，以免你觉得冷。她是个殷勤的好姑娘。我想，既然已经到这儿，不必急着明天回家，可以花一天时间四处转转，后天早晨再走。你觉得怎么样？没必要太赶，对吧？孩子们很快就能见到你……我想，花一天时间观光，也算是在一趟旅程后好好休息一下。对吧，珍妮？”

“你买后天的车票了吗？”她问。

“应该买了吧！”他解开大衣扣子，取出鼓鼓囊囊的随身笔记本，“在这儿！我订了去索尔兹伯里的头等车厢。这儿写着呢——‘约翰·哈蒙德夫妇’。我想，咱们应该坐得舒服些，不要让别人来打扰，不是吗？还是你想在这儿多待几天……”

“噢，不！”珍妮飞快地说，“千万别！就后天走吧。孩子们——”

可是，他们抵达旅馆了。经理原本站在灯火通明的门廊，这会儿也走下来迎接他们。一个搬运工从门厅跑出来，替他们拎箱子。

“呀，哈蒙德先生，哈蒙德太太终于来啦！”

经理亲自领着他们穿过门厅，并按了电梯的铃。哈蒙德知道，几个生意伙伴正在门厅的小桌上餐前小酌。可他不想被打断，所以目不斜视。他们爱怎么想就怎么想好了。如果无法理解，那只能说他们是傻瓜。他走出电梯，打开房间门，护送珍妮进去。门关上了。现在，终于只剩他俩。他打开灯。窗帘已经拉上，炉火燃得正旺。他把帽子扔到那张巨大的床上，朝她走去。

然而——难以置信！他们竟然又被打断。这次，是搬运工送行李来了。他跑了两趟，其间并未关门。那家伙从牙缝里吹着口哨，慢悠悠地穿过走廊。哈蒙德在房间里来回踱步，扯掉手套，又扯掉围巾。最后，他一把将大衣扔到床边。

那蠢货终于走了。门咔哒一声关上。这下，只剩他俩独处了。哈蒙德说：“珍妮，这些该死的家伙，让我觉得似乎永远也无法再拥有你了一样。”他双眼晶亮，目光热切地俯视着她：“我们就在上面吃晚饭吧。如果下去餐厅，肯定会被打扰。而且，那儿的音乐也很讨厌，（昨晚他还盛赞餐厅里的音乐，报以十分响亮的掌声！）想聊聊天都不行。就待楼上，在炉火前吃点什么吧。现在吃下午茶太晚，我订点儿晚餐，好吗？你觉得这主意怎么样？”

“点吧，亲爱的！”珍妮说，“你离开期间……孩子们的信……”

“噢，等会儿看也行。”哈蒙德说。

“那就得等到我们吃完饭，”珍妮说，“我想，首先有空——”

“噢，我不用下楼！”哈蒙德解释道，“按铃就能点菜……你也不想我走开，对吧？”

珍妮摇摇头，笑了。

“可你在想别的事。你在担心。”哈蒙德说，“什么事？过来，坐在这儿。过来坐我腿上，到炉火前待着。”

“我得先取下帽子。”说完，珍妮便朝梳妆台走去，“啊呀！”她轻呼一声。

“怎么了？”

“没什么，亲爱的。我就是找到了孩子们的信。没关系。等会儿再看吧。现在不着急！”她转向他，把攥在手里的信塞进带褶边的衬衫，突然快活地大声说道，“噢，这个梳妆台真是你喜欢的类型！”

“何以见得？它怎么了？”哈蒙德问。

“如果它哪天也开始不断地漂泊，我定要喊它‘约翰！’”珍妮哈哈大笑，盯着一大瓶生发水、柳条筐里的古龙水、两把毛刷、一打粉红色带子捆起来的新领圈，“这就是你全部的行李？”

“别管我的行李啦！”哈蒙德说。但尽管如此，他还是喜欢被珍妮取笑，“我们聊聊吧，坐下来好好聊。告诉我——”珍妮坐到他腿上，他往后一靠，把她拉进那张又深又丑的椅子，“珍妮，告诉我，回来真的让你很高兴。”

“嗯，亲爱的，我很高兴。”她说。

可正如抱着她时觉得她仿佛要飞走一般，哈蒙德从来不知道——始终无法确定，她是否跟自己一样高兴。他怎么知道？他真的会有知道的那天吗？这种渴望、这种不知怎的，类似饥饿的痛感，这种就想让珍妮成为自己的一部分，再也无法逃开的感觉，真的会一直伴随着他吗？他想抹掉所有人、所有事，真希望此时此刻已经关了灯。那样，或许就能将她拉得更近些。此时此刻，孩子们的信在她的衬衫里窸窣作响，真恨不得把它们扔进火里。

“珍妮。”他轻声唤道。

“嗯，亲爱的？”她躺在他胸口，却感觉那么轻、那么遥远。两人的呼吸一起一伏，十分同步。

“珍妮！”

“怎么了？”

“转过来，对着我。”他轻声说，额头缓缓变得绯红，“珍妮，吻我！你吻吻我！”

她的唇坚定而轻柔地落到他唇上前，他似乎感到片刻停顿。对他来说，这短短的一刻已经长得足以成为一种折磨。她像往常那样吻他，可这个吻——该如何形容呢？这个吻进一步确定了他们正在说的话，犹如签订了合同一般。可那不是他想要的，完全不是他心心念念之物。他突然觉得万分疲惫。

“如果你知道，”他睁开眼睛，说，“今天这种等待……是何等滋味。我还以为，船永远不会开进来了。我们不得不一直在那儿徘徊。什么事让你们耽误了那么久？”

她没回答，也没看他，而是盯着炉火。火苗急匆匆地、急匆匆地从煤块间冲出来，摇曳、闪烁，然后坠落。

“你没睡着吧，睡着了吗？”哈蒙德上上下下地摇晃着她，说道。

“没有，”她回答，接着又说，“别这样，亲爱的。我没睡着，事实上，我在思考。”她说，“昨晚，有个乘客死了。一个男人。我们就是被这事耽误了。得把他带回来呀——我的意思是说，没有对他进行海葬。所以，船上的医生和岸上的医生当然都会——”

“什么病？”哈蒙德不自在地问。他讨厌听到死亡，讨厌发生这样的事。这事……听起来真有点儿怪，仿佛他和珍妮在去旅馆的途中遇到一场葬礼似的。

“噢，一点儿都不会传染！”珍妮说，声音几不可闻，“是心脏病。”她顿了顿，接着说，“可怜的人！还相当年轻！”她看着火苗亮起又坠落，“他死在了我怀里。”

这打击如此突然，哈蒙德差点儿晕过去。他无法动弹，不能呼吸，觉得全身的力量正在流逝，流进那张深色的大椅子里。这张深色大椅紧紧抓住他、攥着他，强迫他接受这个事实。

“什么？”他低沉地说，“你说什么？”

“最后相当平静，”那细小的声音说，“他只是——”哈蒙德看见她举起一只温柔的手，“静静地呼吸，直到生命终结。”她的手垂了下去。

“还……还有谁在那儿？”哈蒙德艰难地问出了口。

“没有人。只有我跟他在一起。”

噢，天哪，她在说什么！她对他做了什么！这会杀了他！可是，

她仍一刻不停地讲着：“我发现情况有异，派乘务员去叫医生，医生却来得太迟。不管怎样，他本来也做不了什么。”

“可——为什么是你，怎么是你？”哈蒙德呻吟着。

听到他的声音，珍妮飞快地转过头，在他脸上迅速搜寻起来。

“你不会介意吧，约翰，你介意吗？”她问，“你不会——这跟你我无关啊。”

他设法冲她露出某种笑容，设法结结巴巴地说：“不——继——继续说！我想让你告诉我。”

“可是，约翰，亲爱的——”

“告诉我，珍妮！”

“没什么可说的啊，”她纳闷，“他就是头等舱的一位乘客。我见他上船时就病得厉害……但到昨天那时之前，他看起来都好多了。下午，他的病突然剧烈发作。我想，是因为即将抵岸的兴奋……或紧张吧。那之后，他就再没恢复过来。”

“可女乘务员为什么——”

“噢，天哪，女乘务员！”珍妮说，“那他会作何感想？况且……也或许还想留点遗言给……”

“他没留吗？”哈蒙德嘟囔道，“难道他没说什么？”

“没有，亲爱的，一个字也没说！”她轻轻摇摇头，“我陪着他的时候，他都太虚弱……虚弱得连一根手指头都动不了……”

珍妮沉默了。可她说过话，虽然那般轻柔、那般冰冷，却仿佛始终在空中徘徊，如雪花般落到他胸口。

火已经烧红，尖锐地响了一声后，垮了下去。房间渐渐变冷。凉意爬上他的胳膊。这个房间很大，好似无边无际，还闪闪发光，填满了他的整个世界。这儿有一张挂着帘子的大床。随意丢弃的大衣仿佛一个正在祈祷的无头人，横亘在床上。行李就在那儿，随时可以再次出发。去往任何地方，抛进火车，运上轮船，去哪儿都行。

“他太虚弱……虚弱得连一根手指头都动不了……”他却死在珍妮的怀里。她——这么多年，她……她从没有……一次都没有……

不，他不能这么想。想这些会发疯的。不，他无法面对这种事，无法忍受，完全无法忍受！

这时，珍妮伸出手指，碰到他的领带，把边缘捏到一起。

“你没有……对不起我不该告诉你的，亲爱的约翰？这事没让你

难过吧？它没有破坏我们的夜晚，我们独处的时光吧？”

但此时此刻，他只能藏起脸。他把脸埋进她的胸口，伸手抱住了她。

破坏了他们的夜晚！破坏了他们独处的时光！他们再也没有独处的时光了。

‘And again, as always, he had the feeling he

Something too precious, that once he let go.’

Marriage à la Mode

On his way to the station William remembered with a fresh pang of disappointment that he was taking nothing down to the kiddies. Poor little chaps! It was hard lines on them. Their first words always were as they ran to greet him, 'What have you got for me, daddy?' and he had nothing. He would have to buy them some sweets at the station. But that was what he had done for the past four Saturdays; their faces had fallen last time when they saw the same old boxes produced again.

And Paddy had said, 'I had red ribbing on mine 】 bee- fore !'

And Johnny had said, 'It's always pink on mine. I hate pink.'

But what was William to do? The affair wasn't so easily settled. In the old days, of course, he would have taken a taxi off to a decent toyshop and chose them something in five minutes. But nowadays they had Russian toys, French toys, Serbian toys – toys from God knows where. It was over a year since Isabel had scrapped the old donkeys and engines and so on because they were so 'dreadfully sentimental' and 'so appallingly bad for the babies' sense of form.'

'It's so important,' the new Isabel had explained, 'that they should like the right things from the very beginning. It saves so much time later on. Really, if the poor pets have to spend their infant years staring at these horrors, one can imagine them growing up and asking to be taken to the Royal Academy.'

And she spoke as though a visit to the Royal Academy was certain immediate death to anyone ...

'Well, I don't know,' said William slowly. 'When I was their age I used to go to bed hugging an old towel with a knot in it.'

The new Isabel looked at him, her eyes narrowed, her lips apart.

'Dear William! I'm sure you did!' She laughed in the new way.

Sweets it would have to be, however, thought William gloomily, fishing in his pocket for change for the taxi- man. And he saw the kiddies handing the boxes round – they were awfully generous little chaps – while Isabel's precious friends didn't hesitate to help themselves ...

What about fruit? William hovered before a stall just inside the station. What about a melon each? Would they have to share that, too? Or a pineapple for Pad, and a melon for Johnny? Isabel's friends could hardly go sneaking up to the nursery at the children's meal- times. All the same, as he bought the melon William had a horrible vision of one of Isabel's young poets lapping up a slice, for some reason, behind the nursery door.

With his two very awkward parcels he strode off to his train. The platform was crowded, the train was in. Doors banged open and shut. There came such a loud hissing from the engine that people looked dazed as they scurried to and fro. William made straight for a first- class smoker, stowed away his suitcase and parcels, and taking a huge wad of papers out of his inner pocket, he flung down in the corner and began to read

'Our client moreover is positive ... We are inclined to reconsider ... in the event of –' Ah, that was better. William pressed back his flattened hair and stretched his legs across the carriage floor. The familiar dull gnawing in his breast quietened down. 'With regard to our decision –' He took out a blue pencil and scored a paragraph slowly.

Two men came in, stepped across him, and made for the farther corner. A young fellow swung his golf clubs into the rack and sat down opposite. The train gave a gentle lurch, they were off. William glanced up and saw the hot, bright station slipping away. A red- faced girl raced along by the carriages, there was something strained and almost desperate in the way she waved and called. 'Hysterical!' thought William dully. Then a greasy, black- faced workman at the end of the platform grinned at the passing train. And William thought, 'A filthy life!' and went back to his papers.

When he looked up again there were fields, and beasts standing for shelter under the dark trees. A wide river, with naked children splashing in the shallows, glided into sight and was gone again. The sky shone pale, and one bird drifted high like a dark fleck in a jewel.

'We have examined our client's correspondence files ... ' The last sentence he had read echoed in his mind. 'We have examined ... ' William hung on to that sentence, but it was no good; it snapped in the middle, and the fields, the sky, the sailing bird, the water, all said, 'Isabel.' The same thing happened every Saturday afternoon. When he was on his way to meet Isabel there began those countless imaginary meetings. She was at the station, standing just a little apart from everybody else; she was sitting in the open taxi outside; she was at the garden gate; walking across the parched grass; at the door, or just inside the hall.

And her clear, light voice said, 'It's William,' or 'Hillo, William!' or 'So William has come!' He touched her cool hand, her cool cheek.

The exquisite freshness of Isabel! When he had been a little boy, it was his delight to run into the garden after a shower of rain and shake the rose- bush over him. Isabel was that rose- bush, petal-soft, sparkling and cool. And he was still that little boy. But there was no running into the garden now, no laughing and shaking. The dull, persistent gnawing in his breast started again. He drew up his legs, tossed the papers aside, and shut his eyes.

'What is it, Isabel? What is it?' he said tenderly. They were in their bedroom in the new house. Isabel sat on a painted stool before the dressing- table that was strewn with little black and green boxes.

'What is what, William?' And she bent forward, and her fine light hair fell over her cheeks.

'Ah, you know!' He stood in the middle of the strange room and he felt a stranger. At that Isabel wheeled round quickly and faced him.

'Oh, William!' she cried imploringly, and she held up the hairbrush. 'Please! Please don't be so dreadfully stuffy and – tragic. You're always saying or looking or hinting that I've changed. Just because I've got to know really congenial people, and go about more, and am frightfully keen on – on everything, you behave as though I'd –' Isabel tossed back her hair and laughed – 'killed our love or something. It's so awfully absurd' – she bit her lip – 'and it's so maddening, William. Even this new house and the servants you grudge me.'

'Isabel!'

'Yes, yes, it's true in a way,' said Isabel quickly. 'You think they are another bad sign. Oh, I know you do. I feel it,' she said softly, 'every time you come up the stairs. But we couldn't have gone on living in that other poky little hole, William. Be practical, at least! Why, there wasn't enough room for the babies even.'

No, it was true. Every morning when he came back from chambers it was to find the babies with Isabel in the back drawing-room. They were having rides on the leopard skin thrown over the sofa back, or they were playing shops with Isabel's desk for a counter, or Pad was sitting on the hearthrug rowing away for dear life with a little brass fire-shovel, while Johnny shot at pirates with the tongs. Every evening they each had a pick-a-back up the narrow stairs to their fat old Nanny.

Yes, he supposed it was a poky little house. A little white house with blue curtains and a window-box of petunias. William met their friends at the door with 'Seen our petunias? Pretty terrific for London, don't you think?'

But the imbecile thing, the absolutely extraordinary thing was that he hadn't the slightest idea that Isabel wasn't as happy as he. God, what blindness! He hadn't the remotest notion in those days that she really hated that inconvenient little house, that she thought the fat Nanny was ruining the babies, that she was desperately lonely, pining for new people and new music and pictures and so on. If they hadn't gone to that studio party at Moira Morrison's – If Moira Morrison hadn't said as they were leaving, 'I'm going to rescue your wife, selfish man. She's like an exquisite little Titania' – if Isabel hadn't gone with Moira to Paris – if – if ...

The train stopped at another station. Bettingford. Good heavens! They'd be there in ten minutes. William stuffed the papers back into his pockets; the young man opposite had long since disappeared. Now the other two got out. The late afternoon sun shone on women in cotton frocks and little sunburnt, barefoot children. It blazed on a silky yellow flower with coarse leaves which sprawled over a bank of rock. The air ruffling through the window smelled of the sea. Had Isabel the same crowd with her this weekend, wondered William?

And he remembered the holidays they used to have, the four of them, with a little farm girl, Rose, to look after the babies. Isabel wore a jersey and her hair in a plait; she looked about fourteen. Lord! how his nose used to peel! And the amount they ate, and the amount they slept in that immense feather bed with their feet locked together ... William couldn't help a grim smile as he thought of Isabel's horror if she knew the full extent of his sentimentality.

'Hillo, William!' She was at the station after all, standing just as he had imagined, apart from the others, and – William's heart leapt – she was alone.

'Hallo, Isabel!' William stared. He thought she looked so beautiful that he had to say something, 'You look very cool.'

'Do I?' said Isabel. 'I don't feel very cool. Come along, your horrid old train is late. The taxi's outside.' She put her hand lightly on his arm as they passed the ticket collector. 'We've all come to meet you,' she said. 'But we've left Bobby Kane at the sweet shop, to be called for.'

'Oh!' said William. It was all he could say for the moment.

There in the glare waited the taxi, with Bill Hunt and Dennis Green sprawling on one side, their hats tilted over their faces, while on the other, Moira Morrison, in a bonnet like a huge strawberry, jumped up and down.

'No ice! No ice! No ice!' she shouted gaily.

And Dennis chimed in from under his hat. 'Only to be had from the fishmonger's.'

And Bill Hunt, emerging, added, 'With whole fish in it.'

'Oh, what a bore!' wailed Isabel. And she explained to William how they had been chasing round the town for ice while she waited for him. 'Simply everything is running down the steep cliffs into the sea, beginning with the butter.'

'We shall have to anoint ourselves with the butter,' said Dennis. 'May thy head, William, lack not ointment.'

'Look here,' said William, 'how are we going to sit? I'd better get up by the driver.'

'No, Bobby Kane's by the driver,' said Isabel. 'You're to sit between Moira and me.' The taxi started. 'What have you got in those mysterious parcels?'

'De- cap- it- ated heads!' said Bill Hunt, shuddering beneath his hat.

'Oh, fruit!' Isabel sounded very pleased. 'Wise William! A melon and a pineapple. How too nice!'

'No, wait a bit,' said William, smiling. But he really was anxious. 'I brought them down for the kiddies.'

'Oh, my dear!' Isabel laughed, and slipped her hand through his arm. 'They'd be rolling in agonies if they were to eat them. No' – she patted his hand – 'you must bring them something next time. I refuse to part with my pineapple.'

'Cruel Isabel! Do let me smell it!' said Moira. She flung her arms across William appealingly. 'Oh!' The strawberry bonnet fell forward: she sounded quite faint.

'A Lady in Love with a Pineapple,' said Dennis, as the taxi drew up before a little shop with a striped blind. Out came Bobby Kane, his arms full of little packets.

'I do hope they'll be good. I've chosen them because of the colours. There are some round things which really look too divine. And just look at this nougat,' he cried ecstatically, 'just look at it! It's a perfect little ballet!'

But at that moment the shopman appeared. 'Oh, I forgot. They're none of them paid for,' said Bobby, looking frightened. Isabel gave the shopman a note, and Bobby was radiant again. 'Hallo, William! I'm sitting by the driver.' And bare- headed, all in white, with his sleeves rolled up to the shoulders, he leapt into his place. 'Avanti!' he cried ...

After tea the others went off to bathe, while William stayed and made his peace with the kiddies. But Johnny and Paddy were asleep, the rose- red glow had paled, bats were flying, and still the bathers had not returned. As William wandered downstairs, the maid crossed the hall carrying a lamp. He followed her into the sitting- room. It was a long room, coloured yellow. On the wall opposite William someone had painted a young man, over life- size, with very wobbly legs, offering a wide- eyed daisy to a young woman who had one very short arm and one very long, thin one. Over the chairs and sofa there hung strips of black material, covered with big splashes like broken eggs, and everywhere one looked there seemed to be an ashtray full of cigarette ends. William sat down in one of the armchairs. Nowadays, when one felt with one hand down the sides, it wasn't to come upon a sheep with three legs or a cow that had lost one horn, or a very fat dove out of the Noah's Ark. One fished up yet another little paper- covered book of smudged- looking poems ... He thought of the wad of papers in his pocket, but he was too hungry and tired to read. The door was open; sounds came from the kitchen. The servants were talking as if they were alone in the house. Suddenly there came a loud screech of laughter and an equally loud 'Sh!' They had remembered him. William got up and went through the french windows into the garden, and as he stood there in the shadow he heard the bathers coming up the sandy road; their voices rang through the quiet.

'I think it's up to Moira to use her little arts and wiles.'

A tragic moan from Moira.

'We ought to have a gramophone for the weekends that played "The Maid of the Mountains." '

'Oh no! Oh no!' cried Isabel's voice. 'That's not fair to William. Be nice to him, my children! He's only staying until tomorrow evening.'

'Leave him to me,' cried Bobby Kane. 'I'm awfully good at looking after people.'

The gate swung open and shut. William moved on the terrace; they had seen him. 'Hallo, William!' And Bobby Kane, flapping his towel, began to leap and pirouette on the parched lawn. 'Pity you didn't come, William. The water was divine. And we all went to a little pub afterwards and had sloe gin.'

The others had reached the house. 'I say, Isabel,' called Bobby, 'would you like me to wear my Nijinsky dress tonight?'

'No,' said Isabel, 'nobody's going to dress. We're all starving. William's starving, too. Come along, mes amis, let's begin with sardines.'

'I've found the sardines,' said Moira, and she ran into the hall, holding a box high in the air.

'A Lady with a Box of Sardines,' said Dennis gravely.

'Well, William, and how's London?' asked Bill Hunt, drawing the cork out of a bottle of whisky.

'Oh, London's not much changed,' answered William.

'Good old London,' said Bobby, very hearty, spearing a sardine.

But a moment later William was forgotten. Moira Morrison began wondering what colour one's legs really were under water.

'Mine are the palest, palest mushroom colour.'

Bill and Dennis ate enormously. And Isabel filled glasses, and changed plates, and found matches, smiling blissfully. At one moment she said, 'I do wish, Bill, you'd paint it.'

'Paint what?' said Bill loudly, stuffing his mouth with bread.

'Us,' said Isabel, 'round the table. It would be so fascinating in twenty years' time.'

Bill screwed up his eyes and chewed. 'Light's wrong,' he said rudely, 'far too much yellow'; and went on eating. And that seemed to charm Isabel, too.

But after supper they were all so tired they could do nothing but yawn until it was late enough to go to bed ...

It was not until William was waiting for his taxi the next afternoon that he found himself alone with Isabel. When he brought his suitcase down into the hall, Isabel left the others and went over to him. She stooped down and picked up the suitcase. 'What a weight!' she said, and she gave a little awkward laugh. 'Let me carry it! To the gate.'

'No, why should you?' said William. 'Of course not. Give it to me.'

'Oh, please do let me,' said Isabel. 'I want to, really.' They walked together silently. William felt there was nothing to say now.

'There,' said Isabel triumphantly, setting the suitcase down, and she looked anxiously along the sandy road. 'I hardly seem to have seen you this time,' she said breathlessly. 'It's so short, isn't it? I feel you've only just come. Next time –' The taxi came into sight. 'I hope they look after you properly in London. I'm so sorry the babies have been out all day, but Miss Neil had arranged it. They'll hate missing you. Poor William, going back to London.' The taxi turned. 'Goodbye!' She gave him a little hurried kiss; she was gone.

Fields, trees, hedges streamed by. They shook through the empty, blind- looking little town, ground up the steep pull to the station. The train was in. William made straight for a first- class smoker, flung back into the corner, but this time he let the papers alone. He folded his arms against the dull, persistent gnawing, and began in his mind to write a letter to Isabel.

The post was late as usual. They sat outside the house in long chairs under coloured parasols. Only Bobby Kane lay on the turf at Isabel's feet. It was dull, stifling; the day drooped like a flag.

'Do you think there will be Mondays in Heaven?' asked Bobby childishly.

And Dennis murmured, 'Heaven will be one long Monday.'

But Isabel couldn't help wondering what had happened to the salmon they had for supper last night. She had meant to have fish mayonnaise for lunch and now ...

Moira was asleep. Sleeping was her latest discovery. 'It's so wonderful. One simply shuts one's eyes, that's all. It's so delicious.'

When the old ruddy postman came beating along the sandy road on his tricycle one felt the handle- bars ought to have been oars.

Bill Hunt put down his book. 'Letters,' he said complacently, and they all waited. But, heartless postman ... alignant world! There was only one, a fat one for Isabel. Not even a paper.

'And mine's only from William,' said Isabel mournfully.

'From William – already?'

'He's sending you back your marriage lines as a gentle reminder.'

'Does everybody have marriage lines? I thought they were only for servants.'

'Pages and pages! Look at her! A Lady reading a Letter,' said

Dennis.

My darling, precious Isabel . Pages and pages there were. As Isabel read on her feeling of astonishment changed to a stifled feeling. What on earth had induced William ... ? How extraordinary it was ... What could have made him ... ? She felt confused, more and more excited, even frightened. It was just like William. Was it? It was absurd, of course, it must be absurd, ridiculous. 'Ha, ha, ha! Oh dear!' What was she to do? Isabel flung back in her chair and laughed till she couldn't stop laughing.

'Do, do tell us,' said the others. 'You must tell us.'

'I'm longing to,' gurgled Isabel. She sat up, gathered the letter, and waved it at them. 'Gather round,' she said. 'Listen, it's too marvellous. A love- letter!'

'A love- letter! But how divine!' Darling precious Isabel . But she had hardly begun before their laughter interrupted her.

'Go on, Isabel, it's perfect.'

'It's the most marvellous find.'

'Oh, do go on, Isabel!'

God forbid , my darling , that I should be a drag on your happiness .

'Oh! oh! oh!'

'Sh! sh! sh!'

And Isabel went on. When she reached the end they were hysterical: Bobby rolled on the turf and almost sobbed.

'You must let me have it just as it is, entire, for my new book,' said Dennis firmly. 'I shall give it a whole chapter.'

'Oh, Isabel,' moaned Moira, 'that wonderful bit about holding you in his arms!'

'I always thought those letters in divorce cases were made up. But they pale before this.'

'Let me hold it. Let me read it, mine own self,' said Bobby Kane.

But, to their surprise, Isabel crushed the letter in her hand. She was laughing no longer. She glanced quickly at them all; she looked exhausted. 'No, not just now. Not just now,' she stammered.

And before they could recover she had run into the house, through the hall, up the stairs into her bedroom. Down she sat on the side of the bed. 'How vile, odious, abominable, vulgar,' muttered Isabel. She pressed her eyes with her knuckles, and rocked to and fro. And again she saw them, but not four, more like forty, laughing, sneering, jeering, stretching out their hands while she read them William's letter. Oh, what a loathsome thing to have done. How could she have done it! God forbid , my darling , that I should be a drag on your happiness . William! Isabel pressed her face into the pillow. But she felt that even the grave bedroom knew her for what she was, shallow, tinkling, vain ...

Presently from the garden below there came voices.

'Isabel, we're all going for a bathe. Do come!'

'Come, thou wife of William!'

'Call her once before you go, call once yet!'

Isabel sat up. Now was the moment, now she must decide. Would she go with them, or stay here and write to William. Which, which should it be? 'I must make up my mind.' Oh, but how could there be any question? Of course she would stay here and write.

'Titania!' piped Moira.

'Isa- bel?'

No, it was too difficult. 'I'll – I'll go with them, and write to William later. Some other time. Later. Not now. But I shall certainly write,' thought Isabel hurriedly.

And, laughing in the new way, she ran down the stairs.

Miss Brill

Although it was so brilliantly fine – the blue sky powdered with gold and great spots of light like white wine splashed over the Jardins Publiques ... ss Brill was glad that she had decided on her fur. The air was motionless, but when you opened your mouth there was just a faint chill, like a chill from a glass of iced water before you sip, and now and again a leaf came drifting – from nowhere, from the sky. Miss Brill put up her hand and touched her fur. Dear little thing! It was nice to feel it again. She had taken it out of its box that afternoon, shaken out the moth- powder, given it a good brush, and rubbed the life back into the dim little eyes. ‘What has been happening to me?’ said the sad little eyes. Oh, how sweet it was to see them snap at her again from the red eiderdown! ... But the nose, which was of some black composition, wasn't at all firm. It must have had a knock, somehow. Never mind ... ittle dab of black sealing- wax when the time came – when it was absolutely necessary ... Little rogue! Yes, she really felt like that about it. Little rogue biting its tail just by her left ear. She could have taken it off and laid it on her lap and stroked it. She felt a tingling in her hands and arms, but that came from walking, she supposed. And when she breathed, something light and sad – no, not sad, exactly – something gentle seemed to move in her bosom.

There were a number of people out this afternoon, far more than last Sunday. And the band sounded louder and gayer. That was because the Season had begun. For although the band played all the year round on Sundays, out of season it was never the same. It was like someone playing with only the family to listen; it didn't care how it played if there weren't any strangers present. Wasn't the conductor wearing a new coat, too? She was sure it was new. He scraped with his foot and flapped his arms like a rooster about to crow, and the bandsmen sitting in the green rotunda blew out their cheeks and glared at the music. Now there came a little ‘flutey’ bit – very pretty! ... ittle chain of bright drops. She was sure it would be repeated. It was; she lifted her head and smiled.

Only two people shared her 'special' seat: a fine old man in a velvet coat, his hands clasped over a huge carved walking- stick, and a big old woman, sitting upright, with a roll of knitting on her embroidered apron. They did not speak. This was disappointing, for Miss Brill always looked forward to the conversation. She had become really quite expert, she thought, at listening as though she didn't listen, at sitting in other people's lives for just a minute while they talked round her.

She glanced, sideways, at the old couple. Perhaps they would go soon. Last Sunday, too, hadn't been as interesting as usual. An Englishman and his wife, he wearing a dreadful Panama hat and she button boots. And she'd gone on the whole time about how she ought to wear spectacles; she knew she needed them; but that it was no good getting any; they'd be sure to break and they'd never keep on. And he'd been so patient. He'd suggested everything – gold rims, the kind that curved round your ears, little pads inside the bridge. No, nothing would please her. 'They'll always be sliding down my nose!' Miss Brill had wanted to shake her.

The old people sat on the bench, still as statues. Never mind, there was always the crowd to watch. To and fro, in front of the flower- beds and the band rotunda, the couples and groups paraded, stopped to talk, to greet, to buy a handful of flowers from the old beggar who had his tray fixed to the railings. Little children ran among them, swooping and laughing; little boys with big white silk bows under their chins, little girls, little French dolls, dressed up in velvet and lace. And sometimes a tiny staggerer came suddenly rocking into the open from under the trees, stopped, stared, as suddenly sat down 'flop,' until its small high- stepping mother, like a young hen, rushed scolding to its rescue. Other people sat on the benches and green chairs, but they were nearly always the same, Sunday after Sunday, and – Miss Brill had often noticed – there was something funny about nearly all of them. They were odd, silent, nearly all old, and from the way they stared they looked as though they'd just come from dark little rooms or even – even cupboards!

Behind the rotunda the slender trees with yellow leaves down drooping, and through them just a line of sea, and beyond the blue sky with gold- veined clouds.

Tum- tum- tum tiddle- um! tiddle- um! tum tiddley- um tum ta!

blew the band.

Two young girls in red came by and two young soldiers in blue met them, and they laughed and paired and went off arm- in- arm. Two peasant women with funny straw hats passed, gravely, leading beautiful smoke- coloured donkeys. A cold, pale nun hurried by. A beautiful woman came along and dropped her bunch of violets, and a little boy ran after to hand them to her, and she took them and threw them away as if they'd been poisoned. Dear me! Miss Brill didn't know whether to admire that or not! And now an ermine toque and a gentleman in grey met just in front of her. He was tall, stiff, dignified, and she was wearing the ermine toque she'd bought when her hair was yellow. Now everything, her hair, her face, even her eyes, was the same colour as the shabby ermine, and her hand, in its cleaned glove, lifted to dab her lips, was a tiny yellowish paw. Oh, she was so pleased to see him – delighted! She rather thought they were going to meet that afternoon. She described where she'd been – everywhere, here, there, along by the sea. The day was so charming – didn't he agree? And wouldn't he, perhaps? ... But he shook his head, lighted a cigarette, slowly breathed a great deep puff into her face, and, even while she was still talking and laughing, flicked the match away and walked on. The ermine toque was alone; she smiled more brightly than ever. But even the band seemed to know what she was feeling and played more softly, played tenderly, and the drum beat, 'The Brute! The Brute!' over and over. What would she do? What was going to happen now? But as Miss Brill wondered, the ermine toque turned, raised her hand as though she'd seen someone else, much nicer, just over there, and pattered away. And the band changed again and played more quickly, more gaily than ever, and the old couple on Miss Brill's seat got up and marched away, and such a funny old man with long whiskers hobbled along in time to the music and was nearly knocked over by four girls walking abreast.

Oh, how fascinating it was! How she enjoyed it! How she loved sitting here, watching it all! It was like a play. It was exactly like a play. Who could believe the sky at the back wasn't painted? But it wasn't till a little brown dog trotted on solemn and then slowly trotted off, like a little 'theatre' dog, a little dog that had been drugged, that Miss Brill discovered what it was that made it so exciting. They were all on the stage. They weren't only the audience, not only looking on; they were acting. Even she had a part and came every Sunday. No doubt somebody would have noticed if she hadn't been there; she was part of the performance after all. How strange she'd never thought of it like that before! And yet it explained why she made such a point of starting from home at just the same time each week – so as not to be late for the performance – and it also explained why she had quite a queer, shy feeling at telling her English pupils how she spent her Sunday afternoons. No wonder! Miss Brill nearly laughed out loud. She was on the stage. She thought of the old invalid gentleman to whom she read the newspaper four afternoons a week while he slept in the garden. She had got quite used to the frail head on the cotton pillow, the hollowed eyes, the open mouth and the high pinched nose. If he'd been dead she mightn't have noticed for weeks; she wouldn't have minded. But suddenly he knew he was having the paper read to him by an actress! 'An actress!' The old head lifted; two points of light quivered in the old eyes. 'An actress – are ye?' And Miss Brill smoothed the newspaper as though it was the manuscript of her part and said gently: 'Yes, I have been an actress for a long time.'

The band had been having a rest. Now they started again. And what they played was warm, sunny, yet there was just a faint chill ... omething what was it? – not sadness – no, not sadness ... omething that made you want to sing. The tune lifted, lifted, the light shone; and it seemed to Miss Brill that in another moment all of them, all the whole company, would begin singing. The young ones, the laughing ones who were moving together, they would begin, and the men's voices, very resolute and brave, would join them. And then she too, she too, and the others on the benches – they would come in with a kind of accompaniment – something low, that scarcely rose or fell, something so beautiful – moving ... And Miss Brill's eyes filled with tears and she looked smiling at all the other members of the company. Yes, we understand, we understand, she thought – though what they understood she didn't know.

Just at that moment a boy and a girl came and sat down where the old couple had been. They were beautifully dressed; they were in love. The hero and heroine, of course, just arrived from his father's yacht. And still soundlessly singing, still with that trembling smile, Miss Brill prepared to listen.

'No, not now,' said the girl. 'Not here, I can't.'

'But why? Because of that stupid old thing at the end there?' asked the boy. 'Why does she come here at all – who wants her? Why doesn't she keep her silly old mug at home?'

'It's her fu- fur which is so funny,' giggled the girl. 'It's exactly like a fried whiting.'

'Ah, be off with you!' said the boy in an angry whisper. Then: 'Tell me, ma petite chère –'

'No, not here,' said the girl. 'Not yet.'

On her way home she usually bought a slice of honey- cake at the baker's. It was her Sunday treat. Sometimes there was an almond in her slice, sometimes not. It made a great difference. If there was an almond it was like carrying home a tiny present ... urprise – something that might very well not have been there. She hurried on the almond Sundays and struck the match for the kettle in quite a dashing way.

But today she passed the baker's by, climbed the stairs, went into the little dark room – her room like a cupboard – and sat down on the red eiderdown. She sat there for a long time. The box that the fur came out of was on the bed. She unclasped the necklet quickly; quickly, without looking, laid it inside. But when she put the lid on she thought she heard something crying.

The Stranger

It seemed to the little crowd on the wharf that she was never going to move again. There she lay, immense, motionless on the grey crinkled water, a loop of smoke above her, an immense flock of gulls screaming and diving after the galley droppings at the stern. You could just see little couples parading – little flies walking up and down the dish on the grey crinkled tablecloth. Other flies clustered and swarmed at the edge. Now there was a gleam of white on the lower deck – the cook's apron or the stewardess perhaps. Now a tiny black spider raced up the ladder on to the bridge.

In the front of the crowd a strong- looking, middle- aged man, dressed very well, very snugly in a grey overcoat, grey silk scarf, thick gloves and dark felt hat, marched up and down, twirling his folded umbrella. He seemed to be the leader of the little crowd on the wharf and at the same time to keep them together. He was something between the sheep- dog and the shepherd.

But what a fool – what a fool he had been not to bring any glasses! There wasn't a pair of glasses between the whole lot of them.

'Curious thing, Mr Scott, that none of us thought of glasses. We might have been able to stir 'em up a bit. We might have managed a little signalling. Don't hesitate to land . Natives harmless . Or: A welcome awaits you . All is forgiven . What? Eh?'

Mr Hammond's quick, eager glance, so nervous and yet so friendly and confiding, took in everybody on the wharf, roped in even those old chaps lounging against the gangways. They knew, every man- jack of them, that Mrs Hammond was on that boat, and he was so tremendously excited it never entered his head not to believe that this marvellous fact meant something to them too. It warmed his heart towards them. They were, he decided, as decent a crowd of people – those old chaps over by the gangways, too – fine, solid old chaps. What chests – by Jove! And he squared his own, plunged his thick- gloved hands into his pockets, rocked from heel to toe.

'Yes, my wife's been in Europe for the last ten months. On a visit to our eldest girl, who was married last year. I brought her up here, as far as Crawford, myself. So I thought I'd better come and fetch her back. Yes, yes, yes.' The shrewd grey eyes narrowed again and searched anxiously, quickly, the motionless liner. Again his overcoat was unbuttoned. Out came the thin, butter- yellow watch again, and for the twentieth – fiftieth – hundredth time he made the calculation.

'Let me see, now. It was two fifteen when the doctor's launch went off. Two fifteen. It is now exactly twenty- eight minutes past four. That is to say, the doctor's been gone two hours and thirteen minutes. Two hours and thirteen minutes! Whee- ooh!' He gave a queer little half- whistle and snapped his watch to again. 'But I think we should have been told if there was anything up – don't you, Mr Gaven?'

'Oh, yes, Mr Hammond! I don't think there's anything to – anything to worry about,' said Mr Gaven, knocking out his pipe against the heel of his shoe. 'At the same time –'

'Quite so! Quite so!' cried Mr Hammond. 'Dashed annoying!' He paced quickly up and down and came back again to his stand between Mr and Mrs Scott and Mr Gaven. 'It's getting quite dark, too,' and he waved his folded umbrella as though the dusk at least might have had the decency to keep off for a bit. But the dusk came slowly, spreading like a slow stain over the water. Little Jean Scott dragged at her mother's hand.

'I wan' my tea, mammy!' she wailed.

'I expect you do,' said Mr Hammond. 'I expect all these ladies want their tea.' And his kind, flushed, almost pitiful glance roped them all in again. He wondered whether Janey was having a final cup of tea in the saloon out there. He hoped so; he thought not. It would be just like her not to leave the deck. In that case perhaps the deck steward would bring her up a cup. If he'd been there he'd have got it for her – somehow. And for a moment he was on deck, standing over her, watching her little hand fold round the cup in the way she had, while she drank the only cup of tea to be got on board ... But now he was back here, and the Lord only knew when that cursed Captain would stop hanging about in the stream. He took another turn, up and down, up and down. He walked as far as the cab-stand to make sure his driver hadn't disappeared; back he swerved again to the little flock huddled in the shelter of the banana crates. Little Jean Scott was still wanting her tea. Poor little beggar! He wished he had a bit of chocolate on him.

'Here, Jean!' he said. 'Like a lift up?' And easily, gently, he swung the little girl on to a higher barrel. The movement of holding her, steadying her, relieved him wonderfully, lightened his heart.

'Hold on,' he said, keeping an arm round her.

'Oh, don't worry about Jean, Mr Hammond!' said Mrs Scott.

'That's all right, Mrs Scott. No trouble. It's a pleasure. Jean's a little pal of mine, aren't you, Jean?'

'Yes, Mr Hammond,' said Jean, and she ran her finger down the dent of his felt hat.

But suddenly she caught him by the ear and gave a loud scream. 'Lo- ok, Mr Hammond! She's moving! Look, she's coming in!'

By Jove! So she was. At last! She was slowly, slowly turning round. A bell sounded far over the water and a great spout of steam gushed into the air. The gulls rose; they fluttered away like bits of white paper. And whether that deep throbbing was her engines or his heart Mr Hammond couldn't say. He had to nerve himself to bear it, whatever it was. At that moment old Captain Johnson, the harbour- master, came striding down the wharf, a leather portfolio under his arm.

'Jean'll be all right,' said Mr Scott. 'I'll hold her.' He was just in time. Mr Hammond had forgotten about Jean. He sprang away to greet old Captain Johnson.

'Well, Captain,' the eager, nervous voice rang out again, 'you've taken pity on us at last.'

'It's no good blaming me, Mr Hammond,' wheezed old Captain Johnson, staring at the liner. 'You got Mrs Hammond on board, ain't yer?'

'Yes, yes!' said Hammond, and he kept by the harbour- master's side. 'Mrs Hammond's there. Hul- lo! We shan't be long now!'

With her telephone ring- ringing, the thrum of her screw filling the air, the big liner bore down on them, cutting sharp through the dark water so that big white shavings curled to either side. Hammond and the harbour- master kept in front of the rest. Hammond took off his hat; he raked the decks – they were crammed with passengers; he waved his hat and bawled a loud, strange ' Hul- lo!' across the water, and then turned round and burst out laughing and said something – nothing – to old Captain Johnson.

'Seen her?' asked the harbour- master.

'No, not yet. Steady – wait a bit!' And suddenly, between two great clumsy idiots – 'Get out of the way there!' he signed with his umbrella – he saw a hand raised ... hite glove shaking a handkerchief. Another moment, and – thank God, thank God! – there she was. There was Janey. There was Mrs Hammond, yes, yes, yes – standing by the rail and smiling and nodding and waving her handkerchief.

'Well, that's first class – first class! Well, well, well!' He positively stamped. Like lightning he drew out his cigar- case and offered it to old Captain Johnson. 'Have a cigar, Captain! They're pretty good. Have a couple! Here' – and he pressed all the cigars in the case on the harbour- master – 'I've a couple of boxes up at the hotel.'

'Thenks, Mr Hammond!' wheezed old Captain Johnson.

Hammond stuffed the cigar- case back. His hands were shaking, but he'd got hold of himself again. He was able to face Janey. There she was, leaning on the rail, talking to some woman and at the same time watching him, ready for him. It struck him, as the gulf of water closed, how small she looked on that huge ship. His heart was wrung with such a spasm that he could have cried out. How little she looked to have come all that long way and back by herself! Just like her, though. Just like Janey. She had the courage of ... nd now the crew had come forward and parted the passengers; they had lowered the rails for the gangways.

The voices on shore and the voices on board flew to greet each other.

'All well?'

'All well.'

'How's mother?'

'Much better.'

'Hullo, Jean!'

'Hillo, Aun' Emily!'

'Had a good voyage?'

'Splendid!'

'Shan't be long now!'

'Not long now.'

The engines stopped. Slowly she edged to the wharf- side.

'Make way there – make way – make way!' And the wharf hands brought the heavy gangways along at a sweeping run. Hammond signed to Janey to stay where she was. The old harbour-master stepped forward; he followed. As to 'ladies first,' or any rot like that, it never entered his head.

'After you, Captain!' he cried genially. And, treading on the old man's heels, he strode up the gangway on to the deck in a bee- line to Janey, and Janey was clasped in his arms.

'Well, well, well! Yes, yes! Here we are at last!' he stammered. It was all he could say. And Janey emerged, and her cool little voice – the only voice in the world for him – said,

'Well, darling! Have you been waiting long?'

No; not long. Or, at any rate, it didn't matter. It was over now. But the point was, he had a cab waiting at the end of the wharf. Was she ready to go off? Was her luggage ready? In that case they could cut off sharp with her cabin luggage and let the rest go hang until tomorrow. He bent over her and she looked up with her familiar half- smile. She was just the same. Not a day changed. Just as he'd always known her. She laid her small hand on his sleeve.

'How are the children, John?' she asked.

(Hang the children!) 'Perfectly well. Never better in their lives.'

'Haven't they sent me letters?'

'Yes, yes – of course! I've left them at the hotel for you to digest later on.'

'We can't go quite so fast,' said she. 'I've got people to say goodbye to – and then there's the Captain.' As his face fell she gave his arm a small understanding squeeze. 'If the Captain comes off the bridge I want you to thank him for having looked after your wife so beautifully.' Well, he'd got her. If she wanted another ten minutes – As he gave way she was surrounded. The whole first- class seemed to want to say goodbye to Janey.

'Goodbye, dear Mrs Hammond! And next time you're in Sydney I'll expect you.'

'Darling Mrs Hammond! You won't forget to write to me, will you?'

'Well, Mrs Hammond, what this boat would have been without you!'

It was as plain as a pikestaff that she was by far the most popular woman on board. And she took it all – just as usual. Absolutely composed. Just her little self – just Janey all over; standing there with her v thrown back. Hammond never noticed what his wife had on. It was all the same to him whatever she wore. But today he did notice that she wore a black 'costume' – didn't they call it? – with white frills, trimmings he supposed they were, at the neck and sleeves. All this while Janey handed him round.

'John, dear!' And then: 'I want to introduce you to –'

Finally they did escape, and she led the way to her state- room. To follow Janey down the passage that she knew so well – that was so strange to him; to part the green curtains after her and to step into the cabin that had been hers gave him exquisite happiness. But – confound it! – the stewardess was there on the floor, strapping up the rugs.

'That's the last, Mrs Hammond,' said the stewardess, rising and pulling down her cuffs.

He was introduced again, and then Janey and the stewardess disappeared into the passage. He heard whisperings. She was getting the tipping business over, he supposed. He sat down on the striped sofa and took his hat off. There were the rugs she had taken with her; they looked good as new. All her luggage looked fresh, perfect. The labels were written in her beautiful little clear hand – 'Mrs John Hammond.'

'Mrs John Hammond!' He gave a long sigh of content and leaned back, crossing his arms. The strain was over. He felt he could have sat there for ever sighing his relief – the relief at being rid of that horrible tug, pull, grip on his heart. The danger was over. That was the feeling. They were on dry land again.

But at that moment Janey's head came round the corner.

'Darling – do you mind? I just want to go and say goodbye to the doctor.'

Hammond started up. 'I'll come with you.'

'No, no!' she said. 'Don't bother. I'd rather not. I'll not be a minute.'

And before he could answer she was gone. He had half a mind to run after her; but instead he sat down again.

Would she really not be long? What was the time now? Out came the watch; he stared at nothing. That was rather queer of Janey, wasn't it? Why couldn't she have told the stewardess to say goodbye for her? Why did she have to go chasing after the ship's doctor? She could have sent a note from the hotel even if the affair had been urgent. Urgent? Did it – could it mean that she had been ill on the voyage – she was keeping something from him? That was it! He seized his hat. He was going off to find that fellow and to wring the truth out of him at all costs. He thought he'd noticed just something. She was just a touch too calm – too steady. From the very first moment –

The curtains rang. Janey was back. He jumped to his feet.

'Janey, have you been ill on this voyage? You have!'

'Ill?' Her airy little voice mocked him. She stepped over the rugs, came up close, touched his breast, and looked up at him.

'Darling,' she said, 'don't frighten me. Of course I haven't! Whatever makes you think I have? Do I look ill?'

But Hammond didn't see her. He only felt that she was looking at him and that there was no need to worry about anything. She was here to look after things. It was all right. Everything was.

The gentle pressure of her hand was so calming that he put his over hers to hold it there. And she said:

'Stand still. I want to look at you. I haven't seen you yet. You've had your beard beautifully trimmed, and you look – younger, I think, and decidedly thinner! Bachelor life agrees with you.'

'Agrees with me!' He groaned for love and caught her close again. And again, as always, he had the feeling he was holding something that never was quite his – his. Something too delicate, too precious, that would fly away once he let go.

'For God's sake let's get off to the hotel so that we can be by ourselves!' And he rang the bell hard for some one to look sharp with the luggage.

Walking down the wharf together she took his arm. He had her on his arm again. And the difference it made to get into the cab after Janey – to throw the red- and- yellow striped blanket round them both – to tell the driver to hurry because neither of them had had any tea. No more going without his tea or pouring out his own. She was back. He turned to her, squeezed her hand, and said gently, teasingly, in the 'special' voice he had for her: 'Glad to be home again, dearie?' She smiled; she didn't even bother to answer, but gently she drew his hand away as they came to the brighter streets.

'We've got the best room in the hotel,' he said. 'I wouldn't be put off with another. And I asked the chambermaid to put in a bit of a fire in case you felt chilly. She's a nice, attentive girl. And I thought now we were here we wouldn't bother to go home tomorrow, but spend the day looking round and leave the morning after. Does that suit you? There's no hurry, is there? The children will have you soon enough ... I thought a day's sightseeing might make a nice break in your journey – eh, Janey?'

'Have you taken the tickets for the day after?' she asked.

'I should think I have!' He unbuttoned his overcoat and took out his bulging pocket- book. 'Here we are! I reserved a first- class carriage to Salisbury. There it is – "Mr and Mrs John Hammond." I thought we might as well do ourselves comfortably, and we don't want other people butting in, do we? But if you'd like to stop here a bit longer –?’

‘Oh, no!’ said Janey quickly. ‘Not for the world! The day after tomorrow, then. And the children –’

But they had reached the hotel. The manager was standing in the broad, brilliantly- lighted porch. He came down to greet them. A porter ran from the hall for their boxes.

‘Well, Mr Arnold, here’s Mrs Hammond at last!’

The manager led them through the hall himself and pressed the elevator- bell. Hammond knew there were business pals of his sitting at the little hall tables having a drink before dinner. But he wasn’t going to risk interruption; he looked neither to the right nor the left. They could think what they pleased. If they didn’t understand, the more fools they – and he stepped out of the lift, unlocked the door of their room, and shepherded Janey in. The door shut. Now, at last, they were alone together. He turned up the light. The curtains were drawn; the fire blazed. He flung his hat on to the huge bed and went towards her.

But – would you believe it! – again they were interrupted. This time it was the porter with the luggage. He made two journeys of it, leaving the door open in between, taking his time, whistling through his teeth in the corridor. Hammond paced up and down the room, tearing off his gloves, tearing off his scarf. Finally he flung his overcoat on the bedside.

At last the fool was gone. The door clicked. Now they were alone. Said Hammond: ‘I feel I’ll never have you to myself again. These cursed people! Janey’ – and he bent his flushed, eager gaze upon her – ‘let’s have dinner up here. If we go down to the restaurant we’ll be interrupted, and then there’s the confounded music’ (the music he’d praised so highly, applauded so loudly last night!). ‘We shan’t be able to hear each other speak. Let’s have something up here in front of the fire. It’s too late for tea. I’ll order a little supper, shall I? How does the idea strike you?’

‘Do, darling!’ said Janey. ‘And while you’re away – the children’s letters –’

‘Oh, later on will do!’ said Hammond.

‘But then we’d get it over,’ said Janey. ‘And I’d first have time to –'

'Oh, I needn't go down!' explained Hammond. 'I'll just ring and give the order ... you don't want to send me away, do you?'

Janey shook her head and smiled.

'But you're thinking of something else. You're worrying about something,' said Hammond. 'What is it? Come and sit here – come and sit on my knee before the fire.'

'I'll just unpin my hat,' said Janey, and she went over to the dressing- table. 'A- ah!' She gave a little cry.

'What is it?'

'Nothing, darling. I've just found the children's letters. That's all right! They will keep. No hurry now!' She turned to him, clasping them. She tucked them into her frilled blouse. She cried quickly, gaily: 'Oh, how typical this dressing- table is of you!'

'Why? What's the matter with it?' said Hammond.

'If it were floating in eternity I should say "John!" ' laughed Janey, staring at the big bottle of hair tonic, the wicker bottle of eau- de- Cologne, the two hairbrushes, and a dozen new collars tied with pink tape. 'Is this all your luggage?'

'Hang my luggage!' said Hammond; but all the same he liked being laughed at by Janey. 'Let's talk. Let's get down to things. Tell me' – and as Janey perched on his knees he leaned back and drew her into the deep, ugly chair – 'tell me you're really glad to be back, Janey.'

'Yes, darling, I am glad,' she said.

But just as when he embraced her he felt she would fly away, so Hammond never knew – never knew for dead certain that she was as glad as he was. How could he know? Would he ever know? Would he always have this craving – this pang like hunger somehow, to make Janey so much part of him that there wasn't any of her to escape? He wanted to blot out everybody, everything. He wished now he'd turned off the light. That might have brought her nearer. And now those letters from the children rustled in her blouse. He could have chucked them into the fire.

'Janey,' he whispered.

'Yes, dear?' She lay on his breast, but so lightly, so remotely. Their breathing rose and fell together.

'Janey!'

'What is it?'

'Turn to me,' he whispered. A slow, deep flush flowed into his forehead. 'Kiss me, Janey! You kiss me!'

It seemed to him there was a tiny pause – but long enough for him to suffer torture – before her lips touched his, firmly, lightly – kissing them as she always kissed him, as though the kiss – how could he describe it? – confirmed what they were saying, signed the contract. But that wasn't what he wanted; that wasn't at all what he thirsted for. He felt suddenly horribly tired.

'If you knew,' he said, opening his eyes, 'what it's been like – waiting today. I thought the boat never would come in. There we were, hanging about. What kept you so long?'

She made no answer. She was looking away from him at the fire. The flames hurried – hurried over the coals, flickered, fell.

'Not asleep, are you?' said Hammond, and he jumped her up and down.

'No,' she said. And then: 'Don't do that, dear. No, I was thinking. As a matter of fact,' she said, 'one of the passengers died last night ... an. That's what held us up. We brought him in ... ean, he wasn't buried at sea. So, of course, the ship's doctor and the shore doctor –'

'What was it?' asked Hammond uneasily. He hated to hear of death. He hated this to have happened. It was, in some queer way, as though he and Janey had met a funeral on their way to the hotel.

'Oh, it wasn't anything in the least infectious!' said Janey. She was speaking scarcely above her breath. 'It was heart .' A pause. 'Poor fellow!' she said. 'Quite young.' And she watched the fire flicker and fall. 'He died in my arms,' said Janey.

The blow was so sudden that Hammond thought he would faint. He couldn't move; he couldn't breathe. He felt all his strength flowing – flowing into the big dark chair, and the big dark chair held him fast, gripped him, forced him to bear it.

'What?' he said dully. 'What's that you say?'

'The end was quite peaceful,' said the small voice. 'He just' – and Hammond saw her lift her gentle hand – 'breathed his life away at the end.' And her hand fell.

'Who – else was there?' Hammond managed to ask.

'Nobody. I was alone with him.'

Ah, my God, what was she saying! What was she doing to him! This would kill him! And all the while she spoke:

'I saw the change coming and I sent the steward for the doctor, but the doctor was too late. He couldn't have done anything, anyway.'

'But – why you , why you ?' moaned Hammond.

At that Janey turned quickly, quickly searched his face.

'You don't mind , John, do you?' she asked. 'You don't – It's nothing to do with you and me.'

Somehow or other he managed to shake some sort of smile at her. Somehow or other he stammered: 'No – go – on, go on! I want you to tell me.'

'But, John darling. –'

'Tell me, Janey!'

'There's nothing to tell,' she said, wondering. 'He was one of the first- class passengers. I saw he was very ill when he came on board ... But he seemed to be so much better until yesterday. He had a severe attack in the afternoon – excitement – nervousness, I think, about arriving. And after that he never recovered.'

'But why didn't the stewardess –'

'Oh, my dear – the stewardess!' said Janey. 'What would he have felt? And besides ... he might have wanted to leave a message ... to –'

'Didn't he?' muttered Hammond. 'Didn't he say anything?'

'No, darling, not a word!' She shook her head softly. 'All the time I was with him he was too weak ... he was too weak even to move a finger ... '

Janey was silent. But her words, so light, so soft, so chill, seemed to hover in the air, to rain into his breast like snow.

The fire had gone red. Now it fell in with a sharp sound and the room was colder. Cold crept up his arms. The room was huge, immense, glittering. It filled his whole world. There was the great blind bed, with his coat flung across it like some headless man saying his prayers. There was the luggage, ready to be carried away again, anywhere, tossed into trains, carted on to boats.

... . He was too weak. He was too weak to move a finger.' And yet he died in Janey's arms. She – who'd never – never once in all these years – never on one single solitary occasion –

No; he mustn't think of it. Madness lay in thinking of it. No, he wouldn't face it. He couldn't stand it. It was too much to bear!

And now Janey touched his tie with her fingers. She pinched the edges of the tie together.

'You're not – sorry I told you, John darling? It hasn't made you sad? It hasn't spoilt our evening – our being alone together?'

But at that he had to hide his face. He put his face into her bosom and his arms enfolded her.

Spoilt their evening! Spoilt their being alone together! They would never be alone together again.

“仿佛他自己正在窄窄的、
刀锋般的高山
绝壁上行走。

他看到的是一幅全景图，
往这边看到的是生，
而往另一边看到的
则是死，
恰如两片深不可测、
美不胜收、
波光粼粼的大海……”

1.“是下午一点，大人！”

因为部长是一个大胖子，且有中风的可能，因此，在通报一桩针对他的严重预谋犯罪的时候，警务处长小心翼翼，以避免引起不必要的激动而导致危险情况发生。看到部长听到他这消息还算平静，甚至还面带微笑，他便又进一步汇报了一些细节：犯罪预计在明天白天部长出发进宫觐见时实施；几个恐怖分子下午一点会持枪弹埋伏在大门口等他出现，但这伙人已经被奸细出卖。目前正密切监视其动向，在这里将会把他们一网打尽。

“等一下，”部长觉得奇怪，“他们从哪儿得到消息说我要在下午一点出门？我自己都是两天前才知道要去觐见！”

警务处长也满是困惑地双手一摊：

“是下午一点，大人。”

部长摇了摇头，不知道是觉得奇怪，还是对警方周密的部署表示赞赏，他肥厚的红嘴唇上浮起一丝忧郁的微笑，这笑容一直停留在脸上。为了不干涉警方接下来的工作，他很快就收拾好了东西，带着妻子和两个孩子一同离开了宅邸。他们借住到一位殷勤好客的皇亲府上，空留一座明天暴徒会聚集的危险房子。

在灯火通明的皇亲家里，熟识的客人们彬彬有礼，不断向部长致意，微笑着表示出他们对此事的愤慨，部长感到了愉悦的亢奋——就仿佛他已经得到或者就要被授予一枚不期而至的硕大勋章。但在客人们均已离开，灯火已息的子夜时分，街灯透过镜子般的玻璃反射到天花板上，光怪陆离的影子愈显周围的寂然，这位高官睡在满是绘画和雕像的陌生房子里，形影相吊，自己无事也无聊，不安的思绪便泛滥开来，觉得门闩、警卫和墙壁都不可靠。他睡在冷清、寂寞的别人卧室里，难以抑制的恐惧袭上心头。

他有严重的肾病，一旦过于激动，脸、手和脚就会出现水肿，使他看起来更加肥胖和臃肿。此时，他浑身肥胖的肉犹如小山一般沉甸甸地压在弹簧床上，他满怀着病人的郁闷，感觉着这张肿得面目全非的脸，并且一直在不停地想别人给自己预备的残酷结局。他接二连三地回想起不久前发生的恐怖事件，都是往显贵们身上扔炸弹，有的还是比他级别还高的大臣。他们被炸得血肉横飞，脑浆迸出并飞溅

到肮脏的砖墙上，连牙齿都炸脱落了。由于这些接二连三的回亿，他觉得这瘫在床上的肥胖病躯已经不是自己的了，似乎已经遭受了炸弹的袭击；他觉得，肩膀上的双臂已经被炸离躯干，牙齿都进出牙床，脑浆也进得星星点点到处都是，双腿僵直伸着，脚趾朝上，跟一具死尸一样。为了显示自己还活着，并非一具死尸，他使劲翻身，大声喘气，咳嗽几声，用力压得弹簧床吱嘎作响，不停地把被子弄出窸窣窸窣的声音。为了显示自己还活得很好，根本没死，离死还大老远呢，他在寂静无人的卧室里用低沉的嗓音大喊：

“好样的！好样的！好样的！”

他这是在夸赞密探、警察和卫兵们，他们保卫着他的生命安全，那么及时、那么巧妙地提前告知了他有关暗杀的情报。但是，在他晃动着身体、称赞安保人员并撇着嘴巴勉强挤出笑容嘲讽不走运的恐怖分子时，他仍然不相信自己会获救，不相信生命猝然离去只是假设。别人想要杀死他，尽管那只是想法、只是预谋，但仿佛死亡已经站在这屋子里，在歹徒没有抓到前、在他们手上的炸弹没有被夺下来之前，在他们没有被关进坚固的大牢之前，死亡会一直盘踞此地不会离开。瞧，死亡就站在那个角落里，没有走，也不会走掉——它就像一个服从命令的哨兵，绝不会擅离岗位。

“是下午一点，大人。”这句话以不同语调在他的脑海中时起时落：一会儿是幸灾乐祸的嘲笑，一会儿是怒气冲冲的大叫，一会儿是固执的警告和死板的重复。就好像卧室里摆上了几百台上足了发条的唱机，它们一台接一台地以白痴才有的那种勤奋的傻劲儿，叫喊着预先灌制的这句话：

“是下午一点，大人。”

明天的这个“下午一点”，不久前还和其他钟点没有任何区别，无非就是表盘上的指针沿着刻度盘平缓移动而表示的一个时刻而已，而现在它突然就变成了必然会应验的一个凶兆，它跳出了刻度盘，单独存在，身子竖直，像一根巨大的黑色界标，把全部生活一分为二。仿佛在它之前或者在它之后，世界上从未存在过其他的钟点，只有它这一个钟点，可以放肆和自命不凡地拥有特别存在的权利。

“怎么？你想干什么？”部长气呼呼地小声问。

所有唱机一起大声吼叫：

“是下午一点，大人。”而且，好像屋角的那根黑色界标还冷笑着给他鞠了一个躬。

部长咬牙撑着从床上坐了起来，手掌捂着脸，在这个该死的夜晚，他是不能睡着觉了。

他用肿胀得厉害的手掌捂着脸，特别清晰地想象着一幅画面，即明天早晨他一起床，什么也不知道，就喝上了咖啡，什么也不知道，就在门厅里穿上了外衣。无论是他，还是递给他大衣的看门人，还是给他端咖啡的听差都不知道即将发生的事，他们一千人完全没有料到喝咖啡、穿大衣这等事情都毫无意义，因为就只过了几秒钟，大衣，他的身体，喝进肚里的咖啡，都会被炸弹毁灭、被死神带走。瞧，这个看门人正在打开玻璃大门……他长得可爱、善良又和气，这位长着一双宝蓝色眼睛的士兵，胸前佩戴着一大排军功章，他亲手打开了那扇恐怖的大门，因为他对即将发生的事情一无所知。所有人都微笑着，因为所有人都对即将发生的事情一无所知。

“啊！”他突然大叫一声，把两个手掌从脸上放了下来。他面前是一片黑暗，他紧张地盯着这片黑暗，慢慢地伸出手，摸索到电灯开关，把灯拧亮。然后他站起来，也不穿鞋，光着脚走过地毯，在陌生卧室里走了一圈，找到了壁灯开关，也拧开了壁灯。屋子里亮了，看起来很舒适，只有乱糟糟的床铺摊着一堆被子直拖到地上，表明某种恐惧还未走远。

部长就这样穿着睡衣，胡子也因刚才的辗转反侧而弄得乱蓬蓬的，他的双眼满是愤怒，那模样跟任何一个因失眠和气喘而大动肝火的老头儿毫无二致。好像人们为他准备的死亡把他剥得一丝不挂一样，一下子就失去了原先举手投足间的器宇轩昂和威风凛凛——让人很难相信，现在这样一个人会拥有那样大的权力，这样一个普普通通的人的躯体竟会死得这么惨，会在威力惊人的炸弹的爆炸声中和火光中血肉横飞。他没有穿好衣服，也感觉不到冷，就坐到离自己最近的一把扶手椅上，手捻着蓬乱的胡子，直愣愣地盯着别人家的雕花天花板，陷入了无边的沉思中。

原来是这么回事！原来令他这么害怕、这么激动不安的是这个原因！原来是这个原因令死亡盘踞在屋角不肯离去，也不能离去！

“一群蠢货！”他轻蔑地狠狠骂道。

“一群蠢货！”他把头转向门口，又大声地骂了一句，让那些被骂的人听见好了。就在刚才他还称赞那些家伙呢，现在他骂他们为了多余的献殷勤而把密谋行刺的事详细地汇报给他。

“当然就是这么回事啦！”他的思路突然变得顺畅了，“就是他们告诉我暗杀的事了，我知道了，现在才这么害怕，要是我什么都不知道，我不就能安稳地喝咖啡了吗？当然了，喝了咖啡后死神还会来——但难道我这么怕死吗？对，我有肾病，总有一天会死，但什么也不知道的话就不会这么害怕。这帮蠢货非要说，是下午一点，大人。这帮蠢货还以为我听了会高兴，高兴什么呀，倒把死神弄墙角来了，

还怎么都轰不走。它不走，是因为我一直在想它。其实可怕的不是死亡本身，而是你知道自己的死期，如果一个人要是准确无误地知道自己的死亡日期和时辰，那他就完全没法儿活了。而这帮蠢货却提前告知说：“是下午一点，大人！””

这么一想，他心情立刻轻松愉快了，好像是有谁说他长生不老了一样。他重新觉得自己在那帮蠢货中间是一个强大又聪明的人，不像他们那样毫无意义地窥探未来的秘密，他陷入了饱经沧桑的老人和病后余生之人的那类思绪中，即什么都不知道最好。不要让任何有生命的东西，包括任何人、任何禽兽知道自己的死亡日期和时辰。前不久他病了一场，医生说，他快要死了，应当安排一下后事，他根本不相信，这不也活下来了。年轻时候也有过类似事情：他曾误入歧途，想以自杀结束自己生命。他准备了一把左轮手枪，连遗书都写好了，甚至自杀时间就定在下午一点——但就在最后那一刻，不知为什么他突然改变主意了。总是这样，总是在最后的时刻会有突如其来的、意想不到的情况出现，正因为如此，谁也不能轻易断言自己什么时候会死。

“是下午一点，大人”，那些蠢货讨好地来告知他，是因为死亡的威胁会被排除，然而，他却因为知道了可能的死亡时间而惊恐不已。完全有可能，他某一天会被人杀死，但不会是明天——明天不会发生这一幕、明天不会发生这一幕——要是这样，他就能像一个长生不老的人一样放心上床去睡觉了。可是，这帮蠢货，他们不知道，他们推翻了一个多么伟大的铁律，当他们说出了那句白痴一样的呓语“是下午一点，大人”的时候，他们捅下了一个多大的娄子。

“不，不是下午一点，大人，不知道是什么时候。不知道是什么时候。你说什么？”

“没说什么，”黑暗中有个声音回答，“没说什么。”

“不，你说了。”

“没说什么，小事一桩。我说的是：明天，下午一点。”

顿时一种猝不及防的极度惊恐掠过心头，他明白了，只要这个该死的、跳出了表盘的时辰不过去，他就绝无任何美梦可做了，也不会有什么安宁，更谈不上什么高兴。只要那桩任何有生命的东西都不该提前知道的事还在墙角暗影幢幢，那就足以让人看不见一丝光亮，永远处于恐怖的黑暗中。死亡的恐惧一旦袭来，就会弥漫全身，渗入骨髓，令人失魂落魄，寝食难安。

此刻他害怕的已经不是明天的那些杀人犯了，他们连同他周围数不清的，充满敌意的人和事混在一起，被他忘却了。现在需要担心的是某些遽然来临的和不可避免发生的事情：中风、心力衰竭、某根纤

细的血管栓塞溢血导致动脉破裂，就像紧紧绷在肿胀粗大手指上的手套突然绽裂开了一样。

他开始担心自己又短又肥的脖子，看自己肿胀且汗津津的短手指，觉得自己的手难看得要命。如果说，刚才他还在黑暗中不停地翻身以便不像个死尸，那么现在，在明晃晃的、充满冷淡敌意的灯光下，他倒害怕得一动也不敢动了——连按铃叫人给拿支香烟都不敢了。他的神经处于极度紧张之中。每根神经都像是一根金属导线，上方弯曲成一个小脑袋，脑袋上的眼睛惊恐万分地凸鼓出来，口不出声，气喘吁吁，但呼吸不到一点儿空气。

突然间，在天花板布满灰尘和蜘蛛网的昏暗之处，铃声骤然响起。电铃盒里的金属舌片在恐惧氛围中痉挛般地敲击盒壁，停了一小会儿，接着又开始可怕地持续不断地颤动着敲击起来。这是部长大人在他住的卧室里按的电铃。

外面开始有人忙乱地奔跑。各处的枝形吊灯和墙上的壁灯都打开了几盏——照明足够了，但还不是灯火通明，阴影随之投射下来。一时间，天花板上、角落里，都布满了拉得长长的影子，它们闪闪缩缩地掠过每一处隆起的家具，紧贴到墙壁上去。真弄不明白，这些数不清的无声而丑陋的阴影、这些无声无息的幽灵一样的东西，在未开灯前到底所居何处呢。

有人用战战兢兢的声音说了句话，然后就打电话叫医生了：部长病情危笃，已经昏迷，部长的夫人也被请了过来。

2.判处绞刑

结果和警方预料的一样。在部长家大门口，四个恐怖分子，三男一女携带定时炸弹和手枪一出现就被当场逮捕，第五个也在租住房子里被抓获，就是这个秘密住所的女主人。在这里还起获了不少的炸药、半成品炸弹和武器。所有嫌疑犯都很年轻：男犯中最大的二十八岁，女犯中最小那个是十九岁。就在关押他们的监狱进行了审判，在那个残酷的年代，这种事总是迅速而草率。

五个人在法庭上都很镇定，面容肃穆，十分沉静，他们对法官的蔑视是如此之深，以至于没有人愿意用不必要的微笑或假装的喜悦来强调他们的勇气。他们的镇定自如隔绝了法庭上其他人凶狠的、充满敌意的目光，使自己的心灵和临死前的痛苦不被任何人窥探到。有时他们拒绝回答问题，有时回答——但都很简短、直白、准确，就好像不是在回答法官的提问，而是在回应统计师要求填写的某种特殊表格一样。有三个人，一个女的和两个男的，说出了自己的真实姓名，另外两个人则拒绝招供自己的真名实姓，所以法官最后也不知道他们姓甚名谁。他们对法庭上所进行的一切都抱有一种病人或者身临大事之人才有的好奇心，既心不在焉又思绪潮涌。如果法庭上有人讲了一句比较有趣的话，那他们就会张望一下，认真听进去，随即就会继续以沉思状回到自己的思绪中。

离法官最近的位置坐着那位报出了自己真实姓名的年轻人——谢尔盖·戈洛温，他是退伍上校的儿子，自己也曾是军官。他还相当年轻，头发浅黄，宽肩膀，身体强壮结实，以至于无论是监禁还是即将来临的死刑都未能抹去他脸颊上的红晕和蓝眼睛里孩子般天真的幸福表情。他一直不停地抚弄自己那两撇小胡子——他对自己的小胡子还不太习惯呢，同时眯着双眼，一直盯着窗外看。

时值暮冬，在暴风雪和阴冷天气交替的时段，春天早已经别奏先声，有时一天都会是阳光灿烂的日子，有时这种好天气也就仅有一小时，但即使短暂，它生机勃勃的气息也令街道上的麻雀快活得发疯，路上行人也十分沉醉。此刻，窗户上落满了去夏以来不曾擦拭的灰尘，透过上端的玻璃可以看到出奇的美丽：乍一看，天空似薄雾朦胧，可往远处看的话，天空开始变蓝，而且越远越蓝、越晶莹、越辽阔。正因为天空并不是全然的一览无余，所以，在透明青烟般的云霭

中，它就显得像你爱上的姑娘一样，含羞而立，楚楚动人。谢尔盖·戈洛温仰望着这一小片晴空，轻抚着小胡子，左右变换着眯缝着双眼，若有所思。有那么一小会儿，他甚至弹拨起手指来，高兴而天真地做了一个鬼脸——但环顾了一下四周，刚才高兴的表情就消失得无影无踪了，就像上去一脚踩灭了一点儿火星。几乎就是在瞬间，他的脸色由鲜红变得煞白，露出了死灰色。他从头上狠狠地拔下一根又细又软的头发，用两根没有血色的手指紧紧拈着。但，生命和春天的喜悦是更强大的——只过了几分钟，他那天真无邪的脸庞又恢复了原来生机勃勃的天真表情，他又开始仰望天空了。

同时仰望天空的还有那个不肯供出自己真名实姓的姑娘，她化名叫穆夏。这是一个比戈洛温还年轻的姑娘，有着白皙的皮肤，举止老成持重，一双黑眼睛直率而骄傲。但她那细嫩的脖子和少女的手臂，以及浑身上下同样不可捉摸的青春活力，还有古典乐器般令人惊叹的纯净悦耳的嗓音，都说明着她的年龄。她肤色很白，但不是那种死尸般的惨白，而是一种特别热烈的洁白，就好比是一个人体内燃烧着熊熊烈火，身体发出透明的光亮，像法国的塞夫勒瓷器一样。她几乎一动也不动地坐着，只是偶尔难以察觉地用手指抚摸一下右手中指上深凹的一小圈，这是不久前刚摘下戒指所留的痕迹。她仰望天空时毫无温情，也没有陷入某种愉快的回忆之中，她之所以只望着那里，完全是因为在整个肮脏的监狱法庭里，唯有这一小块蓝色的天空是美丽、干净和真实的——她的眼睛里什么表情也没有。

法官们可怜谢尔盖·戈洛温，却讨厌这姑娘。

穆夏身旁的男子也一动不动地坐着，双手夹在膝盖中间，他也没有报出真名实姓，他的化名是维尔纳。如果假设一个人的脸可以像道大门一样，关紧时可以密不透风的话，那么现在这个无名氏的脸就像是一道关严的大门，还有铁将军把门。他一直盯着脚下肮脏的地板，谁也猜不透他是平静还是一直在激动，是在想心事还是在倾听法庭上密探的陈词。他个子不高，容貌清秀而高贵。一副温文尔雅的长相令人很容易想到南方月夜海边婆娑柏树的身影，但同时，他又会使人觉察到一种巨大的沉着冷静的力量，浑身散发出不可战胜的坚强、冷静和刚毅的英雄气概。他彬彬有礼地回答问题，总是简明扼要，并微微欠身向前，他有一种震撼人心的力量。如果说，囚衣穿在别人身上多少有那么一点儿荒唐的话——这根本不是人穿的——穿在他身上则完全不一样了。从恐怖分子身上搜到了武器和定时炸弹，但在维尔纳的身上只搜到了一把黑色手枪，法官据此就认定他是首犯，对他的态度相当恭敬，规规矩矩地公事公办。

在维尔纳之后受审的是瓦西里·卡希林，他呢，浑身上下充满了难以克制的死亡恐惧，并且无望地竭力控制着自己，不想在法官面前

流露出自己的恐惧。从一大早把他们这些人提审到法庭上来时，他就开始心跳加速喘不上气来，他的额头上一直冷汗不断，手上也浸透了冷汗，身上的冷汗更是已经湿透了衬衫，使他难以动弹。他正在以非凡的力量竭力控制手指不哆嗦，抑制说话的声音，让它更坚定、明确，让自己的眼神显得镇静。他看不清自己周围的东西，法官的问话像是从雾霭中穿过似的缥缈，他尽力回答得大声而坚决。但一回答完毕，他就忘记了法官的问话，也忘了自己回答的内容，重新回到与恐惧的默默搏斗中。死亡在他的身上表现得如此明显，以至于法官都刻意不去看他，也很难确定他的年龄，就像无法确定一具死尸的准确年龄一样。根据身份证，他才二十三岁。维尔纳几次用手触碰他的膝盖，他总是回答同一个词：

“没事儿。”

瓦西里·卡希林最怕自己会突然大喊大叫起来，没有话语——而是像野兽一样嚎叫。那时他就会轻轻地碰一下身旁的维尔纳，而这位连眼睛也没抬一下，低声回答：

“没事儿的，瓦夏 [1]。很快就结束了。”

一直在为同伴们担惊受怕的是第五位恐怖分子，用她那充满母爱的眼神不住地望着所有同道，她叫丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克。她还没有生过孩子，同谢尔盖·戈洛温一样，年轻的脸蛋绯红，可她却像是这些人的母亲一样：微笑里、眼神中、害怕的表情里，满是关切，满是慈爱。她对法庭视若无睹，就好像与己毫不相干，只是在倾听同伴们对质询的回答：声音是否颤抖、是否过于害怕、是否需要喝水。

在瓦夏受审时，她难过得不敢看他，只是悄悄地捏自己的胖手指。而在穆夏和维尔纳受审时，她就骄傲地钦佩不已地注视着他们，脸色严肃专注，不时地向谢尔盖·戈洛温报以微笑。

“可爱的孩子，正在仰望这天空呢。看吧，看吧，可爱的小鸽子，”她就这样心里想着戈洛温，“哎呀，瓦夏呀？我的天哪，他怎么会这样子呢？我的天哪……我能拿他怎么办呢？说什么呢？说了会更糟糕：万一他哭起来可如何是好呢？”

就像日光潋潋的池塘，能够映射出所有流云的倒影一样，她那丰腴、可爱、善良的脸上反映出另外四个人情感的瞬息万变，思虑的上下浮动。她完全将自己也在受审，将被判处绞刑的这些事置于一边，连想都不去想，漠然处之。就是在她的家里搜查出来的武器和炸药，而且，说起来也奇怪——正是她开枪拒捕并打伤了一个密探。

审讯在八点钟结束，天已经完全黑下来了。穆夏和谢尔盖眼前的蓝色天空暗淡了，但不像夏天天空那样，红霞尽染，笑意迭出，而是渐渐暗下来，渐渐发灰，又突然变成了一副寒冷的冬夜模样。戈洛温

叹了一口气，伸了伸腰，又看了两眼窗外，外面已经是漆黑夜色。他抚弄着小胡子，以一种小孩般的好奇心打量起法庭和荷枪的法警，对着丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克微笑了一下。穆夏呢，在天空变暗后，就将目光转到角落里，不是看地下，而是观察被供暖的气流冲压得不停摇曳的一张蜘蛛网，目不转睛直到宣判。

宣判后，被告们就和辩护律师告别，竭力回避律师们因无能为力而深感歉意的怜悯目光，被告们也在门口碰头简单交谈了几句。

“没事的，瓦夏。一切很快都会结束的。”维尔纳说道。

“是啊，老弟，我没事的。”卡希林大声回答，嗓音坚决甚至还挺愉快。

确实，他的脸已经泛起红晕，不再像一具死尸了。

“见他妈的鬼去吧！这帮浑蛋竟敢判我们绞刑。”戈洛温毫无顾忌地大骂起来。

“这是早就应该预料到的。”维尔纳倒是平静。

“明天宣布终审判决，这以后我们就会关押在一起了。”科瓦利丘克安慰大家，“直到行刑前，我们都将在一起。”

穆夏一直没有说话。后来她挺直身体，果断地走到最前面去了。

3.“不该绞死我”

在审讯恐怖分子的半个月前，在同一个地方的军事法庭，由另一批法官，把一个名叫伊万·扬松的农民判处了绞刑。

这个扬松原本是一个富裕农场主家里的长工，同所有孤苦伶仃的穷雇工没什么区别。他是爱沙尼亚人，出生在维森别格，长大后四处漂泊，从一个农场到另一个农场，靠打短工过活，几年之后来到了首都附近。他俄语说得不好，但雇他的主人却是一个名叫拉扎列夫的俄罗斯人，住处附近没有爱沙尼亚人，所以两年多的时间里，他几乎没怎么说过话。看来，他也是一个不怎么爱说话的人，不仅对人不爱说话，而且对牲口也吝于开口：他就默然无声地饮马、套马，整天无精打采地、慢腾腾地在马棚周围挪着小碎步，要是马都腻烦了他的沉默寡言、跳起来尥蹶子的时候，他就扬起长鞭子默默地、狠狠地抽打它。他一旦打起牲口来就毫不手软，残忍、凶狠、冷酷，而且这种事要是发生在他正好喝得酩酊大醉的时候，那就会下死手猛抽牲口。那时，就是在正屋都能听到呼呼的鞭子声和因剧痛而跺得凌乱的马蹄子声。因为扬松打马，雇主曾打过他，但什么也改变不了，扬松依然故我，无奈只好随他去了。每个月扬松都会大醉那么一两回，通常都是在他送雇主去车站后。那个车站比较大，有一家餐馆，把雇主送到后，他就赶车到离车站半俄里 [2] 远的地方，把马和雪橇赶进远离路边的雪地里，雪橇和马斜倒在雪堆中，等着火车开走。雪橇歪在路边，而马陷进齐肚子深的雪里，支棱着腿，不时地伸长脖子来舔几口松软的浮雪，而扬松就歪躺在雪橇上，好像是在打盹儿。他头上扣着一顶破皮帽子，上面的毛快掉光了，帽耳没有系好，像猎犬的两只耳朵一般向下耷拉着，冻得通红的小鼻子下淌着湿漉漉的鼻涕。

紧接着，扬松便返回车站的餐馆，喝个大醉而归。

从车站回到农场总共有十俄里路，他简直是策马疾驰。由于不停地被鞭打，马惊恐地扬起四蹄飞奔，扬松连缰绳也不握，雪橇忽左忽右，老是撞上路旁的界碑，人也处于随时要飞出去的危险中。但扬松不以为意，似唱非唱地哼唧着某种爱沙尼亚小曲儿，既不连贯也不清晰。有的路段里扬松就不唱了，而是咬紧牙关，一声不响，怀着一种莫名的痛苦、愤怒和亢奋，瞎子一般抽打着马向前飞奔，看不见迎面走过来的人，看见了也不管，拐弯和下坡时也不放慢疯狂飞驰的速度。

度。在野蛮的驾驶中，他没轧着别人，自己也没摔死——这真是不可思议。

很早就应该把他解雇，就像他在别的地方被撵走一样，但他要的工钱便宜，别的雇工也好不到哪儿去，所以他在这里干了两年。扬松的生活里没有什么大事。有一次他收到一封信，是用爱沙尼亚文写的，可他一个大字不识，别人也不懂爱沙尼亚文，所以这封信一直没读过。扬松弄不懂这封信给他带来了家乡的什么消息，就像没开化的野蛮人那样，冷漠地把信扔到粪堆里去了。扬松试着对厨娘献过殷勤，看得出来，他想女人了，但没得手，只招来了粗暴的拒绝和一顿奚落：嫌他个子小，身子骨弱，还一脸雀斑，说他总是睡眠惺忪的小绿眼睛浑浊得啥也看不清。扬松对这次碰钉子倒不大在乎，后来也就不再去纠缠厨娘了。

扬松虽然不怎么说话，却时刻在倾听着什么。他听白雪覆盖在荒凉的田野上的动静，听白雪覆盖着的鼓得像坟包一样的粪堆的动静，听着柔和的蓝色的远方的动静，听着风声掠过电线杆，听人们的谈话声。田野和电线杆子能告诉他什么，只有他一个人知道，而人们的谈话则令人不安，充斥着凶杀、抢劫和纵火等流言。有一天夜里，他听到邻村小教堂的钟声像小铃铛一样叮当地响个不停，接着火焰就冲上了天：原来不知从哪里来了一伙人抢劫了一家富户，打死了主人和他的妻子，把他们家放火烧了。

于是这边农场里的人也都惶惶不安起来：不仅是在夜里，就是白天也把狗放出来看家，夜里主人枪不离身。他本来想把一支旧的单筒猎枪交到扬松手上以备不时之需，但扬松掂了掂枪，摇了摇头，不知为什么拒绝了。主人不明白他为什么不要，就骂了他一顿，而扬松拒绝的原因，是他认为自己那把芬兰刀比这生锈了的旧家伙好使多了。

“我拿它只会把自己打死。”扬松还是用他那睡眠惺忪的目光望着主人说。

主人只好无可奈何地挥了挥手：“伊万，你这家伙真是个傻瓜蛋。跟这样的雇工过日子也真糟心。”

就是这个连枪都不相信的伊万·扬松在一个冬天的夜晚，在另一个雇工被派到车站去的时候，犯下了一桩集持刀抢劫、凶杀和强奸的极其复杂的刑事罪。他倒是做得干脆利落：先是把厨娘反锁在厨房，然后装出一副睡眠惺忪、困倦已极的样子，走到男主人背后，特别迅速地在背上猛戳了两刀，男主人立刻失去了知觉，倒在了地上，女主人方寸大乱，尖叫不已，扬松龇牙咧嘴地举着刀开始翻箱倒柜。出乎了他自己的预料，在找到钱后，就像是突然发现了团团乱转的女主人一样，他猛地扑向女主人，想要强奸她。但是因为他把刀子放到一旁

了，女主人力气比他大，反倒差点把他掐死。这时昏倒在地的主人醒过来了，厨娘也抄了炉钩子开始拼命地砸厨房的门，扬松就跑到外面去了。过了一小时，正当扬松蹲在仓房角落里一根接一根地划火柴意欲纵火时，他被当场抓住。

过了几天，男主人因伤口感染破伤风死了，而扬松和其他一批抢劫犯、杀人犯一起受审，并且被判处绞刑。在法庭上他还是依然故我的样子：又瘦又小，满脸雀斑，永远睡眠惺忪，好像完全不明白所发生事情的严重性，所以也满不在乎：扑闪着白睫毛，傻呆呆地张望着从没来过的庄严大堂，用粗糙、僵直的手指抠着鼻屎。只有每逢礼拜天在教堂见过他的人才知道，他也多少拾掇了一下：脖子上围了一条脏兮兮的红围巾，头发用水抿了抿；用水抿到的头发黑且平整，没有抿到的头发就稀稀拉拉地翘着，就像冰雹砸过的地里面仅剩的几根麦秸秆。

当宣布判决结果为绞刑的时候，扬松突然激动起来。他的脸涨得通红，来来回回地撕扯红围巾，就像围巾勒得他上不来气一样。然后他又无措地挥舞着双手，用手指头指着那个刚才宣读判决的法官，对没有宣读判决的另一个法官说：

“她说，她要把我绞死。”

“‘她’是谁？”刚读完判决的法官用浑厚的低音问道。

法庭上所有人都笑了，有人低头笑，有人用卷宗掩住嘴，而扬松伸出食指对着问话的法官，生气地说：

“就是你！”

“啊？”

扬松又把目光投向另一个竭力忍住笑的法官，他觉得这个人是他的朋友，和判决毫不相干，就对着这个人又说了一遍：

“她说的，要绞死我。不该绞死我。”

“把被告带下去。”

可扬松还是明确地、大声地重复了一遍：

“不该绞死我。”

他那想装成庄重的样子和他的愤怒小脸、伸得僵直的手指更显其愚不可言，以至于连押送他的士兵都忍不住违反了规则，小声对他说：

“唉，你这小伙儿，真是个傻瓜！”

“不该绞死我。”扬松固执地重复着。

“要是我有幸去吊死你，保管教你连腿都来不及蹬一下。”

“好了好了，少说两句！”另一个押送士兵生气地嚷嚷起来。但他自己也憋不住说，“谁让你当强盗了！你这傻瓜，你没弄死人吗？现在只能给你上绞索了。”

“你说，会赦免他吗？”第一个押送士兵有点儿可怜扬松了。

“怎么可能！怎么会赦免这种人呢……算了，说太多了。”

这时候扬松倒不说话了。他又被押回坐了一个多月的牢房，他对这间牢房已经习惯了，就像习惯所有事情一样：习惯挨打、习惯喝酒、习惯白雪覆盖的田野、习惯那上面满是圆圆坟包一样的粪堆。现在看到自己的床、自己的栅栏小窗和送来的囚饭——从早上起他还粒米未进，他甚至感到有点儿快乐。只有刚才在法庭上发生的一幕让他不太高兴，但他不懂得应该怎么去想，也不会去思考这些。至于用绞刑把人吊死，他完全不能想象。

尽管扬松被判处绞刑，但像他这样的犯人很多，他都算不上是监狱里的要犯，因此别人跟他谈话都没什么禁忌，也不会像对那些未定死罪的犯人一样有敌意。大家好像没有把他的死当成一回事。看守得知已经对他进行了判决，就用教训的口气跟他说话：

“怎么样？老弟，到底还是给你判了绞刑吧！”

“那啥时候绞死我呢？”扬松半信半疑地问人家。

看守想了一下。

“老弟呀，这你可得等等呢。怎么也得凑成一批才行。哪能光为你一个人行刑，况且你又是个糊涂蛋，哪里值得兴师动众。这种事可需要场面。”

“到底啥时候呢？”扬松固执地问。

对光为他一个人连个绞刑都不能办理这说法，扬松没感到屈辱，他也不相信这种说法有道理，而且，认定这只是一个拖延刑期的借口，最后应该会取消对他的判决。他立刻高兴起来：那个既模糊又可怕的时刻，那个想都不能想的时刻被推得远远的了，就像任何一种死法一样，变得神秘而不用去想了。

“老问啥时候，啥时候！”看守生气了，这是个古板、阴郁的老头子，“这可不是绞死一条狗，拉到棚子外面，找绳子一勒就得了。傻蛋，你就巴不得像狗一样报销掉吧！”

“我可不愿意那样！”扬松做了一个鬼脸，挺高兴地说，“这是她说的，应该把我绞死，我可不愿意！”

可能这是有生以来第一次，扬松大笑起来，笑声怪里怪气，愚蠢至极，但却相当快活和高兴。就像一只大鹅在“嘎——嘎——嘎”地叫着。看守吃惊地望着他，然后严厉地皱起了眉头：在他看来，一个被判处了绞刑的人开心大笑是荒唐的，是对监狱和死刑的极大不敬，把监狱和死刑都变成荒诞不经的事情了。于是，出现了那么一个瞬间，一个很短的瞬间，这个在监狱里度过了全部人生的老看守，这个默认监狱法则为自然法则的老看守，突然就觉得这里像是一个疯人院，而且，他，这个看守，才是这里的头号老疯子。

“呸，你这死鬼！”他吐了口唾沫，“干吗张牙舞爪地号叫，这又不是酒馆！”

“我可不愿意死啊！嘎——嘎——嘎！”扬松大笑不已。

“你这魔鬼！”看守一边骂，一边画着十字。

其实这个长了一张松弛小脸的人最不像魔鬼了，但是在他的嘎嘎怪笑声中有某种对监狱的牢固性和神圣性危害不已的东西。他再这么笑下去，这监狱的烂墙就会坍塌，潮湿的铁栅栏就会脱落，看守就会自动把囚犯送出大铁门……“先生们，请去城里溜达一圈吧，你们有人想去乡下兜个风吗？”真是个魔鬼呀！

但这会儿扬松已经不再笑了，只是恶魔一般地眯着眼睛。

“瞧，难怪会这样！”看守没有再威胁他，转身走了，一边走还一边回头看他。

整个晚上扬松都很平静、愉快。他自言自语、反复说他已经说过的话，“我不该被绞死”。在他看来，这句话是令人信服的、有智慧的、不容辩驳的，根本不值得去担心任何事了。他早就忘了自己犯罪这件事了，只是有时会遗憾没能强奸成女主人。不过，这事也很快就被忘得一干二净了。

每天早上扬松都要问，什么时候把他绞死；每天早上看守都没好气地回答：“你这魔鬼，别急，老实等着吧！”

由于天天都重复这个对话，由于每天的开始、经过和结束与寻常的日子毫无两样，扬松就更加确信，不会有把他绞死这个事了。他很快就忘记了法庭上的判决，开始整天在床上大睡特睡，迷迷糊糊地做着白日梦，梦到荒凉的有粪堆的田野覆盖着白雪，梦到火车站前的酒馆，还有许许多多更遥远更开心的事情。监狱里伙食尚可，很快，就几天的工夫，他就胖了，看上去气色不错。

“要是搁到现在，她说不定会爱上我呢，”他想起了女主人，“现在我胖了，不比主人差啥。”

只是他太想喝伏特加了，就想猛喝猛喝然后赶着马飞奔。

当一批恐怖分子被逮捕的消息传到监狱后，看守再回答扬松的问题就相当粗野并且完全出乎扬松的意料了：

“这下可快了。”

看守一字一顿地、居高临下地说：

“这下可快了。我觉得，也就一个星期的事儿啦。”

扬松的脸立刻就白了，两只浑浊的眼睛目光呆滞，一副失神的样子，他问道：

“你开玩笑吧？”

“你不是都等不及了吗，还开啥玩笑。我们这里可不兴开这种玩笑。你喜欢开玩笑，我们可不兴开玩笑。”看守一本正经地说完就走了。

一天下来扬松就瘦脱了人形。入狱这一段时间以来他胖了，皮肤光滑了，现在突然间有了很多皱纹，有的地方皮肤也下垂了。眼睛更浑浊了，行动起来呆板迟缓，好像动一动头部，动一动手指，迈一迈步子，都成了相当复杂的需要深思熟虑的头等大事。夜里，他躺在床上，合不上眼睛，直到早上仍然睡眠惺忪地睁着。

“啊哈！”看守早上一看到他就得意地说，“我说得对吧，老弟，这可不是小酒馆。”

看守这得意仿佛就像是一个学者再次验证了自己的实验结果一样，他从头到脚再次认真仔细地打量了犯人一番：现在一切都进入正轨了。魔鬼的报应来了，监狱和死刑的正当性再度确立，为了表示宽容，这老看守探问起犯人：

“有没有想会见的什么人呢？”

“为什么要会见？”

“嗨，告别呀。比如见一见母亲或者兄弟。”

“不应该绞死我，”扬松小声说，也斜着眼睛看了看守一眼，“我可不想被绞死。”

看守看了看他，啥也没说，挥了挥手走掉了。

傍晚，扬松的心情平静一些了。这一天相当平常，冬天的天空里云雾缭绕，走廊里仍然充斥着脚步声和例行公事的谈话声，酸白菜汤像以往一样散发出怪味，这一天太平常，以至于扬松又停止相信面临死刑这回事了。但一到了夜里，扬松又开始害怕了。从前他觉得夜里

就是黑暗而已，上床睡觉就行了。但现在他却感到夜晚有一种既神秘又令人恐惧的本质。为了不去相信面临的死亡，就需要听到和看到周围寻常的东西：比如脚步声、谈话声、光亮、酸白菜汤，而现在一切都不同寻常，这种寂静、这种黑暗，这本身就已经是死亡了。

而且夜越是深沉，恐惧就越是强烈。扬松像原始人或者小孩子一样天真，总是认为一切都是人力可为的，他特别想对太阳大叫一声：你快天亮吧！他心里恳求、哀告太阳快点升起来，但黑夜还在大地上拖延自己那黑暗的时刻，没有什么力量能够阻止它的蔓延。扬松笨拙的大脑第一次意识到了这个不可能，他感到了巨大的恐惧。尽管他还不敢明确地这样想，但他已经感到面临的死亡不可避免了，他的一只将死的脚已经踏上了断头台的第一级台阶。

白天的到来又安慰了他，他不去想死亡的事了，可一到夜晚，他又怕得要死，就这样，直到行刑的前三天夜里，他终于意识到和感觉到，死亡是不可避免的了，再过三天，一过黎明，太阳一升起来，他就要被绞死了。

他从未想过死亡这回事，也不知道死亡是咋回事——但现在他明确地感觉到、看到、触摸到了，死亡正在走进他的牢房，正在用手摩挲他。为了逃命，他在牢房里拼命跑了起来。

可是，牢房相当狭小，四个角落都不是直角，而是钝角，他就总是好像被推到屋子中央一样，无处可藏。门是上了锁的。天又亮了。有好几次他用身体去撞墙壁，又一次撞到了门上——那声音喑哑又空洞。后来不知又撞到了哪里，他就脸朝下跌倒了，顿时感到被死神抓住了。他趴在地上，肚子紧紧地贴在地上，一边使劲把脸往又黑又脏的沥青地面里藏，一边惊骇地号叫起来。他就趴在那里拼命地号哭，直到有人进来。大家把他拖起来，放到床上，劈头给他浇上凉水，可是扬松仍然紧闭双眼，一直不敢睁开。刚睁开一只眼，看到空荡荡有光亮的角落或者是看到了一只空靴子，他就又大声号叫起来。

但是，凉水开始起作用了。再加上看守就是那个老头子，为了让他清醒过来，照他头上就敲了几下子。于是，活人才有的感觉赶跑了死神，扬松睁开了眼睛，剩下来的后半夜他也就昏头涨脑地睡过去了。他仰着脸，大张着嘴，忽高忽低地打着很响的呼噜。微微张着的眼睛的缝隙中不见瞳孔，只有眼白，特别像死人的眼睛。

自这以后，无论是白天还是黑夜，无论是脚步声还是谈话声，无论是酸白菜汤味还是别的，都让他感到无所不在的恐怖，把他逼进了一种无可比拟的原始人状态中。他贫乏的思想力使其无法连接两种对立的矛盾概念：一种是普通的白天，散发着酸白菜汤的气味，一种是再过那么一两天他必须去死。他什么也不想，甚至也不去算时间，只

是惊恐地默默站在这一对矛盾面前，任凭这矛盾把他的脑子分成两半。他脸色变白了，但没有失去血色，也没有潮红，就是一副平静的样子。但不吃什么饭了，也不睡觉了，整夜都缩着双腿，坐在凳子上，或者悄无声息地东张西望，在牢房里环视左右地走来走去。

看到他变成这副样子，从牢房的监视小窗往里面看的看守们都兴味索然，不再注意他了。这是死囚正常的状态，据看守说——当然啦，他本人也从来没有这方面的经验——一头牲口在被人用斧子劈开头部进行宰杀前都是这副样子。

“现在他已经吓傻了，从现在起一直到死他什么感觉也都没有了。”看守用有经验者的眼光盯着他，喊他，“喂！伊万，你听得到我在叫你吗？啊，伊万？”

“不应该绞死我。”扬松无精打采，答非所问地说了这么一句，下颌又耷拉下来，没声了。

“你要是不杀人就不会绞死你了。”监狱长不忘教训他，虽然这人很年轻，但胸前却佩戴着勋章，很神气，“你杀了人，还想不上绞架啊。”

“想杀人不偿命？真是蠢到家了，还挺狡猾。”

“我不想被绞死。”扬松说。

“你不想就不想呗，亲爱的，咋想是你自己的事，”监狱长冷酷地说，“最好少说点蠢话，处理一下自己的财物。不管怎么说，总还有点什么要收拾的吧。”

“他啥也没有。他只有一件衬衫外加一条裤衩，还有一顶破皮帽子。就是个败家子！”

时间就这样过去了，已经到了星期四。这天午夜十二点钟，许多人拥进了扬松的牢房，其中一个戴肩章的人开口说道：“喂，收拾东西，该上路了。”

扬松的动作还是那么慢慢腾腾、无精打采，把他所有的衣服都穿上了，围上了那条脏兮兮的红围巾。戴肩章的先生抽着烟，一边看着他穿衣服，一边对身旁的人说：

“今天天儿不错，很暖和。完全到了春天了。”

扬松仍然一副睡眼惺忪的样子，他像睡着了一样，动作迟缓，看守就朝他吼叫：

“喂，快点，你睡着了吗！”

“我不想死。”他有气无力地说。

这些人抓住他的肩膀，架着他就走了，他耸着双肩，顺从地挪动着脚步。进到院子里后，一股潮湿空气袭来，他鼻子下边又湿漉漉的了。虽然是在半夜里，冰雪解冻得更快，附近有水滴不断落下来，滴在石头上，声音清晰可闻。卫兵们先是弯腰进入暗黑的囚车里，佩刀发出叮当的响声，扬松等着上车，懒洋洋地用手指去蹭鼻子下边滑溜溜的鼻涕，还拉了拉没有系好的围巾。

4.我们，奥勒尔省人

也是在同个地方军事法庭，同一批法官还审理了另一个案子，将一名奥勒尔省叶列茨县的农民判处了绞刑。他叫米哈伊尔·戈卢别茨，他是鞑靼人，有个外号叫米什卡·茨冈诺克。经查明，他最后一次作案是打死三人和持枪抢劫，而他的黑暗过去简直是一个谜团。有迹象表明，他曾经卷入了一系列抢劫和杀人案，一看他就是一个杀人放火、酗酒滋事的惯犯。他倒坦诚，直截了当地管自己叫强盗，对那些明明就是打劫却还时髦地打着“杀富济贫”旗号的土匪不屑一顾。他的最后一次犯罪，由于铁证如山无法抵赖，他也就痛快地承认了所有细节，但一问到他的行径，他就龇着牙吹口哨：

“都是些没影儿的事！”

当审讯人员步步紧逼的时候，茨冈诺克就会摆出一本正经的样子，大言不惭：

“我们所有奥勒尔省的人都是提着头闯荡出来的爷们儿，”他慢条斯理，不卑不亢地说，“奥勒尔人和科罗马人是头号窃贼。卡拉乔夫人和里文人让所有小偷甘拜下风。叶列茨人呢，那就是各路小偷的鼻祖。这还有什么弄不明白的呢！”

他就是因为长相和窃贼的好手法才被叫茨冈诺克 [3]。他身材瘦小，顶着一头黑得出奇的密发，脸上是鞑靼人特有的高颧骨，两块烧伤的黄疸痕像是装饰物。眼睛像是马眼睛一样总是翻着眼白，显出一副急不可耐的样子。他看人的时候目光停留时间很短，但毫无顾忌，充满好奇心，他看任何东西都像是把那东西的某一部分弄走了，把它变成了另外一件东西一样。他要是看一眼香烟，香烟就仿佛被别人放在嘴唇之间抽过一样，谁也不愿意再拿起来抽了。在他的身体里好像有某种永不安宁的东西，一会儿像火一样需要藏匿起来，一会儿像一捆向四处迸发火星的柴捆。倒也是，他口渴的时候，像一匹马一样，能喝好几桶水呢。

对法庭上向他提出的问题，他都跳起来，回答得简洁、坚决，很配合的样子：

“是的！”

有时候他还会强调一下：

“是的，没错！”

法庭上一提到别的案子，他就会出乎意料地站起来请求审判长：

“请让我吹个口哨再说！”

“这又是为什么？”庭长惊讶地问。

“他们不是招供说，是我给同伙打了暗号嘛，那就来一下，很好玩。”

庭长也有点儿疑惑，就同意了。茨冈诺克立刻将左右手各两根手指一起放进嘴里，双眼暴凸。死气沉沉的审判大厅里响起了野蛮的、真正强盗才有的呼哨声，这一声呼哨能立刻让马后腿直立、人脸失色。这是人之将死的哀愁，这是杀人者野蛮的狂喜，这是恐怖的警告，这是呼号，这是阴雨之夜的黑暗，这是孤独。这声尖锐的、非人非兽的号叫里包含着一切。

庭长大叫一声，抬手制止了茨冈诺克，他也就顺从地停下来了。这时他像一个刚刚唱完拿手咏叹调的演员一样，坐下来，开始用衣服擦那四根湿漉漉的手指，还颇为自得地环顾审判大厅里别人的反应。

“真是强盗！”一个法官揉着耳朵说道。

但另一个法官却笑着，不以为意，他眼睛和茨冈诺克的鞑靼人眼睛一样，却留着俄式的大胡子，一直越过茨冈诺克的头部，出神望着厅堂的高处。

“确实挺有趣。”

就这样，法官们冷静地、毫无怜悯之心地、深觉良心无愧地判了茨冈诺克死刑。

“判得好！”法官刚一读完判决书，茨冈诺克就说，“在旷野摆上一副绞刑架，判得好！”

说完，就转过身，对押解他的士兵来了一句：

“喂，窝囊废，咱们走吧。枪可抓紧点——小心我把它夺下来！”

士兵大气不敢出，提心吊胆地看着他，和同伴交换了一下眼色，手放在扳机上。另一个士兵也同样戒备起来。回监狱这一路上，两个士兵简直不是在走路，而是如履薄冰，穿云踏雾。他们全神贯注地监视犯人，丝毫感觉不到他们脚下踩的土地，既忘了时间，也忘了自己。

和扬松一样，米什卡·茨冈诺克死刑前也不得不在监狱度过十七天。这十七天对他来说，快得就像是一天——因为他想的都是怎么越狱逃跑，怎么自由自在，怎么活着。茨冈诺克天性不安宁，现在被禁

锢在高墙之内，坐在铁栅栏里，在不见天日的小窗下幽闭，使他愤懑不已，怒火中烧，像一块煤被扔在了旺火上。像极了喝醉了酒的时刻，许许多多迷乱的想法和鲜明的印象混合在一起，像不可遏制的旋风，忽明忽暗地从心底刮过，汇聚成一个念头——越狱逃跑，出去自在，好好活着。茨冈诺克有时候一连几小时，都像一匹马那样伸长脖子，翕动着鼻孔闻来嗅去——他觉得空气里有一股大麻的味道，有失火时的呛人的烟味，还有刺鼻的糊味；有时候，他像陀螺一样在牢房里打转，快速地用手摸一摸墙壁，敲几下，用目光打量和估测天花板和栅栏，想着把这些一股脑儿锯断。在监视孔里一直监视他的士兵，看他一刻不得安宁地折腾，有好几次威胁他说再不老实要开枪了。茨冈诺克可不害怕，总是反唇相讥。事情之所以没闹大，到头来相安无事，就是因为这种拌嘴很快能变成普通庄稼汉们满嘴脏话却并不伤人的常见阵势，为这种事就开枪既荒谬又没必要。

夜里茨冈诺克睡得很沉，几乎都不翻身，就保持一个不变的姿势，但也算睡姿生动，犹如一根暂时不动的弹簧。但只要一起床，他就立即开始满屋子打转，思来想去，摸来摸去。他的双手又干又热，但心里却不时生出凉意，就像胸口被塞进去了一块硬冰块，把他激得浑身上下打冷战。原本就皮肤黝黑的茨冈诺克现在更黑了，身上出现了铸铁才有的青黑色。现在他有了一个奇怪的习惯：就像吃了特别多的甜腻食物一样，他不停地舔嘴唇，吧嗒嘴，吐唾沫，总是一口就啐到地上。说话也不连贯起来，想法接二连三，舌头跟不上趟儿了。

有一次，白天的时候，监狱长在卫兵的陪同下进到了他的囚室。见到满地吐得脏乱不堪，就板着脸说：

“瞧你把这里吐得这么脏！”

茨冈诺克立刻反唇相讥：

“你这头肥猪把地球都弄脏了，我还没有骂你呢。你钻到这里来干吗？”

监狱长依然板着脸，提出让他当刽子手。茨冈诺克齙着牙，哈哈大笑起来。

“嗯哼，找不到人了？太好玩了！你们判绞刑，判绞刑，哈哈！脖子在、绳子有，没人帮你们吊起来。我的天啊，太好玩了！”

“你干了就能活命。”

“哼，那还用你说。我成了死人还哪能帮你绞死别人。你这傻瓜，净瞎说！”

“你怎么想的？对你来说，现在干什么不都一样吗？”

“你们这里怎么把人绞死？大概就悄悄弄死拉倒吧。”

“才不是，还奏乐呢。”监狱长没好气地说。

“还真是头蠢猪。当然，应当奏乐。那就来吧。”茨冈诺克开始唱一支雄壮的曲子。

“那么，亲爱的，你答应了？”监狱长说，“爽快点说吧。”

茨冈诺克龇了龇牙，说道：

“瞧把你急的！你下次来时，我再告诉你吧。”

在茨冈诺克许许多多迷乱的想法和鲜明的印象混合的大脑中，终于出现了一个新想法：当个穿大红袍子的刽子手也挺不错的呀。在他的头脑中越来越清晰地闪现出一个人头攒动的广场，断头台已经高高竖起，他，茨冈诺克，身穿大红袍子，手执一柄大斧子，逍遥地在周围踱步。太阳照射着人们的脑袋，日光在铮亮的大斧子上闪烁，一切都令人心满意足，连那个就要被砍头的家伙都在微笑。人群之后有许多四轮大车和马脸——那是从乡下进城的庄稼汉在看热闹，远处就是田野。

“呸！”茨冈诺克抿了抿嘴唇，把满口唾沫啐到地上。

突然间，就像是有人把他的皮帽子一把拉到嘴边一样，他感到又黑又闷，那块不化的冰又开始让他浑身打起冷战。

监狱长又来过两次，茨冈诺克也总是龇着牙说：

“瞧把你急的。下次来再说。”

终于有一天，看守对着监视小窗，匆匆地对他大声喊道：

“你错过了大好机会了，装腔的家伙！人家找到别人了！”

“那去你妈的吧！你自己去绞吧。”茨冈诺克回骂了一句，也就断了当刽子手的念想。

后来，离行刑时间越近，茨冈诺克的脑子就越乱，那些迷乱想法和鲜明印象令他难以忍受。他已经不想走来走去了，他想就叉开双腿，停止活动。但脑子里的想法就像极速流淌的激流一样推动着他，他抓不住任何东西，眼前的一切都在动态地流淌。他也开始睡不好觉了，总是做梦。这些梦就犹如乡下涂满色彩的短木头，既清晰又沉重，这些梦境比他的思想转换得还快。这已经不是一股激流，而是从万丈高山上倾泻而下的瀑布，掠过整个万花筒般的世界。在没被逮捕前，茨冈诺克蓄着相当时髦的小胡子，入狱后，却长出了又黑又硬的络腮胡子，这使他看上去特别吓人，好像是一个疯子。有的时候，他也确实疯疯癫癫地在牢房里转圈，一副神志不清的样子，但即使这

样，茨冈诺克也不忘去摸摸粗糙的泥灰墙。当然喝起水来还是像马一样狂饮。

有一天，已是黄昏时分，茨冈诺克趴在牢房的地上，像狼一样地哀嚎起来，声音令人胆寒。他特别起劲地嚎叫，就像在干一件必须完成的大事。他先是提一口气，然后慢慢地把这种特别发颤的嚎叫持续下来，他一边嚎叫，一边眯着眼睛调整气息。那来自嗓子眼的颤声似乎是精心设计出来的：他不是胡乱地叫喊，而是仔细地发出这野兽嚎哭的每个声调，令其有说不出的恐怖和哀伤。

后来，嚎哭突然停下了，他就趴在地上也没动弹，沉默了有几分钟。蓦然间，他对着地面慢声细语地喃喃起来：

“老兄们哪，亲爱的老兄们……可怜可怜我吧……老兄们！可爱的老兄们哪！”

而且就好像要倾听一下效果如何一样，每说一个词，就停顿一下。

后来，他就跳起来了——脏话连篇地骂了整整一个钟头，气都不喘一下。

“你们这帮浑蛋，都他妈的给我滚！”他两眼充血，大声咆哮，“绞死就绞死，别他妈的这样拖着……哼，你们都他妈的是浑蛋……”

看守他的士兵吓得够呛，脸色发白，又难过又害怕，就用枪戳牢门，无助地往里喊话：

“我要开枪了！天哪，再喊我真开枪了！你听见了没有！”

但是他不敢开枪，除非发生真正的暴动，是不允许对判死刑的犯人开枪的。茨冈诺克咬牙切齿地痛骂着，唾沫星子横飞——他的大脑被放在荒谬的生与死的尖锐的分界线上，像一块风干的泥巴，被分割得七零八落。

当夜幕降临时，许多人来到牢房，准备押他去行刑。这时他好像活过来了，又忙碌起来。他觉得嘴里更腥甜了，唾沫越来越多，但面颊变得红润了，眼睛里又出现了以前那种狡黠的神情。穿好衣服后，他就问提刑官：

“那么，是谁来绞死我呢？是个新手吗？手脚不利索可不行。”

“这事可不用你来操心。”提刑官面无表情地说。

“大人，我怎么能不操心呢，要被绞死的是我，而不是您。您别心疼，可得往绞索上多抹点肥皂哇。”

“行了，行了，你可别说话了。”

“不然的话，所有的肥皂都得被他贪了，”茨冈诺克指着监狱长说，“你看他肥头大耳的。”

“住嘴！”

“这下不心疼肥皂了吧！”

茨冈诺克哈哈大笑起来，但嘴里更甜了，突然就觉得腿部很奇怪地僵硬了。尽管如此，走到院子里时，他还是大声地喊了一嗓子：

“快把孟加拉伯爵的马车赶过来，接我上阵！”

5.吻一下就行——别说话

对五名恐怖分子的终审判决在宣判当天就获得核准。虽然没有通知被告行刑的时间，但按照惯例，他们也知道，当天夜里，或最迟第二天夜里，他们就会被绞死。当他们被告知，第二天，也就是周四可以会见亲属的时候，他们明白了，绞刑将在星期五的黎明时分进行。

丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克没什么近亲，远亲都住在偏僻的小俄罗斯[4]，也未必知道她受审和即将被处以绞刑的事；穆夏和维尔纳连自己的真名实姓都不说，当然也就更不会通知哪些亲属前来；只有谢尔盖·戈洛温和瓦西里·卡希林有可以会见的亲属。然而，他们两个一想到这次会面，就感到十分害怕，特别伤心难过，但还是不能狠下心来拒绝见自家老人最后一面，与他们做最后的道别，最后的拥吻。

谢尔盖·戈洛温为即将到来的会见痛苦不已。他很爱自己的父母亲，就在不久前还和他们朝夕相处，而现在却害怕见他们——天知道事情是怎样走到这一步的。绞刑本身不寻常且荒谬，会使人受到惊吓且失去理智，但只是想象它，就要来得容易些，它也就不见得有那么可怕，但与亲属会见的几分钟是短暂且混沌的，是完全超出时间，超出生活本身。看什么、想什么、说什么，人类的大脑无法想象这一切。平常最普通的也最常见的动作——拉起父亲的手，亲吻，说一句“你好哇，父亲”——在这个时刻简直是不可思议的荒唐行为，是极不人道和虚伪做作的表现了。

丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克以为判决后他们会被关在一起，实则不然，他们都被单独关押了。整个上午，直到十一点父母到来前，谢尔盖·戈洛温都在单人牢房里烦躁不安地走来走去，把小胡子揪得一缕缕，皱着眉头自言自语。有时会猛地站住，深深地吸上一口气，就像一个在深海里潜水的人需要换气一样。然而，他是一个十分健康的人，年轻的生命包含精力，即使这一刻心灵饱受折磨，他的脸颊仍是红润的，一双淡蓝色的眼睛仍然是明亮和纯洁的。

会见的过程比谢尔盖想象的要好得多。

最先走进会见室的是谢尔盖的父亲，尼古拉·谢尔盖耶维奇·戈洛温，他是一位已退休的上校。他浑身上下皆白，脸，胡子，头发，手，都是雪白的，就像穿衣服的雪人一样。他还穿着制服，是旧的，但熨烫得很平整，散发出汽油味，双肩上佩戴着肩章。父亲坚定、庄

重、步履矫健地走进来。他把白皙但干瘦的手伸出来，声音洪亮地说：

“你好哇，谢尔盖！”

母亲迈着碎步子跟着进来，特别不自然地微笑着。但也握了儿子的手，同样大声说：

“你好，谢廖扎 [5] ！”

母亲吻了吻儿子的嘴唇，就默默地坐了下来。出乎谢尔盖预料，母亲既没有悲伤地扑上来拥抱，也没有撕心裂肺地大哭大叫，更没有什么可怕的举动，只是那么亲了一下就默默地坐下了。甚至还用那双哆嗦的双手整理了一下穿的黑色丝绸连衣裙。

谢尔盖根本不知道，昨天一整夜，上校把自己关在书房里，苦思冥想才确定了这么个仪式。“我们在这最后的时刻，不应该增加儿子的精神痛苦，而是要尽量减轻他的心理负担。”上校定下了这个方案，并仔细斟酌了明天交谈时可能说的每句话、每个动作。但有时弄混了或者漏说了想说的某一句，上校就倒在书房一角的长沙发上伤心地啜泣好一会儿。第二天一大早，他就向老伴讲了一遍，在会见中应该注意哪些举止。

“最要紧的在于一开始，吻一下就行——别说话！”他教了老伴儿一遍，“然后，过一会儿你再说话，但吻儿子的时候，先别说话。不要在吻了后立刻说话，明白了吗？否则会很不得体。”

“我明白的，尼古拉·谢尔盖耶维奇。”老伴儿哭着回答他。

“而且你一定不要哭。千万不能哭哇！老太婆，你要是一哭，就等于要了他的命啊！”

“那你自己不是也在哭吗？”

“这不陪你哭吗！见面时不要哭，听见了吗？”

“好的，尼古拉·谢尔盖耶维奇。”

上校本来想着在马车上他再叮嘱一遍老伴儿，但自己却忘记了。就这样，他们一路沉默着，两个白发苍苍的老人，弯腰驼背地想着心事，而身外的整个城市都在喧嚣着，一片祥和气氛。时值谢肉节 [6]，街上熙熙攘攘，人来人往。

三口人都坐下了。上校以惯常的姿势，左手按住制服的前襟，准备说话。谢尔盖刚一坐下，抬眼看到对面母亲那张满是皱纹的脸，立即又站起来了。

“坐下吧，谢廖扎。”母亲恳求他。

“你坐下，谢尔盖。”父亲也附和母亲道。

大家都默不作声。母亲不自然地微笑了一下。

“我们一直在努力营救你，谢廖扎。”

“好妈妈，那不可能了……”

上校坚决地说：

“这是我们应该做的，谢尔盖，这样你会知道，父母不会抛下你。”

又是一阵沉默。三个人都害怕说话，仿佛话一到嘴边就会失去该有的意义，而变成死亡的同义词了。谢尔盖瞥了一眼父亲身上穿的旧制服干干净净，仍旧散发出汽油味，心想：“现在他也没有勤务兵了，肯定是他自己熨烫干净的。怎么以前我从没有发现他能做这种事？大概，一早起来就干这事了。”所以下意识地，突然他就开口了：

“妹妹怎么样？她还好吗？”

“尼诺奇卡到现在还什么也不知道呢。”母亲赶紧接上话。

但上校严厉地制止了这个话头：

“为什么撒谎？小姑娘都在报纸上读到了这个消息。要让谢尔盖知道，所有的亲人，在这种时候……也都挂念着……”

他说不下去了，就立刻停住了。母亲的脸色立时皱成一团，悲苦地颤动起来，泪水瞬间也流了下来。她失神地瞪着双眼，呼吸越来越急促，声音也提高了。

“谢……谢廖……谢……”她重复着单音，哆嗦着嘴唇怎么也张不开口了。

“好妈妈！”

上校朝前走了一步，他全身，包括制服上的饰物、脸上的皱纹，都在颤抖，他自己都未必知道，他的脸有多么惨白，他以一种绝望的镇定对妻子说：

“别说话！不要折磨他！不要折磨！不要折磨！他都要死了！不要折磨！”

妻子吓得不再作声了，而他却还紧握着拳头，一字一句地说：

“不要折磨！”

然后，后退了一步，把胸口紧攥着的手放下，竭力以一副镇静的

样子，翕动着两片惨白的嘴唇，大声地问儿子：

“什么时候？”

“明天早上。”儿子也咬着惨白的双唇回答。

母亲眼睛朝下，努着嘴，仿佛什么也没听见。就这样努着嘴，后来，脱口说了一句既简单又和儿子那句一样奇怪的话：

“尼诺奇卡让我代她吻你一下，谢廖扎。”

“你也代我吻她。”谢尔盖回答道。

“好的。还有赫斯托夫一家都问你好。”

“哪个赫斯托夫家？啊，知道了。”

上校打断了他们：

“好了，该走了。起来吧，他母亲，走吧。”

两个人一起把瘫软无力的母亲扶起来了。

“告别吧！”上校命令道，“画个十字给儿子祝福。”

她照做了。但是，在画十字和吻儿子这会儿，她又摇着头，语无伦次地说道：

“不是的，不该这样。不对呀，不该这样。叫我今后怎么办？我该怎么说？不对，不该这样。”

“再见，谢尔盖！”父亲说。

两个人用力地握手并互相亲吻了一下。

“你……”谢尔盖欲说什么。

“什么？”父亲问不成句了。

“不是的，不该这样。不对呀，不该这样。我该怎么说？”母亲一直摇着头，执拗地重复着。她已经又坐下了，全身不住地抖。

“你……”谢尔盖又开口道。

突然间，谢尔盖像小孩子一样，皱着眉头，眼里全是泪水。他站得很近，就透过眼帘的泪珠，看到父亲惨白的脸上也挂满了泪水。

“你，父亲，你是个好人。”

“你这孩子！说这些干什么呀！”上校惊诧不已。

就这样猛然地，他瘫倒在儿子的肩上。本来他比谢尔盖个头高，现在却变矮了，哽咽着把他那干枯蓬乱的头靠在儿子肩膀上。两个人

互相亲吻起来，谢尔盖亲吻的是父亲乱蓬蓬的白发，而父亲则亲吻着儿子的囚服。

“那我呢？”突然一个特别大的声音响了起来。

他们就转过头，发现母亲昂头站着，气愤地，甚至有点恨恨地望着他俩。

“你怎么啦？母亲？”

“我怎么啦？”她摇着头，任性地，说，“你们男人倒亲上了，啊？那我呢？我呢？”

“好妈妈！”谢尔盖就转身扑向了母亲怀抱。

此情此景无须任何，也没有任何语言能够传达。

上校最后说的是：

“谢廖扎，祝你慷慨赴死！要像一个军官那样无畏！”

他们就这样走了。最终只能走了。就在刚才还站在这里，说着话——突然就走了。母亲刚刚就坐在这里，父亲站在那里——突然间就都走了。回到牢房的谢尔盖，倒在床上，脸朝里，不让看守士兵发现他一直在哭。哭累了就面带泪痕地沉睡过去了。

来看望瓦西里·卡希林的只有母亲一人——他的父亲是一名富商，不愿意来。瓦西里将母亲迎进来后，就一直在地上踱步，尽管天气暖和，甚至有点儿热，但他一直冷得直打战。他们的交谈既简短又令人心情沉重。

“妈妈，您其实不该来的。这只能让您和我难受呀。”

“瓦夏，怎么这样说！你为何要干出这种事呢！天哪！”

老太太大声哭了起来，不时用羊毛头巾边来擦拭眼泪。瓦西里和几个兄弟经常对什么都不懂的母亲大喊大叫，养成了习惯，所以现在，他就停住了脚步，打着寒战，生气地大叫起来：

“又来了！我早就知道会这样！妈妈，你啥也不懂！啥也不懂还非要说什么！”

“行了，行了。好吧，不说。你怎么啦，冷吗？”

“是冷……”瓦西里打断了她，又开始踱步，不高兴地看着妈妈。

“是不是感冒了？”

“哎呀，妈妈，都这时候了，还什么感不感冒……”

他绝望地挥了挥手。老太太本来想说“家里的老头子让我周一就

开始做馅儿饼”，但被儿子的话吓到，赶紧改口说：

“我和你爸说了，怎么说也是自己儿子，去看一眼，就当宽恕了。他不干哪，这个倔老头子！”

“见他的鬼去吧！对我来说他算什么父亲！他一辈子都是个恶棍，现在也是。”

“瓦夏呀！不能这样说自己父亲呀！”老太太责备儿子。

“就要说他！”

“他可是你亲生父亲！”

“我才不认他。”

这一幕没什么亲情也相当荒唐。死亡近在眼前，但说的都是空洞无聊的小事，说出来的话就像脚下踩着空的核桃壳一样，毫无意义。整个一生中，瓦西里和自己的亲人都不能互相理解，就像他们之间有一堵墙那样厚的隔阂，所以现在，在死亡即将来临的时刻，他伤心、郁闷地几乎要哭出声了，他蛮横地瞪着一双小眼睛，冲着母亲大喊大叫：

“我都要被绞死了，你懂不懂！绞死！懂没懂？要被绞死了！”

“你要是没去惹这些人，能这样吗……”老太太也喊道。

“天哪！这话说的！简直连禽兽都不如了！我还是你们儿子吗？”

他大哭起来，一屁股坐在了墙角。老太太也坐在自己这一头哭。就是在这刻，两个无助的人也无法互相交融爱的情感，也无法对抗即将到来的死亡的恐怖。他们各自冰冷地孤独地哭着，心里没有感到一点儿温暖。母亲哭着抢白儿子：

“你倒是说说，我还是不是你的母亲，你就知道说我。这些天我头发都愁白了，变成老太婆了。你还是说我、埋怨我！”

“哎呀，好了，好了，妈妈，原谅我吧。你该走了，代我亲吻兄弟们。”

“难道我不是你母亲？难道我不难过吗？”

老太太终于走了。她伤心不已地哭着走了，不停地用头巾一角擦着眼泪，但她泪眼模糊，根本看不清路。离开监狱越远，她的眼泪就越灼热。她想返回监狱去，但是却糊里糊涂地在这座自己出生、长大乃至老去的城市里迷了路。她误入了一个只有几棵枯树的小破公园，坐到融有雪水的长凳上。如梦方醒地意识到：明天儿子要被绞死了。

老太太一下子跳起来，想跑出去，可突如其来的头晕使她滑倒了。小路上冰雪交融，特别滑，老太太怎么也爬不起来。先是用胳膊肘支着，又双腿跪下，结果又摔了个仰面朝天。黑头巾从头上滑落，露出沾满污泥的后脑勺。她忽然觉得，这是在给儿子娶亲的婚礼上，她在喝酒，而且已经完全喝醉了。

“我不能再喝了。快别倒了，我不能再喝了！”她一边不停地说，一边摇晃着头。她在冰雪泥泞的路面上爬，而大家还在给她斟酒，所有人都来斟酒。

由于喝多了蜂蜜酒，吃了太多的好东西，看跳舞也看累了，她的心痛了起来。而大家也还一个劲儿地给她倒酒。所有人都来倒酒。

6.时间在流逝

被宣判的恐怖分子都被关押在一座城堡里，那里的钟楼上有一座年代久远的自鸣钟。每隔十五分钟、半小时，以及一小时，一种单调且凄凉的钟声就回荡在高空，像是南迁的候鸟离开时那既遥远又悲伤的鸣叫声。白天，这古怪又悲伤的音乐湮没在城市的喧嚣声里，无闻于监狱外人来人往的街巷中。电车驶过，叮当作响，马车驶来，蹄声嘚嘚，汽车行驶在不平的路上，老远就开始鸣笛，尤其是正赶上过谢肉节的时候，农民们陆续从郊外赶车过来，他们那些小马驹的脖子上都挂着铛铛作响的小铃铛。四处人声鼎沸，开心过节的人多少都有点儿微醺，大声喧哗着。早春里融化的雪水滴答不停，街道的积水被踩得啪啪作响，街心公园里突然变绿的树木好像也在那里拔节歌唱。海上吹来阵阵湿润温暖的劲风，似乎用眼睛就可以看到它们卷着一团团的水汽飞舞向前，向无垠的自由的远方飘飞而去。

入夜，街道上沉寂下来了，瓦数颇大的街灯闪耀着孤寂光线。于是，这座极大的监狱连同它那平滑的外墙就陷入了毫无光亮、毫无声响的一片黑暗和寂静之中，它盘踞于此，黑暗将它和生机一片、流动不息的城市截然分割开来。只有这时，自鸣钟的报时声才清晰可闻，那与尘世完全格格不入的缓慢而悲伤的旋律开始不断地响起和湮灭。当它再度响起的时候，就不像是准确报时，而是以前的回声，悲伤迟缓，中断了一小会儿，再度响起。就像是大颗透明的玻璃珠子，从高处落入刻有时间标记的金属刻度盘里。犹如南迁的鸟儿在啼鸣。

关押在单身牢房里的犯人，无论白天还是黑夜，能听到的只有这个报时钟的声音。这种声响穿透了牢狱的屋顶和厚厚的石墙，打破了寂静，泯然消失，然后再悄然而至。有时候，犯人们忘了这声响，以至于充耳不闻；有时候，却又受不了牢房里的寂然无声，焦急地盼着有个声响，希望它一声接一声地响下去。这座监狱是用来关押重刑犯的，这里的狱规特别严厉、冷酷和死板，跟这城堡钝厚的墙角是一个样子的。若要说到这种冷酷之中还有什么宽容的话，那就无疑是死一般的无边寂静了，它庄严不已，能衬托出衣物的窸窣声和人轻微的呼吸声。

就是在这种庄严的与世隔绝的寂静中，在悲伤的钟声里，在流逝的时光中，五个人，两女三男，在等待着黑夜的降临、黎明的到来，

等待着死刑的临近。他们每个人都按各自的方式有所准备。

7.死亡是不存在的

丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克生来就只关心别人，从不想着自己，即使到了现在也是如此，她仍在为别人难过，为别人而倍加痛苦。她越是对面临的死亡毫无痛苦之感，就越能感受到死亡对谢尔盖·戈洛温，对穆夏，对其他人来说，有多么地残忍，至于她自己，则仿佛和死亡毫无关系一样。

在法庭上，她不得不表现得异常坚定，但就像是一种补偿一样，回到牢房，她能一连哭上好几个小时，就像那些饱受苦痛的老年妇女和充满同情心的少女一样大放悲声。她一想到，谢尔盖可能弄不到烟抽，维尔纳可能喝不到习以为常的浓茶，而这些事都发生在他们行将赴死的时候，这就让她更加难过，可能，这比死刑本身更让她痛不欲生。死刑——这已经是某种不可避免之事了，是一件不值得再去想的身外之事了，而一个坐牢的人，在死刑之前弄不到一根烟抽抽的话，简直是不可忍受的。她逐一回忆起他们共同生活时的种种细节，一想到谢尔盖即将和父母见面的情形，她惊骇得几乎无法呼吸。

她特别怜惜穆夏。她早就觉得，穆夏爱上了维尔纳，尽管实际上并非如此，她还是希望他们两个人最终会幸福美满。入狱前，穆夏手上戴着一枚银戒指，上面刻有骷髅头，下面交叉着两根骨头和一顶环绕着的受难荆冠 [7]，这是必然遭难的象征，丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克经常揪心地看着这枚戒指，经常半真半假地请求穆夏别戴了。

“把它送给我吧。”她请求穆夏。

“不，丹涅琪卡 [8]，我不送给你。你手指上会戴上另一枚戒指的。”

不知为什么，大家都一致认定，她很快会嫁人，这使她生气，她可不要什么丈夫。现在一想起和穆夏说的那些半真半假的玩笑，想到穆夏现在真的要蒙难牺牲了，她心头就涌上一种母性的怜悯，不禁失声痛哭起来。只有听到钟鸣声，她才会抬起满是泪痕的脸，倾听起来，心里想着牢房里的那几个人，想他们是如何忍受这近似于死亡一般沉重的固执的呼号声。

可在这个时候穆夏却感到很幸福。

她背着双手，不紧不慢地在牢房里踱步，囚服穿在她身上，让她

看上去完全像一个男人，像一个穿了别人衣服的半大小子那样奇怪。囚服的袖子太长，她卷起了袖子，这样她那细瘦得像小孩子似的胳膊，麻秆一样露在袖筒外，像一茎单花插在粗陋、肮脏的水罐里。细嫩的白脖子被粗硬的囚服摩擦得生疼，她总不时地拉一拉领口，轻轻地摩挲一下红肿发痒部位的皮肤。

穆夏踱来踱去——她在想象中向众人表白自己的心迹，激动得涨红了脸。她想表白的是：她是一个渺小的年轻姑娘，所做的事情很少，完全不是什么英雄，配不上这种光荣和美好的死法，在她之前，只有英雄和真正的受难者才有资格被判绞刑。她坚信，人们都是善良的，富有同情心的，有爱的，她认为现在大家都在为她的遭遇而激动不安，为她难过痛心，惋惜不已，当然，她也感到羞愧不已，脸都红了。就是，她怎么能担得起死在绞刑架上的荣誉呢。

在最后一次会面时，她向自己的辩护人要求给她弄些毒药来，但突然间醒悟过来了：如果他和其他人认为她出于卖弄或者怯懦呢？如果本来想谦逊地不引人注目地死去却招来更大轰动，怎么办？所以，她说完就赶紧改口：

“算了，其实，也用不上。”

此时，她只想一件事：要向人们讲清楚并证明给他们看，她不是英雄，死亡根本不可怕，大家不用可怜她，也不用为她操心。要给大家解释，她完全没有想过作为一个年轻姑娘会这样去死，没想到，因为她会引起这样大的轰动，这完全不是她的错。

作为一个被控有罪的人，穆夏也想找一个理由，证明她的牺牲是物有所值，提升自己牺牲的意义，她这样想道：

“当然，像我这样的年纪很轻的姑娘是应该活很久的。可是……”

她的青春时代和生活就像是晴空万里的太阳所遇到的烛光，微不足道，暗淡不已，应该是伟大的、辉煌的东升之旭日照亮了她这颗平庸的头脑。她本人哪能配得上这英雄般的荣耀呢。

但，也许她心里一直有一种特别的东西——无限的爱、无限的建功立业的决心、无限的自我献身精神也配得上这种荣耀？毕竟她没有做到她想做的一切，就将被绞死在神圣的殿堂之外的祭坛上，这不是她的错。

可是，事情如果是这样的，即一个人的价值不在于他做成了什么，而在于他想做什么的话，那么……那么，她是有资格得到这顶受难者的荆冠的。

“真是这样吗？”穆夏羞愧地想着，“我真的有资格吗？我真的有资格让人们为我哭泣和难受吗？就为我这样一个年纪轻轻微不足道的女

孩子？”

想到这里，她浑身充满喜悦之情。毫不怀疑、毫无迟疑地，她就这样进入了一个自由的国度，她合理地被接纳为圣人——那些自古以来经历了火刑柱、酷刑和死刑的升天者的行列中的一员。他们的面前是清明的世界，充满了宁静无边的、流光溢彩的幸福。她已经完全从尘世飞升至包含了真理和生命的神秘的太阳国度，沐浴在其熠熠华光之中。

“这就已经是死了。死有什么了不得的呢？”穆夏怡然自得地想着。

要是全世界的学者、哲学家和刽子手在这个时候都能汇聚到穆夏的牢房里面来，在她的面前摆上书籍、手术刀、斧子和绞索，开始向她证明，死亡是存在的，人是会死的，也能够被打死，永生不死是不可能的，那么，他们的话肯定会让她吃惊的。她明明是没有死的，怎么还会死呢？现在谈论死亡已经毫无意义了，谈论不死也同样丧失了意义，因为她现在的状态是虽死犹生，虽生犹死，还有什么可谈的呢？

要是这时候，有人把装殓着她腐烂尸体的棺材抬进她的牢房，让整个牢房臭气熏天，并且对她说：

“快看吧，这就是你！”

她会看一眼就回答：

“不，这不是我。”

要是人们向她证明，这散发着腐臭味的尸体就是她的话——就是她！穆夏也准会笑着回答：

“不是。你们认为这是我，但这可不是。我是正在和你们说话的人哪，这怎么可能是我呢？”

“但是你就要死了，就要变成这个样子了。”

“不，我是不会死的。”

“会把你绞死的。你看，绞索就在这里。”

“他们会绞死我，但我不会死。我已经获得了永生，怎么还有死呢？”

于是，学者、哲学家和刽子手都认输了，他们颤抖着说：

“不要碰这个地方，这个地方是一块神圣之地。”

穆夏还幻想了一些什么呢？她想了很多——对她来说，死亡还没有

割断她的生命之线，这根线还在平静缓慢地缠绕着她。她想到了自己的同志们，想到了那些为他们即将被绞死而痛苦不堪的远方的同志，也想到了和自己同赴断头台的同伴们。最让她吃惊的是瓦西里竟然会怕得要命——从前他可是很勇敢的，还老是拿死亡开玩笑。就在星期二的早晨，同志们一起往瓦西里的腰上捆绑爆破炸弹，预计会在几小时之后，连同他们一起炸死，丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克紧张得双手一直在颤抖，只好让她退到一旁去，而瓦西里就在这个时候还开玩笑，像小丑一样耍活宝呢，他那满不在乎的样子使维尔纳不得不严肃地提醒他：

“可不能拿死亡当儿戏呢。”

为什么他现在害怕起来了呢？这种莫名的害怕对穆夏来说太难以理解了，所以她很快就不再去想瓦西里了，不愿再去探究他害怕的原因。这会儿，她突然非常想见谢尔盖·戈洛温，想和他谈笑风生。她还特别强烈地想见到维尔纳，想说服他某一件事呢。于是，她想象着，维尔纳和她正在并肩行走的情景，他的步伐均匀，稳当，每走一步鞋都陷在泥土里，而自己正在滔滔不绝地跟他说话呢：

“不，维尔纳，亲爱的，你行刺的行动成功与否，都无所谓，根本是不值一提的。你是一个聪明人，但是，你只是把行刺当成是下棋，你吃掉了一个棋子，然后再吃掉另一个，就赢了这盘棋。维尔纳，这里最重要的事情是我们一心赴死。你明白吗？你知道那些老爷们儿在想什么吗？他们认为没有比死更可怕的事情了。他们自己想出来了死亡这档子事。他们自己害怕死亡，也拿死亡吓唬我们。我甚至想这样去死：一个人站到一个团的士兵面前，举起勃朗宁手枪向他们开火。我只有一个人，他们却有上千人，我可能连一个都不会打死的。这件事的重要性在于，他们有几千人，人多势众。当几千人要打死一个人的时候，那么，胜利的是这一个人。这是真理，维尔纳，亲爱的。”

这样一个观点是如此清晰，以至于她不想再进一步论证了，可能现在维尔纳自己也明白了。也许，她并不愿意让她的思想只停留在这件事情上——她的思绪就像是轻盈翱翔的小鸟，瞭望着广袤的地平线，巡视着整个四通八达的空间，享受着其间所有的深奥、所有的喜悦、所有的亲切和温柔。钟声不间断地鸣响着，不时地打破清冷的寂静，她的思绪与这个和谐、悠长而美好的声响融汇在一起，也在她的头脑中开始鸣响，那些轻盈的小鸟形象都变成了音乐。穆夏仿佛在暗夜里驾着马车，沿着宽阔平坦的大道驶向某地，坐垫上柔软的弹簧上下颤动，铃铛一路高歌响个不停。所有的激动和不安都烟消云散了，倦怠的身体也仿佛在黑暗中融化，懒洋洋的思绪平静地创造出了一系列的形象，她就陶醉在这些形象的绚烂的色彩和安宁的形态之中。穆

夏还想到了不久以前被处以绞刑的三位同志，回想起他们开朗的脸庞，以前见到他们时的喜悦——甚至比与他们生前的见面更觉亲切。就像一个人早上就高兴地想着，晚上要到自己朋友家去，想着怎样向朋友问好，怎样笑咪咪地跨进门去。

穆夏走得已经很累了。她小心翼翼地躺倒在床上，继续微合双眼，继续自己的幻想和憧憬。钟声不间断地鸣响着，不时地打破清冷的寂静，就在这鸣响的波段中，一群欢乐地歌唱的形象在游动。穆夏想：

“难道这就是死吗？我的天哪，死亡真是太美了！也许，这是生吧？我不知道，我不知道。我再看一看，再听一听……”

已经很久了，从被捕的第一天起，穆夏就开始幻听。她的耳朵对音乐很敏感，由于寂静这个听觉就更敏锐了。监狱中声音原本不多，走廊看守的脚步声、钟声、风过屋顶的簌簌声、路灯的晃动声对她来说构成了完整的乐章。一开始，穆夏害怕这些声响，病态般地极力避免去听它们，后来，她明白了，她自己很健康，也没有什么病，所以开始平静地沉浸在这些声响中了。

现在，她突然清楚无误地听到了军乐声。她惊讶地睁开了双眼，抬起头——窗外依然黑夜沉沉，报时的钟声在鸣响。“又是钟声在响啊！”这样想着就平静地又合上了双眼。可是，刚合上眼皮，军乐声又响了。她清楚地听到，从大楼的右侧拐角处，整整一个团的士兵正在从窗户旁走过去。脚步整齐划一地按着“一——二！一——二！”的口令踩在了冰的硬地上，甚至还能听到皮鞋吱吱的声音，其中夹杂着有人突然脚下一滑，又赶紧跟上大家步伐的忙乱声。音乐越来越近了：这是一首从未听过的乐曲，但是非常洪亮，是一首异常欢乐的节日进行曲。看样子，监狱里有什么庆典仪式吧。

军乐队正好走到窗下了，整个牢房里充满了节奏明快的、和谐激昂的乐曲声。一个大铜号明显是吹跑调了，没跟上整个乐队的节拍，一会儿超前，一会儿落后——穆夏就像看到了吹号的士兵那紧张地调整节奏时的面部表情，直想笑。

乐队和音乐声都渐渐走远了。听不见“一——二！一——二！”的口令声和脚步声了。远远地听着那军乐声更觉悠扬和激昂。大铜号又跑了一两次调，后来就什么也听不见了。只有钟楼上传来的缓慢而悲伤的钟声勉强打破了再度降临的寂静。

“都走了。”穆夏怀着淡淡的哀愁想道。她还对那远去的乐曲声有点儿不舍，那军乐声听上去那么欢乐，还滑稽可笑，她甚至舍不得那个走远的使劲吹大铜号的士兵，那些大头皮鞋吱吱的声音。他们是完全另外一些人，不同于她想用勃朗宁手枪打死的那些人。

“啊，回来吧！”她温柔地恳求。那些幻像又回来了。它们向她俯下身，像透明的云彩一样围绕着她，托着她直上云霄，那里鸟儿们盘旋着，啼鸣着，就像是天庭里的传令使者。它们上下翻飞，左右盘旋，像传令使者那样口吐莲花。它们的鸣叫声是对她的欢迎，也是向远处宣布她的到来。它们挥动着宽阔的翅膀，能接住黑暗，也能托起光明。它们前凸的胸脯划破了空气，以一片蓝色之光映照出地面上的城市。穆夏的心跳越来越均匀，呼吸也越来越平静和安宁。她睡着了。脸色苍白，略显疲倦，眼睛下方的眼袋已经很明显，少女的手臂纤细而瘦弱，嘴唇上还挂着微笑。明天，太阳升起的时候，这张人脸就会变成丑陋的死人脸，脑子就会浸泡在黏稠的黑血之中，眼球会突出眼眶，但今天，她睡得很安静，面带微笑，就睡在自己伟大的永生中。

穆夏睡着了。

监狱生活有自己的那一套，这种生活死气沉沉，毫无目的，却又是十分警觉的，它本身对人来说，就是一种永恒的不安。有的地方，犯人在走动；有的地方，看守们窃窃私语；有的地方，武器叮当作响。似乎有人在竭力呼喊，又仿佛并没有人叫喊——只不过是寂静引起的幻听而已。

这时门上的监视孔无声无息地被打开了——黑洞的小口里出现了一张黧黑的、胡子拉碴的脸。这个人瞪大了眼睛惊奇地看了穆夏好一会儿，然后又像出现时一样，无声地消失不见了。

报时钟铛铛地鸣响着——缓慢而悲伤。这疲倦的钟声犹如正在深更半夜爬向一座高山一般，越爬越艰难，越爬越沉重吃力。突然，钟声断掉了，就像从半山间滑脱下来，呻吟着一路向下而来，重新艰难地爬回自己黑暗的钟楼里。

有的地方，犯人在走动；有的地方，守卫们窃窃私语，有人把马套在黑黧黧没点上车灯的马车上了。

8.有死，也有生

谢尔盖·戈洛温从未想到过死，这仿佛就像是别人的事，与他自己毫不相干，无须去想一样。他是一个强壮、健康、快乐的小伙子，生就一副安然且活泼的脾气，一切与生活有害和无益的思想及类似感觉在他身上都不会停留，会很快消失殆尽。在他的身上，任何割开的小口子及针孔，都会很快愈合，所有伤心难过的事情他都很少外露，他很快就会整理好心情。无论做什么事，他都会以这种安然且活泼的认真劲儿来做：一切都是兴致勃勃地做，一切都认真地做，一切都需要做到更好，娱乐消遣如此，照相如此，学骑自行车如此，准备恐怖暗杀行动也如此。

他也确实一切都做得很好：划船很会掌舵，射击特别有准头，对待友情敦厚，对待爱情忠贞，对别人的“保证”抱以诚信的态度。自己人都笑话他，说如果一个一望即知的密探，或者一个明显是间谍的人赌咒发誓说，他不是密探，谢尔盖也会相信人家，与人家同志般地握手。他只有一个缺点：认为自己唱歌好听，但是实际上，他一点儿乐感也没有，他唱歌难听得要命，一唱就跑调，唱革命歌曲也是如此。大家要是笑话他的歌声，他还觉得委屈呢。

“要么你们全是叫驴，要么只有我是一头叫驴。”他较真儿了，特别委屈地说。大家也较真儿了，考虑了一下，一起坚定地表态：

“从听到的噪音来看，只有你是一头叫驴。”

但因为这个缺点，他更招大家的喜欢，因为有时候和相当不错的人交往，比起所谓优点，人们更喜欢他的缺点。

他就因为不怕死，所以根本就不去想死亡这回事，在那个致命的早晨，在离开丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克家的时候，只有他一个人像往常一样，胃口奇好地吃着早餐，喝了两杯兑了牛奶的浓茶，吃了一个大面包，五个戈比才能买一个呢。然后，忧心忡忡地看了一眼维尔纳根本没动的面包，说：

“你怎么不吃呢？吃吧，吃了才有劲儿呢。”

“吃不下。”

“那我可吃了，行不？”

“嗯，吃吧，谢尔盖，你的胃口真好。”

谢尔盖顾不上说话，一口吞下面包，一边嚼，一边呜啦呜啦跑着调，又唱上了：

“在我们的头上敌人的仇恨在飘荡……”

被捕后，他有点儿沮丧——任务完成得不好，失败了。但他是这样想的：“现在已经有了另外一件事，需要做得更好——那就是去死。”他又振奋起来。所以，看起来很奇怪，被押到古堡监狱的第二天早上，他就开始做体操了，那体操是一个叫穆勒的德国人发明的，编排十分合理，谢尔盖相当喜欢这套体操。他脱光衣服，做完了整套规定的十八个动作，这让不安监视着他的看守大为惊奇。看得出来，发现看守在监视他的时候，谢尔盖特别高兴，就像他是一个穆勒体操理念的宣传者一样。尽管也知道得不到回应，他还是对着门上监视孔里的那只眼睛说道：

“老弟，这套体操可好呢。你们团里要是引进这体操就好了。”他觉得，看守肯定以为他是个疯子，所以为了不吓到看守，他说得恳切又温和。

他是逐渐地感到对死亡的恐惧的，而且这种感觉具有阵发性的特点，就像是有人从下面抓住了他的心脏，用拳头使劲地往上面击打。比起恐惧害怕，他更能感觉到心痛。然后这种感觉会消失——但过几小时之后，又会重新出现，每一次再出现，都会比先前那一阵的感觉更持久，也更强烈。他就这样开始明显地感觉到某种说不清道不明但又巨大且难以忍受的恐惧。

“难道我害怕了吗？”谢尔盖吃惊地想道，“这可真是太愚蠢了！”

不是他害怕了，而是他的肉体害怕了，无论是做德国人穆勒发明的体操，还是用冷水擦洗身体，他那年轻、强壮、精力充沛的躯体是任何细微的东西也无法隐瞒住的。每次冷水浴后，他越是感到强壮、精力充沛，就越能感受到那瞬间出现的恐惧是多么地剧烈，多么地不可忍受。也正是每当早晨来临，当他感受到浑身元气满满、精力充沛的时候，在睡了一个好觉、做了早操的时候，这种刺心的、对他来说十分陌生的恐惧感就出现了。他发现了这一情况，不由得想道：

“谢尔盖老弟，这可太愚蠢了。为了死得轻松一点儿，应该弱化它，不应该强化它呀。太愚蠢了吧！”

所以，他停止了做操，也不用冷水擦拭身体，他还向卫兵解释，为这套体操说好话：

“你别看我不再做操了。老弟，这套体操是相当好的东西呢。就是对被判了绞刑的人已经不太适合了，对别的其他人呢，是非常有好

处的。”

不做那些令身体知觉常新的事情之后，果然感觉轻松了一些。他又尝试着减少进食量，以便进一步让身体弱下来，但是，这可不太容易做到，尽管牢房里缺乏新鲜空气，他也不再做操耗费体力，但胃口仍然好得出奇，他总是把送来的东西全部吃得精光。后来他开始尝试其他办法：在开始吃饭前，他就把一半的饭菜倒进马桶。这倒是挺有效果。其后他的症状就只剩下无精打采、昏昏欲睡了。

“我要让你尝尝我的厉害！”他警告自己的身体，却忧心忡忡地用手摩挲日渐无力且变软的肌肉。

但是身体很快就适应了这一变化，死亡的恐惧再度出现了。确实，不那么强烈，也不那么难以忍受了，但是更缠磨人，更让人恶心，总是让人想要呕吐。“可能这是死刑拖得太久的缘故，”谢尔盖想，“要是在死刑执行之前一直都是睡着的状态就好了。”于是，他就尽可能地尽情地睡觉。一开始嘛，效果不错，但是后来，也许是睡多了，也许是由于别的原因，他开始失眠。这一失眠，想的就更多，那些想法既强烈又敏锐，使得他更加留恋起生命来了。

“难道我还怕这个魔鬼不成？”他想的是死亡，“我是舍不得生命啊。生命是那么美好的东西，管他悲观主义者说什么呢。如果把一个悲观主义者送上绞刑架呢？哎呀，就是生命太可惜了，太可惜了呀。我为什么不停地长胡子呢？以前一直不长，怎么也不长，却这时候突然长成大胡子了。这是为什么呢？”

他面色忧郁地摇了摇头，心情沉重地长长地叹息了几声。接着沉默了一会儿，然后又开始长时间地、沉重地叹息，再接下来还是沉默不语——之后重新开始更长时间的、更沉重的叹息。

就这样，直到庭审之前，直到和父母亲那次可怕的见面之前，他都是在唉声叹气中度过的。当他在牢房中醒来，清楚地意识到生命就要终结，再过毫无意义的几小时，死亡就会到来的时候，他开始感到恐惧了。他觉得就像是有人把他的一切都拿走了，不仅是扒光了他的衣服，而且还挪走了太阳、空气、声响、亮光，以至于他的行为和语言都丧失殆尽了。还没有死呢，但是命已经没了，还有的只是一种新的东西，一种令人震惊的、难以理解的东西，这种东西既不能说没有意义，也不好说其有什么意义，但，这是一种深奥的、神秘的、非人的东西，想弄明白它是不可能的。

“呸，真是见鬼了！”谢尔盖备受折磨又十分疑惑，“这到底是怎么回事呢？我到底是在什么地方呀？我……怎么变成这样子了呢？”

他开始饶有兴致地认真打量起自己了，先是看脚上那双大号的囚靴，再看鼓鼓囊囊的肚子，囚服被撑得贴在肚皮上面。然后一边在牢

房里穿行，一边张开双手，继续观察自己，就像是一个刚穿上一件下摆过长的新连衣裙的女人一样。因为谢尔盖不停地摆动脑袋，所以很快就转得头晕目眩了。不知道为什么，他感到十分恐惧，因为这个不停地转来转去的人就是他，谢尔盖·戈洛温，而且这个人很快就会死了。一切都变得那么奇怪，不可思议了。

他尝试着在牢房里走动——连走路也变得奇怪了。他又坐下——坐着也变得奇怪了。他又试着去喝了一口水——喝水也变得奇怪，水就莫名其妙地被吞下去了。手里还拿着杯子——拿着杯子的手指更奇怪了，还在微微地颤抖。想到这里，他被呛着了，咳嗽起来，一边咳嗽，一边想：“多奇怪呀，我怎么还咳嗽？”

“我这是怎么了，难道是疯了吗？”谢尔盖想到这里，浑身都凉了，“真是见鬼了，判了个绞刑还不够惨吗！”

他抬手擦了擦额头的汗水，但觉得擦汗这个动作也令他奇怪不已。因此，他屏住呼吸，几乎感觉过了有好几小时，就那么呆若木鸡地一动不动，什么都不去想，大气也不喘一口，没有任何的动作——因为任何想法都会是不理智的，任何动作都会使他陷入疯狂。时间已经不复存在了，时间已经进入到空间之中，变成一座透明的真空广场，巨大而广阔，所有的土地、所有的生物都聚集于此，一切都尽收眼底，一切都能一眼望到头，只因到了最后的断头路——那就是死亡。令他备受折磨的，不是能够一眼就看见死亡，而是一下子同时看到生与死。自古以来，遮住了生死真相的大幕一直紧闭着，现在这层幕布被一只亵渎神明的大手打开了，生与死就不再是秘密了——但是，它们仍是混沌不明的，不可理喻的，就像用晦涩难懂的语言描绘的真理一样。在他那人类的头脑中还没有一种概念来解释这景象，他所使用的人类语言也不足以表达他的所思所见。他只会说“我感到害怕”这样的话——因为在他心里或者头脑中还没有，也不可能有哪一句话或哪一个概念，比这句话更能够契合他现在的非人状态和所见景象。一个人，或者说，像他这样的人，要是不能脱离于人类的理智、经验和情感的范畴，即使是见到了上帝本人，也理解不了上帝的含义，尽管知道这就是那个叫上帝的人，却会因为难以理解的巨大痛苦而浑身战栗不已。

“现在还是让穆勒出场吧！”谢尔盖忽然特别自信地大叫了一声，摇了摇头。他像一个正常人常有的情况一样，毫无预料地转变了心情，愉快且发自内心地大笑起来。“啊呀，你呀，穆勒！哎呀，你这个亲爱的穆勒老兄！啊呀，你这个德国妙人啊！好穆勒，到头来呀——最终你是对的，我呢，就是一头愚蠢的驴呀。”

他又特别快地在牢房里走了几趟，在监视孔监视他的看守又一次大吃一惊——谢尔盖飞快地把衣服脱了个精光，高高兴兴且十分卖力

地做着全套十八个体操动作。他不断伸展自己年轻却已经消瘦了的身体，下蹲、吸气、呼气、踮起脚、踢腿、摆臂。每完成一个动作，他都满意地说：

“就这么做！这才是真正的体操，穆勒老兄！”

谢尔盖的脸颊变得通红了，令人舒服的热汗大滴大滴地渗出皮肤，心脏也跳得有力而且相当平稳。

“问题在于，穆勒，”谢尔盖挺起胸膛，皮肤下面的条条肋骨清晰可见，“问题在于，穆勒，还有第十九节体操——它的动作为保持不动，笔直地将脖子吊起来。这一节称为绞刑。你明白吗，穆勒？抓住一个活人——比方说吧，抓住了谢尔盖·戈洛温，把他像一个洋娃娃裹在襁褓里一样绑起来，然后用绳子吊住脖子，吊死拉倒。穆勒啊，这事儿是很愚蠢，但是毫无办法了，不得不如此了。”

他向右边做体侧运动，并且重复了一遍说：

“不得不如此了，穆勒老兄。”

9.可怕的孤独

此刻，在同样的钟声里，在远离谢尔盖和穆夏的几间空牢房之外，不幸的瓦西里·卡希林感受到了沉重的孤独，仿佛宇宙间只剩下了他一个人，正在恐怖和忧伤中挨过他生命的最后时光。

瓦西里·卡希林大汗淋漓，衬衫湿答答地粘在身上，原本卷曲的头发现在都松垮地粘在头皮上，他像一个患了剧烈牙疼的人，浑身痉挛着，无可忍受地在牢房里走过来踱过去。他一会儿坐下，一会儿又跑开，一会儿把头抵住墙，一会儿又直愣愣地眼睛盯着某处不动——就好像要找一种医牙疼的药一样。他入狱后容貌大变，以至于他仿佛有过两张不同的脸，一张从前的脸，年轻却杳然无迹；取代这张脸的是一张新的脸孔，它苍老难看、憔悴不已。

对死亡的恐惧猝然到来，而且一下子就把他紧紧地攫住，他再也无法挣脱了。决定行动的那天早晨，他还毫无畏惧地走向死亡，还轻松地调侃死亡，而到了晚上，在被关进单人牢房之后，极度的恐惧像大浪一样席卷身心，彻底吞没了他。当他还凭借自己的自由意志，去面对危险和死亡的时候，在他还能用自己的双手去解决问题的时候，无论死亡看起来有多么可怕，他都可以轻松地，甚至乐观地对待，这是因为，以前他感觉自己是无限自由的，是无比勇敢的，是信念坚定的，是大胆无畏的，是毫不怯懦的，即使害怕什么，也像小老太太满脸细小的皱纹一样，无迹可寻，毫不显眼。当炸弹被绑在他腰上的时候，他自己仿佛也变成了一颗炸弹，就像头脑中嵌入了烈性炸药的冷酷理智，赋予了他致命的可怕能量。每当走在街道上，跻身于熙熙攘攘的人流中，看到街巷里凡夫俗子们只关心自己的事情，谨小慎微地躲避着马车和电车，他就更觉得自己是一个不同凡响的人，完全来自不知何为死亡、何谓害怕的神秘国度。

可是，剧烈反转的变化骤然来临，荒唐至极。人们偏要押送他去那个他本人不愿意去的地方。他已经不能够选择待在什么地方，而是被人押着关进石头牢房，像什么东西一样，扔进去锁起来。他已经不能像所有自由人一样选择生或者是死，他必定会无可避免地要被杀死。只是一瞬间，他这位原先为自由意志、生命和力量的化身，就立刻变成了待宰的牲畜，变成了无声无息的东西，变成了可以被任意摆布、随意烧毁和随便折损的任何东西。他现在无论说什么，都没有人

愿意倾听他说的话。而如果他敢喊叫起来，那么，就会有人来用抹布塞住他的嘴，无论他挪不挪动他的双腿，反正人们是要把他押走去绞死的。他反抗也好，挣扎也罢，躺在地上撒泼打滚也是一样的——人们照样还会制服他，拖他起来，捆绑他，把他反绑押至绞刑架下。完成这种机械性杀人事务的，是和他一样的人，而这就使得他们看上去好像有一种完全不同于常人的凶狠样子，既像是一种故意变形的幽灵，又像是装上了发条的机械玩偶——他们抓人、逮人、押送人、吊死人，顺着脚把人拉下来。他们割断绳索之后，就把尸首装车运走，扔到乱坟岗上一埋了事。

从入狱的第一天起，对他来说，人们和生活都变成了不可思议的满是幽灵和机械玩偶的可怕世界。他恐惧得几乎发疯，竭力想象人们长了舌头，应该是会说话，但却说不出来——好像全是哑巴一样；他又竭力回忆人们之间有过谈话，他们在交际时说过的有含义的句子，结果也是徒劳。人们的嘴都张着，发出了某种声音，后来就四散开来，只能看见脚在移动，其他什么也看不见、听不见。

如果深夜里一个人孤零零地被留在房子里，他就会感到屋子里的东西都活了过来，能四处走动，凌驾于孤独的人之上，获得了无限的权力。这些东西——桌子、椅子、写字台和沙发可能会突然来审判他。他会喊叫，会四处奔突，会寻求帮助。但是，这些东西——桌子、椅子、写字台和沙发会用它们才懂的语言和方式来商量。然后这些东西——桌子、椅子、写字台就下令立刻把人绞死。其他的东西嘛，就只能冷眼旁观。

在被判处绞刑以后，瓦西里·卡希林觉得一切都变成了玩偶：他的单人牢房，带有监视孔的牢门，准点报时的钟声，砌得结结实实的城堡监狱，还有那个挎着枪，鞋跟在走廊里磕打作响的看守，他更像机械玩偶，以及在监视孔先是可怕地瞪他一眼，然后一言不发再把牢饭递进来的家伙也是。他有这样的体验并不是真的怕死，他甚至希望快点死去。在所有神秘莫测、难以解释的事物中，相对于变得野蛮和无序的世界，死亡是理智可以解释的。在这个幽灵遍地的疯狂的机械玩偶世界里，死亡早已经完全失去了它那伟大而神秘的含义，变成了某种机械的，因而十分可怕的东西。他们抓人、逮人、押送人、吊死人，顺着脚把人拉下来。他们割断绳索之后，就把尸首装车运走，扔到乱坟岗上一埋了事。

一个人就会因此从世界上销声匿迹。

瓦西里·卡希林最为清醒的瞬间就是在法庭上受审的时候，因为和同志们站在一起，他又重新看见了人：他们坐在那里审判他，用人类话语商量事务，倾听别人的话，也明白其他人在说什么。但是，在与母亲会面的时候，他所熟知的那种出离了人类理智的恐惧感再度袭

来，他感觉这个戴着黑头巾的老太婆——完全是一个被人操控的机械玩偶，就像那些也会说“爸爸”“妈妈”的人一样，只不过制作得精致些罢了。他极力想好好与她交谈，但就是浑身颤抖，不由自主地想道：

“老天啊！你跟一个玩偶谈什么呀。这就是一个玩偶妈妈。那便是一个玩偶卫兵，家里还有个玩偶父亲，而我呢，玩偶瓦西里·卡希林在此。”

好像只过了一会儿，他就听到了某种机械装置破裂开的声响和转轮缺少润滑油的嘎吱声。当他的母亲开始哭泣的时候，有那么一瞬间，人的理智有所回归，但是在母亲开始说话的时候，这种感觉立刻就烟消云散了，他开始恍惚而又好奇地观察，眼泪是如何从玩偶的眼睛里流出的。

后来，就在自己的牢房里，当恐惧变得无可忍受时，瓦西里·卡希林尝试着去祈祷。尽管他的少年时代是在父亲的商人之家度过的，一直沉浸于宗教的氛围中，但是他厌烦那种形式，为那种氛围痛苦过，并且完全痛恨宗教，没有在身心中形成任何信仰。但，也许是在童年的某个时刻，他听到过一句话，这句话一下子打动了，令他战栗不安，给他留下了终生的安宁诗意，即：“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐。”

每当生活中出现痛苦的时候，他就对自己默默诵读这句话，不算祈祷，也不是有意为之：“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐。”说完呢，他就会感到轻松，想找个亲近的人去倾诉心事，悄悄地诉点苦：

“我们的生活啊……还算是生活吗！哎呀，我亲爱的，你说，这叫什么生活呀！”

然后，他突然就会特别想整理好头发，跪在地上，敞开胸脯，任凭别人来击打：“来吧，朝这里打吧！”

他对任何人都没有说过“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐”这句话，对自己最亲近的同志也丝毫未露半点儿口风，甚至就好像自己都从来不知道有这么一句话一样——这句话就这样深深地埋藏在他的心底。他并不经常回忆起这句话，每次回忆起来都是小心翼翼地，非常谨慎。

于是，现在，当恐惧显而易见、无可掩饰，就像决堤的洪水淹没了沿岸的蒲柳一样，彻底地吞没了他的全部身心的时候，他想要祈祷了。他想跪下来，但怕看守窥到就太难为情了，所以就只把双手交叉到胸前，小声默念：

“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐！”

然后再一次面带忧愁地重复祷告：

“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐，降福于我吧，拯救罪人瓦西里·卡希林吧。”

很久以前，还是在上大学一年级的時候，在认识维尔纳并参加到组织中之前，他的生活完全是吃喝玩乐，说话也随便，那时管自己叫“罪人瓦西里·卡希林”——现在，不知为什么又想这样称呼自己了。就这样死气沉沉地重复着这句话，得不到任何的回应：

“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐！”

这时，好像有某种东西闪过。仿佛是某人安宁且悲苦的形象在向远方飘浮，还未来得及照亮死亡之前的黑暗，就消失得无声无息了。钟楼上的报时钟声铛铛地响起来了。看守的枪还是刺刀什么的，不知碰到哪里，也响了一下，接着他打了一个哈欠，开始来回走动。

“上帝是一切苦难之人的喜乐！你为什么还默不作声？你什么话也不想对罪人瓦西里·卡希林说吗？”

他就这样温柔地诉说并等待着。然而，无论是他的心里还是身外，都并无一人，虚空不已。那个安宁且悲苦的形象并没有返回或者再度出现。这时儿时的场景，诸如滚烫的蜡烛、穿着长袍的神父、画在墙上的圣像、不停地跪下又站起来的父亲都涌进了他痛苦而不情愿的回忆中，父亲一边祈祷，一边鞠躬，还时不时地皱眉观察，瓦西里是否在好好祈祷，是不是在调皮捣蛋。想到这些，他简直比祈祷之前更觉恐怖了。

一切都烟消云散了。

疯狂的感觉特别压抑地传导到他的全身。他的意识熄灭了，就犹如一堆被人为熄灭拨散的篝火，就犹如一具行将就木的尸体，心脏处的体温尚存，手脚却早已经冰凉僵硬了。他那行将熄灭、尚存一息的思想又说了一次话，即他，罪人瓦西里·卡希林，有可能在这里发疯，体验到那些无名的苦难，忍受还未有任何生物体验过的无边的疼痛与痛苦。他可能会把头死命地往墙上撞，可能会用手指抠出自己的双眼，很可能会歇斯底里地大喊大叫，很可能会痛哭流涕地哭诉，他再也受不了了——希望这种事不会出现。肯定不会出现的。

果然什么事也没有发生。双腿还没有失去自己的知觉和生命，继续行走并且承载着他那不停抖动、汗津津的身体。双手也还有知觉，总是徒劳地要把前胸敞开的囚服衣襟拉紧，好让冷得发抖的身体稍微暖和一点儿。他的身体打着寒战，简直透心凉了。他的眼睛一直在直勾勾盯着某处看。这种姿势已经持续不动很久了，称得上宁静不已。

然而，极端可怕的时刻还是到来了：这就是一帮人拥进牢房的时刻。他甚至没有想到，这就意味着——该去刑场行刑了。只是看着这

些人，自己就已经像一个小孩子一样感到害怕。

“我再也不敢了！我再也不敢了！”他惊骇地躲到牢房的角落里，翕动着干硬的嘴唇，用几乎听不见的小声喃喃自语，像极了小时候父亲抬手要揍他时的样子。

“该走了。”

这帮人跟他说话，在他身旁走动，递给他某个东西。他闭着眼睛，身体一直摇摆——后来就心情沉重地开始收拾东西。看起来，他的神志清醒过来了，因为他突然张口向那个官员要一根香烟来吸。后者殷勤地打开了绘有颓废派画风图案的银质烟盒。

10.墙在倒塌

维尔纳只是化名，没人知道他的真名实姓，他呢，是一个对生活和斗争都厌倦了的人。原先有过一段时期，他非常热爱生活，酷爱戏剧和文学，喜欢交友，常常呼朋唤友。他记忆力惊人，意志相当顽强，学习并精通好几种欧洲语言，能够流利地和德国人、法国人或英国人交谈。他说德语时还带一点儿巴伐利亚口音，但必要时，他会像一个地道的土生土长的柏林人那样说话。他穿戴十分讲究，总是风度翩翩，在自己的同志中，他是唯一一个敢出现在上流社会的各种场合而不担心被识破的人。

但他的同志们长久以来并不知道，在维尔纳的心里早就形成了对人的蔑视，不仅如此，他心底也不断堆积沉重的绝望情绪和厌倦心理。从天性上来说，维尔纳更像是一个数学家，而不是一个诗人，因为他至今不知道何为写作灵感，何为文艺移情，却在很长一段时间里感觉自己是一个狂人，立志要在人类的血泊中解决化圆为方 [9] 的问题。他不尊敬与自己每日缠斗的敌人，因为这些都是由愚蠢、背叛和谎言甚至肮脏的口水和无耻的欺骗编织成的一张密实的大网。最终让他永远地丧失了生活愿望的原因，似乎是组织交给他的一项清除奸细的任务。他按组织要求完成了，在老练地打死奸细之后，看了一眼死去的人，生前是那么可恶虚伪的一张脸，现在已经变得安详，完全是一张令人怜悯的脸——他突然不再尊敬自己和自己的事业了。并不是感到了什么悔恨，只不过是突然不再自视甚高了。他开始觉得自己是一个无趣的人，一个无足轻重的人，一个乏味的局外人。不过，作为一个高度自律的人，他遵规守纪，并没有脱离组织，表面上和以前毫无二致——只是眼神变了，冷冰冰的，看上去很可怕。他没有与任何人交流过这些心理活动。

他还拥有一个罕见的特点：就像很多人从来不知道头疼是怎么回事一样，他呢，从来不知道什么叫害怕。每当别人感到害怕的时候，他对此既不加以谴责，也不特别同情，就像感冒是如此普及的一种疾病，但他本人却从未得过一样。他也怜悯自己的同志，尤其是像瓦西里·卡希林这样的。但是，他的可怜是冷冰冰的，居高临下的，几乎并不是真情实意的流露。这种怜悯，可能连法庭上的一些法官都会有。

维尔纳清楚，绞刑并不仅仅是死刑，它还含有某种别的含义——但是，他决定，无论出现任何情况，都要平静地去迎接死亡，就像对待任何身外之事一样，就像什么也没发生，什么也不会发生一样，活到生命的最后一刻。他只能以此种方式来表明他对死刑的最高轻蔑，捍卫自己不可剥夺的精神自由。所以，在法庭上，他想的既不是死的问题，也不是如何活下去的问题，他专心致志地、聚精会神地、心无旁骛地在思考一盘难解的棋局，这一点，就连十分了解他那平时遇事冷静和大无畏性格的同志们也未必能想得到。维尔纳是一位国际象棋高手，从被捕的第一天起，他就开始下这盘棋了，一直持续不断地在棋盘上厮杀。就连对他的绞刑判决也未能干扰到他，他在意念中的棋盘上还未输掉一子呢。

甚至，明摆着他是不完这盘棋了，这一点也没能让他放弃继续排兵布阵。他停留在人世间最后一天的那个早晨，是从他修正昨天走得太睿智的随手棋开始的。他把双手放在两个膝盖中间，一动也不动地坐了好久，然后，站起身来，开始一边走动，一边思考。他的步态很特别，他上半身的躯干微微向前倾，而厚鞋跟则重重地磕在地上，叩地有响，以至于在干硬的地上留下了十分明显的脚印。他轻轻地用口哨声吹了一曲轻快的意大利咏叹调——这有助于他的思考。

但是，不知为什么，这天早上，棋下得不顺利。他感觉不好，觉得是走了一步昏着儿，而且是相当愚蠢的大败着儿。他几次从开局起，复盘所走的每一步棋。始终没有发现走错的那一步棋究竟落子何处了，但是，走错了一步棋的感觉如影随形，而且越来越强烈，越来越令他沮丧。但是一个突如其来的想法使他非常难堪：事情不在于他是否走了一步昏着儿，而在于他是否想用下棋来转移自己对于死刑这件事的注意力，逃避他对死亡的恐惧，逃避那对于每个犯人来说都无可逃避的死亡的恐惧？

“不！我才不会呢！”他冷冰冰地回答自己的这个疑惑，平静地合上了意念中的棋盘。于是，开始像下棋一样，专心致志地、聚精会神地、心无旁骛地思考起自己毫无出路的可怕的处境，就像是要为一场十分苛刻的考试做出标准答案。他环视了一遍单人牢房，尽量不漏掉任何东西，计算了一下到受刑之前还有多长的时间，在心里画了一幅大致的受绞刑时的场景图，画得相当准确，细节毕现，随即自己就耸了耸肩。

“那又能怎样呢？”他反诘式地回答，“不就是这些嘛。有什么可怕的呢？”

确实没有什么好怕的。不仅没什么可怕的，而且他心里还有一种与之相反的感觉——一种混沌不清的，但是巨大的、豪迈的、欢乐的感觉。于是，那遍寻不得的昏着儿已经引不起他的沮丧、他的愤怒，

却带来了某种巨大的意想不到的好事，就好比他以为一位好朋友已经死了，结果是朋友出乎意料地毫发无损地回来了，且正在冲他微笑。

维尔纳重新又耸了耸肩膀，摸了一下自己的脉搏，心跳虽然很快，但脉搏有力、平稳、匀速，带着特有的怦怦的节奏感。他再一次像一个新来的犯人一样仔细打量了一遍墙壁、门上的插销以及固定在地上的椅子，心里想道：

“为什么我会感到这么轻松愉快、自由自在呢？尤其是自由自在？我想到明天的绞刑——就好像这件事根本不存在一样。我看着这堵墙——就好像墙也不存在一样。就这样自由自在，就好像我不是正在坐牢，而是刚刚从坐了一辈子的监狱里被刑满释放了一样。这是怎么回事呢？”

维尔纳的双手开始颤抖——这对他来说可算是从未有过的现象。一时间，他的思绪越来越汹涌，就像有无数条火舌在头脑中舔噬——这些火舌竭力要冲出头脑，照亮远方黑沉沉的夜色。它们终于冲了出来，把远方照得一片光明。

近两年来困扰维尔纳的混沌的厌倦感消失了，那条盘踞在他心口的冷冰冰的、紧闭口眼的、沉重的大蛇突然就不复存在了——代之返回的，是美妙的活生生的青春，就在临死前。而且，在神清志明的同时，随之而来的还有一种罕见的现象，即一个人精神上的觉悟能够使其进入到人生的巅峰时刻，维尔纳就是突然处于此种境界之中，同一时间内，既看到了生，也看到了死，他被这种罕有的、空前壮观的现象所震惊。仿佛他自己正在窄窄的、刀锋般的高山绝壁上行走。他看到的是一幅全景图，往这边看到的是生，而往另一边看到的则是死，恰如两片深不可测、美不胜收、波光粼粼的大海，在地平线处汇合为海天一色的无边无际的广阔海洋。

“太壮观了！竟有这么绝妙的景象！”他拉长声音说道，慢慢地欠起身，挺直后背，就像在面君朝圣一样。于是，在维尔纳那专注的、洞察一切的目光扫视下，墙壁、空间、时间都消失了，他极目远眺，一览无余地看到了即将与之告别的生活的最深处。

于是，生活变成了崭新的。但是，维尔纳并不想像以前那样，用语言来描述所见所闻，而且就是穷尽人类的语言，对于这般景象的描写也是苍白无力的，也是微乎其微的，也是词汇贫乏的。人们的脸上有过的渺小、肮脏和凶狠的样子，曾经让他轻蔑，甚至有时特别憎恶的表情，现在都彻底消失了。这情景就犹如一个乘坐高空中的热气球正在离开自己城市的人，在他看来，拥挤不堪的街道上那些争吵谩骂和污泥浊水都统统消失不见了，所有丑陋、破败的景象都变得美不胜收。

维尔纳下意识地走到桌子旁边，用他的右手掌撑住桌面。他生性高傲，威严，但还从来没有像现在这样摆出如此高傲、如此自由自在、如此威严的姿势。他连脖子也不转动一下，他的眼神从未如此的犀利——他从来没有像现在这样自由自在，这样威仪整肃，就在监狱里，就在离执行死刑不足几个钟头的时间里。

而且，在他清醒的目光扫视下，人，都变成了新人，都变成了可亲可爱的新人。他像一个穿越了时间的年轻小伙子，清楚地看见了，昨天还犹如森林间嚎叫的野兽一般的人类焕发了青春。原先人身上可怕的、不可饶恕的和令人憎恶的缺点突然间就变得可亲可爱了——就像刚刚学着走路的孩童，尽管不会像大人那样大步流星，但是，他的咿呀学语、他的蹒跚学步、他的天资聪颖、他的呆萌、跌跤、磕头碰脚都令人忍俊不禁。

“我可亲可爱的人们啊！”维尔纳突然情不自禁地笑了，保持了半天的姿势一下子就变形了，重新又像一个犯人那样，被牢牢地禁锢在方寸监舍中，因为厌恶贴在那门上的那双监视的眼睛而感到心烦意乱，无所适从。说来也怪，他几乎是陡然间就忘记了刚才清清楚楚所看到的一切；甚至更可怕的是，他连回想一下的愿望都没有。他只是坐姿稍稍随便了一点儿，不像平时那么身正背直了，神情完全变成了非维尔纳式的样子，脸上带着一抹松弛的、温柔的微笑看着牢房四周的墙壁和铁栅栏。接下来就发生了更不像维尔纳以往行为处事的一幕：他突然放声痛哭起来。

“我亲爱的同志们啊！”他一边大哭，一边声泪俱下地低声诉说。

他的情感由高高在上的傲气和无限的自由自在一下子过渡到温柔和怜悯的激情中，这究竟是经由了怎样神秘的心路历程呢？对这一切，他不知道，也没有去想。至于他是否怜悯自己亲爱的同志们，抑或他的眼泪中是否还饱含着更为伟大崇高或者更为炙热的情感呢？他那颗重新复活和重返青春的心恐怕对此也一无所知。他就只管放声痛哭：

“我亲爱的同志们啊！我亲爱的同志们啊！”

谁也不会在这个痛哭流涕的人身上认出以前那个冷冰冰的、傲慢的维尔纳，谁也不会把这个含泪微笑的人等同于以前厌倦一切、无所畏惧的维尔纳——法官们不会认出他来，同志们不会相信自己的眼睛，就连他自己也不会认同的。

11.押解上路

在分别被押上各自的囚车前，五名死囚被集中在一间阴冷的大房间里，那里拱形的天花板使其显得更加空旷，像是一间废弃已久的办公场所，也可能，以前是被用作宽敞的接待室的。他们被允许相互交谈。

可是，只有丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克立即就开始使用这项许可。其他人都默不作声，只是紧紧地握手。有人的手凉冷如冰，有人的手热如火炭——他们不想说话，也不互相凝望，他们很不自然地围成一个松散的小圈。现在，他们大家聚在一起了，这当中的每个人似乎都为自己单独囚禁时的想法感到羞愧。他们不敢互相凝望，这是因为怕看到别人，或者向别人展示出自入狱以来每个人都曾想到过和怀疑过的东西，那些新的、很特别的但说出来有点儿令人羞愧的想法。

但是，一两次对视之后，他们立刻都释然了，仍然像以前一样，微笑着开始无拘无束地交谈起来，仿佛没有什么变故一样；要是说有什么已经发生，那对大家也是一样的，每个人身上的变化是同等的，所以对个人来说也就不明显了。所有人都开始说话了，而且言谈举止都特别奇怪。大家的谈话不是断断续续，就是滔滔不绝，不是抢着说，就是谁也不说。有时候大家抢着说，同样的话会被重复几遍；有时候，有人一句话只说了半截，也以为自己已经说完了，停下来也没人注意到。大家都在好奇地互相打量，就像是戴眼镜的人突然摘掉了眼镜，仔细地观察那些以前视为寻常的东西一样。他们所有人都几次突然转身向后张望，仿佛恍惚间有人在背后吼叫和下了什么指示。不过，他们都对自己的反常表现并未察觉。两位女士穆夏和丹妮雅的脸颊和耳朵都烧得绯红，谢尔盖一开始脸还发白，但很快就恢复原样，和平时毫无二致了。

只有瓦西里一人引起了大家的注意。即使在他的同志们中间，他也不能恢复常态，仍然是一副害怕的样子。维尔纳还是十分担忧，小声和穆夏说了自己的不安：

“他这是怎么搞的呢，穆夏琪卡 [10] ？难道他真的怕成那个样子吗？怎么办？应该和他谈谈。”

瓦西里站得稍远一点儿，向维尔纳望了一眼，就好像不认识他一样，垂下了自己的目光。

“瓦夏，你的头发是怎么弄的呀，啊？你是怎么啦？没什么大不了的，老弟，没什么大不了的，没什么大不了的，这马上就结束了。应当坚持住啊，要坚持，要坚持。”

瓦西里默不作声，似乎无话可说。当维尔纳已经觉得，瓦西里不会再开口说点什么了的时候，他却给了一句闷声闷气的回答。这回答给所有人的问候听上去并不能让人安心，反倒像是从遥远的坟墓里发出的哀鸣：

“我可没什么好害怕的。我能坚持住。”

他又重复了一遍：

“我能坚持住。”

维尔纳一下子就高兴起来了。

“我说你没事的嘛，对。真是好样的。就该这样，就该这样。”

但是，当维尔纳与瓦西里的目光相遇时，他发现瓦西里眼神十分呆滞、暗淡，像是从一个遥远的深处递出来的茫然失措的目光，这使他在那一瞬间痛心不已：“他这是从哪里看过来、从哪里说的话呢？”他立即就用恋人们才有的温柔劲儿，像是对还未醒的人说：

“瓦夏，你能听见吗？我非常爱你。”

“我也非常爱你。”他吞吞吐吐地回答说。

忽然，穆夏抓住维尔纳的一只手，像站在舞台上的演员一样，语句清晰地表达了自己的惊讶，她说：

“维尔纳，你怎么啦？你刚才当真说了‘我爱你’？你可是个从来不说‘我爱你’的人。你怎么突然变得这么温柔，这么和蔼可亲了啊……？哎，你这是怎么啦？”

“哎，你这是怎么啦？”

于是，维尔纳也像一个演员一样，紧握着穆夏的手，同样语句清晰地表达了自己的感受：

“是的，我现在非常爱大家。请不要告诉别人，不要告诉他们。挺难为情的，但是，我确实非常爱大家。”

他们两个人的目光碰到一起，电光石火般燃烧起来，周围的一切都黯淡无光了，犹如瞬间的闪电使一切光源都熄灭了，只有闪电那黄色且沉重的影子掠过大地。

“是的。”穆夏说，“维尔纳，是的。”

“是的。”他回答，“是的，穆夏，是的。”

某种东西在两个人之间已经心领神会，并由他们两人坚定地将其确定下来了。于是，维尔纳的目光不再犹疑，他重新振作了一下，又走向了谢尔盖。

“谢廖扎！”

但是，回答他的是丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克。她拽着谢尔盖的衣服袖子，特别兴奋，几乎有一种母亲般的自豪感，都快落泪了。

“维尔纳，你听我说！我这阵子一直担心他，几乎一直在哭，都要伤心死了，可他倒好——人家在做体操！”

“穆勒那套？”维尔纳笑了笑。

谢尔盖挺腼腆地皱了皱眉头，说道：

“维尔纳，你还真别笑，我已经完全确信它有益……”

大家都笑了起来。大家从互相交谈中汲取了坚强的精神，获得了力量。渐渐地，他们又变成了从前的样子，但他们没有察觉的也正是这一点，他们还认为，他们和从前是一样的。突然，维尔纳止住了笑声，特别严肃地对谢尔盖说：

“你是对的，谢廖扎。你是完全正确的。”

“不，你要明白……”戈洛温挺高兴，“当然，我们……”

但这时候，卫兵已经开始催促他们上车了。押解他们的人这时候都十分和蔼，允许他们三两结伴坐同一辆车，或随意同车乘坐。总之，押送人员非常和善可亲，甚至过于和善了。也许是想尽量展示他们的人道态度，也许是想竭力表明，这一切自有其规律，与他们全无任何关系。不过，这些人的脸色都不好，很苍白。

“穆夏，你和他坐一起吧。”维尔纳示意她和站着不动的瓦西里同坐一辆车。

“明白。”穆夏立即点头，“那你呢？”

“我吗？丹妮雅和谢尔盖坐一辆车，你去和瓦夏坐一辆车……剩我一个人了。这没关系，你知道，我是能行的。”

当大家走到院子里来的时候，夜色黑暗，空气湿润，暖风强劲地扑面而来，使人睁不开眼，呼吸都不畅了。有什么东西突如其来地一下子就穿透了犯人们颤抖的身体，令他们感到清新和惬意。以前很难相信，这令人惊奇的东西，不过就是春风而已，是温暖湿润的春风。正是这个真正的、令人惊奇的春天的夜晚，辽阔无边的大地正在散发着冬雪融化的气息，四处都是融化了的水滴在嗒嗒作响。水滴嗒嗒不断线地散落，一滴接着一滴，极速而又和谐地演奏出欢快的曲目。但

也有突然哑然的时候，整个欢快的曲目就出现了混乱的无序状态。直到后来有一大滴水珠慨然落下，这一组欢快的曲目才得以准确地、和谐地继续叮咚演奏下去。在城市的上空，在监狱的楼顶上，泛着电灯反射过来的白光。

“啊哈……”谢尔盖·戈洛温深深地呼出了一口气，然后屏住呼吸，仿佛不愿意把这么清新、这么美妙的空气从肺部呼出体外。

“天气早就这样了吗？”维尔纳不敢相信，“这已经完全是春天了呀。”

“这才是第二个暖和天，”旁边有一个机警但礼貌的声音回答道，“这里以前一直相当冷呢。”

乌黑的囚车一辆接一辆慢慢地驶过来，每辆车带走两名犯人，驶入黑暗之中，向大门口驶去，那门上挂着一盏不停摇晃的电灯。那些灰色的影子是负责此次押解任务的骑兵团卫兵，他们紧紧地围住每一辆囚车，他们所骑的马匹踩在石板上便发出嘚嘚的清脆蹄声，踩在融化的湿漉漉的雪上就发出闷闷的啪啪声。

当维尔纳弯腰俯身准备钻进囚车时，一个卫兵语焉不详地说：

“里面还有一个犯人要和你同乘一辆走。”

维尔纳显然吃了一惊：

“上哪里去？他要去哪里？啊，怎么可能呢？还有一个？这又是谁？”

卫兵不作声了。确实，这辆囚车的里头，一个个头不大但却一动也不动的人——当然不是动物——畏缩在黑洞洞的角落里，大门口那盏摇晃的灯射过来的光线就照在他那只睁开的眼睛上。维尔纳坐下的时候，碰到了这个人的膝盖。

“对不起，同志。”

那个人没有回答。只是在车辆向外走动的时候，那个人才突然用根本不地道的俄语讷讷地问维尔纳：

“您是什么人？”

“我是维尔纳，因预谋行刺要员被判处绞刑。您是谁？”

“我——是扬松。不该绞死我。”

他们一起坐车走，为的是在两小时以后去面对那个无法破解的伟大秘密，在从生走向死的路上，他们就这样互相认识了。生与死——这两者同时并行着。生，是有始有终的，有最可笑的阶段，也有毫无意义的琐碎，但是，生活毕竟是生活。

“扬松，你干了什么事？”

“我拿刀把主人给捅啦，还偷拿了他的钱。”

听那声音，扬松好像要睡着了。维尔纳在黑暗中摸到了扬松的一只手，软塌塌的一只手，握了握，扬松萎靡不振地缩回了手。

“你害怕吗？”维尔纳问他。

“我不情愿被绞死。”

他们两个都不说话了。维尔纳重新把这个爱沙尼亚人的手拉过来，紧紧地握在自己那两个干燥、滚烫的手掌中。这只手就像一块小木板一样立在维尔纳的两个手掌之间，但是扬松再也没有把手缩回去。

囚车里又拥挤又闷不透气，散发出卫兵身上制服的汗味、霉味、马粪味和湿漉漉的皮靴味道。坐在维尔纳对面的小个子卫兵还不断朝他呼出一阵阵的大蒜和廉价烟草混合的气味。幸好不断有清冽、馥郁的空气从囚车的缝隙中钻进来。所以，在这个行驶中的小盒子里，在这个狭小的、闷罐一般的囚车里，比在车外面更能感受到强烈的春天的气息。囚车一路颠簸摇晃，一会儿向左倾斜过去，一会儿又倒向车体右侧，有时候感觉囚车是在往回走，有时又觉得已经过了几小时囚车还在原地打转转。一开始，路灯的光线还透过囚车的厚实的小窗帘照进来，后来囚车拐了一个弯之后，突然就没有任何光亮了，外面漆黑一片，伸手不见五指了，他们只能据此猜到，自己已经被带到了比较偏僻的街巷——接近C火车站的地方。维尔纳坐在晃来晃去的囚车里，只要一拐弯，弯曲的双膝不由自主地就会碰到对面坐的卫兵的双膝，他们都是生机勃勃的躯体，所以，简直令人难以置信，他竟然是去赴死。

“我们这是去哪儿呀？”扬松突然就发问了。

因为在黑洞洞且狭小的车厢里闷着，又颠簸得过久，他有点儿头晕和恶心了。

维尔纳回答了他，并更紧地握住了这个爱沙尼亚人的手。他想对这个个子小且老是睡眼惺忪的人说点特别友好、特别亲切的话，他爱这个人，胜过以往生活中遇到的任何一个人。

“亲爱的！看样子，你坐得很不舒服。过来，靠在我身上好了。”

扬松好一会儿不作声，后来回答说：

“不用了，谢谢！我还行，坐着没事。那，你也要被绞死吗？”

“对呀！”出乎意料，维尔纳一听这话立即高兴起来，赶紧回答他，特别轻松，满不在乎地挥了挥手。仿佛他们交谈的内容是自己那

些爱好恶作剧的好朋友开的一个无伤大雅的玩笑，只是想捉弄他一下而已的玩笑。

“你有老婆吗？”扬松问。

“没呢。哪有什么老婆！我是一个单身汉呢。”

“我也是个光棍。一个人过。”扬松说完，想了一下，又改口说道。

维尔纳的头也开始晕乎乎的了。竟然不时出现一种幻觉，仿佛他们这是去参加某种盛大的节日。这听起来很奇怪，但是，几乎所有被押赴死刑场的人都会有这种感觉，与痛苦和恐惧伴生相随的是不同寻常的狂喜，这是一种对从未体验过的事物混沌的期待。在死刑犯人的认知中，现实沉湎于他们的非理智状态，和生活交织在一起的死亡使他们产生出各种幻觉。很有可能，是房屋上迎风招展的旗帜诱发了这种感觉。

“看哪，我们到了！”囚车一停下来，还有点儿晃动时，维尔纳就既好奇又快活地说。可是，扬松却失神了：整个人都蔫蔫的，一言不发，赖在车里根本就不想下车。他抓住车门的把手不放，他的手也没啥劲了，押解的卫兵过去把他的手一下子就掰开了；他又赶紧抓住囚车一角、门边和高高的车轱辘，可是卫兵稍一松手，他就整个人瘫软下来，他完全不像是抓住什么东西抵抗下车，而是睡眼惺忪的，像是要倚靠个东西就瞌睡过去了——所以卫兵只是那么轻轻一提，他就松了手。终于下了囚车。

房屋上也没有什么飘飘彩旗。这时仍旧是夜间，车站周围笼罩在一片黑暗之中，空旷无人，无声无息。这个时候已经不再发送普通的旅客列车，只有一节静候这批旅客的列车，无声地在轨道上等候发车，没有明亮的灯光，也没有旅客候车时的人声嘈杂。突然，维尔纳感到了无聊——不是恐惧，也不是感伤，而是一种突如其来的、巨大的、持续了好一会儿的无聊感，他因此只想找一个地方，躺下来，紧闭上的自己的双眼。维尔纳就这样先是打了一个大呵欠，然后连着又打了几次呵欠，呵欠连天。

“但愿一切快一点儿过去吧！”维尔纳完全倦怠了。

扬松一直没话，就是全身都蜷缩着。

被士兵们封锁的站台上没有任何闲杂人等，犯人们有序地朝着一节灯光暗淡的车厢走过去，维尔纳挨着谢尔盖·戈洛温。谢尔盖抬手指着别的地方，开始说话，但是，维尔纳听清楚的只有“灯笼”一个词，后面的话都被他那连天的呵欠给吞没了，什么也没听清楚。

“你说什么？”维尔纳打着呵欠问道。

“我说灯笼。里面的灯泡把灯罩都熏黑了。”

维尔纳这才扭身看了一下：确实，灯泡烤炙得厉害，外面的透明玻璃罩都已经是暗黑色的了。

“可不是嘛，都熏黑了。”

突然间，他意识到：“都这个时候了，灯罩是否被熏黑还与我有关系呢……”很显然，谢尔盖也同时想到了一样的问题，所以他飞快地看了一眼维尔纳就把身子转过去了，但是，两个人都不再打呵欠了。

所有的人都是自行向车厢里走过去，只有扬松需要人搀扶。一开始他的脚底板像是被站台上的木板给粘上了一样，根本就抬不起脚来，后来两个卫兵架起他的胳膊，拖着他走，他的两条腿弯曲着耷拉在地上，像是一个酩酊大醉的人一样，靴子的尖头从站台的木板上吱嘎作响地划过。卫兵们折腾好半天才把他塞入车厢里，倒也没废什么话。

瓦西里·卡希林也是自己走过去的。他就是迷迷糊糊地模仿着同志们的动作，大家做什么，他就做什么，亦步亦趋而已。但是，在来到站台上，往车厢里走的时候，他脚下滑了一下，一个卫兵及时地抓住了他的一只手肘，扶住了他，瓦西里却浑身颤抖，缩回自己的手臂，大声尖叫起来：

“哎呀！”

“瓦夏，你怎么啦？”维尔纳立即跑到了他身边。

瓦西里也不说话了，身体颤抖得更剧烈了。卫兵有点儿尴尬，甚至有点儿委屈地解释说：

“我想扶他一下，可是……”

“来，瓦夏，我们走，我扶着你。”维尔纳说着，就去搀扶瓦西里的胳膊，但是瓦西里推开他的手，又一次大声尖叫起来：

“哎呀！”

“瓦夏，是我呀，维尔纳。”

“我知道是你。别碰我，让我自己走。”

于是，他就这样，浑身颤抖着，自己走进了车厢，坐到角落里去了。维尔纳则转身对着穆夏，用目光指着瓦西里，示意穆夏并小声地问她：

“他这是怎么啦？”

“他的状态很糟糕。”穆夏小声地回答，“他已经算是死了。维尔纳，你告诉我，难道真有什么死亡吗？”

“我不知道，穆夏，但我认为，死亡不存在。”维尔纳回答得既相当认真，又若有所思。

“我也是这样想的。可是他呢？刚才和他坐在同一辆囚车里可真够我受的，我就像是和一具死尸一起过来的。”

“我真的弄不懂，穆夏。也许，对某些人来说，死亡可能真的存在。那也是暂时的，时过境迁就不会存在了。譬如，对我来说，死亡存在过，但是现在它已经不存在了。”

穆夏那苍白的脸颊泛起了红晕。

“死亡曾在你头脑中出现过？真的出现过吗？”

“出现过了。现在没有了。就像对你来说一样，已经不存在了。”

车厢门口传来一阵嘈杂声。米什卡·茨冈诺克踏着铛铛作响的鞋后跟，喘着粗气，呸呸地吐着唾沫，走进了车厢。他用眼睛四下张望了一会儿，就站住不动了。

“卫兵！这里没有地方了！”他气呼呼地冲着那个看他的卫兵嚷嚷，显然后者已经很疲倦了。“你得给我找一个宽敞的地方坐着，不然的话，我可可不走了，你就在外面的路灯上吊死我得了。还弄个马来送站，狗娘养的，那个也能叫马车吗？鬼知道来了一辆啥玩意儿，反正他妈的不是马车！”

突然，他不喊了，低下头，就伸长脖子一直朝前面走去，径直走到其他囚犯跟前。他带着几分狂野的表情，头发和胡子都乱蓬蓬的，黑色的眼睛看起人来还是那么粗野和犀利。

“啊！先生们！”他拉长声音说道，“原来是你们呢。你好哇，老爷。”

他碰了碰维尔纳的手臂，坐到了他的对面。一面俯身凑近维尔纳，一面眯起一只眼，用手挠了挠脖子。

“也是去刑场？啊？”

“也是！”维尔纳笑着回答他。

“难道这些人全都是？”

“全是。”

“嗯哼！”茨冈诺克龇牙大笑，很快就将所有人扫视了一番，在穆夏和扬松的身上稍微多停留了一会儿。又转过头来，朝维尔纳做了个

鬼脸：

“这次是把部长干掉了？”

“是部长。那你呢？”

“我嘛，老爷，是因为别的案子。我们这种人可够不上部长！我是啥人呢，老爷，我可是个强盗。杀人越货的主儿！没什么，老爷，我也没想到，挤到这里来了，要和你们大家一起上路。那个世界里，地方够大，肯定咱们大伙儿都有地方坐的。”

他顶着一头乱蓬蓬的头发，瞪着一双粗野的大眼睛，眼珠骨碌碌，打量着所有人，目光中满是不信任。但所有人都默不作声地看着他，甚至大家看他的目光中倒是带着明显的关切。他齙着牙，在维尔纳的膝盖上拍了几下。

“老爷，这也有趣！这挺像一首歌里唱的那样：请你不要大声说话呀，那青翠的橡树呀，我的母亲。”

“都这时候了，你干吗还管我叫老爷……”

“你说得对呀，”茨冈诺克满意地随声附和，“都要和我一块儿被吊死啦，你还当啥老爷呢！瞧哇，这家伙才是个老爷呢。”他就用手指头指着那个默不作声的卫兵，然后说，“哎，你们的那一位，不比我们差呀，”他用眼睛示意瓦西里，“老爷，这位老爷，你是有点儿害怕了还是怎的？”

“没什么。”瓦西里费劲地转动舌头嘟囔了一句。

“哎呀，还说没什么呢。你可不用感到害臊，这也没什么可害臊的。只有狗才会在人家吊死它的时候齙牙咧嘴、摇尾乞怜呢，可你是个人呢。这个，这个垂头耷耳的又是谁？跟你们不是一伙的吗？”

茨冈诺克飞快地骨碌碌地转动着他的眼珠，不停地把嘴里腥甜的唾沫啐到地上。扬松龟缩在角落里，头上那顶脱了毛的破皮帽子不停地微微地抖动着，听到了他的话但是什么也没有回答。维尔纳替他回答说：

“他把主人给宰了。”

“我的天哪，”茨冈诺克大为吃惊，“他这个熊样还能杀人啊！”

茨冈诺克早就也斜着眼睛，瞟了穆夏好几眼了。这时，他很快地转过身来，直勾勾地盯着她看，冲着她说话。

“大小姐啊，你这大小姐！您干吗要干这种事！红红的脸蛋，还总在笑。瞧哇，她还真的在笑哇！”他用干硬的大手抓住维尔纳的膝盖，“你瞧，你瞧哇！”

穆夏的脸一下子就涨得通红了，有点儿羞怯地微笑着。她并不躲避，同样直视茨冈诺克那张脸，看着他那有点儿疯狂、粗野却也沉重的眼睛和那副探寻的眼神。

大家都沉默了。

为数不多的几节车厢哐当哐当地行进在窄轨上，以连续而细碎的节奏不停地飞奔。每当进入拐弯处或者是到了十字路口，火车的汽笛声就不失时机地、呜呜地不停地鸣叫起来——司机最怕轧死人了。这样一想也怪荒谬的，为了把人送去绞死，人们还要在火车上费这么多的事，地球上最疯狂的事就是用最普通的方式，一丝不苟地，按部就班地，理智地去完成毫无理智的事情。列车在飞奔，车厢里坐着的人们，和他们平时坐火车时毫无二致。而火车行驶着，也像平时的火车那样运行着，然后到了一个车站，就像平时一样，“停车五分钟”。

于是，死亡即刻就降临了——永恒来临了——这就是那个伟大的秘密。

[10] 穆夏的小名。——编者注

12.他们被带走了

小专列在风驰电掣地行驶中。

谢尔盖·戈洛温曾经连续几年都和亲人们一起到这条线路附近的别墅度假，他白天和夜里都乘坐过这条线路上的火车，对这附近相当熟悉。此刻如果双目微合，他会觉得这是回家的路程——也许只不过是城里的朋友家里逗留过久，只好乘坐夜班车赶回家而已。

“现在快到了。”他睁开眼睛说道，看了一眼被铁栏杆钉死的窗户，黑洞洞的毫无任何光亮，对他的话也无任何的反应。

没有任何人动一下，也没有人对他的下意识反应做出回答，只有茨冈诺克一次又一次快速地吐着他那腥甜的唾沫。并且他的眼睛又开始重新骨碌碌地在车厢里逡巡，目光依次扫过列车的窗子、车厢的门以及站着的卫兵。

“真冷啊。”瓦西里·卡希林确实冻得嘴唇已经僵硬了，在说出这个词的时候，只能翕动上下唇打战，以至于把“冷”这个字说得更形象了。

丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克立刻就觉得“英雄有用武之地”了。

“把我的头巾给你吧，把头巾围在脖子上。头巾很暖和的。”

“脖子？”谢尔盖突如其来地问了一句，并被自己的问题吓了一跳。

但是，因为大家都很冷，都想的是同一个问题，所以，没人听到他的这句问话，就好像没人说过任何话一样，或者也非常可能，所有人在同一瞬间说出了同样一个词。

“没关系的，瓦夏，你就围上这头巾吧，快围上吧，会暖和的。”维尔纳劝了瓦西里几句。然后，他转过身，对着扬松，亲切地问道：

“亲爱的，你觉不觉得冷啊？”

“维尔纳，可能，他更想抽支烟。同志，你是不是想抽烟？”穆夏问道，“我们有烟。”

“想抽呢！”

“谢廖扎，给他一支烟。”维尔纳高兴地说。

但谢尔盖早就把烟递给了扬松。于是，所有人都爱怜地看着扬松用手指夹住香烟，点燃了火柴，从嘴里徐徐地喷出了蓝色的烟雾圈。

“哎，谢谢啦。”扬松说，“不错。”

“真奇怪呀！”谢尔盖说。

“有什么可奇怪的？”维尔纳转过身来，“什么事奇怪？”

“这香烟啊。”

他手里拿着一支香烟，就是普普通通的香烟，夹在他虽有点儿苍白但还是活人的手指之间，他惊奇地，甚至有点儿害怕地看着这支香烟。于是大家的目光都集中到这支精细的香烟上，看着它的一端袅袅地冒出丝带一样的青烟，被吸烟者呼出的气息吹散开，而剩下的那一段就是黑如焦炭般的灰烬。最终熄灭了。

“烟灭了。”丹妮雅说。

“是啊，熄灭了。”

“那就去他的吧！”维尔纳说，他皱起眉头，不安地看着扬松，而后者还夹着香烟的手像是死人的手一样僵住了。倒是茨冈诺克，突然转身，几乎把脸凑到维尔纳的脸上，瞪着像马眼一样的眼睛，小声说：

“老爷，要不，咱把看守的卫兵干掉……咋样？试一下子？”

“用不着啦，”维尔纳也小声说，“咱就干了死亡这杯酒吧。”

“为啥呀？打一架再去死不是更开心点吗？我揍他，他揍我，不知不觉就完事了。就不像是去送死嘛。”

“不，这可不用啦。”维尔纳说着，然后又转身对着扬松说，“亲爱的，你怎么不抽烟了？”

扬松的脸原本很松弛，突然间就好像被人用一根线拉紧了一样，脸上的褶子全都皱巴巴地挤在一起，那些皱纹都不停地抽搐起来。扬松像如梦初醒一样，放生哀号起来，就是用假嗓子干号，没有一滴眼泪那种：

“我不要抽烟啊！啊——呜！啊——呜！啊——呜！不该绞死我啊！啊——呜！啊——哼！啊——哼！”

大家都围着他，乱成一团。

丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克一边失声痛哭，一边替扬松拉拉衣服袖子，又把他那脱了毛的帽子拉一拉，使其戴得端正一点儿，嘴上还念叨：

“你可是我们的亲人呢！亲爱的，别哭啦，我们的亲人啊！我的苦命不幸的亲人啊！”

穆夏把目光转到别处。茨冈诺克捕捉到了她的目光，龇牙笑了。

“这位先生是个怪人！嘴上喝着热茶，却一肚子冰凉啊。”他讥讽地说，笑了一下。但是，他自己的脸色也变得铁青了，嘴里的两排大黄牙咬得咯咯直响。

突然间，小专列抖动了一下，明显地放慢了速度。除了扬松和瓦西里·卡希林，大家一下子都站起身来，旋即又坐了下来。

“到站啦！”谢尔盖说。

就仿佛有谁从车厢里抽取了所有可供呼吸的空气一般，喘气都变得困难起来。心脏仿佛也开始扩张膨胀，撑满了胸腔，快提到嗓子眼儿一般，疯狂地跳动起来——仿佛这鲜血，成了心脏的喉咙，不断发出喊声。大家的眼睛都盯着抖动的地板，耳朵则竖起来倾听火车车轮越来越慢的滚动声，滚动——滑行——再滚动——突然就刹车不动了。

火车停了。

自此，梦境开始了。这不只是因为害怕，而是害怕引起了幻觉，造成了失去记忆状态。所有这一切，对不得不面对的人们来说，都是陌生的：做梦者自身已经退避三舍，只有他的幻觉在毫无意识地四处走动，毫无声音地在诉说，毫无痛感地在体验痛苦。大家梦游一般地走出车厢，两人一排，贪婪地嗅着早春时节森林中特别新鲜的空气。扬松仍然是睡眼惺忪、快睡着了一样地抗拒下车，但毕竟从来都是缩手缩脚、软弱无力，到底还是被不出一声的卫兵拖出了车厢。

大家一起走下了站台的石阶。

“难道就这么步行过去吗？”不知是谁还挺高兴地问了一句。

“离这里不远呗。”不知是谁也挺高兴地回答了一句。

然后这一大群黑压压的人，默然无声地向森林中穿行。正值春天，林中的道路坎坷不平，潮湿泥泞。从森林中，从雪地里散发出十分新鲜的、春天特有的气息。有时候，脚下一滑，就会陷进雪地里去，双手就会不由自主地伸手去抓同伴以撑住不倒。押送人员在道路两边没有踩实的雪地里深一脚浅一脚地行进，呼呼地喘着粗气。不知是谁，生气地来了一句：

“连路也不给扫干净。跑来在雪里翻跟头玩呢。”

“大人，扫是扫过了。现在是解冻天气，也没有什么办法呀。”

犯人们的知觉意识稍稍清醒了一些，但还没有完全回归正常，只是不连贯地、片段式地小范围有感觉了。蓦然间，又有人意识到了这个十分确定的想法：

“的确，他们连路都不给清扫一下呀。”

但是，这感觉只有一小会儿，随即一切就都变得模糊不清了，只有嗅觉还是灵敏的，可以尽情地呼吸清新的空气、森林中的清香、雪在融化的气息。过了一会儿呢，一切又都清晰得不同寻常，所有的一切——森林、夜晚、路途，以及他们再过几分钟就要被送上绞刑架这事——都变得清晰可见。犯人们之间的零星的低声交谈也相当克制：

“快四点了。”

“我就说嘛，出来得太早了。”

“到五点天才会亮呢。”

“可不嘛，得五点。就是应该晚一点儿出来……”

在一片黑暗的林中空地旁边，犯人的队伍停住了。就在离此不远处，有几棵树，因冬季里已经掉光了叶子，显得枝丫稀疏，依稀可见两盏马灯无声无息地摇来晃去，在向前方移动：绞刑架就是设置在那里。

“套鞋走丢了。”谢尔盖·戈洛温说。

“什么？”维尔纳没明白他说的话。

“套鞋走丢了。好冷。”

“瓦西里在哪儿？”

“不清楚。呃，在那里站着哪。”

瓦西里站在那里，像一个黑影，一动也不动。

“穆夏在哪儿呢？”

“我在这里呢。是你吗，维尔纳？”

犯人们都开始环顾四周，但是竭力避免往马灯径直移动的方向看，大家心里清楚，马灯所在就是那无声而可怕之地所在。在左边，掉光树叶的枝丫使得树木看上去更加稀疏，能看见一大片盖了雪的白色而空旷的大地。森林里湿润的风就是从那里吹过来的。

“是海。”谢尔盖·戈洛温说，他张开嘴巴使劲地吸吮潮湿的空气，“那里是大海。”

穆夏欢快地回应他：

“我的爱情像大海一样宽广！”

“穆夏，你在说什么？”

“我的爱情像大海一样宽广，生活的堤岸无法容纳它。” [11]

“我的爱情像大海一样宽广。”谢尔盖若有所思，用穆夏的语调又重复了一遍这个诗句。

“我的爱情像大海一样宽广……”维尔纳也重复了一遍诗句，忽然他十分惊喜地说：

“穆希卡 [12]！你可真够年轻的呀！”

突然，就在维尔纳的耳旁，传来了一个急切的声音，气喘吁吁的茨冈诺克正在向他耳语：

“老爷，哎，老爷，这是树林子吧，啊？我的天哪，这是怎么回事！亮灯的地方有绞刑架啊？这是怎么回事，啊？”

维尔纳看了他一眼，这位茨冈诺克正在被临死前的痛苦折磨呢。

“该告别啦……”丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克说。

“再等一会儿，临行前还要宣读判决书的。”维尔纳说，“扬松在哪儿？”

扬松瘫倒在雪地里了，周围有几个人拿着东西在忙活。突然大家都闻到了一股刺鼻的氨水味。

“医生，怎么样？你们快弄好了吧？”有人不耐烦地问了一句。

“没什么，就是昏厥了。抓点雪擦擦他的耳朵就好了。他会醒过来的，可以宣读判决书了。”

就这样，一抹神秘的马灯的光亮照在那张致命的纸和一双摘了手套的苍白的手上。这张纸在抖动，这双手也在抖动，连说出话来的嗓音也在发抖：

“诸位，也许，不用读判决书了吧，你们不是都已经知道了吗？你们觉得呢？”

“不用读了。”维尔纳代替所有人回答道。照着判决书的马灯就立即熄灭了。

所有人都拒绝了让神父来为他们作终傅 [13]。茨冈诺克说：

“我说呀，神父，就别来糊弄傻瓜了，这时候你倒是想宽恕我了，他们还不是照样得把我绞死。快走吧，滚一边去得啦。”

马上，一个巨大的黑影默默无言地退到树林的深处，消失不见

了。看来，天色已经破晓：雪已经泛白，人影的暗色依稀可辨，森林里稀疏的树木都显露出来了，周围的氛围也愈发地悲伤和无聊。

“诸位，要两个一组过去。哪两个人一起，你们自行选择，但请动作快一点儿。”

维尔纳指着被两个卫兵架着才勉强站着的扬松，说：

“我和他一起吧。谢尔盖，你就带着瓦西里。你们先往前走。”

“好。”

“穆夏琪卡，我们就一起吧？”丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克说，“来吧，咱们就此吻别。”

大家就迅速地互相亲吻了。茨冈诺克亲吻得很用力，所以被他亲吻到的人都能感觉到他的牙齿。扬松的亲吻软绵绵的，还是无精打采的，只是半张着嘴，而且，他好像也不明就里，这时候为啥要亲吻。当谢尔盖·戈洛温和卡希林已经向前走出了几步的时候，卡希林突然站住了，用特别大的声音清楚地说了一句话，但完全是和以前判若两人的嗓音：

“永别了，同志们！”

“永别了，同志！”大家都异口同声地回答他。

他们离去了。此刻周围寂静无声。树上挂着的马灯已经不再左摇右晃。大家肃穆静候，以为那个方向会传来叫声、呻吟声、某种不期而至的声音。但那里却和这里一样寂然无声，不再晃动的马灯射出了昏黄的灯光。

“哎，我的上帝啊！”不知道是谁突然哑着嗓子冒失地来了一句。大家转头一看，原来是茨冈诺克正在饱受死前的折磨，“这两个人被绞死了！”

大家重又转过身来，一切又归于寂静。茨冈诺克忍不住难受，两手不断地在脸前扇风：

“这算怎么回事呀，啊！先生们，啊？我就只能一个人去死啦，啊？怎么也是有个伴儿才好吧。先生们呢！怎么办才好呀？”

他用灵敏的手指抓住维尔纳的一只手，一会儿握得紧紧的，一会儿又松开：

“老爷，我的好老爷，你就和我一起吧，啊？发发善心吧，别扔下我一个人呀！”

维尔纳十分痛苦地回答茨冈诺克，说：

“不行啊，亲爱的，我得和他一起呀。”

“哎呀，你这个人哪，我的上帝呀！这么说，我就只能一个人去死啦。这怎么办呢？天哪！”

穆夏往前走了一步并轻声说：

“我和你一起去吧。”

“和你？”

“是的。”

“你可拉倒吧。你可太小了点！你就不害怕吗？我看我还是一个人去死要好点。又能怎么样呢！”

“不，我才不害怕呢。”

茨冈诺克龇出了大板牙。

“你可拉倒吧。怎么说我也是个绿林强盗。你不厌恶我呀？要不最好别这么办啦，我还是一个人去死得了。我可不会生你的气。”

穆夏没有说话，在黎明微弱的光晕中，她的脸庞显得苍白，有一种神秘的美感。后来，她就一个箭步走到茨冈诺克跟前，用手搂住了他的脖子，用力亲吻了他的双唇。他呢，两只手放在她的肩上，稍稍把她推开一点儿距离，摇了摇她的身子，开始出声地亲吻她，亲她的双唇，亲她的鼻子，亲她的眼睛。

“咱们走吧！”

一个站得很近的看守不知道是怎么弄的，身子一晃，手就松开了，握着的枪直接掉到了地上。但是，他也没有弯腰去捡枪，而是愣愣地站着片刻没动，然后就转过身，像个瞎子一样，走到没人踏过的雪地里去了。

“你去哪儿？”另一个看守惊慌失措地小声喊他，“站住！”

但是，那个看守依旧没有说话，就踩着积雪，深一脚浅一脚地走进雪里。脚底下可能被什么东西绊了一下，就张着双手扑倒在雪地上。他就脸朝下，一动也不动地趴在那里。

“快把武器捡起来！你这个没用的废物！不然的话，我可要捡起来啦！”茨冈诺克冲着他们咆哮如雷，“连自己的职责都忘了！”

有人又摇晃着那两盏马灯过来了。这次轮到维尔纳和扬松了。

“永别了，老爷！”茨冈诺克大声地说，“到了那个世界，我们还做朋友，到那时，你见到了我，可千万别不理我呀。给我赏碗水就行——我在那里会热死的。”

“永别了。”

“我不情愿被绞死。”扬松还是有气无力地说。

但是，维尔纳已经挽起了他的手，这个爱沙尼亚人自己倒也走了几步。然后，大家都看到了，他站住不动了，后来就倒在雪地上了。押解的卫兵俯身过去，把他拉起来，把他拖出雪地，他还手脚乱动，试图挣脱拉他的卫兵。他为什么一声不吭？大概，他早已经忘了自己还有嗓子。

终于，那两盏马灯又重新在那个方向不再晃动了。

“这么说来，就只剩我一个人了，穆夏琪卡，”丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克伤心地说，“过去我们都是一起生活，到头来……”

“丹涅琪卡，亲爱的……”

可茨冈诺克马上过来干涉她俩说话。他抓住穆夏的手臂，好像害怕她被夺走一样，快速而认真地长篇大论了一通：

“哎呀，小姐！你是可以一个人的，你心地纯洁，所以，你去哪里，一个人都可以。你明白吗？我可不行啊。我可是一个货真价实的强盗哇，你明白了吗？我一个人可不行。我一个人，大家就会说，你又想往哪里钻，你这个江洋大盗？我还偷过马，这都是真的呀！我和她一起吧，就像……就像带着一个婴儿，懂了吧。还没弄明白？”

“我明白了。好哇，你们俩就一起去吧。让我再吻你一下吧，穆夏琪卡。”

“亲亲吧，好好亲亲吧。”茨冈诺克大度地鼓励两个女人，“事到如今，是需要好好告别一下的。”

穆夏和茨冈诺克向前走了。穆夏走路很小心，地上很滑，她习惯性地吧裙子稍稍拎起来一点儿；茨冈诺克则用力挽住她的胳膊，每一步都十分小心地踩实在路面上，把和他一起的女士领到死亡跟前。

马灯挂在那里一动也不动。丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克的周围，寂静而空旷。卫兵们都沉默不语，在一天初始的宁静的晨光中，颜色还不能分辨得十分清楚，他们就是一群灰色的影子。

“就剩下我一个人了。”丹妮雅·科瓦利丘克突然开口说道，而且还叹了一口气，“谢廖扎死了，维尔纳和瓦夏也死了。只剩我一个人啦。当兵的，哎！当兵的，哎！只剩我一个人啦。一个人……”

太阳跃出了海面。

死刑犯人们的尸体被放入棺材。随后，就被运走了。这些尸体的脖子都被抻得老长，眼睛暴凸在眼眶之外，肿胀发暗的舌头，犹如一

朵不知名的可怕的鲜花一样，在双唇之间，浸泡在口腔里的血沫中。这些尸体重新又沿着他们活着时来的路游荡回去。春天的雪还是那么地柔软，那么地清新，同样清新和馥郁的还有春天的气息。谢尔盖弄丢了的那只破套鞋湿漉漉、黑乎乎的，陷在雪地里。

人们就这样迎着冉冉升起的太阳。

1. At One O'Clock, Sir

The minister was a big fat man prone to apoplexy, so, to avoid unhealthy excitement, all possible precautions were taken before he was warned of a very serious attempt on his life that was being planned. Once the minister had been seen to take this news in his stride, even managing a smile, they gave him the details. The attempt was scheduled for the following morning, when he would be going out in his carriage to deliver his report: a number of terrorists, denounced by an informer and now under roundtheclock police surveillance, were due to meet up at one o'clock, armed with bombs and revolvers, and to wait for him to come out of the front entrance. That was where they would be arrested.

'Hang on,' said the minister in some surprise. 'How could they know that I'll be going out with my report at one o'clock, when I didn't know about it until just the other day?'

The Chief of Police spread his hands in bemusement. 'It's at one o'clock, sir.'

The minister shook his head, partly nonplussed, partly to acknowledge the good police work, and his dark, thick lips twisted into a sardonic smile, a smile that stayed on his face as he hurried to get out of the way of the police by following their instructions, which were to pack a few things and go off and spend the night in some hospitable mansion away from home. His wife and two children were also relocated away from the dangerous house where the bombthrowers were due to meet up the next day.

With the lights burning in the borrowed mansion and welcoming familiar faces all around him, with much bowing and scraping, accompanied by smiles and expressions of indignation, the mandarin experienced a pleasant feeling of uplift, as if he had just received, or was about to receive, a great honour that had not been anticipated. But soon the people drove away to their various destinations, the lamps were put out and a stream of bright light flowed in from the electric streetlights through the plateglass windows, looking lacy and spooky as it settled on the walls and ceiling. Penetrating intrusively into a house filled with pictures, statues and a silence also brought in from outside, this light, although gentle and hazy in itself, gave rise to uneasy feelings about the futility of bolts, fences and walls. And then, in the nighttime stillness and solitude, in an unfamiliar bedroom, the mandarin was overcome by an unbearable feeling of dread.

A martyr to kidney trouble, he had found that any sudden agitation soon had his face, hands and feet bloated with water, the effect of which was to make him seem bigger, fatter and bulkier than ever. And now, lying there, a heap of swollen flesh weighing down the squashed bedsprings, he felt like a suffering patient, hurting all over, with a swollen face that didn't seem to belong to him, and he couldn't stop thinking about the cruel fate that some people had had in store for him. One after another he recalled all the recent atrocities when people of his standing, or even higher rank, had had bombs thrown at them, bombs that had torn bodies to shreds, splattered brains down dirty brick walls, and torn out teeth by the roots. And these memories had made his own fat and sickly body, now stretched out across the bed, seem like someone else's, having taken the full blazing impact of the explosion. His arms seemed to have been torn out at the shoulders, his teeth had been scattered, his brain tissue atomized, while his legs had gone numb and he lay there, toes up, like a corpse. He made a huge effort to stir himself, gasped out loud, and gave a good cough to make himself as uncorpse-like as possible. Snuggling down into the rustling bedclothes, vibrating with jangling springs, and determined to show the world that he was very much alive - nowhere near dead, miles away from death just like anyone else - he spoke out into the silence and loneliness of the bedroom with a deep staccato growl. 'Good lads! Well done, lads! Well done!'

It was his way of praising the detectives, policemen, soldiers and other men guarding his life, who had so cleverly prevented his assassination with their timely intervention. But, however much he stirred himself, praised his men, skewed his mouth into a forced grin of contempt for the stupid terrorists - miserable failures! - he still couldn't quite believe in his salvation. He wasn't sure that life wouldn't slip away from him, suddenly, any minute now. The death that those people had planned for him, which existed only in thought and intention, seemed to be still there, and it was going to stay there, it wouldn't go away until they were caught, stripped of their bombs and dumped in a dungeon.

There it was, death, lurking in the corner, not going away, not allowed to go away, like a soldier placed on guard duty under orders from above.

‘At one o'clock, sir.’

The familiar phrase rang out in a deluge of different voices, voices of gleeful contempt, rage, pigheadedness, meaningless noise. It was as if hundreds of windup gramophones had been installed in the bedroom, and all of them, one after another, were belting out what they had been programmed to say, with the singleminded stupidity of a machine.

‘At one o'clock, sir.’

And that time, tomorrow's ‘one o'clock’, which until recently had been no different from any other time, nothing more than hands gliding around the dial of a gold watch, had now assumed an ominous authority, hopped off the dial and taken on a life of its own, growing into a great black partition which had divided his entire life in two. It was as if there had been no other time before or after, just this one time, strutting with barefaced arrogance, the only time that had any right to a special existence of its own.

‘What's that? What do you want?’ raged the minister through clenched teeth.

A roar came from the gramophones.

‘At one o'clock, sir.’ And the black partition gave a grin and a bow.

Gritting his teeth, the minister sat up in bed with his head in his hands. He wasn't going to get to sleep, for sure, not on a ghastly night like this.

With a rising sense of clarity and horror, burying his face in his podgy, perfumed hands, he imagined himself getting up in the morning, in complete ignorance, having a cup of coffee, still in ignorance, and then putting on his outdoor things in the hall. Neither he, nor the porter handing him his fur coat, nor the servant still serving coffee, none of them would be aware that there was no point in drinking coffee or putting a coat on when in a few seconds all of this - the coat, his body and the coffee inside it - would be blasted to bits, taken away by death. Look, there's the porter opening the glass door . . . And that man, the nice, kind, polite porter, with his bright blue soldier's eyes and a chest full of medals, he, with his own hands is opening the terrible door, opening it because he is still in ignorance. And all of them smiling because of their ignorance.

'Oho!' he boomed suddenly, taking his hands from his face.

And then, peering ahead into the deep darkness with a firm, fixed stare, he reached forward, found a switch and put the light on. Then he got to his feet and, ignoring his slippers, walked barefoot across the carpet, taking in the unfamiliar bedroom until he found another knob and switched on a walllight. It was now nice and light, only the rumpled bed with a blanket fallen to the floor bearing witness to a horror that had still not quite run its course.

In his nightclothes, with his beard all matted from the tossing and turning and his eyes full of anger, the mandarin looked like any other angry old man kept awake by insomnia and asthma. He had been stripped naked by the death that those people had planned for him; this had torn away the magnificence and imposing splendour which normally enveloped him. It was hard to believe that he wielded so much authority, and that this body of his, such a straightforward, run-of-the-mill human body, was destined for a horrible death, to be destroyed in the bang and blaze of a monstrous explosion. Without getting dressed and impervious to the cold, he sat down in the first armchair that came to hand, rested his tangled beard on one hand, and stared up at the decorated plaster on the unfamiliar ceiling with a look of deep concentration and gentle wistfulness.

So, that's it then! That's what made him so scared and worried! That's why that thing lurks in the corner, and won't, can't, go away! 'Stupid fools!' he said, with contempt and strong feeling. 'Stupid fools!' he repeated in a louder tone, turning slightly towards the door so that he could be heard by anyone whom it might concern. Yes, the involvement was shared by the very people he had just referred to as good lads, the ones who, in their boundless enthusiasm, had told him every last detail of the assassination attempt.

‘Of course!’ he thought, suddenly struck by a strong idea that had come effortlessly into his mind. ‘Now that I know about it - because they’ve told me everything - I feel terrified. But for them I would have been kept in ignorance, and I would have drunk my coffee with an easy mind. Of course, there’s still death to deal with - but am I all that scared of death? I do have this kidney problem, and I’ll have to die one day, but I’m not terrified, because my life goes on in ignorance. And those idiots kept saying, “At one o’clock, sir.” Stupid fools! They thought I would be delighted, whereas That Thing lurks in the corner and won’t go away. It won’t go away because it’s me thinking. And it’s not death that is terrifying, only my knowing about it. And it would be totally impossible to live if a man were to know with complete certainty the date and time when he was sure to die. And all I get from those idiots is that warning: “At one o’clock, sir.” ’

He was suddenly aware of a nice sensation, a pleasant uplift, as if someone had told him he was immortal in every way, and was never going to die. And, with a renewed sense of himself as a man of strength and intelligence standing out from that herd of stupid fools who were making such a senseless and brazen incursion into the mystery of the future, he found himself contemplating the bliss of not knowing things, though he did so with the weary thought processes of a sickly old man who has seen it all. Nothing that lives, neither man nor beast, is allowed to know the date and time of his death. Only recently he had been ill; the doctors had told him he was going to die and he ought to make his final arrangements. But he didn’t believe them, and, sure enough, he had remained alive. And something similar had happened when he had been young: his life was going nowhere, and he decided to commit suicide. He got a revolver ready, wrote his last letters, and even fixed the time of his death - but at the last moment he had thought better of it. At the last moment, anything can change, something completely unexpected can turn up, and this means that no one can ever tell himself when he is going to die.

‘At one o’clock, sir.’ That’s what those kindhearted asses had told him, and although they only told him because the death had already been prevented, the knowledge of its possible timing had been enough to fill him with horror. It was quite feasible that he could be killed one day, but it wouldn't happen tomorrow - no, not tomorrow - he was immortal, and he could sleep easy. Stupid fools, they had no idea of the great law they had subverted, of the abyss they had opened up, by saying, with such idiotic kindheartedness, 'At one o'clock, sir.'

'No, not at one o'clock, sir; we don't know when. No, we don't know when. What's that?'

'Nothing.' An answer from the darkness. 'Nothing.'

'No. You were saying something.'

'Nothing. Nothing that matters. What I say is - tomorrow at one o'clock.'

And with a sharp sinking feeling, he realized there would be no sleep, rest or joy for him until that damned dark hour filched from the watchface had gone by. Of the knowledge to be gleaned by no living creature only a shadow remained, standing in the corner, but it was enough to blot out the light and swamp a man with the impenetrable darkness of horror. The fear of death, once aroused, had spread all over his body, got into his bones, and it peeped out, palefaced, at every pore.

Now it wasn't tomorrow's assassins that scared him - they had gone, disappeared into oblivion, merging into the host of enemies and hostile forces besetting his human existence - what he feared was something swift and inexorable: an apoplectic fit, a heart attack, a silly, skinny artery like the aorta suddenly giving way to bloodpressure and rupturing like a tightly stretched glove on bloated fingers.

He was horrified by his own short, fat neck, and he couldn't stand the sight of his stubby, podgy fingers or the shock of realizing how short they were and how they were filled with deadly moisture. And if, earlier on in the darkness, he had felt the need to stir himself in order to seem uncorpselike, now, in this horribly cold and hostile brightness, it seemed terrifyingly impossible to move a muscle and reach for a cigarette or ring for assistance. His nerves were on edge, and every nerve seemed like a taut wire standing on end, topped by a tiny head with eyes staring in horror and a gaping mouth twitching in spasms and soundlessly gasping. He had no means of breathing.

And suddenly, down below in the darkness, in all the dust and cobwebs, an electric bell came to life somewhere up on the ceiling. A little metal clapper whirled in a spasm of horror against the rim of an echoing cup; then it stopped, then it rang again in a solid stream of jangling horror. It was Sir, ringing from his room.

Servants ran in. In some places among the chandeliers and on the walls some of the lamps lit up, not enough to provide light, but enough to allow shadows. They spread themselves everywhere, rising up in corners and crawling out across the ceiling, clinging tenuously to every protuberance and sticking to the walls. You couldn't tell where they had been before, these silent shadows, ugly and uncountable, the voiceless souls of voiceless objects.

A deeply resonating bass voice spoke out loud and clear. Then they telephoned for a doctor. Sir was feeling poorly. Sir's wife was also sent for.

2. Sentence: Death By hanging

It all worked out as the police had anticipated. Four terrorists - three men and one woman - armed with bombs, infernal machines and revolvers, were seized outside the entrance, and a fifth was discovered and arrested in the conspirators' flat, she being the landlady. They also seized a large quantity of dynamite, some semicharged bombs and other weapons. All those arrested were very young; the eldest of the men was twentyeight years old, the younger woman was only nineteen. Their trial took place in the same fortress where they had been imprisoned after arrest; it was summary justice conducted in secret, the way they did things in those merciless times.

In court, all five behaved calmly; they were very seriousminded and very thoughtful. So great was their contempt for the judges that none of them wanted to put on a show of heroics with an uncalledfor smile or a false display of triumphalism. Their calmness was balanced against a need to shield their souls, and the great darkness about to descend upon them in death, from the vile, intrusive gaze of outsiders.

Sometimes they refused to answer; on other occasions their answers were laconic, matteroffact and strictly relevant, as if directed not at the judges but at the keepers of statistics so that special forms could be filled in. Three of them, one woman and two men, gave their real names, and two refused to name themselves, thus remaining unknown to the judges. And towards everything that went on in the court they displayed the kind of curiosity that is diluted by emerging through a misty haze typical of people who are either seriously ill or obsessed by one huge, allconsuming idea. They would look up suddenly to catch an unusually interesting word as it flew past, and then go back to where their thoughts had been interrupted.

Nearest to the judges stood one of the accused who had given his name as Sergey Golovin, the son of a retired colonel, himself a former officer. He was still a young man, blond and stocky, so full of good health that neither imprisonment nor the prospect of imminent death could wipe the bloom off his cheeks or take the youthful expression of naïve happiness out of his lightblue eyes. He never stopped plucking at his scruffy blond beard, which he had not yet grown used to, and he stared fixedly out of the window, narrowing his eyes and blinking. This was taking place at the end of winter, when, between the snowy blasts and the days of fog and frost, the approaching spring was sending out a herald in the form of a clear, warm, sunny day, or even a single hour, so springlike and radiant with the greedy passion of young life that the sparrows in the street went wild with joy, and people seemed almost intoxicated. And today, through the top window, uncleaned and accumulating dust since last summer, an unusually beautiful sky could be seen. At first glance it seemed to consist of a milkygrey, smoky haze, but on closer examination the eye could make out a brighter blue beginning to shine through, deeper, sharper and ever more boundless. And by revealing itself gradually, with its purity veiled in a cloud of mist, it seemed as winsome as a young girl and as easy to fall in love with. And Sergey Golovin squinted up at that sky through his long, fluffy eyelashes, first with one eye then the other, while pulling at his little beard and looking deeply preoccupied. On one occasion, his fingers jerked and his face screwed itself into a spasm of childish delight, but a glance around the court was enough to extinguish this like a spark underfoot. Almost immediately a change came over the redness in his cheeks; without really turning pale, they took on an earthy, deathly shade of grey and his whitetipped fingers twisted bits of his fluffy hair, painfully torn out by the roots, in a vicelike grip. Nevertheless, the joy of living and of springtime won through, and within minutes his young, ingenuous face was turned up again towards the spring sky.

It was in the same direction, up at the sky, that the anonymous pale young girl with the petname of Musya also turned her eyes. She was younger than Golovin, but the severity of her manner and the black gleam in her proudly focused eyes gave her an older look. Only her soft and very slender neck and her no less slender girlish arms bore witness to her age, though there was also an indefinable something about her, to do with youth itself, that rang out in her voice with true clarity of tone and the purest harmony, like a wellloved musical instrument tuned to perfection, adding musicality to the simplest of her words and exclamations. She looked pale, but it was not the pallor of death, it was that special flaming white heat that occurs when a huge great fire seems to have been lit inside a person so that their body glows with light from within as if it was shining through the finest Sèvres porcelain. She sat there scarcely moving a muscle; only now and then did a surreptitious movement betray the fingering of a circular mark on the third finger of her right hand, the trace of a ring recently removed. And she stared at the sky not from any tender feelings or happy memories but because, in this dingy hall of officialdom, that patch of blue sky was the most beautiful place, a realm of purity and truth that was not trying to winkle secrets out of her eyes.

Sergey Golovin had won the sympathy of the court; she was the one they hated.

Alongside her, the unidentified man known as Werner sat there equally unmoving, in a rather affected pose, hands folded between his knees. If you can slam a face like a thick door, the unidentified man had banged shut the iron door of his face and secured it with an iron padlock. He looked down at the dirty floorboards without stirring, and you couldn't tell whether he was calm or intensely agitated, whether his thoughts were miles away or he was concentrating on the police giving their evidence. He was a small man with noble features finely drawn. His winsome appearance and sensitivity brought to mind a moonlit night in some southern clime under shadowy cypresses at the seaside, yet he also evoked a sense of formidable inner strength, indomitable selfassurance, cold control and heroic will. On his lips the very politeness with which he gave his terse, measured responses, accompanied by a slight bow, had an ominous ring, and if the prison smock looked like a ludicrous joke on the other prisoners, on this man it was such an alien form of dress that it went completely unnoticed. And although the other terrorists had been caught in possession of bombs and infernal machines, Werner was seized with nothing more than a black revolver; for some reason the judges took him to be the leader and when they addressed him, they did so with a touch of deference, in a laconic, businesslike manner.

The next one along was Vassily Kashirin, a man totally obsessed by an excruciating fear of death, accompanied by an equally desperate desire to suppress this dread and keep it from the judges. Since early morning, when they had been brought before the court, his galloping heartbeat had left him scarcely able to breathe, permanent beads of sweat stood out on his forehead, his hands were just as sweaty yet also cold, and a cold, sweaty shirt stuck to his body, hampering his movements. With a supreme effort of will, he stopped his fingers from trembling, his voice remained firm and clear, and his eyes kept steady. He took in nothing of his surroundings, voices seemed to come at him through a fog, and back into the same fog he dispatched his desperate responses in an attempt to reply in strong, loud tones. But once he had responded, he immediately forgot what had been asked and how he had answered, and relapsed into a terrible, wordless struggle with himself. And death emanated from him so obviously that the judges avoided looking at him, and his age was as hard to guess as that of a dead body well into decay. According to his papers he was only twentythree years old. Once or twice Werner gently nudged him on the knee, and each time he responded with a simple phrase. 'It's all right.'

The most terrible moments were when he felt a sudden urge to scream, to yell out with the desperate wordless cry of a wild beast. When this happened, he nudged up against Werner, who responded to him without looking up. 'It's all right, Vasya. Won't be long.'

Then came the fifth terrorist, Tanya Kovalchuk, who, despite her own agonizing despair, enfolded the others with a watching maternal eye. She had not yet had any children, being as young and rosycheeked as Sergey Golovin, but she seemed like a mother to them all; there was so much concern and limitless affection in her every glance, every smile and all her terror. She completely ignored the court as if it were a kind of sideshow; all she took in was the way they answered the questions - was that a tremor in the voice, is that a show of fear, does that one need a drink of water?

She was too anguished to look at Vasya; all she could do was wring her chubby fingers. She watched Musya and Werner with pride, admiration and a look of serious concentration on her face. She did her best to pass a smile over to Sergey Golovin.

'Dear boy, he's looking up at the sky. Go on, keep on looking up there, my darling boy,' she thought as she watched him. 'But, oh dear, Vasya. What is it, what's wrong with him? What can I do about him? I can't say anything. That would make things worse. It might make him cry.'

And like a still pond at dawn reflecting every passing cloud, her sweet, kind, chubby face reflected every quick movement and every thought coming from the four of them. The idea that she was also being judged and would also be hanged never crossed her mind, such was her profound indifference. It was in her rooms that the supply of bombs and dynamite has been discovered and, oddly enough, she had been the one to fire at the policemen, wounding one of them in the head.

It was getting on for eight o'clock when the court proceedings came to an end. The sky had gradually turned dark blue and faded before the eyes of Musya and Sergey Golovin, but instead of radiating the pink hue and gentle smile of a summer's evening, it just clouded over, getting greyer and greyer, and then suddenly it was all cold and wintry. Golovin heaved a sigh, stretched himself and glanced up at the window a couple of times, but there was nothing to be seen beyond the cold, dark night, so, still fingering his little beard, he turned like a curious child to have a good look at the judges and the soldiers with their guns, and he smiled across at Tanya Kovalchuk. As for Musya, when the sky faded, she avoided looking down at the floor and calmly transferred her gaze to a little cobweb in one corner that gently wobbled as warm air rose invisibly from the steamheating system. She stayed like that until sentence was pronounced.

After the sentencing, the condemned men and women took leave of their frockcoated lawyers, avoiding eye contact with these pitifully distraught and guilt-ridden people before coming together briefly in the doorway to exchange a few remarks.

'It's all right, Vasya. Won't be long now,' said Werner.

'Yes, brother, I'm all right,' said Kashirin in a loud, calm voice, almost enjoying himself.

And indeed, his face took on a pinkish hue, no longer like that of a decaying corpse.

'Bugger them all, they've hanged the lot of us,' said Golovin, reduced to a simple curse.

'We had it coming to us,' came Werner's calm reply.

‘Tomorrow they’ll give formal pronouncement of the sentence, and we’ll all be locked up together,’ said Kovalchuk, reassuringly. ‘We’ll be together right up to the execution.’

Musya said nothing. Then she took a firm step forward.

3. Not Hang Me

Two weeks before the terrorists' trial, different officials from the same regional military court had tried a peasant, Ivan Yanson, and sentenced him to death.

This man, Ivan Yanson, was a labourer employed by a wealthy farmer, virtually indistinguishable from all the other workmen in the local peasantry. He was Estonian by birth, from Wesenberg, and, after moving on from farm to farm over the years, he had ended up near the capital. He spoke very poor Russian, and since his master was a Russian, Lazarev by name, and there were no Estonians in the locality, he had hardly spoken a word for pretty well the past two years. Not that he seemed to have any desire for conversation. He didn't talk to people, but he didn't talk to the animals either; he kept quiet while watering or harnessing a horse, slowly and tentatively shuffling around it, and when the horse, disconcerted by the silence, started to play up and jump about, he would lay into it with a big whip, not saying a word. He would beat him viciously, with a cold and bitter determination, and if this was happening when he was roaring drunk, he would work himself up into a frenzy. Way back at the house you could hear the lashing whip and the staccato clatter of hooves from the scared and suffering animal as they echoed on the floorboards of the barn. The master would give Yanson a beating for having whipped the horse, but the Estonian proved incorrigible, so he gave up on him.

Once or twice a month Yanson got drunk, and this usually occurred on days when he drove the master to the big railway station, which had a bar. Having dropped the master off, he would drive out half a mile or so from the station, park the horse and sledge in some deep snow off the road, and wait patiently for the train to depart. The sledge would stand there, leaning to one side, almost recumbent, with the horse up to his belly in a snowdrift, legs splayed, occasionally nuzzling the soft, crunchy snow and licking at it, while Yanson sprawled awkwardly across the sledge, apparently dozing. The drooping earflaps of his tatty cap dangled down impotently like a setter's ears, and his little buttonnose looked red and runny.

Then Yanson would go back to the station and lose no time in getting himself drunk. He completed the return trip to the farm, a good seven miles, galloping flatout. The shattered and terrified little horse ran itself into the ground, the sledge rocked all over the place, banking, bending and crashing against posts, while Yanson, who had dropped the reins and was in danger of flying out onto the road with every minute that passed, halfsang and halfyelled incoherently obscure bits of Estonian. But more often than not, he didn't sing, he kept silent, gritting his teeth against an inscrutable upsurge of rage, pain and exuberance, and barrelled on, blind to oncoming traffic, without shouting out warnings or slowing down as he careered around bends or down slopes. How he avoided running somebody down or smashing himself to death during one of these mad chases is anybody's guess.

He should have been sacked long ago, as he had been from other jobs, but he came cheap and the other workers weren't much better, so he stayed on for two years. Yanson's life was one in which nothing ever happened. One day he received a letter written in Estonian, but, since he was illiterate and there weren't any other Estonianspeakers, the letter went unread, and in a spasm of savage, fanatical indifference, as if he had no idea that the letter might contain news from home, Yanson chucked it onto the manure heap. On one occasion, apparently lusting for a woman, Yanson tried it on with the cook, but he got nowhere; he was turned down and laughed at. He was a little runt of a chap with a sickly, spotty face and muddycoloured eyes that looked sleepy and boozy. But Yanson took this setback on the chin, and made no more approaches to the cook.

But, although he didn't speak much, Yanson was always listening. He listened to the dreary snowcovered countryside with small pats of frozen manure looking like rows of little snowy graves, and the darkblue distant haze and the humming telegraph poles and people talking to each other. What the countryside and telegraph poles spoke about was known only to him, but what people were saying to each other worried him: nothing but rumours - of murder, robbery and arson. And one night a special sound had been heard: in the next village a little church bell rang out with a thin, helplessly tinkling noise like that of a carriagebell. Strangers had ridden up, pillaged the wealthy farm, murdered the owner and his wife, and set fire to the house.

And now anxiety was the rule, even on Yanson's farm.

The dogs were allowed to run free not just at nighttime but also by day, and at night the master slept with a gun at his side. He wanted to give Yanson the same kind of gun, an older version with only one barrel, but the Estonian twisted it in his hands and refused inexplicably to accept it. The master, at a loss to understand the reason for his refusal, cursed him up hill and down dale, but the reason was simple: Yanson had more faith in his Finnish knife than this rusty old thing.

'Be the death of me,' said Yanson with a sleepy look in his beady, glassy eyes.

The master threw up his hands in desperation. 'You're a stupid fool, Ivan. Can't do a damn thing with farmhands like you.'

And one winter night, when the other farmhand had been dispatched to the station, that same Ivan Yanson who didn't believe in having a gun had carried out a very complex attempt at armed robbery, murder and rape. The way he did it was surprisingly simple: he locked the cook in her kitchen and then, at his leisure, with the air of a man dead on his feet for lack of sleep, he approached the master from behind and stabbed him repeatedly in the back. The master collapsed unconscious, and the mistress ran around the room screaming, while Yanson, baring his teeth and brandishing his knife, began ransacking the trunks and chests of drawers. He found some money, and then, apparently noticing the mistress for the first time, he surprised even himself by making advances with every intention of raping her. But by now he had dropped the knife, and when the mistress turned out to be stronger than him, not only did she decline to be raped, she came near to throttling the life out of him. At this point, the master showed signs of stirring, the cook was banging away with the ovenfork in an effort to break the kitchen door down, and Yanson ran outside. He was caught within the hour, squatting in a corner of the barn and striking match after dead match in an attempt at arson.

A few days later the master died from bloodpoisoning, and Yanson took his place in a queue of other robbers and murderers waiting to be tried and sentenced to death. In court he was the same as always: a puny little man with a spotty face and a sleepy look in his beady, glassy eyes. Somehow he didn't seem to fully grasp what was going on, and he looked totally indifferent; his white eyelashes blinked as his lifeless eyes took in the unfamiliar courtroom in all its pomp without registering any curiosity, and he picked his nose crudely with a stiff, horny finger. Only those who might have seen him in church of a Sunday could have guessed that he had made an attempt at smartening up for the occasion; he wore a dirty, red knitted scarf around his neck and he had dampened his hair down in a few places that looked smoother and lay down flatter than on the other side, where it curled up in thin, blond tufts like wisps of straw left behind on a scanty hailblown meadow.

When the sentence was pronounced: 'Death by Hanging',

Yanson was shaken. He blushed to the roots of his hair and began twisting the scarf off and on, as if it was throttling him. Then he waved his hands about crazily, pointed to the judge who had read out the sentence, and spoke to the judge who had not.

'She said to hang me.'

'Who is "she"?' came the deep voice of the presiding judge, who had read out the sentence.

There were smiles all round, hidden behind moustaches and court papers, but Yanson levelled his forefinger at the president, and scowled at him in an angry response.

'You!'

'Well?'

Yanson turned his eyes back to the unspeaking judge, who was struggling not to smile, in whom he sensed an ally, someone not party to the sentence, and he said again, 'She said to hang me. Not hang me.'

'Take the prisoner away.'

But Yanson had time to repeat what he had said, with grim determination. 'Not hang me.'

He looked so stupid, with anger written all over his little face, as he strove vainly to invest it with gravitas, and with his finger still pointing, that even the soldier escorting him broke the rules by speaking to him in a low voice as he walked him away. 'You're a stupid fool, laddie.'

'Not hang me,' Yanson persisted.

'Sorry, chum. You're getting strung up. No time to kick.'

'Hey, that's enough!' cried the other escort, incensed by this. But he gave in and couldn't help adding, 'You went out robbing. Why did you have to take a human life? Now you're going to hang.'

'Any chance of a pardon?' asked the first guard, beginning to feel sorry for Yanson.

'You what? Pardon the likes of 'im? Anyway, that's enough talking.'

But Yanson had already stopped talking. He was locked up in the same cell he had been in for the past month and had got used to, as before he had got used to getting beaten, drinking vodka and looking at the snowy fields with round hillocks like a cemetery. He even felt a surge of happiness when he saw his bed and his window grille, and when they gave him some food - not having eaten anything all day. The only nasty thing was what had gone on in court, but he couldn't think about that, he didn't know how to. Death by hanging was beyond his imagination.

Even though Yanson had been given a death sentence, there were lots of others like him; in that prison he wasn't seen as a special criminal. This meant that the staff talked to him without fear or respect, the way they talked to all the prisoners who hadn't been sentenced to death. It seemed as if his death wasn't really death at all. The head guard, when he heard what the sentence was, spoke as if he was teaching him a lesson.

'Well, brother. They've gone and hung you then!'

'When will they hang me?' asked Yanson cautiously.

The guard gave it a moment's thought. 'Well, brother, it's like this. You're going to have to wait while they gets a party of you together. They won't do it for one - especially one like you. They wants the numbers up.'

‘But when ? ’ Yanson insisted. It didn’t offend him in the slightest that he wasn’t worth hanging on his own, and he didn’t believe it anyway. He thought it was a pretext for delaying the execution and then cancelling it altogether. He felt bucked by this. The uncertain and terrible moment that he couldn’t begin to think about was moving steadily away into the distance, becoming as unlikely as a fairytale, no different from any other death.

‘You go on and on about when,’ said the guard in exasperation (he was a stupid and gloomy old man). ‘It’s not like hanging a dog. You don’t just nip round the back of the shed, and that’s it. Stupid fool, is that what you want?’

‘I don’t want at all!’ Yanson scowled with pleasure. ‘It was her what said to hang me. I don’t want!’

And he gave a little laugh, perhaps for the first time in his life, a jarring, idiotic laugh that was strangely cheerful and enjoyable. Like a goose honking, ‘haw, haw, haw!’ The guard looked at him in amazement, then gave a grim scowl; this absurd display of cheeriness from a man who was due to be executed was an insult to the prison and to execution itself, and it turned them both into something weird. Suddenly, for one moment, a split second, the old guard who had spent all his life in that prison, for whom its laws were the laws of nature, saw that place, and life itself, revealed as a madhouse, with himself, the head guard, as the chief madman.

‘Damn you! Fuck you!’ said the guard. ‘What are you grinning at? You’re not in the pub now.’

‘I don’t want! Haw, haw, haw!’ said Yanson, still laughing.

‘Satan!’ said the head guard, feeling the need to cross himself.

No one could have looked less like Satan than this man with his flabby little face, but there was something in his goosey honking that undermined the sanctity and strength of the prison. Let him go on honking a bit longer and you could see the walls crumbling away and the rusty grilles collapsing, and the chief guard leading the prisoners out through the gate . . . ‘There you are, gentlemen, have a stroll around town, or maybe some of you would like to see the countryside?’ Satan!

But by now Yanson had stopped laughing. He was left with a sly scowl on his face.

‘All right. Watch it, then!’ said the chief, with the vaguest of threats, and off he went, looking back over his shoulder.

All that evening Yanson was calm and you might even say cheerful. He kept on repeating the same phrase under his breath, ‘Not hang me,’ and it was so convincing, so full of wisdom, so incontrovertible, that there was nothing to worry about. His crime was long forgotten, except for the odd pang of regret for not having managed to rape the mistress. Soon he even forgot about that.

Every morning Yanson asked when he was going to be hanged, and every morning the chief gave the same angry response.

‘It’ll come, Satan, just you wait.’ And off he would go as fast as he could before Yanson could burst out laughing again.

And because of these identically repeated words, plus the fact that each day got off to a start, proceeded on its way and came to an end like every other ordinary day, Yanson became totally convinced there wouldn’t be an execution. It didn’t take him long to put the court right out of his mind and for days on end he lay sprawling on his bed, his head full of vague but joyful dreams about the gloomy, snowy fields with their little hillocks, the station bar, and something beyond that, gleaming in the distance. In the jail he was well fed, and quicker than you might think, within only a few days, he had put on weight and begun to strut about the place.

‘By now she would have been in love with me like this,’ he thought, with the mistress in mind, ‘I’m fattened out now, no worse than the master.’

What he did miss was a drink of vodka - a quick drink followed by a mad charge with the horse.

When the terrorists had been arrested, news of them reached the prison, and when Yanson asked his usual question, the chief gave a new response, sharp and unexpected. ‘Won’t be long now.’

His look was calm, and his speech heavy with meaning. ‘Won’t be long now. About a week, I’d say.’

Yanson’s face paled, and his glassy eyes went cloudy as if he was nodding off as he spoke. ‘You’re joking?’

‘You were the one who couldn’t wait, and you’re the joker. We are not allowed jokes. You like joking, but we are not allowed jokes,' said the chief guard in a lofty tone before walking away.

By the evening Yanson had shrunk down a little. His skin, which had been stretched and temporarily smoothed down, had now shrivelled into a mass of tiny wrinkles, and in some places it looked quite droopy. His eyes had become shrouded with sleep, and his every movement was slow and sluggish, as if each turn of the head, fingermovement or footstep was a complex and cumbersome procedure requiring a lot of careful forethought. At bedtime he lay down on his bunk without closing his eyes, and they stayed like that, open but sleepy, all night long.

'Aha!' said the chief with some satisfaction when he saw him next morning. 'See, me old darlin'. This ain't no pub.'

It was with the satisfied feeling of a scientist whose experiment has come out right again that he scrutinized the condemned man from head to toe. Now things would go the way they should. Satan had been put to shame, the sanctity of the prison and execution had been reestablished, and now there was sympathy, even some genuine pity, in the way that the old man asked his questions.

'Do you want to see anybody? No?'

'What is this "see anybody"?'

'Well, just to say goodbye. Maybe your mother, or a brother?'

'Not hang me,' said Yanson in a soft voice, glancing sideways at the chief guard. 'I don't want.'

The guard took a look at him, and flung up a hand without saying another word.

By evening Yanson was a little calmer. The day had been such an ordinary one, the light from the cloudy winter sky had been so ordinary, the footsteps in the corridor and the animated talk had been so ordinary, and the sour smell of the cabbage soup had been so ordinary and so normal that once again he had ceased to believe in the execution. But as night came on, he began to feel terribly scared. Earlier on Yanson had treated night as nothing more than darkness, a particular period of blackness which you have to sleep through, but now he was aware of its essentially mysterious and ominous character. To avoid believing in death you must see and hear ordinary things around you: footsteps, voices, light, sour cabbage soup, and now everything was out of the ordinary. This silence and this darkness were in themselves akin to death.

And the more night dragged on, the more terrifying it became. With the naivety of a primitive creature or a child, who thinks all things are possible, Yanson felt like telling the sun to start shining. He begged and entreated the sun to do that, but night went on remorselessly, stretching its black hours out over the earth, and there was no force that could stop it in its course. And this impossibility, which had never before penetrated Yanson's feeble brain with such clarity, filled him with terror; without yet being fully aware of it, he was now sensing the proximity of death, and had placed one dying foot on the first step of the scaffold.

Daylight calmed him down again, but then the night filled him with horror, and things went along like this until the night when he saw sense and admitted the inevitability of death - in three days' time, in the early morning, at sunrise.

He had never thought about what it would be like to die, and he had no image of death, though now he could clearly sense - see and feel - that it had come into his cell to feel its way around and seek him out. And in an effort to save himself, he began running around the cell.

But the cell was so small it seemed to have no acute angles, only obtuse ones, and he kept on being bounced back into the middle. And there was nothing to hide behind. The door was locked, and there was light. He said nothing as his upper body bumped into the wall several times and once banged against the door with a hollow clang.

He crashed into something, and fell to the floor facedown.

It was now that he felt he was in its grasp. And as he lay there on his belly, clinging to the hard surface of the dark and dirty floor, Yanson gave a wail of terror. He lay there yelling at the top of his voice until they came to see to him. And even when they had picked him up, put him back on his bunk and poured cold water over his head, he still refused to open his rigidly closed eyes. When he halfopened one eye, all he saw was light in an empty corner and somebody's boot in the open space, and this set him off wailing again.

But the cold water began to do its work. He was also helped by the fact that the duty officer was the same old man as before, and he gave him a few medicinal slaps around the head. And this sensation of being alive did manage to dispel death, Yanson did open his eyes, and then he slept soundly through the rest of the night with his brain greatly befogged. He lay on his back with his mouth open and a lot of loud, melodious snoring. And the whites of his eyes shone with the smoothness of a deathly pallor through his partly closed eyelids.

And from now on everything in the world - day and night, footsteps, voices and sour cabbage soup - blurred into a single shock of horror, plunging him into a state of primitive bewilderment beyond comprehension. His feeble mind could not reconcile the two monstrous contradictions: the normality of daylight and cabbage soup versus the idea that tomorrow, or the day after, he was going to die. He thought of nothing, had no sense of time passing; he just stood there facing this contradiction in silent horror, with his brain split in two. And, because his face was its normal colour, neither paler nor redder than usual, he seemed to be at peace. Except that he had stopped eating and didn't sleep a wink. No, he spent the whole night either curled up on a stool, with his legs tucked timorously away, or creeping quietly around the room, with his sleepy eyes darting everywhere. His mouth hung halfopen all the time, as if he was in a permanent state of extreme shock, and before picking up the simplest everyday object, he would give it a close, dullwitted scrutiny and accept it only with great reluctance.

And once he had become like this, the guard and the soldier deputed to watch him through the little grille began to ignore him. His behaviour seemed normal for a condemned man, and the chief guard likened it (without ever having had the experience himself) to the stunning of cattle by the butt of an axe prior to slaughter.

'He's been stunned. From now on until he dies, he won't feel a thing,' he would say, observing him with a seasoned eye. 'Can you hear me, Ivan? Eh? Ivan!'

'Not hang me,' came the lacklustre response from Yanson, again with a drooping jaw.

'If you hadn't murdered somebody, they wouldn't be hanging you,' said the chief guard, still a young man, but an imposing figure with a chestful of medals. 'You did the killing - now you don't want to be hung.'

'You wanted to kill, and get away with it. Stupid as hell, but damned clever.'

'I don't want,' said Yanson.

'All right, my friend. You carry on not wanting. It's up to you,' said the senior man indifferently. 'But you might be better off not talking nonsense, and sorting out your effects. Still things to be done.'

'He hasn't got any. Shirt and trousers, that's it. Oh, plus the fur cap. Quite a dandy with that!'

And so the time passed until Thursday. And then, at midnight on Thursday, a lot of people walked into Yanson's cell, and a gentleman wearing epaulettes spoke to him. 'Right. Get yourself ready. Time to go.'

Yanson, moving at his usual slow and weary pace, got dressed in everything he had, and finished by tying the dirty red scarf around his neck. As he watched him getting dressed, the same gentleman, cigarette in hand, said to somebody, 'Nice warm day, today. Real touch of spring.'

Yanson's tiny eyes were glued up, he was full of sleep and his footsteps dragged so stiffly that the guard spoke to him. 'Come on, get a move on. He's gone to sleep!'

Suddenly Yanson came to a halt. 'I don't want,' he said, weakly.

They grabbed him under the armpits and got him going; he took an obedient step forward, lifting his shoulders. Outside he was assailed by a springtime breath of moist air, and his little nose began to run. Although it was nighttime, the thaw was underway and drops of water cascaded merrily from above, tinkling on the stones below. And as he waited for the policemen to get into the black, unlit carriage, stooping and jingling their swords, Yanson wiped his runny nose lazily with one finger and straightened his badly tied scarf.

4. Us Lads From Oryol

The same regional military court judges that had tried Yanson also sentenced another man to death by hanging, a peasant from Yeléts in the province of Orlov, by the name of Mikhail Golubets, better known as Gypsy Mike, and a Tartar by birth. His latest crime, proven beyond doubt, was the murder of three people in an armed robbery, but his murky career went far back into the mysterious depths of time. There were vague rumours of his implication in any number of other robberies and murders, and he had left behind him in his wake much blood and drunken depravity. He described himself as a villain quite openly and sincerely, though he could also be ironical, as when he claimed allegiance to those who called themselves, using the latest catchphrase, 'expropriators'. Seeing that denial would get him nowhere with his latest crime, he willingly confessed in detail, though when he was asked about his earlier career, he would do no more than bare his teeth, give a little whistle, and say, 'Look for the wind in the fields!'

But when they put him under pressure, Gypsy Mike struck an attitude of stolid and dignified concentration.

'Us lads from Oryol, we're all nutcases,' he would say in thoughtfully measured tones. 'Oryol lads is best. We can outthieve the rest . . . We're fathers and mothers - of all thieving brothers. But thieves from Yeléts - is the finest and best! Can't say fairer than that.'

He was called Gypsy Mike because of the way he looked and his constant thieving. He was ridiculously darkhaired and skinny, with spots of yellow sunburn on his high Tartar cheekbones; he had the look of a horse when he rolled the whites of his eyes, and he galloped around everywhere. His eyes didn't settle easily, but when they did, they were terrifyingly direct and eager to take things in; objects that he had glanced at seemed to lose something, transferring part of themselves to him and taking on a different character. A cigarette that had been no more than looked at by him became as repellent and disgusting to pick up as one that had been in somebody's mouth. A kind of permanent fretfulness lived inside him, twisting him like braided rope or sending him flying all over the place in a shower of whirling sparks. Even when he needed water, he drank it like a horse, almost by the bucketful.

In court he answered all questions by jumping to his feet and giving a straight response in the tersest terms.

'Right!'

Sometimes he added emphasis: 'Rrright!'

And once, quite unexpectedly, when the subject had moved on, he jumped up and addressed the president.

'Permission to whistle, sir!'

'What on earth for?' said the judge in surprise.

'They was giving evidence how I used to signal to my mates. This is how. Highly interesting.'

The president had his doubts, but permission was given. Gypsy Mike lost no time in sticking four fingers in his mouth, two from each hand, and rolling his eyes in a frenzied glare. The lifeless atmosphere of the courtroom was pierced by a true wildman banditwhistle fit to deafen a horse, make it rear up on its haunches, and drain the colour from any human face. The desperate agony of a man being murdered, the savage thrill of a killer, a terrible pang of foreboding, a call for help, the darkness of foul weather in an autumn night, a sense of solitude - all of these things were there, in that shrieking, wailing sound, which belonged to neither man nor beast.

The president called out, and waved at Gypsy Mike, who obediently stopped his whistling. And like a solo singer who has triumphantly performed a difficult operatic aria which was always going to succeed, he took his seat, wiped his wet fingers down his smock and regarded his audience with an air of satisfaction.

'True villain!' said one of the judges, rubbing an ear.

But the other one, with a wide Russian beard and eyes no less Tartarlike than those of the defendant, cast a dreamy look into space above the gypsy's head, then gave a grin and a different response: 'That really was most interesting.'

And with easy hearts, without pity or any feelings of remorse, the judges sentenced Gypsy Mike to death.

‘Right!’ said Gypsy Mike when the sentence had been pronounced. ‘Out in the open on a crossbeam. That’s right!’

And, turning to his escort, he said with a young blade’s bravado, ‘Right. Let’s go, miseryguts. Hang onto your gun, or I’ll have it!’

The soldier glared, keeping a wary eye on him, exchanged glances with his comrade and fingered the bolt on his gun.

His opposite number did the same. And all the way back to the prison the soldiers seemed to be walking on air; totally absorbed in the criminal, they couldn’t feel the ground under their feet, and they were oblivious to the passage of time or any sense of themselves.

Like Yanson, Gypsy Mike was to spend seventeen days in prison before execution. All seventeen passed so quickly - like a single day - in an inextinguishable dream of escape, freedom and life. The restless spirit that had taken over Gypsy Mike’s personality was now contained within walls, grilles and a blank window, with nothing visible, and it had turned all its furious energy in on itself, burning his ideas away to nothing, like coals scattered across the floor. It was as if he was in a drunken stupor: a cloud of brilliant but halfformed images swarmed through his mind, jostling and blurring as they whirled past in a dazzling, unstoppable rush, all of them going in the same direction - towards escape, freedom and life. Some days Gypsy Mike would flare his nostrils like a horse and spend hours sniffing the air, imagining the smell of hemp and something burning with colourless, acrid smoke; sometimes he would spin around the cell like a top, feeling along the walls and tiptapping with a finger, his eyes measuring distances, studying the ceiling, sawing through the bars. His jumpy behaviour worried the soldier on peephole duty, and several times, in despair, he threatened to shoot Gypsy Mike, who rounded on him with filthy words and jeering taunts. All this wrangling was settled peacefully only because it gradually degenerated into the kind of inoffensive roughstuff between peasants in which any shooting would have been absurd and impossible.

Gypsy Mike got through his nights fast asleep, almost without stirring, in an ongoing state of dynamic immobility like a spring temporarily uncoiled. But once he was up on his feet he resumed the business of spinning around, weighing things up and groping about. His hands were invariably dry and hot, but sometimes his heart felt a flood of cold, as if an unmelting block of ice had been packed into his chest, giving him the dry shivers all over his body. At times like this, Gypsy Mike, already swarthy, turned black and took on the darkbluish hue of castiron. And he formed a strange habit: as if he had eaten something excessively sweet and indigestible, he began licking his lips all the time, champing and spewing out the flow of saliva through his clenched teeth all over the floor. And he didn't finish what he was trying to say; his thoughts flashed past so quickly that his tongue couldn't keep up with them.

One afternoon the prison chief dropped in on him, accompanied by an escort. He took one look at the floor covered in spit, and spoke in gloomy tones. 'Huh. You've made a mess here.'

Gypsy Mike was quick to respond. 'You've messed up the whole world, and I've said nothing. What have you skulked in here for?'

The chief's gloomy tone did not change as he offered him the job of executioner.

Gypsy Mike grinned and laughed at him. 'Haven't you got one? Bloody marvellous! You do it. Ha, ha, ha! You've got necks and ropes, and nobody to do the hanging? By God, that's bloody marvellous!'

'You wouldn't have to die.'

'You bet I wouldn't. Dead men don't hang nobody. Stupid fool.'

'What about it? No difference to you one way or the other.'

'Anyway, how do you lot go about hanging people? I bet you smothers 'em on the quiet.'

'No, we do it to music,' snarled the chief.

'Stupid fool, course you got to have music. Like this?' And he let go with a rollicking song.

'Seem to have made your mind up,' said the chief. 'What's it to be? Let's have some sense out of you.'

Gypsy gave a grin. 'Hang on a minute! Go away, and come back. Then I'll tell you.'

At this point a new idea burst into the maelstrom of brilliant, though halfformed and dispiriting images that had flooded through Gypsy Mike's mind. Wouldn't it be nice to be an executioner dressed in a red shirt? He could see a vivid picture: a square thronged with people, a high scaffold and himself, Gypsy Mike, strolling up and down, complete with red shirt and axe. The sun cast its light on every head, giving the axe a cheerful glint, and radiating such richness and good cheer that even those who were having their heads chopped off had a smile on their faces. Just behind the people you could see carts and horses' muzzles - peasants in from the countryside - and, further away, the fields.

'Pfwah!' snorted the gypsy, slobbering and licking at his lips as he gobbled out a new stream of saliva.

But suddenly he felt as if a fur hat had been pulled over his head and yanked down right over his mouth. His eyes were going dim, he could hardly breathe and he felt that flood of cold in his heart, as if an unmelting block of ice had been packed into his chest, giving him the dry shivers again.

The chief called in a couple more times, but Gypsy Mike just grinned at him and said, 'Too soon. Come back again.'

Then, eventually, the chief flashed open the peephole and shouted in. 'You've had it now, dumbcluck! Got somebody else.'

'Sod you. You hang 'em!' snapped the gypsy. And he put the idea of executing people out of his mind.

But towards the end, with the execution getting nearer, the rushing flood of broken images became too much to bear. The gypsy wanted to stop, he wanted to plant his feet wide apart and stop there, but the swirling maelstrom swept him away and, with everything swimming past, he had nothing to hold onto. And he was too upset to get any sleep; his dreams were different now, sharpened and bulking like coloured wooden blocks, still hurtling past faster than he could think. This was no longer a flow of water but a measureless torrent descending from a measureless height, swirling its way through the visible world of colour. When he had been free, Gypsy Mike had sported rather stylish moustaches and no other facial hair, but now he had grown a short, black, prickly beard which gave him a terrifyingly crazy look. Sometimes he would go berserk, wheeling right around his room without rhyme or reason, but still feeling his way over the roughcast walls. And he still drank his water like a horse.

One evening, when the lights had been put on, he got down on all fours in midcell, and came out with a quavering howl like a wolf. As he did so, he looked deadly serious, as if his howling was a thing of vital importance. He would take in a good chestful of air and release it slowly in a long drawnout quavering howl. He did this with his eyes screwed up tight and listening carefully to what was coming out. Even the trembling quality of his voice seemed rather calculated, and he seemed not to be making a senseless noise, but to be carefully composing every note of his wild animal howl and filling it with unspeakable terror and anguish.

Then, suddenly, he stopped howling and stayed where he was on all fours, without making another sound. Minutes passed, and then he started mumbling, breathing his words into the ground. 'My little chickens, lovely sweeties . . . My little chickens, lovely sweeties, let me off . . . Little chickens! Lovely sweeties!...

And again he seemed to be listening carefully to the sounds as they came out. Saying a word and listening to it.

Then he jumped up and spent the next hour, without stopping for a breather, cursing and swearing in the filthiest language. 'Aargh! You lousy lot!' he yelled out, rolling his bloodshot eyes. 'Hanging's hanging, but not like . . . Aargh! You lousy lot!'

And the soldier, chalkwhite and weeping with anguish and terror, banged on the door with his riflebarrel and screamed out helplessly. 'I'll shoot! By God, I'll shoot. Hear me?'

But he didn't dare shoot. Condemned prisoners were never shot at, unless there was a proper riot going on. Gypsy Mike gnashed his teeth and carried on swearing and spewing. His human brain, suddenly stuck on a razorsharp lifeanddeath borderline, was crumbling like a lump of driedout, weathering clay.

When they turned up in his cell during the night to take Gypsy Mike off to be executed, he shook himself and seemed to come back to life. He had a sweeter taste in his mouth and an unstoppable flow of saliva had welled up, but his cheeks took on a pinker tinge and his eyes sparkled with some of their old slyness and wild cunning. As he got dressed, he spoke to the official. 'Who's doin' the 'angin'? That new bloke? Won't have got his hand in yet, will 'e?'

'No need to worry about that,' said the official in a dry voice.

'Course I'm worried, your honour. It's me they're hangin', not you. Got plenty of government soap to hang us with?'

'All right. All right. That's enough from you.'

'You can see who's eaten all the soap,' said the gypsy to the superintendent. 'Look at his face. All shiny!'

'That's enough!'

'Give it plenty of soap!'

Gypsy Mike laughed at them, but the sweet taste in his mouth was building up, and suddenly his legs went all funny and numb. Still, he managed to call out as they walked outside. 'Carriage, please, for the Count of Bengal!'

5. Kiss And Keep Quiet

The sentence passed on the five terrorists was pronounced in its final form and ratified on the same day. The condemned prisoners were not told when the execution would take place, but, judging by the way things usually went, they knew they would be hanged that night, or the next night at the latest. And when a meeting with relatives was proposed for the following day, Thursday, they knew that the execution was scheduled for Friday morning at dawn.

Tanya Kovalchuk had no relatives, and any that she did have lived miles away in the sticks, somewhere in Little Russia; they would be unlikely to know about the trial or the impending execution. Relatives were unthinkable for the unidentified Musya and Werner, which meant that only two of them, Sergey Golovin and Vassily Kashirin, were due for a family meeting. And both of them anticipated that gettogether with a mixture of anguish and dread, though they could not refuse the old folk a final conversation and one last kiss.

Sergey Golovin was especially anguished by the prospect of meeting them. He loved his mother and father very dearly, he had spent time with them only recently, and now he was horrified that it had come to this. Execution itself, such an outrageous perversion with its demented potential to crush the human brain, was easier for his imagination to assimilate, and it seemed less terrifying, than those few short, incomprehensible minutes, which seemed to stand beyond time, beyond life itself. How to look at them, what to think, what to say - was more than his human brain could grasp. The simplest, everyday things - taking them by the hand, kissing them, saying, 'Hello, Dad . . .' - seemed unbelievably horrible because of the monstrous inhumanity, craziness and falsity of it all.

After being sentenced, the condemned prisoners were not sent together to one cell as Kovalchuk had assumed, but were returned to solitary confinement, and all morning, right up to eleven o'clock, when his parents arrived, Sergey Golovin walked furiously up and down his cell, plucking at his little beard, scowling pathetically and muttering to himself. Now and then he would stop in midstride, take in a chestful of air and blow it back out like someone who has been too long underwater. But he was so fit, so full of life and youth, that even in these moments of the utmost cruelty and suffering the blood surged strongly under his skin, giving his cheeks a rosy glow, and his blue eyes were radiant with innocence.

However, things turned out much better than expected for Sergey. First into the meeting room was Nikolay Sergeyevich Golovin, a retired colonel. He was white all over - face, beard, hair and hands - like a marble statue in men's clothing, and he was wearing the same old short coat, showing its age a bit but nicely cleaned, smelling of benzine and sporting some nice new transverse epaulettes. He marched in decisively with the firm tread of a military man, extended a dry white hand and spoke in a loud voice. 'Hello, Sergey.'

He was followed by Sergey's mother, mincing in with an awkward smile on her face. But she too shook hands and spoke in a loud voice. 'Hello, darling.'

She kissed him on the lips and sat down without saying anything more. She had not rushed in, cried out or made any kind of scene, as Sergey had feared. She had simply kissed him and sat down. And she had even begun to straighten her black silk dress with trembling hands.

What Sergey did not know was that all the previous night the colonel had locked himself away in his small study, summoned all his strength and worked on this ritual occasion. 'We must lighten our son's burden, not add to it in his last minutes' was the colonel's firm conclusion, and he carefully weighed every possible phrase, every gesture, that might come into tomorrow's conversation. But he kept losing his way, forgetting the few bits he had managed to prepare, and he wept bitter tears as he sat there tucked into a corner of the oilcloth divan. And in the morning he outlined for his wife's benefit how they were to conduct themselves at the meeting.

'The main thing is - kiss and keep quiet,' was his instruction. 'You can say something a bit later on, but when you kiss him you mustn't say anything. Don't speak when you've just kissed him. Do you understand? If you do, it will come out all wrong.'

‘Yes, Nikolay.’

‘And don’t cry. For God’s sake, don’t start crying. You’ll be the death of him if you do, woman!’

‘Why are you crying then?’

‘You’d bring anybody to tears. But you mustn’t cry. Do you hear what I say?’

‘You’d bring anybody to tears. But you mustn’t cry. Do you hear what I say?’

He had intended to run through his instructions once again in the cab, but he forgot. So there they had been, driving along in silence, two bent figures, grey and old both of them, lost in thought, while the city was enjoying itself in noisy celebrations. It was Shrovetide and everyone was out on the noisy streets.

Now, they had sat down. The colonel assumed his wellrehearsed attitude, with his right hand tucked under his coat lapel. Sergey had been sitting down for no more than a moment when he caught sight of his mother’s wrinkled face close to and leapt up.

‘Don’t get up, Seryozha, darling,’ his mother implored.

‘Sit down, Sergey,’ said his father.

None of them spoke. His mother still had an awkward smile on her face. ‘We did what we could to help you, Seryozha, darling.’

‘Didn’t do any good, Mamma . . .’

The colonel’s response was firm. ‘We had to do it, Sergey, so you wouldn’t think your parents had abandoned you.’

There was another short silence. They were too scared to pronounce any word; it was as if every word on their tongues lost its meaning, and there was only one meaning: death. Sergey took a look at his father’s nicely cleaned coat, still smelling of benzine, and thought. ‘There’s no servant now, so he must have cleaned it himself. Why did I never notice him cleaning that coat before? Must have done it early morning.’ Then suddenly he asked a question. ‘How’s my sister getting on? Is she all right?’

‘Ninotchka doesn’t know.’ His mother was quick to respond.

But the colonel cut in sharply. 'What's the point in lying about it? She read about it in the papers, poor girl. Let Sergey know that we all . . . his nearest and dearest . . . at the right time . . . were thinking about . . .'

He stopped, unable to carry on. Suddenly his wife's face crumpled all at once, swimming with tears, convulsing, wild and wet. Her lacklustre eyes darted around crazily; her breathing became more hurried, rushed and noisy.

'Se— Ser— Se— Se— ' she kept on repeating without moving her lips. 'Se— '

'Mamma!'

The colonel took a step forward and, shaking all over in every fold of his coat and every line on his face, unaware of how terrifying he looked in his deathly whiteness and desperately agonizing determination, spoke to his wife. 'Stop that! Stop tormenting him! Don't! Don't torment him! He's going to die! Don't torment him!'

She had been intimidated into silence, but he was still shaking his clenched fists in front of his chest, striving for selfcontrol. 'Don't torment him!'

Then he stepped back, tucked a trembling hand under his coat lapel, and with an expression of grimly forced calm, he asked a question, whitelipped. 'When?'

'Tomorrow morning,' replied Sergey, equally whitelipped.

His mother looked down, her lips champing; she seemed not to be taking anything in.

Still champing, she seemed to be pouring out words that were primitive and unnatural. 'Ninotchka sends you a kiss, Seryozhenka.'

'Send one back from me,' said Sergey.

'Right. And the Khvostovs want to be remembered to you.'

'Who? Oh, yes, the Khvostovs.'

The colonel cut across them. 'Well, we'd better be off. On your feet, Mother. It's time.'

The two of them assisted the sagging woman to her feet.

‘Say goodbye,’ ordered the colonel. ‘Sign of the Cross.’

She did what she was told. But as she crossed herself and gave her son the lightest of kisses, she shook her head and her speech became incoherent. ‘No, not like that. No, no. Not like that. No, no. Me . . . after . . . What can I say? No, not like that.’

‘Goodbye, Sergey,’ said his father.

They shook hands, and held each other in a close but shortlived embrace.

‘You . . .’ began Sergey.

‘What?’ snapped his father.

‘No, not like that. No, no. Not like that. What can I say?’ His mother was still rambling and shaking her head. She had managed to get herself seated again, and she was shaking all over.

‘You . . .’ Sergey began again.

Suddenly his face was that of a pitiful child; it crumpled, and his eyes flooded with tears. Through their sparkling mist he could see his father’s white face close to, with tears like his own.

‘You’re a noble man, Father.’

‘What? What are you saying?’ said the colonel, horrified.

And suddenly, like a broken man, he let his head fall across his son’s shoulder. He had once been taller than Sergey, but now he had shrunk down to a smaller height, and his dry, fluffy head lay like a little white ball on his son’s shoulder. And they were both silently but warmly embracing; Sergey kissed the fluffy white hair, his father the prison smock.

What about me ? ’ came a sudden loud voice.

They turned to look. Sergey’s mother was standing there with her head thrown back, watching in fury, almost hatred.

‘What is it, Mother?’ cried the colonel.

‘What about me ?’ she said, shaking her head, with the intensity of a demented mind. ‘You can kiss goodbye, but what about me ? It’s all right for you men . But what about me ? Eh?’

‘Mamma, darling!’ Sergey threw himself at her.

What followed cannot and need not be conveyed.

The colonel's last words were: 'I give you my blessing as you go to your death, Seryozha. Die with courage, an officer's death.'

Then they left. Left, but didn't leave. They stayed on, stood around, spoke - then they were gone. Mamma had been sitting there, Papa had been there, standing, and suddenly, somehow, they were gone. Back in his cell, Sergey lay down on his bunk, turned to face the wall to shield himself from the guards, and wept and wept. Then, weary from weeping, he fell into a deep sleep.

Only one person, his mother, came to see Vassily Kashirin; his father hadn't wanted to come. When his mother arrived, Vassily was pacing up and down his room, shivering with cold even though it was a warm day, almost hot. Their conversation was brief and grim.

'You shouldn't have come, Mamma darling. It's an ordeal for you and for me.'

'Why, Vasya? Why did you do it? God in heaven!'

The old woman broke down in tears, wiping them away with the fringe of black wool on her scarf.

Doing what he and his brothers always did, he bawled at his mother, who was completely at a loss, and then suddenly stopped, shivering with cold, and snapped at her angrily. 'Look at this! I knew it! Mamma, you just don't understand - anything at all!'

'All right. All right. What's wrong with you? Are you cold?'

'Yes,' he said, cutting in, and off he went pacing around the room, scowling angrily at her in sideways glances.

'Happen you've caught cold?'

'Mamma, it's got nothing to do with catching cold. It's . . .' And he gave up on her with a wave of despair.

The old woman was intending to say, 'And our old man wants pancakes on Monday,' but she lost her nerve and wailed at him. 'It's our son, I said. You must come . . . Forgive him his sins . . . Old goat wouldn't listen . . .'

‘To hell with him. He’s no father of mine. Been a swine all his life, and he still is!’

‘Vasya, darling, he is your father!’ The old woman recoiled in disapproval.

‘My father, huh!’

‘Your own father!’

‘Oh yes?’

It was all frantic and absurd. Death lay ahead, yet this trivial, unnecessary, futile bit of nonsense was building up, and their words were crunching like empty nutshells underfoot. Almost in tears - tears of anguish caused by the perpetual failure to communicate that had walled him off throughout his life from friends and family and even now, in the hour of his death itself, stared him in the face with all its meanness and stupidity - Vassily cried out. ‘Can’t you see they’re going to hang me? Hang me. Can you see it, yes or no? Hang me!’

‘Well, if you hadn’t done things to people, maybe they wouldn’t ...’

‘For the love of God! What are you on about? Wild animals don’t behave like this. Am I your son, or not?’

He burst into tears and sat down in one corner. The old lady wept too, in her own corner. Incapable of joining for a single minute in a bond of love and setting that against the horror of impending death, they wept cold tears of solitude that brought no warmth to the heart.

His mother spoke. ‘You’re asking me whether I’m a mother or not. You’re blaming me. But these last few days I’ve gone grey with worry. I’m an old woman now. And you keep on blaming me.’

‘All right, Mamma. It’s all right. I’m sorry. It’s time you went. Kiss my brothers for me.’

‘Am I really not a mother to you? Don’t I show any pity?’

Then at last she was gone. She had walked away weeping bitterly, wiping her eyes on the fringes of her scarf, and not seeing where she was going. And the further she got from the prison, the more she wept her scalding tears. She turned around and walked back towards the prison, only to get completely lost in the town where she had been born, raised and lived through to old age. She fetched up in a kind of rundown patch of garden under a few old trees with snappedoff branches, where she sat down on a bench wet from the thaw. And suddenly it came to her: they were going to hang him tomorrow.

The old woman leapt to her feet with every intention of running away, but suddenly her head spun violently and she collapsed. The little path was slippery, swimming with ice and, try as she might, she couldn't get to her feet. She kept on spinning round, and when she tried to raise herself on her elbows and knees, she slipped back down on her side. The black scarf slithered off her head, exposing a bald patch among the dirtygrey hair at the back. For some reason she felt as if she was at a wedding, enjoying the celebrations - her son was getting married. She had had more than a glass or two of wine and was getting very drunk.

'No more,' she cried, turning it away. 'For the love of God, I can't take any more.' Her head was reeling as she slithered over the thin crust of ice covering the snow, but still it came - more and more wine, poured out for her.

And her heart began to ache from the drunken laughter, the rich spread of food and the crazy dancing - but they went on pouring out more wine for her. More and more wine.

6. The Hours Fly By

In the fortress where the condemned terrorists were imprisoned, there was a belltower with an ancient clock. Every hour, every halfhour, every quarter of an hour, a chime rang out in a long, slow toll, a sound of sadness high overhead that gradually ebbed away, like the distant, plaintive call of passing birds. During the day this strange sad music was lost in the sounds of the wide and bustling city street that ran past the fortress. Trams rattled up and down, horses clipclopped, automobiles bounced and swooped, announcing their presence well in advance. It was Shrovetide, and some peasant drivers had come in specially from the city outskirts in carnival mood, and the little bells strung around the necks of their diminutive horses filled the air with a steady jingle. And there was a murmur of speaking voices, the slightly intoxicated and cheery tones of people on holiday. The discordant bustle was in tune with the early spring thaw with its dirty puddles on the pavements and the trees all around the square that had gone black overnight. A warm breeze wafted in from the sea in wide, wet flurries. It was almost as if the watching eye could observe tiny particles of fresh air being borne away in a cloud of goodwill, off into the freedom of infinite distance, laughing as they went.

At night the street lapsed into repose under the lonely glow of large electric suns. Now the huge fortress, its flat walls showing no spark of light, withdrew steadily into darkness and quietude, cutting itself off beyond a cordon of silence and stillness from the living and everactive city. At this time the chiming asserted itself again, its weird, unearthly tune slowly and sadly proceeding overhead from birth to death. It was born and reborn, its false message for the ears ringing out in soft and sombre tones and a dying fall, only to ring out anew. It was like big, limpid droplets of glass tinkling out a muted chime as they fell from ineffable heights into a metal bowl filled with hours and minutes. Or like birds of passage flying by.

By day and by night this chime was the only sound to penetrate the separate cells where the condemned criminals were held in solitary confinement. It came in through the roof and through the thick stone walls, shivering the silence, and it went away imperceptibly, only to return no less imperceptibly. Sometimes they didn't hear it, and forgot about it; sometimes they waited for it in despair, living from chime to chime, no longer trusting the silence. Only the most serious criminals were assigned to this prison, which lived by its own rules - strict, harsh rules, as rough as a corner wall of the fortress itself - and if there could be nobility in a ruthless regime, it was the nobility of dead silence, hollow and soundlessly solemn, picking up whispers and the slightest breath.

And amidst this solemn silence, disrupted only by a lugubrious chime marking the fleeting minutes, five people - two women and three men - cut off from every living thing, awaited the onset of night, dawn and execution, each preparing for it in his or her own way.

7. There Is No Death

Tanya Kovalchuk behaved as she had done throughout her whole life in thinking only of other people and never about herself; here and now, suffering only on behalf of the others, she was most upset. She could imagine imminent death presenting itself as an agonizing reality for Seryozha Golovin, for Musya and the rest of them, but it did not seem to concern her at all.

And, as if to reward herself for her own muchneeded selfcontrol in court, she now wept for hours on end, in the way you would expect from old women who have known much sorrow, or young ones full of compassion, people of exceptional kindness. And the idea that Seryozha might not get his tobacco, or Werner might be deprived of his strong tea, together with the thought of them all inevitably dying, seemed to cause her more anguish than the idea of execution itself. Execution is something inexorable, even incidental, not worth thinking about, but for a man in prison, waiting for execution, the loss of his tobacco is intolerable. She started to reminisce, running through lovely details of their lives together, and she died a thousand deaths, terrified by the idea of Seryozha meeting his parents.

It was for Musya that she felt sorriest of all. For some time now she had been under the impression that Musya was in love with Werner, and although there was no truth in this, Tanya had persisted in dreaming up something nice and bright for the two of them. When they were still free, Musya had worn a little silver ring decorated with a skull and crossbones within a crown of thorns. Tanya Kovalchuk had often looked at this ring with an aching heart, seeing it as a symbol of doom, and she had begged Musya, half jokingly, half seriously, to take it off.

‘Give it to me,’ she had begged.

‘No, Tanya, I’m not doing that. You’ll soon have a different kind of ring on your finger.’

For some reason the others in their turn had assumed she was bound to get married very soon, and this annoyed her because she had no desire for a husband. And so, as she recalled that halfhumorous banter with Musya, and the fact that she was now definitely doomed, she found herself choking on tears of motherly compassion. And every time the clock chimed, she looked up with a tearstained face and listened to it, wondering how the others were reacting in their cells to the steadily insistent summons of death.

But Musya herself felt happy.

With her hands behind her back, tucked into the illfitting prison smock that made her look rather odd, like a man or a young lad dressed in someone else's clothes, she paced the floor, up and down, tirelessly. The sleeves of the smock were too long for her, and she had rolled them up, with her thin, scrawny arms, almost those of a child, poking out from gaping holes like the stalks of flowers sticking out of a cheap and dirty old pot. The rough material had been rubbing and chafing her delicate white neck, and from time to time she would reach up with both hands to free her throat and finger the sore places on her livid skin.

Musya paced the floor, to and fro, her features flushing with the effort of vindicating herself in the eyes of the world. She wanted vindication because she was only a slip of a girl with nothing special about her, nothing heroic, not much in the way of achievement, and yet she was going to be subjected to the same kind of gloriously honourable death visited upon true heroes and martyrs before her time. With her unshakeable faith in human kindness, compassion and love, she could imagine people worrying about her at this moment, suffering with pain and pity, and the shame of it flooded her face red. It was as if she was doing something thoroughly disgraceful by going to the scaffold.

At the last meeting with the defence lawyer, she had asked him to get some poison for her, but she had thought better of it: what might he and the others think - that she was showing off or chickening out, and instead of dying a quiet, inconspicuous death she was making a song and dance about it? So she added hastily, 'No, no, don't bother.'

Now there was only one thing she wanted: to make people understand that she was not being at all heroic, that dying isn't all that terrible and people shouldn't feel sorry or worry about her. To let them see that it wasn't her fault they were making such a meal of putting her to death like that when she was so young and insignificant.

Like someone charged with a real offence, Musya was looking for exoneration, for anything at all that would enhance her sacrifice and give it real value. This was her line of thinking: 'Yes, I'm still young and I might have lived a long life, but still . . .'

It was like a candle fading in the bright light of the rising sun: her young age and life itself came out dark and dismal against the glorious radiance about to shine upon her modest head. There was no exoneration.

But what about that special spirit within her - limitless love, limitless readiness to take on big things, an unlimited capacity for selflessness? It really wasn't her fault she had not been given the opportunity to do everything she had wanted and intended to do - that she had been killed on the temple threshold, at the foot of the sacrificial altar.

But if that's how things go, if a person is to be judged not by what he has done, but by what he intended to do, well then . . . then she was worthy of a martyr's crown.

'Am I?' thought Musya sheepishly. 'Am I really worthy of that? Worthy enough for people to weep and grieve over me when I am so small and insignificant?'

And a feeling of indescribable joy came over her. There was no doubt about it, not a moment's hesitation; she had been taken to their bosom, she had every right to stand alongside those noble souls who from time immemorial had attained the highest heaven by going to the stake, suffering under torture and submitting to execution. This was peace, resplendent and restful, a gentle glow of infinite happiness. It was as if she had already gone from the earth, soaring bodiless into the sunshine realm of truth and life.

'So that's death, is it? How can you call it death?' thought Musya in her blissful state.

And if all the world's scientists, philosophers and executioners had come together in her cell and laid before her their books, scalpels, axes and nooses to demonstrate that death exists, that man dies and gets killed, and that there is no immortality - she would have been bemused. What do you mean there is no immortality, when here she is, now, immortal? What price immortality, what price death, when, here and now, she is already dead and already immortal, as alive in death as she has been alive in life?

And if they had carried a foulstinking coffin into her cell, containing her own decomposing body, and said, 'Look, that's you,' she would have taken one glance and told them, 'No, that's not me.'

And if they had tried to show her the menacing sight of decomposition, and scare into believing it was her - really her! - Musya would have responded with a smile, and said, 'No. You think that is me, but it isn't. I'm the person you are talking to. How could I be that ? '

'No, but you are going to die, and that's what you'll become.'

'No. I'm not going to die.'

'You're going to be executed. Look, there's the noose.'

'I'm going to be executed, but I shan't die. How can I die when I'm already immortal, here and now?'

And the scientists, philosophers and executioners would step back, and say in quavering tones, 'Do not touch this place. It is holy ground.'

What did Musya have in mind? Many things - for her the thread of life, far from being broken by death, would go on spinning out smoothly and evenly. She thought of her comrades, both the faraway people who would be painfully hurt by their execution and those close to her who would mount the same scaffold. She was taken aback by Vassily's terrible fear - he had always been so brave, even enjoying a joke with death. Take that Tuesday morning when they were tying the explosives onto their belts which would blow them to pieces in a few hours' time. Tanya Kovalchuk's hands were shaking so much from anxiety that she had to be taken away, but Vassily was in a jokey mood, clowning about and spinning round without a care in the world, and Werner had to take him to task: 'Don't mess about with death.'

So what was he now so afraid of?

But this incomprehensible fear was so alien to Musya's spirit that she soon stopped worrying about him and trying to fathom its cause. Suddenly she felt a sharp urge to see Seryozha Golovin and have a laugh with him. After a few moments' thought, she felt an even more desperate urge to see Werner and chew the fat with him. And, imagining that Werner was walking alongside her with his measured stride and his heels digging into the ground, Musya spoke to him. 'No, Werner, my dear, that's nonsense. It doesn't matter whether you killed N.N. or not. You're a clever man, but this is like one of your games of chess. You take one piece, then another, and eventually you win. The only thing that matters is that you and I are ready to die. Can't you see that? Those gentlemen, what do they think? That there's nothing more horrible than death? They have invented death, they're scared of it, and they want us to be scared. I'll tell you what I'd like to do - walk out on my own with a Browning in front of a whole regiment and shoot at them all. As long as there are thousands of them and I am alone, I won't kill anybody. That's the only thing - there must be thousands of them. When thousands kill one person, that person is the one who wins. That's how it is, Werner, my dear.'

But this was so clear she felt there was no point in arguing any further. Werner must have seen it himself by now. Or maybe her thoughts simply didn't want to settle in one place - they were like a blithely cruising bird with a view of limitless horizons, and a grasp of infinite space, ultimate depths and the serenity of blue skies, tender and caressing. The clock chimed incessantly, shocking the deadly silence, and her thoughts blended with the lovely harmony of that distant sound, which set them ringing too and turned all her fluid and fleeting impressions into music. For Musya, it was like going for a carriage drive in the tender darkness of the night, down a smooth, wide highway, with the springs rocking gently and the little bells tinkling. All her cares and worries had gone, her weary body had melted away in the darkness, and her serenely sleepy mind formed the brightest of silent images for her to wallow in, revelling in their colours and the perfect rest that came with them. Musya brought to mind her three colleagues, recently hanged; their bright and joyful faces seemed so close to her - closer than anyone still living. She felt like a man looking forward happily in the morning to walking in that evening and greeting old friends at home with a smile upon his lips.

Musya felt very tired from so much walking. She lay down cautiously on the bunk, and carried on daydreaming with her eyes lightly closed. The clock chimed incessantly, shocking the unbroken silence, and bright images floated softly within its singing bounds. Musya was thinking: 'Is this really death? Heavens, how beautiful it is! Or is it life? I don't know. I really don't know. I shall go on watching and listening.'

For some time now, ever since the first days of incarceration, her hearing had been playing tricks with her. Well attuned to music, it had been whetted by the silence, against which it turned tiny particles of reality - guards walking down the corridor, the chiming of the clock, the wind rustling over the iron roof, a creaking lantern - into musical patterns. To begin with, Musya was afraid of them, and she chased them away like morbid hallucinations, but then she saw that she was fine and there was nothing at all morbid about them. She began to relax and give in to them. And now, suddenly, she could definitely make out the clear strains of military music. She opened her eyes in astonishment and looked up. It was night outside, and the clock was chiming. That's it again, she thought calmly, and closed her eyes. The moment they were closed, the music came again - clearly audible music from around the corner, with soldiers, a whole regiment, marching up the righthand side and going past her window. Their feet were beating out the time on the frozen ground - left, right, left, right - and you could even hear the creaking of a leather boot now and then, or a foot slipping somewhere and then picking up its stride. Nearer and nearer came the music, something completely unfamiliar - but a loud and cheery festival march. Some celebration was clearly underway in the fortress.

Now the band was outside her window, and the whole cell was filled with happy sounds and cheerful harmonies in different registers. One big brass instrument was painfully out, lagging behind the beat one minute, then ridiculously galloping ahead. Musya could see the diminutive soldier playing this instrument, and the effort on his face made her laugh.

They're going now. Their steps trail away - left, right, left, right. From far away the music sounds even better, jollier.

One or two departing false notes from the cheerily booming brass, and they've gone. And now the clock chimes again from the belltower, with its slow, sad tones barely troubling the stillness.

‘They’ve gone,’ thought Musya with a touch of regret. She misses the cheery, funny sounds, now they are lost. She even misses the lost soldiers, because those men with their squeaky boots, struggling so hard with their brass instruments, are not the same people, they are a completely different lot from the ones she wanted to shoot at with her Browning.

‘Please come back,’ she begged plaintively. And back they came. Here they are, bending over her, enveloping her in a limpid cloud, raising her up to where birds of passage soar on high, calling out like town criers. They swoop right and left, up and down, calling out like towncriers. They voice their cries, their proclamations, announcing their flight from afar. They spread their wings wide open, the darkness bears them up like the daylight, and the swell of their breasts, scything the air, radiates a blue reflection of the resplendent city below. Her heartbeat slows to a steady pace; her breathing is now gentle and easy. She is falling asleep. Her face is weary and pale, there are circles under her eyes, and her young girl’s arms look skinny and emaciated. There is a smile on her lips. Tomorrow at sunrise this human face will be contorted into an inhuman grimace, the brain will be clogged with thickened blood and glassy eyes will bulge from their sockets - but today she sleeps in peace, smiling in her splendid immortality.

Musya is asleep.

And prisonlife goes on, a life of deafness and hearing, of blindness and sight, a kind of unending angst. Someone, somewhere, is walking about. Someone, somewhere, is whispering. Somewhere, someone rattles a gun. Was that a scream? Maybe not - just a noise in the stillness.

The peephole in the door opens noiselessly. A dark, whiskered face appears in the dark aperture, stares in at Musya, watching her for some time in amazement, and disappears as softly as it came.

The chimes ring out with agonizing slowness, as if the weary hours are climbing the steep slope to midnight, and the upward movement gets heavier and harder. Then they slip and slide back down, moaning, only to crawl up again, agonizingly, towards their black summit.

Someone, somewhere, is walking about. Someone, somewhere, is whispering. And now horses are being harnessed to black carriages which carry no lights.

8. Death Exists. So Does Life

Sergey Golovin had given no thought to death, which had seemed so irrelevant, of no concern to him. He was a fit, strong and buoyant young man, endowed with a happygolucky attitude and sheer joie de vivre that allowed him to cope with any unpleasant or lifethreatening thoughts and feelings by absorbing them into his system quickly and without trace. In the same way that his cuts, wounds and grazes soon healed up, anything painful, wounding his spirit, worked its way out of him and gradually disappeared. And to everything, business or pleasure - photography, cycling or planning terrorism - he brought the same easygoing and lifeaffirming sense of application. Everything in life was good fun, everything in life was important, everything must be done well.

And everything he did was done well; he could manage a sail marvellously, he was very good with a pistol, devoted in friendship and in love, and he had a fanatical belief in one's 'word of honour'. His friends laughed at him; they said that if a police agent, a snout, a notorious spy, swore on his 'word of honour' that he wasn't a spy, Sergey would believe him and shake him by the hand like a friend. If he had a fault, it was only that he fancied himself as a singer, when he had no ear for music: his singing was appalling. He couldn't hold a tune, even in songs of revolution, and he wasn't best pleased when they laughed at him.

'You're all stupid asses. Either that, or I'm one,' he would say to them, looking serious and obviously offended. People would match his serious manner, but they were of one accord, and they came to the same considered opinion: 'You're the ass. You sound like one.'

Yet for this fault of character - as often happens with nice people - he was loved perhaps as much as he was for his virtues.

He was so unafraid of death, so uninterested in it, that before they left Tanya Kovalchuk's flat on the fateful morning, he was the only one who had a good breakfast, putting away two glasses of tea, half full of milk, and a decentsized roll. Then he looked ruefully at Werner's untouched roll, and said, 'Why don't you eat something? You should. You need building up.'

'Don't feel like it.'

'You're a good trencherman, Seryozha.'

Instead of replying, Sergey burst into song, with his mouth still full. His singing was raucous and tuneless: 'Dark whirling winds swirl overhead . . .'

After his arrest, he could have been depressed: it had not been done well, they had failed, but now he thought, 'Here's something else that must be done well. We have to die well,' and this cheered him up. And, strange to relate, from the second morning in the fortress, he had started doing exercises prescribed in an extraordinary 'rationalized' programme created by some German by the name of Müller, which had caught his imagination. He would strip naked and, to the amazement and alarm of the watching sentry, he would work his way steadily through all eighteen set exercises. The fact that there was a sentry observing this with obvious surprise, delighted him, as a disciple of the Müller method, and, although he knew there would be no response, he would talk to the eye that was peering in through the little window.

'Don't worry, my friend. It's building me up. You could do with this in your regiment,' he would call out persuasively, keeping it short to avoid frightening anyone, without ever suspecting that the soldier simply thought he was mad.

The fear of death started to come over him bit by bit, in a kind of series of sudden shocks. It was like an uppercut, a fist smashing up into his heart, hard. More like a sharp pain than fear. Then the sensation would be forgotten, only for it to return a few hours later, lasting longer and hurting more every time it came. And it was clearly beginning to take on the rough outline of a ghastly, unbearable terror.

'What - me scared?' thought Sergey. 'Stupid idea!'

It wasn't him being scared, it was his young body, fit and strong, which he had been unable to fool despite the German's physical exercises or any amount of rubbing down with a cold, wet towel. And as it gained strength and freshness from the application of cold water, it suffered all the more unbearably from fleeting shocks of dread. And it was during the very moments when he experienced a lift of the spirit from sheer joie de vivre and bodily strength, in the morning, after a good night's sleep and a stiff workout, that he felt a sharp stab of terror that seemed to come from outside. He took note of this, and thought to himself: 'Don't be stupid, brother Sergey. To make death easier you have to weaken the body, not build it up. Don't be so stupid!'

And he stopped doing the exercises and towelling down. For the benefit of the soldier, he shouted out, by way of explanation and justification: 'I'm packing it in, but don't get me wrong, brother. It is the right thing to do. It's no good for anybody who's going to get hanged. It's still all right for everybody else.'

And it really did seem to make a difference. He also tried eating less to make himself feel weaker, but despite the lack of fresh air and exercise, he couldn't stop feeling hungry. This was difficult to deal with, and he gobbled up everything they put before him. Then he tried something different: before starting his meal he would scrape half the hot food off into a pail. It seemed to help. He began to feel weary and drowsy.

'I'll show you what's what!' he warned his body, gently running saddened fingers over his feeble, rundown muscles. But it wasn't long before his body got used to this new regime, and the dread of death came back. Admittedly the pain wasn't quite as fierce or fiery, but it nagged at him and made him feel sick. 'It's because of all the waiting,' thought Sergey. 'Best thing would be to sleep right through to the hanging.' And he tried that, trying to sleep as long as he could. At first it worked, but soon, either because he had slept too much or for some other reason, he began suffering from insomnia. And along with that came clear, sharp thinking and a longing for life.

'What - me scared? To hell with that for an idea.' He was obsessed with death. 'It's such a pity about life. It's a wonderful thing, whatever the pessimists say about it. What happens when they hang a pessimist? He thinks it's a pity about life. A real pity. And what's this - why has my beard grown? For ages and ages it wouldn't grow at all, and now it has. What for?'

And he would shake his head at the sadness of it all, heaving his heart out in great, long sighs. Silence - then a deep, long sigh.

More silence - and another sigh, longer and heavier.

That was how things stood right up to the trial and that last ghastly encounter with the old men. He woke up in his cell acutely aware that everything to do with living was over, and that ahead lay nothing but a few hours of waiting in emptiness, and then death - and it all seemed very strange. He felt as if he had been completely stripped in a most unusual way - stripped not only of his clothes, but also robbed of the sun, the air, sound and light, action and speech. As yet there was no death, but life had gone, already replaced by something new, something impenetrably obscure, either without any meaning or possessed of a meaning that was so profound, so mysterious and inhuman, that it could never be grasped.

‘Hell’s teeth!’ said Sergey in anguished amazement. ‘What is all this? Where do I come into it? What’s left of me ? ’

He took stock of himself closely, all over, fascinated by what he saw, from the baggy prison slippers to his own belly sticking out from his prison smock. He walked around his cell with his arms stretched out, still absorbed in himself like a woman trying on a new dress which is too long for her. He willed his head to turn, and it did turn. And this . . . this thing that somehow seemed rather frightening . . . this was him , Sergey Golovin, and this is what would cease to be.

And everything had become unreal.

He tried walking around his cell - and walking seemed unreal. He tried sitting down - and sitting seemed unreal. He tried taking a drink of water - and it seemed unreal that he was drinking, swallowing, holding a mug, using fingers, trembling fingers. He choked on the water, and as he cleared his throat and gave a cough, he thought to himself, ‘I’m coughing. It’s not real.’

‘Am I going round the bend, damn it?’ thought Sergey with a chilly feeling. ‘Bloody hell, that’s all I need!’

He rubbed his forehead with one hand, and even that seemed unreal. Then, holding his breath, he froze and stayed motionless for what seemed hours on end, extinguishing all thought, suppressing his deep breathing and avoiding any kind of movement - because the slightest thought meant madness, the slightest movement meant madness. Time had gone, it seemed to have been converted into space - translucent and airless - a vast physical area with everything there upon it, the earth, life and people, and all of it could be absorbed at a single glance, all of it right up to the end, to the very edge of mystery, to death itself. Some sacrilegious hand had drawn aside the ageold curtain hiding the mystery of life and the mystery of death, rendering them no longer mysterious, though still incomprehensible. It was like a truth engraved in a foreign language. His human brain had no access to the concepts, and his human speech had no access to the words, needed to capture what he had seen. And if the words 'I'm dead scared' had any meaning, it was only because there were no other words available, no other concepts that corresponded to this new, inhuman condition - their existence was impossible. It would be like this if a human being, with only his human capacity for understanding, his experience and his feelings to go on, were suddenly to get a glimpse of God himself, seeing without understanding, even though he knew this thing was called God. He would be left shuddering with the unimaginable agony of unimaginable incomprehension.

'That's what Müller does for you!' he shouted out loud with incredible passion, shaking his head. And with that sudden change of feeling that the human spirit is so prone to, he laughed with genuine delight. 'Oh Müller! My dear old Müller! My truly wonderful German friend! But you are quite right, brother Müller. I'm the ass here.'

He walked around his cell a few times and then amazed the soldier observing him through the peephole by stripping himself naked and applying himself diligently to a performance of all eighteen exercises. He stretched his young, rather slimmeddown body upwards and outwards, squatted on his heels and strained up on tiptoes, inhaling and exhaling, flinging his arms and legs out wide. And after each exercise he spoke out smugly. 'That's the way to do it! That's the real thing, brother Müller!'

His cheeks glowed, and droplets of lovely, hot sweat emerged from every pore; his heartbeat was steady and strong.

'The thing is, Müller,' thought Sergey, expanding his chest so that his ribs were clearly outlined under the taut, thin skin. 'The thing is this. There is a nineteenth exercise: hanging by the neck from a fixed position. It's called execution. Do you get that, Müller? They take a living being - say Sergey Golovin - they wrap him up like a doll, and hang him by the neck until he is dead. It's a stupid thing to do, Müller, but it can't be helped. It's got to happen.'

9. Horror In Solitary

To the same chimes, only a few empty cells along from Sergey and Musya, though as desperately lonely as if he was the only living creature in the universe, the miserable Vassily Kashirin was ending his life in anguish and terror. Covered in sweat, with his wet shirt clinging to his body and his once curly hair all over the place, he rushed around his cell frantic with despair like a man with unbearable toothache. He would sit down for a while, then get up and run or press his forehead against the wall or search for something with his eyes, as if he was looking for medicine. He had changed so much that he seemed to have had two different faces: his earlier face, a young one, had gone away to be replaced by a new one, a terrible face emerging from darkness.

He had been suddenly overwhelmed by a fear of death, which had seized him completely and now held him in its grip. Only that morning, while staring death in the face, he had been ‘messaging about’ with it, but by evening, in the solitary confinement of his cell, he had been engulfed and flattened by an inexorable tide of terror. While he had always been risking danger and death on his own terms, and had kept control over his own death, however terrible it might be, he had carried on flippantly, even enjoying himself. Any suggestion of a wrinkled, oldwomanish fear was submerged in a spirit of absolute freedom and the need to prove his daring and fearless character through sheer strength of will. Fastening the belt which carried the infernal machine, he seemed to become the infernal machine, assuming the ruthless reasoning of dynamite as he acquired its firepower and deathdealing energy. And as he made his way along the street through the busy throng of people absorbed in their own workaday concerns, skipping out of the way of cabhorses and trams, he felt like a new arrival from an unknown alien realm where there was no knowledge of death or fear.

Then suddenly - a sharp, savage, shattering change. He was no longer going where he wanted to go; he was being taken where other people wanted him to go. He could no longer choose a place to be; they were putting him into a stone cage and locking him up like an inanimate object. He was no longer free to make his own decisions about living or dying like everybody else; they were definitely and inevitably going to put him to death. In a splitsecond he, the incarnation of strong will, life and strength, had come to be a pathetic example of helplessness unique in all the world, newly transformed into an animal lined up for slaughter, an empty thing incapable of speech that could be moved around, set fire to, broken up. Not a word of anything he said would ever be heard, and if he started screaming they would gag him. If he moved his legs, they would take him away and hang him, and if he showed any resistance, put up a struggle or lay down on the ground, they would force him to his feet, tie him up and take him away, bound hand and foot to the gallows. And the fact that the mechanical procedure being thrust upon him was being carried out by people just like him made them seem weird, unreal and sinister, either phantoms, creatures of pretence intent on deception, or mechanized marionettes worked by springs: designed to fetch and grab, take away, hang, pull down on his legs. To cut through rope, haul down, cart away and bury. And from the very first day of his imprisonment, people and life became for him an unbelievably horrific world consisting of these phantoms and mechanized marionettes.

All but speechless from terror, he tried to convince himself that they did have tongues and the power of speech, but he couldn't bring himself to believe it: they seemed unable to talk. He tried to remember them speaking and what their words had meant when they were in communication, but he couldn't. Their mouths gaped open, sounds came out, they walked around, and that's all they did.

This is what you would feel like if, one night when you were at home alone, all the pieces of furniture came to life, moved about and took complete control of you. Suddenly they would have you up before the court - cupboard, chair, desk and sofa. You could remonstrate and chase around, begging for mercy and screaming for help, but they would rabbit on with each other in their own language, and then dispatch you to be hanged - that cupboard, chair, desk and sofa. With the other household objects looking on.

And Vassily Kashirin, sentenced to be hanged by the neck until dead, began to see the whole thing as Toyland: his cell, the door with its peephole, the chiming of the wellwound clock, the intricately sculpted fortress building, and especially that mechanized marionette with a gun, stamping up and down the corridor, and all the others who stared at him scarily through the little window, and brought him food without talking. And what he was experiencing was not the fear of death - no, if anything he wanted to die. Death, in all its ageold, unfathomable mystery, was more susceptible to reason than this world, which had turned into something so savage and fantastic. Besides, death was somehow being steadily and completely extinguished in a crazy world of phantoms and puppets, and losing its enormous and mysterious significance as it also became a mechanical process and only for that reason something to be dreaded. Fetch and grab, take away, hang, pull down on the legs. Cut rope, haul down, cart away and bury.

A man has gone from the world.

In court, a spirit of comradeship had brought Kashirin to his senses, and just for a moment he had been able to see people again. They were sitting there, trying him and saying things to each other in human speech; they were also listening, and seemed to be taking things in. But at the meeting with his mother, with the horror of a man who is losing his reason and knows it, he had clearly sensed that this old woman in a black headscarf was nothing more than a cleverly constructed mechanical doll - one of those that can say 'Dada' or 'Mamma', only better made. He made an effort to talk to her, but he was thinking to himself, with a shudder, 'God in heaven! This is a doll. It's a mother doll. And that's a toy soldier, and there's a daddy doll at home - and this is a Vassily Kashirin doll.'

Any minute now, he felt sure, he would hear the whirr of a motor or the squeak of unoiled wheels. When his mother burst into tears, there was a momentary flash of humanity, but it vanished the moment she spoke, and he was nonplussed and horrified to see water coming from her doll's eyes. Later on, in his cell, when the horror became unbearable, Vassily Kashirin turned to prayer. From all that had passed for religion in his life as a young man in the tradesman's home headed by his father, only a nasty, bitter, disgusting aftertaste remained, and there was no faith in it. But at some time, probably in his early childhood, he had heard a short sequence of words which had made him shiver with emotion and had stayed with him throughout his life as a breath of pure poetry. The words were about 'bringing joy to the afflicted'.

So it happened that in his darkest moments he would murmur to himself, 'Joy to the afflicted', without actually praying and with no real understanding, though this lifted his spirits and made him want to go up to some dear person and gently protest about things by saying, 'This life of ours . . . can you call it life? Oh, my dear girl, can you really call it life?'

Then he would suddenly get an urge to fool about, ruffling his hair, dropping down on one knee and offering his breast to be beaten, with a cry of 'Come on, strike me down!'

He never told anyone, not even his closest friends, about his 'Joy to the afflicted', and he seemed to be unaware of it himself, so deeply hidden was it inside him. He rarely brought it back to mind, and when he did it was with wary reluctance.

And now that all the horror of an insoluble mystery had come shockingly visible into his head and swamped him like a spring torrent rushing down a channel to the sea, he felt a sudden urge to pray. He wanted to get down on his knees, but he was too embarrassed to do so in front of the soldier, so he folded his arms across his chest and said in a whisper, 'Joy to the afflicted!'

And in a voice full of anguish and emotion, he repeated himself slowly and clearly: 'Joy to the afflicted, come unto me, give succour to Vaska Kashirin.'

Long ago, while still living it up as a firstyear student, before meeting Werner and joining the society, he had called himself, cockily and pathetically, Vaska Kashirin - and now he felt an urge to use that name again. But those few words, 'Joy to the afflicted!', still rang out with a deathly, hollow ring.

Something had stirred. It was as if a distant image of some gentle and sorrowful figure had come into view, only to fade away gently without lighting up the darkness of impending death. The clock chimed in the tower, dead on time. The soldier in the corridor made a rattling noise that could have come from a sword or gun, and then gave a prodigious yawn with juddering pauses.

'Joy to the afflicted! Why don't you speak? Haven't you got anything to say to Vaska Kashirin?’

He gave a smile full of emotion, and waited. But there was only emptiness, inside and all around him. And the gentle and sorrowful figure did not come back. What did come back to him were needless and painful memories of lighted wax candles, a priest in his robes, a painted icon on the wall, and also the holy father, bending and unbending as he said his prayers and gave his bows, with one eye on Vaska to check that he was praying and not misbehaving. And it all became more ghastly than it had been before the prayer.

Everything had gone.

The madness crept on, unbearable. His mind was fading like the scattered embers of a dying campfire, and cooling like the corpse of a newly dead person with some residual warmth in the heart when the feet and hands have already gone stiff. Once again, with a rush of blood, the fading power of his thought told him that he, Vaska Kashirin, might be going out of his mind here and now, and might experience the kind of suffering for which there was no name, taking him to extremes of pain and agony the like of which no living being had ever known, that he could beat his head against the wall, gouge his own eyes out with a fingernail, say or shout anything that came into his head, weep and swear that he could not take any more of this - and it would mean nothing. Absolutely nothing.

And nothing is what ensued. There were legs down there with a mind and life of their own, still walking about and supporting his shaking, soaking body. There were hands with a mind of their own vainly trying to tighten the smock that kept falling open across his chest, and warm his shaking, soaking body. His body was shivering and freezing. There were eyes still looking. There was something akin to relief in this.

But there was still one shock of pure horror to come: when people walked into his cell. Not getting the message - that the time for his execution had come - he just saw people standing there, and he panicked, almost like a child.

‘Not going! Not going!’ he murmured inaudibly through deadened lips as he gently withdrew towards the back of the cell, as he had recoiled in childhood when his father had raised his hand.

‘Time to get on the road.’

They were saying things, walking about, giving him something.

He shut his eyes, swaying a little - and he took his time getting ready to go. It must have meant that his mind was beginning to come back to him when he asked an official for a cigarette. The man politely opened his cigarettcase with its decadent fancy patterning.

10. The Walls Come Tumbling Down

The unidentified prisoner known as Werner was a man who had grown weary of living and struggling. There had been a time when he had a great love of life, enjoying the theatre, literature and good company. Endowed with an excellent memory and strong willpower, he had studied several European languages in depth and could easily pass for a German, a Frenchman or an Englishman. He usually spoke German with a Bavarian accent, but he could switch at will and talk like a trueborn Berliner. He was a lover of fine clothes and a man of exquisite manners, the only member of his fraternity who dared to appear in high society ballrooms without risk of being recognized.

But long ago, imperceptibly to his comrades, he had become sardonically disaffected with people at some deep level of the spirit; it was a case of being weighed down by a fatal mixture of desperation and worldweariness. By nature more mathematician than poet, he had had no experience of inspiration or ecstasy, and with every passing minute he felt like a madman trying to square the circle by wading through puddles of human blood. The demon he fought against on a daily basis could not imbue him with self-respect; it was the usual entanglement of stupidity, foul play and falsehood, dirty tricks and filthy deception. The last straw, the thing that seemed to have broken his will to live once and for all, was when he murdered a provocateur on orders from the centre. He did the killing calmly, but after one glance at that dead human face of treachery, now at peace, though also pathetic to look at, he immediately lost all self-respect and belief in his cause. It wasn't a question of sudden remorse; he simply lost every last trace of self-esteem and the slightest interest in himself - he had become insignificant, a tedious irrelevancy. As a man of singleminded, unbreakable will, he stayed on in the organization, ostensibly unchanged, though his eyes had now taken on the glint of something cold and terrible. He said not a word to anyone.

He possessed one other sharply defined quality. Just as there are some people who have never had a headache, so he was a man who had never known fear. And when other people were afraid of something, he looked on this without condemning them, but also without any particular sympathy, as if it was some kind of common ailment that he happened never to have suffered from. He did feel some pity towards his colleagues, especially Vasya Kashirin, but it was a frigid, almost officially sanctioned feeling, something that some of the judges were probably not unfamiliar with.

Werner had realized that execution is not just a matter of dying, but something more. Anyway, he decided to confront it calmly, as if it had no relevance, by living right up to the end as if nothing had happened and nothing was going to happen. This was the only means of expressing his lofty contempt for execution and preserving the last form of inalienable freedom - that of the spirit. Even in court - and this would have been almost unbelievable even to his colleagues, who were fully aware of his capacity for cool detachment and complete disdain - far from thinking about dying or living, he had been calmly working through a difficult game of chess, and this had held his closest and deepest powers of concentration. As a first-rate chessplayer, he had launched into this game on the first day of his imprisonment, and had kept it going without interruption. And when he was sentenced to death by hanging, not a single piece was moved on his imaginary board.

Even the fact that he would never be able to finish the game did not stop him, and he started the morning of the last day of his life on earth by going back to put right a rather unsuccessful ploy made the previous day. Squeezing his lowered hands between his knees, he stayed rigid in a sitting position for quite some time, then he got to his feet and began walking about, deep in thought. He had a strange way of walking. Tilting his upper body slightly forwards, he banged down sharply on his heels, so that even on the dry ground his steps rang out with an unmistakable clatter. Softly, only by breathing out, he whistled a little Italian arietta - it helped his thinking.

But this time, for some reason, things went wrong. With an uncomfortable feeling that he had committed a big mistake, even a terrible blunder, he went back on himself several times and checked his game almost from the start. There was no blunder, but the feeling of having made a mistake would not leave him; it grew stronger and more irksome. Then he was struck by an unexpected and offensive idea: maybe the mistake was to use a game of chess to distract his mind from execution and thus protect himself against the fear of death that would seem to be inevitable for a condemned man?

‘Hm. Why would I do that?’ he responded coldly, and calmly folded the board away. And, with the same degree of close attention that he reserved for the game of chess, like an examination candidate facing a stiff test, he tried to take account of his horrific situation, from which there was no escape. He looked around the room, trying to leave nothing out, worked out how many hours were left before the execution, sketched out an approximate, though reasonably accurate, picture of the execution itself, and then shrugged his shoulders.

‘So what’s it all about?’ he asked of no one in particular, halfquestioningly. ‘That’s all there is to it. Where’s the fear in that?’

No, there was nothing to fear. And not only was there nothing to fear, something had been creeping up on him that seemed to be the opposite of what he stood for - a hazy but challenging sensation of enormous joy. And the stillundiscovered mistake no longer seemed so irksome or disappointing; it, too, spoke strongly of something good and quite unexpected, as if he had lost a close friend in death, only to find that he was still alive, sound in wind and limb, and rejoicing.

Werner gave another shrug, and took his own pulse. His heartbeat was up a little, but still strong and regular, a resonant force. Once again, like a new inmate, he took a close look at the walls, the bars, the chair fastened to the floor, and a sudden thought struck him. ‘Why am I feeling so easy and happy and free? Especially free? When I think about the execution tomorrow, it doesn’t seem to be there. When I look at the walls, they don’t seem to be there. And I feel so free it’s like being on the outside, newly released from a prison that I’ve been in all my life. What is it all about?’

His hands were beginning to tremble - a new experience for Werner. And his head was more and more filled with furious ideas. It was as if tongues of flame were leaping out inside his head, and the fire had been struggling to get out and shine all over a broad nocturnal landscape that stretched out into the dark distance. And now it was on the outside, and the longreceding landscape was lit up and shining.

Gone was the enervating lassitude that had worn Werner down for the last two years; a clammy, deadweight serpent with tightshut eyes and a ghastly pinchedup mouth had fallen away from his heart. In the presence of death, a wonderful youthfulness was being restored to him with its spirit of play. It was something more than wonderful youthfulness. With one of those amazing flashes of spiritual insight that occur to people on rare occasions, raising them to the highest heights of consciousness, Werner suddenly saw life and death brought together, and he was stunned by the splendour of this undreamtof spectacle. It was like walking along the knifedge of the highest possible mountain range, seeing life on one side and death on the other in the form of two deep, gorgeous and gleaming seascapes merging at the horizon into a single expanse of infinite space.

‘What is this? What a heavenly vision!’ he said, speaking slowly and automatically raising himself and coming to attention as if he was in the presence of a supreme being. And all things - walls, time and space - were obliterated as he peered with piercing insight into the full depth and breadth of the life that he was leaving.

And life was suddenly different. No longer did he attempt to express what he had seen in words; there were no words in the sparse and meagre resources of human language. Gone for good was the tiny impulse of bitter unpleasantness that used to evoke in him a disdain for other people, and sometimes even a feeling of revulsion at the sight of a human face. It was like a man going up in a hotair balloon and watching the filthy rubbish of narrow streets disappear as his small town falls away, and ugliness turns into beauty.

Werner walked mechanically over to the table, and leant on it with his right hand. Proud and imperious by nature, he had never struck such a proud, liberated and imperious pose as this, never turned his neck in such a way, or adopted such a glare - because he had never before felt as liberated and imperious as he now did, here in prison just a few hours away from execution and death.

And people were suddenly different; they now looked all pleasant and charming under his newly enlightened gaze. Soaring away beyond time, he could see clearly how young humanity was, only yesterday a beast howling in the forest; and the things that had seemed disgusting in people, horribly unforgivable, had turned into something rather nice - not unlike a toddler's inability to walk properly like an adult, or its babbling chatter filled with sparkling gems of wit, its amusing blunders, slips and painful bruises.

'My dear friends!' Werner gave a sudden, unexpected smile, and instantly lost all the authority of his pose, becoming a prisoner again, suffering the narrowness and discomfort of confinement, increasingly irritated by the intrusively searching eye that stood out against the flatness of the door. And there was something odd: almost instantly he had forgotten what he had been seeing with such sharpness and clarity. Odder still: he made no attempt to recall it. He simply shifted into an easier sitting position, disregarding his usual indifference to bodily discomfort, and with an uncharacteristically feeble and tender smile, nothing like the old Werner grin, he stared at the walls and bars. Then something else occurred that was so unlike Werner it had not happened before: he burst into tears.

'My dear comrades!' he whispered through bitter tears. 'My dear comrades!'

By what secret ways had he travelled from that feeling of pride and limitless freedom to this pathetic display of tenderness and passion? He did not know and didn't even wonder about it. And whether he was simply feeling sorry for those people, his dear comrades, or whether there was something else, something nobler and more impassioned, hidden behind his tears, even this was unknown to his heart, so suddenly resurrected and springlike.

'My dear comrades! Oh, my dear comrades!'

In this bitterly weeping figure, smiling through his tears, no one would have recognized the cold, aloof, worldweary, arrogant Werner - not the judges, nor his comrades, nor Werner himself.

11. On Their Way

Before the condemned prisoners were put into their carriages, all five were brought together in a large, cold room with a vaulted ceiling that looked like a disused office or an empty waitingroom. They were allowed to talk among themselves.

But the only one to take immediate advantage of this permission was Tanya Kovalchuk. The others were silently squeezing each other's hands, cold as ice or hot as fire - and silently avoiding eyecontact as they crowded together in an embarrassed little gang with blank faces. Now that they were together again, they were all rather ashamed of what they had been feeling when they were alone, and they were afraid to look at each other, not wanting to see or to display the various, peculiar and rather shameful things they had experienced, or suspected in themselves, as individuals.

But once a couple of glances had been exchanged, they started smiling at each other, and immediately everything felt as natural and easygoing as before; no change had occurred, and if something had occurred, the weight of it was shared between them so equally that it was barely noticeable to each individual. They all spoke and moved about awkwardly, in quick bursts and snatches, or else much too slowly, or too rapidly; sometimes words stuck in throats, and there was much repetition; some sentences were left unfinished or taken as understood, and nobody took any notice. They were all screwing up their eyes and staring at everyday objects with close attention as if they couldn't recognize them, like people used to wearing spectacles who had suddenly taken them off. All of them kept turning around and taking a sharp look behind them, as if someone at their back had called out with something to show them. But this too went unnoticed. Musya and Tanya Kovalchuk had burning cheeks and ears; Sergey had seemed rather pallid at first, but he soon came through it and began to look like his old self.

Vassily was the only one who attracted their attention. Even amongst these people he looked awful, and out of place. This roused Werner to a mixture of sympathy and anxiety, and he spoke to Musya. 'What's wrong with him, Musechka? Is he . . . you know . . . ? We ought to go over and talk to him.'

Vassily gave them a vacant stare, staring at Werner as if he didn't recognize him, and then looking down.

'What have you done to your hair, Vasya, eh? Now, what's all this? Nothing to worry about, brother. Soon be over now. Got to tough it out. That's what we've got to do.'

Vassily did not speak. For a long time it seemed as if he wasn't going to say anything at all, but then a response came, a belated, lifeless sound from terribly far away, like the grave itself reacting to endless calls.

'I'm all right. I will tough it out.' And he repeated: 'I will tough it out.'

Werner was delighted to hear it. 'There you are. Good lad. That's the way.'

But he was met by a dark, leaden stare coming from the distant deeps, and an anguished thought flashed across his mind. What was his angle of vision? Where was he coming from when he said things? And, with the deepest sensitivity, he spoke out in sepulchral tones. 'Vasya, listen to me. I love you, very dearly.'

'I love you too.' His leaden answer quavered on the tongue.

Suddenly Musya took hold of Werner's hand, and spoke to him, overplaying her surprise, like an actress on the stage: 'What's this, Werner? You - talking about love? You've never talked about love to anybody. Suddenly you're all . . . you know . . . brighteyed and gentle. What's it all about?'

'What are you getting at?'

And Werner, also overplaying things like an actor, squeezed Musya's hand. 'Yes, I do feel love now. Don't tell on me, please. It's embarrassing. But I do feel love.'

Their eyes met and flashed with brightness while everything around them faded, the way that all other lights are dimmed in a sudden flash of lightning as the intense yellow flame casts a dark shadow on the ground.

‘Yes, yes,’ said Musya. ‘It’s all right, Werner.’

‘Yes, Musya,’ he said. ‘Yes, it is.’

Something had passed between them, something understood and firmly established. And Werner’s eyes were still flashing when he felt another rush of feeling and strode over to Sergey.

‘Seryozha!’

But it was Tanya Kovalchuk who responded. In a transport of delight and on the verge of tears from maternal pride, she snatched furiously at Sergey’s sleeve. ‘Werner,’ she said, ‘Listen to me. I’m in tears over him. Out of my mind. And he’s doing his exercises.’

‘The Müller system?’ said Werner with a smile.

Sergey frowned with embarrassment. ‘You can laugh, Werner, but I’m absolutely sure . . .’

They all shared a good laugh. Coming together like this, and gathering strength in the black fortress, they were steadily reverting to what they had been before, but they didn’t see this and thought nothing had changed. Suddenly Werner put a stop to their laughter and spoke to Sergey with some gravity.

‘No, you don’t understand,’ said Golovin, more cheerfully. ‘Of course, we . . .’

But at this point an announcement was made: it was time to get on the road. And the guards were kind enough to let them sit together in pairs as they chose. They were indeed kindness itself, almost too kind, either making a display of their humanity or else pretending they were not there at all, and everything was running itself. But they looked pale.

‘Musya, you go with him,’ said Werner, pointing to Vassily, who was standing there transfixed.

‘I get your meaning,’ Musya nodded. ‘What about you?’

‘Me? Tanya goes with Sergey, and you’re with Vasya . . . I’ll be on my own. That’s all right. I can cope with that. You know me.’

Once they were outside, the warm dampness of a dark night struck them, softly but sharply, straight in the face and eyes, taking their breath away in a gentle, cleansing stream that swept right through their shivering bodies. It was hard to believe that this bewildering feeling came from nothing more than a spring breeze, warm and moist. It was a real spring night, astonishingly beautiful, with a scent of melting snow amid tinkling droplets in the boundless empty space. Tumbling showers of rapid raindrops busily chased each other down, pitterpattering in the close harmony of song until one of them lost the beat and the whole thing collapsed into the muddle of a happy fandango. After that, a big strong raindrop would set up a new beat, and off went the pitterpatter into another fast spring song, neatly and resonantly performed. And a pale glow from the electric lights shone down on the town, and the fortress roofs.

‘Ooh!’Sergey Golovin took a deep breath and held it, as if reluctant to let such lovely fresh air out of his lungs.

‘How long has the weather been like this?’ Werner wanted to know. ‘It’s just like spring.’

‘Only a couple of days.’ The response was obligingly polite. ‘But we still get bad frosts.’

One by one the dark carriages were brought up. Each of them accepted two passengers before trundling off into the darkness towards a lantern swinging at the gates. Each was surrounded by the grey silhouettes of guards, and the horses’ hooves rang out, clattering on the road surface or slithering through the wet snow.

Just as Werner bent down to get into his carriage, one of the guards made a casual observation: ‘Somebody else travelling with you.’

Werner was taken aback. ‘Where to? Where’s he going? What do you mean -somebody else?’

The guard said nothing. Sure enough, something small and still but obviously alive was squashed into a dark corner of the carriage, as he could see from an angled shaft of light from a lantern that picked out the glint of an open eye. In the process of getting into his seat, Werner bumped against somebody’s knee.

‘Sorry, my friend.’

There was no response. It was only when the carriage had started to roll forward that he asked a question in halting Russian, with a stammer. 'Who . . . who are you . . . ?'

'My name is Werner. Sentenced to death by hanging for the attempted assassination of N.N. Who are you?'

'Er, Yanson. Not to hang me.'

Here they were, riding along a couple of hours from facing the huge, inscrutable mystery of passing over from life to death, and they had just met. Life and death were operating together in two simultaneous planes, but life was still life, down to the silliest laughable details.

'What did you do, Yanson?'

'Stabbed my boss. Killed him. For the money.'

To judge by his voice, Yanson seemed halfasleep.

Werner found his limp hand in the darkness and gave it a squeeze. Yanson extracted his hand just as feebly.

'Are you feeling scared?' asked Werner.

'I don't want.'

Neither of them spoke. Werner found the Estonian's hand a gain a nd g ave i t a s trong s queeze b etween h is own two dry, burninghot palms. It lay there, lifeless and stiff as a bit of board, and Yanson no longer tried to withdraw it.

It was cramped and stuffy in the carriage; there was a smell of soldiers' clothes, stale air, manure and sodden bootleather. A junior guard was sitting across from Werner, and his hot breath reeked of onions and cheap tobacco. But there were a few cracks through which pungent fresh air made its way into this stuffy little box on wheels, and this was more springlike than outside. The carriage lurched right and left, and even seemed to turn back on itself; sometimes it gave an impression of circling for hours on end without moving from one spot. To begin with, a bluish electric light shone in through the thick blinds which had been lowered over the windows, then suddenly, following one particularly sharp turn, it went slightly darker, this being the only means of guessing that they had turned off into the godforsaken streets of the outskirts and were getting close to the S— railway terminal. Now and again, at sharp turns, Werner's bent knee, still living, bumped chummily against the guard's living bent knee, and execution was a hard thing to believe in.

'Where are we going?' Yanson suddenly asked.

His head was spinning a little from the constant twisting and turning of the dark box, and he felt slightly sick.

Werner gave him a answer, and squeezed the Estonian's hand all the harder. He felt like saying something particularly friendly and affectionate to this sleepy little man, and he felt a greater love for him than for anyone ever before.

'My dear friend! You don't look too comfortable sitting like that. Come a bit closer.'

Yanson was quiet for a moment, and then gave his response. 'No, thanks. I'm all right. You going to be hung?'

'Yes!' Werner answered in a surprisingly cheerful tone, almost laughing, and he waved his hand casually, almost exaggeratedly relaxed, as if this was a laughing matter, some silly trick that nice people with a terrible sense of humour wanted to play on him.

'You married?' asked Yanson.

'Oh no. No wife for me. I'm on my own.'

'I'm not . . . not married, I mean,' said Yanson, correcting himself after a bit of thought.

By now, even Werner's head was beginning to swim. And as the minutes went by it seemed more and more as if they were on their way to some kind of celebration. It is a strange fact that almost all people on their way to execution have had this feeling; along with all the anguish and terror, they have a vague sense of enjoying the bizarre event that was about to take place. Reality runs away with fantasy, and death joins forces with life to create new visions. It seemed quite likely that bunting would have been put out for them.

'Here we are,' said Werner cheerily, looking up with new interest, when the carriage stopped, and he nipped out smartly. But Yanson was taking his time. Saying nothing, but holding onto things with a feeble grip, he refused to get out. When he took hold of a handle, the guard had no trouble in loosening the lifeless fingers and prising his hand free; when he took hold of a corner, the door, one of the tall wheels, he was eased away from them by a guard who hardly had to exert himself. He hadn't really got hold of these things; the uncommunicative Yanson was simply sticking sleepily to anything that came to hand, and he was quickly and effortlessly pulled away. At last he was out and on his feet.

There was no bunting. It was nighttime, and the station was dark, deserted and lifeless. It was too early for the passenger trains to be running, and the silent train that awaited these passengers needed neither bright lights nor ceremony. And suddenly Werner felt bored with the whole thing. Not troubled by fear, but bored out of his mind and wearied by a hugely oppressive sense of tedium which made him want to go away somewhere and lie down with his eyes tight shut, Werner stretched himself and gave a prodigious yawn. Yanson followed him by stretching and giving a series of quick, short yawns.

'Let's get it over and done with!' said Werner wearily. Yanson, with nothing to say, shrank into himself.

While the condemned prisoners were moving down the deserted platform, which had been cordoned off by soldiers, towards dimly lit carriages, Werner fetched up alongside Sergey Golovin, who pointed to one side and started talking, though only one thing was audible - the word 'lantern' - and even that was swallowed up in a great long and weary yawn.

'What do you mean?' asked Werner with an answering yawn.

'That lantern. The lamp inside - it's smoking,' said Sergey.

Werner turned and looked at it: sure enough, the lamp inside the lantern was giving off thick smoke, and the glass panels were blackening at the top.

'Yes, it is.'

And a sudden thought occurred to him. 'Why on earth should I be bothered if the lamp's smoking, when . . .' The same thing had evidently occurred to Sergey; he glanced at Werner, and looked away. But both of them had stopped yawning.

All seven were heading for the carriages, and only Yanson needed to be taken by the arms. First, he had dragged his feet as if the soles of his shoes were sticking to the wooden platform, then he had bent his knees and hung in midair, held up by the guards, or dragged his legs like a drunk, with his socks scraping the boards. It took some time to get him in through the door, though he wasn't speaking.

Vassily Kashirin got along on his own, but only by vaguely copying his friends - what they did, he did. But as he stepped through onto the carriage floor, he stumbled, and the guard took his arm to steady him, at which Vassily shuddered and gave a great roar as he shoved the hand away. 'Aaargh!'

'What's up, Vasya?' said Werner, moving in quickly.

Vassily said nothing. He was shaking all over. The guard, embarrassed and rather offended, explained himself.

'I was only trying to help, but he . . .'

'Come on, Vasya, I'll give you a hand,' said Werner, trying to take his arm. But once again Vassily shoved the hand away, and his roar was even louder. 'Aaargh!'

'Vasya, it's me, Werner.'

'I know. Leave me alone. I can manage.' Still shaking, he got in on his own, and sat down in a corner of the carriage. Bending down towards Musya, Werner signalled with his eyes and spoke softly to her. 'What do you make of that?'

'Not good,' she answered just as softly. 'He's already dead. Werner, is death real?'

'I don't know, Musya. I don't think so,' said Werner, seriousminded and thoughtful.

'I thought you'd say that. But him? He wore me out in the carriage. Like riding with a corpse.'

'I don't know, Musya. Maybe death is real for some people. Just for a while. Then, afterwards, it won't be. Death's been real with me, but it isn't now.'

Musya's rather pallid cheeks flushed red. 'Been real , Werner? Been?'

'It's been, and gone. Same for you.' There was a racket at the carriage door. All banging heels, noisy breathing and reckless spitting, in came Gypsy Mike. He cast his eyes around, and stood his ground.

‘No room in here, guard!’ he shouted to the wornout guard who was watching him resentfully. ‘Give me some room, or I’m not going. You can hang me here on a lamppost. And that damn carriage, you bastards! Call that a carriage? Devil’s shit, that’s what it was!’

But then, suddenly, he lowered his head, stuck his neck out and walked in like that to be with the others. Framed by a wild shock of hair and beard, his piercing black eyes glared at them, on the brink of insanity. ‘Hello there, gentlemen! There we have it, then! Good morning, sir!’

Nudging Werner, he sat down across from him. Then, lowering his head into close proximity, he winked at him and flashed a hand across his neck. ‘You too, eh?’

‘Yes,’ said Werner with a smile.

‘All of ’em?’

‘All of ’em?’

‘Aha!’ Gypsy Mike gave a grin, and his eyes quickly probed them all, lingering for a while on Musya and Yanson. He winked again at Werner. ‘That minister?’

‘Yes. What about you?’

‘I, sir, am here on special business. No time for ministers!’

I, sir, am a villain, that’s what I am. A killer. Don’t you worry, sir. Come a bit closer. I’m not here in your company because I want to be. Plenty of room for us all in the world to come.’

Then, from under his tousled mass of hair, his wild eyes swept across them all in one swift, suspicious stare. They returned his look without comment, but seriously and with evident sympathy. He gave another grin and several times he tapped Werner on the knee. ‘There you have it, sir. Like in that song: “Mother oaktree, oh so green, make no sound for me . . .” ’

‘Why do you keep calling me sir , when . . . ?’

‘That’s right,’ agreed Gypsy Mike with some satisfaction.

‘How can you be a sir when you’re going to hang next to me? Now that man’s a sir,’ he continued, pointing to the silent guard. ‘But that one of your lot is no worse than us.’ His eyes had picked out Vassily. ‘Sir . . . you’re scared too, aren’t you, sir?’

‘Not too bad,’ came the answer, dragged out thickly from a stiff tongue.

‘What do you mean “not too bad”? Don’t be ashamed.

No need to be ashamed. Only a dog wags its tail and grins at you when it’s going to be hung, and you’re a man, aren’t you? And who’s that with the big long ears? Not one of yours, is he?’

His eyes kept darting about, and he was constantly slurping on sweet saliva as it welled up, and spitting it out. Yanson, who had squeezed himself into a rigid lump in the corner, slightly stirred the flaps on his fur cap, but he didn’t say anything.

‘Killed his boss.’

‘Good God!’ said Gypsy Mike in some surprise. ‘Do they really let blokes like him go around killing people?’

Gypsy Mike had been furtively eyeing Musya for some time, and now he suddenly rounded on her, staring hard and straight. ‘You, missy. How are you mixed up in this, missy? Look, she’s gone all pink, and she’s laughing. Look, she is, you know.’ He grabbed Werner by the knee, and his clutching fingers exerted a grip of iron. ‘Look at her. Look .’

Blushing a little and with a tiny smile of embarrassment, Musya stared straight into his piercing, halfcrazy eyes with their wild and wearily pleading look.

Nobody spoke.

The busy wheels drummed on, and the tiny carriages rocked on their narrow railway, going flat out. When the little engine came to a bend or a crossing, it gave a shrill, keen whistle, the driver not wanting to run over anybody. And it was barbarous to think that such a degree of routine human effort and efficiency should be applied to the hanging of people, and that the craziest deed on earth was being done in such a simple and rational manner. On went the carriages, with the people sitting there as they always do, travelling like normal travellers, waiting, as always, for the next stop. 'This train will halt for five minutes.'

After that comes death - eternity - the great mystery.

12. Journey's End

On went the little carriages, flat out.

Sergey Golovin had lived for several years with his parents in a house on this very route; he had travelled it by day and night, and he knew it well. If he closed his eyes it was easy to imagine that he was now on his way home; he had stayed late with friends in town and had caught the last train.

'Not long now,' he said, opening his eyes and peering out through the uncommunicatively dark window and its protective grille.

Nobody stirred or responded; only Gypsy Mike did anything, and he was spitting out gobbets of saliva. He began to give his eyes a free run of the carriage, taking in the walls and feeling at the windows, the doors, the soldiers.

'S cold,' said Vassily Kashirin through tight lips that seemed literally frozen. It came out as 'S coo—'

Tanya Kovalchuk was fumbling with something. 'Here's a scarf. Tie it around your neck. It's very warm.'

'Round his neck ? ' asked Sergey to everyone's surprise, and he was shocked by his own question.

But since everybody was thinking the same thing, nobody heard it, as if no one had spoken or they had all said the same thing at the same time.

'Never mind, Vasya. Wrap yourself up. Wrap up warm,' was Werner's advice, then he turned to Yanson and spoke to him in a kindly voice. 'My dear friend, you must be feeling the cold.'

'Werner, maybe he wants a smoke. Listen, my friend, do you fancy a smoke?' asked Musya. 'We've got fags.'

'Oh, yes.'

‘Give him a cigarette, Seryozha,’ said Werner, perking up.

But Sergey was already getting one out. And they all looked on with affection as Yanson’s fingers accepted the cigarette, the match flared and a stream of deepblue smoke issued from Yanson’s mouth.

‘Oh, thanks,’ said Yanson. ‘That’s nice.’

‘Very funny thing,’ said Sergey.

‘What’s funny?’ asked Werner, turning towards him. ‘What’s funny about that?’

‘Well - just this cigarette.’ He was holding the cigarette, an ordinary cigarette, in his ordinary, living fingers, and staring at it in amazement, as if he was transfixed with horror. And they all turned their eyes onto that thin little tube, watching as a ribbon of blue smoke curled up from the end to be blown away by their breath, and the ash built up and went dark. It went out.

‘It’s gone out,’ said Tanya.

‘Yes, it has.’

‘To hell with it!’ said Werner, scowling anxiously at Yanson, whose hand looked dead as it drooped down, still holding his cigarette. Suddenly Gypsy Mike whipped round and leaned across, bringing his face right up to Werner’s and rolling the whites of his eyes like a horse as he whispered to him. ‘Shall we get one of them guards, sir, eh? ’ave a little go?’

‘Don’t do that,’ said Werner, also in a whisper. ‘Just take what’s coming to you.’

‘What for? Bit of fun, ’avin’ a scrap, eh? I gives ’im one, ’e does me, and you don’t know when you’ve ’ad it. As if you wasn’t dead at all.’

‘No, don’t do it,’ said Werner, turning to Yanson. ‘Why aren’t you smoking, my friend?’

Suddenly Yanson’s flabby face crumpled pathetically. It was as if someone had pulled a string that worked his face, and his wrinkles had all crisscrossed each other. And he seemed to be halfasleep as he started whimpering, without shedding any tears, in a voice that was dry as dust, almost like playacting. ‘Don’t feel like smoking. Aargh! Aargh! Aargh! Nobody not to hang me. Aargh!

Aargh! Aargh!’

Things were going on around him. With tears streaming down her face, Tanya Kovalchuk stroked his sleeve, straightened the sagging flaps of his tattered cap and spoke to him. ‘My lovely little man! Please don’t cry, my dear little boy! I know how unhappy you are!’

Musya looked away. Gypsy Mike caught her eye and gave one of his grins. ‘Funny chap, his honour. Drinks tea with the rest of us, but he’s got a chill in his belly,’ he said with a bit of a laugh. But his own face had turned a blueblack colour, and it looked like castiron. His big yellow teeth were chattering.

Then the little carriages jolted and noticeably slowed down. Everybody except Yanson and Kashirin rose up in their seats, and then, just as quickly, sat back down again.

‘Our stop!’ said Sergey.

All the air seemed to have been sucked out of the carriage, it was so hard to breathe. Swelling hearts threatened to burst through the walls of their chests, blocking throats, thumping wildly and screaming from terror in voices coursing with blood. All eyes were cast down at the shuddering floor; all ears followed the sound of wheels going round and round, slower and slower, skidding, going round again, then - coming to a sudden stop.

The train had halted.

Then the dreamworld took over. Not that it was all that terrifying; it was a ghostworld, mindbendingly weird and alien, with the dreamer himself left out of things and only his bodiless shade moving about, speaking without sound and agonizing without agony. They were sleepwalking their way out of the carriage, forming up in pairs and drinking in the woodland air with all its special springtime freshness. Yanson was dumbly sleepwalking as he put up a show of feeble resistance, only to be forcibly ejected from the carriage without a word.

They dropped down from the little steps.

‘Are we walking it?’ someone asked, almost cheerily.

‘Not far to go,’ said someone else, just as cheerily.

Then they set off in a large, black group of silent people, walking through woodland down a badly maintained road in all the gentle springtime dampness. Bracing air blew at them fresh from the woods; it was slippery underfoot and when they ran into deeper snow, hands reached out instinctively for a companion. Heavy breathing came from the escorting guards, who were having a tough time struggling through nothing but deep snow. A voice spoke out angrily. 'They might have cleared the road. Fancy leaving us to muck about in this lot!'

Someone else put in an apologetic explanation. 'They did clear it, sir. Can't do nothing about the thaw, though.'

Consciousness was coming back, but only partly, in odd little bits and pieces. A moment's sensible thought confirmed it.

'That's right. They couldn't possibly have cleared the road.'

Then everything started to fade away again, leaving nothing but a sense of smell, the unbearably pungent aroma of air, woodland and melting snow, and the next moment everything stood out with unbelievable clarity - the woods, the night, the roadway, and the fact that they were on their way to being hanged - any minute now, straightaway. The snatches of whispered talk were strained and desultory.

'Soon be four o'clock.'

'I said we were leaving early.'

'Gets light at five.'

'Yes, it does. Ought to have . . .'

It was still dark when they stopped in an open space. Not far ahead was a thin patch of trees that could be seen through because it was winter, and there you could see two silent lanterns bobbing about. And the gallows.

'I've lost one of my galoshes,' said Sergey Golovin.

'You what?' said Werner, not getting his idea.

'I've lost one of my galoshes. It's cold.'

'Where's Vassily got to?'

'Don't know. Oh, that's him over there.'

It was Vassily, a dark, motionless figure.

‘What about Musya?’

‘I’m here. Is that you, Werner?’

They were now taking a good look around, though avoiding the place where the lanterns were bobbing about with a horrific meaning that was only too clear. To their left, the bare woods seemed to have thinned out, allowing a huge, smooth, white shape to stare through at them, and a wet wind to blow.

‘It’s the sea,’ said Sergey Golovin, sniffing the air and tasting it in his mouth. ‘That’s the sea.’

Musya’s response was sonorously poetic. ‘My love is wider than the open sea . . .’

‘What’s all that about, Musya?’

‘My love is wider than the open sea, unbounded by the shoreline of our lives . . .’

‘My love is wider than the open sea . . .’ Sergey repeated the words pensively, succumbing to the voice, the sounds, the words.

‘My love is wider than the open sea . . .’ Werner repeated them too, then suddenly a thrill of delight took him by surprise. ‘Muska, you’re still such a young thing!’

Close upon him, straight into Werner’s ear, came an urgent, gasping whisper from Gypsy Mike: ‘Sir, listen. Sir. Look at them woods, eh? What the hell is that? Them lanterns over there. See? Is that where they does the ’anging? What is it?’

Werner took a look. Gypsy Mike was in a desperate state, aware of his impending death.

‘We should start saying goodbye . . .’ said Tanya Kovalchuk.

‘Hang on, they’ve still got to read out the sentence,’ said Werner. ‘What’s happened to Yanson?’

Yanson was lying in the snow, and there were people nearby, seeing to him. There was a sudden strong whiff of ammonia.

‘What’s holding you up, doctor? Nearly ready?’ The question sounded impatient.

‘It’s all right. He’s only fainted. Wipe his ears with snow. Look, he’s coming round. You can start the reading.’

Light from a hidden lantern fell across a document held in white, ungloved hands. Document and hands were all a bit shaky, as was the voice.

‘Gentlemen, shall we do without the reading? I think you all know what it says. What do you think?’

‘Don’t read it,’ said Werner, answering for them all, and the little lantern went out.

They also refused the services of a priest, and a large, black silhouette slipped away silently into the depths of darkness. Dawn seemed to be coming up; the snow looked a little whiter than before, the bodies a little darker, as the woods thinned out, taking on a more ordinary, yet more pathetic, appearance.

‘Gentlemen, you must walk on in twos. Please pair off as you wish, but I must ask you to get a move on.’

Werner pointed to Yanson, who was back on his feet, supported by two guards. ‘I’ll go with him. Seryozha, you take Vassily. Off you go.’

‘Right.’

‘Are we going together, Musechka?’ asked Kovalchuk. ‘Come on. Give us a kiss.’

Kisses were rapidly exchanged. Gypsy Mike’s kiss was heavy - you could feel his teeth; Yanson’s was soft and limp, with his mouth halfopen - he didn’t seem to know what he was doing. When Sergey Golovin and Kashirin had taken a few steps, Kashirin came to a sudden stop and called out loud and clear, in a strange voice that didn’t belong to him: ‘Bye, comrades!’

‘Bye, comrades!’ came the answering call.

They walked off. It was now calm. The little lanterns through the trees had stopped bobbing about. They were expecting to hear a scream, a voice, some kind of noise - but it was just as calm up ahead and the little lanterns, now still, gave off a yellow gleam.

‘Oh, good God!’ came a wild, hoarse cry from one of them. They looked round. It was Gypsy Mike, still in his desperate condition with death now upon him. 'They've started hanging them!'

They recoiled, and all was calm again. Gypsy Mike showed his desperation by clutching at the air. 'This isn't right! I ask you, gentlemen - me, all on my own? More fun with a bit of company, gentlemen. It's not right !'

He grabbed Werner by the arm, his fingers squeezing tight and then relaxing as if it was some sort of game. 'You, sir. My dear friend. Let me go with you. Please . . . Don't say no.'

Werner agonized over his reply. 'I can't, my friend. I'm with him.'

'Oh, my God! So, I'm on my own, am I? It's not right, is it? Gentlemen !'

Musya took a step forward, and spoke softly. 'Come on. You come with me.'

Gypsy Mike recoiled with a wild glare, rolling the whites of his eyes. 'You?'

'Yes.'

'Look at you . . . slip of a girl . . . aren't you scared? Might be better off on my own. Forget it.'

'No, I'm not scared.'

He gave his wide grin. 'Look at you . . . and I'm a real villain . . . you must be feeling queasy . . . If you are, I'd be better on my own. Won't hold it against you.'

Musya said nothing. In the thin light of early dawn, her face looked pale and mysterious. Then she went straight up to Gypsy Mike, put both hands around his neck and gave him a firm kiss on the lips. He took her by the shoulders with his fingers, pushed her away at arm's length, and gave her another shake. Then, slobbering out loud with emotion, he kissed her on the lips, nose and eyes.

'Come on, then!'

Suddenly the nearest soldier seemed to reel back, and his hands opened up, dropping his gun. But instead of bending down to pick it up, he stood still and hesitated for a moment, made a sharp turn and ran off like a blind man towards the woods and the untrodden snow.

‘Where are you off to?’ whispered his fellow soldier, frightened. ‘Stop!’

But the first man kept on, wading silently through the deep snow. He must have tripped over something because then he fell facedown in the snow with his arms flailing. He just lay there.

‘Pick your gun up, birdbrain, or I’ll do it for you,’ said Gypsy Mike ominously. ‘Don’t you know what duty is?’

The little lanterns were busy again. Werner and Yanson were next in line.

‘Goodbye, sir,’ said Gypsy Mike in a loud voice. ‘We’ll know each other in the next world. Don’t ignore me when you see me. And bring me a drink of water. It’s hot where I’m going.’

‘Goodbye.’

‘I don’t want,’ said Yanson.

But Werner took him by the hand, and the Estonian managed a few steps on his own before ostentatiously coming to a halt and throwing himself down on the snow. They bent over him, pulled him to his feet and carried him along; he put up only a feeble struggle against the hands that were holding him. Why wasn’t he screaming? He had probably forgotten that he still had a voice.

Again the little lanterns with their yellow light stopped all movement.

‘Oh well, Musechka, that means I’m on my own,’ said Tanya Kovalchuk sadly. ‘We’ve lived together, but here we are . . .’

‘Tanechka, my dear friend . . .’

But Gypsy Mike made an emotional intervention. Holding Musya’s hand, as if he was frightened of her being taken away from him, he spoke quickly, spelling things out. ‘Oh miss, you can manage on your own. You’re a pure soul. You can go wherever you want without anybody else. Do you see? I can’t. I’m a villain . . . know what I mean? I can’t do it on my own. They’re going to say, “You’re a murderer - where do you think you’re off to?” I’ve done the lot - even horsestealing, for God’s sake. But going with her . . . well, it’s like being with a child. See what I mean?’

‘Yes, I do see. Go on then . . . Musechka, one last kiss . . .’

‘Yes, don’t forget the kissing,’ Gypsy Mike said, encouraging the two women. ‘It’s your thing. Got to say goodbye, and get it right.’

Musya and Gypsy Mike moved off together. She, the woman, proceeded with great care, holding her skirts off the ground as always; he, the man, kept tight hold of her, moving forward cautiously, feeling the way with his foot as he walked her to her death.

The lights had stopped moving. Tanya Kovalchuk was surrounded by empty silence. The soldiers kept quiet - grey figures in the soft, uncoloured light of early day.

‘I’m the only one left,’ said Tanya suddenly, with a sigh. ‘Seryozha’s dead. Werner’s dead, and Vassily. Only me left. Soldier boys, all soldier boys, and me on my own. Only me to go . . .’

The sun was coming up over the sea.

The bodies were carefully stowed in boxes. And driven away. With their elongated necks, savagely bulging eyes and swollen blue tongues protruding like ghastly, unidentifiable flowers from lips flecked with bloody foam, the corpses came cruising back along the road they had followed when they had walked there, still alive. And the springtime snow was just as soft and scented; and the springtime air was just as fresh and keen. One black thing stood out in the snow, wet and trampled - Sergey’s lost galosh.

And this was how people welcomed the rising sun.

我为什么如此智慧

我的此在生命的幸福及其独一无二性，也许就在于它的厄运：用谜语形式来表达，作为我的父亲，我已经死了，而作为我的母亲，我还活着，而且将衰老。这种双重的来源，仿佛来自生命阶梯的最高一级和最低一级，既是颓废者又是开端——这一点，要是有什么意思的话，那就是说明了那种也许使我卓然超群的对于生命总体问题的中立性、无偏袒性。对于升起和没落的征兆，我具有一种比人们向来拥有的更为精细的嗅觉，在这方面我是卓越的教师——我知道两者，我就是这两者。——我父亲三十六岁就去世了，他柔弱、可亲而病恹恹的，就像一个注定要一味匆匆消逝的人——与其说他是生命本身，还不如说是一种对生命的善意回忆。在我父亲生命衰落的同一年，我的生命也开始衰落了：三十六岁时，我的生命力降到了最低点——我还活着，却看不到离我三步远的东西。当时——那是1879年——我辞去了在巴塞尔大学的教授职务，整个夏天就像一个幽灵般活着，住在圣莫里兹，冬天则住在瑙姆堡。那是我生命中最暗无天日的时光。那是我最低潮的时期，《漫游者及其影子》就是在此间写成的。无疑地，当时我认为自己就是幽灵了……下一个冬天，也就是我在热那亚的第一个冬天，差不多由一种血液和肌肉上的极度贫乏而引起的轻松愉快和超凡脱俗，使我创作了《曙光》一书。在我身上，精神的完全明亮和喜悦，乃至精神的繁茂兴旺，不仅与最深刻的生理虚弱一致，而且甚至与一种极端的痛苦感一致。持续三天的头疼连同非常艰辛的咳痰带来了种种折磨——置身其中，我拥有了一种卓越的辩证法家的清晰性，并且十分冷静地深思了各种事物，而在比较健康的情况下，我对于这些事物就不是一个善于攀登者，就不够精巧、不够冷静了。我的读者们也许知道，我何以把辩证法视为颓废的征兆，例如最著名的个案：苏格拉底的案例。所有对理智的病态干扰，甚至发烧引起的半昏迷状态，至今对我来说都是完全陌生的东西。对于它们的本性和频率，我唯有通过博学的途径才能加以了解。我的血液流得缓慢。从来没有人能够在我身上发现发烧现象。有一位医生，他在相当长一段时间里把我当作神经病患者来治疗，最后甚至说道：“不！您的神经没什么，我3自己倒是神经质了。”任何一种局部的退行性病变都是完全不可证实的，没有任何器质性的胃病，尽管由于全身疲惫，确实存在着胃部系统的极度衰弱。眼疾亦然，不时接近失明的危险，这只是结果而不是原因：以至于随着生命力的每一次增长，视力也重又改善

了。漫长的，过于漫长的岁月对我来说就意味着康复——遗憾的是，它也意味着复发、衰落，以及一种颓废的周期。尽管如此，我需要说明我对颓废问题是有经验的吗？我前前后后地解读了这些问题。即便那种把握和理解的艺术，那种对于细微差别的感触，那种“明察秋毫”的心理学，以及我通常独具的东西，都是在当时学会的，是那个时代真正的馈赠——那是一切都在其中变得精细化的时代，无论是观察本身还是一切观察的器官。从病人的角度出发去看比较健康的概念和价值，又反过来根据丰富生命的充盈和自信来探视颓废本能的隐秘工作——这乃是我最长久的训练，是我最本真的经验，如果说是某个方面的训练和经验，那我在这方面就是大师了。我现在已经胜券在握，我有能力转换视角：这是首要的原因，说明也许唯有对我来说，一种价值的重估竟是可能的。

二

因为，除了我是一个颓废者不说，我也是它的对立面。我为此提出的证据之一是，针对那些恶劣的状态，我总是本能地选择恰当的手段，而自在的颓废者总是选择对自己不利的手段。作为至高无上者，我是健康的；作为隐僻一隅，作为特性，我是颓废者。那种绝对的孤独和摆脱惯常情况和任务的力量，对我自身的强制力，不再照料自身，不进餐，不就医——这些都透露出对于急需之事的绝对的本能确信。我对自身负责，我使自己恢复健康：这方面的前提是——任何一个生理学家都会承认这一点——人们根本上是健康的。一个典型的病态之人是不会康复的，更不能自我康复了；相反，对一个典型的健康人来说，患病甚至可能是一种有力的兴奋剂，一种促使更丰富地生活的兴奋剂。现在，在我看来，那个漫长的疾病时期实际上就是这样：我仿佛重新发现了生命，也包括我自身，我品尝了一切美好的甚至微小的事物，那是别人不能轻易品尝到的——我从自己求健康的意志、生命意志中做出我的哲学……因为人们要注意：我生命力最低下的年头也就是我停止成为悲观主义者的时候：我自我恢复的本能不允许我有一种贫困和沮丧的哲学……人们到底要从哪里识别发育良好的状态呢？一个发育良好的人使我们的感官适意：他是由一块坚硬又柔润、芳香袭人的木头雕成的。他中意的是有益于他健康的東西；一旦超出了这个有益性尺度，他的乐意，他的快乐就终止了。他猜到了对付损害良药，他充分利用恶劣的偶然事件的好处；凡是不能置他于死地的，都能使他变得更强壮。他本能地从自己所见、所闻、所体验的一切中搜集自己的全部：他就是一个选择原则，他淘汰了许多东西。无论是与书本、人打交道，还是与自然风光打交道，他始终都在自己的团伙中：他通过选择、许可，信赖而有所尊重。他对于形形色色的刺激反应迟钝，带着那种由长期的谨慎和蓄意的骄傲养成的慢条斯理——他检验正在临近的刺激，他远不能直面这种刺激。他既不

相信“灾祸”，也不相信“罪责”：他能对付自己，也能对付他人，他善于遗忘——他十分强壮，足以使一切都必然 为他带来最佳的东西。——好吧，那我就是颓废者的对立面：因为，上面我描写的正是我自己。

三

拥有这样一位父亲，我视之为一大特权：我父亲曾经对农民们布道——因为他在阿尔滕堡宫生活了若干年，最后几年成了牧师——那些农民说，他看起来很像一位天使。——而由此我便触及了种族问题。我是一位纯正的波兰贵族，不掺点滴不良血统，是完全没有德国血统的。如果我要寻找自己最深刻的对立面，那无法估量的本能共性，那么，我总是发现我母亲和我妹妹——相信自己与这等暴民有亲属关系，这或许是对我自己神性的亵渎了。我从自己母亲和妹妹这边得到的待遇，直到眼下为止，都会引起我不可名状的恐惧：在此工作的是一台令人恐惧的完美机器，带着一种对于人们能够使我血淋淋受伤的時刻的可靠把握——在我至高的時刻里……因为这里没有任何抵御有毒害虫的力量……生理上的同时发生使得这样一种先定的不和谐成为可能……但我得承认，对于我真正深邃的 思想“永恒轮回”最深刻地抗辩和反驳的，始终是我母亲和妹妹。——不过，即便作为波兰人，我也是一个非同寻常的返祖现象。人们或许得后退几百年，方能纯粹本能地按照它所表现出来的样子，找到这个世上存在过的最高贵的种族。我反对今天被称为高贵的一切，一种绝对的出众高雅之感——我不会给予那个年轻的德国皇帝当我的马车夫的荣誉。有一种唯一的情形，在其中我会承认自己的同类——我怀着深深的感恩之心承认之。柯西玛·瓦格纳女士绝对是最高贵的人物；而且——毫无表示总归是过了 [1]——我要说，理查德·瓦格纳绝对是与我最近的人……剩下的就是沉默了……关于亲缘程度的全部流行概念都是一种无法超越的生理学上的荒谬。教皇今天还在与这种荒谬做交易呢。人们与自己的父母最不亲近，这或许是与自己的父母亲近的卑劣行径的极端标志。高等人物有自己无限深远的渊源，着眼于高等人物，不得不做最长久的收集、储存和积累。伟大的 个体乃是最老的个体：我理解不了，但恺撒可能是我的父亲——或者亚历山大，这个真正的狄奥尼索斯……就在我写下这些文字的当儿，刚好邮局给我捎来一个狄奥尼索斯的脑袋……

四

我从来都不了解这种对付我的艺术——这也要归功于我那无与伦比的父亲——即便在我看来这是具有重大价值的。我甚至从来不曾激起过人们对我的反感——不论看起来这是多么非基督教。人们不妨来

回地反复检查我的生活，除了那唯一的例外，人们在其中发现不了任何踪迹，可以表明有人曾对我心怀恶意——相反，也许可以发现过多善3意的踪迹……有些人让人人都大感麻烦，而我对于这些人的经验也毫无例外地向他们表露了好意；我能驯服每一头熊，我能使小丑们变得不失庄重。我在巴塞尔教育机构教授过高年级的希腊文，在那七 years 里，我未曾乘机对学生施加过什么处罚；在我这里，最懒惰的学生也变得勤奋了。我总能对付偶然事件；我必须能够即兴控制自己。无论何种乐器，不论它多么走调，哪怕可能像“人”这种乐器那样走调——倘若我不能成功地在它上面奏出某种动听的乐章，那么我一定是生病了。而且，我是多么经常地从这些“乐器”本身那里听说，它们还从未听过自己有这般声音……也许最美好的就属于那位不幸英年早逝的海因里希·冯·斯泰因了。有一次，根据小心取得的许可，此人在塞尔斯-马利亚待了三天，向每个人申明，他并不是因为恩加丁而来的。这位杰出的人物，以一位普鲁士容克地主的全部狂热的单纯和天真，陷入瓦格纳的泥潭中了（此外还有杜林 [2] 的泥潭！）。在这三天当中，他犹如经历了一场自由风暴的改造，就像一个人突然升上他的高空，振翅翱翔。当时我总是对他说，这是高山上的好空气带来的，人人都有此种感觉，要不然，我们不是白白地待在高于拜罗伊特 6000 英尺 [3] 的地方了嘛——但他却不愿意相信我的话……尽管如此，如果说人们对我做了一些大大小小的坏事，那么，个中原因并不是“意志”，至少不是恶意 [4]；而毋宁说，我抱怨的——我刚刚指出了这一点——乃是善意 [5]，那种给我的生命造成了不小祸害的善意。我的经验赋予我一种权利，让我从根本上怀疑所谓的“无私的”冲动，怀疑全部乐于助人的“博爱”。这种“博爱”在我看来本身就是虚弱，就是无能于抵抗刺激的个案——唯有在颓废者那里，同情才意味着一种德性。我谴责同情者，他们会轻易失掉对于间距的羞耻感、敬畏感和敏锐感，同情一转眼就会散发出群氓的气息，并且看似会与恶劣的举止混为一谈——这种同情之手有时可能径直灾难性地深入到一种伟大的命运之中，深入到一种饱受创伤的孤独之中，深入到一种对于深重罪责的优先权之中。对同情的克服，我把它当作高贵的德性：我曾经虚构了一种情形作为“查拉图斯特拉的诱惑”，在此情形中，一种尖厉的呼救声传到那里，同情犹如一种最终的罪恶向他袭来，想使他背弃自身。在这里保持主人地位，保持其崇高使命的纯洁性，摆脱十分低级和短视的原动力（它们是在所谓无私的行动中起作用的），这乃是查拉图斯特拉要经受的一种考验，也许是最后的考验——是他真正的力量证明……

还有在另一点上，我也只不过是父亲，可以说就是他过早去世后的生命的延续。如同每一个从来不曾同类中生活，并且对于“报复”概念就像对于“同等权利”概念一般充耳不闻的人，当我碰上一件小小的蠢事或者很大的蠢事时，我也一样不允许自己有任何防护

手段、任何保护措施——多么合理啊，也不允许有任何防卫、任何“辩护”。我的报复方式就是，尽可能快速地为这种愚蠢送上一种聪明：这样，人们兴许还能对之做一点弥补。用比喻方式来讲：为了摆脱一个辛酸的故事，我会送上一罐果子酱……有人一味要对我使坏，我会“报复”之，那是人们有把握的：我不久就会找到一个机会，向“作恶者”表示感谢（甚至对恶行表示感谢）——或者向他请求 某些东西，这可能比给予某些东西更友好……我也觉得，最粗野的语言、最粗野的书信，都比沉默更良性、更正派。那些保持沉默者，差不多总是缺乏心灵的精细和谦恭；沉默乃是一种抗辩，忍气吞声必然弄出一种坏性格——甚至会败坏胃口。一切沉默者都是消化不良的。——你会看到，我并不想贬低粗野，它绝对是最有人情味的反抗形式，在现代的柔弱化过程中，它是我们的首要德性之一。——如若有人足够粗野，那么，即便有不公和失当也是一种幸福。一个来到人间的上帝，根本上无非是要来行3不公的——不是承受惩罚，而是担当罪责，方才堪称神性。

六

摆脱怨恨，澄清怨恨——有谁知道即便在这个方面，我也应当多么感谢我那长期的疾病啊！问题并不那么简单：人们必须从力量出发，也从虚弱出发，才能对之有所体验。如若一定要提出某个对付疾病、对付虚弱的东西，那就是这样一点：在其中，一种真正的救治本能，也就是人身上的防御本能和战斗本能，会变得脆弱而松软。人们知道摆脱不了什么，人们知道对付不了什么，人们知道拒斥不了什么——一切皆会伤人。人和事紧紧纠缠，体验深深的刺痛，记忆是一道化脓的伤口。疾病本就是一种怨恨。——对此，患病者只有一剂良药，我称之为俄罗斯式的宿命论，那种毫无反抗的宿命论——一个俄罗斯士兵觉得远征太艰苦，最后就怀着这种宿命论想法躺在雪地里了，再也不接受、保存、吸收任何东西，竟再也没有任何反应了……这种宿命论并非始终只是赴死的勇气，其伟大的理性在最性命攸关的情况下具有保存生命的作用，那是新陈代谢的降低，是新陈代谢的减缓，是一种要求冬眠的意志。以这个逻辑继续往前走几步，就有了会在墓穴里躺上几个星期的苦行僧……因为当人们有所反应时，他会过快地精疲力竭，所以他再也不能反应了：这就是逻辑。而且，没有什么东西比怨恨情绪能更快地将人烧个精光。烦恼、病态的脆弱、无能于复仇、欲望、复仇的渴望、各式各样的荼毒——对于衰竭者来说，这确实是最不利的反应方式：神经力量的快速消耗，有害分泌物的病态提高，例如胆汁流入胃中，都是以此为条件的。怨恨乃是病者的禁物本身——是他的恶；遗憾的是，也是他极自然的癖好。——那个深邃的生理学家佛陀掌握了这一点。他的“宗教”，我们最好称之为养生学，才不至于把自己与像基督教这样可怜的事物混为一谈；这

种“宗教”的效果取决于对怨恨的战胜：使心灵摆脱怨恨——此乃走向康复的第一步。“以怨报怨，怨无尽头；以德报怨，怨始终止”，这是佛祖教义之始——并非道德如是说，而是生理学如是说。——由虚弱产生的怨恨对虚弱者本身损害最大——而在另一种情形下，前提是有一种丰裕的天性，这时候，怨恨就成了一种多余的情感，对这种情感的控制差不多就是精力丰裕的证明了。谁若知道我的哲学以何种严肃态度向复仇感和同情感宣战，乃至与“自由意志”学说做斗争——与基督教的斗争只不过是其中的一个个案而已——他就会理解，为什么我恰恰要在这里阐明个人的态度，我在实践中的本能可靠性。在颓废时期，我不允许自己有这些有害的情感；一旦生命又变得足够丰裕和高扬时，我还是不允许自己有这些情感，而是要把它们抑制起来。我上面讲过的“俄罗斯式的宿命论”，在我身上是这样表现出来的，即：多年以来，我顽强地固守那些偶然出现的几乎不堪忍受的环境、地点、居所和社交圈——这种做法胜于对它们的改变，胜于对它们的可变性的感受——胜于对它们的反抗……当时，凡在此宿命论方面干扰我的，粗暴地把我唤醒的，我都对之极其生气——实际上，这在每一次都是有致命危险的。——把自身当作一种天命，而不愿意“改变”自己——在此类状态下，这就是伟大的理性本身了。

七

另一件事就是战斗。按我的本性来讲，我是好战的。攻击乃是我的本能之一。能够成为敌人、成为敌人——这也许是以一种强壮的天性为前提的，无论如何，它都取决于每一种强壮的天性。强壮的天性需要反抗，因此它寻求反抗：侵略性的激情同样必然地属于强者，正如复仇感和同情感必然地属于弱者。举例来说，女人是有强烈报复欲的，这是由女人的虚弱所决定的，正如她对于外来困苦是十分敏感的。——攻击者的强壮是在他必需的敌对方中获得一种尺度的；每一种增长都是在对更强大的敌人——或者难题——的寻求中显露出来的，因为一个好战的哲学家也要向难题挑战，进行决斗。其使命并不是从根本上控制反抗和阻力，而是要战胜那些人，我们必须投入自己全部的力量、韧性和武艺才能制服的那些人——也就是战胜旗鼓相当的敌人……势均力敌——此乃正派的决斗的第一条件。当人们蔑视敌人时，就不可能开战；当人们发号施令，视某物比自己低下时，人们就不必开战了。——我的战斗实践可以概括为四个定律：第一，我只攻击那些胜利的东西——可能我会等待，直到它们获胜。第二，我只在找不到盟友、孤立无援的时候才攻击这些东西——在只会让自己出丑而大丢面子的时候才攻击这些东西……我从未公开采取一个不让自己出丑的步骤：这是我的公正行为的标准。第三，我从不搞人身攻击——我只把个人当作一个有力的放大镜，用它来弄清楚某个一般的，但潜滋暗长的、难以把握的危急状态。我就是这样来攻击大卫·

施特劳斯 [6] 的，更确切地讲，我攻击的是德国“教化”方面的一本老朽之书的成功——我当场揭穿了这种教化……我也是这样来攻击瓦格纳的，更准确地讲，我攻击的是我们“文化”的虚伪，我们“文化”的本能混杂，后者把精巧者与富有者、迟暮者与伟大者混为一谈。第四，我只攻击那些排除了任何个人差异、没有任何恶劣经验之背景的事物。相反，攻击在我这里乃是善意的证明，或许也是感恩的证明。我把我的名字与某个东西、某个人的名字联系起来，以此来表达我的尊重和赞扬：赞成抑或反对——这在我看来都是一样的。如果说我对基督教宣战，那是我有权这样做，因为在这个方面，我还未尝经历过不幸和阻碍——最严肃的基督徒也总是对我表示了友善。我本人绝对是基督教的死敌，我决不至于把千百年来厄运添加到个人身上。

八

我胆敢再指出自己天性中的最后一个特征么？这个特征使我在与他人打交道时麻烦不小、困难不少。我有一种完全不可名状的清洁本能的敏感，以至于我能在生理上感知到——嗅到——每个心灵的切近之处，或者——我该怎么来说呢？每个心灵最内在的东西，每个心灵的“内脏”……以此敏感，我就有了心理上的触角，借以触摸和掌握任何秘密：有些人物骨子里有许多隐蔽的污垢，也许是由坏血统决定的，但通过教育得到了掩饰，我几乎一接触就能把它们看清楚。如果说我正确进行了观察，那么，我的清洁感所不能忍受的这些人物，他们本身也会感受到我的厌恶的谨慎，而他们并没有因此变得芳香一些……正如我向来已经习惯了的——我对于自己的一种极端的纯净要求，乃是我的此在的前提条件，在不干净的情况下我会丧命的——可以说我不断地在水中，在某种完全透明、光亮的元素中游泳、沐浴和嬉戏。这就使得我在与他人的交往中受了不小的耐心考验；我的人性的不在于同情人的存在方式，而是在于忍受我对人的同情……我的人性的乃是一种持久的自我克制。——然而我需要孤独，也就是说，我需要康复、回归自我，需要呼吸一种自由而轻松活泼的空气……我的整部《查拉图斯特拉如是说》就是一首赞美孤独的酒神颂歌，或者，如果人们理解了我，就是一首赞美清洁的酒神颂歌……幸好它不是赞美纯粹的愚蠢的。——富有色彩感的人会把这本书称为金刚石般。——对人类、对“痞子”的厌恶，始终是我最大的危险……你们愿意来听听查拉图斯特拉谈论厌恶之解脱时所讲的话吗？

然则我出了事？我如何来解脱厌恶呢？谁使我的眼睛变得年轻了？我怎样飞到了那个高处，那个不再有流氓痞子坐在井泉旁的高处？

难道是我的厌恶本身为我提供了飞翔的翅膀和预感泉源的力量吗？真的，我必须飞到最高处，才能重新找到欢乐的源泉！

呵，弟兄们，我找到了它！在这里，在最高处，欢乐的源泉向我涌流！而且有一种生命，没有一个流氓痞子共饮之！

欢乐之泉呵，你几乎涌来得太猛烈！而且，因为你想要把杯子注满，你常常又把杯子倒空！

我还必须学会更谦卑地接近你：我的心太过猛烈地向你喷涌——

我的心啊，我的夏天就在我心上燃烧，这个短促、炎热、忧郁、极度快乐的夏天：我的夏天之心是多么渴望你的清凉！

我那春天踌躇的悲伤过去了！我那六月雪花的恶毒过去了！我已经完全成了夏天和夏天的正午！

一个至高的夏天，带着清凉的泉水和福乐的宁静：呵，我的朋友们，来吧，让这份宁静变得更福乐！

因为这就是我们的 高空和我们的家乡：对于所有不洁者及其渴望来说，我们在此居住得太高太陡峭了。

朋友们啊，只管把你们纯洁的眼光投向我那欢乐的源泉！它怎会因此变得浑浊呢？它当以它的 纯洁对你们微笑。

我们在未来树上建筑我们的窝巢，而鹰当为我们这些孤独者叼来食物！

真的，没有那些不洁者可以分享的食物！他们会误以为自己吞了火焰，烧了自己的嘴！

真的，我们在此根本没有为不洁者们准备住所！对于他们的肉体和精神来说，我们的幸福或许就是一个冰洞！

我们愿意像狂风一般生活在他们之上，与鹰为邻，与雪为邻，与太阳为邻——狂风就是这样生活的。

有朝一日，犹如一阵风，我还要吹到他们中间，以我的精神夺取他们精神的呼吸——我的未来就愿意如此。

真的，查拉图斯特拉乃是席卷一切低地的狂风；对于自己的敌人 and 所有吐唾沫者，他给出这样的忠告：“当心呵，不要逆风而唾！”……

我为什么如此聪明

——我为什么知道得多一些呢？我究竟为什么如此聪明？我从未思索过那些不成问题的问题——我未曾挥霍过自己。——例如，我不是根据经验来认识真正的宗教困难的。我完全没有觉察到在何种意义上我会是“有罪的”。同样的，我缺乏关于一种内疚或良心谴责的可靠标准：根据人们这方面所听说的东西，我觉得一种内疚并不是什么值得重视的东西……我不想事后对一种行动弃之不顾，我或许偏爱使坏的结局、结果从根本上摆脱价值问题。面对坏的结局，人们甚至太容易丧失掉对于所作所为的正确眼光：内疚在我看来是一种“坏眼光”。某个失败的东西，正因为它失败了，所以才更应该受到尊重——这更合乎我的道德观。——“上帝”“灵魂不朽”“拯救”“彼岸”，纯属我不予关注，也没有为之消耗过时间的概念，即便在我孩童时代也没有——也许在这方面我从来就不曾有足够的孩子气？——我完全没有把无神论认作结果，更没有把它认作事件：就我来说，它是由本能而来的，这不言而喻。我太好奇、太成问题、太傲慢，以至于不会让自己将就于一个粗野的答案。上帝是一个粗野的答案，是对我们思想家的一种不体贴——根本上甚至只是对我们的一种粗野的禁令：你们不该有思想！我感兴趣的是一个完全不同的问题，“人类的得救”更多地系于这个问题，而不是系于某种神学家的稀奇古怪：那就是营养问题。方便起见，人们可以这样来表述这个问题：“为了达到你力量的最大值，以及文艺复兴的理性意义上的德性、非伪善的德性的最大值，你应该如何进食呢？”——在这方面，我自己的经验糟糕至极；我感到诧异，这么迟才听说这个问题，这么迟才从此类经验中学会了“理性”。唯有我们一文不值的德国教养——它的“唯心主义”——才在某种程度上向我说明了，为什么我恰恰在这方面落伍到了“极点”。这种“教养”自始就教导我们彻底无视实在性，去追逐那些彻底成问题的所谓“理想的”目标，例如一种所谓的“古典教养”——仿佛从一开始就注定要把“古典的”和“德国的”在一个概念中统一起来！更有甚者，这效果有点搞笑——人们来设想一下一个“有古典教养的”莱比锡人吧！——实际上，直到我十分老成的年纪，我一直都吃得很不好——用道德说法，就是“无个人的”“忘我的”“无私的”，对厨师和其他基督徒同人无不益处。举例说，通过莱比锡的烹调，同时加上我最初对叔本华的研读（1865年），我十分严肃地否定了自己的“求生意志”。要达到营养不良的目的，同时还要把自己的肠胃败坏掉——在我看来，

莱比锡的烹调能令人惊奇地、出色地解决这个难题。（有人说在这方面，1866年出现了一个转折。）可是，一般德国烹调——莫非它不要负一点儿责任！饭前3汤，在十六世纪的意大利烹调书上，它还被叫作德意志风格 [7]；煮得烂熟的肉，做得又腻又稠的蔬菜；甜食蜕变为硬邦邦的镇纸！如若人们竟还算上老德国人，绝不只是老3德国人的简直野兽般的饭后狂饮需要，那么，人们也就能理解德国精神的起源了——源自郁闷的内脏……德国精神乃是一种消化障碍，它对付不了什么。——与德国的饮食相比，甚至与法国的饮食相比，英国的饮食乃是一种“向自然的回归”，亦即回归到原始吃法；但即便这种饮食也深深地违逆我自己的本能；在我看来，它是给了精神一双笨重的脚——英国女人的脚……最佳的烹调乃是皮埃蒙特的烹调。——酒精对我是有害的，一天一杯葡萄酒或啤酒就完全够了，就足以把我的生命搞成“苦海”——在慕尼黑生活着我的对跖者。假如说我明白这一点稍稍迟了些，那么，真正说来我从儿童时代起就对此有体验了。少年时我相信，喝酒与抽烟一样开始只是年轻男人的一种虚荣，后来就成了一种坏习惯。也许，这个酸涩的判断也要部分地归咎于瑙姆堡的葡萄酒。相信葡萄酒令人兴奋，那我必定是一个基督徒了，即是相信恰恰对我来说成为一种荒谬的东西。足够稀奇的是，小小几罐高度稀释的酒会使情绪极端变坏，而在这种可能情况下，如若喝的是烈3酒，那我就差不多会成为水手了。少年时代的我在这方面就有过勇猛表现。通宵写一篇拉丁文的长文，并且还要把它誊清一遍，在文笔方面满怀雄心，要模仿我的榜样撒路斯提乌斯 [8] 的严谨和简洁，把若干杯烈性的格罗格酒 [9] 泼向我的拉丁文；早在我做声誉卓著的舒尔普福塔中学学生时，这种做法就根本不会与我的生理相冲突，也许也不会与撒路斯提乌斯的生理相冲突——然而却有悖于声誉卓著的舒尔普福塔中学……后来，接近生命之半，我确实越来越严厉地反对任何“含酒精的”饮料：我，一个基于经验的反素食主义者，完全像使我发生转变的理查德·瓦格纳一样，不知道充分严肃地劝告所有较有才智的 [10] 人无条件地戒酒。有水3就够了……我偏爱那些地方，在那里，人们处处有机会从潺潺清泉里汲水（尼斯、都灵、塞尔斯）；一小瓶水伴随着我，犹如一只狗尾随着我。酒后吐真言（In vino veritas） [11]：看来，在这里关于“真理”的概念，我又与所有人大不相同了——在我这里，精神漂浮在水3上……我的道德观中还有若干个指示。一顿饱餐比一次小食更容易消化。整个胃都活动起来，这是良好消化的首要条件。人们必须知道自己胃的大小。基于同样的理由，要劝告大家勿吃费时的膳食，我称之为中断的献祭节，那种客饭上的膳食。——勿吃正餐间的零食，不喝咖啡：咖啡是令人阴郁的。茶3只有在早间才是有益的。少一点儿，但要浓；茶只要淡一点儿，就很有害，会使人整天病恹恹的。在这方面，人人都有自己的尺度，往往处于极狭隘和极细微的界限内。在一种让人十分厌烦的气候当中，不宜

一上来就喝茶，应该在喝茶前一个小时就开始喝一杯脱油的浓可可。——尽可能少坐3；别相信任何不是在野外、在自由运动中产生的思想，在这种思想中连肌肉也欢庆不起来。一切偏见皆来自内脏。——我已经说过一回，坐功乃是违逆圣灵的真正罪恶。

二

与营养问题紧密联系在一起的是地方 和气候 问题。没有人能随意地四海为家；而且，谁若必须完成那些向他全部精力挑战的伟大使命，那么，他在这方面甚至只有一个十分狭隘的选择。气候对于新陈代谢的影响，它的阻碍，它的加速，到了这样一个地步，以至于在地方和气候上的一个差错，不仅可能使人疏离于自己的使命，而且还可能对他隐瞒这种使命：他从来都看不到这种使命。在他身上从来都没有足够多的动物元气，让他获得那种涌入至高精神领域的自由，并且让人们认识到：这事 只有我能做到……一种还十分渺小的内脏惰性成了坏习惯后，就完全足以把一种天才变成某个平庸的东西，某个“德国式的东西”；光是德国的气候就足以使强壮的甚至英武的内脏沮丧不堪了，新陈代谢的速度与精神脚步3的灵活性或迟钝性密切相关；“精神”本身其实只是这种新陈代谢的方式之一。我们可以罗列出有卓越才智的人出现和出现过的地方，在那里诙谐、精巧、恶毒属于幸福，天才几乎都必然要以此为家：那些地方全都有一种特别干燥的空气。巴黎、普罗旺斯、佛罗伦萨、耶路撒冷、雅典——这些地名证明了某个东西：天才都取决于 干燥的空气，取决于清澈的天空——也就是说，取决于快速的新陈代谢，取决于总是一再能为自己输送大量的力甚至巨量的力的可能性。我还清楚地记得一种情况，一位生性优秀而自由的人物，只是由于缺乏气候方面的本能之精细，就变得褊狭、躲躲闪闪，变成了专家和牢骚满腹者。倘若不是疾病迫使我变得理性，迫使我去思索实在中的理性，那么，我自己最后也可能沦于这种情况中。如今，基于长期的训练，我能在自己身上解读出气候和气象起源的影响，就像从一个十分精细而可靠的仪器中解读出来；光是一次短途旅行，比如从都灵到米兰，我就能从自己的生理上推算出空气湿度的变化——我于是不无恐惧地想到这样一个可怕的事实，即：除了最近十年，那有生命危险的岁月，我的生命总是只在一些错误的、于我简直是禁地的地方度过的。瑙姆堡，舒尔普福塔，整个图林根，莱比锡，巴塞尔——许多地方都是我生理上的不祥之地。如果我对自己的整个童年和青年压根儿没有什么好的回忆，那么，在此提出所谓“道德的”原因或许是一种愚蠢——诸如无可争议地缺乏充足的社交：因为这种缺乏至今一仍其旧，但未曾阻碍我成为快乐而勇敢的。相反，生理方面的无知——那种该死的“唯心论” [12] ——是我生命中真正的厄运，是我生命中多余的和愚蠢的东西，从中长不出任何东西，对此没有任何平衡、任何抵消。根据这种“唯心论”的后果，我为

自己解释了一切失误，一切本能的大迷误和“谦逊”使我偏离了自己生命的使命，例如，我成了语文学家——为何不是至少做个医生或者别的某种启人眼目的东西呢？在巴塞尔时 [13]，我的全部精神食谱，包括白天的安排，是一种完全无意义的对超常精力的滥用，而没有以某种方式弥补消耗的力量，甚至也没有关于消耗和补偿的考虑。没有任何更精细的利己私心，没有某种命令式本能的任何保护，与任何人都等量齐观，那是一种“无私”，一种对自身与他人间距离的遗忘——这是我永远不能宽宥自己的。当我几乎走到终点时，或者说，因为我几乎走到了终点，我开始反思我生命中这种基本的非理性——那种“唯心论”。我的疾病才把我带向理性。

三

营养的选择，气候和地方的选择——第三条则是休养方式的选择，这一条是人们绝对不能弄错的。即使在这里，根据一种精神借以变得独特的程度，这种精神所被允许的东西，亦即对它来说有益的东西的界限，也是狭隘的，是相当狭隘的。就我的情形而言，一切阅读都是休养，因此都属于使我摆脱自己、让我漫游于陌生科学和陌生心灵之中的东西——属于我不再当真的东西。阅读恰恰使我从自己的严肃中得到休息。在我埋头工作的时候，人们在我这儿是看不到什么图书的：我要提防有人在我近处说话，抑或竟至于思考。而且这其实就是阅读了……人们真的已经观察到，在那种深度的张力中（孕育使精神，根本上就是使整个机体注定处于这种张力中），偶然事件和任何一种外来刺激都会产生过于猛烈的作用，过于深刻的“打击”？人们必须尽可能地回避偶然性和外来刺激；一种自我隔离属于精神孕育的头等的本能之聪明。我会允许一种异己的思想偷偷地翻过墙头吗？——而且这其实就是阅读了……在劳动和收获的季节之后，接着就是休养生息的时候了：来吧，你们这些惬意的书，你们这些富有才智的书，你们这些聪颖的书！——那是些德语书吗？……我必须回想半年前，当时我随手抓了一本书。那是一本什么书呢？——是维克多·布罗沙尔 [14] 的一项杰出研究，书名为《希腊怀疑论者》，在其中，我的《拉尔修》一文也得到了良好的利用。怀疑论者，乃是两面的甚至多面的哲学家族群当中唯一值得敬重的类型！通常我几乎总是乞灵于同一一些书，根本上量不在多，恰好对我来说是得到证明的书。阅读繁多杂乱，这也许不是我的风格——一个阅览室会使我生病的。爱好繁多而杂乱，也不是我的风格吧。我的本能中更多地包含着对新书的谨慎态度，甚至于敌视态度，而不是“宽容”、“宽宏大量”，以及别一种“博爱”……说到底，只有少量几个早年的法国人，是我总是一再要重提的：我只相信法国的教育，并把在欧洲通常被叫做“教育”的一切都看作误解，更不用说德国的教育了……我在德国碰到的少数几个具有高等教养的个案，全都有法国的渊源，特别是柯西玛·瓦格纳夫人，在

趣味和鉴赏力问题上绝对是我所知道的一流水准。……我不是读帕斯卡，而是爱3帕斯卡，作为基督教最有教益的牺牲品，他是被慢慢杀戮的，先是肉身，后是心理，这种最恐怖、无人道的残暴形式的全部逻辑；在精神上我带有蒙田式的恶作剧，谁知道呢？也许在身体上也有这种恶作剧；我的艺术鉴赏力为莫里哀、高乃依和拉辛等大家辩护，而对莎士比亚这样放荡的天才不免生出愤怒：这到底也并不排除，甚至最近的法国人在我看来也是一个有魅力的上流社会。我完全没有看出来，历史上有哪个世纪像在现在的巴黎一样，人们能淘出如此好奇又如此精明的心理学家，因为数量委实不小，我只好尝试性地列举若干，诸如保罗·布尔热、皮埃尔·洛蒂、吉普、美拉克、阿纳托尔·法朗士、朱尔·勒梅特利 [15] 等先生，或者为强调这个强大种族中的一员，我可以举出一位让我特别喜欢的地道的拉丁人，居伊·德·莫泊桑。私下里说说，我更喜欢这一代人，甚于他们伟大的导师，后者统统被德国哲学败坏掉了，例如丹纳先生，就是被黑格尔败坏掉的，致使他对于伟大人物和伟大时代产生了误解。德国所及之处，文化便受到败坏。战争才“拯救”了法国精神。……司汤达，那是我生命中最美好的偶然事件之一，因为在他身上划时代的一切东西都是偶然地被推到我这里的，而绝不是由人们推荐来的；

这个司汤达是完全不可估量的，以他那心理学家的先见之明，以他那对事实的把握能力，后者能让人想到最伟大事件的来临——根据爪子认出了拿破仑 [16]；最后，并非无关紧要的，作为诚实的无神论者，一个在法国难得的、几乎找不到的种类——普罗斯佩·梅里美的光荣。……也许我自己会嫉妒司汤达？他从我这里拿走了一个最美妙的无神论者的笑话，这笑话原本正是我会讲的：“上帝唯一的抱歉是他并不实存”。……不知在何处，我自己也说过：迄今为止对于人生此在的最大非难是什么？上帝也。……

四

海因里希·海涅给了我一个有关抒情诗人的至高概念。我在千百年来所有王国中徒劳地寻找一种既甜蜜又热烈的音乐。海涅具有那种神性的恶意，没有后者，我是不能设想完美之物的——我评价人类和种族的价值，所持的依据就是他们是否必然地懂得神与萨蒂尔不可分离。——还有，海涅是怎样运用德语的啊！有朝一日，人们终将说，海涅与我绝对是德国语言的头等艺术家——远远地超越了单纯的德国人用德语所做出的全部成就。——我必定与拜伦的曼弗雷德 [17] 极其相似：我在自己身上找到了所有这些深邃之处——我十三岁时就已经能读懂这本著作了。对于那些胆敢当着曼弗雷德的面讲出浮士德的人来说，我无话可说，只能冷眼以对了。德国人是无能于任何“伟大”概念的，舒曼就是一个明证。出于对这位甜腻腻的萨克森人的愤

怒，我专门为《曼弗雷德》谱写了一首相反的序曲，汉斯·冯·比洛 [18] 说过，他从未见过此等乐谱：此乃对欧忒耳珀 [19] 的强奸。——如果我要为莎士比亚寻找我的至高公式，那么，我找到的始终只是这个公式：他构想了恺撒这个类型。人们猜不出此类人物——人们或者就是此类人物，或者不是此类人物。这个伟大的诗人只能根据自己的实在性来创造——乃至到了这样一个地步，即他此后再也受不了自己的作品……当我瞧一眼自己的《查拉图斯特拉如是说》之后，我就会在房间里来回走上半小时，无法控制一种难以忍受的啜泣的痉挛。——我不知道还有什么读物比莎士比亚更令人心碎的了：一个人必须受过多少苦，才至于这样急着当丑角啊！——人们理解哈姆莱特吗？使人发疯的不是怀疑，而是确信……然则人们必须是深刻的，必须是深渊，必须是哲学家，才能有这般感受……我们全都害怕真理……而且我承认：我本能地确定和确信，培根勋爵乃是这种可怕至极的文学的始作俑者、自虐者：美国那些糊涂虫和平庸者的可怜饶舌与我有何相干？但为最强大的幻景实在性所需要的力量，不仅是与最强大的行动之力量、巨大行动之力量、犯罪之力量相合拍的——而且前者是以后者为前提的……我们长期对培根勋爵——从大的字面意义上讲，他是第一位实在论者——了解得不够，以至于不知道他都做了些什么，曾想做些什么，亲身经历了些什么……见鬼去吧，我的批评家先生们！假如我给自己的查拉图斯特拉取了个异样的名字，例如取理查德·瓦格纳之名，那么，恐怕两千年的洞察力也不足以猜出，《人性的，太人性的》的作者竟是查拉图斯特拉的幻影……

五

这里谈到我生命的康复问题，我有必要来说一句，以表达对那件绝对最深刻、最真挚地使我的生命康复的事体的感谢。这件事体毫无疑问就是我与理查德·瓦格纳的亲密交往。我的人际关系的其余部分都是低劣而廉价的；无论如何，我都不想把在特里普森 [20] 的日子从我的生命中抹去，那是信赖、明朗、高雅而意外的日子——有深刻瞬间的日子……我不知道其他人与瓦格纳在一起体验到了什么：我们的天空上从来没有飘过乌云。——而且由此我还要再次提到法国——对瓦格纳信徒以及那一伙人，我没有任何理由，而只剩轻蔑地撇一下嘴角了；那伙人以为，发现瓦格纳与他们相像，那就是尊敬瓦格纳了……正如我所说的那样，在我最深刻的本能中，我与一切德国的东西是格格不入的，以至于光是与某个德国人接近就会影响我的消化；我与瓦格纳的第一次接触也是我生命中的第一次畅快呼吸：我把他当作外国，当作对立面，当作对一切“德国德性”的切实抗议来感受和尊敬——我们曾在五十年代的泥淖之气中度过了童年，对于“德国的”这个概念来说，我们必然是悲观主义者；根本上我们只可能成为革命者——我们不会容许伪君子 甚嚣尘上的事物状态。这个伪君子今天是否

玩弄不同色彩，他是否穿上鲜红衣裳，着一身骑兵制服，在我都是完全无关紧要的……好吧！瓦格纳是一位革命者——他逃离了德国人……作为一个欧洲艺术家，人们除了在巴黎别无家园；在构成瓦格纳艺术之前提的全部五种艺术感觉中，那种精巧，那种对细微差异的感触，心理上的病态，是只有在巴黎才能找到的。在别的任何地方，人们都没有这样一种追问形式的激情，这样一种对舞台布置的严肃认真——此乃卓绝的巴黎式的严肃认真。在德国，人们对于存活在巴黎艺术家心灵中的宏大志向竟毫无概念。德国人是好心肠的——瓦格纳完全不是好心肠的……但关于瓦格纳归属何方，他与谁最有亲缘关系，我已经说得够充分的了（参见《善恶的彼岸》）：他属于法国的后期浪漫派，那种好高骛远和飞黄腾达的艺术家，诸如德拉克洛瓦 [21]，诸如柏辽兹 [22]，具有病态的实质，本质上不可救药，纯属表达上的狂热者，是彻头彻尾的技巧名家……到底谁是瓦格纳的头一个富有才智的追随者呢？是夏尔·波德莱尔 [23]，正是此人首先理解了德拉克洛瓦，那个让整整一代艺术家重新认识了自己的典型颓废者——也许他也是最后一个 [24]……我从来没有原谅瓦格纳的是什么呢？就是他屈尊俯就德国人——就是他成了德意志王国的了……德国所及之处，它就败坏了文化。 [25]

六

经过全面衡量后，我会说，倘若没有瓦格纳音乐，我大抵是挨不过青年时代的。因为我注定要成为德国人了。如果有人想摆脱一种难以忍受的压力，那他就必须吸大麻。好吧，我是必须有瓦格纳的。瓦格纳乃是对付一切德国因素的卓绝的抗毒药——也是毒药，这一点我是不会否认的……从我听到《特里斯坦》钢琴曲的那一刻起——真叫我佩服啊，比洛先生！——我就成了瓦格纳信徒了。瓦格纳早期的作品在我看来比较差劲——还太平庸，太“德国气”了……不过，我如今还在寻找一部作品，具有与《特里斯坦》一样惊险的魅力，一样可怕而甜蜜的无限性。我在所有艺术中寻找，却徒劳无功。听到《特里斯坦》的第一个音符，列奥纳多·达·芬奇的全部奇异性就失去了魔力。这部作品绝对是瓦格纳的无以复加的一部；以《名歌手》和《指环》，瓦格纳得以从前一作品中恢复过来了，变得更加健康——对于瓦格纳这样的人物，却是一种倒退……生逢其时，又恰好生活在德国人中间，成熟到足以对付这部作品——这一点，我把它视为头等幸事：在我身上，心理学家的好奇心扩展到了这步田地。对于这个从未病得足够厉害，足以适应这种“地狱欢乐”的人来说，世界是贫困的：要允许、差不多要禁止在这里动用一种神秘主义的套话。——我想，我比无论谁都更好地知道瓦格纳所能做到的惊人之举，那奇异而令人狂喜的五十重世界，除了瓦格纳没有人能飞向那儿；而且，我是足够强大的，足以把最可疑和最危险的东西转变为对我依然有益的东西，

从而让我变得更强大，我也把瓦格纳称为我生命中的大善人。我们俩是有亲缘关系的，那就是，我们遭受了深深的痛苦，包括相互间的伤害，比这个世纪人类所能遭受的更深重；这样一种亲缘关系将使我们的名字永远联系在一起；而且无疑地，在德国人中间，瓦格纳一直被误解了，我诚然也是这样，并将永远如此。——首先要有两百年的心理和艺术训练，我的日耳曼先生们！……然而这是人们无法弥补的。

七

——对于听力极其敏锐的人们，我还要来说一句话：从音乐中我到底想要什么。音乐要欢快而深沉，有如十月的一个午后。音乐要独特、狂放、温柔，像一个甜蜜的小女子，风流而妩媚……我决不会允许自己说，一个德国人能够知道音乐是什么。人们所谓的德国音乐家，特别是其中荦荦大者，都是些外国人，诸如斯拉夫人、克罗地亚人、意大利人、荷兰人——或者是犹太人；在别的情形下，属于强大种族的德国人，是绝种了的德国人，比如海因里希·许茨、巴赫和亨德尔。我自己始终还是波兰人，与肖邦相比，足以为音乐做出零星的贡献：基于三个理由，我把瓦格纳的《西格弗里德牧歌》排除在外，兴许也包括李斯特，后者在高贵的管弦乐音调方面超出了所有的音乐家；最后还有在阿尔卑斯山另一边成长起来的一切——这一边……我不会错失罗西尼，更不会错失我的南方音乐，我的威尼斯大师彼得·加斯特。而且，当我说阿尔卑斯山另一边时，我真正指的就是威尼斯。如果我要为音乐寻求另一个词，那么，我寻找的始终只是“威尼斯”一词。我不知道区分眼泪与音乐，但我懂得如何思考幸福，思考南方，不无恐惧的战栗。

不久前，在一个黑黝黝的夜里

我站在桥边。

从远处传来了歌声：

金色的水珠涌出

消失在颤动不已的水面。

游艇、灯光、音乐——

沉醉地融入暮色中……

我的灵魂，一曲弦乐，

被不可见地拨动，
暗自唱起一首游艇之歌， 因为缤纷的福乐而战栗。

——可有人聆听这首歌？…… [26]

在所有这一切当中——营养、地方、气候和休养的选择——起统率作用的乃是一种自我保存的本能，后者最清晰地表现为自我防卫的本能。不看许多事物，不听许多东西，不让许多东西靠近——这是头等聪明，是第一个证据，证明人们并不是一种偶然，而是一种必然。表示这种自卫本能的通用词语乃是鉴赏力。它的命令不仅在肯定成了一种“无私忘我”的地方要求说“不”，而且也要求尽可能地少说“不”。要离开、告别那些总是一再需要我们说“不”的东西。个中道理在于，防卫支出（即便还那么小）变成常规和习惯后，会引起一种超常的、完全多余的贫困化。我们的大支出是由最平常的小支出组成的。抵御、不让事物靠近，这是一种支出——对此人们可不要自欺欺人——一种为了消极的目的而被挥霍的力量。只有在不断的防卫需要中，我们才可能十分虚弱，再也不能保卫自己了。——假如我走出家门，发现置身于一座德国小城，而不是在安静而高雅的都灵，我的本能就必定会阻止自己去压制一切从这个庸俗而卑鄙的世界向他袭来的东西。抑或，我发现置身于一座德国大城市，这种人造的恶俗之地，在那儿什么也长不出来，在那儿每一个事物，好东西和坏东西，都是被带进来的。难道我必得由此成为一只刺猬吗？——然而，身上有刺乃是一种浪费，甚至是一种加倍的奢侈——如果人们能选择不要刺而要张开的双手的话……

另一种聪明和自我防卫就是要尽可能少做反应，要躲避那样一些形势和状况，在其中，人们注定要仿佛卸掉自己的“自由”、自己的原创力，变成一种单纯的反应剂。让我拿与书的交道做比喻吧。根本上只会“翻阅”书籍的学者——一个平庸的语文学家一天可以翻阅约两百本书——最终会完全丧失掉独立思考的能力。若他不翻阅，他就不会思考了。当他思考时，他是在应答一种刺激（一种读到的想法）——他最终还只是做出反应而已。学者把他的全部精力都放在肯定和否定上面，放在对已经被思考的东西的批判上面——他自己不再思考了……自我防卫的本能在他身上已经变得软弱无力了；在别的情形下，他是会抵触书籍的。学者——一种颓废者。——我曾亲见到这样一种情况：有天赋、富有而自由的人物在三十岁时就已经“因读书而蒙羞”，只还剩下一些需要摩擦才能产生火花——即“思想”——的火

柴。——天色破晓的大清早，一切皆清新，人的精力处于朝霞中，此时读书——我称之为恶习！

九

在这里，再也不能回避对“人如何成其所是”这个问题的真正回答了。而且，由此我就接触到了自我保存——自私自利——的艺术方面的杰作……因为假定使命、规定、使命之命运都明显超出了平均的标准，那么，或许就没有什么危险比看见自己负3此使命更大的了。人成其所是，前提是入压根儿就不知道人是什么。基于这个观点，即使是生命中的失误也有其本身的意义和价值，诸如暂时的歧途和邪路、迟疑不决、“谦逊”、在远离那唯一使命的各种任务上面挥霍掉的严肃认真。这里可能表达出一种伟大的聪明，甚至于是最高的聪明：凡在“认识你自己”（nosce te ipsum）或许会导致毁灭的药方的地方，自我遗忘、自我误解、自我缩小、自我狭隘化、自我平庸化就会变成理性本身。用道德说法来讲就是：博爱，为他人和他物而生活，可能是维持最强的自身性的保护法则。有一种例外，就是我反对自己的法则和信念而袒护“忘我”本能：在这里，这种本能是为自私自利、自我约束效力。——人们必须维持整个意识表层——意识乃是一种表层——的纯洁性，使之远离无论何种伟大的绝对命令。甚至要小心提防任何大话，任何伟大的姿态！真正的危险乃是本能过早地“理解自己”——此间，那种组织化的、能胜任统治的“理念”在深处不断生长起来——它开始发号施令，它慢慢地把我们从歧途和邪路上引回来；它为个别的品质和才能做准备，后者有朝一日将证明自己作为达到整体的手段是不可或缺的——在还没有透露某种有关主导使命、“目标”、“目的”、“意义”的东西之前，它就按顺序造就了全部效力的能力。——从这个方面来看，我的一生简直是十分美妙的。对于价值之重估的使命来说，也许需要更多的能力，甚于向来在某个个体身上集中起来的，尤其是，甚至需要那些对立的而非相互干扰和相互破坏的能力。能力的等级；距离感；分离而非相互为敌的艺术；不把任何东西混淆起来，不把任何东西“调和”起来；一种巨大的繁多但又不是混沌不堪——此乃我的本能的先决条件，是我的本能的隐秘工作和艺术家气质。我的本能的更高保护相当强烈地显示出来，以至于我甚至都猜度不了什么东西在我身上生长——有一天，我全部的能力突然成熟了，以其最终的完美性爆发出来了。我记不起来自己何时曾努力奋斗——无法证明在我的一生中有丝毫拼搏的痕迹，我是一种英雄本性的对立面。“意愿”什么，“追求”什么，盯着某个“目的”、某个“愿望”——基于我的经验，这些都是我所不知道的。即使在眼下这个时刻，我展望自己的将来——一种宽广的将来！——依然犹如展望平静的海面：没有任何渴望会在海面上泛起涟漪。我根本没想要某物改变自己；我本人也不想自己变得不一样。然而，我一直就是这样生活过

来的。我不曾有任何愿望。有谁人能在四十四岁之后说，他从来没有为荣誉、为女人和金钱奋斗过啊！——我不至于缺这些东西……所以，举例说，有一天我成了大学教授——此类事情我是从来都没有想过的，因为我当时还不到二十四岁。而在两年前，我有一天突然就做了语文学家：因为我的第一篇语文学论文（在任何意义上它都是我的开端）应我导师李彻尔 [27] 的要求，刊于他的《莱茵博物馆》杂志上。（李彻尔——我怀着敬意说到这个名字——他是我迄今见过的唯一天才的学者。他具有那种令人惬意的迂腐之气，此乃我们图林根人的特点，它甚至使一个德国人也变得讨人喜欢了——为了通达真理，我们甚至宁愿选择隐秘小径。以上面这番话，我完全没有低估我那位亲近的老乡，那个聪3明的利奥波德·冯·兰克 [28] ……）

十

在这里急需一种宏大的沉思。人们会问我，我到底为什么要来叙述这些微不足道的、以习惯的判断来说无关紧要的小事情；如果我注定要去担当伟大的使命，那么，我就愈加会因此伤害自己。答案是：这些微不足道的小事情——营养、地方、气候、休养、关于自私自利的全部决疑论辩——超出所有的概念，比迄今为止人们视为重要的一切还更重要。恰恰在这里，人们必须开始重新学习。人类以往严肃考量过的东西，甚至都不具有实在性，而是纯粹的想象虚构，严格说来，就是谎言，来自病态的、在深刻意义上有害的天性的坏本能——诸如“上帝”“灵魂”“德性”“罪”“彼岸”“真理”“永生”等所有概念……可是，人们却在其中寻求人类天性的伟大和“神性”……有关政治、社会制度、教育方面的所有问题，彻头彻尾都是被伪造出来的，因为人们把最有害的人物视为伟人——因为人们教人蔑视“微不足道的”小事情，就是说，蔑视生命本身中的基本事件……我们今天的文化是有高度歧义的……德国皇帝与教皇同流合污，仿佛教皇不是生命之死敌的代表似的！……今天建造起来的東西，三年后就不再存在了。——如果我对自己的衡量是根据我能够做什么，且不说是根据我背后出现的东西，一种颠覆，一种无与伦比的建构，那么，我就比任何一个凡人都更能要求享有“伟大”一词。如果我现在把自己与以往被尊为一流人物的人做一番比较，那么，个中差异是显而易见的。我根本就不把这些所谓的“一流人物”算作人——对我来说，他们是人类的渣滓，是病态和复仇本能的怪胎：他们纯属灾难性的、不可救药的、对生命进行报复的非人……我要成为他们的对立面：我的优先权在于拥有对健康本能之全部征兆的至高敏感。我身上没有任何病态的特性；即使在病重期间，我也没变成病态的；要在我的本性中找到一种狂热的特性，那是徒劳的。人们无法向我证明，在我生命中的任何时刻里有过一种狂妄或者悲怆的态度。姿态上的激情不属于伟大；谁竟需要故作姿态，他就是虚伪的……小心提防所有诗情画意的人啊！——当生活向

我要求最艰难的东西时，生活对我来说就变得轻松了，变得最轻松不过了。谁在今年秋天的七十天里看见我以一种对千秋万代负责的心情，不停地做着——或者示范着——头等重要、无人能模仿的大事，那么，他是感受不到我身上有任何紧张样子的，而倒是有一种充沛的活力和快乐。我从来没有吃得这样惬意过，我从来没有这样好睡过。——我不知道除了游戏，还能用别的什么法子去应对伟大的使命：此乃伟大之标志，是一个根本性的前提。最小的强制，阴沉沉的面色，某种拙劣的嗓音，全都是对一个人的抗议，更是对他的事业和作品的抗议！……人们不该厚脸皮……连忍受孤独也是一种抗议——我始终只忍受“繁复” [29] ……早先一个时候（早得有点荒唐了），七岁那年，我已经知道，我是永远达不到人类的话语的：可曾有人看见我为此而忧伤吗？——直到今天，我依然对每个人都同样地平易近人，我甚至对最低等的人们都怀有完全的敬意：总之，没有一点儿傲慢，没有一点儿隐秘的轻蔑。我蔑视谁，谁就会透露出他被我蔑视了：通过我单纯的此在，我激怒了体内流着坏血液的一切……我表示人类之伟大的公式是热爱命运：人们别无所愿，不愿前行，不愿后退，永远不。不要一味忍受必然性，更不要隐瞒之——所有理想主义在面对必然性时都不外乎是谎言——而是要热爱之……

我为什么能写出如此好书

我自己是一回事，我的著作是另一回事。——在这里，在谈论我的著作之前，我先要来说说这些著作何以得到理解或者得不到理解的问题。我如此漫不经心地做这件事，而这是以某种方式与此事合适的：因为根本还没有到谈论这个问题的时候。我自己的时代也尚未到来，有些人是死后才得以诞生的。——到某个时候，人们将不得不需要一些机构，人们在其中生活和说教就如同我理解的生活和说教一样；也许，甚至人们到那时也要开设专有的教席来阐释《查拉图斯特拉如是说》。可是，倘若我今天就指望人们来听取和接受我的真理，那或许是与我自己完全矛盾的：人们今天还不听取，人们今天还不懂接受我，这不仅是可理解的，而且在我看来本就是对的。我不愿被混为一谈，这也包括我不混淆自己。——再说一遍，在我的生活中，人们难以证明有什么“恶意”；连文字上的“恶意”，我也几乎举不出一个事例。相反，纯粹的蠢行却太多了……如果有人拿起我的一本书——我甚至假定他为此要脱掉鞋子，更不用说要脱掉靴子了——那么，在我看来，这就是人们能够向我表示的最稀罕的一个奖赏了……海因里希·冯·斯泰因博士有一次真诚地抱怨说，理解不了我的《查拉图斯特拉如是说》里的任何一句话，当时我就对他说，这就对了：弄懂了其中的六句话，也就是体验了其中的六句话，凡人就能提升到一个比“现代”人所能达到的更高的层次上了。有这种距离感的我，怎么可能指望我所认识的“现代人”来读我的书呢！我的成功刚好与叔本华的成功相反——我要说的是“我现在没有被阅读，将来也不会被阅读”（non legor, non legar）。——人们在否定我的著作时表现出来的天真无辜屡屡让我满足，我并不想低估这种满足感。还是在今年夏天，当时我也许能够以我重要的文学、太过重要的文学使其余的文学失去平衡，柏林大学的一位教授善意地暗示我，我得用另外一种形式：这种东西是没人读的。——最后，不是德国，而是瑞士，提供了两个极端的事例。维特曼博士 [30] 在《联邦报》上发表了一篇文章，是关于《善恶的彼岸》的，题为《尼采的一本危险的书》；还有，卡尔·施皮特勒先生 [31] 写的一篇关于我的书的总体报告，同样也发表在《联邦报》上面。这两篇文章乃是我一生中的极限——我要小心谨慎地说这个……举例来说，后者把我的《查拉图斯特拉如是说》当作“更高的风格尝试”，希望我今后也关心一下内容；维特曼博士则对我在努力取缔所有正派情感方面表现出来的勇气表示了敬重。——在

这里，通过一个偶然的小小诡计，每个句子都是顺理成章的，让我钦佩，但却是一种头足倒立的真理：根本上，人们什么也不用做，只要“重估”一切“价值”，就能以一种甚至值得注意的方式击中我的要害——用不着拿钉子钉进我的脑袋……我就越发要尝试一种说明了。——说到底，没有人能够从包括书本在内的事物中听到比他已经知道的更多的东西。凡是人们从自己的体验出发达不到的东西，人们是听不到的。现在让我们来想想一个极端的例子：一本书谈的是纯粹体验，后者完全处于一种常见的或者哪怕只是罕见的经验之可能性之外——这本书就是一种新的经验系列的第一语言。在这种情形下，干脆什么也听不到，由于听觉上的欺瞒，在什么也听不到的地方，就什么也不存在……这终究是我通常的经验吧，也可以说是我的经验的独特性。谁若以为已经理解了我的什么东西，他其实只是根据自己的形象编造了我的什么东西——当中不乏我的对立面，例如一个“理想主义者”；谁若对我毫无了解，他便会否认终究把我考虑在内了。——“超人”一词被用来表示一个至高的发育良好的类型，这种人对于“现代”人，对于“好”人，对于基督徒和其他的虚无主义者——该词出自查拉图斯特拉这个道德的毁灭者之口，成了一个十分令人深思的词语，几乎处处都完全无辜地被理解为那样一种价值，这种价值的对立面表现在查拉图斯特拉形象上，可以说表现为一个高等人的“理想主义”类型，半是“圣徒”，半是“天才”……因为这个词，另一个博学的、长角的畜生竟然怀疑我是达尔文主义者；甚至于在这个词中重又现出了那个违逆知识和意志的大骗子卡莱尔的“英雄崇拜”，那原是我深恶痛绝的。如若我低声细语地告诉某人，与其去寻找一个帕西法尔倒不如寻找一个恺撒·波尔查 [32]，那他是不会相信自己的耳朵的。——人们务必要原谅我，对于有关我的书的评论，尤其是报纸上的，我是没有任何好奇心的。我的朋友们、我的出版商是知道这一点的，他们不跟我谈论诸如此类的事。在某个特殊场合，我看见了关于我的一本书——《善恶的彼岸》——的全部指责；对此我或许得好好写一篇报道。《国民报》——普鲁士的一份报纸，为了告诉我的外国读者，恕我直言，我自己是只读《辩论报》的——极其严肃地把这本书理解为“时代的标志”，是地地道道的容克哲学，而对此，《十字报》[33] 只是缺乏勇气而已——人们该相信吗？……

上面是就德国人来说的：因为在别的地方，我到处都有读者——都是些出类拔萃的有识之士，都是些经受考验、受过高等地位和责任方面教育的人物；我的读者中甚至有真正的天才。在维也纳，在圣彼得堡，在斯德哥尔摩，在哥本哈根，在巴黎和纽约——到处都有人发现了我：而在欧洲的平原德国，我却没有被发现……而且，我承认，我更喜欢那些没有读过我的书的读者，他们既没有听说过我的名字，

也从来没有听说过“哲学”一词；但不论我走到哪儿，比如说在这儿，在都灵，人们一见到我，就都感到轻松愉快。迄今为止最让我得意的的事情是，那些市场上的老妇，她们在没有为我挑出最甜的葡萄之前是不会歇手的。到这步田地，人们就必定是哲学家了……不无道理地，人们把波兰人称为斯拉夫人中的法国人。一个迷人的俄国女子一刻都不会弄错我的归属。我做不到庄重严肃，我顶多会把这种庄重变成难堪……用德语思考，用德语感觉——我能做到一切，但这一点却超出了我的能力……我从前的老师李彻尔甚至于断言，我还像巴黎小说家一般来构思我的语文学文章——紧张得荒唐。即便在巴黎，人们也惊奇于“我所有的大胆和精细” [34] ——这是丹纳先生的说法——我担心，哪怕达到了酒神颂歌的最高形式，人们也会发现，我身上掺杂了那种永远不会变得愚蠢的——“德国式的”——精华，即精神……我别无所能。上帝助我啊！阿门。——我们全都知道，有些人甚至凭着经验就知道，长耳朵是什么意思。好吧，我敢断言我有着最短的耳朵。这一点甚至使女人们不无兴趣——我觉得，她们感觉我更好地理解了她们？……我是卓绝的反驴，因而是一个世界历史的怪物，——用希腊语来讲，而且不光是用希腊语来讲，我是敌基督者……

三

在某种程度上，我知道自己作为作家的特权；在个别情况下我也确信，习惯读我的著作是会“败坏”趣味和鉴赏力的。人们干脆再也受不了其他的书了，至少是受不了哲学书了。进入这样一个高贵而微妙世界，乃是一种无与伦比的荣誉——要做到这一点，绝不可能是一个德国人；说到底，这是人们一定已经获得的荣誉。但是，谁若通过意志的高度与我相近相类，他就能在这方面体验到学习的真正狂喜：因为我来自鸟儿从来都飞不到的高空，我知道还没有人误入其中的深渊。有人曾对我说，他对我的书爱不释手——我甚至打破了长夜的宁静……世上绝不会有更骄傲，同时也更精致的书了——它们在有些地方臻于地球的顶峰了，达到了犬儒主义的境界；人们必须同时用最温柔的手指和最勇敢的拳头来征服它们。任何脆弱的心灵都无缘于此，永远地，甚至连消化不良也不行：人们不能异想天开，人们必须有一个快乐的腹部。不光是心灵的贫困和褊狭使人不可能领会我的书，更要命的是内脏的怯懦、不洁、隐秘报复欲所造成的障碍：我说出的一个词语就能使人直面那些邪恶本能。在我的熟人当中有相当多的实验动物，在他们身上，我会感受到对我的著作的不同反应，那是一些富有教益的不同反应。谁若不想关心我的著作的内容，例如我的所谓朋友们，那就会成为“无个性的”：人们希望我有幸又走得“这么远”——也或许在腔调的更大明快方面有一个进步……这些恶习重重的“精灵”，“美好心灵”，彻头彻尾的骗子，他们绝对不知道怎样开始读这些书，因此他们就看不上这些书，这是所有“美好心灵”的美好逻辑。

我的熟人当中的这些笨牛蠢驴，恕我直言，就是纯粹的德国人，他们使我弄懂了，人们并非总是同意我的看法，但偶尔却是同意的，例如……甚至关于《查拉图斯特拉如是说》，我也听说过这样的话……同样地，人身上的任何“女性主义”，包括男人身上的“女性主义”，对我来说也是一种闭门羹：人们从来都不能进入这个大胆知识的迷宫。人们必须从来不顾惜自己，人们必须具有冷酷的习惯，方能在全然冷酷的真理当中感到愉快而明朗。如若要我设想一位完美读者的形象，那么总不外乎是一个有勇气和好奇心的怪物，此外还有某种坚韧、狡黠、谨慎的性格，一个天生的冒险家和发现者。最后，我不知道怎么来更好地言说，我根本上只跟谁说话，就像查拉图斯特拉所言：他只想跟谁叙述自己的谜团？

向你们，你们这些勇敢的探求者和冒险者，以及总是随狡猾的帆船在恐怖大海上航行的人啊——

向你们，你们这些沉醉于谜团者，欣喜于黄昏者，你们的灵魂被笛声引向每一个迷津——

因为你们不愿用胆怯的手摸索一根引线；而且，在你们能够猜解的地方，你们就仇视推断——

四

同时，我还要来约略说说自己的风格技巧。用符号（包括这种符号的速度）来传达一种状态，一种激情上的内在紧张——此即任何风格的意义；而且，鉴于我的内在状态的异乎寻常的多样性，在我这里也就有了多种风格可能性——那竟是一个人向来拥有过的最多样的风格技巧。任何优秀的风格，都要能真正传达某种内在状态，它通过符号，通过符号的速度，通过表情——所有周期性法则都是表情的艺术——概无错失。我的本能在这里是不会犯错的。——优秀的风格本身——那是一种纯粹的愚蠢，单纯的“唯心主义”，就好比“美本身”“善本身”“物本身”……此事总归还有一个前提假设，假设有听众存在——假设有这样一种人，他们能够产生同一种激情并且也配得上这种激情，假设并不缺乏我们可以对之传达自己的人们。——举例来说，我的查拉图斯特拉此间就还在寻找这种人——啊！他还得长久地寻找！——人们一定值得去倾听他……可直到那时，都不会有人能够把握我在其中运用的技巧：再也没有人运用过全新的、闻所未闻的、真正为此创造出来的艺术手段。有人说此类情况恰恰在德语中可能有，此种说法尚有待证明：我自己从前曾严厉地拒斥此说。在我之前，人们不知道能干些什么——说到底就是用语言能干些什么。——伟大韵律的技巧，周期性的伟大风格，以表达高贵的、超人的激情的一种巨大起落，这是我首先发明的；凭借一种酒神颂歌，好比《查拉

图斯特拉如是说》第三部 末节“七个印记” [35]，我就飞越以往所谓的诗歌千里之外了。

——我的著作中有一位无与伦比的心理学家 在发言，这也许是一位优秀的读者所达到的第一个见识——我应得的一个读者，他读我的书，就像优秀的老语文学家读贺拉斯的书一样。那些人人都能同意的句子，更不消说那些平凡的哲学家、道德家以及其他的笨蛋蠢货，在我看来都是幼稚的失误：例如那种信念，相信“不自私”与“自私”是对立面，而“自我”（ego）本身只是一种“更高的欺诈”，一种“理想”……既没有 自私的行为，也没有 不自私的行为：这两个概念在心理学上都是荒唐的。或者“人人都追求幸福”这个句子……或者“幸福是德性的报答”这个句子……又或者“痛苦与快乐是对立的”这样的句子……道德这个人类的妖精彻底地伪造了全部心理，把它们道德化了，臻于那种可怕的荒唐境地，以为爱情是某种“非自我、不自私的东西”……人们必须坚守自己，人们必须勇敢地独立自主，要不然人们就根本不可能爱。说到底，小女子们最清楚不过地知道这一点：她们对那些忘我的、纯客观的男人嗤之以鼻……附带插一句，我胆敢猜测自己是了解女人的吗？这是我的狄奥尼索斯嫁妆的一部分。谁知道呢？也许我就是永恒女性的第一位心理学家。她们全都爱我——这是一个老故事了：除了那些不幸的女人，那些不能生育的“被解放者”。——所幸我不愿意被人撕碎：完美的女人一旦恋爱，是会把人撕碎的……我知道这些可爱的狂野女人 [36]……啊！那是何等危险的、潜行的、隐秘的小小食肉动物！而与她们在一起，又是多么惬意呵！……一个力争报复的小女人或许会把命运本身撞倒。——女人要比男人凶恶无数倍，也比男人聪明无数倍；女人身上的善已然是一种蜕化形式了……尽管有种种所谓的“美好心灵”，但根本上还是存在着一种生理上的弊端，——我没有说全部，要不然我就会变成医学犬儒派 [37] 了。围绕平等权的斗争甚至就是一种疾病的征兆：每个医生都知道这一点。——的确，女人越是有女人味，就越是竭尽全力抵制一般权利：自然状态，两性间的永恒战争，确实绝对给予女人以头地位。——人们听到我给爱情下的定义了吗？这是值得一位哲学家来下的唯一定义。爱情——其手段是战争，其基础是两性间的殊死仇恨。——人们听见我关于如何治愈——“拯救”——女人这个问题的答案了吗？让她生个小孩。女人必须有小孩，而男人始终只是手段：查拉图斯特拉如是说。——“女性解放”——此乃失败 女人也即不孕女人对健全女人的本能仇恨——对“男人”的斗争始终只不过是手段、借口、策略。她们想通过抬高自己，成为“自在女人”，成为“高等女人”，成为女人中的“理想主义者”，由此来降低 女人的一般等级水平；为此，没有比人文中学教育、裤衩和政治上的投票畜生权利更可靠的手段了。根本上，获解

放者是“永恒女性”世界里的无政府主义者，是败类，她们最下作的本能就是复仇……极端恶毒的“理想主义”的整个种类——此外，这种“理想主义”也出现在男人身上，例如在易卜生“这个典型的老处女”那里——怀有毒害 性爱之自然本性的良心，以之为目标……而且，为了不让人怀疑我在这方面既正直又严格的信念，我还想根据自己反恶习的道德法典来传达一个定律：用恶习一词，我要与任何种类的反自然行为做斗争，或者如若人们喜欢漂亮辞令，那就是要与任何种类的理想主义做斗争。这个定律说的是：“贞洁之说教就是公然煽动反自然。任何一种对性生活的蔑视，任何用‘不洁’概念对性生活的玷污，本身都是对生命的犯罪，都是违反生命之神圣精神的真正罪恶。”

六

为了给出一个关于我之为心理学家的概念，且让我端出一门在《善恶的彼岸》中出现的古怪心理学——此外，我不允许人们对我此处描写的人物做任何推测。“心灵的天才，正如那伟大的隐秘者所具有的那样，诱惑者之神以及有良知的天生捕鼠者，其声音可以下达到每一个灵魂的深度世界里，他一言不发，一眼不看，在其中不会有一种引诱的顾盼和皱纹，其高超技艺也包括，他懂得表现——而且并不是表现为他所是的东西，而是表现为对跟随他的人来说更多的是一种强制力的东西，为的是愈来愈近地逼近他，愈来愈内在地、彻底地跟随他……心灵的天才，他使所有喧嚣和自满哑然失声，他教人服从，使粗野的灵魂平静下来，让它们品尝一种新的渴望——静静地躺着如一面镜子，使之映照出那深邃的天空……心灵的天才，他教会那鲁莽而急促的手变得踌躇，使之能更纤柔地去把握；他猜到隐蔽而被遗忘的财宝，在浑厚的冰层下面的点滴善良和甜蜜灵气，他是探寻长久地埋在深深泥沙之下的每一颗金子的魔杖……心灵的天才，跟他接触，每个人都可以满载而归，并非受了恩赐，得了惊喜，并非仿佛受了外来的财富而生出愉快或者沮丧之情，而是本身变得更富有，变得比从前更新鲜，洞开心扉，为一阵解冻的暖风所吹拂和窃听，也许更不可靠、更娇柔、更脆弱、更破碎，但却充满了无可名状的希望，充满了全新的意志和潮流，充满了全新的非意志和逆流……”

‘Why do I know
a few more things?
Why am I so clever altogether?

On this perfect day, when everything has become ripe and not only the grapes are growing brown, a ray of sunlight has fallen on to my life: I looked behind me, I looked before me, never have I seen so many and such good things together. Not in vain have I buried my forty- fourth year today, I was entitled to bury it – what there was of life in it is rescued, is immortal. The first book of the Revaluation of all Values , the Songs of Zarathustra , the Twilight of the Idols, my attempt to philosophize with a hammer – all of them gifts of this year, of its last quarter even! How should I not be grateful to my whole life? – And so I tell myself my life.

Why I Am so Wise

The fortunateness of my existence, its uniqueness perhaps, lies in its fatality: to express it in the form of a riddle, as my father I have already died, as my mother I still live and grow old. This twofold origin, as it were from the highest and the lowest rung of the ladder of life, at once décadent and beginning – this if anything explains that neutrality, that freedom from party in relation to the total problem of life which perhaps distinguishes me. I have a subtler sense for signs of ascent and decline than any man has ever had, I am the teacher par excellence in this matter – I know both, I am both. – My father died at the age of thirty- six: he was delicate, lovable and morbid, like a being destined to pay this world only a passing visit – a gracious reminder of life rather than life itself. In the same year in which his life declined mine too declined: in the thirty- sixth year of my life I arrived at the lowest point of my vitality – I still lived, but without being able to see three paces in front of me. At that time – it was 1879 – I relinquished my Basel professorship, lived through the summer like a shadow in St Moritz and the following winter, the most sunless of my life, as a shadow in Naumburg. This was my minimum: ‘The Wanderer and his Shadow’ came into existence during the course of it.

I undoubtedly knew all about shadows in those days ... In the following winter, the first winter I spent in Genoa, that sweetening and spiritualization which is virtually inseparable from an extreme poverty of blood and muscle produced ‘Daybreak’. The perfect brightness and cheerfulness, even exuberance of spirit reflected in the said work is in my case compatible not only with the profoundest physiological weakness, but even with an extremity of pain. In the midst of the torments which attended an uninterrupted three- day headache accompanied by the laborious vomiting of phlegm – I possessed a dialectical clarity par excellence and thought my way very cold- bloodedly through things for which when I am in better health I am not enough of a climber, not refined, not cold enough. My readers perhaps know the extent to which I regard dialectics as a symptom of décadence, for example in the most famous case of all: in the case of Socrates. – All morbid disturbances of the intellect, even that semi- stupefaction consequent on fever, have remained to this day totally unfamiliar things to me, on their nature and frequency I had first to instruct myself by scholarly methods. My blood flows slowly. No one has ever been able to diagnose fever in me. A doctor who treated me for some time as a nervous case said at last: ‘No! there is nothing wrong with your nerves, it is only I who am nervous.’ Any kind of local degeneration absolutely undemonstrable; no organically originating stomach ailment, though there does exist, as a consequence of general exhaustion, a profound weakness of the gastric system. Condition of the eyes, sometimes approaching dangerously close to blindness, also only consequence, not causal: so that with every increase in vitality eyesight has also again improved. – Convalescence means with me a long, all too long succession of years – it also unfortunately means relapse, deterioration, periods of a kind of décadence. After all this do I need to say that in questions of décadence I am experienced? I have spelled it out forwards and backwards. Even that filigree art of grasping and comprehending in general, that finger for nuances, that psychology of ‘looking around the corner’ and whatever else characterizes me was learned only then, is the actual gift of that time in which everything in me became more subtle, observation itself together with all the organs of observation. To look from a morbid perspective towards healthier concepts and values, and again conversely to look down from the abundance and certainty of rich life into the secret labour of the instinct of décadence – that is what I have practised most, it has been my own particular field of experience, in this if in anything I am a master. I now have the skill and knowledge to invert perspectives: first reason why a ‘reevaluation of values’ is perhaps possible at all to me alone. –

Setting aside the fact that I am a décadent, I am also its antithesis. My proof of this is, among other things, that in combating my sick conditions I always instinctively chose the right means: while the décadent as such always chooses the means harmful to him. As summa summarum I was healthy, as corner, as speciality I was décadent . That energy for absolute isolation and detachment from my accustomed circumstances, the way I compelled myself no longer to let myself be cared for, served, doctored – this betrayed an unconditional certainty of instinct as to what at that time was needful above all else. I took myself in hand, I myself made myself healthy again: the precondition for this – every physiologist will admit it – is that one is fundamentally healthy . A being who is typically morbid cannot become healthy, still less can he make himself healthy; conversely, for one who is typically healthy being sick can even be an energetic stimulant to life, to more life. Thus in fact does that long period of sickness seem to me now : I discovered life as it were anew, myself included, I tasted all good and even petty things in a way that others could not easily taste them – I made out of my will to health, to life , my philosophy ... For pay heed to this: it was in the years of my lowest vitality that I ceased to be a pessimist: the instinct for self- recovery forbade to me a philosophy of indigence and discouragement ... And in what does one really recognize that someone has turned out well ! In that a human being who has turned out well does our senses good: that he is carved out of wood at once hard, delicate and sweet- smelling. He has a taste only for what is beneficial to him; his pleasure, his joy ceases where the measure of what is beneficial is overstepped. He divines cures for injuries, he employs ill chances to his own advantage; what does not kill him makes him stronger. Out of everything he sees, hears, experiences he instinctively collects together his sum : he is a principle of selection, he rejects much. He is always in his company, whether he traffics with books, people or landscapes: he does honour when he chooses , when he admits, when he trusts. He reacts slowly to every kind of stimulus, with that slowness which a protracted caution and a willed pride have bred in him – he tests an approaching stimulus, he is far from going out to meet it. He believes in neither ‘misfortune’ nor in ‘guilt’: he knows how to forget – he is strong enough for everything to have to turn out for the best for him. Very well, I am the opposite of a décadent : for I have just described myself .

I consider the fact that I had such a father as a great privilege: the peasants he preached to – for, after he had lived for several years at the court of Altenburg, he was a preacher in his last years – said that the angels must look like he did. And with this I touch on the question of race. I am a pure-blooded Polish nobleman, in whom there is no drop of bad blood, least of all German. When I look for my profoundest opposite, the incalculable pettiness of the instincts, I always find my mother and my sister – to be related to such canaille would be a blasphemy against my divinity. The treatment I have received from my mother and my sister, up to the present moment, fills me with inexpressible horror: there is an absolutely hellish machine at work here, operating with infallible certainty at the precise moment when I am most vulnerable – at my highest moments ... for then one needs all one's strength to counter such a poisonous viper ... physiological contiguity renders such a disharmonia praestabilita possible ... But I confess that the deepest objection to the 'Eternal Recurrence', my real idea from the abyss, is always my mother and my sister. – But even as a Pole I am a monstrous atavism. One would have to go back centuries to find this noblest of races that the earth has ever possessed in so instinctively pristine a degree as I present it. I have, against everything that is today called noblesse, a sovereign feeling of distinction – I wouldn't award to the young German Kaiser the honour of being my coachman. There is one single case where I acknowledge my equal – I recognize it with profound gratitude. Frau Cosima Wagner is by far the noblest nature; and, so that I shouldn't say one word too few, I say that Richard Wagner was by far the most closely related man to me ... The rest is silence ... All the prevalent notions of degrees of kinship are physiological nonsense in an unsurpassable measure. The Pope still deals today in this nonsense. One is least related to one's parents: it would be the most extreme sign of vulgarity to be related to one's parents. Higher natures have their origins infinitely farther back, and with them much had to be assembled, saved and hoarded. The great individuals are the oldest: I don't understand it, but Julius Caesar could be my father – or Alexander, this Dionysos incarnate ... At the very moment that I am writing this the post brings me a Dionysos-head.

I have never understood the art of arousing enmity towards myself – this too I owe to my incomparable father – even when it seemed to me very worthwhile to do so. However unchristian it may seem, I am not even inimical towards myself, one may turn my life this way and that, one will only rarely, at bottom only once, discover signs that anyone has borne ill will towards me – perhaps, however, somewhat too many signs of good will ... My experiences even of those of whom everyone has had experiences speak without exception in their favour; I tame every bear, I even make buffoons mind their manners. During the seven years in which I taught Greek to the top form of the Basel grammar school I never once had occasion to mete out a punishment; the laziest were industrious when they were with me. I am always up to dealing with any chance event; I have to be unprepared if I am to be master of myself. Let the instrument be what it will, let it be as out of tune as only the instrument ‘man’ can become out of tune – I should have to be ill not to succeed in getting out of it something listenable. And how often have I heard from the ‘instruments’ themselves that they had never heard themselves sound so well ... Most beautifully perhaps from that Heinrich von Stein who died so unpardonably young and who, after cautiously obtaining permission, once appeared for three days at Sils- Maria, explaining to everyone that he had not come for the Engadin. This excellent man, who with the whole impetuous artlessness of a Prussian Junker had waded into the Wagnerian swamp (– and into the swamp of Dühring in addition!), was during those three days as if transported by a storm-wind of freedom, like one suddenly raised to his own heights and given wings. I kept telling him it was the result of the fine air up here, that everyone felt the same, that you could not stand 6,000 feet above Bayreuth and not notice it – but he would not believe me ... If, this notwithstanding, many great and petty misdeeds have been committed against me, it was not ‘will’, least of all ill will that was the cause of it: I could complain, rather – I have just suggested as much – of the good will which has caused me no little mischief in my life. My experiences give me a right to a general mistrust of the so- called ‘selfless’ drives, of the whole ‘love of one's neighbour’ which is always ready with deeds and advice. It counts with me as weakness, as a special case of the incapacity to withstand stimuli – it is only among décadents that pity is called a virtue. My reproach against those who practise pity is that shame, reverence, a delicate feeling for distance easily eludes them, that pity instantly smells of mob and is so like bad manners as to be mistaken for them – that the hands of pity can under certain circumstances intrude downright destructively into a great destiny, into a solitariness where wounds are nursed, into a privilege for great guilt. I count the overcoming of pity among the noble virtues: I have, as 'Zarathustra's Temptation', invented a case in which a great cry of distress reaches him, in which pity like an ultimate sin seeks to attack him, to seduce him from allegiance to himself. To remain master here, here to keep the elevation of one's task clean of the many lower and more shortsighted drives which are active in so-called selfless actions, that is the test, the final test perhaps, which a Zarathustra has to pass – the actual proof of his strength ...

In yet another point I am merely my father once more and as it were the continuation of his life after an all too early death. Like anyone who has never lived among his equals and to whom the concept 'requital' is as inaccessible as is for instance the concept 'equal rights', I forbid myself in cases where a little or very great act of folly has been perpetrated against me any counter-measure, any protective measure – also, as is reasonable, any defence, any 'justification'. My kind of requital consists in sending after the piece of stupidity as quickly as possible a piece of sagacity: in that way one may perhaps overtake it. To speak in a metaphor: I dispatch a pot of jam to get rid of a sour affair ... Let anyone harm me in any way, I 'requite' it, you may be sure of that: as soon as I can I find an opportunity of expressing my thanks to the 'offender' (occasionally even for the offence) – or of asking him for something, which can be more courteous than giving something ... It also seems to me that the rudest word, the rudest letter are more good-natured, more honest than silence. Those who keep silent almost always lack subtlety and politeness of the heart; silence is an objection, swallowing down necessarily produces a bad character – it even ruins the stomach. All those given to silence are dyspeptic. – One will see that I would not like to see rudeness undervalued, it is the most humane form of contradiction by far and, in the midst of modern tendermindedness, one of our foremost virtues. – If one is rich enough, it is even fortunate to be in the wrong. A god come to earth ought to do nothing whatever but wrong: to take upon oneself, not the punishment, but the guilt – only that would be godlike.

Freedom from ressentiment , enlightenment over ressentiment – who knows the extent to which I ultimately owe thanks to my protracted sickness for this too! The problem is not exactly simple: one has to have experienced it from a state of strength and a state of weakness. If anything whatever has to be admitted against being sick, being weak, it is that in these conditions the actual curative instinct, that is to say the defensive and offensive instinct in man becomes soft. One does not know how to get free of anything, one does not know how to have done with anything, one does not know how to thrust back – everything hurts. Men and things come importunately close, events strike too deep, the memory is a festering wound. Being sick is i t s e l f a k i n d o f ressentiment . – Against this the invalid has only one great means of cure – I call it Russian fatalism , that fatalism without rebellion with which a Russian soldier for whom the campaign has become too much at last lies down in the snow. No longer to take anything at all, to receive anything, to take anything into oneself – no longer to react at all ... The great rationality of this fatalism, which is not always the courage to die but can be life- preservative under conditions highly dangerous to life, is reduction of the metabolism, making it slow down, a kind of will to hibernation. A couple of steps further in this logic and one has the fakir who sleeps for weeks on end in a grave ... Because one would use oneself up too quickly if one reacted at all, one no longer reacts: this is the logic. And nothing burns one up quicker than the affects of ressentiment . Vexation, morbid susceptibility, incapacity for revenge, the desire, the thirst for revenge, poison- brewing in any sense – for one who is exhausted this is certainly the most disadvantageous kind of reaction: it causes a rapid expenditure of nervous energy, a morbid accretion of excretions, for example of gall into the stomach. Ressentiment is the forbidden in itself for the invalid – his evil: unfortunately also his most natural inclination. – This was grasped by that profound physiologist Buddha. His ‘religion’, which one would do better to call a system of hygiene so as not to mix it up with such pitiable things as Christianity, makes its effect dependent on victory over ressentiment : to free the soul of that – first step to recovery. ‘Not by enmity is enmity ended, by friendship is enmity ended’: this stands at the beginning of Buddha's teaching – it is not morality that speaks thus, it is physiology that speaks thus. – Ressentiment, born of weakness, to no one more harmful than to the weak man himself – in the opposite case, where a rich nature is the presupposition, a superfluous feeling to stay master of which is almost the proof of richness. He who knows the seriousness with which my philosophy has taken up the struggle against the feelings of vengefulness and vindictiveness even into the theory of ‘free will’ – my struggle against Christianity is only a special instance of it – will understand why it is precisely here that I throw the light on my personal bearing, my sureness of instinct in practice. In periods of décadence I forbade them to myself as harmful; as soon as life was again sufficiently rich and proud for them I forbade them to myself as beneath me. That ‘Russian fatalism’ of which I spoke came forward in my case in the form of clinging tenaciously for years on end to almost intolerable situations, places, residences, company, once chance had placed me in them – it was better than changing them, than feeling them as capable of being changed – than rebelling against them ... In those days I took it deadly amiss if I was disturbed in this fatalism, if I was forcibly awakened from it – and to do this was in fact every time a deadly dangerous thing. – To accept oneself as a fate, not to desire oneself ‘different’ – in such conditions this is great rationality itself.

War is another thing. I am by nature warlike. To attack is among my instincts. To be able to be an enemy, to be an enemy – that perhaps presupposes a strong nature, it is in any event a condition of every strong nature. It needs resistances, consequently it seeks resistances: the aggressive pathos belongs as necessarily to strength as the feeling of vengefulness and vindictiveness does to weakness. Woman, for example, is vengeful: that is conditioned by her weakness, just as is her susceptibility to others’ distress. – The strength of one who attacks has in the opposition he needs a kind of gauge ; every growth reveals itself in the seeking out of a powerful opponent – or problem: for a philosopher who is warlike also challenges problems to a duel. The undertaking is to master, not any resistances that happen to present themselves, but those against which one has to bring all one’s strength, suppleness and mastery of weapons – to master equal opponents ... Equality in face of the enemy – first presupposition of an honest duel. Where one despises one cannot wage war; where one commands, where one sees something as beneath one, one has not to wage war. – My practice in warfare can be reduced to four propositions. Firstly: I attack only causes that are victorious – under certain circumstances I wait until they are victorious. Secondly: I attack only causes against which I would find no allies, where I stand alone – where I compromise only myself ... I have never taken a step in public which was not compromising: that is my criterion of right action. Thirdly: I never attack persons – I only employ the person as a strong magnifying glass with which one can make visible a general but furtive state of distress which is hard to get hold of. That was how I attacked David Strauss, more precisely the success with German ‘culture’ of a senile book – I thus caught that culture red-handed ... That was how I attacked Wagner, more precisely the falseness, the hybrid instincts of our ‘culture’ which confuses the artful with the rich, the late with the great. Fourthly: I attack only things where any kind of personal difference is excluded, where there is no background of bad experience. On the contrary, to attack is with me a proof of good will, under certain circumstances of gratitude. I do honour, I confer distinction when I associate my name with a cause, a person: for or against – that is in this regard a matter of indifference to me. If I wage war on Christianity I have a right to do so, because I have never experienced anything disagreeable or frustrating from that direction – the most serious Christians have always been well disposed towards me. I myself, an opponent of Christianity de rigueur, am far from bearing a grudge against the individual for what is the fatality of millennia. –

May I venture to indicate one last trait of my nature which creates for me no little difficulty in my relations with others? I possess a perfectly uncanny sensitivity of the instinct for cleanliness, so that I perceive physiologically – smell – the proximity or – what am I saying? – the innermost parts, the ‘entrails’, of every soul ... I have in this sensitivity psychological antennae with which I touch and take hold of every secret: all the concealed dirt at the bottom of many a nature, perhaps conditioned by bad blood but whitewashed by education, is known to me almost on first contact. If I have observed correctly, such natures unendurable to my sense of cleanliness for their part also sense the caution of my disgust:

they do not thereby become any sweeter- smelling ... As has always been customary with me – an extreme cleanliness in relation to me is a presupposition of my existence, I perish under unclean conditions – I swim and bathe and splash continually as it were in water, in any kind of perfectly transparent and glittering element. This makes traffic with people no small test of my patience; my humanity consists, not in feeling for and with man, but in enduring that I do feel for and with him ... My humanity is a continual self-overcoming. – But I have need of solitude, that is to say recovery, return to myself, the breath of a free light playful air ... My entire Zarathustra is a dithyramb on solitude or, if I have been understood, on cleanliness ... Fortunately not on pure folly. – He who has eyes for colours will call it diamond. – Disgust at mankind, at the ‘rabble’, has always been my greatest danger ... Do you want to hear the words in which Zarathustra speaks of redemption from disgust?

Yet what happened to me? How did I free myself from disgust? Who rejuvenated my eyes? How did I fly to the height where the rabble no longer sit at the well?

Did my disgust itself create wings and water- diving powers for me? Truly, I had to fly to the extremest height to find again the fountain of delight!

Oh, I have found it, my brothers! Here, in the extremest height, the fountain of delight gushes up for me! And here there is a life at which no rabble drinks with me!

You gush up almost too impetuously, fountain of delight! And in wanting to fill the cup, you often empty it again.

And I still have to learn to approach you more discreetly: my heart still flows towards you all too impetuously: – my heart, upon which my summer burns, a short, hot, melancholy, over- joyful summer: how my summer- heart longs for your coolness!

Gone is the lingering affliction of my spring! Gone the snowflakes of my malice in June! Summer have I become entirely, and summer- noonday – – a summer at the extremest height with cold fountains and blissful stillness: oh come, my friends, that the stillness may become more blissful yet!

For this is our height and our home: we live too nobly and boldly here for all unclean men and their thirsts.

Only cast your pure eyes into the well of my delight, friends! You will not dim its sparkle! It shall laugh back at you with its purity.

We build our nest in the tree Future: eagles shall bring food to us solitaires in their beaks!

Truly, food in which no unclean men could join us! They would think they were eating fire and burn their mouths.

Truly, we do not prepare a home here for unclean men! Their bodies and their spirits would call our happiness a cave of ice!

So let us live above them like strong winds, neighbours of the eagles, neighbours of the snow, neighbours of the sun: that is how strong winds live.

And like a wind will I one day blow among them and with my spirit take away the breath of their spirit: thus my future will have it.

Truly, Zarathustra is a strong wind to all flatlands; and he offers this advice to his enemies and to all that spews and spits: take care not to spit against the wind! ...

Why I Am so Clever

Why do I know a few more things? Why am I so clever altogether? I have never reflected on questions that are none – I have not squandered myself. – I have, for example, no experience of actual religious difficulties. I am entirely at a loss to know to what extent I ought to have felt ‘sinful’. I likewise lack a reliable criterion of a pang of conscience: from what one hears of it, a pang of conscience does not seem to me anything respectable ... I should not like to leave an act in the lurch afterwards, I would as a matter of principle prefer to leave the evil outcome, the consequences, out of the question of values. When the outcome is evil one can easily lose the true eye for what one has done: a pang of conscience seems to me a kind of ‘evil eye’. To honour to oneself something that went wrong all the more because it went wrong – that rather would accord with my morality. – ‘God’, ‘immortality of the soul’, ‘redemption’, ‘the Beyond’, all of them concepts to which I have given no attention and no time, not even as a child – perhaps I was never childish enough for it? – I have absolutely no knowledge of atheism as an outcome of reasoning, still less as an event: with me it is obvious by instinct. I am too inquisitive, too questionable, too high spirited to rest content with a crude answer. God is a crude answer, a piece of indelicacy against us thinkers – fundamentally even a crude prohibition to us: you shall not think! ... I am interested in quite a different way in a question upon which the ‘salvation of mankind’ depends far more than it does upon any kind of quaint curiosity of the theologians: the question of nutriment. One can for convenience’ sake formulate it thus: ‘how to nourish yourself so as to attain your maximum of strength, of virtù in the Renaissance style, of moraline-free virtue?’ – My experiences here are as bad as they possibly could be; I am astonished that I heard this question so late, that I learned ‘reason’ from these experiences so late. Only the perfect worthlessness of our German education – its ‘idealism’ – can to some extent explain to me why on precisely this point I was backward to the point of holiness. This ‘education’ which from the first teaches one to lose sight of realities so as to hunt after altogether problematic, so-called 'ideal' objectives, 'classical education' for example – as if it were not from the first an utterly fruitless undertaking to try to unite 'classical' and 'German' in one concept! It is, moreover, mirth-provoking – just think of a 'classically educated' Leipziger! – Until my very maturest years I did in fact eat badly – in the language of morals 'impersonally', 'selflessly', 'altruistically', for the salvation of cooks and other fellow Christians. With the aid of Leipzig cookery, for example, which accompanied my earliest study of Schopenhauer (1865), I very earnestly denied my 'will to live'. To ruin one's stomach so as to receive inadequate nutriment – the aforesaid cookery seems to me to solve this problem wonderfully well. (It is said that 1866 produced a change in this domain –.) But German cookery in general – what does it not have on its conscience! Soup before the meal (in Venetian cookery books of the sixteenth century still called alla tedesca) ; meat cooked to shreds, greasy and floury vegetables; the degeneration of puddings to paperweights! If one adds to this the downright bestial dinner-drinking habits of the ancient and by no means only the ancient Germans one will also understand the origin of the German spirit – disturbed intestines ... The German spirit is an indigestion, it can have done with nothing. – But to the English diet too, which compared with the Germans, even with the French, is a kind of 'return to nature', that is to say to cannibalism, my own instinct is profoundly opposed; it seems to me to give the spirit heavy feet – the feet of Englishwomen ... The best cookery is that of Piedmont. Alcoholic drinks are no good for me; a glass of wine or beer a day is quite enough to make life for me a 'Vale of Tears' – Munich is where my antipodes live. Granted I was a little late to grasp this – I experienced it really from childhood onwards. As a boy I believed wine-drinking to be, like tobaccosmoking, at first only a vanity of young men, later a habit. Perhaps the wine of Naumburg is in part to blame for this austere judgement. To believe that wine makes cheerful I would have to be a Christian, that is to say believe what is for precisely me an absurdity. Oddly enough, while I am put extremely out of sorts by small, much diluted doses of alcohol, I am almost turned into a sailor when it comes to strong doses. Even as a boy I showed how brave I was in this respect. To write a long Latin essay in a single night's sitting and then go on to make a fair copy of it, with the ambition in my pen to imitate in severity and concision my model Sallust, and to pour a quantity of grog of the heaviest calibre over my Latin, was even when I was a pupil of venerable Schulpforta in no way opposed to my physiology, nor perhaps to that of Sallust – however much it might have been to venerable Schulpforta ... Later, towards the middle of life, I decided, to be sure, more and more strictly against any sort of ‘spirituous’ drink: an opponent of vegetarianism from experience, just like Richard Wagner, who converted me, I cannot advise all more spiritual natures too seriously to abstain from alcohol absolutely. Water suffices ... I prefer places in which there is everywhere opportunity to drink from flowing fountains (Nice, Turin, Sils); a small glass runs after me like a dog. In vino veritas : it seems that here too I am again at odds with all the world over the concept ‘truth’ – with me the spirit moves over the water ... A couple more signposts from my morality. A big meal is easier to digest than one too small. That the stomach comes into action as a whole, first precondition of a good digestion. One has to know the size of one's stomach. For the same reason those tedious meals should be avoided which I call interrupted sacrificial feasts, those at the table d'hôte . – No eating between meals, no coffee: coffee makes gloomy. Tea beneficial only in the morning. Little, but strong: tea very detrimental and sicklyng o'er the whole day if it is the slightest bit too weak. Each has here his own degree, often between the narrowest and most delicate limits. In a very agaçant climate it is inadvisable to start with tea: one should start an hour earlier with a cup of thick oil- free cocoa. – Sit as little as possible; credit no thought not born in the open air and while moving freely about – in which the muscles too do not hold a festival. All prejudices come from the intestines. – Assiduity – I have said it once before – the actual sin against the holy spirit. –

Most closely related to the question of nutriment is the question of place and climate . No one is free to live everywhere; and he who has great tasks to fulfil which challenge his entire strength has indeed in this matter a very narrow range of choice. The influence of climate on the metabolism , its slowing down, its speeding up, extends so far that a blunder in regard to place and climate can not only estrange anyone from his task but withhold it from him altogether: he never catches sight of it. His animalic vigor never grows sufficiently great for him to attain to that freedom overflowing into the most spiritual domain where he knows: that I alone can do ... A never so infinitesimal sluggishness of the intestines grown into a bad habit completely suffices to transform a genius into something mediocre, something 'German'; the German climate alone is enough to discourage strong and even heroic intestines. The tempo of the metabolism stands in an exact relationship to the mobility or lameness of the feet of the spirit; the 'spirit' itself is indeed only a species of this metabolism. Make a list of the places where there are and have been gifted men, where wit, refinement, malice are a part of happiness, where genius has almost necessarily made its home: they all possess an excellent dry air. Paris, Provence, Florence, Jerusalem, Athens – these names prove something: that genius is conditioned by dry air, clear sky – that is to say by rapid metabolism, by the possibility of again and again supplying oneself with great, even tremendous quantities of energy. I have in mind a case in which a spirit which might have become significant and free became instead narrow, withdrawn, a grumpy specialist, merely through a lack of instinctive subtlety in choice of climate. And I myself could in the end have become this case if sickness had not compelled me to reason, to reflect on reason in reality. Now, when from long practice I read climatic and meteorological effects off from myself as from a very delicate and reliable instrument and even on a short journey, from Turin to Milan for instance, verify on myself physiologically the change in degrees of humidity, I recall with horror the uncanny fact that my life up to the last ten years, the years when my life was in danger, was spent nowhere but in wrong places downright forbidden to me. Naumburg, Schulpforta, Thuringia in general, Leipzig, Basel, Venice – so many ill-fated places for my physiology. If I have no welcome memories at all of my whole childhood and youth, it would be folly to attribute this to so-called 'moral' causes – the undeniable lack of adequate company, for instance: for this lack exists today as it has always existed without preventing me from being brave and cheerful. Ignorance in physiologis – accursed 'idealism' – is the real fatality in my life, the superfluous and stupid in it, something out of which nothing good grows, for which there is no compensation, no counter-reckoning. It is as a consequence of this 'idealism' that I elucidate to myself all the blunders, all the great deviations of instinct and 'modesties' which led me away from the task of my life, that I became a philologist for example – why not at least a physician or something else that opens the eyes? In my time at Basel my entire spiritual diet, the division of the day included, was a perfectly senseless abuse of extraordinary powers without any kind of provision for covering this consumption, without even reflection on consumption and replacement. Any more subtle selfishness, any protection by a commanding instinct was lacking, it was an equating of oneself with everyone else, a piece of ‘selflessness’, a forgetting of one’s distance – something I shall never forgive myself. When I was almost done for, because I was almost done for, I began to reflect on this fundamental irrationality of my life – ‘idealism’. It was only sickness that brought me to reason.

Selectivity in nutriment; selectivity in climate and place; – the third thing in which one may at no cost commit a blunder is selectivity in one’s kind of recreation. Here too the degree to which a spirit is sui generis makes ever narrower the bounds of what is permitted, that is to say useful to him. In my case all reading is among my recreations: consequently among those things which free me from myself, which allow me to saunter among strange sciences and souls – which I no longer take seriously. It is precisely reading which helps me to recover from my seriousness. At times when I am deeply sunk in work you will see no books around me: I would guard against letting anyone speak or even think in my vicinity. And that is what reading would mean ... Has it really been noticed that in that state of profound tension to which pregnancy condemns the spirit and fundamentally the entire organism, any chance event, any kind of stimulus from without has too vehement an effect, ‘cuts’ too deeply? One has to avoid the chance event, the stimulus from without, as much as possible; a kind of self- walling- up is among the instinctual sagacities of spiritual pregnancy. Shall I allow a strange thought to climb secretly over the wall? – And that is what reading would mean ... The times of work and fruitfulness are followed by the time of recreation: come hither, you pleasant, you witty, you clever books! Will they be German books? ... I have to reckon back half a year to catch myself with a book in my hand. But what was it? – An excellent study by Victor Brochard, les sceptiques Grecs, in which my Laertiana are also well employed. The Sceptics, the only honourable type among the two- and five- fold ambiguous philosophical crowd! ... Otherwise I take flight almost always to the same books, really a small number, those books which have proved themselves precisely to me. It does not perhaps lie in my nature to read much or many kinds of things: a reading room makes me ill. Neither does it lie in my nature to love much or many kinds of things. Caution, even hostility towards new books is rather part of my instinct than 'tolerance', 'largeur du coeur' and other forms of 'neighbour love' ... It is really only a small number of older Frenchmen to whom I return again and again: I believe only in French culture and consider everything in Europe that calls itself 'culture' a misunderstanding, not to speak of German culture ... The few instances of high culture I have encountered in Germany have all been of French origin, above all Frau Cosima Wagner, by far the first voice I have heard in questions of taste. – That I do not read Pascal but love him, as the most instructive of all sacrifices to Christianity, slowly murdered first physically then psychologically, the whole logic of this most horrible form of inhuman cruelty; that I have something of Montaigne's wantonness in my spirit, who knows? perhaps also in my body; that my artist's taste defends the names Molière, Corneille and Racine, not without wrath, against a disorderly genius such as Shakespeare: this does not ultimately exclude my finding the most recent Frenchmen also charming company. I cannot at all conceive in which century of history one could haul together such inquisitive and at the same time such delicate psychologists as one can in contemporary Paris: I name as a sample – for their number is by no means small, Messrs Paul Bourget, Pierre Loti, Gyp, Meilhac, Anatole France, Jules Lemaitre, or to pick out one of the stronger race, a genuine Latin to whom I am especially attached, Guy de Maupassant. Between ourselves, I prefer this generation even to their great teachers, who have all been ruined by German philosophy (M. Taine for example by Hegel, whom he has to thank for this misunderstanding of great human beings and ages). As far as Germany extends it ruins culture. It was only the war that 'redeemed' the spirit in France ... Stendhal, one of the fairest accidents of my life – for whatever marks an epoch in my life has been brought to me by accident, never by a recommendation – is utterly invaluable with his anticipating psychologist's eye, with his grasp of facts which reminds one of the proximity of the greatest man of the factual (ex ungue Napoleonem –); finally not least as an honest atheist, a rare, almost undiscoverable species in France – with all deference to Prosper Mérimée ... Perhaps I am even envious of Stendhal? He robbed me of the best atheist joke which precisely I could have made: ‘God's only excuse is that he does not exist’ ... I myself have said somewhere: what has hitherto been the greatest objection to existence? God ...

The highest conception of the lyric poet was given me by Heinrich Heine. I seek in vain in all the realms of millennia for an equally sweet and passionate music. He possesses that divine malice without which I cannot imagine perfection – I assess the value of people, of races according to how necessarily they are unable to separate the god from the satyr. – And how he employs German! It will one day be said that Heine and I have been by far the first artists of the German language – at an incalculable distance from everything which mere Germans have done with it. – I must be profoundly related to Byron's Manfred: I discovered all these abysses in myself – I was ripe for this work at thirteen. I have no words, only a look for those who dare to say the word Faust in the presence of Manfred. The Germans are incapable of any conception of greatness: proof Schumann. Expressly from wrath against this sugary Saxon, I composed a counter- overture to Manfred, of which Hans von Bülow said he had never seen the like on manuscript paper: it constituted a rape on Euterpe. – When I seek my highest formula for Shakespeare I find it always in that he conceived the type of Caesar. One cannot guess at things like this – one is it or one is not. The great poet creates only out of his own reality – to the point at which he is afterwards unable to endure his own work ... When I have taken a glance at my Zarathustra I walk up and down my room for half an hour unable to master an unendurable spasm of sobbing. – I know of no more heartrending reading than Shakespeare: what must a man have suffered to need to be a buffoon to this extent! – Is Hamlet understood? It is not doubt, it is certainty which makes mad ... But to feel in this way one must be profound, abyss, philosopher ... We all fear truth ... And, to confess it: I am instinctively certain that Lord Bacon is the originator, the self- tormentor of this uncanniest species of literature: what do I care about the pitiable chatter of American shallow- pates and muddle- heads? But the power for the mightiest reality of vision is not only compatible with the mightiest power for action, for the monstrous in action, for crime – it even presupposes it ... We do not know nearly enough about Lord Bacon, the first realist in every great sense of the word, to know what he did, what he wanted, what he experienced within himself ... And the devil take it, my dear critics! Supposing I had baptized my Zarathustra with another name, for example with the name of Richard Wagner, the perspicuity of two millennia would not have sufficed to divine that the author of ‘Human, All Too Human’ is the visionary of Zarathustra ...

Here where I am speaking of the recreations of my life, I need to say a word to express my gratitude for that which of all things in it has refreshed me by far the most profoundly and cordially. This was without any doubt my intimate association with Richard Wagner. I offer all my other human relationships cheap; but at no price would I relinquish from my life the Tribschen days, those days of mutual confidences, of cheerfulness, of sublime incidents – of profound moments ... I do not know what others may have experienced with Wagner: over our sky no cloud ever passed. – And with that I return again to France – I cannot spare reasons, I can spare a mere curl of the lip for Wagnerians et hoc genus omne who believe they are doing honour to Wagner when they find him similar to themselves ... Constituted as I am, a stranger in my deepest instincts to everything German, so that the mere presence of a German hinders my digestion, my first contact with Wagner was also the first time in my life I ever drew a deep breath: I felt, I revered him as a being from outside, as the opposite, the incarnate protest against all ‘German virtues’. – We who were children in the swamp- air of the fifties are necessarily pessimists regarding the concept ‘German’; we cannot be anything but revolutionaries – we shall acquiesce in no state of things in which the bigot is on top. It is a matter of complete indifference to me if today he plays in different colours, if he dresses in scarlet and dons the uniform of a hussar ... Very well! Wagner was a revolutionary – he fled from the Germans ... As an artist one has no home in Europe except in Paris: the délicatesse in all five senses of art which Wagner's art presupposes, the fingers for nuances, the psychological morbidity, is to be found only in Paris. Nowhere else does there exist such a passion in questions of form, this seriousness in mise en scène – it is the Parisian seriousness par excellence . There is in Germany absolutely no conception of the tremendous ambition which dwells in the soul of a Parisian artist. The German is good-natured – Wagner was by no means good-natured ... But I have already said sufficient (in ‘Beyond Good and Evil’ §256) as to where Wagner belongs, in whom he has his closest relatives: the French late romantics, that high-flying and yet exhilarating kind of artists such as Delacroix, such as Berlioz, with a fond of sickness, of incurability in their nature, sheer fanatics for expression , virtuosi through and through ... Who was the first intelligent adherent of Wagner? Charles Baudelaire, the same as was the first to understand Delacroix, that typical décadent in whom an entire race of artists recognized themselves – he was perhaps also the last ... What I have never forgiven Wagner? That he condescended to the Germans – that he became reichsdeutsch ... As far as Germany extends it ruins culture. –

All in all I could not have endured my youth without Wagnerian music. For I was condemned to Germans. If one wants to get free from an unendurable pressure one needs hashish. Very well, I needed Wagner. Wagner is the counter-poison to everything German par excellence – still poison, I do not dispute it ... From the moment there was a piano score of Tristan – my compliments, Herr von Bülow! – I was a Wagnerian. The earliest works of Wagner I saw as beneath me – still too common, too ‘German’ ... But I still today seek a work of a dangerous fascination, of a sweet and shuddery infinity equal to that of Tristan – I seek in all the arts in vain. All the strangenesses of Leonardo da Vinci lose their magic at the first note of Tristan. This work is altogether Wagner's non plus ultra ; he recuperated from it with the Meistersinger and the Ring. To become healthier – that is retrogression in the case of a nature such as Wagner ... I take it for a piece of good fortune of the first rank to have lived at the right time, and to have lived precisely among Germans, so as to be ripe for this work: my psychologist's inquisitiveness goes that far. The world is poor for him who has never been sick enough for this ‘voluptuousness of hell’: to employ a mystic's formula is permissible, almost obligatory, here. I think I know better than anyone what tremendous things Wagner was capable of, the fifty worlds of strange delights to which no one but he had wings; and as I am strong enough to turn even the most questionable and most perilous things to my own advantage and thus to become stronger, I call Wagner the great benefactor of my life. That in which we are related, that we have suffered more profoundly, from one another also, than men of this century are capable of suffering, will eternally join our names together again and again; and as surely as Wagner is among Germans merely a misunderstanding, just as surely am I and always will be. – Two centuries of psychological and artistic discipline first , my Herr Germans! ... But one cannot catch up that amount. –

I shall say another word for the most select ears: what I really want from music. That it is cheerful and profound, like an afternoon in October. That it is individual, wanton, tender, a little sweet woman of lowness and charm ... I shall never admit that a German could know what music is. What one calls German musicians, the greatest above all, are foreigners , Slavs, Croats, Italians, Netherlanders – or Jews: otherwise Germans of the strong race, extinct Germans, like Heinrich Schütz, Bach and Handel. I myself am still sufficient of a Pole to exchange the rest of music for Chopin; for three reasons I exclude Wagner's Siegfried Idyll, perhaps also a few things by Liszt, who excels all other musicians in the nobility of his orchestral tone; finally all that has grown up beyond the Alps – this side ... I would not know how to get on without Rossini, even less without my south in music, the music of my Venetian maestro Pietro Gasti . And when I say beyond the Alps I am really saying only Venice. When I seek another word for music I never find any other word than Venice. I do not know how to distinguish between tears and music – I do not know how to think of happiness, of the south , without a shudder of faintheartedness.

Lately I stood at the bridge in the brown night.

From afar there came a song:

a golden drop, it swelled across the trembling surface.

Gondolas, lights, music –
drunken it swam out into the gloom ...
My soul, a stringed instrument, touched by invisible hands
sang to itself in reply a gondola song, and trembled with gaudy happiness.
– Was anyone listening?

In all this – in selection of nutriment, of place and climate, of recreation – there commands a n i n s t i n c t o f s e l f p r e s e r v a t i o n which manifests itself most unambiguously as an instinct for self-defence. Not to see many things, not to hear them, not to let them approach one – first piece of ingenuity, first proof that one is no accident but a necessity. The customary word for this self-defensive instinct is taste. Its imperative commands, not only to say No when Yes would be a piece of ‘selflessness’, but also to say No as little as possible. To separate oneself, to depart from that to which No would be required again and again. The rationale is that defensive expenditures, be they never so small, become a rule, a habit, lead to an extraordinary and perfectly superfluous impoverishment. Our largest expenditures are our most frequent small ones. Warding off, not letting come close, is an expenditure – one should not deceive oneself over this – a strength squandered on negative objectives. One can merely through the constant need to ward off become too weak any longer to defend oneself. – Suppose I were to step out of my house and discover, instead of calm and aristocratic Turin, the German provincial town: my instinct would have to blockade itself so as to push back all that pressed upon it from this flat and cowardly world. Or suppose I discovered the German metropolis, that builded vice where nothing grows, where every kind of thing, good and bad, is dragged in. Would I not in face of it have to become a hedgehog? – But to have spikes is an extravagance, a double luxury even if one is free to have no spikes but open hands

...

Another form of sagacity and self- defence consists in reacting as seldom as possible and withdrawing from situations and relationships in which one would be condemned as it were to suspend one's 'freedom', one's initiative, and become a mere reagent. I take as a parable traffic with books. The scholar, who really does nothing but 'trundle' books – the philologist at a modest assessment about 200 a day – finally loses altogether the ability to think for himself. If he does not trundle he does not think. He replies to a stimulus (– a thought he has read) when he thinks – finally he does nothing but react. The scholar expends his entire strength in affirmation and denial, in criticizing what has already been thought – he himself no longer thinks ... The instinct for self- defence has in his case become soft; otherwise he would defend himself against books. The scholar – a décadent . – This I have seen with my own eyes: natures gifted, rich and free already in their thirties 'read to ruins', mere matches that have to be struck if they are to ignite – emit 'thoughts'. – Early in the morning at the break of day, in all the freshness and dawn of one's strength, to read a book – I call that vicious! –

At this point I can no longer avoid actually answering the question how one becomes what one is . And with that I touch on the masterpiece in the art of self- preservation – of selfishness ... For assuming that the task, the vocation, the destiny of the task exceeds the average measure by a significant degree, there would be no greater danger than to catch sight of oneself with this task. That one becomes what one is presupposes that one does not have the remotest idea what one is. From this point of view even the blunders of life – the temporary sidepaths and wrong turnings, the delays, the 'modesties', the seriousness squandered on tasks which lie outside the task – have their own meaning and value. They are an expression of a great sagacity, even the supreme sagacity: where nosce te ipsum would be the recipe for destruction, self-forgetfulness, self- misunderstanding , selfdiminution, -narrowing, -mediocratizing becomes reason itself. Expressed morally: love of one's neighbour, living for others and other things can be the defensive measure for the preservation of the sternest selfishness. This is the exceptional case in which I, contrary to my rule and conviction, take the side of the 'selfless' drives: here they work in the service of selfishness, self-cultivation. – The entire surface of consciousness – consciousness is a surface – has to be kept clear of any of the great imperatives. Even the grand words, the grand attitudes must be guarded against! All of them represent a danger that the instinct will 'understand itself' too early —. In the meantime the organizing 'idea' destined to rule grows and grows in the depths – it begins to command, it slowly leads back from sidepaths and wrong turnings, it prepares individual qualities and abilities which will one day prove themselves indispensable as means to achieving the whole – it constructs the ancillary capacities one after the other before it gives any hint of the dominating task, of the 'goal', 'objective', 'meaning'. – Regarded from this side my life is simply wonderful. For the task of a revaluation of values more capacities perhaps were required than have dwelt together in one individual, above all antithetical capacities which however are not allowed to disturb or destroy one another. Order of rank among capacities; distance; the art of dividing without making inimical; mixing up nothing, 'reconciling' nothing; a tremendous multiplicity which is none the less the opposite of chaos – this has been the precondition, the protracted secret labour and artistic working of my instinct. The magnitude of its higher protection was shown in the fact I have at no time had the remotest idea what was growing within me – that all my abilities one day leapt forth suddenly ripe, in their final perfection. I cannot remember ever having taken any trouble – no trace of struggle can be discovered in my life, I am the opposite of an heroic nature. To 'want' something, to 'strive' after something, to have a 'goal', a 'wish' in view – I know none of this from experience. Even at this moment I look out upon my future – a distant future ! – as upon a smooth sea: it is ruffled by no desire. I do not want in the slightest that anything should become other than it is; I do not want myself to become other than I am ... But that is how I have always lived. I have harboured no desire. Someone who after his forty-fourth year can say he has never striven after honours, after women, after money ! – Not that I could not have had them ... Thus, for example, I one day became a university professor – I had never had the remotest thought of such a thing, for I was barely twenty-four years old. Thus two years earlier I was one day a philologist: in the sense that my first philological work, my beginning in any sense, was requested by my teacher Ritschl for his 'Rheinisches Museum'. (Ritschl – I say it with respect – the only scholar gifted with genius whom I have encountered up to the present day. He was characterized by that pleasant depravity which distinguishes us Thuringians and which can render even a German sympathetic – to get to the truth we even prefer to go by secret paths. I should not with these words like to have in any way undervalued my close compatriot, the sagacious Leopold von Ranke ...)

I shall be asked why I have really narrated all these little things which according to the traditional judgement are matters of indifference: it will be said that in doing so I harm myself all the more if I am destined to fulfil great tasks. Answer: these little things – nutriment, place, climate, recreation, the whole casuistry of selfishness – are beyond all conception of greater importance than anything that has been considered of importance hitherto. It is precisely here that one has to begin to learn anew. Those things which mankind has hitherto pondered seriously are not even realities, merely imaginings, more strictly speaking lies from the bad instincts of sick, in the profoundest sense injurious natures – all the concepts 'God', 'soul', 'virtue', 'sin', 'the Beyond', 'truth', 'eternal life' ... But the greatness of human nature, its 'divinity', has been sought in them ... All questions of politics, the ordering of society, education have been falsified down to their foundations because the most injurious men have been taken for great men – because contempt has been taught for the 'little' things, which is to say for the fundamental affairs of life ... Now, when I compare myself with the men who have hitherto been honoured as pre-eminent men the distinction is palpable. I do not count these supposed 'pre-eminent men' as belonging to mankind at all – to me they are the refuse of mankind, abortive offspring of sickness and vengeful instincts: they are nothing but pernicious, fundamentally incurable monsters who take revenge on life ... I want to be the antithesis of this: it is my privilege to possess the highest subtlety for all the signs of healthy instincts. Every morbid trait is lacking in me; even in periods of severe illness I did not become morbid; a trait of fanaticism will be sought in vain in my nature. At no moment of my life can I be shown to have adopted any kind of arrogant or pathetic posture. The pathos of attitudes does not belong to greatness; whoever needs attitudes at all is false ... Beware of all picturesque men! – Life has been easy for me, easiest when it demanded of me the most difficult things. Anyone who saw me during the seventy days of this autumn when I was uninterruptedly creating nothing but things of the first rank which no man will be able to do again or has done before, bearing a responsibility for all the coming millennia, will have noticed no trace of tension in me, but rather an overflowing freshness and cheerfulness. I never ate with greater relish, I never slept better. – I know of no other way of dealing with great tasks than that of play : this is, as a sign of greatness, an essential precondition. The slightest constraint, the gloomy mien, any kind of harsh note in the throat are all objections to a man, how much more to his work! ... One must have no nerves ... To suffer from solitude is likewise an objection – I have always suffered only from the ‘multitude’ ... At an absurdly early age, at the age of seven, I already knew that no human word would ever reach me: has anyone ever seen me sad on that account? – Still today I treat everyone with the same geniality, I am even full of consideration for the basest people: in all this there is not a grain of arrogance, of secret contempt. He whom I despise divines that I despise him: through my mere existence I enrage everything that has bad blood in its veins ... My formula for greatness in a human being is amor fati : that one wants nothing to be other than it is, not in the future, not in the past, not in all eternity. Not merely to endure that which happens of necessity, still less to dissemble it – all idealism is untruthfulness in the face of necessity – but to love it ...

Why I Write Such Good Books

I am one thing, my writings are another. – Here, before I speak of these writings themselves, I shall touch on the question of their being understood or not understood. I shall do so as perfunctorily as is fitting: for the time for this question has certainly not yet come. My time has not yet come, some are born posthumously. – One day or other institutions will be needed in which people live and teach as I understand living and teaching: perhaps even chairs for the interpretation of Zarathustra will be established. But it would be a complete contradiction of myself if I expected ears and hands for my truths already today: that I am not heard today, that no one today knows how to take from me, is not only comprehensible; it even seems to me right. I do not want to be taken for what I am not – and that requires that I do not take myself for what I am not. To say it again, little of ‘ill will’ can be shown in my life; neither would I be able to speak of barely a single case of ‘literary ill will’. On the other hand all too much of pure folly ! ... It seems to me that to take a book of mine into his hands is one of the rarest distinctions anyone can confer upon himself – I even assume he removes his shoes when he does so – not to speak of boots ... When Doctor Heinrich von Stein once honestly complained that he understood not one word of my Zarathustra, I told him that was quite in order: to have understood, that is to say experienced , six sentences of that book would raise one to a higher level of mortals than ‘modern’ man could attain to. How could I, with this feeling of distance, even want the ‘modern men’ I know – to read me! – My triumph is precisely the opposite of Schopenhauer's – I say ‘non legor , non legar ’ . – Not that I should like to underestimate the pleasure which the innocence in the rejection of my writings has given me. This very summer just gone, at a time when, with my own weighty, too heavily weighty literature, I was perhaps throwing all the rest of literature off its balance, a professor of Berlin University kindly gave me to understand that I ought really to avail myself of a different form: no one read stuff like mine. – In the end it was not

Germany but Switzerland which offered me the two extreme cases. An essay of Dr V. Widmann in the Bund on 'Beyond Good and Evil' under the title 'Nietzsche's Dangerous Book', and a general report on my books as a whole on the part of Herr Karl Spitteler, also in the Bund, constitute a maximum in my life – of what I take care not to say ... The latter, for example, dealt with my Zarathustra as an advanced exercise in style, with the request that I might later try to provide some content; Dr Widmann expressed his respect for the courage with which I strive to abolish all decent feelings. – Through a little trick of chance every sentence here was, with a consistency I had to admire, a truth stood on its head: remarkably enough, all one had to do was to 'revalue all values' in order to hit the nail on the head with regard to me – instead of hitting my head with a nail ... All the more reason for me to attempt an explanation. – Ultimately, no one can extract from things, books included, more than he already knows. What one has no access to through experience one has no ear for. Now let us imagine an extreme case: that a book speaks of nothing but events which lie outside the possibility of general or even of rare experience – that it is the first language for a new range of experiences. In this case simply nothing will be heard, with the acoustical illusion that where nothing is heard there is nothing ... This is in fact my average experience and, if you like, the originality of my experience. Whoever believed he had understood something of me had dressed up something out of me after his own image – not uncommonly an antithesis of me, for instance an 'idealist'; whoever had understood nothing of me denied that I came into consideration at all. – The word 'superman' to designate a type that has turned out supremely well, in antithesis to 'modern' men, to 'good' men, to Christians and other nihilists – a word which, in the mouth of a Zarathustra, the destroyer of morality, becomes a very thoughtful word – has almost everywhere been understood with perfect innocence in the sense of those values whose antithesis makes its appearance in the figure of Zarathustra: that is to say as an 'idealistic' type of higher species of man, half 'saint', half 'genius' ... Other learned cattle caused me on its account to be suspected of Darwinism; even the 'hero cult' of that great unconscious and involuntary counterfeiter Carlyle which I rejected so maliciously has been recognized in it. He into whose ear I whispered he ought to look around rather for a Cesare Borgia than for a Parsifal did not believe his ears. – That I am utterly incurious about discussions of my books, especially by newspapers, will have to be forgiven me. My friends, my publishers know this and do not speak to me about such things. In a particular instance I once had a sight of all the sins that had been committed against a single book – it was ‘Beyond Good and Evil’; I could tell a pretty story about that. Would you believe it that the ‘Nationalzeitung’ – a Prussian newspaper, for my foreign readers – I myself read, if I may say so, only the Journal des Débats – could in all seriousness understand the book as a ‘sign of the times’, as the real genuine Junker philosophy for which the ‘Kreuzzeitung’ merely lacked the courage?

This was said for Germans: for I have readers everywhere else – nothing but choice intelligences of proved character brought up in high positions and duties; I have even real geniuses among my readers. In Vienna, in St Petersburg, in Stockholm, in Copenhagen, in Paris and New York – I have been discovered everywhere: I have not been in Europe's flatland Germany ... And to confess it, I rejoice even more over my non- readers, such as have never heard either my name or the word philosophy; but wherever I go, here in Turin for example, every face grows more cheerful and benevolent at the sight of me. What has flattered me the most is that old market-women take great pains to select together for me the sweetest of their grapes. That is how far one must be a philosopher ... It is not in vain that the Poles are called the French among the Slavs. A charming Russian lady would not mistake for a moment where I belong. I cannot succeed in becoming solemn, the most I can achieve is embarrassment ... To think German, to feel German – I can do everything, but that is beyond my powers ... My old teacher Ritschl went so far as to maintain that I conceived even my philological essays like a Parisian romancier – absurdly exciting. In Paris itself there is astonishment over ‘toutes mes audaces et fineses’ – the expression is Monsieur Taine's –; I fear that with me there is up to the highest forms of the dithyramb an admixture of that salt which never gets soggy – ‘German’ – esprit ... I cannot do otherwise, so help me God! Amen. – We all know, some even know from experience, what a longears is. Very well, I dare to assert that I possess the smallest ears. This is of no little interest to women – it seems to me they feel themselves better understood by me? ... I am the anti- ass par excellence and therewith a world- historical monster – I am, in Greek and not only in Greek, the Anti- Christ ...

I know my privileges as a writer to some extent; in individual cases it has been put to me how greatly habituation to my writings ‘ruins’ taste. One can simply no longer endure other books, philosophical ones least of all. To enter this noble and delicate world is an incomparable distinction – to do so one absolutely must not be a German; it is in the end a distinction one has to have earned. But he who is related to me through loftiness of will experiences when he reads me real ecstasies of learning: for I come from heights no bird has ever soared to, I know abysses into which no foot has ever yet strayed. I have been told it is impossible to put a book of mine down – I even disturb the night's rest ... There is altogether no prouder and at the same time more exquisite kind of book than my books – they attain here and there the highest thing that can be attained on earth, cynicism; one needs the most delicate fingers as well as the bravest fists if one is to master them. Any infirmity of soul excludes one from them once and for all, any dyspepsia, even, does so: one must have no nerves, one must have a joyful belly. Not only does the poverty, the hole- andcorner air of a soul exclude it from them – cowardice, uncleanliness, secret revengefulness in the entrails does so far more: a word from me drives all bad instincts into the face. I have among my acquaintances several experimental animals on whom I bring home to myself the various, very instructively various reactions to my writings. Those who want to have nothing to do with their contents, my so- called friends for example, become ‘impersonal’: they congratulate me on having ‘done it’ again – progress is apparent, too, in a greater cheerfulness of tone ... The completely vicious ‘spirits’, the ‘beautiful souls’, the thoroughly and utterly mendacious have no idea at all what to do with these books – consequently they see the same as beneath them, the beautiful consistency of all ‘beautiful souls’. The horned cattle among my acquaintances, mere Germans if I may say so, give me to understand they are not always of my opinion, though they are sometimes ... I have heard this said even of Zarathustra ... Any ‘feminism’ in a person, or in a man, likewise closes the gates on me: one will never be able to enter this labyrinth of daring knowledge. One must never have spared oneself, harshness must be among one's habits, if one is to be happy and cheerful among nothing but hard truths. When I picture a perfect reader, I always picture a monster of courage and curiosity, also something supple, cunning, cautious, a born adventurer and discoverer. Finally: I would not know how to say better to whom at bottom alone I speak than Zarathustra has said it: to whom alone does he want to narrate his riddle? To you, the bold venturers and adventurers, and whoever has embarked with cunning sails upon dreadful seas, to you who are intoxicated with riddles, who take pleasure in twilight, whose soul is lured with flutes to every treacherous abyss – for you do not desire to feel for a rope with cowardly hand; and where you can guess you hate to calculate ...

I shall at the same time also say a general word on my art of style. To communicate a state, an inner tension of pathos through signs, including the tempo of these signs – that is the meaning of every style; and considering that the multiplicity of inner states is in my case extraordinary, there exists in my case the possibility of many styles – altogether the most manifold art of style any man has ever had at his disposal. Every style is good which actually communicates an inner state, which makes no mistake as to the signs, the tempo of the signs, the gestures – all rules of phrasing are art of gesture. My instinct is here infallible. – Good style in itself – a piece of pure folly, mere 'idealism', on a par with the 'beautiful in itself', the 'good in itself', the 'thing in itself' ... Always presupposing there are ears – that there are those capable and worthy of a similar pathos, that those are not lacking to whom one ought to communicate oneself. – My Zarathustra for example is at present still looking for them – alas! he will have to look for a long time yet! One has to be worthy of assaying him ... And until then there will be no one who comprehends the art which has here been squandered: no one has ever had more of the new, the unheard-of, the really new- created in artistic means to squander. That such a thing was possible in the German language remained to be proved: I myself would previously have most hotly disputed it. Before me one did not know what can be done with the German language – what can be done with language as such. The art of grand rhythm, the grand style of phrasing, as the expression of a tremendous rise and fall of sublime, of superhuman passion, was first discovered by me; with a dithyramb such as the last of the third Zarathustra, entitled 'The Seven Seals', I flew a thousand miles beyond that which has hitherto been called poesy.

That out of my writings there speaks a psychologist who has not his equal, that is perhaps the first thing a good reader will notice – a reader such as I deserve, who reads me as good old philologists read their Horace. The propositions over which everybody is in fundamental agreement – not to speak of everybody's philosophers, the moralists and other hollow- heads and cabbage- heads – appear with me as naive blunders: for example that belief that 'unegoistic' and 'egoistic' are antitheses, while the ego itself is merely a 'higher swindle', an 'ideal'. There are neither egoistic nor u negoistic a ctions: b oth c oncepts a re p sychologically nonsense. Or the proposition 'man strives after happiness' ... Or the proposition 'happiness is the reward of virtue' ... Or the proposition 'pleasure and displeasure are opposites' ... The Circe of mankind, morality, has falsified all psychologica to its very foundations – has moralized it – to the point of the frightful absurdity that love is supposed to be something 'unegoistic' ... One has to be set firmly upon oneself, one has to stand bravely upon one's own two legs, otherwise one cannot love at all. In the long run the little women know that all too well: they play the deuce with selfless, with merely objective men ... Dare I venture in addition to suggest that I know these little women? It is part of my Dionysian endowment. Who knows? perhaps I am the first psychologist of the eternal- womanly. They all love me – an old story: excepting the abortive women, the 'emancipated' who lack the stuff for children. – Happily I am not prepared to be torn to pieces: the complete woman tears to pieces when she loves ... I know these amiable maenads ... Ah, what a dangerous, creeping, subterranean little beast of prey it is! And so pleasant with it! ... A little woman chasing after her revenge would over- run fate itself. – The woman is unspeakably more wicked than the man, also cleverer; goodness in a woman is already a form of degeneration ... At the bottom of all so- called 'beautiful souls' there lies a physiological disadvantage – I shall not say all I could or I should become medicynical. The struggle for equal rights is even a symptom of sickness: every physician knows that. – The more a woman is a woman the more she defends herself tooth and nail against rights in general: for the state of nature, the eternal war between the sexes puts her in a superior position by far. – Have there been ears for my definition of love? it is the only one worthy of a philosopher. Love – in its methods war, in its foundation the mortal hatred of the sexes. Has my answer been heard to the question how one cures – ‘redeems’ – a woman? One makes a child for her. The woman has need of children, the man is always only the means: thus spoke Zarathustra. – ‘Emancipation of woman’ – is the instinctive hatred of the woman who has turned out ill, that is to say is incapable of bearing, for her who has turned out well – the struggle against ‘man’ is always only means, subterfuge, tactic. When they elevate themselves as ‘woman in herself’, as ‘higher woman’, as ‘idealist’ woman, they want to lower the general level of rank of woman; no surer means for achieving that than grammar school education, trousers and the political rights of voting cattle. At bottom the emancipated are the anarchists i n t h e w o r l d o f t h e ‘eternal- womanly’, the under-privileged whose deepest instinct is revenge ... An entire species of the most malevolent ‘idealism’ – which, by the way, also occurs in men, for example in the case of Henrik Ibsen, that typical old maid – has the objective of poisoning the good conscience, the naturalness in sexual love ... And so as to leave no doubt as to my opinion in this matter, which is as honest as it is strict, I would like to impart one more clause of my moral code against vice: with the word vice I combat every sort of anti- nature or, if one likes beautiful words, idealism. The clause reads: ‘The preaching of chastity is a public incitement to anti- nature. Every expression of contempt for the sexual life, every befouling of it through the concept “impure”, is the crime against life – is the intrinsic sin against the holy spirit of life.’

To give an idea of me as a psychologist I take a curious piece of psychology which occurs in ‘Beyond Good and Evil’ – I forbid, by the way, any conjecture as to whom I am describing in this passage: ‘The genius of the heart as it is possessed by that great hidden one, the tempter god and born pried piper of consciences whose voice knows how to descend into the underworld of every soul, who says no word and gives no glance in which there lies no touch of enticement, to whose mastery belongs knowing how to seem – not what he is but what to those who follow him is one constraint more to press ever closer to him, to follow him ever more inwardly and thoroughly ... The genius of the heart who makes everything loud and self- satisfied fall silent and teaches it to listen, who smooths rough souls and gives them a new desire to savour – the desire to lie still as a mirror, that the deep sky may mirror itself in them ... The genius of the heart who teaches the stupid and hasty hand to hesitate and grasp more delicately; who divines the hidden and forgotten treasure, the drop of goodness and sweet spirituality under thick and opaque ice, and is a divining- rod for every grain of gold which has lain long in the prison of much mud and sand ... The genius of the heart from whose touch everyone goes away richer, not favoured and surprised, not as if blessed and oppressed with the goods of others, but richer in himself, newer to himself than before, broken open, blown upon and sounded out by a thawing wind, more uncertain perhaps, more delicate, more fragile, more broken, but full of hopes that as yet have no names, full of new will and current, full of new ill will and counter current ...’

鸭子与袋鼠

鸭子对袋鼠说：

“天哪！你的跳跃可真行！

田野、河流你都能一跃而过，

就好像你永远都不会停！

这片脏池塘里无聊的生活就是我的一切，

我好想去看看外面的世界！

我多希望能像你一样跳起跳落！”

鸭子对袋鼠说。

“请载着我去兜风吧！”

鸭子对袋鼠说。

“我会乖乖坐着，只发出一种声音

‘嘎’，

一整天我都会这样做！

我们可以上天入地，去迪地和杰力波里，

跃过大海，踏过陆地——

带我去兜风吧！拜托拜托！”

鸭子对袋鼠说。

袋鼠对鸭子说：

“这你得让我想一想；

也许这件事会将幸运带给我，

除了一件事以外一切无妨，

那就是，如果你允许我直白地讲，

你的两只脚蹼又湿又凉，

很可能让风湿找上我！”

袋鼠说。

鸭子说：“当时我在石头上坐下，
深思熟虑了这件事，
我带来了四双精纺毛袜，
仿佛就是为我相连的脚蹼定制。
为了抵御寒风我带了一件斗篷，
我还会每天点一支雪茄，烟雾蒙蒙，
这一切都是因为我爱你这只袋鼠，
我真挚热烈的爱让一切都不辛苦！”

袋鼠说：“我已经准备好！

月光清冷的夜晚我们就出发；
但为了我的平衡，亲爱的鸭子，坐稳了别摔倒！
我尾巴的末端位置就是最佳！”
于是它们助跑起跳，
围着整个地球绕了三绕；
还有谁能比鸭子和袋鼠，有谁，
比鸭子和袋鼠更心满意足？

猫头鹰与猫

猫头鹰与猫出海航行，离开了陆地，
交通工具是一艘美丽的豆绿色小船，
行李是一些蜂蜜，和很多很多钱币，
被他们用五英镑的纸币裹成了一团。

猫头鹰抬头望着天上的星星，
伴着小小的吉他开始歌唱：
“哦可爱的小猫！哦小猫，我的爱情，
你看你多么漂亮，
漂亮，漂亮！

你看你多么漂亮！”

猫对猫头鹰说道：“你这只优雅的鸟！
你的歌声多么甜美动听！

让我们结婚吧！我们已经等了太久呀：
但我们没有戒指怎么行？”

他们扬帆向前，度过了一年零一天，
来到了参天大树生长的地方，
这里的森林深处，站着一只小猪，
一枚鼻环套在他的鼻尖上，
鼻尖上，
鼻尖上，
一枚鼻环套在他的鼻尖上。

“亲爱的小猪，你是否愿意我们拿一先令来换
你的鼻环？”小猪说：“我愿意。”

于是他们拿走了鼻环当作戒指，第二天就办好了婚事，

证婚人是一只住在山坡上的火鸡。
他们享用着肉末和切好的榲桲，
带着三尖头的叉匙是他们的餐具；
他们手拉着手，站在沙滩的尽头，
他们翩翩起舞，月色如玉，
月色如玉，
月色如玉，
他们翩翩起舞，月色如玉。

扫帚、铲子、拨火棍与钳子

扫帚和铲子，有拨火棍与钳子来陪同，
他们一起乘着马车把公园逛，
他们每个人都唱了一首歌，叮啊咚，
叮啊咚，
他们唱完就又回到了黑乎乎的地方。
拨火棍先生在马车里坐得挺拔，
钳子先生发出了响声哗啦哗啦，
铲子小姐一袭黑衣（别着胸花），
扫帚夫人身着蓝色（缎带斜搭）。
叮啊咚！叮啊咚！
他们都各自唱了一通！
“哦，铲子姑娘你多么漂亮！”拨火棍唱颂，
“你完美地俘获了我的心！
叮啊咚！叮啊咚！如果我的歌
让你满意认同，
我将喂你吃凉苹果馅饼！
当你铲起煤堆，声音清脆犹存，
你为我的生活带来了无比的惊喜！
你的鼻子亮闪闪！你的头颅圆滚滚！
你的身体苗条又充满活力！
叮啊咚！叮啊咚！
我的歌是否让你心动？”
“唉！扫帚夫人！”钳子在他的歌唱中叹息心痛，
“哦，是否因为我太瘦，

我的双腿又太长，显得与众不同——叮啊咚！

叮啊咚！

所以我在你心里什么地位也没有？

啊！最优雅美丽的尤物，当你将房间里的灰尘扫走，

啊！你为何不理睬我的哭诉！

你一定要如此残忍吗，你这只美丽的扫帚，

这是否因为你全身上下油漆遍布？

叮啊咚！叮啊咚！

你可真是大错特错，一点儿也不懂！”

扫帚夫人和铲子小姐一齐唱起：

“你们今天唱的都是些什么胡言乱语！”

铲子说：“我绝对要当啷一声敲醒你！”

扫帚说：“我要把你扫出去！”

于是马车夫以最快的速度往家中驶去，

因为他察觉到了他们的愤怒与痛苦；

但他们烧上了一壶水，于是过了一会儿，

他们又都重新将笑容展露。

叮啊咚！叮啊咚！

这就是我的歌的全部内容！

棉布馅饼

棉布馅饼，
小鸟飞行，
飞上棉布树，
他们的翅膀蓝得炫目，
他们唱着“嘀里嘟噜”！
直到他们飞向别处——
后来他们再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
他们再也没有回到我的身边！
棉布果酱，
小鱼徜徉，
徜徉在乳酒冻的大海，
他将他的帽子拿起，
给比目鱼和鲱鱼行了个礼，
还有那只噼里啪啦的东西——
但是他再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
他再也没有回到我的身边！
棉布禁令，
小老鼠奔跑不停，
赶着去参加茶话会，
吸溜吸溜，滴答滴答，

他们喝光了茶，
在茶杯里舞动踢踏——
但是他们再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
他们再也没有回到我的身边！
棉布乐鼓，
蚂蚱出入，
还有蝴蝶、甲虫和蜜蜂，
大地被他们围绕，
一圈一圈嬉闹，
一起一落，一蹦一跳——
但是他们再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
再也没有回到我的身边！
他们再也没有回到我的身边！

樟布利人

驶入大海，他们乘着漏筛，是的，
乘着漏筛，他们驶入了大海：
他们不顾朋友的劝言，
在冬日的一个早晨，狂风骤雨的一天，
乘着漏筛，他们驶入了大海！
漏筛在海上一圈一圈转着，
每个人都喊道：“你们会被淹死的！”
他们大声嚷道：“虽然我们的漏筛不大，
但我们一点儿都不在乎！我们一点儿都不怕！
我们要乘着漏筛，驶入大海！”
遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
驶入大海，他们乘着漏筛，是的，
乘着漏筛，他们飞速劈开海水，
只有一块豆绿色的美丽布单，
用丝带系着当作船帆，
一只小小烟斗当作船桅；
看着他们驶离岸边的人们都说：
“哦，你知道，他们很快就会丧气失落！
因为天空又昏又暗，旅程又远又长，
不论如何，这都是错误一场，
他们怎能乘着漏筛如此快速地在海上飞！”

遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
海水很快漫进了漏筛，是的，
海水很快漫进了漏筛；
为了不被海水浸湿，他们裹住了双脚，
用一张折叠整齐的粉纸来包，
再用别针将其固定下来。
他们躲在陶罐里迎接夜晚的降临，
他们各自都说：“我们多么聪明！
尽管天空又昏又暗，旅程又远又长，
但我们从不认为这是冲动或是错误一场，
我们就在漏筛里旋转着航海！”
遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
一整晚他们都在海上漂荡；
当太阳下山回家，
伴着一只铜锣的悠悠音色，
他们吹着口哨哼出了一首月亮之歌，
漂流在群山棕色的阴影下。
“哦，意大利馅饼！我们快乐不已，
我们住在漏筛和陶罐里，
一整晚我们沐浴着清冷的月光，
扬着豆绿色的船帆，我们乘风破浪，
漂流在群山棕色的阴影下！”

遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
他们驶入了西海，是的，
那里的陆地树林繁茂，
他们买了一只猫头鹰，一台实用的推车，
一磅大米，蔓越莓甜饼一个，
还有一窝银色的蜜蜂和蜂巢。
他们买了一头猪，几只绿色的寒鸦，
还有一只可爱的猴子，它拥有棒棒糖手爪，
还有四十瓶叮铃叮铃饮料
和无穷无尽的斯蒂尔顿奶酪。

遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
二十年后，他们全员归来，
二十年或是更晚，
每个人都说：“瞧他们现在长得多高！
因为他们曾到过那片海，那个糟糕的地带，
还有波尔禅岭的群山！”
他们为他们的健康干杯，为他们献上了一顿盛宴，
把用美丽的酵母做成的饺子摆在了他们的面前；
每个人都说：“只要我们健在，
我们也要乘着漏筛去航海——
我们也要去波尔禅岭的群山！”
遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，

樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。

求爱的杨以邦以波

在科罗曼德半岛的海岸处，
未成熟的南瓜从空中飘落，
在树林的中央，
住着杨以邦以波。

两把旧椅子和半截蜡烛，
还有一只缺了把手的水壶——
这些便是他的全部家当，
在树林的中央，
这些便是他的全部家当，
它们属于杨以邦以波，
它们属于杨以邦以波。

一天，他散步在参天树林里，
未成熟的南瓜从空中飘落，
那里聚集了几块石礅，
杨以邦以波正好路过。

他听见有人说话，是一位女士，
对着一群雪白的杜金鸡说：
“这是叮当响的琼斯夫人！
坐在这片石礅上的果真
就是叮当响的琼斯夫人！”

杨以邦以波如是说，
杨以邦以波如是说。

“叮当响夫人！叮当响夫人你看！
你坐的地方有未成熟的南瓜从空中飘落，

你是否愿意嫁给我？”

杨以邦以波如是说。

“我受够了孤独的日子、无人陪伴，

在这片布满卵石的荒凉海滩——

我厌倦了这样的生活；

如果你愿意嫁给我，

平静便能降临我的生活！”

杨以邦以波如是说，

杨以邦以波如是说。

“这片科罗曼德半岛的海岸处，

是小虾和豆瓣菜的居所，

大虾又多又便宜得很，”

杨以邦以波如是说，

“你将拥有我的椅子和蜡烛，

还有我缺了把手的水壶！——

瞧瞧这片海翻滚之深

（丰富又便宜，这海里的鱼虾们）；

我的爱就和这片海一样深！”

杨以邦以波如是说，

杨以邦以波如是说。

叮当响夫人开始悲伤地讲起，

她的眼泪也开始掉落——

“你的求婚来得晚了一步，

这位先生，杨以邦以波！

我非常愿意成为你的妻子！”

（这时她开始不停地绞着手指。）

“但我在英国已经有了丈夫！

是的！你的求婚晚了一步，

我在英国已经有了丈夫，
这位先生，杨以邦以波！
这位先生，杨以邦以波！”
“琼斯先生，（亨德尔是他的称呼——
亨德尔·琼斯，他拥有自己的律师事务所。）
是他总乐于送来这些杜金鸡为我消愁，
这位先生，杨以邦以波！
留着吧，哦！留着你的椅子和蜡烛，
还有你缺了把手的水壶——
我只能成为你的朋友！
——如果我的琼斯先生再送来更多的杜金鸡，那时候
我会送给你三只，我的朋友！
这位先生，杨以邦以波！
这位先生，杨以邦以波！”
“尽管你的身体如此瘦小平凡，
尽管你的头比身体大得多得多，
尽管你的帽子随时会被风吹下，
这位先生，杨以邦以波！
虽然你头脑如此简单——
我依旧希望我能换
一种说法说出接下来的话！
能否请你离开，别再牵挂？
这就是我要说的话，
这位先生，杨以邦以波！
这位先生，杨以邦以波！”
走下默特尔湿滑的山坡，
未成熟的南瓜在空中飘摇，
向着那片平静无声的大海，

杨以邦以波飞也似的奔逃。
将哥特尔海湾越过，
那里趴着一只巨大的海龟，生气勃勃。
“你是我的避风港，”他说，“带我离开；
你将驮着我越过大海，
海龟，请你带我离开！”
杨以邦以波如是说，
杨以邦以波如是说。
在那片无声翻滚着的大海上，
海龟全速前进，风风火火；
紧紧抓着它的龟壳的
就是杨以邦以波。
他的样子充满脆弱与悲伤，
面对着波申日落群岛的方向，
海龟依旧稳稳地将他载着，
他则牢牢地抓着它的壳，
“叮当响的琼斯夫人，再见了！”
杨以邦以波如是说，
杨以邦以波如是说。
科罗曼德半岛的海岸处，
那位夫人再也不曾离开过；
在那片石礅上她哀悼着，
哀悼着杨以邦以波。
在科罗曼德半岛的海岸处，
对着他缺了把手的水壶，
她整日哭泣哀怨着；
在那片石礅上坐着的，
是对着杜金鸡的她在哀怨着，

为了杨以邦以波，
为了杨以邦以波。

斯库比皮皮

一天，斯库比皮皮出门了，
那时草是绿的，天是灰的，
斯库比皮皮坐了下来，
世界上所有的野兽都围了过来。
小猫、小狗，和袋鼠，
小羊、小牛，还有荷兰猪，
狼仰天呼号，马对地嘶鸣，
小猪厉声尖叫，驴子喊个不停，
当狮子开始咆哮怒吼，
那样的声音前所未有，
所有的野兽都踮起脚尖，
为了能看到斯库比皮皮一眼。
最后大家对狐狸说：“时至今日，
你是最睿智的野兽，你知道你是！
你快走到斯库比皮皮那里，
和他说‘请你介绍一下你自己！——
因为我们直到现在还在发愁，
你到底是鱼是虫，是鸟是兽’？” 斯库比皮皮随意地向四周一望，
用隆隆的声音开始歌唱：
“哩哩滴滴哩——滴滴哩哩滴——
我唯一的名字就是斯库比皮皮。”
斯库比皮皮站在树顶，离开陆地，
望见了遥远的杰力波里，

世界上所有的鸟儿都围了过来，
成群结队从空中飞来。
秃鹫、老鹰、公鸡和母鸡来报到，
还有鸵鸟、火鸡、沙锥和鹌鹑，
鹦鹉聒噪，乌鸦歌唱，
猫头鹰一言不发，摆出睿智的模样，
当孔雀开始尖叫，
整个世界变得无比吵闹。
所有的鸟儿都抖动着翅膀，
希望能将斯库比皮皮仔细地瞧。
最后大家对猫头鹰说：“时至今日，
你是最睿智的鸟儿——你知道你是！
你快飞到斯库比皮皮那里，
和他说‘请你介绍一下你自己！——
因为我们到现在还不曾知晓，
你到底是鱼是虫，是兽是鸟’？”
斯库比皮皮开心地向四周一望，
用轻快的声音开始歌唱：
“滴滴哩哩滴——哩哩滴滴哩——
我唯一的名字就是斯库比皮皮。”
斯库比皮皮钻进了大海，
就在杰力波里美丽的沙滩一带，
世界上所有的鱼儿都围了过来，
稀里哗啦地将海水劈开，
黍鲱、鲱鱼、比目鱼，
鲨鱼、鲭鱼和蓝色的鲭鱼，
——在扑腾，鼠海豚吐泡泡
——不知所措——

当鲸鱼喷出水柱。

所有的鱼儿都抖动着尾巴，
都把斯库比皮皮认真地观察。

最后大家对鲸鱼说：“时至今日，
你是最庞大的鱼儿——你知道你是！
你快游到斯库比皮皮那里，
和他说‘请你介绍一下你自己！
因为了解你是我们唯一的期许，
你到底是兽是虫，是鸟是鱼’？”

斯库比皮皮温柔地向四周一望，
用咕嘟咕嘟的声音开始歌唱：
“嘻嘻哩哩嘻——哩哩嘻嘻哩——
我唯一的名字就是斯库比皮皮。”

斯库比皮皮坐在树下乘凉，
就在杰力波里安静的海岸旁，
世界上所有的昆虫，
都围着斯库比皮皮旋转颤动。

甲壳虫和——紫色眼睛的
小飞虫还有嗡嗡叫的苍蝇，
蚂蚱、蝴蝶，还有蜘蛛爬行，
马蜂、蜜蜂，以及蓝色的蜻蜓，
当小飞虫开始哼哼
——像悲伤的鼓点一样跳动——

所有的昆虫都卷起了他们的长针，
对着斯库比皮皮看得出了神。

最后大家对蚂蚁说：“时至今日，
你是最睿智的昆虫，你知道你是！
你快溜到斯库比皮皮那里，

和他说‘请你介绍一下你自己！
因为我们不知道，我们也想不通，
你是兽是鱼，是鸟是虫’？”
斯库比皮皮快速地转身回望，
用窸窣窸窣的声音开始歌唱：
“唧唧唧唧——唧唧唧唧——
我唯一的名字就是斯库比皮皮。”
陆地上走的所有野兽
都围成一圈跳舞，手拉着手，
天空中飞的所有鸟类
都围成一圈旋转，来来回回，
杰力波里的所有鱼虾
都围成一圈游动，在那水下，
潜伏爬行的所有昆虫
都围成一圈振动，声音嗡嗡。
他们咆哮、歌唱、低语、叫喊，
直到声音将整个地球充满——
“滴滴哒哒滴！哒哒滴滴哒！
他唯一的名字就是斯库比皮皮。”

狂果王果的帽子

在咯吱树的上头，
坐着一只狂果王果，
但你看不见他的脸和头，
因为他的海狸帽子又宽又阔。
帽子共有三十一米长，
每一侧都有丝带和绷带飘扬，
装饰着铃铛、纽扣、圆环和花边，
这样一来谁也看不见他的脸，
看不见这只狂果王果兽。
狂果王果开始念叨，
他坐在咯吱树上自言自语——
“果酱、果冻还有面包；
这些食物最能让我满意！
但我住在咯吱树上越久，
我就越发觉得无聊难受。
很少有人到这里来，
搞得我的生活百无聊赖！”
说话的是这只狂果王果兽。
但有人来到了咯吱树旁逗留，
原来是金丝雀夫妇；
他们说：“你看看这里头，
从没有哪个地方比这更通透舒服。
我们能不能在你可爱的帽子里做窝？
狂果王果先生，拜托拜托！

哦，请让我们在这里定居筑巢，
什么材料都行，听你的就好，
尊敬的狂果王果兽！”
来到咯吱树的，还有许多其他鸟兽，
有野鹤、鸭子、猫头鹰；
还有蜗牛和大黄蜂在后，
青蛙和扭扭鸡也一起同行
（扭扭鸡的腿是一只螺旋钻）；
大家都说：“我们有一个小小的企求，
请让我们在你可爱的帽子里做窝——
狂果王果先生，拜托拜托！

尊敬的狂果王果兽！”
金色的松鸡也加入了队列之中，
还有那只珀勃，没有脚趾，
和一只奥林匹亚小熊，
还有那只阿冬，长着会发光的鼻子。
还有会吹笛子的蓝色狒狒，
来自图特的东方小牛也来相会，
还有阿特里的烂泥，比斯基的蝙蝠——
大家都来这顶可爱的帽子里住，
而帽子属于狂果王果兽。
狂果王果开始念叨，
他坐在咯吱树上喋喋不休——
“当所有这些生灵开始活动，
那声音该有多么令人渴求！”
到了晚上，桑葚色的月亮从云中展露，
他们随着蓝色狒狒的笛声跳舞，
在咯吱树宽大的绿叶上感受
最极致的快乐和享受，
与这只狂果王果兽。

斯瓦特的阿空德

谁，或是为何，或是哪个，或是什么，才是斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是高是矮，皮肤是黑是白？

他坐凳子、沙发还是要找一把椅子来

或者蹲着，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他聪明还是愚蠢，是青年还是老翁？他的汤和咖啡是否要放到冰冷

还是要加热，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他唱歌还是吹口哨，胡言乱语还是头头是道？他出国旅行是快马加鞭还是走路就到

或者小跑 着踩过车辙，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他戴头巾、毡帽还是檐帽？

他睡软垫、大床还是地毯一条

或者婴儿床 更适合，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

如果碰到用花体字写信的情况，

他是否会给T画上一横、给I的头上

加点 一颗，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他能否把信写得精简又清楚？

没有一丝油点、脏迹和污物

也不滴下斑斑墨色，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是否得到了人民真心的爱戴？

还是只要逮着机会他们就造反起义、为非作歹

在背后暗中谋策，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

如果他抓到了谋逆的人民，不管年老还是年轻，

他会将他们碎尸万段，处以绞刑

还是开枪 扫射，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他的人民是否在路上和公园里抢劫掠夺？

甚至有时日子苦难，只能小偷小摸

最终成了绞刑架 上的空壳，

哦，斯瓦特的阿空德！

他是否会关注自己领土上人民的希冀？

还是他毫不在意

对公众的观点 漠然得透彻，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他的臣民拿什么取悦他？

是用绘画，还是用谁最新的诗作

到底用什么 以作乐，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

如果夜晚他突然尖叫着惊醒，

他们是否会拿几块小蛋糕为他压惊

还是满满 一车，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他最爱的食物是萝卜、茶叶还是牛肚？

条纹是否是他最欣赏的披肩纹路

还是圆点 更让他认可，

斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是否喜欢在船里平躺，
就像那位住在遥远小岛的女人一样

她叫莎洛特，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他性格沉稳内敛，还是整日寻死觅活？
他的侍从是来自瑞士、瑞典还是俄国

或者来自苏格兰 的异乡客，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是喜欢在蓝色的平静大海旁歇脚，
还是在绿色的林间山洞里打鼾睡觉

抑或是巢穴 来得更悠然自得，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他喝的淡啤酒是否用银质的罐子装？还是用碗？玻璃瓶？茶杯？
或者缸？

抑或是用锅 更解渴，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是否会用顶部镶金的烟斗对他的妻子打骂训斥，在她每每忘记
摘下熟过头了的醋栗

甚至腐烂 变色时，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他和朋友进餐时，是否会戴一条白色的领带，整齐地打个蝴蝶
结，两端下垂向外

还是系成扣 就合格，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是否喜欢奶油，痛恨肉饼？
他直视太阳时是否会眨眼睛

还是坚决不眨，直直盯着，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

他是否会教他的臣民烘焙与烧烤？

他是否会航行在内陆湖中绕

驾着游艇，
斯瓦特的阿空德？

我想是否前无古人，后无来者，
知道谁，或是哪个，或是为何，或是什么

才是斯瓦特的阿空德！

腰封怪

一首印度诗 [1]

她坐在她的多比上，
望着傍晚西方天空的金星，
所有经过的普卡都说：
“天哪！你多么玉洁冰清！”
在她周围的树荫处，落叶飘摇，
旁边生长着高高的卡姆萨马，
还有张灯结彩的吉特姆噶
在蓝色的寇基上挂。
在她家下方，河流翻涌而过，
在河水温柔的呼噜声中，
河里长着金色鱼鳍的丘普拉西们，
成群结队地绕着圈游动。
向上望，远处最高的那棵树上，
绿色的阿丫们独自栖息，
整晚都能听见穆萨克的呜呜声，

腰封怪

音调无比悲戚。
紫色的怒拉们
将他们的树枝扔向遥远的地方，
银色的格里瓦拉们
在寂静中并排飞翔，
小比斯提们叽叽喳喳的叫声
在甜美的空气中飘浮，
怒气冲冲的詹盘时时呼号，
在他险恶的洞穴深处。
她坐在她的多比上，
听着尼麦克的低吟，
突然一声叫喊划破空气：
“腰封怪来临！”
她的逃跑全是徒劳——
怪物张开大口，凶猛愤怒，

在救兵赶来之前，
便将这位佳人吞下了肚。
人们连她的一根骨头都没找到，
便无法为她体面地下葬，
他们说：“她的命运太过悲惨！”
就连空气也表示同意：“举世无双。”
他们将她的多比钉在墙上，
就在她最后坐过的位置，
他们在下面写了几句话，
用黄色、蓝色和绿色的墨汁：
小心啊，佳人！佳人，小心！
不要深夜在外独坐暗处，
以免可怕的腰封怪到来，
将你囫囵一口吞下肚。

诗中出现的印地词语本意：

多比（Dobie）：洗衣工。

普卡（Punkah）：拉风，印度旧时悬挂于天花板用绳子拉动的布屏风扇。

卡姆萨马（Kamsamah）：厨师。

吉特姆噶（Kitmutgar）：侍者。

寇基（Tchoki）：警察局。

丘普拉西（Chuprassi）：信使。

阿丫（Ayah）：保姆。

穆萨克（Mussak）：水袋。

怒拉（Nullah）：水渠。

格里瓦拉（Goreewallah）：马倌。

比斯提（Bheestie）：运水的人或工具。

詹盘（Jampan）：轿子。

尼麦克（Nimmak）：盐。

[1] 作者为了增加诗的荒诞感并体现出这是一首“印度”诗，在诗中故意误用了许多印地词语。例如，多比（Dobie）在印地语中原本的意思是“洗衣工”，而作者在诗中使用这个词时，却让其看似有了“座位”的含义。作者本人是清楚地知道这些印地词语的本意的，而他却要故意将它们用在错误的语境下，这样，熟悉这些词语的读者能理解其中的荒诞，从而会心一笑，而不认识这些词语的读者则成功地被作者恶作剧了一番，让这首诗更添了几分诙谐和幽默。

老头的新衣

很久以前，苔丝国住着一位老头，
他自创了一身衣服，前所未有；
待到整套全部做好、完美无缺，
他打开了门，走上了街。
他的帽子是一块黑麦面包，
他的头刚好戴进中间的低凹；
他的衬衫由无数的死老鼠缝制，
它们的皮毛温暖、柔软又舒适；
他的内裤和鞋子是兔皮做的；
他裤袜的皮料却不知是来自谁了；
他的背心和长裤用排骨缝就；
他的纽扣是红枣和巧克力球；
他拿薄饼当外套，果酱镶边，
系束的腰带由一圈饼干相连；
为了抵御恶劣天气，他还披了一件大衣，
大衣用许多白菜叶子缝起。
他只走了几步，就听见巨大的响声传来，
那声音来自各种野兽、鸟类和小男孩；
只见，从城里四面八方的长街暗巷，
无数的野兽、鸟类和小男孩一拥而上。
两只奶牛和一只小牛吃掉了他的白菜大衣；
四只猩猩抢到了他的腰带，饼干瞬间化为空气；
三个小孩将他的薄饼外套吃掉了一半，
一只年老的公羊用他的燕尾服饱餐；

一群野狗开始撕咬，顷刻之间，
排骨背心和长裤就成了它们幼崽的消遣；
正当野狗们低声咆哮着啃噬排骨的时候，
十个小男孩偷走了衣服上的红枣和巧克力球。
老头试着逃跑回家，但一切都是徒劳，
因为前前后后几十头肥猪已经赶到；
它们从猪圈和茅舍夺门而出，
扯下了他的裤袜、鞋子，还有内裤；
这时，尖厉的叫声从屋顶传出，
跳下来的条纹猫、斑点猫、黑白灰猫数不胜数，
它们跳到他的肩上，弄掉了他的面包帽，
乌鸦、鸭子和母鸡混作一团，将帽子彻底干掉；

转眼之间，野猫们又冲向了他袖子的方位，
将他用死老鼠做的衬衫撕碎；
它们将衬衫吃得一干二净，发出一声号叫，
老头这才赤裸着全身往家里跑。
他将大门紧锁时对自己嘀咕：

“我永远不会再穿类似的衣服，
永远也不，永远也不，永远也不，永远也不！”

两位年迈的单身汉

两位年迈的单身汉在一个屋檐下同住；
一位捡到了一块松饼，一位抓到了一只老鼠。
捡到松饼的对抓到老鼠的说道：“这只老鼠
真是雪中送炭！因为家里都快让人没法住，
我们除了一小片柠檬和一茶匙蜂蜜以外什么也没有，
晚餐都不知道吃什么，我们也没有钱采购。
而如果我们一直不吃饭，
我们的牙齿和睫毛都会掉光，我们只会越来越瘦，
没法看。”

抓到老鼠的对捡到松饼的说道：
“我们可以煮了这只小老鼠，但我们要有点儿填料
才好！

如果我们有鼠尾草和洋葱该多美妙，
但不好说这些食材我们该去哪里找！”

两位年迈的单身汉赶紧跑进城中，
走来走去讨要鼠尾草和洋葱；
他们借到了两颗大洋葱，却没有鼠尾草，
商店、市集和所有的花园里都找不到。

但是有人说：“有一座山，就在北方的不远处，
在它垂直的紫色山顶上有一条小路；
在那里的乱石之间居住着一位年老的哲人 [\[2\]](#)，
他非常勤奋，整日研读着最最复杂的书本。”

“爬上山，趁他刻苦地坐着学习时，抓住他的脚指头！
把他拽下山来，切成无穷无尽的小碎肉！

然后把肉末和你的洋葱混合（洋葱也要切成碎末），
这样你的填料就做好了，味道可能非常不错。”

两位年迈的单身汉一刻也没有浪费，
立马爬上了几乎垂直的紫色峭壁，不知疲惫；
到了山顶，在乱石丛中的一个僻静之处，
他们看见了哲人，正在阅读一本巨大无比的书。

“这位勤奋的哲人！”他们大声喊道，

“书你已经读了不少！

我们想把你切成碎块，混合进我们的填料！”

但是年老的哲人平静地抬起了头，

将他手中巨大的书一举

冲着两位年迈的单身汉的光头准确地扔了过去；

二人撞在一起滚下了悬崖峭壁，

经过小路、田野或城镇时都没停止，

等他们滚到了家才发现（不仅填料没有拿到），

老鼠也已经逃跑，跑之前还将松饼也一并吃掉。

他们沉默地离开了家，

走出了曾经让他们开心的那扇门。

从那以后，便再也没有了这两位单身汉的新闻。

[2] 鼠尾草英文为sage，而sage这个词也有哲人的意思。

鼻子会发光的阿冬

可怕的黑夜与寂静
在广袤的格鲁布里安平原降临，
在无比漫长的冬夜里；
海浪愤怒地咆哮呼喊，
拍打着岩石嶙峋的海岸；
暴风雨前的乌云积聚在高耸的峭壁，
那是波尔禅岭的群山：
那时，在无限的黑暗和阴霾中，
似乎有一点星火在移动，
孤独地发出银色的光芒，
穿透了如炭一般黢黑的夜晚，
如一颗流星般奇异亮闪闪：
在这里和那里四处游荡，
一束触目惊心的亮光，形只影单。
那光慢慢地游移、暂停、鬼鬼祟祟，
又迅速地闪烁、惊现、跳跃起飞；
随着光芒继续向前行走，
光辉照射在了参天大树的枝头。
从礼堂、阳台和耸立的高塔上，
人们朝窗外的午夜时分张望，
跟随那无拘无束光芒的行踪，
人们喊道：“阿冬！阿冬！”
阿冬又一次游走在树林里！
阿冬！阿冬！

阿冬有着会发光的鼻子！”

许许多多年前，

阿冬终日开心快乐，

直到一位樟布利姑娘登上岸，

那天他坠入了爱河。

樟布利人们乘着漏筛到来，是的，

他们傍晚登陆的地点靠近泽莫里菲德，

矩形的牡蛎生长在海边，

光滑的石头泛着灰色。

树林里和山谷中传来回响，

是樟布利人们不分昼夜在歌唱：

遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，

樟布利人就从那样的地方来；

他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，

他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。

那些日子是多么令人愉快！

樟布利人们还没有离开；

他们整晚围成一圈舞蹈，

被兴奋的阿冬吹奏的忧伤笛声围绕，

月光下、树荫里，都有他们的身影在。

几天几夜阿冬都在那里，

和美丽的樟布利女孩一起，

她有着天蓝色的双手，海绿色的发丝。

直到糟糕的那天早上，

樟布利人们乘着他们的漏筛起航，

阿冬被残忍地留在了岸边，

久久凝视着海与天的交界线，

他疲惫的双眼在遥望
远方地平线上豆绿色的船帆，
在那长满青草的山坡上，他坐了一整天，
还在把樟布利人的那首歌唱念，
遥远又稀有，遥远又稀有，
樟布利人就从那样的地方来；
他们有着绿色的头，他们有着蓝色的手，
他们乘着漏筛，驶入了大海。
但当西方的天空挂上了落日，
阿冬边自言自语边慢慢站起：
“我曾经拥有的一点点理智，
现在也已经完全消失！”
从那天起他开始游荡
在湖边和森林里，沼泽和小山上，
边走边唱：“噢！有一个地方，在山谷或是平原，
我还能再见到我的樟布利女孩一面！
我将永远在湖边和岸边寻找，
直到我再次把我的樟布利女孩找到！”
从那以后他一直寻找着樟布利女孩，
仿佛银器发出的咯吱声从他的笛子中传来，
又因为夜里看不见，一切黑漆漆，
于是他收集了团格姆树的树皮，
它们生长的平原上鲜花烂漫。
他为自己编织了一只鼻子，令人惊叹，
那鼻子实在是无比怪异！
它又宽又大，被涂成了红色，
用绳子固定好，在脑后绑着。

里面中空的圆形空当，
有一盏点亮的灯在那里摆放，
再用结实的绷带缠绕，
把四周全部围好，
为了防止灯光被风吹灭熄掉；
四周还布满了小孔，这样才能
让光一束束地点亮黑夜的凄冷。
如今的每个夜晚，通宵达旦，
阿冬都在那一片片平原上游走寻探；
在黑猩猩和沙锥的哀号之上，
也许你能听到他的笛子在咯吱咯吱响，
他虽然一直在寻找，但寻找都是徒劳，
他徒劳地盼望着能再和樟布利女孩见到；
孤独又漫无目的，他整夜行走，
有着发光鼻子的阿冬哟！
从礼堂、阳台，和耸立的高塔上，
人们朝窗外的午夜时分张望，
跟随那闪耀流星的光辉，
穿过那苦闷的黑夜，
人们喊道：“每到这时他都在向前行走，
有着发光鼻子的阿冬哟！
在那边的平原上他在行走；
他走！
他走！ 有着发光鼻子的阿冬哟！”

我叔叔阿尔利的一些往事

噢，我年迈的叔叔阿尔利！
坐上了一堆高高的麦粒，
夜晚的时光安谧寂静，
他紧挨着茂盛的灌木丛；
一只蟋蟀稳坐他的鼻头不动，
一张火车票藏在他的帽子中
（但他的鞋子还是系得太紧）。
很久以前，年轻的他挥霍无度，
最后他一无所有，只好整日漫步，
来到了遥远的提姆斯库山里。
在那里，每天的傍晚时分
他都在望着金色的落日下沉，
唱着：“圆球！你可真神！
我好想知道你是什么东西！”
和古老的米堤亚人和波斯人一样，
他总是能通过自己的力量，
在那片山上生存下来、克服困难；
有时靠教小孩子拼写字词，
或者大喊大叫就足矣，
或者偶尔卖卖东西，
比如“由此之故的尼哥底母药丸”。
后来，他在早上散步的途中
注意到黑莓灌木丛在动，
露出了一个东西，又白又方；

那是一张头等座的火车票，
他俯身去捡，刚一弯腰，
一只豆绿色的蟋蟀便助跑起跳，
落在了我叔叔的鼻子上。
从此以后，再也没有，噢！再也没有一天，
那只蟋蟀再也没有离开过他的身边，
清晨或傍晚，白昼或晚景；
它都像得了宝贝一样紧抓不放，
用欢快的声音高叫歌唱，
只为了我叔叔能开心地将烦恼遗忘
（但他的鞋子还是系得太紧）。
就这样又过了四十三个冬天，
直到他的鞋子都磨成了碎片，
他就在那片山上闲逛，
有时沉默，有时呼喊；
直到他来到了博利梅令山，
在那里，他的祖先曾经代代居住；
于是从那时起，他也便不再游荡。
我年迈的叔叔阿尔利，
在一小堆麦粒上咽了气，
一天晚上，人们为他下葬送殡；
地点就紧挨着那茂盛的灌木丛；
他的帽子和火车票也在其中，
他忠诚的蟋蟀也一起陪同
（但他的鞋子还是系得太紧）。

‘You elegant fowl!’

The Duck and the Kangaroo

Said the Duck to the Kangaroo,
‘Good gracious! how you hop!
Over the fields and the water too,
As if you never would stop!
My life is a bore in this nasty pond,
And I long to go out in the world beyond!
I wish I could hop like you!’
Said the Duck to the Kangaroo.
‘Please give me a ride on your back!’
Said the Duck to the Kangaroo.
‘I would sit quite still, and say nothing but "Quack,"
The whole of the long day through!
And we'd go to the Dee, and the Jelly Bo Lee,
Over the land, and over the sea; -
Please take me a ride! O do!’
Said the Duck to the Kangaroo.
Said the Kangaroo to the Duck,
‘This requires some little reflection;
Perhaps on the whole it might bring me luck,
And there seems but one objection,
Which is, if you'll let me speak so bold,
Your feet are unpleasantly wet and cold,
And would probably give me the roomatiz!’

said the Kangaroo.

Said the Duck, 'As I sate on the rocks,
I have thought over that completely,
And I bought four pairs of worsted socks
Which fit my web- feet neatly.

And to keep out the cold I've bought a cloak,
And every day a cigar I'll smoke,
All to follow my own dear true
Love of a Kangaroo!"

Said the Kangaroo, 'I'm ready!
All in the moonlight pale;
But to balance me well, dear Duck, sit steady!
And quite at the end of my tail!"

So away they went with a hop and a bound,
And they hopped the whole world three times round;
And who so happy, – O who,
As the Duck and the Kangaroo?

The Owl and the Pussy- cat

The Owl and the Pussy- cat went to sea
In a beautiful pea- green boat,
They took some honey, and plenty of money,
Wrapped up in a five- pound note.
The Owl looked up to the stars above,
And sang to a small guitar,
'O lovely Pussy! O Pussy, my love,
What a beautiful Pussy you are,
You are,
You are!
What a beautiful Pussy you are!'
Pussy said to the Owl, 'You elegant fowl!
How charmingly sweet you sing!
O let us be married! too long we have tarried:
But what shall we do for a ring?'
They sailed away, for a year and a day,
To the land where the Bong- tree grows,
And there in a wood a Piggy- wig stood,
With a ring at the end of his nose,
His nose,
His nose,
With a ring at the end of his nose.
'Dear Pig, are you willing to sell for one shilling
Your ring?' Said the Piggy, 'I will.'

So they took it away, and were married next day
By the Turkey who lives on the hill.
They dinèd on mince, and slices of quince,
Which they ate with a runcible spoon;
And hand in hand, on the edge of the sand,
They danced by the light of the moon,
The moon,
The moon,
They danced by the light of the moon.

The Broom, the Shovel, the Poker, and the Tongs

The Broom and the Shovel, the Poker and Tongs,
They all took a drive in the Park,
And they each sang a song, Ding- a- dong,
Ding- a- dong,
Before they went back in the dark.
Mr Poker he sate quite upright in the coach,
Mr Tongs made a clatter and clash,
Miss Shovel was dressed all in black (with a brooch),
Mrs Broom was in blue (with a sash).
Ding- a- dong! Ding- a- dong!
And they all sang a song!
'Oh Shovel so lovely!' the Poker he sang,
'You have perfectly conquered my heart!
Ding- a- dong! Ding- a- dong! If you're pleased with my song,
I will feed you with cold apple tart!
When you scrape up the coals with a delicate sound,
You enrapture my life with delight!
Your nose is so shiny! your head is so round!
And your shape is so slender and bright!
Ding- a- dong! Ding- a- dong!
Ain't you pleased with my song?'
'Alas! Mrs Broom!' sighed the Tongs in his song,
'O is it because I'm so thin,

And my legs are so long – D ing- a-d ong!

Ding- a- dong!

That you don't care about me a pin?

Ah! fairest of creatures, when sweeping the room,

Ah! why don't you heed my complaint!

Must you needs be so cruel, you beautiful Broom,

Because you are covered with paint?

Ding- a- dong! Ding- a- dong!

You are certainly wrong!"

Mrs Broom and Miss Shovel together they sang,

'What nonsense you're singing to- day!'

Said the Shovel, 'I'll certainly hit you a bang!'

Said the Broom, 'And I'll sweep you away!'

So the Coachman drove homeward as fast as he could,

Perceiving their anger with pain;

But they put on the kettle, and little by little,

They all became happy again.

Ding- a- dong! Ding- a- dong!

There's an end of my song!

Calico Pie

Calico Pie,
The little birds fly
Down to the calico tree,
Their wings were blue,
And they sang ' Tilly- loo!'
Till away they flew, -
And they never came back to me!
They never came back!
They never came back!
They never came back to me!
Calico Jam,
The little Fish swam,
Over the syllabub sea,
He took off his hat,
To the Sole and the Sprat,
And the Willeby- wat, -
But he never came back to me!
He never came back!
He never came back!
He never came back to me!
Calico Ban,
The little Mice ran,
To be ready in time for tea,
Flippity flup,

They drank it all up,
And danced in the cup, -
But they never came back to me!
They never came back!
They never came back!
They never came back to me!
Calico Drum,
The Grasshoppers come,
The Butterfly, Beetle, and Bee,
Over the ground,
Around and round,
With a hop and a bound, -
But they never came back!
They never came back!
They never came back!
They never came back to me!

The Jumblies

They went to sea in a Sieve, they did,
In a Sieve they went to sea:
In spite of all their friends could say,
On a winter's morn, on a stormy day,
In a Sieve they went to sea!
And when the Sieve turned round and round,
And every one cried, 'You'll all be drowned!'
They called aloud, 'Our Sieve ain't big,
But we don't care a button! we don't care a fig!
In a Sieve we'll go to sea!'
Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumblies live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.
They sailed away in a Sieve, they did,
In a Sieve they sailed so fast,
With only a beautiful pea- green veil
Tied with a riband by way of a sail,
To a small tobacco- pipe mast;
And every one said, who saw them go,
'O won't they be soon upset, you know!
For the sky is dark, and the voyage is long,
And happen what may, it's extremely wrong
In a Sieve to sail so fast!'

Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumblies live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.
The water it soon came in, it did,
The water it soon came in;
So to keep them dry, they wrapped their feet
In a pinky paper all folded neat,
And they fastened it down with a pin.
And they passed the night in a crockery- jar,
And each of them said, 'How wise we are!
Though the sky be dark, and the voyage be long,
Yet we never can think we were rash or wrong,
While round in our Sieve we spin!'
Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumblies live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.
And all night long they sailed away;
And when the sun went down,
They whistled and warbled a moony song
To the echoing sound of a coppery gong,
In the shade of the mountains brown.
'O Timballo! How happy we are,
When we live in a Sieve and a crockery- jar,
And all night long in the moonlight pale,
We sail away with a pea- green sail,
In the shade of the mountains brown!'

Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumbles live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.
They sailed to the Western Sea, they did,
To a land all covered with trees,
And they bought an Owl, and a useful Cart,
And a pound of Rice, and a Cranberry Tart,
And a hive of silvery Bees.
And they bought a Pig, and some green Jack- daws,
And a lovely Monkey with lollipop paws,
And forty bottles of Ring- Bo- Ree,
And no end of Stilton Cheese.

Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumbles live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.
And in twenty years they all came back,
In twenty years or more,
And every one said, 'How tall they've grown!
For they've been to the Lakes, and the Terrible Zone,
And the hills of the Chankly Bore!'
And they drank their health, and gave them a feast
Of dumplings made of beautiful yeast;
And every one said, 'If we only live,
We too will go to sea in a Sieve, -
To the hills of the Chankly Bore!'
Far and few, far and few,

Are the lands where the Jumblies live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a Sieve.

The Courtship of the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò

On the Coast of Coromandel
Where the early pumpkins blow,
In the middle of the woods
Lived the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
Two old chairs, and half a candle, -
One old jug without a handle, -
These were all his worldly goods,
In the middle of the woods,
These were all the worldly goods,
Of the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Of the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
Once, among the Bong- trees walking
Where the early pumpkins blow,
To a little heap of stones
Came the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
There he heard a Lady talking,
To some milk- white Hens of Dorking, -
' 'Tis the Lady Jingly Jones!
On that little heap of stones
Sits the Lady Jingly Jones!
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
'Lady Jingly! Lady Jingly!
Sitting where the pumpkins blow,

Will you come and be my wife?'
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
'I am tired of living singly, -
On this coast so wild and shingly, -
I'm a- weary of my life;
If you'll come and be my wife,
Quite serene would be my life!' -
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
'On this Coast of Coromandel,
Shrimps and watercresses grow,
Prawns are plentiful and cheap,'
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
'You shall have my chairs and candle,
And my jug without a handle! -
Gaze upon the rolling deep
(Fish is plentiful and cheap;)
As the sea, my love is deep!'
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
Lady Jingly answered sadly,
And her tears began to flow, -
'Your proposal comes too late,
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
I would be your wife most gladly!'
(Here she twirled her fingers madly,)
'But in England I've a mate!
Yes! you've asked me far too late,

For in England I've a mate,
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
'Mr Jones – (his name is Handel, - Handel Jones, Esquire, & Co.)
Dorking fowls delights to send,
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Keep, oh! keep your chairs and candle,
And your jug without a handle, -
I can merely be your friend!
- Should my Jones more Dorkings send,
I will give you three, my friend!
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
'Though you've such a tiny body,
And your head so large doth grow, -
Though your hat may blow away,
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Though you're such a Hoddy Doddy -
Yet I wished that I could modify the words I needs must say!
Will you please to go away?
That is all I have to say -
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Mr Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò!
Down the slippery slopes of Myrtle,
Where the early pumpkins blow,
To the calm and silent sea

Fled the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
There, beyond the Bay of Gurtle,
Lay a large and lively Turtle; -
'You're the Cove,' he said, 'for me;
On your back beyond the sea,
Turtle, you shall carry me!'
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
Through the silent- roaring ocean
Did the Turtle swiftly go;
Holding fast upon his shell
Rode the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
With a sad primæval motion
Towards the sunset isles of Boshen
Still the Turtle bore him well.
Holding fast upon his shell,
'Lady Jingly Jones, farewell!'
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
Said the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
From the Coast of Coromandel,
Did that Lady never go;
On that heap of stones she mourns
For the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.
On that Coast of Coromandel,
In his jug without a handle,
Still she weeps, and daily moans;
On that little heap of stones
To her Dorking Hens she moans,

For the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò,
For the Yonghy- Bonghy- Bò.

The Scroobious Pip

The Scroobious Pip went out one day
When the grass was green, and the sky was gray,
Then all the beasts in the world came round
When the Scroobious Pip sate down on the ground.
The Cats and the Dog and the Kangaroo,
The Sheep and the Cow and the Guinea Pig too -
The Wolf he howled, the Horse he neighed,
The little Pig squeaked and the Donkey brayed,
And when the Lion began to roar
There never was heard such a noise before,
And every beast he stood on the tip
Of his toes to look at the Scroobious Pip.
At last they said to the Fox – 'By far
You're the wisest beast – you know you are!
Go close to the Scroobious Pip and say,
"Tell us all about yourself we pray! -
For as yet we can't make out in the least
If you're Fish or Insect, or Bird or Beast." '
The Scroobious Pip looked vaguely round
And sang these words with a rumbling sound -
'Chippetty Flip – Flippetty Chip -
My only name is the Scroobious Pip.'
The Scroobious Pip from the top of a tree
Saw the distant Jellybol^{ēē}, -

And all the birds in the world came there,
Flying in crowds all through the air.
The Vulture and Eagle – the Cock and the Hen,
The Ostrich, the Turkey, the Snipe and Wren,
The Parrot chattered, the Blackbird sung,
And the Owl looked wise but held his tongue,
And when the Peacock began to scream,
The hullabaloo was quite extreme.
And every bird he fluttered the tip
Of his wing as he stared at the Scroobious Pip.
At last they said to the Owl, – ‘By far
You're wisest Bird – you know you are!
Fly close to the Scroobious Pip and say,
"Explain all about yourself we pray! -
For as yet we have neither seen nor heard
If you're Fish or Insect, Beast or Bird!" '
The Scroobious Pip looked gaily round
And sang these words with a chirpy sound -
‘Flippetty chip – Chippetty flip -
My only name is the Scroobious Pip.'
The Scroobious Pip went into the sea
By the beautiful shore of the Jellybol $\overline{ee}$ -
All the Fish in the world swam round
With a splashy squashy spluttery sound,
The Sprat, the Herring, the Turbot too,
The Shark, the Sole, and the Mackerel blue,
The ----- spluttered, the Porpoise puffed
---- Flounder -----

And when the Whale began to spout -

And every Fish he shook the tip
Of his tail as he gazed on the Scroobious Pip.
At last they said to the Whale – ‘By far
You're the biggest Fish – you know you are!
Swim close to the Scroobious Pip and say,
"Tell us all about yourself we pray! -
For to know from yourself is our only wish -
Are you Beast or Insect, Bird or Fish?" '
The Scroobious Pip looked softly round
And sang these words with a liquid sound -
‘Plifatty flip – Pliffity flip -
My only name is the Scroobious Pip.'
The Scroobious Pip sate under a tree
By the silent shores of the Jellybol $\overline{ee}$,
All the Insects in all the world
About the Scroobious Pip fluttered and twirled.
Beetles and ----- with purple eyes
Gnats and buzztilential Flies -
Grasshoppers, Butterflies, Spiders too,
Wasps and Bees and Dragonfly blue,
And when the Gnats began to hum
----- bounced like a dismal drum -
And every insect curled the tip
Of his snout, and looked at the Scroobious Pip.
At last they said the Ant, – ‘By far
You're the wisest Insect – you know you are!

Creep close to the Scroobious Pip and say,
"Tell us all about yourself we pray! -
For we can't find out, and we can't tell why -
If you're Beast or Fish or a Bird or a Fly. -" '
The Scroobious Pip turned quickly round
And sang these words with a whistly sound -
'Wizziby wip – wizziby wip -
My only name is the Scroobious Pip.'
Then all the Beasts that walk on the ground
Danced in a circle round and round,
And all the Birds that fly in the air
Flew round and round in a circle there,
And all the Fish in the Jellybolee —
Swam in a circle about the sea,
And all the Insects that creep or go
Buzzed in a circle to and fro -
And they roared and sang and whistled and cried
Till the noise was heard from side to side -
'Chippetty Tip! Chippetty Tip!
Its only name is the Scroobious Pip.'

The Quangle Wangle's Hat

On the top of the Crumpetty Tree
The Quangle Wangle sat,
But his face you could not see,
On account of his Beaver Hat.
For his Hat was a hundred and two feet wide,
With ribbons and bibbons on every side,
And bells, and buttons, and loops, and lace,
So that nobody ever could see the face
Of the Quangle Wangle Quee.
The Quangle Wangle said
To himself on the Crumpetty Tree, -
'Jam; and jelly; and bread;
Are the best of food for me!
But the longer I live on this Crumpetty Tree,
The plainer than ever it seems to me
That very few people come this way
And that life on the whole is far from gay!'
Said the Quangle Wangle Quee.

But there came to the Crumpetty Tree,
Mr and Mrs Canary;
And they said, – 'Did ever you see
Any spot so charmingly airy?
May we build a nest on your lovely Hat?
Mr Quangle Wangle, grant us that!
O please let us come and build a nest
Of whatever material suits you best,
Mr Quangle Wangle Quee!'
And besides, to the Crumpetty Tree
Came the Stork, the Duck, and the Owl;
The Snail, and the Bumble- Bee,

The Frog, and the Fimble Fowl;
(The Fimble Fowl, with a Corkscrew leg;)
And all of them said, – 'We humbly beg,
We may build our homes on your lovely Hat, -
Mr Quangle Wangle, grant us that!
Mr Quangle Wangle Quee!'
And the Golden Grouse came there,
And the Pobble who has no toes, -
And the small Olympian bear, -
And the Dong with a luminous nose.
And the Blue Baboon, who played the flute, -
And the Orient Calf from the Land of Tute, -
And the Attery Squash, and the Bisky Bat, -
All came and built on the lovely Hat
Of the Quangle Wangle Quee.
And the Quangle Wangle said
To himself on the Crumpetty Tree, -
'When all these creatures move
What a wonderful noise there'll be!'
And at night by the light of the Mulberry moon
They danced to the Flute of the Blue Baboon,
On the broad green leaves of the Crumpetty Tree,
And all were as happy as happy could be,
With the Quangle Wangle Quee.

The Akond of Swat

Who, or why, or which, or what, Is the Akond of SWAT?

Is he tall or short, or dark or fair?

Does he sit on a stool or a sofa or chair or SQUAT,

The Akond of Swat?

Is he wise or foolish, young or old?

Does he drink his soup and his coffee cold or HOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he sing or whistle, jabber or talk,

And when riding abroad does he gallop or walk or TROT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he wear a turban, a fez, or a hat?

Does he sleep on a mattress, a bed, or a mat or a COT,

The Akond of Swat?

When he writes a copy in round- hand size,

Does he cross his T's and finish his I's with a DOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Can he write a letter concisely clear

Without a speck or a smudge or smear

or BLOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Do his people like him extremely well?

Or do they, whenever they can, rebel or PLOT,

At the Akond of Swat?

If he catches them then, either old or young,

Does he have them chopped in pieces or hung

or SHOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Do his people prig in the lanes or park?

Or even at times, when days are dark

GAROTTE,

O the Akond of Swat!

Does he study the wants of his own dominion?

Or doesn't he care for public opinion

a JOT,

The Akond of Swat?

To amuse his mind do his people show him

Pictures, or anyone's last new poem or WHAT,

For the Akond of Swat?

At night if he suddenly screams and wakes,

Do they bring him only a few small cakes

or a LOT,

For the Akond of Swat?

Does he live on turnips, tea, or tripe?

Does he like his shawl to be marked with a stripe or a DOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he like to lie on his back in a boat
Like the lady who lived in that isle remote,

SHALOTT,

The Akond of Swat

Is he quiet, or always making a fuss?
Is his steward a Swiss or a Swede or a Russ or a SCOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he like to sit by the calm blue wave?
Or to sleep and snore in a dark green cave or a GROTT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he drink small beer from a silver jug?
Or a bowl? or a glass? or a cup? or a mug?

or a POT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he beat his wife with a gold- topped pipe,
When she lets the gooseberries grow too ripe

or ROT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he wear a white tie when he dines with friends,
And tie it neat in a bow with ends

or a KNOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he like new cream, and hate mince- pies?
When he looks at the sun does he wink his eyes or NOT,

The Akond of Swat?

Does he teach his subjects to roast and bake?

Does he sail about on an inland lake

in a YACHT,

The Akond of Swat?

Someone, or nobody, knows I wot

Who or which or why or what

Is the Akond of Swat!

The Cummerbund

An Indian Poem

She sate upon her Dobie,
To watch the Evening Star,
And all the Punkahs as they passed,
Cried, 'My! how fair you are!'
Around her bower, with quivering leaves,
The tall Kamsamahs grew,
And Kitmutgars in wild festoons
Hung down from Tchokis blue.
Below her home the river rolled
With soft meloobious sound,
Where golden- finned Chuprassies swam,
In myriads circling round.
Above, on tallest trees remote,
Green Ayahs perched alone,
And all night long the Mussak moan'd
Its melancholy tone.
And where the purple Nullahs threw
Their branches far and wide, -

The silvery Goreewallahs flew
In silence, side by side, -
The little Bheesties' twittering cry
Rose on the flagrant air,
And oft the angry Jampan howled
Deep in his hateful lair.
She sate upon her Dobie, -
She heard the Nimmak hum, -
When all at once a cry arose, -
'The Cumberbund is come!'
In vain she fled: – with open jaws
The angry monster followed,
And so, (before assistance came,)
That Lady Fair was swallowed.
They sought in vain for even a bone

Respectfully to bury, -
They said, – ‘Hers was a dreadful fate!’
(And Echo answered ‘Very.’)
They nailed her Dobie to the wall,
Where last her form was seen,
And underneath they wrote these words,
In yellow, blue, and green: -
‘Beware, ye Fair! Ye Fair, beware!
Nor sit out late at night, -
Lest horrid Cummerbunds should come,
And swallow you outright.’

The New Vestments

There lived an old man in the Kingdom of Tess,
Who invented a purely original dress;
And when it was perfectly made and complete,
He opened the door, and walked into the street.
By way of a hat, he'd a loaf of Brown Bread,
In the middle of which he inserted his head; -
His Shirt was made up of no end of dead Mice,
The warmth of whose skins was quite fluffy and nice; -
His Drawers were of Rabbit- skins; – so were his Shoes; -
His Stockings were skins, – but it is not known whose; -
His Waistcoat and Trowsers were made of Pork Chops; -
His Buttons were Jujubes, and Chocolate Drops; -
His Coat was all Pancakes with Jam for a border,
And a girdle of Biscuits to keep it in order;
And he wore over all, as a screen from bad weather,
A Cloak of green Cabbage- leaves stitched all together.
He had walked a short way, when he heard a great noise,
Of all sorts of Beasticles, Birdlings, and Boys; -
And from every long street and dark lane in the town
Beasts, Birdles, and Boys in a tumult rushed down.
Two Cows and a Calf ate his Cabbage- leaf Cloak; -
Four Apes seized his Girdle, which vanished like smoke; -
Three Kids ate up half of his Pancaky Coat, -
And the tails were devour'd by an ancient He Goat; -

An army of Dogs in a twinkling tore up his Pork Waistcoat and Trowsers to give to their Puppies; -
And while they were growling, and mumbling the Chops,
Ten Boys prigged the Jujubes and Chocolate Drops. -
He tried to run back to his house, but in vain,
For Scores of fat Pigs came again and again; -
They rushed out of stables and hovels and doors, -
They tore off his Stockings, his Shoes, and his Drawers; -

And now from the housetops with screechings descend,
Striped, spotted, white, black, and gray Cats without end,
They jumped on his shoulders and knocked off his hat, -
When Crows, Ducks, and Hens made a mincemeat of that; -
They speedily flew at this sleeves in a trice,

And utterly tore up his Shirt of dead Mice; -
They swallowed the last of his Shirt with a squall, -
Whereon he ran home with no clothes on at all.
And he said to himself as he bolted the door,
'I will not wear a similar dress any more,
Any more, any more, any more, never more!'

The Two Old Bachelors

Two old Bachelors were living in one house;

One caught a Muffin, the other caught a Mouse.

Said he who caught the Muffin to him who caught the Mouse, -

'This happens just in time! For we've nothing in the house,

Save a tiny slice of lemon and a teaspoonful of honey,

And what to do for dinner – since we haven't any money?

And what can we expect if we haven't any dinner,

But to lose our teeth and eyelashes and keep on growing thinner?'

Said he who caught the Mouse to him who caught the Muffin, -

'We might cook this little Mouse, if we only had some Stuffin'!

If we had but Sage and Onion we could do extremely well,

But how to get that Stuffin' it is difficult to tell!' -

Those two old Bachelors ran quickly to the town

And asked for Sage and Onions as they wandered up and down;

They borrowed two large Onions, but no Sage was to be found

In the Shops, or in the Market, or in all the Gardens round.

But someone said, – 'A hill there is, a little to the north,

And to its purpledicular top a narrow way leads forth; -

And there among the rugged rocks abides an ancient Sage, -

An earnest Man, who reads all day a most perplexing page.

'Climb up, and seize him by the toes! – all studious as he sits, -

And pull him down, – and chop him into endless little bits!

Then mix him with your Onion, (cut up likewise into Scraps,) -

When your Stuffin' will be ready – and very good: perhaps.'

Those two old Bachelors without loss of time
The nearly purpledicular crags at once began to climb;
And at the top, among the rocks, all seated in a nook,
They saw that Sage, a- reading of a most enormous book.

'You earnest Sage!' aloud they cried, 'your book you've read enough in! -

We wish to chop you into bits to mix you into Stuffin'!' -
But that old Sage looked calmly up, and with his awful book,
At those two Bachelors' bald heads a certain aim he took; -
And over crag and precipice they rolled promiscuous down, -
At once they rolled, and never stopped in lane or field or town,

And when they reached their house, they found
(beside their want of Stuffin')

The Mouse had fled; - and, previously, had eaten up the Muffin.

They left their home in silence by the once convivial door.
And from that hour those Bachelors were never heard of more.

The Dong with a Luminous Nose

When awful darkness and silence reign
Over the great Gromboolian plain,
Through the long, long wintry nights; -
When the angry breakers roar
As they beat on the rocky shore; -
When Storm- clouds brood on the towering heights
Of the Hills of the Chankly Bore: -
Then, through the vast and gloomy dark,
There moves what seems a fiery spark,
A lonely spark with silvery rays
Piercing the coal- black night, -
A Meteor strange and bright: -
Hither and thither the vision strays,
A single lurid light.
Slowly it wanders, – pauses, – creeps, -
Anon it sparkles, – flashes and leaps;
And ever as onward it gleaming goes
A light on the Bong- tree stems it throws.
And those who watch at that midnight hour
From Hall or Terrace, or lofty Tower,
Cry, as the wild light passes along, -
'The Dong! – the Dong!
The wandering Dong through the forest goes!
The Dong! the Dong!

The Dong with a luminous Nose!

Long years ago

The Dong was happy and gay,

Till he fell in love with a Jumbly Girl

Who came to those shores one day.

For the Jumblies came in a sieve, they did, -

Landing at eve near the Zemmerly Fidd

Where the Oblong Oysters grow,

And the rocks are smooth and gray.

And all the woods and the valleys rang

With the Chorus they daily and nightly sang, -

'Far and few, far and few,

Are the lands where the Jumblies live;

Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,

And they went to sea in a sieve.'

Happily, happily passed those days!

While the cheerful Jumblies staid;

They danced in circlets all night long,

To the plaintive pipe of the lively Dong,

In moonlight, shine, or shade.

For day and night he was always there

By the side of the Jumbly Girl so fair,

With her sky- blue hands, and her sea- green hair.

Till the morning came of that hateful day

When the Jumblies sailed in their sieve away,

And the Dong was left on the cruel shore

Gazing – gazing for evermore, -

Ever keeping his weary eyes on

That pea- green sail on the far horizon, -
Singing the Jumbly Chorus still
As he sate all day on the grassy hill, -
*'Far and few, far and few,
Are the lands where the Jumblies live;
Their heads are green, and their hands are blue,
And they went to sea in a sieve.'*
But when the sun was low in the West,
The Dong arose and said; -
- 'What little sense I once possessed
Has quite gone out of my head!' -
And since that day he wanders still
By lake and forest, marsh and hill,
Singing – 'O somewhere, in valley or plain
Might I find my Jumbly Girl again!
For ever I'll seek by lake and shore
Till I find my Jumbly Girl once more!'
Playing a pipe with silvery squeaks,
Since then his Jumbly Girl he seeks,
And because by night he could not see,
He gathered the bark of the Twangum Tree
On the flowery plain that grows.
And he wove him a wondrous Nose, -
A Nose as strange as a Nose could be!
Of vast proportions and painted red,
And tied with cords to the back of his head.
- In a hollow rounded space it ended
With a luminous Lamp within suspended,

All fenced about
With a bandage stout
To prevent the wind from blowing it out; -
And with holes all round to send the light,
In gleaming rays on the dismal light.
And now each night, and all night long,
Over those plains still roams the Dong;
And above the wail of the Chimp and Snipe
You may hear the squeak of his plaintive pipe
While ever he seeks, but seeks in vain
To meet with his Jumbly Girl again;
Lonely and wild – all night he goes, -
The Dong with a luminous Nose!
And all who watch at the midnight hour,
From Hall or Terrace, or lofty Tower,
Cry, as they trace the Meteor bright,
Moving along through the dreary night, -
'This is the hour when forth he goes,
The Dong with a luminous Nose!
Yonder – over the plain he goes;
He goes!
He goes;
The Dong with a luminous Nose!'

Some Incidents in the Life of my Uncle Arly

O my agèd Uncle Arly! -
Sitting on a heap of Barley
All the silent hours of night, -
Close beside a leafy thicket: -
On his nose there was a Cricket, -
In his hat a Railway Ticket; -
(But his shoes were far too tight.)
Long ago, in youth, he squander'd
All his goods away, and wander'd
To the Timskoop Hills afar.
There, on golden sunsets blazing
Every evening found him gazing, -
Singing, – 'Orb! you're quite amazing!
How I wonder what you are!'
Like the ancient Medes and Persians,
Always by his own exertions
He subsisted on those hills; -
Whiles, – by teaching children spelling, -
Or at times by merely yelling, -
Or at intervals by selling
'Propter's Nicodemus Pills'.
Later, in his morning rambles
He perceived the moving brambles

Something square and white disclose; -
'Twas a First- class Railway- Ticket
But in stooping down to pick it
Off the ground, – a pea- green Cricket
Settled on my uncle's Nose.
Never – never more, – oh! never,
Did that Cricket leave him ever, -
Dawn or evening, day or night; -
Clinging as a constant treasure, -
Chirping with a cheerful measure, -
Wholly to my uncle's pleasure, -
(Though his shoes were far too tight.)
So, for three- and- forty winters,
Till his shoes were worn to splinters,
All those hills he wander'd o'er, -
Sometimes silent; – sometimes yelling; -
Till he came to Borly- Melling,
Near his old ancestral dwelling; -
- And he wander'd thence no more.
On a little heap of Barley
Died my aged Uncle Arly,
And they buried him one night; -
Close beside the leafy thicket; -
There, – his hat and Railway Ticket; -
There, – his ever faithful Cricket; -
(But his shoes were far too tight.)
